(b) Athanasius (in his Book de Synodis) set forth the time of this Council by these Notes: ἡμῶν δὲ ἐκ κοινῆς ὁμοθυμαδόν, &c. Those Bishops that met at the Dedication were ninety in number; [they were convened] in the Consulate of Marcellinus and Probinus, in the tenth Indiction, the most impious Constantine being there present. Valef.

(c) In the Consulate of Marcellinus and Probinus, on the eleventh of the Calends of June was completed the fourth year from Constantine's death. The Synod of Antioch therefore was convened after this day, it is true which Sozomen here says, to wit, that it was convened in the fifth year after Constantine's Death. Valef.

(d) In Epiphanius Scholasticus's Version, this persons name is truer written, thus, Flacillus. Nor is he otherwise called in Pope Julius's Epistle to the Bishops convened in this Synod of Antioch. This person had been present before, at the Council of Tyre, and had with the Arians conspired against Athanasius, as the Epistle of the Egyptian Bishops to Dionysius the Comes doth inform us, which Epistle Athanasius has recorded, in his second defence against the Arians. Eusebius of Casarea dedicated the Books he wrote against Marcellus to this same Flacillus. But instead of Flacillus, he is almost every where called Placitus: only in the following chapter, the Atellan M. S. terms him Flacillus. Valef.

(e) These Calumnies of the Eusebians are incomparably well refuted by the Egyptian Bishops, in their Synodick Epistle, which Athanasius records, in his second defence against the Arians. Valef.

CHAP. IX.

Concerning Eusebius Emifenus.

Constantinus.

AFTER the framing of these Calumnies, they propos'd one to be made Bishop of Alexandria, and in the first place [they named] Eusebius Emifenus. Who this person was, Georgius of Laodicea, one that was present at this Synod, informs us. For he says (in the Book he wrote concerning his Life) that this Eusebius was descended from noble Personages of Edessa in Mesopotamia: and that from his Childhood he (a) learned the sacred Scriptures: that he was afterwards instructed in the Grecian Literature by a Master who then lived at Edessa; and in fine, that he had the sacred Scriptures interpreted to him by Patrophilus and Eusebius; the latter of which persons presided over the Church in Casarea, and the former over that in Scythopolis. After this, when he came to Antioch, it hapned that Eusebius, being accused by Cyrus of Beroa, was deposed, as being an assertor of Sabellius's opinion. Wherefore Eusebius afterwards lived with Euphronius, Eusebius's Successor. Afterwards, that he might avoid being made a Bishop, he betook himself to Alexandria, and their studied Philosophy. Returning from thence to Antioch, he conversed with Flacillus, Euphronius's Successor, and was at length promoted to the See of Alexandria by Eusebius Bishop of Constantinople. But he went thither no more, because Athanasius was so much beloved by the people of Alexandria. He was therefore sent to Emisa. But when the Inhabitants of that City raised a Sedition at his Ordination, (for he was reproach'd, as being a person studious of, and excresc'd in the Mathematics,) he fled from thence, and went to Laodicea, to Gregorius, who hath related so many passages concerning him. When this Georgius had brought him to Antioch, he procur'd him to be sent back again to Emisa by Flacillus and Narcissus. But he afterwards underwent another accusation; for being an adherent to Sabellius's Principles. Georgius writes at large concerning his * Ordination: * Or, &c. And in fine adds, that the Emperor, in his Ex-station, petition against the Barbarians, took him along with him, and that miracles were wrought by him. But hitherto we have recorded what Georgius hath related concerning Eusebius Emifenus.

(a) Sozomen (in his third book, chap. 6.) explains this Passage in Sozomen; where he speaks thus concerning Eusebius Emifenus: Ἐκ τῶν δὲ ἐκ παλαιῶν ἑβραίων ἀναμαθῶν λόγους, &c. i. e. from his childhood (according to the custom of his own Country) he learned the sacred Scriptures by heart. Therefore the Boys of Edessa got by heart the books of sacred Scripture, according to the usage of their Ancestors. Indeed, Ecclesiastick Writers do assert, that the Edessians were most ardent lovers of the Christian Religion. Valef.

CHAP. X.

That the Bishops convened at Antioch upon Eusebius Emifenus's refusal [of the Bishoprick] of Alexandria, ordained Gregorius, and altered the Expressions of the Nicene Faith.

BUT when Eusebius, who had been chosen Bishop of Alexandria at Antioch, was afraid to go thither, they then propos'd Gregorius to be ordained Bishop of Alexandria. And having done this, they alter'd the * Creed, * Or, the finding Faith.

finding fault indeed with nothing [that had been determined] at Nice; (a) but in reality [their design was] to subvert and destroy the Homousian Faith, by their continual assembling of Synods, and by their publishing sometimes one, sometimes another form of the Creed; that so by degrees [all persons] might be (b) perverted to the Arian Opinion. Moreover, how these things were done [by them,] we will manifest in the procedure of our History. But the Epistle they publish'd concerning the Faith runs thus.

(a) How these words are to be understood, I have added in the second Book of my Exposition, which Objections, Chap. 2. must not be supposed, that the Arch-Heretic Arian himself admitted and entertained in the Jerusalem Synod, but his Followers only. For Arius himself was dead long before. Should any one maintain, that these Words of the Bishops of the Antiochian Council are to be understood of Arius himself, then I will answer, that the Jerusalem Synod is not meant here, but some other more ancient Synod, which admitted Arius to communion: for the Eusebian party had done that before the Synod of Jerusalem, as Athanasius attests, in his Book de Synodis, not far from the beginning. Valef.

We have neither been Arius's Followers: (for how should we that are Bishops be the Followers of a Presbyter?) Nor have we embraced any other Faith, than what was from the Beginning set forth. But, being made Inquirers into, and Examiners of his Faith, we have (c) admitted and entertained, rather than followed him. And this you will understand from what shall be said. For we have learned from the Beginning to believe in one supreme God, the Maker and Preserver of all things, vertized as well intelligible as sensible. And in one only begotten Son of God, subsisting before all ages, existing together with the Father that begat him; by whom all things visible and invisible were made: who in the last days, according to the Father's good pleasure, descended, and assumed flesh from the Holy Virgin; and when he had completely fulfilled all his Father's will, he suffered and arose, and not ascended into the Heavens, and sits at the Right Hand of the Father: and he shall come to judge the Quick and Dead, and continues a King and God ever. We believe also in the Holy Ghost. And (if Arius him-it be requisite to add this) we also believe the Resurrection of the Flesh, and the Life everlasting.

Having written these things in their first Epistle, they sent them to [the Bishops] throughout every City. But, when they had continued sometime at Antioch, condemning as it were this [their former] Epistle, they again publish another, in these very words.

Another Exposition [of Faith.]

Agreeable to Evangelick and Apostolick tradition, We believe in one God the Father Almighty, the Framers and Maker of all things. And in one Lord Jesus Christ, his only begotten Son, God, by whom all things were made: begotten of the Father before all Worlds, God of God, Whole of Whole, Only of Only, Perfect of Perfect, King of King, Lord of Lord: the Living Word, the Wisdom, the Life, the True Light, the Way of Truth, the Resurrection, the Shepherd, the Gate: immutable and inconvertible: the most express Image of the Father's Deity. * Substance, Power, Council, and Glory: the First begotten of every Creature. † Who was in the Beginning with God, God the Word, according as 'tis said in the Gospel: And the Word was God, by whom all things were made, and in whom all things have subsisted. Who in the last days came down from Heaven, and was born of the Virgin according to the Scriptures. And was made Man, the Mediator of God and Men, the Apostle of our Faith, and the Prince of Life, as he himself says, * For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. Who suffered for us, and rose again for us the third day, and ascended into the Heavens, and sits at the right hand of the Father. And he shall come again with glory and power, to judge the Quick and Dead. And [we believe] in the Holy Ghost, who is given to Believers in order to their Consolation, Sanctification, and Perfection: according as our Lord Jesus Christ commanded his Disciples, saying, † Go ye, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: to wit, of the Father being truly the Father, and of the Son being truly the Son, and of the Holy Ghost being truly the Holy Ghost: which terms are not simply or insignificantly * made use of, but they do accurately manifest the proper and peculiar Person, Glory, and Order of each of those that are named. So that they are three in person, but in consent one. (d) We therefore holding this Faith, in the presence of God and of Christ, do anathematize all manner of heretical and ill Opinions, And if any one shall teach (contrary to the sound holding and true Faith of the Scriptures,) saying, that there is, or was, a time, or an age, (e) before the Son of God [was begotten;] let him be Anathema. And if any one says, that the Son is a Creature, as Synodus one of the Creatives, or that he is a * Branch (where as one of the Branches; and [shall not be bold] every one of the foresaid Points according as the sacred Scriptures have set them forth: Or if any one teaches or preaches any other thing than what we have received, let him be Anathema. For we do truly, and (f) clearly believe and follow all things delivered by the Prophets and Apostles in the sacred Scriptures, and holding from the beginning to the end: which ought not to have been omitted. Hilarius (in his Book de Synodis) has translated this form of the Creed into Latin; in which Version of his, these Words occur. Valef.

(c) I corrected this place by the assistance of the Florentine M. S. wherein it is written thus [αὐτὸν τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, before the Son of God.] The Verb [γενεσθαι, was begotten] which preceded, is to be understood here. In Athanasius's Book de Synodis, the reading is [αὐτὸν τὸν ὑποσπιναι, before he was begotten.] But our reading pleases us better, because it comes nearer the sense of the Arians: who asserted that the Son of God was made. Valef.

(f) In the Alas. M. S. the reading is [καὶ ἐκ φόβου, and with fear:] 'Tis so also in Athanasius, and in Hilarius's Version. Valef.

Such were the Expositions of the Faith, [published] by those at that time convened at Antioch: to which also Gregorius (altho' he had not then made his Entry into Alexandria, yet) subscribed as a Bishop of that City. The Synod at that time assembled in Antioch, having done these things, and made some other Canons, was dissolved. The state of the publick affairs in the Empire hapned to be disturb'd at the very same time also. A nation (they are called The Frangi) made an incursion into the Roman Territories in Gallia. At the same time also, there were terrible earthquakes in the East: (g) especially at Antioch, which City was shaken thereby [continually] for the space of one whole year.

free from this earth-quake. For so 'tis recorded in those incomparable Fasti Consulares, (which Sirmundus has published under the name of Latin.) in these words: Marcellinus & Probinus Cons. His consilium pugna fuit est cum gente Francorum a Constante Augusto in Gallia. Et ipso anno terra motus fuit ad orientem per totum unum præter Antiochiam: i. e. in the consulate of Marcellinus and Probinus, there was a fight between the Nation of the Frangi and Constant Augustus in the Gallia's. And in the same year there was an earthquake in the East throughout the whole year, except at Antioch. Valef.

Constantinus.

C H A P. XI.

That, upon Gregorius's arrival at Alexandria [guarded] with a Military force, Athanasius fled.

(a) In this place So- crates mistakes, who confounds what was done at Georgius's installation with that things trans-acted at Gregorius's arrival. In deed Syri- anus brought Georgius to Alexandria, as Athanasius attests, in his Epistle Ad Solitar, and in his Apologetic to Constantine the Emperor, and in his Apology concerning his own escape, when Syri- anus pursued him. But these things hapned a long while after this, to wit, in the year of Christ 356. Gregorius, concerning whom So- crates speaks here, was brought to Alexandria by Balanus the Captain, and Philagrius Prefect of Egypt, as Athanasius relates, in his Epistle ad Solitar. But Athanasius departed from Alexandria before their arrival, and went to Rome, whether he had been invited by Pope Julius's Letters. Valef.

(b) So- crates borrowed this out of Athanasius's Apology concerning his own escape, about the close of it. Where Athanasius's Words are these: το εβδημητηριον, ες ου λαλ τινες επανηλθον προς δεσποτικας συνου- zas, i. e. it was seven night, and some of the people lay in the Church all night, a communion being expected. But in his Apologetic to the Emperor Constantine, he shews manifestly that Syrianus made this irruption in the night, and not in the evening, as So- crates here says. Valef.

(c) Our So- crates does mistake here also. For Eusebius of Nicomedia did not send Embassadors to Pope Julius, to excite him against Athanasius, after the Council at Antioch, but a long time before. But when the Presbyters sent by Athanasius had confuted Eusebius's Em- bassadors in all points before Julius, at length Eusebius's Messengers referred the decision of the whole matter to Julius. Julius therefore, according to the request of the Embassadors, wrote Letters, both to Athanasius, and also to Eusebius and the rest of Athanasius's adversaries, by which he invited them to an Ecclesiastick judicature at Rome. But this was done before the Council at Antioch, as Athanasius informs us, (in his second Apologetic against the Arians,) and Julius Bishop of Rome, (in his Epistle to the Bishops convened in the Council at Antioch.) This Epistle of Julius's Athanasius has inserted at the 797th page of his works. Edit. Paris. 1627. Moreover, So- crates's relation here may be refuted also by these arguments. For, if these things had been done after the Council at Antioch, not only Eusebius, but the whole Synod would have sent an Embassy, and Letters, to Julius. Besides, it would have been altogether ridiculous and unseemly, after the matter was determined in a Council, and put in execution, (Athanasius being now expelled, and Gregorius put into his See,) to write to Julius, that he would be judge, and remove the Controversie in order to its being discut'd before him; as if the matter were still wholly undetermined. So- crates (Book 3. Chap. 7.) has followed So- crates's mistake in this relation. Valef.

C H A P. XII.

How, after Eusebius's Death, the People of Constantinople restored Paulus to his See again. And that the Arians made choice of Macedonius.

BUT Eusebius could never understand what Julius had determined concerning Athanasius. For having survived the Synod some small time, he died. Wherefore the people of Constantinople introduced Paulus into the Church again. But at the same time the Arians ordain Macedonius, in the (a) Church dedicated to Paul. And this was done by those, who formerly had been assiduous to Eusebius that disturber of all things, but were then his successors in power and authority. These are their names, Theognis of Nice, Maris of Chalcedon, Theodorus of Heraclea in Thracia, Ursacius of Singidunum in the Upper Mysia, Valens of Mursa in the Upper Pannonia. Indeed, Ursacius and Valens changing their Opinions afterwards, delivered their penitentiary Libel to Julius the Bishop; and having consented to the Homousian Opinion, were admitted to Communion. But at that time they were hot maintainers of the Arian Religion, and * framed no rival commotions against the Churches. One whereof was that made by Macedonius in the City of Constantinople. For from this intestine War amongst the Chris- tians there hapned continual Seditions in the City, and many persons, oppressed by the violence of what was done, lost their lives.

C H A P. XIII.

Concerning the Slaughter of Hermogenes the Lieutenant-General, and how Paulus was for that reason turned out of the Church again.

BUT, what was done came to the hearing of Constantine the Emperor, who then made his residence at Antioch. Therefore he orders Hermogenes the Lieutenant-General, (whom he had sent into the Coasts of Thracia,) that he should incidently pass through [Constantinople,] and turn Paulus out of that Church. He arriving at Constantinople, disturbed the whole City, by endeavouring to cast out the Bishop by force. For there immediately followed a Sedition amongst the people, and all persons were ready to defend [the Bishop.] But when Hermogenes with much earnestness endeavour'd to expel Paulus by his Military forces, the Populace being exasperated (as in such like cases it usually happens,) made a more inconsiderate and rash attack against him. In the first place they set fire to his House on fire: then, having (a) drawn him about by the heels, they killed him. These things were done in the Consulate of the Two Aetius, Constantine being then the third, and Constantine the large second time Consul. At the same time, Constantine, having vanquish'd the nation of the Franks, made them enter into a league with the Romans. But the Emperor Constantine being informed of Her-

Books of his History which are lost. But he has by the by mentioned it in his 14th Book, pag. 23. Edit. Paris. 1656. Libanus means this tumult in his Oration, entitled Begetis, and says it was a most violent Sedition. It hapned in the third Consulate of Constantine, and in Constantine's second; which was the year of Christ 342. as it is recorded in Eusebius's Hist. Valef. See Valefius's Annotat. on Anon. Marcellinus, page 47.

hermogenes's

Constantinus.

by the Crowd. After such brave exploits as these, Macedonius, as if he had done no mischief at all, but were clear and guiltless of what had happened, was seated in the Episcopal Chair by the Prefect, rather than by the Ecclesiastical Canon. Thus therefore did Macedonius and the Arians take possession of Churches by so great and numerous slaughters of men. At the same time also, the Emperor built (d) The Great Church, which is now called Sophia. It was joyed to that Church named Irene, which, being before a little one, the Emperor's Father had very much beautified and enlarged. And both of them are to be seen at this present time, encompassed within one and the same wall, and called by the name of one Church.

(d) This Great Church was consecrated by Eusebius Bishop of Constantinople, (the fact being that he had been Bishop of Nicomedia) if we may credit Cedrenus. For at the ninth year of Constantine he writes thus: ἡ ἀντιοχειακήσαν τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ μεγαλὴν ἐκκλησίαν ἐπὶ καὶ αὐτοῦ, &c. i. e. And Eusebius consecrated the Church of God, called the Great Church, which was finished by Constantine, according to the order of Constantine the Great in his Will. And he brought the reliques of the holy Martyr Pamphilus, and those of his Companions, Theodulus, Porphyrus, and Paulus, from Antioch, and deposited them therein. But Cedrenus mistakes in his notation of the time. For if this Consecration were performed by Eusebius of Nicomedia, it must be placed on the third or fourth year of Constantine, at which time Eusebius governed the See of Constantinople. The same Cedrenus relates, that this Church, being afterwards ruined, and re-edified by Constantine, was consecrated by Eudoxius. Valef.

C H A P. XVII.

That Athanasius, being afraid of the Emperor's Menaces, returned to Rome again.

AT the same time, there was another false accusation patcht together against Athanasius by the Arians, who invented this occasion for it. The * Father of the Augusti had heretofore given a yearly allowance of Bread-corn to the Church of Alexandria for the relief of those that were indigent. It was reported by the Arians, that Athanasius had usually sold this Bread-corn for money, and had converted the money to his own gain. The Emperor therefore, having given credit to this report, threaten'd Athanasius with death. He, being made sensible of the Emperor's menaces, made his escape, and absconded. But when Julius Bishop of Rome understood what the Arians had done against Athanasius, having also received Eusebius's Letter who was now dead, he (a) invites Athanasius to come to him; being informed of the place where he lay concealed. At the same time arrived the (b) Letter, which those [Bishops] that before that had been convened at Antioch, wrote to him. Another Constantine (c) Letter also was sent to him by the Bishops in Egypt, informing him, that those things objected against Athanasius were false. These Letters so directly contradicting one another, having been sent to Julius, he returned an answer to those [Bishops] convened at Antioch, wherein he (d) blamed them, first for the bitterness of their Letter: then [he told them] they had done contrary to the Canons, because they had not called him to the Synod; it being commanded by the Ecclesiastick Rule, that the Churches ought not to make Sanctions contrary to the Bishop of Rome's sentiment. [He complained] also, that they had clandestinely adulterated the Faith. And moreover, that what was heretofore done at Tyre, had been fraudulently and corruptly transacted, in regard the Memorials of the Acts done at Marone had been made up of one side only. Further, that what had been objected concerning Arsenius's murder, was apparently demonstrated to have been a false accusation. These, and such like passages as these, Julius wrote at large to the [Bishops] convened at Antioch. Moreover, we had inserted here the Letters to Julius, and his answer also; had not the prolixity thereof hindered that design of ours. But Sabinus, a follower of the Macedonian Heresie, whom we have mention'd before, has not put Julius's Letters into his Collection [of the Acts] of Synods. Although, he has not left out that [Epistle] written from those [convened] at Antioch to Julius. But this is usually done by Sabinus. For, such Letters as either make no mention at all of, or reject the term Homoiousus, those [Epistles, I say,] he carefully inserts: but the contrary hereto he voluntarily and on set purpose omits. Thus much concerning these things. Not long after this, Paulus pretending a journey to Corinth, arrived in Italy. Both the [* Bishops] therefore make their condition known to the Emperor of those

(d) I read [ἐκκλησία, he blamed] not [ἐκκλησία, he sent] Sir Henry Savil hath mended this place, in the Margin of his Copy, and made it agreeable to our reading. In the Alat. M.S. this place is written thus: ἐπεὶ αὐτοὶ οὐκ ἔχουσιν ἰσχυρίσθαι τῆς ἀπορίας ἐπιστολῆς, i. e. in the first place he found fault with the bitterness of their Epistle. This Letter of Julius's is still extant, preserved for us by Athanasius, in his second Apology against the Arians: pag. 739, &c. Edit. in prin. In that Letter Julius reprehends the Intemperance and Pride, which the Eastern Bishops had used in their Letters to him. But, that which Socrates here adds (to wit, that Julius complained, because they had not invited him to the Synod: and that it was the Ecclesiastick rule, that nothing should be determined in the Church without the Bishop of Rome's consent:) is not to be found in that Letter. Indeed, Julius complains in that Epistle, because the Eastern Bishops (upon their receipt of his Letter, wherein he invited them to the Synod at Rome,) disregarding this his invitation, had ordained Gregorius Bishop in Athanasius's See. But he says not one word concerning this Ecclesiastick Rule or Canon. And yet Sozomen (Chap. 2. Book 10. Eccles. History) says the same that Socrates does here Valef.

(a) Socrates does here confess and repeats the same things twice, as if they had been done again. For he says that Athanasius fled to Rome twice. The same is asserted by Baronius (in his Annals) by Petavius (in his Rationarium Temporum), and by Blondellus in his Book de primatu. But we have sufficiently refuted this mistake, in our first Book of Ecclesiastick Observations, Chap. 6. Socrates makes the same mistake, in his asserting that Paulus Bishop of Constantinople came twice to Rome. Moreover, Julius received Eusebius of Nicomedia's Letter, before that Council of Antioch, which was held at the Consecration of the New Jerusalem, as we remarked before. And at the same time he invited Athanasius and his adversaries to Rome, in order to the discussion of their cause, as 'tis manifest from Athanasius's relation. Valef.

(b) The Bishops who had been convened at Antioch at the Consecration, having received Julius's Letter written to Eusebius of Nicomedia, (in which he invited him and the rest of the Eusebians to Rome, in order to the having their cause discussed there on a set day, whereon a Council was there to be held:) detained Julius's Messengers (Epistimus and Philoxenus) beyond the day appointed. Then, after they had held their Synod, they dismissed the Messengers, and gave them a Letter to Julius. Upon receipt whereof he wrote back that famous Letter, which Athanasius hath inserted, in his second Apology against the Arians; pag. 739, &c. Edit. Paris, 1627. Valef.

* That is, Athanasius and Paulus.

Confession.

C H A P. XVIII.

How the Emperor of the Western parts requested of his Brother, that such persons might be sent, as could give an account of [the Deposition of] Athanasius and Paulus. And, that they who were sent published another Form of the Creed.

BUT the Emperor of the Western parts, being inform'd of their sufferings, (as I have participated with them. And he sends a Letter to his Brother, signifying his desire to have three Bishops sent to him, who might give an account of Paulus's and Athanasius's Deposition. (a) The persons sent were Narcissus the Cilician, Theodorus the Thracian, Maris the Chalcedonian, and Stephens the Syrian. Who being arrived, would Edition, is in no wife admit of a Congress with Athana-
[ ]<sup>1</sup> But, having suppress'd the Creed publish'd at Antioch, and patch'd up another Form, they presented it to the Emperor Constant; the
But I sup- words whereof were these.

should be thus [ ]<sup>2</sup> καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ δὲ τὸ ἰδιωματικὸν, understanding their sufferings, sympathized, with them : for the word ἰδιωματικὸν has the same import with συμπάσχειν to suffer with. But the reading may be [ ]<sup>3</sup> συνάβη was very much troubled at :] which Emendation is the best. Valef.

(b) Some few months after the Synod at Antioch, which was held at the Dedication, the Eastern Bishops made another form of the Creed, and sent it to Constant Augustus, and to the Western Bishops, by Narcissus, Theodorus, Maris, and Mucun, as it had been dictated by the Synod at Antioch. So Athanasius attests in his Book de Synod. Arimin. and Seleuc. This therefore hapned in the year of Christ 342. Socrates does evidently agree with Athanasius. For he says, that those Messengers sent by the Eastern Bishops suppress'd that form of the Creed compos'd by the Antiochian Synod : and instead thereof produced another, which themselves had made. Valef.

[ Another Exposition of the Faith. ]

*We believe in one God, the Father Almighty, the Creator and Maker of all things, * Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named. And in his only begotten Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, who was begotten of the Father before all Worlds. God of God. Light of Light. By whom all things in Heaven and Earth, visible and invisible, were made. Who is the Word, and the Wisdom : and the Power, and the Life, and the True Light. Who in the last days was for our sakes made Man, and was born of the Holy Virgin. He was crucified and died : and was buried, and arose from the dead on the third day : and ascended into the Heavens, and was seated at the right hand of the Father, and shall come at the end of World, to judge the Quick and Dead, and shall render to every person according to his works ; whose Kingdom being perpetual, shall continue unto infinite ages. For He shall sit at the right hand of the Father, not only in this present World, but in that also which is to come. And [ we believe ] in the Holy Ghost ; that is, in the † Paraclete : whom [ Christ ] having promised to the Apostles, after his ascent into the Heavens, he sent him, || That he might teach them and bring all things to their remembrance. By whom also those Souls who have sincerely believed in him, shall be sanctified. But those who say that the Son [existed] of things which are not, or of another substance, and not of God ; and that there was a time when he was not, these persons the Catholic Church hath determined to be Aliens [ from it. ]*

* Ephes.
3. 15.† Or Comforter.|| See John
14. 26.

Having delivered these things, and exhibited many other to the Emperor, they departed without doing any thing further. Moreover, whilst there was hitherto an inseparable Communion between the Western and Eastern [ Bishops, ] another Herefie sprang up at Sirmium, which is a City of Illyricum.
For Photinus, (who presided over the Churches there,) a person born in Galatia the Less, a Disciple of that * Marcellus who had been deposed, following his Master's steps, asserted the Son [of God] to be a meer Man. But we will speak concerning these things in their due place. See 2o.
Book 1.
Chap. 36.

C H A P. XIX.

Concerning the large Exposition [ of the Faith. ]

(a) TH E space of three years being completely pass'd after these things, the Eastern Bishops having again assembled a Synod, and compos'd another [ Form of ] Faith, send it to those in Italy, by Eudoxius at that time
Bishop of Germanicia, Martyrius and Macedonius who was Bishop of Mopsuestia in Cilicia. This is the [ Form of the ] Creed, being written a great deal more at large, and containing many more additions than those Forms published before, was set forth in these very words.

(b) *Afterwards, repenting as it were [of what they had done,] they again assemble a Synod of their own party, three years after. And they send Eudoxius, Martyrius, and Macedonius of Cilicia, and some other persons with them, into the parts of Italy ; who carried along with them a prolix [ form of ] faith, &c. Baronius (in his Annals) says, that this second Council of Antioch (wherein that prolix form of faith was promulg'd) was convened in the year of Christ 344. And he thinks that he proves, this from Athanasius and Socrates. But, in my judgment, he is much mistaken. For first, the expression of Athanasius [ ]<sup>1</sup> μετὰ τρεῖς ἔτη, after three years signifies the fourth year, not the third. For it denotes, that years were now past. In this sense also Socrates understood the passage in Athanasius ; in regard he says [ ]<sup>2</sup> τρεῖς ἔτη ὡς τὸ πάλαι pass'd after these things. Since therefore that Synod of Antioch which had been convened at the Consecration, was held in the year of Christ 341 ; this second Antiochian Synod ought more truly to be placed on the year of Christ 345. Secondly, Athanasius does not say, that the second Antiochian Synod (wherein the large form of Faith was compos'd,) was assembled three years after that Synod at the Consecration had been convened there : but he says, it was assembled three years after Narcissus, Theodorus, Maris, and Mucun had brought that new form of Faith to Constant Augustus, pretending it to have been compos'd at Antioch. Now, he says that this was done some few Months after the Antiochian Synod held at the Consecration. From whence that which I have said is made apparent ; to wit, that that Council (in which the large form of Faith had been compos'd,) was convened in the year of Christ 345 ; not in the year 344, as Baronius would have it. Valef.*

*We believe in one God, the Father Almighty, the Creator and Maker of all things, * Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named. 3. 15
And in his only begotten Son Jesus Christ, our Lord ; begotten of the Father before all ages. God of God. Light of Light. By whom all things in the Heavens and in Earth, visible and invisible, were made. Who is the Word, the Wisdom, the Power, the Life, and the True Light. Who in the last days was for our sakes made Man, and was born of the holy Virgin : He was crucified, and died, and was buried, and rose again from the dead on the third day, and ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of the Father. He shall come at the end of the world to judge the Quick and the Dead, and shall render to every man according to his works. Whose Kingdom being perpetual,* perpetual, shall continue unto infinite Ages. For he sitteth at the right hand of the Father, not only in this present World, but in that also which is to come. We believe likewise in the Holy Ghost, that is, in the * Prælate. Whom [Christ] having promised to the Apostles, after his ascent into Heaven he sent him † That he might teach them and bring all things to their remembrance. By whom also those Souls that sincerely believe in him are justified. But those who assert that the Son [existed] of things which are not, or of another substance, and not of God, and that there was a Time or Age when he was not, the Holy Catholic Church hath determined to be aliens [from it.] In like manner also, those that affirm there are three Gods, or that Christ is not God before [all] Ages, or that he is not Christ, or the Son of God, or that the same Person is the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, or that the Son is not begotten, or † that the Father begat not the Son of his own Will and Pleasure; [these Persons] the Holy and Catholic Church Anathematizes. For neither is it safe to assert, that the Son [existed] of things which are not: in regard this is no where declared concerning him in the divinely inspired Scriptures.

Nor have we learned, [that he had his essence] from any other pre-existing substance besides the Father, but that he was truly and genuinely begotten of the Father only. For the Divine Word teacheth, that there is one unbegotten [Principle which is] without beginning, [to wit] the Father of Christ. Nor must they (who without Authority of Scripture do dangerously assert this [proposition], there was a time when he was not) preconceive in their minds then any foregoing interval of time, but God only who begat him without time. For both times and Ages were made by

(c) In Robert Stephen's Edition of Socrates (Vol. 197. Edit. Paris, 1554.) the words [Ἐκ αὐτοῦ πατρὸς, ἡ τὴν αὐτοῦ φύσιν τὴν καὶ αὐτὴν οὐσίαν] are Nor must it be thought, that the Son is without an Original, or unbegotten as the Father is] are wanting. The said Robert Stephen's Edition does offer something from this Copy of the Creed here. Athanasius has inserted this whole Creed, in his book de Synod.
Amin. & Seleuc. pag. 896. &c.
Edit. Paris 1627. Athanasius's copy and this in Valerius's Edition of Socrates do agree: whom we have followed in our Version.

* 1. Cor. begat him. * For the Head of Christ is God. Nor
11. 3. although we acknowledge three things and Persons, [to wit,] of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, according to the Scriptures; do we therefore make three Gods. For we know, that there is one only God, perfect of himself, unbegotten, incorrupt, and invisible, [that is,] the God and Father of the only begotten, who of himself only hath his own existence, and who only does abundantly and freely give existence to all other things. But, although we do assert that there is One God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who only is unbegotten; we do not therefore deny Christ to be God before Ages, as the Followers of * Paul of Samosata do, who asserts that after his incarnation he was by a promotion deified, whereas by Nature he was a mere Man. For we know that he (although he hath been made subject unto the Father and unto God, yet nevertheless) was begotten of God, and is by nature true and perfect God, and was not afterwards made God of * Man: But Constanwas for our sakes made Man of God, and that he hath never ceased to be God. Moreover, we a-dominate and anathematize those who falsely say, of style him the bare and meer word of God, [and men: but affirm] that he has no real existence, but hath his Valerius's Essence in another: One while [terming him] as ex homine, it were that Word called by some (d) The Word of Man, outwardly utter'd by the mouth; at another, as it were the mental or internal Word: Being of Opinion, that before Ages he was not Christ, nor the Son of God, nor the Mediator, nor the Image of God: but that 'e) he was made Christ, and the Son of God, from such time as he took our flesh from the Virgin four hundred years ago. For from that time they assert Christ to have had the beginning of his Kingdom, and that it shall have an end after the Consummation and the Judgment. Such manner of Persons as these are the followers of Marcellus and Photinus the Ancyro-Galatians: who reject the Eternal existence and deity of Christ, and his endless Kingdom, in like manner as do .f) the Jews, upon a pretence of seeming to constitute a monarchy. For we understand him to be, not barely The word of God outwardly uttered by the mouth, or his mental or internal Word,

but the Living God the Word, and subsisting of himself; and the Son of God, and Christ:
who existed with his Father and was conversant with him before Ages, not by fore knowledge only, and ministered unto him at the Creation of all things whether visible or invisible: But is the Word of God really subsisting, and is the God of God.
For it is he to whom the Father said, * Let us make man in our Image, after our likeness: Who in his own Person appeared to the Fathers, gave the Law, and spake by the Prophets; and being at last made Man, he manifested his Father to all men, and reigns unto perpetual Ages. For Christ hath attained no new dignity: But we believe him to have been perfect from the beginning, and in all things like unto his Father. We also deservedly expel out of the Church those who affirm, that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are the same Person, impiously supposing the three names to mean one and the same Thing and Person; because by an incarnation they make the incomprehensible and impassible Father subject to be comprehended, and to suffer. Of which sort [of Hereticks] are those termed amongst the Romans (g) Patropassians, but

(d) Instead of [δὲ τὸ θεογενὲς λογόσωπον] it should be [δὲ τὸν μεγέθειον, &c. and αὐτὸν ἡμεῖς δοῦναι] as it is in the Allat. M.S. and in Athanasius, in his book de Synodis, By [ἄλλος ὁμοούσιος] Philosophers mean, That word which is uttered by the mouth. Hilarius calls it Verbum prolatum. To which is opposed [ὁ ἁπλοῦς λόγος ἀλλος] which modern Philosophers do term the word of the mind, Valf.

(e) By these words the Eastern Bishops mean, the Heretic of Marcellus Ancyranus, who asserted that Christ's Kingdom began from his Nativity, about four hundred years before that time; making use of a certain number for an uncertain. The Synodical Epistle of the Eastern Bishops at Serdica informs us hereof; which Epistle Hilarius has inserted, in his fragments. For these are their words in that Letter. Exstitit namque temporibus nostris Marcel-lius, &c. l. c. For there hath risen up in our days one Marcellus of Galatia, the most execrable pest of all Hereticks, who with a sacrilegious mind, and impious mouth, and a wicked Argument, will needs set bounds to the perpetual, eternal, and timeless Kingdom of our Lord Christ, saying, that he began his reign 400 Years since, and shall end it at the Dissolution of this present World. Valf.

(f) We made good this place,
by adding the Word [ἡ οὐσία,
the Essens:] which is not in Robert Stephen's Edit. but it occurs in Athanasius, and in the Allat. M.S. Valf.

(g) The Heretic of the Patropassians (or Patripassians) was very ancient, and far diffused.
Tertullian (Adv. Prax. cap. 1, and 2.) chargeth this Heretic upon Praxeas. The same was maintained by Hermogenes, whence they were termed Hermogenians. After whom Noetus maintained the same, who (says Ephraem) lived 130 Years before his time: (See Ephraem, Heret. 57.) From Noetus they had the name of Noetians; and from Sabellus, Noetus's Disciple, they were called Sabellians.
After whom succeeded Priscillianus in the same Heretic; from him they * See Eu-

sch. Eccl.
Hist. book
7. chap. 27.
&c.

Label, he adds these Words, Hæc Epistola post biennium missa est, quæ hæcque Phorini à Romanis damnata est, i. e. This Letter was sent ten years after the Romans had condemned Phorinus's Heresie. Since therefore Ursinus and Valens wrote that Letter in the year of Christ 349, as Petrus attests; the Milaine Council must needs have been celebrated on the third year before that; that is, on the year of Christ 346. For that expression [ post biennium, two years after ] imports thus much, to wit, on the third year after that; which Petrus did not consider. Valef.

*Constan-
tius.* Empire, ] both because (b) they were unskilled in the Greek language, and also in regard they understood not these things, admitted not of them; saying, that the Nicene Creed was sufficient, and that there was no necessity of making any further disquisitions. But amongst the Populace. ] Paulus and Athanasius requested that another Synod might be convened, that both their cause, and also the matters offaith might be determined by an * Oecumenical Synod: and they made it apparent, that they had been deposed for no other reason but this, that the Faith might be subverted. Another Oecumenical Synod therefore is summoned [to meet] at Serdica (which is a City of Illyria), by the determination of the two Emperors; the one of them requesting this by his Letters, and the other (to wit, the Emperor of the East) readily complying with him. (c) It was then the eleventh year from the death of the Father of the Augusti: Rufinus and Ensebius were Consuls, at such time as the Synod at Serdica was assembled. About three hundred Bishops of the Western parts met there, as (d) Athanasius attests. But from the Eastern parts Sabinus says there came but seventy, amongst which number Ischyrius, Bishop of Marone was recounted, whom they who had depos'd Athanasius, Ordained Bishop of that Country. Some of them pretended infirmity of body; others (e) complained of the shortness of the time that was set, in the year laying the blame thereof upon Julius Bishop of

(b) Baronius does deservedly blame Socrates here, for his saying that the reason why the Western Bishops rejected this Creed was, because they understood not the Greek Tongue. As if there were not then many in Italy who were well skilled in the Greek Language. Moreover, Theodosius the Great has with good reason found fault with this cause of their refusal. For, instead of Socrates's Words here, he has substituted these; Id est quod quidam non intellexerunt, quia non sciebant, quia non intellexerunt, quia non intellexerunt, quia non intellexerunt. Valef.

(c) From the Consulate of Rufinus and Ensebius, which was in the year of Christ 357, it follows, that the Council at Serdica was convened in the eleventh year after Constantine's death, it must of necessity have been assembled after the twenty second day of May. Valef.

(d) Athanasius does not say, that about three hundred Bishops of the Western Church met at the Council of Serdica. He only says this, that as well those who were present at the Council of Serdica, as those who subscribed the Synodick Epistle afterwards sent to them; as also those who before the Council at Serdica had written Synodick Epistles in his behalf, out of Phrygia, Asia, and Illyria, were in all three hundred and forty. This passage of Athanasius's occurs in his second defence against the Arians, pag. 768; Edit. Paris. 1627. Moreover, the same Athanasius (in his Epistle ad Soltur, pag. 818.) does expressly attest, that the Bishops, who met at the Council of Serdica, as well those out of the Western as the Eastern parts, were no more than 170. His words are these: *οὐκ ὀλίγοις τοῖσι, &c. There met therefore, both from the East and from the West, at the City of Serdica, 170 Bishops, neither more nor less.* In the Mcgenius Edit. after the Canon of the Synod of Serdica, there is this note; † Subscriptum, &c. i. e. and all the Bishops of divers Provinces and Cities subscribed, being in number 121. Valef.

(e) In this place Socrates seems to have been mistaken, in referring those things to the Council of Serdica, which belong to the Roman Synod at Rome. For when Julius had invited the Eastern Bishops to a Synod at Rome, that Athanasius's case might there be inquired into; the Eastern Bishops refused to come thither, pretending amongst other reasons, the narrowness of the time set; as Julius informs us in his Epistle to the said Eastern Bishops, recorded by Athanasius, pag. 744. Indeed Socrates's following words, to wit [ although there had passed

a year and six months, after such time as the Synod had been summoned; and during which space Athanasius made his abode at Rome, &c. ] do manifestly confirm what I have said. For Athanasius, invited by Julius's Letters, came to Rome; where he abode a whole year, and six months expecting his Adversaries, and the Synod which had been summoned at Rome. Julius attests this, in his forequoted Epistle. pag. 748. Valef.

Rome: altho' there had passed a year and six months, after such time as the Synod had been summoned, and during which space Athanasius made his abode at Rome, expecting the meeting of the Synod. When therefore they were all convened at Serdica, the Eastern Bishops refused to come into the presence of the Western, saying, that they would not enter into discourse with them, unless they would banish Athanasius and Paulus from the convention. But when Protagenes Bishop of Serdica, and Hegsius Bishop of Corduba (which is a City in Spain, as we said before) would by no means suffer

(f) Paulus and Athanasius to be absent [ from the Synod, the Eastern Bishops ] went away immediately. And returning to Philippopolis, a City of Thracia, they made up a Synod apart by themselves. Wherein they openly antinomized the term Homousios; and having (g) inserted the (b) Anomoeian opinion into their Epistles, they sent them about to all places. But the Bishops at Serdica in the first place condemned them for deserting [ the Council. ] Afterwards they diverted Athanasius's Accusers of their dignities. And having confirmed that form of the Creed published at Nice, and rejected the term

* Anomoeios, they made a more manifest publication of [ the term ] † Homousios; concerning which they wrote Letters, and ( as the others did ) sent them about to all places. Moreover, both parties were of opinion, that they had done what was right and true; the Eastern Bishops [ thought so, ] because the Western [ Prelates ] had approved of and entertained those persons whom they had deposed: and the Western Bishops [ were of that Opinion, ] because they who had deposed these persons, fled away before their cause had been † discussed, and because * they were the prefer-
+ *Abi-
vers* and defenders of the Nicene Faith, and those † these had been so audacious as to adulterate (f) in the it. They therefore restored (i) Paulus and Athanasius to their Sees; as also Macellus [ Bishop ] the Coun- of Amyra [ a City ] in Gallia the less. He of Serdica had been deposed a long time before, as we said, which have made mention in our foregoing || book: occurs in Theodosius

B. 2. c. 8. Eccles. Hist. ] there is not the least mention of Paulus. Valef. || See Socrates, book, 1. chap. 36. Eccles. Hist.

Z. 2 but

Constantinus.

† Alas renew the combat with the sentence which, &c.• These three Books (the Title whereof is De Ecclesiastica Historia adversus Marcellum) of Eusebius's are at this day extant. There are prefix before them two Books, entitled ἡ ἐκκλησιαστική, that is, Against Marcellus; wherein he reproves his design, malice, and envy. Eusebius accepts (in the close of his second Book against Marcellus) that he wrote these Books by the order of those Bishops, who had condemned Marcellus in the Constantinian Synod. Further, it is uncertain whether or no Socrates had ever seen those two former Books against Marcellus, in regard he has made no mention of them. Valef.

of Eusebius's are at this day extant. There are prefix before them two Books, entitled ἡ ἐκκλησιαστική, that is, Against Marcellus; wherein he reproves his design, malice, and envy. Eusebius accepts (in the close of his second Book against Marcellus) that he wrote these Books by the order of those Bishops, who had condemned Marcellus in the Constantinian Synod. Further, it is uncertain whether or no Socrates had ever seen those two former Books against Marcellus, in regard he has made no mention of them. Valef.

C H A P. XXI.

An Apology for Eusebius Pamphilus.

But in regard some have attempted to reproach this person, (I mean Eusebius Pamphilus) as if he were an Assertor of Arius's Opinion in the books he hath publish'd; I judge it not unreasonable to say something concerning him. In the first place therefore, he was present at, and consented to, the Nicene Synod, which determin'd that the Son was consubstantial with the Father.

Moreover, in his third Book concerning the Life of Constantine, he says word for word thus: But the Emperor incited them all to an unity of mind, until he had at that time reduced them all to be of the same mind and sent to have the same sentiments in relation to all those points, concerning which they had before disagreed.

In so much that at Nice they did all perfectly agree in the [points] of Faith. Since therefore Eusebius, making mention of the Nicene Synod, does lay, that all things about which they disagreed were compell'd, and that they were all brought to be of one and the same mind and opinion; how can any Persons judge him to be a maintainer of Arius's Opinion? The Arius's also themselves are mistaken, in their supposing him to be a favourer of their Tenets. But some body will perhaps say, that in his writings he seems to Arianize, in regard he always says † By Christ. To whom we answer, that Ecclesiastical Writers have frequently made use of this Expression, and many other such like, which do signify the dispensation of our Saviour's Humanity. And before all these [Writers] the Apostle Paul hath made use of these very expressions; and he was never

* That is, to assert Arius's Opinion.

† Socrates means those Doctrines, that occur at the end of Eusebius's Sermons; which Eusebius doth always put into this form: Gloria to be the unborn Father by his only begotten Son, &c. This may plainly be seen in those Tracts of Eusebius's, which Jacobus Sirmondus hath published. For example, in the end of his first Book against Sabellius, these are his words: Gloria uni non nato Deo, &c. i.e. Gloria to be the unborn God, by the one only begotten God the Son of God, in one holy spirit, both now, and always, and bringing all ages of ages. Amen. And so concerning the rest. Also, in the Oratio Eusebius made at the Consecration of the Church at Tyre, (which occurs at the tenth book of his Ecclesiastical History, chap. 4.) we meet with the same clause, at the close of that Speech; ᾧ δὲ αὐτῷ ὁ δόξα, &c. by whom he glory to him. For so we have worded that Place, agreeable to three of our M. S. S. Further, 'tis manifestly known, that the Arius's attributed this preposition [per quem, by whom] to the Son, upon this design, that they might make him subject to the Father. See Theodoret upon the first chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians. Valef.

thought to be the Teacher of a perverse opinion. Moreover, in regard Arius has been so audacious, as to stile the Son a Creature like unto one of those other [Creatures made by God;] hear what Eusebius saith (in his first book against Marcellus,) concerning this; these are his very words: He only, and no other, hath been declared to be, and is, the only begotten Son of God; upon which account they are deservedly to be reprehended, who have audaciously stiled him a Creature, made of nothing like the rest of the Creatures. For how should he be a Son? How should he be God's only begotten, who is entitled to the very same Nature with the rest of the Creatures; (a) and would be one of those common Creatures, in regard he (like them) is made a partaker of a Creation from nothing? But the sacred Oracles do not instruct us after this manner concerning him. Then, after the interposition of some few words, he continues. *Whoever therefore doth determine that the Son is made of things which are not, and that he is a (b) Creature produced out of nothing, that person hath forgotten, that he becometh upon him a name only, but in reality he denies him to be a Son. For he that is made of nothing, cannot truly be the Son of God, nor can any thing else which is made [be his Son.] But the true Son of God, in regard he is begotten of him as of a Father, ought deservedly to be stiled the only begotten and beloved of the Father. And therefore he must be God. For what can the offspring of God be else, but most exactly like to him that hath begotten him? A King indeed builds a City, but he begets not a City; but he is said to beget, not to build, a Son. And an Artificer may be said to be the Framers, not the Father, of that which he hath made. But he can in no wise be stiled the Framers of the Son who is begotten by him. So also, the suprem God is the Father of his Son: but he is justly to be called the Maker and Framers of the world. And although this saying may be once found * somewhere in the Scripture, The Lord created me the beginning &c. 22. and of his ways in order to his works, yet we ought what was duly to inspect the meaning of those words, (which I remark will explain afterwards;) and not (as Marcellus doth) subvert a principal point [asserted by] the Church upon account of one word. These of us and many other such like expressions Eusebius Pamphilus utters, in his First Book against Marcellus. And in his Third Book [of that work,] the same Author, declaring in what sense the term Creature is to be taken, says thus. *These things therefore having been after this manner proved and confirmed, the consequence is (agreeable to all things explained by us before,) that these words also, The Lord created me, the beginning of his ways in order to his works, must have been spoken [concerning the same person.] But, although he says he was created, yet he must not be so understood, as if he should say, that he had arrived to what he is from things which are not, and that he also was made

Constantinus.

(a) Before these words there is a whole line wanting, (which from the First Book of Eusebius de Ecclesiastica Theologia, Chap. 9.) is thus to be made up; αὐτὸν δὲ ὁ πατὴρ ἀντίστοιχον ἑαυτοῦ κτλ. &c. For by this means he would be their brother, rather than the Son of God; and would be one of those common Creatures, &c. Valef.

(b) Instead of [γεννητός], the reading should be [ἐκγονήτος], produced [as Eusebius words it, at the place before cited.] It should also be [ἑκγονήτος] not [γεννητός]. But these two words, although they are distinguished but by one Letter, yet do very much differ in their significations. For the term [γεννητός] signifies that which is born or begotten; but [ἑκγονήτος] imports that which is made. Valef.

See Procr. de Trinitate, c. 22. and what was remarked concerning that Text, in chap. 19. of this book. Valef.

Constantinus. of nothing in the same manner with the other Creatures which some have perversely supposed : but [he speaks this] as being a Person subsisting, living, pre-existing, and being before the Foundation of the whole World; having been constituted the Ruler of the Universe by his Lord and Father: The term Created being in that place used instead of Ordained or Constituted. Indeed, the Apostle hath in express Words styled the Rulers and Governors

* 1 Pet. 2. 13, 14. Where the expression in the Original is ord-on ar-Spuryt Alton; which may be rendered thus, to every human Creature.

† Amos 4. 12, 13. Euseb. quotes this Text in the Words of the Separingins: But omits the Word [ayb, 1: ] We have rendered them according to his quotation; which is very different from the Hebrew, and from our English Version.

such a sense as to signify, That which hath been made when as before it was not. For God did not then Create his Spirit, when he declared his

† Eccles. 1. Christ to all Men by him. || For there is no new thing under the Sun. But [the Spirit] was, and did subsist before. But he was sent at such time as the Apostles were gathered together, when * Acts 2. (like thunder) * There came a sound from heaven, as a rushing mighty wind: And they were filled with the holy Ghost. And thus they declared God's Christ amongst all Men, agreeable to that Prophecy, which saith. † For behold he that

† Amos 4. firmeth the thunder, and createth the Spirit, and declareth his Christ unto men: The term Createth being made use of, instead of Sendeth, or Constituteth: And the Word Thunder in another manner signifying the Preaching of the Gospel. And he that saith, * Create in me

* Psal. 51. a clean heart, O God, [said not that, as if he had had no heart before: but he prayed, that his mind might be made perfectly pure within him. After the

* Ephes. 2. same manner this is spoken, || For to make in himself of twain one new Man, instead of to conjoin. Consider also, whether or no this saying be of the same sort, || Put on that new man, which

† Ephes. 4. after God is created: and this, † Therefore if any man [be] in Christ, [he is] a new Creature: and whatever other [expressions] of this sort may be found by him that diligently searcheth the divinely inspired Scripture. You need not wonder

* 1 Cor. 17. therefore, because in this place * The Lord created me the beginning of his ways, the term Created [is used] metaphorically: instead of Ordained or Constituted. After this manner Eusebius discourses in his Books against Mar-

* 1 Pet. 8. cellinus. We have produced his words here, upon their account, who have attempted causelessly to rail at and revile this Person. Nor can they demonstrate, that Eusebius doth attribute a beginning of Effluence to the Son of God, although they may find him frequently making use of the expression of dispensation: especially, because he was a great Emulator and Admirer of Origen's Writings, wherein such as are able to understand Origen's Books, will find [this] every where [asserted, to wit,] that the Son is begotten of the Father. Thus much we have said by the by, upon their account who have attempted to reproach Eusebius.

C H A P. XXII.

Constantinus.

That the Synod of Serdica restored Paulus and Athanasius to their Sees; and that upon the Eastern Emperors refusal, to admit them, the Emperor of the West threatened him with War.

BUT the [Bishops,] as well those convened at Serdica, as they who made up a particular Synod by themselves at Philippopolis [a City] of Thracia, having perform'd whatsoever each party thought requisite to be done, return'd to their own Cities. [Thence forward] therefore the Western Church was severed from the Eastern: and the boundary of communion between them, was the mountain call'd (a) Succi, which parts the Illyrians from the Thracians. As far as that mountain there was a promiscuous communion, altho' their Faith was different. But they (b) communicated not with those who lived beyond it. Such was the confusion of the Churches Affairs at that time. Soon after this, the Emperor of the Western Parts acquainted his Brother Constantius with what had been done at Serdica, and entreats him to restore Paulus and Athanasius to their own Sees. But when Constantius made demurs to what he had writ, then, the Emperor of the Western Parts in answer to their Letter gave him his choice, [to wit,] that he should either admit Paulus and Athanasius to their own former Dignities, and restore their Churches to them; or else (if he did not of the one or the other) he must look upon him to be his Enemy, and expect a War.

Am. Marcellinus describes in his twenty first book, pag. 189. Edit. Paris. 1635. Philostorgius mentions the same heights, (in book 3. Eccles. Hist.) and calls them Succi, i. e. Succi; being situated between Dacia and Thracia. He describes them thus: Σιδου δις εναι περυσιν ορειν, &c. i. e. They are straight passages of vast mountains, which are crowded together on each side into one place, in such a manner that they seem to embrace one another. He means to the mountains, Hemus and Rhodope, which arising from different places, make an angle in that place, and do as it were kiss one another. Which gave the Ancients an occasion of feigning Hemus to be a young man, and Rhodope a maid, and that beretofore they fell in love with one another. You may meet with the story in Ovid Metamorph. book 6. at the beginning. Busbequius (in 1. Epist. Legat. Turc.) says that the Turks do now call this narrow passage Capi derum, i. e. the Gate of narrowness. Valef.

(b) These words must have a favourable sense put upon them; and are not to be understood, as if Socrates should have said, that after the Synod of Serdica the Western Bishops held no communion with the Eastern. For in the Synod of Sirmium (which was convened by the Western Bishops against Photinus, two years after the Synod at Serdica) the Western Bishops sent their determinations to the Eastern upon account of preserving a communion. And the Eastern Bishops wrote back to them, as Athanasius informs us, in his Fragments. Thus therefore Socrates's words here must be understood: to wit, after the Synod at Serdica the Western Bishops did not readily and rashly, but with a great deal of cautiousness communicate with the Eastern. Valef.

The (c) Letter he wrote to his Brother was this. (c) Conf.

Paulus and Athanasius are indeed here with Us. Letter to But upon enquiry we find that they are Persecuted upon his Brother's account of their piety. If therefore you will promise to restore them to their Sees, and punish those which have causelessly injur'd them, We will send the heretico-Men to you. But if You shall refuse to do as We ded by So have said, know for certain, that We Our self will create, in come thither, and restore them to their own Sees when you will or no.

Am. Marcellinus makes no mention of this Letter: and Paulus's name (which is extant in it) doth upon good grounds render it suspicious. For at that time Paulus enjoy'd his Bishoprick: neither was he present at the Synod of Serdica; nor restor'd by the determination thereof; as we shew'd before. Wherefore, if this Letter of Constantius be genuine, Z 3

It must necessarily have been written before the Council of Serdica. Lastly, Constantius's first Letter to Athanasius (which Socrates has inserted in the following Chapter) evidently shews this to be a forged Letter. For Constantius in that Epistle saith, that by a Letter written to his Brother he hath requested him to give Athanasius leave to return to his See. Valf.

Constantius.

C H A P. XXIII.

That Constantius, being afraid of his Brothers menaces, by his Letters ordered Athanasius to appear, and send him to Alexandria.

THE Emperor of the East understanding these things, was reduced to a very great freight. And having forthwith sent for most of the Eastern Bishops, he made them acquainted with the option his brother had proposed to him, and enquired of them what was to be done. They made answer, that it was better [for him] to grant Athanasius the Churches, than to undertake a Civil War. Wherefore the Emperor, being necessitated thereto, summoned Athanasius to appear before him. At that very interim the Western Emperor sends Paulus to Constantinople, accompanied with two Bishops and other honorary Provisions, having fortified him both with his own Letters, and also with those from the Synod. But whilst Athanasius was yet fearful, and in doubt whether he should go to Constantius or not: (For he was afraid of the treacherous attempts of the Sycophants :) the Eastern Emperor invited him [to his Court] not only once, but a second and a third time; as it is evident from his Letters, the Contents whereof, being translated out of the Latin Tongue [into the Greek,] are these.

Constantius's Epistle to Athanasius.

CONSTANTIUS VICTOR AUGUSTUS, to Athanasius the Bishop.

(a) This, and the two following Letters, are in Athanasius's second de-up and down in desert and impassible places. And hence, pag. although We have too long deferred the acquainting thee, you by Letters with the purpose of Our mind, expecting you would of your own accord have come to Us, and requested a Remedy for your troubles: Yet because peradventure fear hath hindered that purpose of your mind, We have therefore sent to your Gravity, Letters filled with indulgence, that you should hasten to make your sudden appearance in Our presence without fear; whereby you might enjoy your desire, and, having made experiment of Our humanity, be restored to your own habitation. For upon this account we made a request for you to Our Lord and Brother Constantius Victor Augustus, that He would grant you the liberty of coming, to the end that being restored to your Country by both Our consents, you should have this pledge and assurance of Our favour.

Another Epistle to Athanasius.

CONSTANTIUS VICTOR AUGUSTUS, to Athanasius the Bishop.

Although we have made it sufficiently known to you by Our former Letter, that you might securely come to Our Court, in regard We are earnestly Constantius, desirous to send you to your own habitation: yet We have now (b) sent this Letter to your Gravity. Wherefore We entreat you to take a publick Chariot, and hasten to Us without any mistrust instead of or sea, that you may enjoy what you desire.

reading is [ἐὸν ἐλθεῖν] desired. Valf. (b) In Athanasius, it is [ἐπεὶ ἀναβὰς] not [ἐπὶ ἀναβὰς] manifested. Valf.

Another Letter to the same Person.

CONSTANTIUS VICTOR AUGUSTUS, to Athanasius the Bishop.

Whilst we made Our residence at Edessa, (your Presbyters being present there,) We were pleased, by sending a Presbyter to you, to hasten your coming to Our Court, to the end that after you were come into Our Presence, you might go immediately to Alexandria. But, in regard a considerable space of time is now past, since your receipt of Our Letter, and you have not yet come; We therefore took care to put you in mind by this, that you should now hasten to make your sudden appearance in Our Presence, that so you may be restored to your own Country; and obtain your desire. And that you might be most fully certified hereof, We have sent Achetas the Deacon, from whom you may understand both the purpose of Our mind, and also that you shall readily obtain what you desire.

Athanasius having received these Letters at Aquileia, (for (c) there he abode after his departure from Serdica,) hastened immediately to (d) Rome. And having shown the Letters to Julius the Bishop, he caused great joy in the Roman Church. For they supposed, that the Emperor of the East had now given his assent to their Faith, in regard he invited Athanasius to come to him. But Julius wrote this Epistle to the Clergy and Laity in Alexandria concerning Athanasius.

written to him by Constantius Augustus. Afterwards, he left Naxos, and went to Aquileia, as he himself attests, in his Apologick to Constantius, pag. 676. Valf.

(d) Athanasius relates the reason of this journey of his to Rome in his second defence against the Arians; to wit, that he might take his leave of Julius the Bishop, and that Romanus Church, by whom he had been so kindly entertained. For that is the meaning of these words: Ἐὸς δὲ τῆς ἐκείνης, ἀναβὰς ἐπὶ τὴν πόλιν ἠρώμεθα i.e. But I, upon receipt of these Letters, went to Rome, to bid the Roman Church and the Bishop farewell. For the term [ἀναβὰς] signifies valde dicere, to take leave of, or to bid farewell: As we have observed and prov'd in our Annot. on Eusebius's Life of Constantine; Book 3. Chap. 21. Valf.

The Epistle of Julius Bishop of Rome, to those of Alexandria.

Julius (e) to the Bishops and Presbyters, and Deacons, and to the Laity inhabiting Alexandria, his beloved Brethren, health in the Lord.

(e) In the Alta. MS. and in Athanasius (in his second Apology against the Arians) these words [the Bishops and] are wanting. Instead hereof Epiphanius Scholasticus seems to have read [Julius the Bishop to the Presbyters, &c.] which reading Corisopborus hath followed. Valf.

I also rejoice with you, beloved Brethren, because you now see before your Eyes the fruit of your Faith. For that this is truly so, any one may see in our Brother and Fellow Bishop Athanasius: Whom God hath restored to you, upon account both of his purity of Life, and also of your prayers. Hence it is apparent, that you have continually offered up to God Prayers which were pure and full of Charity. For, being mindful of the Celestial promise, and (f) of the course of Life tending thereto, which you have been instructed in by the Doctrine of our forbearing it.

[The] foreſaid Brother ; you certainly knew, and (according to that true Faith which is implanted in you) were apprehenſive of this, that your Biſhop could not be perpetually ſeparated from you, whom you have carried in your pious Minds, as being continually preſent. Wherefore, I need not make uſe of many words in this my Letter to you. For your Faith hath prevented whatever could have been ſaid by me : And by the Grace of Chriſt thoſe things have been fulfilled, which you in common prayed for and deſired. I rejoyce therefore with you, (for I will ſay it again,) becauſe you have preſerved your Souls inexpuſtable in [ your defending of ] the Faith. Nor do I any whit leſs rejoyce with my Brother Athanaſius, becauſe although he hath undergone many ſharp afflictions, yet he was not one hour unmindful of your Love, and your Deſire. For although he ſeemed to have been withdrawn from you for a time, yet he was continually converſant with you in Spirit. And I am of opinion, Beloved, that all the trials and troubles which have happened to him, are not inglorious. For both your, and his Faith hath thereby been made known, and approved amongſt all Men. For, had not ſo many and great afflictions beſet him, who would have believed, either that you ſhould have had ſo great a reſpect and love for ſo eminent a Biſhop, or that he ſhould have been adorned with ſuch excellent Virtues, by reaſon of which he is in no wiſe to be deſpended of his hope in the heavens ? He hath therefore obtained a teſtimony of conſeſſion every way glorious, both in this, and in the World to come. For after his many and various ſufferings both by Land and Sea, he hath trodden under foot all the treacheries of the Arian Herſe ; and after his having been frequently aſſaulted and brought into danger through envy, he hath deſpiſed death, being guarded by Almighty God, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt : hoping that he ſhould not only avoid his Enemies Plots, but alſo be reſtored in order to your conſolation, bringing back to you greater Trophies by reaſon of your being conſcious [ of having done what was juſt and good ] Upon which account he hath been rewarded glorious even as far as the ends of the whole Earth, being approved for his [ integrity of ] Life, unſhakenly perſiſting in the defence of his reſolution of Mind, and Celeſtial Doctrine, and evidently declared by your conſtant and perpetual judgment, to be entirely beloved by you. He returns therefore to you now far more bright and glorious, than when he departed from you. For, if the fire tries and refines precious Metals, I mean Gold and Silver, what can be ſaid of ſo eminent a Perſonage according to his worth, who having vanquiſhed the fire of ſo great afflictions, and ſo many trials, is now reſtored to you, having been g ) declared innocent, not by our determination only, but by that of the whole Synod ? Receive therefore (Beloved Brethren) with all Divine Glory M.S. and Joy your Biſhop Athanaſius, (h) together with all thoſe who have been his Fellow-ſufferers. And rejoyce, in that you enjoy your deſires, who have been nourished and quenched the thirſt of your paſſions. For, hungering ( if I may ſo ſpeak, ) and thirſting after your Piety, with your comfortable writings. For you were a conſolation to him during his abode in ſtrange Countries : And you have cheriſhed him with your moſt faithful Souls and Minds, (b) in the which he was perſecuted, and aſſaulted with treaditions. Indeed, I rejoyce already, whiſt I conſider and foreſee in my mind the joy of every one of you at his return, and the moſt pious meetings [which will be given him] by the Populace, and the glorious Solemnity of thoſe which will be aſſembled, and what manner of day that will be, wherein our brother ſhall make his return : When foreſaid Calamities ſhall have an end, and his precious and wiſdſd for return ſhall unite all Perſons in an alacrity of mind [ except by ] the higheſt degree of Joy. Such a Joy as this does, as to the greateſt part of it, reach even as far as us, to whom Heaven, (tis manifeſt) hath granted this favour, that we ſhould be able to come to the Knowledge of ſo eminent a Perſonage. It is fit therefore, that we ſhould cloſe this Letter with a Prayer. May God Almighty, and his Son our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt afford you this perpetual Grace, rendering you the reward of your admirable Faith, which you have demonſtrated towards your Biſhop by a Glorious Teſtimony : That better things may await you and your Poſterity both in this, and in the World to come, which * Eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things that God hath prepared for them that love him, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom Glory be to Almighty God for ever and ever, Amen. I wiſh you good health, beloved Brethren.

Athanaſius conſiding in theſe Letters, went into the Eaſt. The Emperor Conſtantine received him not then with an incenſed mind. But upon the ſuggeſtion of the Arians, he attempted to circumvent him, And ſpeaks to him thus. You have indeed recovered your See by the Synods determination, and our conſent. But, in regard there are ſome of the people in Alexandria, who do (i) reſuſe to hold communion with you, ſuffer them to have one Church in the City. To which requeſt Athanaſius immediately made this return, and ſays, It is in your power, O Emperor, to command and do what you will. I alſo aſk and requeſt this favour of you, which I deſire you would grant me. When the Emperor had readily promiſed him to grant it, Athanaſius forthwith added, that he deſired to receive the ſame favour, that the Emperor had required ſhould be granted him : For he alſo requeſted that throughout every City one Church might be allowed to thoſe who reſuſed to communicate with the Arians. When the Arians underſtood that Athanaſius's opinion would k. incommode [their party,] they made anſwer that that buſineſs was to be deſerred till another time : But they permitted the Emperor to do what pleaſed him. Wherefore, the Emperor reſtored Athanaſius, Paulus and Marcellus to their own Sees : As alſo, Aſclepas of Gaza, and Lucius of Adria-nople. For they alſo had been received by the Synod of Serdica ; Aſclepas [ was received ] upon his exhibiting the Acts, whereby it was manifeſt, that Euſebius Pamphilus (together with many others) having taken cognizance of his cauſe, had reſtored him to his dignity, and Lucius, becauſe thoſe that accuſed him were ſled. Therefore, the Emperors Edicts were ſent to their Cities, giving order that they ſhould be readily admitted. Upon Baſilius's being turn'd out of Ancyra, and Marcellus's entrance into that City, there was no trivial diſturbance made, which gave thoſe that were his Adverſaries an occaſion of reproaching him. But the Gaſtates willingly received Aſclepas. In Conſtantinople, Macedonius did for ſome ſmall time give place to Paſcalius, and convened aſſemblies by himſelf ſeparately, in a private Church of that City.

Constantinus.

City. But, in behalf of Athanasius, the Emperor wrote to the Bishops, to the Clergy, and to the Laity, that they should willingly receive him. Moreover, he gave orders by other Letters, that what had been enacted against him in the Courts of Judicature, should be abrogated. The contents of his Letters concerning both these Particulars are these.

Constantinus's Letter, in behalf of Athanasius.

VICTOR CONSTANTIUS
MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS, to
the Bishops and Presbyters of the Catholic Church.

The most Reverend Bishop Athanasius hath not been deserted by the Grace of God. But although he was for a short time subjected to human trial, yet he hath received a just sentence from Divine Providence which inspects all things: having been restored, by the will of God, and our determination, both to his own Country, and Church, over which by Divine permission he presided. It was meet, that what is agreeable hereto should be performed by our Clemency. That so, all things which have heretofore been determined against those who have held communion with him, should now wholly be forgotten, and that all suspicion [entertained] against him should in future cease, and that the immunity, which those Clergymen that are with him did heretofore enjoy, should (as it is meet) be confirmed to them. Moreover, We thought it equitable to make this addition to Our Indulgence in favour of him, that all Persons belonging to the sacred order of the Clergy might understand, that security is granted to all those that have adhered to him, whether they be Bishops, or Clerks: And a firm Union with him shall be a sufficient testimony of every one's good resolution of mind. For, what Persons soever (making use of a better judgment, and becoming followers of a sounder Opinion,) shall embrace his Communion. We have ordered, that all such shall enjoy that indulgence (according to the * Pattern of the preceding providence) which We have now granted agreeable to the will of God.

* Likeness.

Another Letter sent to the Alexandrians.

VICTOR CONSTANTIUS
MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS, to
the to the Populace of the Catholic Church in Alexandria.

In regard We make (1) your good Government Our aim in all things, and knowing that you have for some time been deprived of an Episcopal Providence, We have thought good to send back to you a gain Athanasius the Bishop, a Person well known to all Men for his sanctity of Life and moral honesty. When you shall have received this Person according to your usual manner, and as it is meet; and shall constitute him your assistant in your Prayers to God; make it your business to preserve continually a Concord and Peace, visiting your selves, and grateful to Us, according to the Sanction of the Church. For it is disagreeable to reason, that there should be any dissension or faction raised amongst you, contrary to the felicity of Our times. Our desires and wishes are, that you may be wholly freed from this mischief. And we exhort you to persist continually in your usual Prayers to God, making use of him your Prelate and your assistant, as was said before. That so this resolution of yours being conveyed to the ears of all Men, even those Gentiles as yet enslaved in the erroneous Worship of Idols, may with the greatest alacrity hasten to the knowledge of the sacred Religion, (most dear Alexandrians!) We therefore again exhort you to persist in what hath been said before. Do you willingly receive your Bishop, sent to you by God's Decree and Our determination, and look upon him as worthy to be embraced (n) with your own Souls and Minds. For that doth both become you, and is also manifestly agreeable to Our Clemency. And that all manner of (o) disturbance and occasion of Sedition may be taken from such as are endow'd with malevolent and fustious minds, We who have by Our Letters given order to the Judges, amongst you, that they should render all those liable to undergo the Penalty of the Laws, whom upon inquiry they shall find to have been Seditious, Taking therefore into your consideration these two main things, both God's and Our determination, and also of the care we have taken about your agreement, and the punishment [we have commanded to be inflicted] upon those that are disorder'd; make it your chief business to have a diligent regard to whatever doth become and agree with the Sanctions of the sacred Religion, and with all reverence to honor the * foresaid [Prelate,] that so you together with him may offer up Prayers to the Supreme God and Father, both for your selves, and also for the good Government and Concord of Mankind in general.

An Epistle concerning the abrogating what had been enacted against Athanasius.

VICTOR CONSTANTIUS
AUGUSTUS, to Nestorius. And in the same Copy, to the Presidents of (p) Augustanica, Thebais, and Lybia.

If any thing be found to have been heretofore done to the detriment and injury of those who communicate with Athanasius the Bishop, Our Will is, that that be now wholly abrogated. For Our Pleasure is, that those of his Clergy should again have the name of same immunity, which they formerly had. And We command, that this Order of Ours be kept: That (Athanasius the Bishop having been restored to his Church,) they who communicate with him may have the same Privilege which they always had, for and which the other Clergymen now have: Whereby their Affairs being thus settled, they also may rejoice.

it written in many both Greek and Latin MSS. Others call'd it Augustonica, to wit, from Augustus's Victory. In the subscriptions of the Bishops, who approved of Ascius's draught of the Creed, (which the Reader will meet with at the 40th Chapter of this second Book,) whose names Epiphanius has recorded, (in Heref. Semarian.) we read amongst others; ΠΡΟΒΕΒΑΤΟ ΕΥΧΕΙΝΟΝ ΣΥΝΟΙΟΝ ΑΥΓΟΥΣΤΟΥ, i. e. Ptolemus Bishop of Thmus [a City] of Augustonica. Valef.

C H A P. XXIV.

That Athanasius, passing through Jerusalem in his return to Alexandria, was received into Communion by Maximus, and convened a Synod of Bishops which confirmed the Nicene Faith.

Athanasius the Bishop being fortified with these Letters, passed thorow Syria, and came into Palestine. And arriving at Jerusalem, he made known to Maximus the Bishop, both what

Con-
stanti-
nus.

what had been done in the Synod of Serdica, and also that Constantinus the Emperor had consented to their determination: and he makes it his business to have a Synod of Bishops convened in that City. Maximus without any delay sent for some of the Bishops in Syria and Palestine: and having constituted a Synod, he also restored to Athanasius communion, and his [former] dignity.

† This Epistle of the Jerusalem Synod is extant in Athanasius's second defence against the Arians; together with the names of those Bishops who subscribed to that Synod. But we may here be the by take notice of the Bishop of Jerusalem's Authority, who (although he was no Alexandrian see) summoned the neighbouring Bishops to a Synod, without the Permission of the Bishop of Cæsarea.

Valef.

been done before,) he gave his Suffrage for Athanasius, and restored to him communion and his dignity. Ursacius and Valens (who had before been hot maintainers of Arianism), understanding these things, having at that time rejected their former industry [in asserting that Opinion] went to Rome. And presented a penitentiary Libel to Julius the Bishop, after which they embraced the Homousian Faith. And having written Letters to Athanasius, they professed they would in future hold communion with him. Ursacius therefore and Valens were at that time in such a manner vanquish'd by Athanasius's prosperous Success, that (as I said) they gave their consent to the Homousian Faith. But Athanasius pass'd thro' Pelusion in his Journey to Alexandria. And he admonish'd all the Cities through which he pass'd, to have an aversion for the Arians, and to embrace those that professed the Homousian Faith. He ordain'd also in some of the Churches. Which gave beginning to another accusation against him, * because he attempted to ordain in other [Bishops] Dioceses. Such was the posture of Athanasius's Affairs at that Time.

* Socrates speaks here concerning the Ordinations performed by Athanasius in Egypt. For he says that was done after he arriv'd at Pelusion; which is the first City of Egypt to those that come out of Syria. If this be so, that Opinion can no ways be maintained, which some now a days assert, to wit, that all Ordinations (as well of Bishops as of Presbyters) throughout Egypt belonged to the Bishop of Alexandria: But we have sufficiently refuted this Opinion in our Third Book of Ecclesiastical Observations, published at the close of our Annotations on Socrates and Sozomen. Valef.

C H A P. XXV.

Concerning the Tyrants Magentius and Verano.

BUT in the interim a disturbance in no wise trivial seiz'd the publick affairs of the Empire. It is necessary that we should give a summary account only concerning it, by running over the chief heads thereof. When the * Builder of the City of Constantinople was dead, his three Sons succeed'd him in the Empire, as we have mentioned in our First Book. (a) But you must know, that together with them reigned their * Constantine the Great.

(a) The emblem on this place, (which is very corrupt in Roberts Stephens's Edition) we owe to the Allat. M. S. where the reading is ἵστω δὲ ὅτι οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλος τῶν ἀνδρῶν αὐτῶν, ὁ ὅπως διακρίνεται ὁμοῦντος τοῦ ἰδίου καὶ τοῦ ἑτέρου. i. e. But you must know, that together with them reigned their Cousin-german, whose name was Dalmatius of the same name with his own Father.] See Socras. Book 1. chap. 27. note (g.) The Florent. and Sfortius M. S. S. alter not the Vulgar reading here. But the reading of the Allat. M. S. is evidently confirm'd by Epiphinius Scholasticus's Version. Only he calls Dalmatius, Constantinus's Cousin-german by the Mother's side. But Dalmatius was Constantinus's Cousin-german by the Father's side; for he was son to Dalmatius, Constantine's the Great's Brother. Valef.

Cousin-german, whose name was Dalmatius of Constantine's the same name with his own Father. After he had been Colleague with them in the Empire some small time, the Soldiers slew him; Constantinus neither

(b) Europius relates the fame: Dalmatius Cæsar (says he,) Haud multo post oppressus est factione Militari, Constantino patri suo finem potius quam salutem: i. e. Not long after, Dalmatius Cæsar was slain by a faction of the Soldiers, Constantinus his Cousin-german by the Father's side suffering, rather than commanding, H. Valef.

* See Socras. Book 2. Chap. 5.

the Persian War was rais'd against the Romans, wherein Constantinus performed no Action that was fortunate. For, there hapning an † Engage- ment by night about the limits of the Romans and Persians, the latter seem'd then for some little time to have been Conquerors. At the same time, the posture of the Christians affairs was little less sedate: but upon Athanasius's account, and by reason of the term Homousius, there was a War throughout the Churches. During this state of Affairs, there arose a Tyrant in the Western Parts [of the Empire,] one Magentius. Who by treachery slew Constantine the Emperor of the Western Parts, residing at that time in the Gallia's. After which there was a mighty Civil War kindled. For the Tyrant Magentius conquer'd all Italy, he also reduc'd Africa and Lybia under his own Dominion; and had possession even of the Gallia's. In Illyricum likewise at the City Sirmium, another Tyrant was * set up by the Soldiers; his name Verano. † Or erept Moreover, Rome was involv'd in a disturbance. For † Constantine had a Sisters Son, by name Nepotianus, who being guarded by a Party of the Gladiators, had by violence seiz'd upon the Greek the Empire. This Nepotianus was slain by Magentius's Forces. But Magentius himself invaded the rest of the Western Provinces, and made all Places desolate.

† In the reading is Constantinus had a Sister's Son, &c.] But it must be [Constantine had &c.] For Nepotianus was Son to Europia Constantine's Sister; as Vistor tells us, in his Epitome: and, as we are inform'd by Europius, Epiphinius Scholasticus's reading agrees with our emendation; but he mistakes in calling Nepotianus [fratrem Constantini. i. e. Constantine's Brother's Son,] in regard he was, his Sisters Son. Valef.

C H A P. XXVI.

How, after the death of [Constantine] the Western Emperor, Paulus and Athanasius were Ejected out of their own Sees again. And, that Paulus, after his being carried into banishment, was slain. But Athanasius made his escape by flight.

A Conflux of all these mischiefs hapned almost at one and the same time. For these things were done on the fourth year after the Synod

Constantinus. Synod at Serdica in the (a) Consulate of Sergius and * Nigrinianus. Upon the relation hereof, the whole Roman Empire seemed to be devolved upon Constantinus only: who being proclaimed (b) Emperator in the Eastern parts, was wholly intent in making preparations against the Tyrants. In the interim, Athanasius's adversaries, supposing they had gotten every seasonable opportunity, did again frame monstrous false accusations against him, he having not yet entered Alexandria: they inform the Emperor Constantinus, that he would subvert all Egypt and Libya. That which made the greatest addition to their calumny was that Athanasius had Ordained in other [Bishops] Dioceses, Athanasius arriving at Alexandria during this troublesome posture of affairs, assembled a Synod of Bishops in Egypt. Who by an unanimous consent made the same determinations with those convened at Serdica, and with that Synod assembled at Jerusalem by Maximus. But the Emperor, who had long before embraced the Arian opinion, wholly altered all things which he had a little before decreed. And in the first place, he gave order, that Paulus the Bishop of Constantinople should be banished, who was strangled by those that carried him into banishment, at (c) Cucusus in Cappadocia. Marcellus also being ejected, Basilus was again put into possession of the Church of Antioch. Lucius of Adrianople was bound in iron chains, and died in Prison. Moreover, what was reported concerning Athanasius made doubtless so prevalent an impression upon the Emperor, that he fell into an unmeasurable rage, and gave order that he should be slain whenever he could be found: and together with him, (d) Theodotus and Olympius, Prelates of Churches in Thracia. But Athanasius was not ignorant of what Orders the Emperor had given. But, having been made sensible thereof before-hand, he betook himself to flight again, and so avoided the Emperor's menaces. The Arians calumniated him for this his escape, especially Narcissus Bishop of Neroniades a City of Cilicia, Georgius of Laodicea, and (e) Leontius who then presided over the Church at Antioch. This Leontius, when he was a Presbyter, was divested of that dignity, because he lived continually with a woman whose name was Eustolium, and endeavouring to conceal the suspicion of this unclean converse with her, he cut off his own genitals; after which he was conversant with her, late of Sergius and Nigrinianus Confess his Confessions Constantinus efficit Gillius a Magnentio Constantinus efficit Magnentius die 19. Kal. Februar. Et Vetrano apud Sirmium Kal. Martii. Et anno, G. Nepotianus Rome tertio Novus Janus. Et pagina magna fuit cum Romanis Constantinus i. e. Sergius and Nigrinius being Consuls, Constantinus was set up on the 19th of the Kalends of February. And Vetrano at Sirmium on the Kalends of March. On the same year, Nepotianus also at Rome on the third of the Nones of June. And there was a great battle between the Romans and Magnentius. The time is recorded in the Alexandrian Chronicle; but there, the passages are placed on the Consulate of Timonius and Caecilianus, when as it happened on the year following. Which was the year of Christi, 350. Valef.

(b) Constantinus was long before Emperor of the E. R. But when Constantinus was dead, who governed the Western Empire; he was by the soldiers killed Emperor of the whole Roman world. Valef.

(c) In the Flavert. M. S. 114. Tomas name is written with a doubtless so prevalent an impression upon the Emperor, that he fell into an unmeasurable rage, and gave order that he should be slain whenever he could be found: and together with him, (d) Theodotus and Olympius, Prelates of Churches in Thracia. But Athanasius was not ignorant of what Orders the Emperor had given. But, having been made sensible thereof before-hand, he betook himself to flight again, and so avoided the Emperor's menaces. The Arians calumniated him for this his escape, especially Narcissus Bishop of Neroniades a City of Cilicia, Georgius of Laodicea, and (e) Leontius who then presided over the Church at Antioch. This Leontius, when he was a Presbyter, was divested of that dignity, because he lived continually with a woman whose name was Eustolium, and endeavouring to conceal the suspicion of this unclean converse with her, he cut off his own genitals; after which he was conversant with her, late of

(d) Olympius was Bishop of Antioch a City of Thracia; Theodotus was Bishop of Trjanople, as Athanasius attests; (in Egypt, ad Solitar.) He mentions the same Bishop, in his Apologetic de Eugenis, pag. 703. But these passages are preposterously related by Socrates. For they were not done before the Magnentian war, as Socrates says, but when that war was ended, in the year of Christi 350; as Eusebius hath truly remarked. Valef.

(e) This person has a great Elogue given him in the Alexandrian Chronicle, after which he was conversant with her, late of

Sergius and Nigrinianus: which commendation was taken out of some Semi-Arian writer. Athanasius doth every where speak sharply concerning this Leontius. His crafty disposition is incomparably well described by Theodoret; book 2. chap. 24. Eccles. Histor. Valef.

with a greater confidence and liberty, in regard he wanted those things upon account whereof he had fallen into that suspicion. But by the Decree and Diligence of the Emperor Constantinus he was promoted to the Bishoprick of the Antiochian Church after Stephanus, who had before succeeded Flaccillus. Thus far concerning this Person.

CHAP. XXVII.

That Macedonius, having got possession of the See [of Constantinople,] did much mischief to those that in opinion dissented from him.

Moreover, at that time Macedonius was put into the possession of the Churches in Constantinople, Paulus being dispatch'd in the forementioned manner. And having procured a very great interest in the Emperor, he raised a war amongst the Christians, not inferior to that waged by the Tyrants at the same time. For, having by his persuasions induced the Emperor to countenance him with his assistance in destroying of the Churches, he procur'd whatever wicked acts he had a mind to do, to be establish'd by Law. From that time therefore an Edict was publicly propos'd throughout every City. And a military force appointed to see the Emperors Decrees put in execution. Those who asserted the Homousian Faith were driven not only out of the Churches, but from the Cities also. At first indeed they made it their business to expel them only. But afterwards, the mischief growing worse and worse, they betook themselves to a forcing of them to communicate with them, being very little solicitous about the Churches. And this forcible constraint was nothing inferior to that heretofore made use of by them, who necessitated the Christians to worship Idols. For they made use of all manner of scourgings, various tortures, and proscriptions of their goods. Many were punish'd with exile. Some died under their tortures, others were murdered, during their being led away to banishment. These things were done throughout all the Eastern Cities, but more especially at Constantinople. This intestine Persecution therefore, being but small before, was much increased by Macedonius, after he had gotten the Bishoprick. But the Cities of Acchoa and Illyricum, and the Western parts of the Empire, continued as yet undisturbed, in regard they both mutually agreed, and also retained the Rule of Faith delivered by the Nicene Synod.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Concerning what was done at Alexandria by Georgius the Arian; from Athanasius's own Relation.

BUT what [Villanies] Georgius during the same time committed at Alexandria, you may understand from Athanasius's own relation, who was present at, and a sufferer in those [miseries.] For, in his Apologetic concerning his own flight, he speaks word for word thus, concerning what had been done there. For they came from thence to Alexandria, making search for me again, that they might murder me. And what hapned then was worse than that they had done before. For on a sudden the Soldiers surrounded

Constan-
tius.Constan-
tius.

surrounded the Church, and instead of going to prayers, there hapned a fight. After this, Georgius (sent by them out of Cappadocia, (arriving in Leht, increased those mischiefs which he had learnt from them. For after Easter-week, the Virgins were cast into Prison: The Bishops, bound in chains, were led away by the Soldiers: The Houses of Orphans and Widows were plunder'd, and the stock of Bread-corn [was pillaged:] they broke into Houses. And the Christians were carried out [to burial] in the night. The Houses were seal'd up: And the Brethren of those that were Clergy-men, were in danger upon their Brethrens Account. These things were horrid: but those afterwards committed were much more horrid. For the week after the Holy Pentecost, the People, after they had fasted, went out to the Cemetery to pray, because they all abominated Georgius's Communion. But that Villanous wretch understanding this, infligated Sebastianus the Captain, who was a Manichean, against them. He with a company of Soldiers, carrying Armour, naked Swords, Bows, and Darts, made a violent attack upon the People on the very Lords Day. And finding some few at their Prayers (for most of them were gone away by reason of the time of the day;) he did such exploits as became the Arians to have performed amongst them. For having kindled a fire, he set the Virgins close to it, forced them to say that they professed the Arian Fith. But when he perceived they were not to be vanquish'd, and that they despised the fire, he afterwards stript them, and beat them on the face in such a manner, that for a time they could scarce be known. And having seized forty men, he beat them after a new and unusual manner. For he forthwith cut Rods from off Palm-trees, which yet had their prickles on them, and steal'd their backs after such manner, that some of them by reason of the prickles that stuck in their flesh, were forced to make frequent use of Chirurgeons: others of them, not able to endure [the pain,] died. Immediately he took all the rest, that were left, and together with them a Virgin, and (a) banish'd them into Oasis the Great. Moreover, they would not at first suffer the bodies of those that were dead to be given to their relations: but casting them forth unburied, they hid them as they thought good, that they might seem not to know of so barbarous a cruelty. And this these madmen did, having a blindness upon their minds. For, in as much as the Relations of those that were dead, rejoiced upon account of their confession, but mourned because their Bodies lay unburied: their impiety and barbarity was so much the more plainly detected and divulged. Soon after this, they carried away into banishment out of Egypt and both the Libya's these Bishops, Ammonius, Thmuis, Cajus, Philo, Hermes, Plinius, Psenofrits, Nilammon, Agatho, Anagaphus, Ammonius, Marcus, Dracontius, Adelphius, another Ammonius, another Marcus, and Athenodorus: and these Presbyters, Hierax, and Diofcorus. And they treated them so cruelly in their conveying them into banishment, that some of them died in the Journey, and others in the very place of their exile. They

(a) In Athanasius the reading is [they were banished.] But in the Florant. and Sforian MSS. the reading (which I live better) is [they were banished.] To show, that this is to be read thus of Sebastianus the Captain of Egypt, who then a pious Marcus in a detestable manner. Moreover, all these things are (as I have said) related in a prepositional manner by Socrates: in regard they were done in the Year of Christ, 356. c. 15. g.

(b) The reading is the same in Athanasius. But in Theodoret (book 2. chap. 14. where this passage of Athanasius's is inserted) the reading is. [They murdered.]

was their earnest desire, according as Ahab did, wholly, if possible, to destroy the truth. Thus much Athanasius hath related in his own words concerning the Villanies committed by Georgius at Alexandria. But the Emperor march'd his Army into Illyricum. For the necessity of the publick affairs required his presence there; more especially, because Vetrano was proclaimed Emperor there by the Soldiers. Being come to Sirmium, he made a League with Vetrano, after which he discourt'd with him, and brought Affairs to such a pass, that those Soldiers, who had proclaimed Vetrano, revolted from him to Constantius's side. Having therefore deserted Vetrano, they cry'd out that only Constantius was Augustus, King and Emperor. No mention was made of Vetrano in their acclamation. Vetrano, becoming sensible immediately that he was betrayed, laid himself prostrate at the feet of the Emperor. Constantius took his Imperial Crown and Purple from him, and treated him kindly, exhorting him to lead a more sedate and quiet life in the habit of a private person. For [he told him] that a life void of disquietude was much more suitable for a man of his years, than to have a name full of care and sollicitude. Such was the conclusion of Vetrano's Affairs. But the Emperor ordered, that he should be allowed an ample revenue out of the publick tribute. After wards he wrote frequently to the Emperor whilst he made his residence at Prusa in Bithynia, declaring to him, that he had been the Author of the greatest happiness to him, in that he had freed him from cares, and the troubles that accompany a Crown: and said, that he himself did not do well, because he would not enjoy that happiness which he had bestow'd upon him. Thus far concerning these things. At the same time the Emperor Constantius, having created Gallus, his Father's Brother's Son, Caesar, and giving him his own name, sent him to Antioch of Syria, designing that he should guard the Eastern parts. Whilst he was making his entry into Antioch, the Sign of our Saviour appeared in the East. For a Pillar in the form of a Cross appearing in the heavens, struck the beholders with a great amazement. The rest of his chief Commanders he sent against Magnentius, of Sergius at the head of a very great Army. In the interim, he himself made his residence at Sirmium, expecting the issue of affairs.

†The same is recorded in the Acts of the Martyrs of the East, after the manner of the Consulate of Magnentius, of Sergius and Nigrinus, in these words: His Cons.

Levatus est Constantius Cæsar Id. Martij, & apparuit in Oriente Signum Salvatoris die 2. Kal. Februar. Luna 28. &c. During these mens consules, Constantius [Gallus] was created Cæsar on the Ides of March, and the Sign of our Saviour appeared in the East, on the 13th of the Kalends of February, on the 28th. of the Moon. But the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle says, this Sign was seen in the East, on the Nones of May about the day of Pentecost. To whom agrees Cyrilus, Theophylactus and Cedrenus. And Socrates seems to confirm the time in this place. For he saith, that this Sign appeared in the East, when Gallus Cæsar entered Antioch. Now Gallus was created Cæsar on the Ides of March: (besides Martin) the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle doth affirm. Vale.

C H A P. XXIX

Concerning Photinus the Arch-Heretic.

Moreover, at that time Photinus who presided over the Church in that City, did more openly divulge that opinion which he had from Sirmium, invented. Wherefore, when there arose a disturbance occasioned thereby, the Emperor order'd, that

Confan-
tius.

that a (a) Synod of Bishops should be convened at Sirmium. Therefore, there met together in that City, of the Eastern [Bishops,] (b) Marcus of Arcthusa, (c) Georgius of Alexandria, whom the Arian party (having removed Gregorius, as we said * before) put into his See; also Basilus, (who presided over the Church at Ancyra, Marcellus having been ejected,) Pancratius [Bishop] of Pelencium, and (d) Hypatianus of Heraclea. Of the Western Bishops, [there met there] Valens [Bishop] of Mursa, and Hofius Bishop of Corinth duba in Spain (a Person eminently famous at that time) was present against his Will. These [Prelates] being convened at Sirmium, after the Consultation of Sergius and Nigrinianus, (in it to have which year, by reason of the tumults caused by the Wars, no Consul publish'd the solemn (e) Shows and Plays usually exhibited at their entrance upon their Consulate, and having upon the examination found, that Photinus asserted the Opinion of Sabellius the Libyan and Paul of Samosata; they immediately deposed him. And this determination of theirs was by all Men, both then and afterwards, approved of as good and equitable. (f) But those [Bishops] who staid behind [at Sirmium] did that which was not grateful to all Men.

Yitii War, there were no Consuls in the East; but in the Western parts Magnentius Angustus as Consul with Gaisio. Baronius (in his Ecclesiastick Annals asserts, that that Synod was convened in the year of Annals, 357. when Constantinus Angustus was the Ninth time Consul, and Julianus Cæsar the Second time. But Dionysius Petrus (in Frit in his Antiquariorum on Epiphanius, and Secondly in his disputatione de duplici Synodo Sirmiacensi), doth by most evident arguments demonstrate, that the year of that Synod is truly assigned by Socrates, after the Consultation of Sergius and Nigrinianus, which was the year of Christ 351. I know Isidorus Sirmionensis hath written two books, wherein he has endeavoured to maintain Baronius's opinion against Dionysius Petrus, but in regard he himself did not publish those books, that is an evidence sufficient, that at length he acknowledged his own opinion to be false. Valef.

(b) The Bishops here named by Socrates, sat not in that Synod of Sirmium, which was convened against Photinus, after the Consultation of Sergius and Nigrinianus, in the year of Christ 351; but in that other Synod which was convened there when Eusebius and Hypatius were Consuls, in the year of Christ 352, a little before the Council of Ariminum; which latter Synod at Sirmium did also first that draught of the Creed, which was afterwards recited at Ariminum; before which the Consuls names were prefixt. And this is evidently made out by Geminus, in his Epistle to Valens, which is recorded in Hilarius's Fragmentis; and by Epiphanius, in Hæres. Semiarum. In the former Sirmium Synod, assembled against Photinus, the Eastern Bishops only were present this is attested by Hilarius, in his book de Synodis, and by Vigilius Bishop of Tapsis in his Fifth Book against Eutyches. Valef.

(c) Georgius was not at this time (viz. after the Consultation of Sergius and Nigrinianus) Bishop of Alexandria. For he was created Bishop there in the eighth Consulate of Constantinus Angustus, and in the Fifth Consulate of Julianus Cæsar, which was in the year of Christ 356. Wherefore, he could not sit in the former Sirmium Synod, which deposed Photinus in the year of Christ 351. The same must be said of Eusebius also who at that time lived under Magnentius's jurisdiction: nor was he as yet banished to Sirmium. Valef.

(d) Theodorus continued to be Bishop of Heraclea in Thracia in the year of Christ 356, as it is manifest from Athanasius's Circular Epistle to the Bishops of Egypt and Libya, pag. 290: which Epistle Athanasius wrote in the year of Christ 356, after Georgius's entrance into the See of Alexandria. Wherefore, Hypatianus must necessarily have been made Bishop of Heraclea after the year 356. Sepmen hath made mention of the same Hypatianus, book 6. chap. 7. Eccles. Hist. Valef.

(e) Socrates here means by Γαλατίας, the Ludi Circenses, which the Consuls, exhibited at their entrance upon their Consulate: which by the Latines is termed Consulatum dare. Some Consuls, besides the Ludi Circenses, entertained the people with Scenical Plays, and with hunting of wild beasts in the Amphitheatre. Valef.

(f) At this place we follow the Syriac M. S. in which Copy this passage is more fully express, thus: Οἱ δὲ ἐπιστολὰς ἐν ὁμοῦ ἐκείνῳ ἔαρον ἢ ἐκείνῳ ἢ ἑ. c. But those [Bishops] who staid behind, &c. Incomparably well in my Judgment. Indeed, that draught of the Creed, which was publish'd in the Synod of Sirmium against Photinus, is approved of by Hilarius, (in his Book de Synodis), as being Catholic: But Athanasius (in his Book de Synodis Arimini & Seleucia) condemns and rejects it, in the same manner with the other Creeds composed by the Arians. Nor do Hilarius and Athanasius disagree with one another concerning this one form of the Creed, but about other draughts of it also; for example, about the Antiochian draught. For Hilarius confesseth, that the Eastern Bishops had good reason to compile new forms of the Creed, when new Hæreses arose against the Church. But Athanasius doth maintain, that those new draughts of the Creed were craftily compiled by the Arians with a design to destroy the Nicene Creed. Further, at this place of Socrates, instead of [ὡς αὐτῶν ἡ ἀρεσκεία,] that which was not best for all Othen] I had rather read [ὡς αὐτῶν ἡ ἀρεσκεία,] that which was not grateful to all Men.] And so I have render'd it. Valef.

Confan-
tius.

C H A P. XXX.

Concerning the [forms of the] Creed published at Sirmium, in the presence of the Emperor Constantinus.

FOR, as if they would condemn what they had heretofore determined concerning the Faith, they again composed, ratified, and published other * draughts of the Creed: (a) one whereof was dictated in the Greek Tongue by Marcus of Arcthusa: (b) two more were drawn up in the Latin Tongue, which neither agreed one with the other (either in the expressions, or in the composure,) nor yet with that Greek one, in which the Bishop of Arcthusa dictated. Moreover, the one of those Creeds drawn up in Latin, I will here subjoin to that composed by Marcus: in the other (which they afterwards recited at (c) Sirmium), we will set at it's proper place, where we shall declare what was done at Ariminum. But you must know that they were both translated into the Greek Language. The Draught of the Creed dictated by Marcus, runs thus.

* Or, other explanations concerning the Faith.

(c) Socrates (and with him Sepmen, men,) is doubtless mistaken.
First, because he supposeth
that there were three forms of the Creed drawn up in the synod of Sirmium

against Photinus; whereas there was one form only composed in that Synod: which (besides Socrates) is recorded by Athanasius, pag. 500. and by Hilarius, in his Book de Synodis 238. Edis. Paris. 1631. Secondly, in regard he asserts, that that form of the Creed, which was publish'd in the Greek Tongue at the Synod of Sirmium against Photinus, was dictated by Marcus of Arcthusa. Marcus of Arcthusa did not dictate that Form I have mention'd. But another; before which the Consuls Names were prefixt, and which was afterwards recited at Ariminum, as Nikolaus Faber hath already observed (in the Preface he wrote to Hilarius's Fragmentis) from Geminus's Epistle. We must therefore distinguish between the three Synods of Sirmium, each of which publish'd their Form of the Creed. The first was convened against Photinus, in the year of Christ 351. The second was assembled in the Year of our Lord 357: wherein the Blasphemy of Helius and Potamian was compell'd. The third was celebrat'd when Eusebius and Hypatius were Consuls, in the Year of Christ 359; wherein that Creed was drawn up, which Marcus of Arcthusa dictated. Valef.

(b) Instead of [ἄλλα ἢ ἑτέρα] the reading must be [ἄλλα ἢ,] the other two, or two more: as it is in the Altit. M.S. For Socrates here recounts three draughts of the Creed composed at Sirmium; the two latter whereof he saith were written at first in Latin, and afterwards translated into Greek. Which in my judgment is not true. I grant indeed, that that Creed, which by Hilarius is termed Helius's Blasphemy, was at first published in Latin. But the other which had the Consuls name prefixt before it, was undoubtedly at first dictated in the Greek Tongue. For he that dictated it, (viz. Marcus of Arcthusa) and the rest of the Bishops then assembled were almost all Grecians. Lastly, the Subscriptions of the Bishop, who subscrib'd this form, are extant in Greek, in Epiphanius (in Hæres. Semiarum) Valef.

(c) Without doubt it must be [Ariminum], not [Sirmium]; which reading Epiphanius Scolasticus followed, as appears from his Version. See chap. 37. of this second Book.

We believe in one God the Father Almighty, the Creator and Framer of all things: * Of whom * Ephes 3: the whole Family in Heaven and Earth is made: and in his only begotten Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, born of the Father before all Worlds, God of God, Light of Light, by whom all things, which are in the Heaven, and which are upon the Earth, visible and invisible, were made. Who is the Word, and the Wisdom, and the true Light, and the Life. Who in the last days was for our sakes incarnate.

DE 171-
351737

Constantina.

ning, the beginning of all things. Furthermore, we, making an accurate explanation of [their] sentiments [who profess] the Christian Religion, do assert, that if any one [shall not affirm Christ] Jesus to have been the Son of God before ages, and to have, ministered to the Father as the framing of all things, but [shall say] that he was called the Son and Christ from such time only as he was born of Mary, and that he then received the beginning of his Deity; let him be Anathema, like [Paul] of Samolara.

(k) Athanasius has the same Words in his Synodus Antiochensis: where, at the presence of Valens, Ursacius, Germinius (&) and the rest. It is manifest that there is one God the Father Almighty, according as it is declared over the whole world: and his one only begotten Son Jesus Christ our Lord (&) and God and Saviour, begotten of his Father before ages. But it must not be asserted that there are two Gods, because the Lord himself hath said, "I go unto my Father, and your Father, and to my God, and your God. Therefore he is God even of

(k) Another [Draught of the] Creed published at Sirmium in the Latin tongue, and rendered into Greek.

In regard thereto seemeth to have been some difference concerning the Faith, all things were diligently inquired into and discussed at Sirmium, in the where, at the presence of Valens, Ursacius, Germinius (&) and the rest. It is manifest that there is one God the Father Almighty, according as it is declared over the whole world: and his one only begotten Son Jesus Christ our Lord (&) and God and Saviour, begotten of his Father before ages. But it must not be asserted that there are two Gods, because the Lord himself hath said, "I go unto my Father, and your Father, and to my God, and your God. Therefore he is God even of Constantina. Having rejected all these things, as if they had invented better, they promulge another Creed, which they wrote at Sirmium in Latin, but it was translated into Greek. But Epiphanius recording this. Creed in his Book de Synodis, prefixes this title before it: Exemplum Blasphemie, &c. A Copy of the Blasphemy composed at Sirmium by Housus and Potamius. Which title Epiphanius made himself, and deservedly calls this Creed Blasphemy. Who this Potamius, here joined with Epiphanius, was, Marcellinus Presbyter informs us in the Supplicatory Libel which he presented to the Emperor Theodosius. Where, amongst the corruptors of the Divine and Apostolical Faith, after Arianus, he in the first place names this person: His Words are these: Potamius Odyssiponensis Episcopus, &c. i. e. Potamius Bishop of Lisbon was at first a Defender of the Catholic Faith, but afterwards induced by the reward of a Farm belonging to the Emperor's Revenue (which he was very desirous of,) he corrupted the Faith. Housus of Corduba amongst the Churches in Spain detested him, and expelled him as being an impious Heretic. But even Housus himself, summoned before the Emperor Constantius by the complaint of this Potamius, and verified with oaths, was fearful (being old and sick) of banishment, or imprisonment, and so yielded to the impious. Valef.

(l) These three words [ὁ υἱος γεννητός, and there] occur not in the Latin Copy of this Draught of the Creed. But they are extant in Athanasius, and in all our M. S. Copies. Hence 'tis manifest that many Bishops were at that time convened at Sirmium. Indeed Placidius Bishop of Angoulême [in France], in the Epistle he wrote against this Draught of the Creed, does expressly affirm that it was published in a Synod of Bishops. The same is sufficiently confirmed by Athanasius, in the foregoing place. Lastly, in regard Hilarinus (in his forecited Book) does assert, that this Creed, after it had been dictated at Sirmium, was forthwith sent to all the Eastern and Western Bishops to be approved by them; he evidently shews it to have been dictated in a Synod. Nor can the Draught of a Creed be any where dictated but in a Synod of Bishops. Further, that Germinius here mentioned, was Bishop of Sirmium, put into Potamius's Sent upon his being ejected in the year of Christ 351. Atianus (in his "revelation to Hilarinus's Fragments," says that this Germinius had before been Bishop of Cyricum; which I do not believe. That place in Athanasius (in his Epist. ad Solitar. pag. 860; where he reproves the Emperor Constantius, because, contrary to the Ecclesiastical Canons, he would send obdurate fellows, born in remote Countries, to be Bishops in the Cities;) deceived that Learned Man: Athanasius's words there are these: ὅτι οὐ γινώσκοντες ἀλλὰ κατὰ πόλεις ἐκπέμψεν ἐν ἀλλοτρίοις, &c. So be sent Gregorius from Cappadocia to Alexandria. And Germinius was by him sent from the City Cyricum to Sirmium. From Laodicea he sent Cerapion to Nicomedia. From these Words of Athanasius it cannot be concluded, that Germinius had been Bishop of Cyricum before. Otherwise the same must be said concerning Gregorius and Cerapion, that the latter had been before Bishop of Laodicea, and the former in Cappadocia, which, in regard 'tis evidently false in these two, cannot be said of Germinius. This Germinius was preferred to the Episcopate of Sirmium by the Arians, because he was a most eager defender of their opinion. This we are informed of by Athanasius, in his circular Letter to the Bishops of Egypt and Libya, pag. 290. Valef.

(m) In the Atian, and Sforian M. S. and in Epiphanius's Version these Words [ὁ υἱος γεννητός and ὁ υἱος] occur; in Athanasius and Hilarinus they are wanting. Valef.

all, as the Apostle also hath taught, † Is he the Confession of the God of the Jews only? Is he not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also: Seeing it is one God who shall justify the Circumcision by Faith. Moreover, all other things agree, nor have they any ambiguity. But whereas very many are disturbed about that term which in Latin is called * Substantia; and in Greek Ousia; (that is, that it may be more accurately understood, the word † Homousion or * Homousion,) these terms ought in † That is, no wife to be mentioned, nor disavowed of publicly in the face of the Church, for this reason, and upon this account, or Eusebius, because there is nothing recorded concerning them in the Divine Scriptures, and in regard these things of like substance are above the reach of human knowledge and mind, hence, of man; nor can any one declare the Son's generation, according as it is written, || And who shall declare his generation? For 'tis manifest that only by the Father knows how he begat the Son; and again, that the Son [only knows] how he was begotten of the Father. It cannot be doubtful to any man that the Father is greater in honour, dignity, and divinity; and that he is greater in that very name of a Father: the Son himself attesting, † The Father who sent me is greater than I. † See John 14. man is ignorant that this is Catholic [Doctrine], that there are two persons of the Father and of the Son, and that the Father is the greater: but that the Son is made subject, together with all other things which the Father hath subjected to himself. That the Father hath no beginning, and is invisible, immortal, and impassible: but that the Son was born of the Father, God of God, Light of Light. And that no man knows his generation, (as was said before,) but only the Father. That the Son himself our Lord and God, took flesh, or a body, that is [was made] man, according as the Angel evangelized. And according as all the Scriptures do teach, and especially the Apostle himself, the Teacher of the Gentiles, Christ received Humanity of the Virgin Mary, by which he suffered. This is the principal Head of the whole Faith, and its Confirmation, that the Trinity must be always preserved according as we read in the Gospel: † Go ye and disciple all nations, † baptizing them in the name of the Father, † and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. The number of the Trinity is entire and perfect. But the Paraclete, the Holy Ghost, was sent by the Son, and he came according to promise, that he might [sanctify and (n) teach the Apostles and all Believers. (n) In Athanasius this is also said: that he restore him his Bishoprick, in case by altering his mind he would anathematize the opinion which Valens had invented, and consent to their sentiments. * See Chap. 15. note (k).

They attempted to persuade Photinus to give his * consent to, and subscribe these things, even after his deposition, promising that they would restore him his Bishoprick, in case by altering his mind he would anathematize the opinion which Valens had invented, and consent to their sentiments. * See Chap. 15. note (k). But he accepted not of that proposition, but challeng'd them to disprove. A day therefore being set, by the Emperor's own appointment, the Bishops there present met, and also not a few of the (a) Senatorian Order, whom the Emperor commanded to be present at the disproof. (a) Epiphanius (in Hist.)

Photinus relates, that Photinus, after he had been condemned and deposed in the Synod of Sirmium, (for so the reading must be, not in the Synod of Serdica,) went to Constantinople, and requested that he might dispute concerning the Faith before Judges by him nominated: and that Constantinus enjoyed Basilius Bishop of Anagrus to undertake the disputation against Photinus, and gave leave, that Thalassius, Dionysius, Cerealis, and Taurus, who were Contra, should be Judges or Auditors of that disputation. Amongst these Thalassius was the chief person in favour and authority with the Emperor (as Zosimus tells us in his second Book.) And was first Praefect of the Praetorium into the East together with Gallus Caesar, in the year of Christ 351. He died in the year of our Lord 353, in the sixth Consulship of Constantinus Augustus, and in the second of Gallus Caesar, as Ammonius relates Book 14. Therefore the Synod of Sirmium, and the dispo-

tion of Basilus against Photinus cannot fall on the year of Christ 357, as Baronius asserts, Besides, Epiphanius says further, that in Basilus's disputation against Photinus, Callistratus was a Notary, who had before been Notary to Rufinus Præfekt of the Prætorium. Now, Rufinus was Præfekt of the Prætorium in the Gallia's, in the sixth Consulate of Constantinus Augustus, and in the second of Galus Cæsar, as Ann. Marcellinus tells us Book 14. But, two years before he had been Præfekt of Syricum. Now, in the year of Christ 357, Amastius, not Rufinus, bore the Præfecture of the Prætorium in Syricum. Further, it may be evidently concluded from Germinius's being made Bishop, that the Synod of Sirmium against Photinus (wherein Photinus was ejected out of his Bishoprick), was not held in the year of Christ 357. For, Germinius was Bishop of Sirmium, before Georgius intruded himself into the See of Alexandria upon Athanasius's Ejection, as Athanasius relates in the Circular Letter he wrote to the Bishops of Egypt and Libya, at such time as Georgius was in possession of the Alexandrian See. Moreover, Georgius came upon the See of Alexandria in the beginning of the year 356, as it is evident from the protestation of the Alexandrians, which is extant at the close of Athanasius's Epistle ad Solitar. Seeing therefore Germinius was Bishop of Sirmium before the year of our Lord 356, Photinus aliu (whom Germinius succeeded) must necessarily have been deposed before this year. Athanasius (in Epist. ad Solitar, pag. 866, where he recounts the Ordinations of extraneous Persons, made by Constantinus;) does in the first place mention Georgius's Ordination; then, Germinius's and Cæcrops's; afterwards Alexandria's; and at last Georgius's. Amongst these Persons, Georgius was made Bishop of Alexandria in the year of Christ 341. Germinius succeeded Photinus in the Episcopate of Sirmium in the year 351. After he had been sent for by Constantinus then residing at Sirmium, as Athanasius relates in the fore-quoted place; which the Exile Translator has rendered ill. On the same year Cæcrops was made Bishop of Nicomedia, as it may be concluded from the forecited passage in Athanasius. Lastly, Alexandria was preferred to the Bishoprick of Millain in the year of our Lord 355; and on the very following Georgius thrust himself into the See of Alexandria. Valef.

In their presence, Basilus, who at that time presided over the Church at Ancyra, opposed Photinus, the Notaries taking their words in writing. There was a very great contest on both sides during their dispute; wherein Photinus being vanquish'd, was condemned. Spending the residue of his life in exile, he wrote a (p) Book in † both Languages, for he was not unskill'd in the Latin tongue. He wrote also against all Heresies, asserting his own Opinion only. Let thus much be said concerning Photinus. Moreover, you must know, that the Bishops convened at Sirmium were afterwards (q) displeas'd with that Draught of the Creed publish'd by them in Latin. For it seem'd to them, after its publication, to contain many contradictions. Wherefore they earnestly endeavour'd to get it out of their hands who had transcribed it. But, in regard many hid it, the Emperor by his Edicts order'd, that all the Copies of it should be diligently searched for and gather'd up, threatening to punish those that should be found concealing of it. But his menaces were unable to suppress it when once published, in regard it had fallen into many mens hands. Thus far concerning this.

is he mistakes; viz. what Athanasius has said concerning the third form of the Creed drawn up at Sirmium, (before which the Consuls names were prefixt,) Socrates attributes to the second, composed by Hosius and Potamius. The place in Athanasius is extant at pag. 904. But in regard of its length we forbear quoting the words here. Petrus (in his Animadversiones on Epiphanius, pag. 318.) has followed the mistake of Socrates's. Valef.

C H A P. XXXI.

Concerning Hosius Bishop of Corduba.

BUT, in regard we have mention'd Hosius the Spaniard, as being against his will present at Sirmium, we must say something very briefly concerning him. For a little before, this person had been sent into (a) Banishment by the fraudulent practices of the Arrians. But then, through the earnest desire of those convened at Sirmium, the Emperor sent for him, being desirous either to persuade, or else by force to compel him to give consent with those [Bishops] present there. For if this could be accomplish'd, an evident testimony would seem to be given to their Faith. For this reason therefore, he was present (as I said) being necessitated thereto against his will. But when he refused to give his consent, they inflicted stripes and tortures upon the old man. Upon which account he was necessitated both to consent to and subscribe those Expositions of the Faith then publish'd. Such was the conclusion of affairs at that time transacted at Sirmium. Moreover, the Emperor Constantinus continued at Sirmium, expecting the event of the War against Magentius, of Christ 357. as Baronius has truly observed. Valef.

C H A P. XXXII.

Concerning the Overthrow of Magentius the Tyrant.

IN the interim, Magentius having possessed himself of the Imperial City Rome, slew many of the Senatorian Order, and destroy'd several of the Populace. But as soon as Constantinus's Commanders, having got together a body of Romans, marched out against him, he left Rome, and went into the Gallia's. Where there hapned continual engagements; and sometimes one side, sometimes the other got the better. But in fine, Magentius having been worsted about Mursa, which is a Fort of the Gallia's, was besieged there. In which Fort such a miraculous accident as this is said to have hapned. Magentius attempting to encourage his Soldiers disheartened at their overthrow, ascended a lofty tribunal. His men, desirous to receive him with the shouts and acclamations usually given to the Emperors, contrary to their intent diverted them to Constantinus. For by a general consent they all cried out, not Magentius, but Constantinus Augustus. Magentius looking upon this to be an *Omen of his imminent ruin, departed immediately out of the Garrison, and fled to the further parts of the Gallia's. Constantinus's Commanders follow'd him with very close pursuit. Whereupon there hapned another engagement at a place called in the first place killed his own mother. Then he slew his brother, whom he had crested Cæsar; and at last laid violent hands upon himself. This was done in the sixth Consulate of Constantinus, and in Constantinus Gallus's second Consulate, (b) about the fifteenth of the month August. Not long after, another of Magentius's brothers, something his name Decentius, finished his own life, by hanging himself. (c) It is us's Fast: thus; in the sixth Consulate of Constantinus the second of Constantinus Gallus, Magentius killed himself in the Gallia's at Lyons, on the third of the Ides of August; and Decentius, brother to Magentius, hanged himself on the fifteenth of the Kalends of September. In the Alexandr. Chronicle, the year of Magentius's death is falsely set down; but the day is noted to have been on the fourteenth of the Ides of August. Valef.

(a) The Mountain Seleucus: wherein Magentius being totally routed, fled aloneto Lyons a City of Gallia, three days journey distant from the Fort at Mursa. Magentius having got into Lyons,

Constantinus.

ing of himself. Such was Magnentius's Exit. But the publick Affairs of the Empire return'd not to a perfect degree of tranquillity: For soon after this another Tyrant arose, by name Silvanus. But Constantinus's Commanders quickly destroy'd him, whist he was making disturbances in the Gallia's.

C H A P. XXXIII.

Concerning the Jews inhabiting Dio-Cæsarea in Palestine.

AT the same time also that these things hapned, there arose another intestine War in the East. For the Jews who inhabited Dio-Cæsarea in Palestine, took arms against the Romans, and over-ran and destroy'd the adjacent places. But Gallus (who was also named Constantinus, whom the Emperor, having created him Cæsar, had sent into the East) sent an Army against them, and routed them. And by his order their City Dio-Cæsarea was totally destroy'd.

C H A P. XXXIV.

Concerning Gallus Cæsar.

Gallus having done this, was unable [with moderation] to bear his prosperous success: but immediately attempted to raise innovations against him by whom he had been created Cæsar, and he himself was also resolv'd to play the Tyrant. But, whereas his design was soon discover'd by Constantinus: (For Gallus had upon his own authority order'd Domitianus, at that time Præfect of the Prætorium in the East, and Magnus the Quæstor to be slain, because they had (a) acquainted the Emperor with his design. Constantinus highly incensed thereat, sent for Gallus to him. He, being in a very great fear, went unwillingly. When he arrived in the Western parts, and was come as far as the Island Eleonora, Constantinus order'd he should be slain. Not long after, he created Julianus, Gallus's Brother, Cæsar, and sent him against the Barbarians in Gallia. Moreover, Gallus (called also Constantinus) was slain in the seventh Consulate of the Emperor Constantinus, when he himself was Consul the third time. On the year following, in the Consulate of Arbition and Lollianus, Julianus was created Cæsar, on the sixth of the month November. Concerning Julianus we shall make a further mention in our following Book. But Constantinus having got rid of his present mischiefs and disquietudes, bent his mind again to an Ecclesiastick War. For going from Sirmium to the Imperial City Rome, he again summon'd a Synod of Bishops, and ordered some of the Eastern Bishops to hasten into (b) Italy; and at the same time commanded the Western Bishops to meet there also. But in the interim Constantinus, that they were making preparation to go into Italy, this accident hapned: (c) Julius Bishop of Rome died, having presided over the Church there fifteen years: Liberius succeeded him in his Bishoprick.

(a) I corrected this place by the assistance of the Allat. M. S. of Sozomen, and Cedreus. In the Allat. M. S. the reading is [ἀνελὼν μὲν ὡς αὐτοὶ τοὺς αὐτοὺς τοὺς αὐτοὺς] Sozomen's words Book 4. Chap. 7. are almost the same. But Epiphanius, our M. SS. Copies, and the Alexandrian Chronicle retain the Vulgar reading, to wit, [ἐν μὲν τοῖς αὐτοῖς τοῖς αὐτοῖς] He (that is) Gallus having not acquainted the Emperor with his design of slaying Domitianus, &c. Valef.

(b) Instead of [ἐν τῇ Ἰταλίᾳ] the reading in the Allat. M. S. is truer; which is [ἐν τῇ Ἰταλίᾳ] which reading we have followed in our Version. Valef.

April, when Constantinus Augustinus was Consul the fifth time, and Constantinus Cæsar the first time; which was the year of Christ 352: after he had sat Bishop fifteen years, one month, and eleven days; as it is recorded in the Antient Book concerning the Roman Bishops, which is published together with Victorius Aquitanus's Cycle. Valef.

C H A P. XXXV.

Concerning Aëtius the Syrian, Eunomius's Master.

AT Antioch in Syria there arose another Arch-Heretic, Aëtius, surnamed Atheus. He had the same Sentiments with Arius, and maintained the same Opinion: but he separated himself from the Arian Party, because they had admitted Arius into communion. For Arius (as I said * before) espousing one Opinion in his mind, made an open profession of another with his mouth, when he hypocritically consented to and subscribed the Form of the Creed [drawn up] at the Synod of Nice, that he might deceive the then Emperor. Upon this account therefore Aëtius separated himself from the Arians. Moreover, Aëtius had formerly been an heretical person, and a very zealous defender of Arius's Opinion. For after he had been a little instructed at Alexandria, he returned from thence: And arriving at Antioch in Syria (for there he was born) he was ordained Deacon by Leontius, at that time Bishop of Antioch. Immediately therefore he astonish'd those that discourt'd him with the novelty of his Speeches. And this he did, trusting in Aristotle's Categories; (that Book is so entitled by its Author,) from the Rules whereof he discourt'd, but was insensible of his framing fallacious arguments in order to deceiving of his own self, nor had he learned the scope of Aristotle from knowing persons. For Aristotle, upon account of the Sophisters who at that time derided Philosophy, wrote that Exercitation for Young men, and oppos'd the Sophisters with the art of discourt' by subtil reasonings. Wherefore the (a) Ephecticks who expound Plato's and Plotinus's works, do find fault with what Aristotle has subtilly and artificially asserted [in that work.] But Aëtius, having never had an Academic Master, stuck close to the Sophisms of the Categories. Upon which account he could neither understand how there could be a Generation (b) without a beginning, nor how he that was begotten could be co-eternal with him who begat him. Yea, Aëtius was a man of so little learning, so unskilled in the sacred Scriptures, and so wholly exercised in and addicted to a contentious and disputative humour, (which every Rustick may easily do;) that he was not in the least studious in the perusal of those ancient Writers who have explained the Sacred Books of the Christian Religion, but wholly rejected Clement, Africanus, and Origen, persons expert in all manner of knowledge and literature. But he patch'd together Epistles, both to the Emperor Constantius, and to some other persons, knitting together therein trifling and contentious disputes, and inventing subtil and fallacious arguments. Upon which account he was firnamed * Atheni. But altho' his assertions were the same with those of the Arians; yet because they were unable to understand his difficulty and perplexed † Syllogisms, he who had the same Sentiments with them, was by those of his own party judg'd to be an Heretick. And for this reason he was driven from their Church; but he himself pretended that he would not communicate with them. There are at this present some Hereticks propagated from him, [to wit,] those who were heretofore called Aerians, but now they are termed Eunomians. For Eunomius (who had been Aetius's Notary,) having been instructed in that (c) Heretical Opinion by him, afterwards headed that Sect. But we shall speak concerning Eunomius in due place.

(a) Who these Ephecticks were, we may know from Diogenes Laertius: Τῶν δὲ φιλοσοφῶν, ἑνὸς ἦν ζῆλος, ἀπομακρυνεὶ δὲ τὰ κοινὰ. &c. Philosophers (says he) were generally divided into two sorts; some were termed Dogmaticks, who discourt'd concerning things as they might be comprehended; others were called Ephecticks, who fine nothing, and dispute of things so as they cannot be comprehended. See Diogenes Laertius in Proem to Vir. Philos. pag. 10. Edit. Coln. Allobrog. 1616. of these Ephecticks (whom we may in English call Doubters) the Scepticks were one Species.

(b) In the original, the term is [ἀγέννητος], unbegotten] which is used instead of [γενετός] without a beginning,] wherefore, we have rendered it accordingly. Valef.

(r) In the Adalin M. S. instead of [τὴν ἀπὸ τῶν ἀλλήλων ἀκρίβειαν, that contentious and verbose way of disputing] But Epiphanius Scholasticus follows the vulgar reading, and to does this, in the word [ἀκρίβειαν] where he transcribes this passage of our Socrates. Valel.

C H A P. XXXVI.

Concerning the Synod at Millain.

AT that time the Bishops met in Italy; there came not very many of the Eastern Bishops, in regard most of them were hindered from coming, either by their great age, or by the length of the journey: but of the Western Bishops there met above (a) three hundred. For it was the Emperor's order, that a Synod should be held at the City of Millain. Where being met together, the Eastern Bishops requested that in the first place sentence might by a general confent be pronounced against Athanasius: that so, that having been effected, he might in future be perfectly disabled from returning to Alexandria. But when (b) Paulinus Bishop of Triers in Gallia, and Dionysius, and Eusebius, (the former of whom was Bishop of (c) Alba the Metropolis of Italy, and the latter of Vercelle which is a City of Liguria in Italy), were sensible, that the Eastern Bishops, by a ratification of the sentence against Athanasius, attempted the subversion of the Faith, they arose, and with great earnestness cry'd out, that deceit and fraud was covertly design'd against the Christian Religion by what was transacted: for they said, that the accusation against Athanasius was not true, but that these things were invented by them in order to the deprivation of the Faith. After they had with loud voices spoken all this, the Congress of Bishops was for that time dissolv'd.

(a) It should be [τρεῖς καὶ τριάκοντα, thirty.] In the Epistle of the Council of Millain sent to Eusebius Bishop of Vercelle, there are the names of thirty Bishops only, who consented to the condemnation of Athanasius, Marcellus, and Photinus. Amongst whom some Eastern Bishops are recounted, as you may see in Baronius, at the year of Christ 355. Valel.

(b) Paulinus Bishop of Triers was not present at the Council of Millain, but at that of Orleans, which had been convened two years before, in the year of Christ 353. See Baronius. Valel.

(c) The reading is the same in Sozomen, Book 4. Chap. 9. But Be- ronius has long since remarked, that Alba is here put instead of Millain. For Millain (not Alba) was the Metropolis of Italy. And Dionysius, who then opposed Constantius and the Arians, was not Bishop of Alba, but of Millain, as Athanasius attests in his Epistle ad Solitar. Valel.

Constantius.

C H A P. XXXVII.

Concerning the Synod at Ariminum, and concerning the [Draught of the] Creed which was published there.

WHEN the Emperor understood this, he removed * them out of the way by banishment. And resolv'd to convene a General Council, that so, by drawing all the Eastern Bishops into the West, he might (if it were possible) reduce them all to an agreement in opinion. But in regard the tediousness of the Journey rendred this design of his difficult, he order'd the Synod should be divided into two parts, permitting those then present to meet at Ariminum [a City] of Italy. But by his Letters he gave the Eastern Bishops order to assemble at Nicomedia [a City] of Bithynia. (a) The Emperor issued out these orders with a design to unite them in opinion. But, this design of his had not a successful event. For neither of the Synods agreed among themselves, but each of them was divided into contrary factions. For neither could they convene at Ariminum be brought to agree in one and the same opinion: and those Eastern Bishops gather'd together at Seleucia of Isauria rais'd another Schism. Moreover, after what manner all these matters were transacted we will declare in the procedure of our History, having first made mention of some few passages concerning Eudoxius. For about that time (b) Leontius (who had ordain'd Aetius the Heretick Deacon departing this life, Eudoxius Bishop of Germanicia, a City of Syria, being then present at Rome, consider'd with himself that he was to make haste. And having fram'd a cunning discourse with the Emperor, as if the City Germanicia stood in need of his consolation and defence, he requested that leave might be granted him to make a sudden return. The Emperor foreseeing nothing [of a design,] sent him away. But he, having procur'd the chiefest Persons of the Bed-chamber to the Emperor to be his assistants, left his own City [Germanicia,] and * elancularly posselt himself of the Episcopate of Antioch: † ἔπειτα, immediately after which he attempted to favour Aetius, and made it his business to assemble a Synod of Bishops, and (c) restore him to his dignity, [to wit,] his † Diaconate. But he was in no wise able to effect this, because the † Deaconship, which he had conceived against Aetius was more prevalent than Eudoxius's earnestness for him. Thus much concerning these things. But at first when the Bishops were assembled at Ariminum, preterit

That is, Paulinus, Dionysius, and Eusebius.

(a) These words. [ταῦτα μὲν ὁ βασιλεὺς ἐκτέλεσεν τὰς διατάξεις ἐβόλυσεν.] i. e. The Emperor issued out these orders with a design to unite them in opinion] are wanting in Robert Stephens's Edition: we have inserted them, upon the authority of the Florentine and Sforzian M. SS. Valel.

(b) The death of Leontius Bishop of Antioch hapned in the year of Christ 356. Constantius reigning then at Rome, as Baronius has truly remarked. Valel.

a Diaconate: but being afterwards reproved by Diodorus and Flavianus, because he had advanced a person to Sacred Orders who had been bred up in ill studies, and was an assertor of impious Tenets; he divested him of his Deaconship, as Theodoret relates (Eccles. Hist. Book 2. Chap. 24.) Eudoxius therefore, as soon as he had gotten the Bishoprick of Antioch, attempted to restore Aetius to his former pre-ferment. Valel.

Constan-
tina.

* Book 2.
Chap. 12.

* Chap. 30.

(d) We remark'd before,
(Book 2.
Chap. 30.

note (b.) that this third Exposition of Faith was not translated out of Latin; but was at first dictated in Greek by Marcus Arethasius. Athanasius, who has recorded this Creed in his Book de Synodo, does not say it was translated out of Latin; and yet, where-ever he produceth any monument rendered into Greek out of the Latin tongue, his continual usage is to give the Reader warning of it. Further, these words [Ὁ Θεὸς ἐκ παλαιῶν καὶ ἀπαράρητος, διὰ δὲ ἐν τέλει τοῖς πλημαῖ, i. e. This Creed was translated out of Latin into Greek,] the contents thereof are these? are wanting in Robert Stephens's Edition; nor are they in Epiphanius Scholasticus's Version. Valef.

the Eastern Prelates affirmed that they were come to the Council with a design wholly to omit the mention of the accusations against Athanasius. This desire and resolution of theirs was assisted by Ursacius and Valens, who at the beginning had been defenders of Arian's Opinion: but [afterwards] they publicly consented to the term Homoousi, by their Libel given in to the Bishop of Rome, as we said * before. For these persons always inclined to the strongest side. They were assisted by Germinius, Auxentius, Demophilus, and Caius. When therefore some were ready to propose one thing in the Congress of Bishops then present, and some another; Ursacius and Valens said, that all Forms of the Creed heretofore publish'd were to be accounted null and void; and that that last draught was to be admitted and approved of, which they had a little before published in their Convention at Sirmium. Having said this, they caused a paper, which they had in their hands, to be read; [ wherein was contained ] another Form of the Creed (which they had drawn up before at Sirmium, but concealed it there, as I said * before) which they then made publick at Ariminum. This (d) Creed was translated out of Latin [ into Greek; ] the Contents thereof are these.

truth. He shall receive of mine, and shall teach you, and bring all things to your remembrance. But for the term * Ousia, in regard it has been used by the Fathers in a more plain and ordinary sense, and, being not understood by the people, gives an offence to many, in as much as it is not contained in the Scriptures, we thought good to have it wholly removed, and in future to make no mention at all of this term Ousia, when God is spoken of, in regard the sacred Scriptures have no where mentioned the Substance of the Father and of the Son. But (f) we do assert, that the Son is in all things like the Father, as the sacred Scriptures do affirm and teach.

Creed is set down by Germinius in his Epistle to Rufinus, Palladius, and others, in these words: *Nam sub bonæ memoriæ Constantio Imperatore, &c. For under the Emperor Constantius of good memory, when there began to be a dissention amongst those concerning the Faith; in the presence of the said Emperor, there being also present Georgius Bishop of the Alexandrian Church, Pancratius of Pelusium, Basilus at that time Bishop of Anquiritum, Valens, Ursacius, and our slenderest; after a dispute had concerning the Faith until night, when it was reduced to a certain Rule, Marcus was chosen by us all to dictate it: In which Creed it is thus written, The Son is in all things like the Father, as the divine Scriptures do affirm and teach. To which entire Profession of Faith we all gave our consent, and subscribed it with our hands. The subscriptions are extant in Epiphanius (In Harer. Seniliarum, Chap. 22.) which ought to be annexed to this draught of the Creed. The same form of the Sirmian Creed is mentioned in the Exposition of the Faith at Jelucia, which Epiphanius hath recorded in the foresaid Heresie, Chap. 25. in these Words: *ὅτι δὲ ταύτην τὴν πίστιν ἐκδοῦσαν οὐκ ἔστιν ἔργον ὑποθέσθαι ἑτέραν πίστιν, &c. i. e. Moreover, that that Draught of the Creed heretofore published at Sirmium in the presence of the piety of our Emperor [Constantius] does exactly agree with this form of the Creed, is very well known by them who have read that Creed; which was subscribed by that men then present, to wit, Basilus, Marcus, Georgius Bishop of Alexandria, Pancratius, Hypatianus, and most of the Western Bishops. Valef.

After the reading of this Paper, those who were displeased with the contents thereof, rose up and said; We came not hither because we wanted a Creed: For we keep that entire, which we have received from our Ancestors. But [we are met,] that if any innovation hath hapned concerning it, we might repress it. If therefore what hath been recited doth contain nothing of novelty in it, do you now openly Anathematize the Arian Heresie, in such sort as the ancient Rule of the Church hath rejected other Heresies, as being blasphemous. For it has been made manifest to the whole World, that Arian's impious opinion hath been the occasion of those tumults and disturbances, which have hapned in the Church until this present time. This proposal, being not admitted of by Ursacius, Valens, Germinius, Auxentius, Demophilus, and Caius, wholly rent in sunder the Church. For these persons adhered to what had been recited in the Synod of Ariminum. But the others did again confirm the Nicene Creed. Moreover, they derided the inscription prefix before the Creed which had been read. And especially (g) Athanasius, in the Epistle he sent to his acquaintance, where he writes word for word thus.

ted by Socrates, occurs at the beginning of his Epistle de Synodi Arimini & Seleucia. Valef.

For what was wanting to the Doctrine of the Catholic Church as concerning Piety, that Dissolutions should now be made about the Faith, and that they should prefix the Consulate of the present times before that Draught of the Creed (forsooth!) which they have published? For Ursacius, Valens, and Germinius, have done that which never was done, or so much as ever heard of amongst Christians. For having composed such a form

(c) In Athanasius's version: by whom the Ages were framed, and all things were made. Who was begotten the only Begotten of the Father, the Only of the Only, God of God, like to the Father who begat him, according to the Scriptures. Whose Generation no person knoweth, [and] not only the Father who begat him. We know that the Only Begotten Son of God, by his Father's appointment, came down from Heaven in order to the abolishing of Sin: And was born of the Virgin Mary, and conversed with the Disciples, and fulfilled every Dispensation according to his Father's Will: and was crucified, and died, and descended into the Infernal parts, and set in order what was to be done there: At the sight of whom the Doorkeepers of Hell trembled. He arose again on the third day, and conversed with his Disciples: and after the completion of forty days, he ascended into the Heavens, and sits at the Right Hand of his Father. And he shall come in the last day in his Father's Glory, and render to every man according to his works. And [we believe] in the Holy Ghost, whom the Only Begotten Son of God Jesus Christ himself promised to send as a Comforter to Mankind, according as it is written: I go away to my Father, and I will pray my Father, and he shall send you another Comforter, the Spirit of

(c) In Athanasius's version: by whom the Ages were framed, and all things were made. Who was begotten the only Begotten of the Father, the Only of the Only, God of God, like to the Father who begat him, according to the Scriptures. Whose Generation no person knoweth, [and] not only the Father who begat him. We know that the Only Begotten Son of God, by his Father's appointment, came down from Heaven in order to the abolishing of Sin: And was born of the Virgin Mary, and conversed with the Disciples, and fulfilled every Dispensation according to his Father's Will: and was crucified, and died, and descended into the Infernal parts, and set in order what was to be done there: At the sight of whom the Doorkeepers of Hell trembled. He arose again on the third day, and conversed with his Disciples: and after the completion of forty days, he ascended into the Heavens, and sits at the Right Hand of his Father. And he shall come in the last day in his Father's Glory, and render to every man according to his works. And [we believe] in the Holy Ghost, whom the Only Begotten Son of God Jesus Christ himself promised to send as a Comforter to Mankind, according as it is written: I go away to my Father, and I will pray my Father, and he shall send you another Comforter, the Spirit of passage in Athanasius

(g) The
here quoted

form of the Creed as they were willing to admit of, they prefix'd before it the Consulate, the Month, and the Day of the present Year, in order to their making it manifest to all prudent persons, that their Faith had not its beginning before, but now under the Reign of Constantius. For, they have written (b) all things with a respect had to their own Here-
 (b) We read (c) that things as it is in Athanasius: See the fore-quoted passage. Valf.

sis. Besides, pretending to write concerning the Lord, they name another to be their Lord, [to wit.] Constantius. For he it was, who influenced and authorized their Impiety. And they who deny the Son to be eternal, have filed him (i) Eternal Emperor: Such bitter Enemies are they against Christ, by reason of their Impiety! But perhaps, the Holy Prophets [specifying of the time [wherein they prophesied], gave them an occasion of assigning the Consulate. Now, should they be so audacious as to assert this, they would most egregiously betray their own ignorance. For the Prophecies of those holy persons do indeed contain a mention of the times. Isaiah and Hosea lived * in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah. Jeremia-† Jerem. 1. 2. h, † in the days of Josiah. Eze* kiel and Daniel [flourish'd] under Cyrus and Darius. And others prophesied in other times: But they did not then lay the Foundations of Religion: for that was in being before their times, and always was, even before the Foundation of the World, God having prepared it for as by Christ. Nor did they thereby manifest the times of their own Faith. For even before those times they themselves were Believers. But the times [which they mention] were the times of the Promise [which God made] by them. Now, the chief and principal Head of the Promise was concerning our Saviour's Advent. And by way † Addition of * Appendix those things were added which should in future happen to Israel and to the Gentiles. These were the times manifest [by them, where- by was declared] not the beginning of Faith, as we said before, but the times wherein those Prophets themselves lived and foretold these things. But these † Wife Men in our days [whenever they nei- ther compose Histories, nor predict future things, but] having written [those words.] The Catho-
 † He speak ironically.

lick Faith was published, immediately add the Consulate, the Month, and the Day. And, as those holy persons wrote the History of Affairs [in their age, and noted] the times of their own misfira-† Writing, the * Expression by them invented is altogether like the Arian Herefie. For by their writing after this manner they have informed [all persons,] when they themselves began first to believe; and from Constan-

 (k) impious Opinion of the † Cataphryge: and as they did, so do these assert, [say- ing,] The Faith of the Christians was first reveal'd to us, and took its begin-
 (k) In Athanasius the reading is [εἰς τὴν αἰωνιότητα, into the man- ness:] which is the better read- ing; for he means the Montanists, to whom madness is delerately attributed. The term here, in Socrates, is [μαγιστεύειν, impious opinion.] Valef.
 † See Eusebii Eccles. Hist. Book 4. Chap. 27. note (v.) and Book 5. Chap. 18.

ing from us. And, as they filed Maximilla and Montanus, for the term Constantius their Lord and Master, instead of Christ. But if, according to them, the Faith took its beginning from this Consulate, what will the Fathers, and the blessed Martyrs do? More- over, what will they themselves do with such per- sons as were catechized and instructed by them, and died before this Consulate? How will they raise them to life again, that they may root out of their minds what they seem'd to have taught them, and implant in them those [Sentiments,] which, as they write, are newly invented by them? To such a degree of ignorance are they arriv'd, being only well skilled in framing Pretexes, and they such as are undecent and improbable, and which may be presently confuted.

Thus wrote Athanasius to those of his acquaintance. Such as are lovers of learning (after they have found out this letter) may under- stand the powerful expressions therein contained. For we, having an aversion for prolixity, have inserted but part thereof here. Further, you are to take notice, that the Synod deposed Valens, Ursacius, Auxentius, Germinius, Caius, and Demophilus, because they would not anathematize the Arian Opinion. Wherefore they highly resenting their Deposition, hastned forthwith to the Emperor, carrying along with them that Draught of the Creed which had been read in the Synod. And the Synod acquainted the Emperor with their determinations, by their letter: the purport whereof, being translated out of Latin into Greek, is this.

The Letter of the Ariminum Synod to the Emperor Constantius.

(I) By God's Will, and the Command of your Piety, (I) This we believe order has been taken, that we Western Letter of the Ariminum Synod is extant in Latin, in Hilarius, amongst the Fragments of his Book de Synodi, pag. 451. Edit. Paris, 1621. out of whom we have transcribed it, and placed it here instead of a Verbum. It ought not to seem strange to any Person, to see so great a disagreement between the Greek Version and the original Latin Copy of this Epistle. For this is an usual thing with Greek Translators, as often as they render Latin into Greek; which may be easily perceived from the Emperor's Rescripts, which occur in Eusebii's Ecclesiastical History. But, we need not fetch examples hereof from any other place, than from this Letter: in which do occur almost as many mistakes in the Greek translation of it, as there are periods in the Letter. But, the beginning of this Letter is commonly thus worded in Hilarius: Lubens Deo ex precepto pietatis Tue credimus fuisse dispositum. &c. By Gods pleasure we believe it hath been ordered by the Command of your Piety, &c. But in the M.S. Copy made use of by Jacobus Sirmondus, the reading is thus: Fubente Deo, &c. By God's will, &c. So the Greek Translator reads it: whom we have followed in this place. Any one may with good reason conjecture, that [Fubente Deo, By God's will] is written instead of [Fuvante Deo, By God's assistance.] Valef.

Constantinus.
* Or, place of the Ariminensis.

† Salvation.

* Or, Consult.

(m) These words have no very good coherence with the preceding sentence. I conjecture that this place was transposed in the Latin Copies. Therefore, next these words [a passage would be opened to the Poisons of Hereticks,] which, in my judgment, are to be placed, which follow a little after; in this manner: Constantine being present in this [Consult,] in regard, after a searching disquisition, &c. unto these words [our Lord Jesus Christ.] To which are to be subjoyn'd these [Therefore Ursacius and Valens, &c.] Valef.

(n) At Chap. 20. of this Book, Note (a) we have remarkt many things concerning this first Synod of Millain, wherein Ursacius and Valens, having presented a Libel of satisfaction, condemned the Arian Hereticks. The said per- sons confit in the time in another Libel, which they presented afterwards to Julius Bishop of Rome, at Rome; in the first word: Letterum vero Arianum, &c. sicut per priorem no- strum Licellum, quem apud Melitum per nos pervenit, & nunc & sen- per antheasit: igitur profitemur. Valef.

† Maintaining.

they have kept all things [asserted by] the past Writers of the Catholic Church. And it hath continued to these very times, wherein your Piety hath received the power of ruling the World from God the Father by God and our Lord Jesus Christ. But [these] wretched Men, endued with an unhappy * Sense, have again by a temerarious attempt proclaimed themselves the setters forth of impious Doctrine: and even now they endeavour to shake what had been founded in reason. For when the Letters of Your Piety ordered that the Faith should be treated of, there was proposed to us by the forenamed Disturbers of the Churches (Germinius, Auxentius, and Caius having joyned themselves to them,) a new [Creed] to be considered of, which contained much perverse Doctrine. But when the Creed they proposed publicly in the Council seemed to displease, their sentiments were that it was to be drawn up otherwise. And it is manifest, that they have in a short time often (p) altered these things.

(p) These have in a short time often altered these things.

Words are spoken against Ursacius and Valens, and their followers; who daily promoted new forms of the Creed, hereby demonstrating that they had no certain Faith; as Athanasius frequently objects against them. Valef.

But lest the Churches should be frequently dis-Constantinized, we have determined that the ancient Sanctions ought to be kept ratified and inviolable; and that the forementioned Persons should be removed from our Communion. In order therefore to the informing of Your Clemency, we have directed our Legates, who by our Letter will declare the Opinion of the Council. To whom we have given this Particular only in charge, that they should dispatch their Embassie no otherwise, than that the ancient Sanctions may continue firm and inviolable: As also that your Wisdom might know, that Peace cannot be accomplished by this which the forenamed Valens, Ursacius, Germinius, and Caius have promised, if any thing had been * altered. For how? Taken can peace be kept by those who subvert peace? For away, all Regions, and especially the Roman Church hath been involved in greater disturbances. Upon which account we beseech your Clemency, that you would hear and look upon all our Legates with favourable Ears; and a serene Countenance: (q) and that your Clemency would not permit any thing to be reversed to the injury of the Ancients, but that all things may continue which we have received from our Ancestors, who (we are confident) were prudent Persons, and acted not without the Holy Spirit of God. Because, not only the believing Populace are disquieted by that novelty, but also Infidels are prohibited from making their approaches to a (r) credulity. We also intreat; that You would give order, that as many Bishops as are detained at Ariminum (amongst which there are many that are enfeebled with age and poverty,) may return to their Province; lest the Populace of the Churches suffer damage by being destitute of their Bishops. But we do with more earnestness petition for this, that no innovation may be made, nothing may be diminished; but those things may remain uncorrupted which have continued in the times of the Father of your holy Piety, and in your own religious days. And, that your Holy Prudence would not suffer us to be wearied out, and revisit from our Seas: but that the Bishops with their Laity, free from diffidence, may always attend the [putting up their] Petitions, which they * make for your Health, for your Empire, and for Peace, which may the Divinity grant You to be profound and perpetual, according to your desires. Our Embassadors will bring both the Subscriptions and also the Names of the Bishops or Legates; as they will inform you (s) Holy and Religious Prudence by another writing.

(q) Here I followed the Greek Translator of this Epistle; and corrected the Latin Copy. For in Athanasius's Fragments, the common reading of this place is: Ne vel permissa Clementia tua iura vetera convelli, ubi tua Clemency would not permit the ancient Laws to be reversed. In the M. S. Copy, which Sirmondus had seen, the reading is: Ne vel aliquid permissa Clementia iura injuriam veterum convelli. Whence we infer, that the true reading, which we have expected in our Version, is Valef.

(r) Here the Greek translation was grievously out; for instead of Credulity he has rendered it Cru- city. Valef.

(s) The Greek Translator of this Letter makes use of the term Deities, Divinity, here: but in Athanasius it is ἀθανάτου, Sanctity. It is improbable that the Bishop should have said, The Divinity of the Emperor. Valef.

Thus wrote the Synod, and sent it by the Bishops. But Ursacius and Valens having prevented their arrival, did before-hand calumniate the Synod, shewing [the Emperor] the Draught of the Creed, which they had brought along with them. The Emperor, whose mind had been long since wholly addicted to the Arian opinion, was highly incensed against the Synod: but had a great esteem and honour for Valens and Ursacius. Wherefore the persons sent by the Synod staid a long while, being unable to get an Constantius. an answer. But at length the Emperor wrote back to the Synod by those that were present, after this manner.

(†) CONSTANTIUS VICTOR and TRIUMPHATOR AUGUSTUS,
to all the Bishops convened at Ariminum.

That our chiefest care is always employ'd about the Divine and Venerable Law, even your Goodness is not ignorant. Notwithstanding, We could not hitherto see the twenty Bishops sent from your Prudence, who undertook the dispatch of the Embassy from you. For we are wholly intent upon an Expedition against the Barbarians. * And, as you know, 'tis fit that a mind exercis'd about the Divine Law, should be vacated from all care and Sollicitude. Wherefore We have order'd the Bishops to expect Our return to Adrianople, that, after the publick affairs should be put into a good and settled posture, we may at length bear and deliberate upon what they shall propose. In the interim, let it not seem troublesome to your Gravity to wait for their return, in regard, when they shall come back and bring you our answer, you will be enabled to bring to a conclusion such things as appertain to the utility of the Catholic Church. When the Bishops had received this Letter, they return'd an answer after this manner.

We have received Your Clemencies Letter, (Lord Emperor most dear to God!) wherein is contained, that by reason of the pressing necessity of publick business, You could not hitherto see our Embassadors. And You order us to expect their return, till such time as Your Piety shall understand from them what hath been determined by us agreeable to [the Tradition of] our Ancestors. But we do by this Letter profess and affirm, that we do in no wise recede from our resolution. And this we have given in charge to our Embassadors. We desire therefore, that with a serene countenance You would order this present Letter of our Meanness to be read; and also graciously admit of those things which we have given in charge to our Embassadors. Undoubtedly Your Mildness, as well as we, doth perceive, how great the grief and sadness at present is [every where,] in regard so many Churches are desitute of their Bishops in these most blessed times of Yours. And therefore we again beseech Your Clemency, (Lord Emperor most dear to God!) that before the sharpness of Winter (if it may please Your Piety,) You would command us to return to our Churches, in order to our being enabled to * put up our usual Prayers together with the People, to Almighty God, and to our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, his only begotten Son, in behalf of Your Empire, in such manner as we have always done, and now most earnestly desire to do.

After they had written this Letter, and continued together some small time; in regard the Emperor would not vouchsafe them an answer, they departed every one to his own City. But the Emperor had long before had a design of disseminating the Arian Opinion throughout the Churches: Which he then earnestly endeavouring to effect, made their departure a pretext of contumely, saying, that he was despit'd by them, in regard they had dissolved [the Council] contrary to his will. Wherefore, he gave Ursacius's party free liberty of doing what they pleas'd against the Churches. He also commanded, that the Draught of the Creed which had been read at Ariminum, should be sent to the Churches throughout Italy, giving order that such as would not subscribe it, should be put out of Constantius's the Churches, and others substituted in their places. And in the first place (†) Liberius Bishop of Rome, having refused to give his consent to that Creed, is banish'd, the * Ursacians having substituted Felix in his place. This Felix being a Deacon in the Church of Rome, (x) embraced the Arian Opinion, and was prefer'd to that Bishoprick. But there are some who affirm, that he was not adducted to the Arian Opinion, but was by force compell'd to be ordain'd Bishop. At that time therefore all places in the West were filled with innovations and disturbances, some being ejected and banish'd, and others put into their Steppes. And these things were transacted by the force, and the authority of the Imperial Edicts, which were also sent into the Eastern parts. Indeed, not long after Liberius was recalled from banishment, and recover'd his own See; the people of Rome having rais'd a sedition, and ejected Felix out of the Church: At which time the Emperor gave them his consent thereto against his will. But the Ursacians left Italy, went made up into the Eastern parts, and arriv'd at a City of Thracia, the name whereof was Nice. Wherein after they had continued some small time, they made up (y) another Synod there. And having translated that Form of the Creed, read at Ariminum, into the Greek tongue, (as it has been before related,) they publish'd and confirm'd it, giving out that that Creed, which was made publickly by them at Nice, had been dictated by an Oecumenical Synod; their design being to impose upon the simpler sort of people by the likeness of the [Cities] name. For such persons were ready to think that it was the Creed publish'd at Nice a City of Byzania. But this cheat was not at all advantageous to them: for it was soon detected; and they themselves continued to be exposed to the reproach and laughter of all men. Let thus much be said concerning what was transacted in the Western parts. We must now pass to the relation of what was done at the same time in the East: And our Narrative must begin from hence.

But there are some who affirm, that he was not adducted to the Arian opinion, but was by force. Moreover, Baronius maintains, that Felix the Deacon, prefer'd by Acacius to Liberius's See, never was an Arian, but was desisted with the Communion only of the Arians. Theodoret affirms the same, in the second Book, Chap. 17. of his Eccles. Hist. And so does Symeon, Book 4, Chap. 11. Valf.

(†) The Embassadors of the Synod of Ariminum (who were sent to Constantius), having been corrupted by Ursacius and Valens, held a Council at Nice a Town of Thracia, on the sixth of the Ides of October, in the Consulate of Eusebius and Hypatius. In which Council they in the first place rekindled the sentence of Excommunication, which the Ariminum Bishops had pronounced against Ursacius, Valens, and the rest; and pronounced them to be, and always to have been Catholics. Then they published an Hæretical Form of the Creed. Part of their Acts are extant in Hilarius's Fragments, pag. 452, &c. where are recounted fourteen names of those that were Embassadors. Valf.

C H A P. XXXVIII.

Concerning the Cruelty of Macedonius, and the Tumults by him rais'd.

THE Bishops of the Arian party assumed a greater degree of boldness from the Imperial Edicts. And upon what account they attempted to convene a Synod, we will relate a little afterwards. But we will first briefly recite those things done by them before the Synod, Acacius and Patriophilus having ejected Maximinus Bishop mistaken. For Liberius was not banish'd, and Felix the Deacon put into his See, after the Synod of Ariminum; but long before, in the year of Christ, 336. Valf.

* That is, Ursacius's party.

(†) This Letter of Constantius, together with the answer of the Bishops at Ariminum is extant in Athanasius's Book de Synodo, near the end of it. Valf.

* Or, perhaps.

Constans.
rur.

* That is the Resurrection, and it role a again, as place it f

Christoph

played in Youthful
the Qu

“Agave”
Agave”

† Harred

time the people, in the same manner as before, carried the materials back again, and built the Church in its former place : and having made more beautiful and stately, they would have it call'd * Anastasia, a name apposite and significative. This Church therefore was afterwards erected again, as I said, in the Reign of Julian. But then both parties, as well the Catholics: as the Novatians; were in the same manner persecuted. Wherefore the Catholics the same manner as before; I was back again, and built the place : and having made it stately, they would have it name apposite and significant therefore was afterwards said, in the Reign of Julian, as well the Catholics as the Novatians, were after the same manner persecuted. Wherefore the Catholics abhor'd to (d) pray in those Oratories, wherein the Arians assembled themselves. But, in the other three Churches (for so many Oratories the Novatians had within the City [Constantinople]) the Catholics assembled with them, and pray'd together. And there wanted but little of their being entirely united, had not the Novatians, who observ'd their old injunction, refused to do that. But as to other matters, they preserv'd such a singular benevolence and kindness mutually, that * Or, they * were ready to die for one another. Therefore both parties were at the same time persecuted, not only in the City Constantinople, but in other Provinces and Cities also. For in Cyzicum, Elee-

thus the Bishop there did the same things against the Christians that were acted by Mace- donius, putting them to flight, and disquieting them every where. He also totally demolish'd the Church of the Novatians at Cyzicum. But Macedonius finish'd the enormous Villanies he had perpetrated, after this manner. Being inform'd that in the Province of Paphlagonia, and especially at Mantinium, there were very many persons of the Novatian Sect, and perceiving that so great a multitude could not be driven [from their habitations] by Ecclesiastick persons, he procured four Companies of Soldiers to be by the Emperor's order sent into Paphlagonia, that being terrified by these armed men, they might be induced to embrace the Arian Opinion. But they who inhabited Mantinium, out of a zeal to [defend] their Sect, made use of desperation against the Soldiers. And many of them getting together in one body and providing themselves with long Hooks and Hatches, and whatever weapon they could lay hands on, they march'd out to meet the Soldiers. An Engagement therefore hapning, many of the Paph- lagonians were therein slain: but all the Soldiers (except a very few) were cut off. This I heard from a Countryman of Paphlagonia, who said he was present at that action. But many other Paphlagonians do affirm the same. Of this sort were Macedonius's brave exploits in defence of Christianity, [to wit,] Murders, Fights, Captivities, and intestine Wars. But these practices of Macedonius rais'd a deserved Odium against him, not only amongst those he had injured, but amongst them also who were his adherents. Yea, the Emperor himself was offended at him, both upon this account, and also

For another reason, which was this. The Church, wherein lay the Coffin that contain'd the body of the Emperor Constantine, was threatened with ruin. (e) Wherefore for this reason, as well they who had hurt'd that Church, as those that continued in it and pray'd, were in a great fear. Macedonius therefore resolv'd to remove the Emperor's bones, that the Coffin might not be (f) spoiled by the ruin [of the Church.] The people understanding this, attempted to hinder it, saying, that the Emperor's Bones ought not to be removed; in regard that would be the fame, as if they were dug up again. Immediately the people were divided into two parties: the one affirm'd, thar no hurt could be done to the dead body by its being removed: the other side assur'd it to be an impious thing. Those of the Homoionism Opinion met together also, and oppos'd the doing hereof. But Macedonius, disregarding those that resist'd him, removes the body of the Emperor Constantine that Church, wherein lies Aecius the Mar-tyr's body. This being done, the multitude, di-vided into two parties, ran forthwith to that Church: and when the two Factions were drawn up against each other, immediately an engagement followed; wherein so great a number of men were slain, that that Church-yard was full of blood; (g) and the Well there- in overflow'd with blood, which ran even in- to the adjacent Portico, and from thence into the very Street. The Emperor, inform'd of this calamitous accident, was incens'd against Ma- cedonius, both upon account of those that were slain, and also because he had been so audaci-ous as to remove his Father's body without his consent. Having therefore left Julianus the Cesar to take care of the Western parts of the Empire, he himself went into the East. But, when Macedonius was soon after deposted, and under-went a punishment short of his enormous impieties, I will relate a little afterwards.

δι' αὐτοῦ, &c. Wherefore for this reason they who professed over, &c. but this Chasm is made up by the Allatian M. s. to which agrees Epiphani. Scholasticus' Verben. But his rendering [περὶ ἐπιστολῶν, Chutlers, Keepers] I like not, I should rather translate the term thus, those that made their abode for some time in the Church, under account of residing there. Vol-61 754-

(f) In the Sforzian M. S. the reading is [συνή, spoiled,] which I think to be better than [συνή, comprehended, or contained.] Vales

[illegible]

C H A P. XXXIX.

Concerning the Synod at Seleucia [a City] of Isauria.

BUT at present, I must give an account of the other Synod, which by the Emperor's Edict was to emulate that at Ariminum in the East. At first it was determined, that the Bishops should be convened at Nicomedia in Bithynia. But, a great earthquake, whereby the City Nicomedia hapned to be ruin'd, hindred their being convened at that place. This hapned in the

Constantinus.

(a) This persons name should not be Tatianus, but Dacianus. For so he is called in the Festi

Consulate of (a) Dacianus and Cerealis, about the eight and twentieth day of the month August. They resolv'd therefore upon removing the Synod to the City Nicea which was near to it. But this resolution was again altered: and it seem'd [more convenient] to meet at Tarsus a City of Cilicia. When this displeased them also, they were assembled at Seleucia [a City] of Isauria, which is surnam'd Apsara. This they did on the (b) same year [wherein the Ariminum Council was held,] in the Consulate of En-

Confulares, and in Ammianus Marcellinus. This Man was one of Libanius's chiefest Friends: to whom Libanius wrote very many of his Epistles, which are extant in the fourth Book of his Epistles. In the 71 Epistle of that Book he mentions his Consulate, and says he was Scholar to one of the Emperors; and Master to the other: His words are these: τὸ δὲ αὐτὸν λατρεῖν τὴν ἐξ ἑκείνου τὴν ἀρχὴν, &c. i. e. But your actions are illustrious, and better than that they should be extinguisht. For your Consulate, and the honours bestowed upon you by the Emperors, and your having been one of the Emperor's Scholars, and the others Master: Moreover, the stateliness of your House, and the numerousness, largeness, and handfomness of your Barbes: All these things will for ever retain your name, although your body does depart. In the 146 Epistle of the same Book, there is extant this Eulogie of Dacianus: τὸ γὰρ αὐτοῦ ἀνδραγαθία, &c. For, to bear such and so many brave exploits of a person, who has erected so many Kingdoms, and has been beneficial to so many Cities, nor has ever hurt any body, who is eminent for prudence, and has fill'd the Earth and Sea with the Glory of his name; is, to a Man of discretion, greater than all presents or future wealth. And, at the close of the same Epistle, he intimates, that the same Dacianus had a Seat at Constantinople, and that in Antioch and the Suburbs thereof, he had House, and Palaces beautified with Fountains and Baths; to take a view thereof he invites him, Valef.

(3) At this place occurs, no trivial difficulty. For the destruction of the City Nicomedia happen'd when Dacianus and Cerealis were Consuls, in the year of Christ 358, on the month of August. But the Council of Seleucia was held on the year following, in the Consulate of Eusebius and Hypatius, in the month of September. These things therefore happen'd not in one and the same year. Wherefore it seemeth, that the reading at this place should be [τὸ ἐκ αὐτοῦ ἐκείνου, on the year following.] Or, if the common reading must be retained, we must understand our Author's meaning to be, that the Council of Bishops at Seleucia was held on the same year with the Ariminum Council. Valef.

(c) This Leonas was Rector of the sacred Palace: and Lauricius was Comes of Isauria, as Ammianus Marcellinus doth attest. Valef.

Sabins and Hypatius. The persons convened were in number an hundred and sixty. There was present with them a personage eminent in the Imperial Palace, his name (c) Leonas; in whose presence, as the Emperor had given order by his Edict, the disquisition about the Faith was to be propos'd. Lauricius also the Commander in chief of the Soldiers throughout Isauria, was order'd to be there, to provide the Bishops with what necessities they might stand in need of. At this place therefore [the Bishops] were convened in the presence of these persons, on the twenty seventh of the month September, and began to dispute about making of publick A&S. For there were Notaries present also, who were to take in writing what was spoken by every one of them. A particular account of all matters then transacted, the studious Readers may find in Sabinius's Collection, where they are set forth at large. But we shall only cursorily relate the chief Heads thereof. On the first day of their being convened, Leonas order'd every one to propose what they would. But such as were present said, that no dispute ought to be rais'd, before the persons absent were come. For these Bishops were wanting, Macedonius of Constantinople, Basilins of Ancyra, and some others, who suspected they should be accus'd. Macedonius excus'd his absence by saying he was sick. Parophilius affirm'd he had a distemper in his eyes, and was therefore necessitated to continue in the Suburbs of Seleucia. All the rest propos'd one occasion or other of their being absent. But, in regard Leonas said, that, notwithstanding the absence of these persons, the question was to be propos'd; those that were present made answer again, that they would in no wife enter into any debate, before the * Morals of those accus'd were enquir'd into. For Cyrillus of Jerusalem, Eusebius of Schastia in Armenia, and some others had been accus'd some time before. Hereupon arose a sharp contest amongst those that were present. For some affirm'd, that the Morals of such as had been accus'd were in the first place to be look'd into: others were of opinion, that no controversy ought to be discuss'd before [that concerning] the Faith. This contest was rais'd by the different opinion of the Emperor. For his Letter was produc'd, in one passage whereof he gave order for the debating of this matter in the first place, in another for that. A disagreement therefore hapning concerning this matter, a Schism was made amongst the persons present. And this was the original cause of the Seleucian-Synods being divided into two parties. The one Faction was headed by Acacius [Bishop] of Caesarea in Palestine, Georgius of Alexandria, Uranius of Tyre, and Eudoxius of Antioch: of the same mind with whom there were only two and thirty other [Bishops]. The principal persons of the other Faction were Georgius of Laodicea in Syria, Sophronius of Pempsiopolis in Paphlagonia, and Eleusus of Cyzicum; who were followed by the major part. When therefore that side prevail'd, which was for debating in the first place concerning the Faith, Acacius's party manifestly rejected the Nicene Creed, and intimated the publication of another. But those of the other Faction, who were superior in number, approv'd of all other matters [determined] in the Nicene Synod; excepting only the term Homousios, which they found fault with. Therefore, after a very sharp contest amongst one another until evening, at length Silvanus (who presid'd over the Church at Tarsus) spake aloud, saying, there was no necessity of publishing a new Draught of the Creed, but that they ought rather to confirm that set forth at Antioch, at the Consecration of the Church. When he said this, Acacius's party secretly withdrew [out of the Council: ] but the other Faction produc'd the Creed [composed] at Antioch; after the reading whereof the Council broke up for that day. On the next day they met in a Church in Seleucia, and having shut the doors, they read that Creed, and confirm'd it by their Subscriptions. Instead of some [Bishops] who were absent, the Readers and Deacons there present subscribed, by whom the absent persons had profess'd, that they would acquiesce in that Draught [of the Creed.]

CHAP. XL.

That Acacius [Bishop] of Caesarea dictated another Draught of the Creed, in the Synod at Seleucia.

BUT Acacius, and those of his party found fault with what was done, because they had subscrib'd covertly when the Church-doors were shut. For matters, said he, transacted in secret were naught, and to be suspect'd. He made these objections, because he was desirous of publishing another Draught of the Creed instead of that [subscribed by them,] which [Form] he had about him, ready drawn up, and had before recited it to Lauricius and Leonas the Governours: and he made it his whole business to get that Draught only establish'd and confirm'd. These were the transactions of the second day when nothing else was done. On the third day

Constantinus.
Origen.

the Life, the Truth, the Wisdom; by* whom all Constithings were made, which are in the Heavens, and thutand which are on the Earth, whether visible or invisible. We believe him to have assumed Flesh from the Holy Virgin Mary, at the Conjunction of Ages, in order to the abolition of Sin: and that he was made Man, that he suffer'd for our Sins, and rose again, and was taken up into the Heavens, and sitteth at the Right Hand of the Father: and that he shall come again in Glory to judge the Quick and Dead.
We believe also in the Holy Ghost, whom our Lord and Saviour hath termed The Paraclete, having promised, after his departure, to send him to his Disciples, and he sent him. By whom also he sanctifies [ all ] Believers in the Church, who are baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. But those who preach any thing contrary to this Creed, [ (b) we look upon ] to be alienated from the Catholic Church.

we look upon, or account) is wanting in our M. S. It was first introduced by the Publishers of the Concordia, from Christophorus Verplanck. But in regard we found not this reading in Dionysius' Copy, we took the boldness to expunge it. In Epiphanius, (in Hæres. Semiarum, pag. 872.) and in Athanasius (in his Book de Synod. Arimini & Seleuciæ) the reading of this place is thus [ἡ ἐκ τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος ἐκκλήσις]. The Catholic Church hath determined them to be alienated [from it.] I found the same reading in the Alta. M. S. After these words there follow (in Epiphanius) the names of those Bishops, who subscribed this Draught of the Creed; being in number about forty. But before those Subscriptions, something is added there, which deserves to be set down here. The words therefore in Dionysius Petavius' Edition are these: ἑστὶ δὲ ταῦτα τῶν ἁγίων ἰερώνυμον καὶ ἱεροπόλεως ἀποστόλων καὶ ἁγίων πατέρων, καὶ τῶν ἐκείνων τῶν βασιλέων καὶ ἡγεμόνων ἐκ ἐκκλησιῶν καὶ τῶν ἁγίων. i. e. now, that that Creed lately published at Sirnium, in the presence of the pious of our Emperor, does exactly agree with this Creed, is a thing manifestly known to those who have read that Creed. Then follow: another Chapter, after this manner: ἡ ἐκκλησία ἐκ παλαιῆς βασιλείας, ἡμετέρας καὶ γυναικὸς δὲ τῆς ἀλεξανδρινῆς ἐκκλησίας καὶ ἁγίων πατέρων, καὶ ἡ ἐκ τῆς ἡγεμονίας τῶν ἐκείνων τῶν βασιλέων. i. e. And thus be the reading of this be it of Agathangos, who subscribed it, i. e. to which they who were present subscribed, Basilus, Nicetas, Georgius Bishop of Alexandria, Panscratius, Epiphanius, and most of the Western Bishops. Vale.

rumals, (a) of which the most eminent Lauricius, President of the Province, and the most Illustrious Leonas the Comes, have been eyewitnesses: upon this account we interpose these things. Not that we forsake the authentic Faith publish'd at the Consecration at Antioch, but we give that the preference, especially in regard our Fathers concurred about the proposition at that time in con-

This is the Draught of the Creed published by Acacius. The persons who subscribed it were Acacius himself, and such as adhered to his opinion, being as many in number, as we have mentioned a little before. After the recitation thereof, Sophronius [Bishop] of Pompeopolis in Paphlagonia spake these words aloud : I fto explain our own particular opinion every day be the exposition of the Faith, we shall be destitute of the exact diffuſion of the truth. Theſe words were ſpoken by Sophronius. And I do affirm, that if as well thoſe who lived before theſe men, as they that ſucceeded them, had at firſt entertained such sentiments concerning the Nicene Creed; all contentious disputes would have ceased, nor would a violent and irrational disturbance have been prevalent in the Churches. But let such as are prudent pass their judgment concerning the state of these matters. After they had mutually spoken and heard many things concerning this business, and concerning the persons accused, the Convention was for that time dissolved. On the fourth day they all met again in the same place, and with the same contentiousness began to dispute again. Amongst whom Acacius explained his opinion in these words: in as much as the Nicene Creed has been once, and after reading, that frequently altered, nothing hinders, but a new Creed may be now published. Hereto Eusebius [ Bishop ] of Cyzicum made a return, and said; the Synod is at present convened, not that it should learn (c) what it had not the knowledge of before. Porphyrius a Creed of before.

B b which

Constantinus.

which it was not heretofore in possession of; but that, proceeding on in the Creed of the Fathers, it should never recede from it, either during life, or at the time of death. With these words Eusebius opposed Acacius's Opinion, terming that Creed publish'd at Antioch the Father's Creed. But any one might have answer'd him also, in these words: How is it, that you title those convened at Antioch the Fathers, O Eusebius, whereas you acknowledge not their Fathers? For they who were assembled at Nice, and by their consent firm'd the Homoian Faith, ought more properly to be term'd the Fathers, both because they preceded in time, and also in regard those convened at Antioch were by them promoted to the Sacerdotal Dignity. Now, if those [assembled] at Antioch have rejected their own Fathers, they who come after them do not perceive themselves to be followers of Parricides. Moreover, how can they have admitted their Ordination to be legitimate, whose Faith they have rejected as impious? For if those persons had not the Holy Ghost, which is infused by Ordination, these have not received the Priesthood. For how could these have received [it] from them, who had it not to give? These words might have been spoken in opposition to what was said by Eusebius. After this they proceeded to another question. For, in regard the Acacians asserted in that Draught of the Creed which had been recited, that the Son was like the Father, they enquired of one another, in what respect the Son was like the Father. The Acacians asserted, that the Son was like the Father in respect of his Will only, not as to his Essence. But all the rest maintained, [that he was like the Father] in respect of his Essence also. They spent the whole day in their Altercations about this Query; and they confused Acacius, because in the Books by him composed and publish'd, he had asserted that the Son is in all things like the Father. And how can you (said they) now deny the likeness of the Son to the Father as to his Essence? Acacius made this answer, no modern or ancient Author was ever condemned out of his own Writings. When they had maintain'd a tedious, fierce, and subtle dispute against one another concerning this question, and could in no wise be brought to an agreement, Leonas arose and dissolved the Council. And this was the conclusion, which the Synod held at Seleucia had. For on the day after, Leonas being intreated, refused to come any more into the Congress, saying, that he had been sent by the Emperor, to be present at an unanimous Synod. But in regard some of you do disagree, I cannot (said he) be there; go therefore and prate in the Church. The Acacians looking upon what had been done to be a great advantage to them, refused to meet also. But those of the other party met together in the Church, and sent for the Acacians, that cognizance might be taken of the Case of Cyrillus Bishop of Jerusalem. For you must know that Cyrillus had been accused before; upon what account, I cannot tell. But he was deposed, because having been frequently summon'd in order to the examination of his cause, he had not made his appearance during the space of two whole years. Nevertheless when he was deposed, he sent an Appellatory Libel to them who had deposed him, and appealed to an higher Court of Judicature. To which appeal of his the Emperor Constantinus gave his assent. Indeed, Cyrillus was the (d) first and only person, who (contrary to the usage of the Ecclesiastick Canon) did this, [to wit,] made use of appeals, as 'tis usually done in the publick [secular] Courts of Judicature. He was at that time present at Seleucia, ready to put himself upon his trial: and therefore the Bishops called the Acacians into the assembly, (as we have said a little before,) that (e) by a general consent they might pass a definitive sentence against persons accused. For they had cited some other persons besides, that were accused, who for refuge had join'd themselves to Acacius's party. But in regard, after their being frequently summon'd, they refused to meet, [the Bishops] deposed both Acacius himself, and also Georgius of Alexandria, (f) Uranius of Tyre, (g) Theodolus of Cherazpi in Phrygia, Theodosius of Philadelpia in Lydia, Evagrius of the Island Mylene, Leonius of Tripolis in Lydia, and Eudocius who had heretofore been Bishop of Germanicia, but who had afterwards erept into the Bishoprick of Antioch in Syria. Moreover, they deposed (h) Patriphilus, because being accused by Dorotheus a Presbyter, and summoned by them to make his defence, he was contumacious. These persons they deposed. But they excommunicated Asterius, Eusebius, Abgarus, Bauducius, Siliclus, Phabus, Fidelis, Eutychius, Magnus, and Eusebius: determining they should continue excommunicate, till such time as by *making satisfaction they had cleared themselves of their Accusations. Having done this, and written Letters concerning those Bishops they had deposed, to each of their Churches, they constituted a Bishop of Antioch, in the room of Eusebius, whose name was Amnians: Whom the Acacians [soon after] apprehended, and delivered him to Leonas and Lauricius, by whom he was banished. Those Bishops who had ordained Amnians [being incensed] hereat, deposed (i) Conestory Libels against the Acacians with Leonas and Lauricius, by which they openly declared, that the determination of the Synod was injured. And when nothing further could be done, they went to Constantinople, to inform the Emperor concerning the matters determined by them.

finite sentence against the persons accused. For they had cited some other persons besides, that were accused.] we are at this place, wanting in the common Editions; we have inserted them from the Florentine and Storlin M. SS. To which agrees Epiphanius Scholasticus's Version. But Christopherson made up the chain; he had no Manuscript Copies of Socrates; but various Readings only, gathered from the Margins of Printed Copies. Valef.

(f) This Person's name should be Uranus (not Ursarius), so he is called in Athanasius's Book, de Synod. Arimin. & Seleucia, pag. 880. which name also Epiphanius Scholasticus gives him; as does likewise Epiphanius, (in Hierol. Semiarian.) who names him among the Bishops that subscribed the Acacian Creed. Valef.

(g) In the Florentine and Alavian M. SS. this person is named (not Theodorus, but more truly) Theodulus. For that is his name in Athanasius, Epiphanius, and Philostorgius. When this Theodulus had been deposed of the Bishoprick of Cherazpi, in the Council held at Seleucia, he was afterwards ordained Bishop of Palestina by the Eusebians, as Philostorgius relates. Concerning Leonius of Tripolis you may meet with many passages in Philostorgius. Valef.

(h) Into his See they put one Philippus a Presbyter of Scythopolis, as Epiphanius attests, in Hierol. Semiarian. Valef.

(i) It should be but one word, thus, Diaproscriptions, so the Greek term the Libels of proscription, (or, protests,) which were usually deposited with the Acts. We meet with a form of one of these Libels, at the close of Athanasius's Epistle ad Solitarios. I suppose, that two Libels of proscription were delivered by the Council; one to Leonas the Comes; another to Lauricius President of Isauria. Valef.

Constantinus.

C H A P. XLI.

That, upon the Emperor's return from the Western Parts, the Acacians were convened in the City of Constantinople, and framed the Ariminum Creed, making some Additions to it.

FOR the Emperor, being return'd from the Western Parts, resided [in that City:] at which time also he made a person whose name was (a) Honoratus, the first Prefect of Constantinople; having (b) abolish'd the Proconsul's Office. But the Acacians prevented and calumniated them before-hand to the Emperor, having inform'd him, that the (c) Creed which they had set forth was not admitted by them. Whereupon the Emperor was highly incensed, and resolved to disperse them, having commanded by an Edict [which he publish'd,] that such of them as were subject to publick Offices, should be reduced to their former condition. For several of them were liable to [publick] Offices; some [were subject to the bearing of those Offices belonging] to the City Magistracy; others [to them appertaining] to the (d) Sodalities of Officials or Apparitors in several Provinces. These persons being after this manner disturb'd, the Acacians abode for some time at Constantinople, and assembled another Synod, to which they sent for the Bishops of Bithynia. When therefore they were all met together, being (e) fifty in number, amongst whom was Marius of Chalcedon, they confirmed the Creed publish'd at Ariminum, which had the Consuls names prefix'd. Which Creed it would have been superfluous to have inserted here, had they made no additions to it. But in regard they added some words thereto, we thought it necessary to set it down at this place again. The Contents of it are these.

Honoratus, on the third of the Ides of December. Valef.

(b) Before the Emperor Constantius had made a Prefect of the City at Constantinople the Province Europa (the chief City whereof was Constantinople) was governed by a Proconsul, as Socrates here attests. Athanasius mentions this Proconsul, in his Apologick de Eug'd suo, not far from the beginning; where he says that the Emperor Constantius wrote Letters to Donatus the Proconsul, against Olympius Bishop of Thracia. In the Emperor Constantius's Epistle also, which he wrote to the Senate and Constantinopolitan people concerning the praises of themselves, there is mention of this Proconsul; at the close of that Epistle. Valef.

(c) That is, the Creed which had the Consuls names prefix'd. Valef.

(d) Τὸν οὖν τῶν ἀρχαίων καὶ ἐκκλησιῶν. So this place is worded in the Original. What the τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν were, I have long since explained in my Notes on Anon. Marcellinus: to wit, the Bodies or Sodalities of Officials or Apparitors who attended upon the Presidents and Governours of Provinces. It was their duty to collect the tribute from the Inhabitantes of the Province, and to put in execution the Presidents Orders. Further, as they who had lifted themselves in the Camp-milice, stood obliged by a Military-oath, and enjoyed not a complete liberty, but were bound in a servitude as it were, (ill such time as they were disbanded, [as Suidas declares, in the word στρατιώτης]) to those officials, who followed the City-milice, were bound to this employment as it were, and liable to the Offices of their Milice; and their Farms, as well as those of the Decurions, were incumberd with these burdens, as 'tis apparent from the Theodosian Code. Valef.

(e) In the Alexandrian Chronicle, seventy two Bishops are said to have been present at the Constantinopolitan Synod, in the year of Christ, 360. Valef.

We believe in one only God, the Father Almighty, of whom are all things. And in the only begotten Son of God, begotten of God before all ages, and before every beginning: by whom all things, visible or invisible, were made. * Who is the only begotten Son of the Father, the only of the only, God of God, begotten like to the Father (who begat him) according to the only of the Scriptures. Whose generation no person knoweth, only the Father, who begat him. We know that this Person [to be] the only begotten Son of God, who upon his Father's sending of him, came down from the Heavens, according as 'tis written, upon account of the destruction of Sin and Death: and was born of the Holy Ghost, and of the Virgin Mary according to the flesh, as 'tis written, and conversed with the Disciples; and having fulfilled every dispensation according to his Father's will, he was crucified and died, and was buried, and descended into the parts beneath the Earth. At whom Hell it self trembled. Who arose from the Dead on the third day, and was conversant with the Disciples: and after the completion of forty days, he was taken up into the Heavens, and sitteth on the Right Hand of the Father; he shall come in the last day of the Resurrection in his Father's Glory, that he may render to every Man according to his works. And [we believe in] the Holy Ghost, whom he himself the only Begotten of God, Christ our Lord and God, promised to send as an Advocate to Mankind, according as 'tis written, the Spirit of Truth; whom he sent unto them, after he was assumed into the Heavens. But we thought good to remove the term * Ousia, (which Substance, was used by the Fathers in a more plain and ordinary sense; and being not understood by the People, has given offence,) in regard 'tis not contained in the Sacred Scriptures; and that in future not the least mention should be made thereof, for as much as the Sacred Scriptures have no where mentioned the Substance of the Father and of the Son. (f) Nor (f) In Athanasius's Book de Spiritibus, and of the Holy Ghost, to be so much as named. Sprodia. But we assert the Son to be like the Father, in pag. 906. such a manner as the Sacred Scriptures do affirm and the read-teach. Moreover, let all the Heresies, which have been heretofore condemned, and which may have risen of late, being opposite to this Creed published [by us], be Anathema.

agrees the Version of the Latin Translator. Which is also confirmed by Athanasius himself, in the same Book, pag. 905. the place we will quote by and by. Valef.

This Creed was at that time recited at Constantinople. Having now at length passed through the Labyrinth of the Expositions of Faith, we will reckon up their number. After the Creed [publish'd] at Nice, they set forth two Epitions of the Faith at Antioch, at the Dedication. A third was that delivered to the Emperor Constantine in the Gallia's, by Narcissus and those that accompanied him. The fourth was that sent by Eudoxius into Italy. Three Draughts of the Creed were publish'd at Sirmium, one whereof was recited at Ariminum, which had the name of the Consuls prefix'd. The eighth was that which the Acacians promulg'd at Seleucia. The last was set forth at the City Constantinople, with an addition. For hereto was annex'd, that neither Substance nor Subsistence ought to be mention'd in relation to God. Moreover, Ulfila Bishop of the Goths did at that time first agree to this Creed. For before this he had embraced the Nicene Creed; being Theophilus's Follower, who was Bishop of the Goths, and had been present at, and subscribed the Nicene Synod. Thus far concerning these things.

C H A P. XLII.

That upon Macedonius's being deposed, Eudoxius obtained the Bishoprick of Constantinople.

BUT Acacius, Eudoxius, and those that were with them at Constantinople, made it wholly their business, that they also might on the other

B b 2 side

Confession-
that.

side depose some persons of the contrary party. Now, you must know, that neither of the factions decreed these depositions upon account of Religion, but for other pretences. For, tho' they dissented about the Faith, yet they found not fault with one another's Faith in their mutual depositions of one another. Those therefore of Acacius's party, making use of the Emperor's indignation, (which he had kept concealed in his mind,) and earnestly endeavour'd to wreak it against others, but most especially against Macedonius do in the first place depose Macedonius, both because he had been the occasion of many murders, and also in regard he had admitted a Deacon taken in Fornication to Communion. Then, [they depose] Eusebius [Bishop] of Cyzicum, because he had baptiz'd one Heraclius, Heraclius's Priest at Tyre, a person known to be a Conjuror, and ordain'd him Deacon. [In the next place they depose] Basilus, (or Basilas, for so he was also called) who had been constituted [Bishop] of Anagra in the room of Marcellus, as having unjustly tortured a certain person, bound him with iron-chains, and confined him to prison; also, because he had fastned calumnies upon some persons; and moreover, in regard by his Letters he had disturbed the Churches in Africa. Draconius [was deposed by them,] because he had remov'd from Galatia to Pergamus. Moreover, they deposed Neonas [Bishop] of Selencia, in which City the Synod had been convened, as also Sophronius of Pompeopolis in Phlagonia, Elpidius of (a) Satala in Macedonia, and Cyrillus of Jerusalem; and others were ejected by them for other reasons.

(a) Satala was a Town in Armenia; of which there is frequent mention amongst the Ancients. But in Macedonia, no mention is made of a City of this name by the Ancients. Wherefore I judge, that instead of Macedonia, it should be Armenia, here in the Greek Text. Valef.

C. H. A. P. XLIII.

Concerning Eustathius Bishop of Sebastia.

BUT Eustathius [Bishop] of Sebastia in Armenia, was not so much as admitted to make his defence, because he had been long before deposed by Eulalius his own Father, who was Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia, in regard he wore a garment misbecoming the Sacerdotal function. You are to know, that in Eustathius's room Meletius was constituted Bishop, concerning whom we will speak hereafter. But Eustathius was afterwards condemn'd in a Synod convened upon his account at Gangra [a City] of Phlagonia, because, after his deposition in the Synod at (a) Cæsarea, he had done many things repugnant to the Ecclesiastick Laws. For he had forbidden marriage, and maintain'd that meats were to be abstain'd from; and upon this account he separated many who had contracted marriages, from their Wives, and perswaded (b) those who had an aversion for the Churches, to communicate at home. He also entic'd away servants from their masters by a pretext of piety. He himself wore the habit of a Philosopher, and caused his followers to make use of a new and unusual garb, and gave order that women should be shorn. He [asserted] that set Fasts were to be avoided; but maintain'd fasting on Sundays. He forbid prayers to be made in the houses of those who were married; and taught, that the Blessing and Communion of a Presbyter who had a wife (whom he had lawfully married during his being a Laick) ought to be declined as a thing most detestable. Upon his doing and teaching these and several other such-like things as these, a Synod (as I have said) convened at Gangra in Phlagonia deposed him, and anathematized his opinions. (c) These things were done afterwards. But Macedonius being they ejected, Eudoxius, desiring the See of Antioch, is constituted [Bishop] of Constantinople, being consecrated by the Acacians; who forgot themselves, in that they decreed what was contradictory to their former determinations. For they who had deposed Draconius because of his translation from Galatia to Pergamus, consider'd not with themselves, that by ordaining Eudoxius, who then made a second remove [to another Bishoprick,] they did what was contrary to their own Sanctions. Having done these things, they sent the Creed which had been read (d) at Ariminum, together with its Supplement, corrected by them; and gave order, that such as would not subscribe it, should be banished, according to the Emperor's Edict. [Lastly,] they made known what they had done both to others in the East, who entertain'd the same sentiments with them, and also to Patriarchus [Bishop] of Scythopolis. For he went from Scythopolis forthwith to his own City. Further, Gangra to Eudoxius having been constituted [Bishop] of the * Great City, the (e) Great Church * named Sophia was at that time consecrated, in Constantius's Tenth, and Julianus, Cæsar's third Consulate, on the fifteenth of the month February. As soon as Eudoxius was seated in that See, he was the first that utter'd this sentence which is [still] in the year of Christ

(a) Sogomen, Book 4. chap. 24. says 'twas at Neocaesarea. Valef. (b) These words of Socrates x. v. 21. ἐν τῇ πόλει, ἵνα οἱ αὐτοὶ ἔσθωσαν, had an aversion for, or, desisted the Churches] are not to be understood of all those who declined the Churches; but they must be joined to the foregoing words, and are to be meant of those persons, who by Eustathius's perswasion had separated themselves from the converse of their Wives. Eustathius perswaded these men to avoid the Churches abilities, and not to communicate with other believers; but that, being as it were pure and perfect, they should participate of the sacred Mysteries by themselves at home. See what Epiphanius has related concerning this Eustathius, in his Harpe of the Arians; and Basilus, in his Epistles. Valef.

341. Indeed Baronius (at the year of Christ 351.) places the Synod of Gangra in the Reign of Constantine the Great. But he is confuted both by Socrates and Sopomen. For Socrates makes that Synod to be later than the Seleucian and Constantinopolitan Synod. But Sopomen places it after Eustathius's deposition, which was done by Eusebius Bishop of Constantinople. Now, Eusebius thrust himself into the Constantinopolitan See in Constantinus's reign, as 'tis agreed amongst all Men. Lastly, Basilus (in his twenty fourth Epistle, which he wrote to the Western Bishops against Eustathius Bishop of Sebastia) makes no mention of the Council of Gangra. Whence 'tis manifest, that at such time as Basilus wrote that Epistle (which he did in Valens's reign,) the Council of Gangra, wherein Eustathius was condemn'd, had not been held. Some one will peradventure say, (which is objected by Baronius) that that Eustathius condemn'd in the Synod of Gangra was a different Person from Eustathius of Sebastia. But this is gravis dictum, not is it founded on the authority of any Author. Valef.

(d) I have rendered this place in, as to refer these Words [in Ariminum] to these [they sent:] which Version of ours is confirmed by Ambrosius, in his Book de Synodis, pag. 925. His Words are these: taurita yeghlaevic en ty iwaevic, &c. Having written these things in laurea, they departed to Constantinople, and repenting as it were [of what they had done,] according to their usual manner they altered their Draught. And when they had added some words, [to wit:] that [the term] Justification should not be used in relation to the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, they sent this [form of] the Creed to Ariminum, &c. Which passage in Ambrosius, Socrates does seem to transcribe here. Epiphanius Scholasticus and Christophorus have rendered this place to this effect: Having done this, they sent the Creed read at Ariminum together with its supplement, &c. Valef.

(e) I perfected and mended this place from the Florentine and Sforzian Copies. Concerning the Consecration of this Church, it is thus recorded in Idarius's Fifth: Constanti decimo, &c. In Constantinus's Tenth and Julianus's Third Consulate, the Great Church at Constantinople was consecrated, on the fifteenth of the Kalends of March. Celsus (in his Chronicon) says this was the second Consecration of this Church. For it was first consecrated, says he, by Eusebius Bishop of Constantinople. But being afterwards ruined, it was re-edified by Constantinus Augustus, and consecrated by Eudoxius. See the Chronicon Alexandrinum, where many passages (in no wise trivial) occur concerning this Consecration. Valef.

in every bodies mouth, saying, the Father is irreligious; the Son is religious. When a tumult and a disturbance arose thereupon, Be not troubled (says he) at what has been spoken by me, for, the Father is irreligious, because he worships no person; but the Son is religious, because he worships the Father. When Eudoxius had spoken these words, the tumult was appeased; but instead of the disturbance, there was a great laughter raised in the Church. And this saying of his continues to be a ridicule even to this day. Such Cavils the Arch-Heretics made use of, and busied themselves about such expressions as these, rending the Church in sunder [thereby.] This was the conclusion that the Synod had, which was convened at Constantinople.

C H A P. XLIV.

Concerning Meletius Bishop of Antioch.

IT now remains, that we speak concerning Meletius: For he (as we said a little before) was made Bishop of Sebasia in Armenia, after Eustathius's depōsition. He was afterwards translated from Sebasia to (a) Berasa [a City] of Syria. When he had been present at the Synod in Seleucia, and subscribed the Creed publish'd there by Acacius, he went directly from thence to Berasa. Upon the Convention of the Synod at Constantinople, when the Antiochians understood that Eudoxius had despised [the Presidency over their Church, and removed to the wealth of the Comnenian See, they sent for (b) Meletius from Berasa, and install him [Bishop] over the Church of Antioch. At first he supererogated making any discourses about points of Faith, and deliver'd moral Doctrine only to his hearers. But after his continuance there some time, he expounded the Nicene Creed, and asserted the Homœousian opinion. Which when the Emperor understood, he gave order that he should be banish'd: and caused Euzoïus (who had before been depōsed together with Arius) to be ordain'd Bishop of Antioch. But as many as reserv'd an affection for Meletius, left the Arian congregation, and made assemblies apart by themselves; [altho'] those who originally embraced the Homœousian opinion, would not communicate with them, because Meletius had receiv'd his Ordination from the Suffrages of the Arians, and because his followers had been baptized by them. After this manner was the Antiochian Church affected towards the other Meletian's party, altho' they agreed with them in the principal points of Faith. But the Emperor understanding that the Persians were raising another War against the Romans, went in great haste to Antioch. On Sebasia, perceiving a contumacy in those under his charge, he retired from thence to some other place. Then therefore he went to Berasa, as I conjecture; but he preid not over the City of Berasa. This mistake of Socrates's was perceived by Basilian, at the year of Christ 360. Which he corrects for, as to affirm, that Meletius was translated from Berasa to Sebasia, not from Sebasia to Berasa. Which, I suppose, is not true, in regard neither Theodoret nor Sozomen have affirmed that concerning Meletius. Valef.

(a) This Person's name is written sometimes with an [e] thus Meletius, sometimes with an [i] thus Meletius. See Eusebius's Eccl. Hist. Book 7. Chap. 32. Note (d) pag. 138.

C H A P. XLV.

Concerning Macedonius's Heresie.

BUT Macedonius, who had been ejected out of Constantinople, being unable to bear his condemnation, could by no means endure to be Constantinople at quiet. But joyn'd himself to those of the other party, who had depōsed Acacius and his followers at Seleucia. He therefore sent an Embassy to Sophronius and Eleusius, exhorting them to adhere to that Creed which was at first publish'd at Antioch, and afterwards confirm'd at Seleucia, and that they should give it an

(a) adulterate name, [to wit] the Homœousian Creed. Wherefore many of his acquaintance and friends flock'd to him, who are now from him call'd Macedonians. And as many as dissent from the Acacians at the Synod of Seleucia, from thence forward manifestly asserted the term * Homœousian, (b) whereas, before this they had not openly own'd it. But there is a report, which has been prevalent amongst many men, that this [term Homœousian] was not Macedonius's invention; but Marathonius's rather, whom they had made Bishop of Nicomedia a little before. Upon which account they call the followers of this opinion Marathonians also. In like manner Eustathius (who had been ejected out of Sebasia for that reason which we have mention'd a little before) joyn'd himself to that party. But after Macedonius refused to include the Holy Ghost in the Divinity of the Trinity, then Eustathius said, I cannot assent to the terming of the Holy Ghost God, nor dare I call him a Creature. Upon which account, those that embrace the Homœousian opinion, give these persons the name of * Pneumatomachi. The reason why these Macedonians are so numerous in Adversaries, or (c) Hellens, I will declare in its due place. Opposers of Now, the Acacians used their utmost endeavours the Holy that they might be convened again at Antioch, Spirit. in regard they repented their having asserted (e) in the Son to be wholly like the Father. On the year following therefore, wherein Taurus and scrips, the Florentinus were Consuls, they met at Antioch in Syria, (over which Church Euzoïus presided, in [the reading] which City the Emperor also resided [at that time]) when some few of them resumed a debate of those points which they had determin'd [before], saying, that the term * Homœous ought to be expung'd out of the Creed, which had been publish'd both at Ariminum and at Constantinople. Nor did they any longer keep their Vizors on, but affirm'd bare-fac'd, that the Son was in all respects unlike the Father, not only as to his Essence, but in relation to his Will also. And they openly asserted (according as Arius had them affirm'd) that he was made of nothing. To this opinion those, who at that time were followers of Arius's Heresie at Antioch, gave their assent. Wherefore, besides their having the appellati- on of Arians, they were also called * Anomœi, be unlike

(a) Translators understood not this place. And yet they might have been inform'd from Hypocritæ's Lexicon, that ὁμοούσιος (the term here used,) does signify adulterate, or counterfeit; by a Metaphor taken from money which has a false stamp. Socrates therefore calls Homœousian. (For 'tis to be written, agreeable to the Florentine and Sporian Manuscripts,) and the import of the term is, that the Son is of a substance, or Essence like to the Father; or an adulterate name, because 'tis corrupted, and counterfeited put instead of Homœousian (i. e. that the Son is of the same Substance, or Essence with the Father;) which is the same of the true and uncorrupted Creed. Further, the Acacians rejected as well the term Homœousian, as Homœousian; and retain'd only Homœous (i. e. like the Father;) and wholly abhorred the term Omnia (i. e. Substance). Valef.

(b) This place is corrupted by a transposition of the Words; which may easily be rectified thus; ὁμοούσιος αὐτῷ, ὡς ὁ πατήρ, ὡς ὁ πατήρ αὐτῷ, from whence forward manifestly asserted the term Homœousian, whereas before this they had not openly own'd it. Nor do I doubt but Socrates wrote thus. Christophorus and Quintus apprehended not the meaning of this place. But Epiphanius Scholasticus's Rendition of it agrees with our Version: only instead of ὡς ὁ πατήρ, ὡς ὁ πατήρ αὐτῷ the reading in his Copy seems to have been ὡς ὁ πατήρ, ὡς ὁ πατήρ αὐτῷ which displeases us not. Valef.

(c) That is, Little the Father.

and Exeuntii, by those at Antioch, who embrac'd the Homoian opinion, who [notwithstanding] were at that time divided amongst themselves upon Meletius's account, as has been said before. When therefore they were ask'd by the Homoians, why they were so audacious, as to

Apollinarius. They both flourish'd at the same time with Epiphanius the Sophista and being very intimate friends, they conversed together with him. But Theodotus Bishop of Laodicea, fearing that by their continual converse with that person they should be perverted to Genilicism, forbade their going to him. They regarding the Bishop's [prohibition] very little, continued their intimacy with Epiphanius. After this, Georgius, Successor to Theodotus, endeavour'd to reform [and wean] them from conversing with Epiphanius; but being unable to persuade them by any means, he punish'd them both with Excommunication. Apollinarius the son look'd upon what was done to be an injury, and confiding in the fluency of his Sophistic faculty of speaking, he also framed a new Heresy, which flourisheth at this present, and bears the name of its Inventor. But some do report, that they dissent from Georgius, not so much upon account of the foremention'd reason, but because they saw he maintain'd absurdities; sometimes professing the Son to be like the Father (according as it had been determined [in the Synod] at Seleucia); at others inclining to the Arrian opinion. Laying hold therefore of this specious pretext, they made a separation [from him.] But when they saw no body adhered to them, they introduce a [new] Scheme of Religion: and at first asserted that (a) Humanity was assumed by God the Word in the Oeconomy of his Incarnation, without the Soul. But afterward, rectifying their former error, by repentance as it were, they added, that the Soul was indeed assumed; but that it had not a Mind, but that God the Word was in the place of a Mind, in his assumption of Humanity. As to this point only these [Hereticks] do affirm that they dissent [from Catholics] who from them are now called Apollinarian. For they assert that the Trinity is Consubstantial. But we shall mention the two Apollinarius's again in due place.

(d) In the Alatim M.S. he is called *E-*rennus; where this whole passage is thus more over, at the same time there sprang up another Heresy, upon this account.

ἔπειτα τοὺς Ὑπερβολοὺς κείνους καθ' ἑαυτοὺς, οἱ ἄνθρωποι, πειθαρχή-σαντες τῇ ὑπερβολῇ αὐτῶν ἀναλαβὴν Ἑβραίους, καὶ ἄλλους ὁμοῦς· ἔπειτα δὲ τὴν Ἰερουσαλὴν, ἰ. ε. α. Jerusalem, Cyrenius having been deposed, as before said, Cyrenius succeeded in this. Chorus, after whom, and after Julius, Agrippa calls him Agrippa. But Jerome (in his commentary) calls him Irenius: For this is the reading in the most correct Copies, and in Julianus Atricus's Edition; Maximus Hierophylorum Episcopus
maritimi. Post quem, Eusebius Asiatici invadunt, id est Cyrenius, Eutychius, rufinus Cyrenius, Irenius, tertio Cyrenius, hilarius, quarto Cyrenius: id est, Maximus Bishop of Jerusalem dies; after whom, the Asiatic invades that Chorus, that is, Cyrenius, Eutychius, Cyrenius
 the second, Irenius, Cyrenius the third, hilarius, Cyrenius the fourth.
 In Nicéphorus Constantino-politani's Chronicon, he is very corruptly called Agrippinus. Valeat.

professes the flesh only to be the Cover of the Deity; and asserts the flesh to have been in the flesh, in the Head of our Lord Jesus, that is, the full Man. In this opinion he was followed by Eusebium, as Theodoret informs from him: for they distinguished (as we may see from this passage in Octavius Socrates) between the Soul and Mind of Man; acknowledging (as in the second Edition of their Heresie) that God the Word assumed an humane Body and a Soul; (which latter Arim and his Crew denied) but not the Mind, or Spirit of Man; the place whereof was supplied, said they, by the Word it self. This Philosophick notion (making Man consist of three parts, a Body, a Soul, and a Mind;) they borrowed from Plotinus; so says Nemesius in his de Nat. Etern.

C H A P. XLVII.

Concerning the Death of the Emperor Constantius.

Moreover, whilst the Emperor Constantius resided at Antioch, Julianus Cæsar engages with a numerous army of Barbarians in the Gallia's. And having obtain'd a victory, was for that reason greatly belov'd by all the Soldiers, by whom he is proclaim'd Emperor. This being told to the Emperor Constantius put him into an agony. He was therefore baptiz'd by Euzoius, and * undertakes an expedition against Julianus. But arriving between Cappadocia and Cilicia, he ended his life at Mopsucrena, (being seiz'd with an Apoplexy by reason of his too great sollicitude) in the Conflute of Taurus and Florentius, on the third of November. This was the first year of the two hundred eighty fifth Olympiad. Constantius lived forty five years, and reigned thirty eight. He was his Fathers Colleague in the Empire thirteen years : after whose death, [he govern'd] twenty five ; which space of years this Book doth contain.

T H F

* Or, Preceded so as to be against, &c.

C H A P. XLVI.

Concerning the Apollinaristæ, and their Heresie.

At Laodices in Syria, there were two men of the same name, the Father and the Son : For each of their names was Apollinaris. The Father was dignified with a Presbyterate in that Church ; the Son had a Readers place. They were both Teachers of Grecian Literature ; the Father taught Grammar, the Son Rhetoric. The Father was by birth an Alexandrian, and having artfully taught at Berytus, he removed afterwards to Laodicea, where he married and begat his son

THE
THIRD BOOK
OF THE Ecclesiastical History
OF SOCRATES SCHOLASTICUS.

CHAP. I.

Concerning Julianus, his Extract and Education.
And how, upon his being made Emperor, he revolted to Gentilism.

Julianus.

THE Emperor Constantius ended his life on the Confines of Cilicia, about the third of November, in the Consulate of Taurus and Florentinus. During the same persons Consulate, Julianus arriving from the Western parts (a) about the eleventh

(a) We have the same account in Marius's Fasti: Taurus & Florentio his Coss. &c. in the Consulate of Taurus and Florentinus, Constantinus Augustus died at Mopsocrina in the confines of Cilicia, a Province of Phœnicia, on the third of November. And Julianus made his entry into Constantinople on the eleventh of December. But, what Socrates adds, to wit, that Julian was proclaimed Emperor in that City, must be so understood, not as if that were the first time of his being saluted Emperor: For he had been proclaimed Emperor in the Gallia's a long while before, whilst Constantius was alive: But, upon his entry into Constantinople, he was declared Emperor by the Senate and Constantinopolitans; and took possession of the Empire of the East. Valef.

Christian Religion being our business, we will continue making use of a low, plain, and mean style for periphrasis's sake. And this we promised [to do] at the beginning. Being therefore to speak concerning him, his Extract, Education, and how he came to the Empire; in order to our performing hereof, we must begin a little higher. Constantius, he who gave Byzantium his own name, had two Brothers begotten by the same Father, but not born of the same Mother. The name of the one was Dalmatius, the other was called Constantinus. Dalmatius had a Son who bore his own name. Constantius begat two Sons, Gallus and Julianus. After the death of [Constantine] the Builder of Constantinople, when the Soldiers had murder'd Dalmatius the younger, at that time these * two also being Orphans, Julianus wanted but a little of falling into the same danger with Dalmatius; had not a dissempir which seem'd to be mortal deliver'd Gallus [from their violence:] and the tenderness of Julianus's age (for he was not then eight years old compleat) protect'd him. But, after the Emperor's rage against them was mollified, Gallus frequented the Schools at Ephesus in Ionia, in which Country they had large possessions left them by their Ancestors. And Julianus being grown up, was an Auditor in the Schools at Constantinople; going into the Palace (where there were then Schools) in a private habit, and was tutor'd by Macedonius the Eunuch. (b) Niccolas the Laconian taught him the Grammar; he had for his Rhetoric-master Eccebolus the Sophista, who was at that time a Christian. For the Emperor Constantius took great care, lest by his being an hearer of a Pagan-master, he should revolt to the superstition [of the Gentiles:] For Julianus was at first a Christian. Upon his making a great progress in Literature, a rumour [begin] to be spread amongst the people, that he was fit to govern the Roman Empire. Which report being more openly divulged, much disturb'd the Emperor's mind. Wherefore, he removed him from the * Great City to Nicomedia, ordering him not to frequent [the School] of Libanius the Syrian Sophista. For at that time Libanius, having been expelled Constantinople by the School-masters, had opened a School at Nicomedia. Wherefore, he vented his gall against the School-masters, in an (c) Oration forbidden to go to him, because Julianus was as to his Religion a Pagan. Nevertheless, being a great admirer of Libanius's Orations, he procur'd them privately, and perused them frequently and studiously. When he had made a great proficiency in Rhetoric, there came to Nicomedia, Maximus the Philosopher, not

B b 4

(b) There are several Epistles of Libanius's extant, written to this Niccolas, particularly the seventh Epistle of his 4th Book, wherein Libanius excuses the infelicity of a Citizen of Antioch, who had abused him: Amongst other passages he says, that the fault of one Citizen was not to be ascribed to the whole City. For in a City containing an hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants, 'tis not to be wonder'd at, if one bad Citizen be found: Whereas, neither in your Sparta (which yet has Lycurgus for its Law-giver) all are alike good and generous. Valef.

* That is, Constantinople.

(c) This Oration of Libanius's is against the School-masters, is not (to my knowledge) now extant. Maximus Valef.

Julianus. (d) Maximus of Byzantium, Eucled's Father, but Maximus the Epheſian, whom the Emperor Valentinianus order'd to be ſlain afterwards, as being a practiſer of Magick. But this happen'd long while after. At that time, his coming to Nicomedia was occasion'd by nothing elſe but Julianus's fame, which induc'd him to go thither. Julianus having had a taſte of Philophick Literature from him, began forthwith to imitate his Maſter's Religion, who alſo inſill'd into his mind a deſire of the Empire. When the Emperor was made acquainted with theſe things, Julianus being betwixt hope and fear, became very deſirous of avoiding ſuſpicion; and he who had before been a ſincere Chriſtian, then began to act the Hypocrite. Being therefore ſhav'd to the very ſkin, he pretended to lead a Monafterick life. Privately he employ'd himſelf about the ſtudy of Philophy; but in publick he read the Sacred Writings of the Chriſtians. Moreover, he was made a Reader in the Church of Nicomedia; and by this ſpecious pretext he avoided the Emperor's fury. All this he did out of fear. But [in the interim] he receded not from his hope, but told many of his friends, that thoſe would be happy times, when he ſhould be poſſeſs of the Empire. Whilſt his affairs were in this poſture, his Brother Gallus was created Cæſar, and in his journey into the Eaſt came to Nicomedia, to give him a viſit. Not long after this Gallus was ſlain, immediately upon which the Emperor grew ſuſpicious of Julianus. Wherefore he order'd a guard ſhould be ſet upon him. But as ſoon as he could get an opportunity of ſlipping away from his Keepers, he removed from place to place, and by that means made his eſcape. At length the Emperor's Wife Eufebia, having found him out during his abſconding, perſwades the Emperor to do him no harm, but to allow him a liberty of going to Athen, to ſtudy Philophy. From whence (that I may be brief) the Emperor ſent for him, and created him Cæſar. After which he married him to his Siſter Helena, and ſent him into the Gallies againſt the Barbarians. For the Barbarians (whom the Emperor Conſtantius had a little before hired to be his Auxiliaries againſt Magnum, having been employ'd in no ſervice againſt the Tyrant, ſell to deſtroying the Roman Cities. And in regard Julianus was as yet but young, he order'd him not to enter upon any thing of action without the advice of the Commanders of the Army. Who having receiv'd ſo large a Commiſſion, grew negligent in their management of affairs; upon which account the Barbarians increaſed in ſtrength. Julianus permitted the Commanders to ſpend their time in luxury and drinking; but he made the Soldiers more courageous, by promiſing a ſet reward to him who ſhould kill a Barbarian. This was the original cauſe, whereby both the Barbarians Forces were diminifh'd, and alſo he himſelf was rendred more acceptable to the Soldiers. There is a report, that as he was entering into a Town, a

(e) Crown, with which they [uſually] adorn the Julianus, Cities, being hung up by Ropes between two pillars, fell down upon his head, and fitted it exactly, at which all that were preſent gave a ſhout; for by this ſign [it ſeem'd] to be portended, that he ſhould be Emperor. There are deſers of thoſe who ſay, that Conſtantius therefore ſent him againſt the Barbarians, that he might periſh there, in an engagement with them. But I know not whether they who report this, ſpeak the truth. For ſhould he have fram'd ſuch a deſign againſt him, after he had joynd him in marriage to his own Siſter, it would have been no other than a conſpiracy againſt himſelf. But let every one judge of this matter according to his own pleaſure. Moreover, upon Julianus's making a complaint to the Emperor of the ſlothfulneſs of his Military Officers, there was another Commander ſent to him, exactly agreeable to Julianus's courage. Having got ſuch an aſſiſtant, he made a bold attack upon the Barbarians. They diſpatch'd away an Embaſſador to him, informing him, that they were order'd by the Emperor's Letters to march into the Roman Territories, and the Letters were produced to him. But he clapt their Embaſſador into priſon; and having engag'd their forces, routed them totally. He alſo took the King of the Barbarians priſoner, and ſent him to Conſtantius. Upon this fortunate ſucceſs, he is proclaim'd Emperor by the Soldiers. But becauſe they wanted an Imperial Crown, one of his Guard took the Chain which he wore about his own neck, and put it upon Julianus's head. After this manner therefore Julianus came to be Emperor. But what he did afterwards, let the hearers judge, whether or no they became a Philophoſer: For he neither ſent an Embaſſador to Conſtantius, nor did he ſhew him that reverence which was due to him, as being his Benefactor, but managed all affairs according to his own arbitrement. He chang'd the Governours of Provinces, and reproach'd Conſtantius in every City, by reciting in publick his Letters ſent to the Barbarians. Whereupon [thoſe inhabitants] revolted from Conſtantius, and came over to him. At that time he manifeſtly pull'd off his Mask of Chriſtianity. For he went from City to City, open'd the Heathen Temples, offer'd ſacrifice to idols, and term'd himſelf the * Pontifex Maximus. And ſuch as profeſs'd Gentiliſm celebrated their heatheniſh Feſtivals [after their own manner.] By theſe proceedings of his he (f) takes an occaſion of raiſing a Civil War againſt Conſtantius. And, as far as in him lay, [he took care] that all thoſe Calamities ſhould have happen'd, which are the conſequents of a War. For this Philophoſer's deſire could not have been (g) fulfilled without much blood-ſhed.

Epiphanius Scholaſticus rendred thus; quaſiſt occaſione, he took an occaſion, &c. But there may be another rendition of theſe words, thus: By doing hereof, he raiſed a Civil War againſt Conſtantius, by doing undertaken an expedition againſt him. Valer.

(g) The term ſτασις muſt ſignifie here, to be fulfilled, conſpired, or perſeſs'd, Epiphanius Scholaſticus therefore rendreis it thus: Non enim ſine multo ſanguine ſtudium ejus Philophoſi poterat adimpleri, i. e. for the deſire of this Philophoſer could not have been accompliſh'd without much blood. Muſculus's Verſion (which is, declarari, could not have been declar'd) and alſo Chriſtophorſon's (which is, interſeſſi, could not have been diſcern'd) are in my judgment abſurd. Valer.

But

Julianus. But God the Arbiter of his own Counsels, repressed the * Imperus of one of these two Anta-
 * Or,
 * force,
 * Or,
 * without * the ad- * vantage
 * of * others.
 gonists without any † damage to the Republick.
 For when Julianus arriv'd amongst the Thraci- ans, news was brought him, that Constantius was dead. And thus the Roman Empire at that time escap'd a Civil War. But Julianus having made his entry into Constantinople, began immediately to confider with himself, after what manner he might win the favour of the people, and procure their benevolence towards himself. He makes use therefore of this artifice. He very well understood, that Constantius was odious to all such as embrac'd the Homoousian opinion, both because he had driven them from their Churches, and also in regard he had proscribed and banish'd the Bishops belonging to them.
 He assuredly knew also, that the Heathens were sorely vexed, because they were prohibited sacrificing to their Gods; and that they were very desirous of getting an opportunity, wherein their Temples might be open'd, and they have a liberty of offering sacrifices to their Idols. He was sensible, that for these reasons both those sorts of people had privately ran-cor'd minds against his Predecessor [Constantius.]
 He also found, that all people in general highly resent'd the violence of the Eunuchs, and the rapines (b) of Eusebius

 the principal person of the Bed-chamber to him. He therefore treated them all with a great deal of craft and subtilty. With some he dissembled: Others he obliged by kindneses, being a great affecter of vainglory. But he made it evident to all in general how he was affected towards the superstition [of the Heathen.] And first, that he might make Constan- tius odious for his cruelty towards his Subjects, and render him infamous amongst the Vulgar;
 he commanded that the exiled Bishops should be recalled; and restored to them their Estates which had been confiscated. Then he issued out an Order to his Confidants, that the Heathen-Temples should be forthwith open'd. He also order'd, that such persons as had been injured by the Eunuchs, should be repossessed of their goods which were unjustly taken from them.
 He punish'd Eusebius the principal person of the Imperial Bed-chamber with death, not only because many persons had been wronged by him, but also in regard he was assured, that his Brother Gallus had been murder'd upon account of his calumny [against him.] He took care that Constantius's body should be honour'd with an Imperial funeral. He expelled the Eunuchs, Barbers, and Cooks out of his Palace: The Eunuchs, because he had lost his Wife, after whose death he resolv'd not to marry any other; the Cooks, in regard he fed upon a very slender and mean diet: And the Barbers, because, said he, one is sufficient for a great many. For these reasons he put these sorts of men out [of the Palace.] Most of the Notaries he reduced to their former condition, and order'd that the rest should be allow'd a salary bestowing a No-

(1) Grego- ry Nap-
am, in his former Invective against Julian, does confess also that the publick way, or manner of travelling and conveying of necessaries from place to place, was well rectified by Julian. For Constantius had impaired it much, by allowing the Bishops every-where the use thereof, that they might come to the Synods convened by him. But, what regulations Julianus made in this matter, 'tis hard to determine. And yet we may conjecture from Socrates's words, that the way of travelling by Chariots (which was also called the Curfus Cla- vularis.) was put down by him, and that travelling on Horse-back (upon Horses provided for publick uses) remained only in use. Jo- hannes Lydas has treated at large de publico Curfu, in his Book de Menibus. Valef.

of conveyance of necessaries for [publick] uses. Julianus.
 For example, [the use] of Mules, Oxen, and Asses; and permitted Horses only to serve for such publick conveniences. These Acts of his are commended by some few persons; but most men discommend them, because the grandeur and magnificence of the Imperial riches being lost, which creates an admiration in the minds of the Vulgar, he thereby rendred the dignity of an Emperor despicable, and obnoxious to contempt. Moreover he sat up all night, composing Orations, which he recited at his going into the Senate-house: For he was the first and only Emperor since Julius Caesar's times, that made Speeches in the Senate-house. He had an high esteem for such as were studious about [any part of] Literature; but more especially for those who profess'd Philosophy. Wherefore, the report hereof brought such as were pre-tenders to this sort of Learning from all parts to the Palace, who wore their * Palliums, and were most of them more conspicuous for their Garb, than their Learning. But they were all Bo-* See Eu-
 * sebius's Ec-
 * clesiast. Hist.
 * Book 6.
 troublefome to the Christians, being persons Chap. 19.
 that were Impostors, and who always own'd the same Religion with the Emperor. He himself also was so excessively vain-glorious, that he reviled all his Predecessors in the Empire, in a Book he compos'd, which he entitl'd The Cæsars. The same proud temper of mind excited him to write Books against the Christians also. His expulsion of the Cooks and Barbers was an act [besetting] a Philosopher indeed, but not an Emperor. But in his reproaching and reviling [of others,] he did neither like a Philosopher, nor an Emperor. For both those sorts of persons are to be [of a temper of mind] superior to all detraction and envy. An Emperor may indeed be a Philosopher, in what bears a respect to modesty and temperance:
 But a Philosopher, should he imitate an Emperor in all things, would transgress his Rules.
 Let us much be curiously said concerning the Emperor Julianus, his Extraordinary Education, and Disposition, and after what manner he came to the Empire.

CHAP. II.

Concerning the Sedition which happen'd at Alexandria, and after what manner Georgius was slain.

WE come now to mention what was transacted in the Churches at that time.
 In the great City Alexandria there hapned a disturbance upon this account. There was a place in that City, which had for a long time lain waste and neglected, (being filled with a great deal of filth,) wherein the Heathens had formerly celebrated their Mysteries to || Mithra, || The Per-
 * See Eu-
 * sebius's Ec-
 * clesiast. Hist.
 * Book 6.
 and had sacrificed men: This place being vacant
 * See Eu-
 * sebius's Ec-
 * clesiast. Hist.
 * Book 6.
 to be the Sun to whom they offer many sacrifices. No Person was initiated into the Mysteries hereof, before he had arriv'd to them by certain degrees of torture, and had declared himself holy, and approved by sufferings.

Julianus.

and useless, Constantius had some time before bestow'd upon the Church of the Alexandrians. Georgius, desirous to erect an Oratory therein, gave order that the place should be cleaned. Whilst they were clearing of it, there was an

† That is, A secret place in the Heathen Temples, to which none but their Priests had access.

† Adytum discover'd, of a vast depth, wherein were hid the Mysteries of the Heathens. Which were the Skulls of many Men, young and old, who, as report says, had heretofore been slain, at such time as the Heathens made use of Divinations by the inspection of entrails, and performed Magick sacrifices in order to the enchantment of Mens Souls. The Christians therefore, upon their discovery of these things in the Adytum of the Temple of Mithra, made it their business to expose these Heathenish mysteries to the view and derision of all men. And they began forthwith to carry them in triumph as 'twere about the City, shewing the multitude mens bare Skulls. When the Heathens that were at Alexandria beheld this, being unable to endure this ignominious affront, they became highly enraged: and making use of what came next to hand for a weapon, they fell with great violence upon the Christians, and destroy'd many of them (a) by various sorts of death. Some of them they killed with fwords, others with clubs and stones: Others they strangled with ropes: Some they crucified, inflicting this sort of death on them designedly, in contumely to the Cross [of Christ.] They wounded most of them. At what time, as it usually happens in such [Riots,] they spared not their nearest Friends and Relatives. But one Friend slew another; Brother [murder'd] Brother; Parents their Children, outrageously embreuing their hands in one anothers blood. For which reason the Christians left off cleansing Mithra's Temple: But the Heathens dragg'd Georgius out of the Church, and having bound him to a Camel, tore him to pieces, after which they burnt him, together with the Camel.

C H A P. III.

That the Emperor, incens'd at Georgius's Murder, sharply rebuked the Alexandrians by his Letter.

BUT the Emperor highly resent'd Georgius's murder, and by his Letter severely reprehended the Citizens of Alexandria. There was a report spread abroad, as if they had done this to Georgius, who hated him upon Athanasius's account. But my opinion is, that such as entertain malice and hatred in their minds, do usually put themselves into their company who make insurrections against unjust persons. The Emperor's Letter, 'tis certain, lays the blame upon the Populace, rather than upon the Christians. But Georgius was then, and had before (a) appear'd, troublesome and offensive to all persons. And for this reason the multitude was incens'd against him in such an high degree. But, that the Emperor [as I said] does rather blame the People, you may hear from the Letter it self.

(a) For an account of the reasons of the Alexandrians hatred towards

Georgius, consult Ammianus Marcellinus, Book 22. pag. 223, &c. Edit. Paris 1631. See also Epiphanius, in Heref. 76. to wit, that of the Anomoi. Valef.

EMPEROR CÆSAR JULIANUS, MAXIMUS, AUGUSTUS, to the Citizens of Alexandria.

Although you have no reverence for Alexander the Builder of your City, and (which is more) for that Great God the most holy Serapis; yet how Julianus is it that you have forgot both that Humanity and *Decorum, due to mankind in general? We will *Or, add, [which is due] to Us also, to whom all the Gods, heinous, especially the Great Serapis, have assigned the Empire of the World. For whom it was fit you should have reserved the Cognizance of their case who had injured you. But perhaps, you were impos'd upon by anger and rage, which where it inhabits the mind, does usually perpetrate most enormous facts. (b) But when you had repress'd your fury, you afterwards added the commission of an unjust act to what had on a sudden been advisedly resolv'd by you. Nor were you of the Commonality ashamed of perpetrating those things, for which you deservedly bas'd them. For, declare to Us, [We adjure you] by Serapis, for what unjust acts were you incens'd against Georgius? You will undoubtedly make answer, because he exasperated Constantius, of blessed memory, against us: Also, because he brought (c) He means

(b) In the Florentine and Sforzian M. SS. instead of Δαμασκίου the reading is Δαμασκίου: [wherefore, I doubt not but this whole place is to be thus restored: ὅτι τῶν θεῶν ἀνεκλήσεις, τοῖς τοῖς ἀνέκκλητον, ἀπὸν καλῶν, ὅτι ὅτι τῶν θεῶν τῶν θεῶν ἐκλήσεις] But when you had repress'd your fury, &c. valef.

Artemius, Commander in chief of the Forces in Egypt: as he is styled by Theodoret, (Book 3. Chap. 17. Ecles. Histor.) who relates, that he was deprived of his estate, and beheaded by Julian; because, being Captain of Egypt in the reign of Constantius, he had broken many Images. It was he, who allowed Georgius the guardian of Soldiers for his assistance, whilst he destroyed the heathen Temples in Alexandria. See our notes on Amm. Marcellinus, Book 22. pag. 223. The Martyrdom of this Artemius is extant in Simeon Metaphrasis, in which many things are contended that do much illustrate the History of these times. Valef.

(c) In this Edition of Julianus's works published by Petavius, printed at Paris 1630, (where this Letter of Julianus's to the Alexandrians is reckoned to be the tenth Epistle:) and in Niketas's (Book 10. Chap. 7.) the reading and punctuation of this passage is thus: καὶ τὸν πρῶτον, ὁ πρῶτος ἐκ τῶν πρῶτων, ὁ πρῶτος ἐκ τῶν πρῶτων, ὁ πρῶτος ἐκ τῶν πρῶτων. The best Version of this passage (for no less than four have rendered it into Latin) is Langus's; who has rendered it thus: Qui melius sibi ipse consulerit, nec iam tyrannice ab illo agisset. We have followed the same sense in our Rendition. But Christophorus's Version is reprovable, both for his inserting the word [38. for] contrary to the authority of all Copies; and also, because he excuses Artemius Commander of the Forces in Egypt, as if he had carried him civilly and moderately at the beginning of his Government. It would certainly have been most absurd, should Julian have excus'd him, whom he had ordered to be executed as a Criminal. If any one Version has a mind to follow our Version, 'tis but inserting one Particle only thus: ὅτι &c.

But perhaps, &c. But Petavius (in his notes on this Epistle of Julianus, see the forementioned Edition) has produced another Emendation from some M. SS. Copies; after this manner, ὅτι ὅτι τῶν θεῶν τῶν θεῶν ἐκλήσεις who had preserv'd himself, &c. Valef.

their

their power. Compare therefore this Our Letter (c) with that We sent a while since, and consider the difference between them. How highly did We then commend you? But now, by the [immortal] Gods! When We should praise you, We cannot, by reason of your heinous Offence. The People are so audacious as to tear a Man piece-meal like Dogs. Nor are they afterwards abashed or careful of preserving their Hands pure, that they * may stretch them out undefiled with Blood in the presence of the Gods. But Georgius deserved to undergo these Sufferings. We might perhaps grant, [that he deserved] more horrid and acute Tortures. And should you say, [he deserved them] upon your account, We also assent to that. But should you add, [he deserved to have this inflicted on him] by you; that We can in no wise allow. For you have Laws, which ought to be observed and before the must be regulated by good Laws, and you are to pay obedience to these Laws, and not transgress what has from the beginning been well and prudently constituted. It has happened very fortunately for you, O ye Alexandrians! that you have perpetrated such a Fault as this in Our Reign; Who, by reason of Our Reverence towards God, and upon account of Our (f) Grandfather and Uncle whose name We bear, (who governed Egypt and your City,) do retain a fraternal Affection for you. Certainly, that Power which suffers not it self to be disrespected, and such a Government as is severe, entire, and of an healthy Constitution, (g) could not connive at such an audacious insolence in its Subjects, but would diligently purge out that deadly Dissemper as it were by a more acute Medicine. But We, for the reasons now mentioned, make use of that most mild and gentle Remedy in your Case, [to wit,] Exhortation and Discourse. To which, We are confident, We shall find you more readily submissive, because, (as We are informed) you are not only Grecians by original extract, (h) but do also still retain in your Minds and Endeavours a splendid and generous Character of that your Noble Descent. (i) Let it be published to Our Citizens of Alexandria! He did. Thus wrote the Emperor.

Julianus expressed of Egypt; concerning whom Amm. Marcellinus relates much. In Julianus's Epistles, both readings are retained thus: δὴ τὸν ἀπαύριον & ἐκείνους τὸν δὲ αὐτὸν ἡμεῖς οὐκ ἐκείνους, upon account of our Grandfather and Uncle whose name we bear. But this reading is not to be endured; for, what reason has Julianus to mention his Grandfather here? It seems does confirm Nicephorus's reading, as we may see, Book 5, Chap. 7. Excels. Hist. Valisf.

(d) I doubt not but this place should be thus worded; καὶ οὕτως δὲ διὰ τὴν αἰσχρονομίαν τὴν ἡμετέραν; and we have rendered it accordingly. Valisf.

(e) The reading should doubtless be [ἐκ τῶν πατέρων, &c. but do also still, &c.]

(f) It must be [μετὰ δὲ τὸν πατέρα] Let it be published. We have spoken concerning this clause (which was usually annexed to the Emperors Edicts) in our Annotations on Eusebius, and think it superfluous to repeat it here. Valisf.

CHAP. IV.

How, upon Georgius's being murdered, Athanasius returned to Alexandria, and recovered his own Church.

NOT long after, Athanasius returning from his Exile, was kindly received by the people of Alexandria, who at that time expelled the Arians out of the Churches; and gave Athanasius possession of the Oratories. But the Arians assembled themselves in some obscure and mean Houses, and Ordained Lucius in the place of Georgius. Such was the state of affairs then at Alexandria.

CHAP. V.

Concerning Lucifer, and Eusebius.

AT the same time Lucifer and Eusebius were by an Imperial Order recalled from banishment. Lucifer was Bishop of Caralis, a City of Sardinia; Eusebius of Verelle, which is a City of the Lyguriens in Italy, as we have said before. Both these persons therefore returning from Exile out of the Upper Thebais, (a) held a consult how they might hinder the impaired Laws of the Church from being violated and despised.

who entered into a consult about repairing the decayed state of the Church, and establishing the Canon of Faith; but other Bishops besides them, who by Julianus's Edict were at that time recalled from Exile: to wit, Hilarius, Asterius, and the rest, as Theodoret truly remarks, Book 3. Chap. 4. Excels. Hist. These Prelates, moved thereto by a Zeal to the Catholic Faith, took in hand to reduce Heretics and Schismatics to the path of Truth, and recal them to their former Concord. Therefore, what Baronius says, to wit, that Eusebius and Lucifer were created Legates of the Apostolic See by Liberius, in order to their repairing the state of the Church, can in no wise be true. For the same must have been said concerning Hilarius and the other Prelates. Besides, Rufinus does expressly disprove this. For he relates, that Eusebius and Lucifer were Constituted with this Legatine power by the Alexandrian Synod. Valisf.

CHAP. VI.

How Lucifer arriving at Antioch, Ordained Paulinus.

IT was concluded therefore, that Lucifer should go to Antioch in Syria, and Eusebius to Alexandria; that, by assembling a Synod together with Athanasius, they might confirm the opinions of the Church. (a) Lucifer sent a Deacon as his Substitute, by whom he promised his assent to what should be determined by this Synod. But he himself went to Antioch, and finds that Church in a great disturbance: for the People disagreed amongst themselves. For, not only the Arian Heretic, which had been introduced by Euzoïus, divided the Church: but (as we have said * before) Meletius's followers also, by reason of their affection towards their Master, differed from those who embraced the same sentiments with them. Lucifer therefore, when he had constituted Paulinus Bishop over them, departed from thence again.

treated by Eusebius, that they might go together to see Athanasius at Alexandria, and in a general Consult with those Prelates that were left, determine concerning the state of the Church; refused to be present himself, but sends his Deacon as his Deputy. But from the Synodical Epistle, which Athanasius wrote in the name of the Alexandrian Synod to the Catholic Bishops which were in the City of Antioch, we are informed that Lucifer sent two of his Deacons to the Synod of Alexandria, Herennius and Agapetus; whom he sent after he had Ordained Paulinus Bishop of Antioch. For the Legates of Paulinus himself were present at this Synod, and subscribed Athanasius's Synodical Epistle. For these things were translated thus. Soon after Eusebius's going to the Alexandrian Synod, Lucifer together with the two Bishops Cymatius and Anatolius (the one whereof was Bishop of Peltus, the other of Beroa), created Paulinus Bishop of Antioch. Who, immediately after his Ordination, sent his Legates Maximus and Calamirus to the Alexandrian Synod. Also, Anodimus Bishop of Laodicea (who had a peculiar See), and a Bishop of his own faction, at Antioch sent his Legates at the same time. The Bishops of Egypt therefore who were met at Alexandria, when they had heard that Eusebius, Asterius, and Lucifer's Legates were sent by Lucifer, Cymatius, and Anatolius, and when they had admitted the Legates sent by Paulinus and Apollinaris; departed every one to their own Sees, and gave order to Athanasius and some other Bishops who continued at Alexandria, that they should write a Letter to the Bishops convened at Antioch, concerning receiving the Heretics and Schismatics into communion, how they ought to behave themselves in that affair. In obedience to their Order, Athanasius wrote a Letter to the Bishops convened at Antioch, to wit, to Lucifer, Eusebius, and Asterius, (for these were now returned from the Alexandrian Synod;) Cymatius, and Anatolius. This Letter is extant in Athanasius's works, which Baronius supposed to be the Synodical Epistle of the Alexandrian Synod. But 'tis manifest from the Contents of that Letter, that it was not written from the Synod itself, but from Athanasius; nor was it sent to all the Bishops, but to those of Antioch in particular. Which may be concluded both from the inscription itself, and also from the Text of the whole Letter. For he treats therein concerning the affairs of the Antiochian Church only, as (besides others) we are informed from this passage: Πάντες τῶν τοῦ θεοῦ ἐκκλησιῶν οὐκ ἔχουσιν ἑαλεῖν τὴν ἐν τῇ παλαιᾷ συναγωγῇ, καὶ τὴν ἐν τῇ ἀντιοχείᾳ, ὡς ἐπεὶ αὐτὸν παρ' ἐκείνῃ. Which place Athanasius's Translator has rendered ill: The import of it in English is this; Write therefore to you all those that are desirous of continuing in peace with you, especially those who celebrate their Conventions in the Old City, and such as [come] from the Arians. Athanasius means those that adhered to Meletius Bishop of Antioch. For they, being Separatists from the Eusebians, had their Religious Meetings in the Palaia (that is, in the Old City.) as Theodoret attests, Book 2. Chap. 31. and Book 3. Chap. 4. Eccles. Hist. Athanasius speaks of the same Persons afterwards in the said Epistle; and distinguishing those that had their meetings in the Old City, from the followers of Paulinus, that is, the Eusebians. For Paulinus was one of their number. Those therefore that hid their Assemblies in the Palaia can be no other than Meletius's followers, whom Athanasius does most especially commend. vide.

Julianus.

C H A P. VII.

How Eusebius and Athanasius accorded together, and assembled a Synod of Bishops at Alexandria, wherein they expressly declared, that the Trinity is Consubstantial.

BUT, as soon as Eusebius arrived at Alexandria, he, together with Athanasius, was very diligent about convening a Synod. There assembled Bishops out of several Cities, and conferred amongst themselves concerning many and most weighty matters. In this Synod they asserted the Divinity of the Holy Ghost, and included him in the Consubstantial Trinity. They likewise determined that Christ at his Incarnation assumed not only flesh but Human Soul, which was also the opinion of the primitive Ecclesiasticks. For they introduced not any new Doctrine, invented by them, into the Church, but [confirmed] those points which Ecclesiastick tradition had from the beginning asserted, and which the learnedst persons amongst the Christians had demonstratively affirmed. For such sentiments as these all the Ancients in their Disputations concerning this Point have left us in their Writings. Irenaeus, Clemens, Apollinaris of Hierapolis, and Serapion President of the Church in Antioch, do assert this in the Books by them composed, (a) as an opinion by general consent acknowledged [to wit,] that Christ at his assumption of flesh was endow'd with a [Human] Soul. Moreover, the Synod convened upon (b) Berillus's account, who was Bishop of Philadelphia in Araconfirmed by Euphrasius Scholasticus's Version. Berillus was not Bishop of Philadelphia, as Socrates says here, but of Bostira (or of Bostri) in Arabia: he denied Christ to have been God before his Incarnation, as Eusebius informs us, Book 6. Chap. 33. of his Ecclesiastick History; where see note (c). That passage of Origen's most be understood concerning this Heretic of Berillus, which occurs in his Comment on the Epistle to Titus; where his words are these: sed et eos qui hominem dicunt Dominum Jesum, &c. Also those, who affirm the Lord Jesus to be a Man fore known, and predestined, who before his coming in the flesh had no secular existence of his own, but that being born Man he had the Deity of the Father only in him; these, I say, cannot, without great danger, be accounted members of the Church. This passage occurs also in Pamphilus's Apologétique in defence of Origen. And Gennadius has mentioned it, in his Book De Dogmatibus Ecclesiasticis, Cap. 4. vide.

bia, in their Letter to the said Berillus hath Julianus maintain'd the same Doctrine. Origen also doth acknowledge every where, in his Works which are extant, that Christ at his Incarnation assum'd an Human Soul: but more particularly, in the ninth Tome of his Comments upon Genesis, he has explain'd the mystery hereof; where he hath copiously prov'd, that Adam is a Type of Christ, and Eve of the Church. Holy Pamphilus, and Eusebius who borrow'd his surname from him, persons worthy to be credited, do attest this. For both these persons (who club'd in their drawing up the Life of Origen in writing, and answered such as were prepossess'd with a prejudice against that person, in those famous Books, wherein they made an Apology in defence of him,) do affirm, that Origen was not the first person engaged in this subject, but that he interpreted the mystical Tradition of the Church. But, those Bishops present at the Synod of Alexandria, omitted not their researches into this question, to wit, concerning Ουσία and Υποστάσις. For Hosius Bishop of Corduba in Spain (whom we formerly mention'd) who was sent before by Constantine the Emperor, to compose the disturbance at Ariminum, that time raised by Arius, being desirous to settle, or root out the opinion of || Sabellius the Libyan, Persecutor, raised a dispute concerning Ουσία and Υποστάσις, which was the occasion of another distinction. But the Nicene Synod, which was soon after convened, made not the least mention of this dispute. Notwithstanding, in regard some persons were afterwards desirous of contending about this matter, for that reason these determinations were made in this Synod concerning Ουσία and Υποστάσις. (c) It was resolved by them, that these terms ought not to be used concerning God. For, [they said that] the substance

ed the persons in the sacred Trinity, Arius divided the substance.

(a) The Acts of the Synod of Alexandria are not now extant; but 'tis sufficiently apparent, both from that Synodical Epistle which Athanasius wrote in the name of that Council, and also from hence, because the Great Athanasius was present at that Synod, that what Socrates here says is false. For, as to the Synodical Epistle, there occurs no such passage in that, as this, that the terms Ουσία and Υποστάσις are not to be used as often as we speak concerning God. Nor, would Athanasius ever have suffered that to have been determined in his Synod, which does manifestly contradict the Nicene Creed. For in that Creed the term Ουσία does occur. Socrates seems to have been deceived by this passage in the Synodical Epistle: Πάντες ἡμεῖς τὸν Θεὸν ὡς ἑστίν, &c. And, by the grace of God, all persons, after such interpretations of those terms, unanimously agreed, that that Creed, which the Fathers made profession of at Nice, was better and more accurate, and that in future, it was sufficient, that the terms thereof should be made use of. In which words, the terms Ουσία and Υποστάσις are not condemned: But this only is asserted, that it is more fit to use the terms of the Nicene Creed, than these, of three Υποστάσεις and of one Υποστάσις. For the debate at that time was only concerning these words; some affirming there were three Υποστάσεις in the sacred Trinity, as did the followers of Meletius; Others, with Paulinus, professing there was but one Υποστάσις. But no question was then started concerning the term Ουσία. For both sides asserted that there was one substance in the Trinity. How therefore can it be that which Socrates here says stand good, to wit, that it was decreed in the Alexandrian Synod, that these terms Ουσία and Υποστάσις were not to be used concerning God? Perhaps also Sabellius (whose Collection Socrates had diligently perused) had led him into this mistake. vide.

term

(a) This clause is thus worded in the Greek [αὐτὸν ἀποδοῦν αὐτοῖς] where the term [ἀποδοῦν] ought in my judgment to be expunged, as being unnecessarily inserted here by some careless Transcriber out of the foregoing line, where it occurs. But Nicephorus (Book 10. Chap. 14. where he writes out this passage of Socrates) makes use of the term [ἀποδοῦν], instead of [ἀποκαταστήσας]; either because that was the reading in his Copy; or else in regard he thought [ἀποκαταστήσας] was to be explained. vide.

(b) Nicephorus (at the Book and Chapter now mentioned) calls this person Cyrillus. But, from the authority of the Florentine and Sforzian M. SS. we have termed him Berillus. Our emendation is term Ousia was not so much as mention'd in the sacred Scriptures; and, that the * Apostles, obliged thereto upon a necessity of [delivering some] Opinions, had not rightly used the word Hypostasis. But they decreed, that these terms were to be admitted of upon another account, to wit, when they refuse Sabellius's Opinion, left, for want of expressive words, we should suppose [the Trinity to be] one thing called by a triple name; but we must rather believe every one (d) of those named in the Trinity, to be truly God in his proper person. These were the determinations of the Synod at that time. But nothing hinders, but we may briefly declare our knowledge concerning [the terms] Ousia and Hypostasis. Such persons amongst the Greeks as were Expositors of their Philosophy, have given various definitions of Ousia; but they have not made the least mention of Hypostasis. (e) Irenaeus Grammaticus, in his Alphabetical Lexicon, entitled Attrictes, affirms this word [Hypostasis] to be a barbarous term: for it is not, [says he,] used by any of the Ancients: but should it be any where found occurring, it is not taken in that sense wherein 'tis now used. For, in Sophocles (in [his Tragedy entitled] Phœnix) the term Hypostasis signifies Treachery. In Menander it imports Sauces; (f) as if any one should term the Lees in any Hoghead of Wine Hypostasis. But, you must know, that altho' the ancient Philosophers did not make use of this term Hypostasis, yet the more modern Philosophick Writers used it frequently instead of **Ousia*. Moreover, they have given us (as we said) various definitions of Ousia. But if Ousia may be circumscribed by a definition, how can we properly make use of this term in reference to God, who is incomprehensible? Evagrius, [in his piece intitled] Monachicus, dissuades us from discoursing rashly and inconsiderately concerning God. But he altogether forbids the defining of the Divinity, in regard it is a most simple thing. For definitions, says he, belong to things that are compounded. The same Author delivers these very words. Every one see Dr. Omer's account of this phrase, in his Exposition on the Hebrews, p. 55. See. Edit. London. 1698.

(d) Introd. of [the] Evangelion, of the names, which is the common reading; the Florentine M. S. words it thus [the] Evangelion, of those named; But Nicæphorus maintains the common reading; for he has recorded this passage of Socrates thus: αὐτὸς ὡς καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι τὸν θεὸν τριπλῶς ἐκάλουν. Which his Learned Translator Langus has thus rendered: Sed tribus uisitatibus nominibus, res quæque in Trinitate tripliciter distincta peculiariter substantia sua intelligitur. But I cannot approve of this Rendition, in regard it recedes too far from the Authors words. Langus was puzzled with these Words [the] Evangelion, of the names, and act without reason. For the bare name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, is neither believed, nor ascribed to be God; but the things [or persons] signified by those names. Wherefore, the reading in the Florentine M. S. is, in my judgment, to be preferred before the vulgar reading; and we have rendered it accordingly. Valef.

(e) Irenaeus Grammaticus was an Alexandrian, the Scholar of Helenus Hiericus, who by a Latin name was called Minucius Pacatus. He wrote many Books concerning the propriety of the Antick Language. For he compiled three Books of Antick names, and as many more de Antick consuetudine in ditione & in prosodia, which were alphabetically digested: he composed one Book alē de Antickis, as Suidas relates in his Lexicon. Valef.

(f) Nicæphorus (Book 10. Chap. 15.) reads this passage otherwise. For, instead of [the] Evangelion, as if any one should term] he words it thus [the] Evangelion τὸν θεὸν τριπλῶς ἐκάλουν. And another fills it the Lees in an Hoghead. Epiphanius translates this place thus: Aut Menandrum vero uelut fecit quæ ex uino colliguntur in dolis, uisceræ, id est, substantiam designare dicit. But, I think that there is another sense of these words; to wit, that Menander should term Sauces Hypostasis, because it settles in the bottom of the dill, like Lees, or sediment, in an Hoghead. Valef.

position, says he, has either a Genus which is predicated, or a Species, or a Differentia, or a Proposition, or an Accidents, or what is compounded of these; but none of these can be supposed to be in the Sacred Trinity. Let that therefore which is inexplicable, be adored with silence. Thus [argues] Evagrius, concerning whom we shall speak hereafter. But, altho' we may seem to have made a digression by relating these things; yet we have mention'd them here, in regard they are useful and pertinent to the subject of our History.

C H A P. VIII.

[Some Passages quoted] out of Athanasius's Apologetick, concerning his own Flight.

AT the same time Athanasius recited the Apologetick he had formerly made concerning his own Flight, in the audience of those that were present. Some passages whereof, being useful and profitable, I will here insert, and leave the whole Book, in regard 'tis large, to be enquired out and perused by the studious. Behold [says he] these are the audacious Villanies of those impious wretches. These are their practices, and yet they blush not at the mischiefs they have formerly (a) contrived against us, but do even at this time accuse us, because we were able to escape their murdering hands. Yea rather, they are sorely troubled, because they have not quite dispatched us. In fine, under a pretence and colour they upbraid us with fear, but are ignorant that whilst they make a noise about this, they retort the crime upon themselves. For, if it be bad to fly, it is much worse to pursue. For the one absconds that he may not be murdered: but the other pursues with a design to murder. Yea, the Scripture informs us, that we must fly. But, he that seeks an occasion to murder, violates the Law, and does himself give [others] an occasion of flying. If therefore they upbraid us with our flight, they should rather be ashamed of their own pursuit. Let them leave plotting, and those that fly will soon desist from making their escape. But they cease not from acting their own Villanies; but do all they can to apprehend: being very sensible, that the flight of such as are pursued is a great evidence against them that pursue: For no body flies from a meek and good-natured person, but rather from one that is of a barbarous and malicious disposition. And therefore, * Every one that was discontented and in debt, fled 22. 2. from Saul to David. Wherefore, these persons also endeavour to slay such as conceal themselves, that there may seem to be no evidence to convince them of their wickedness. But in this case also these mistaken persons seem to be blinded. For by how much the more manifest the flight is, by so much will the slauers be caused by their treacheries, and the punishments be more evidently exposed to the view of all men. For, whether they kill, death will make a greater noise against them; or again, whether they banish, they do in every place erect monuments of their own injustice against themselves. send forth. Were they therefore sound as to their Intellectuals, they might perceive themselves intangled herein, and egregiously mistaken in their own measures. But in regard they are infatuated, for that reason they are incited to persecute, and whilst they seek

Julianus to be apprehended before the time came; nor, when the time was come, did he conceal himself: but voluntarily resigned up himself to the Travlers. After the same manner also did the blessed Martyrs consult their own preservation in the Persecutions which now and then hapned. When they were persecuted they fled, and continued in places of concealment: But when found out, they suffer'd Martyrdom. Thus has Athanasius discoursed in his Apologetick concerning his own Flight.

C H A P. IX.

How (after the Synod at Alexandria [made up] of those who asserted the Homoëusian Faith), Eusebius, returning to Antioch, found the Catholics disagreeing there upon account of Paulinus's Ordination; and being unable to bring them to an agreement, he departed from thence.

BUT Eusebius Bishop of Verceilæ, immediately after the Synod, went from Alexandria to Antioch: Where finding Paulinus ordained by Lucifer, and the Populace disagreeing amongst themselves, (for the followers of Meletius had their assemblies apart by themselves:) he was troubled, because all people did not unanimously agree to the Ordination that had been made, and in his own thoughts disapprov'd of what was done. But, by reason of the reverence and respect he bore to Lucifer, he held his peace, and went away, having promised, that he would rectify what had been done, in a Synod of Bishops. Afterwards, he used his utmost diligence to unite the Dissenters, but could not effect it. In the interim, Meletius returned from his Exile. And finding his followers celebrating their assemblies apart by themselves, he headed them. But Euzoïus, a Prelate who embraced the Arian Tenets, was posses'd of the Churches. Paulinus had only one of the lesser Churches within the City, out of which Euzoïus had not ejected him, by reason of the reverential respect he had for him. But Meletius had his meetings without the gates of the City. After this manner therefore did Eusebius depart from Antioch at that time. But when Lucifer understood that his Ordination was not approved by Eusebius, he lookt upon it as an injury, and was highly incensed. Wherefore he separated himself from Eusebius's Communion, and out of a pertinacious Contentiousness, presumed to reprove what had been determined by the Synod. These things being transacted in a time of sadness and discord, caused many persons to separate from the Church. For there sprung up another new Herefie, [the followers whereof were termed] Luciferians. But Lucifer was not in a capacity of satisfying his anger. For he was bound by his own (a) promises, by which

(a) The term here in the original is [ἀπολογία, defence], which is in no wise agreeable here. Therefore, instead thereof, Nicephorus substituted these words [τῶν ἰδίων πλάσας, by his own Nets]. In my judgment, it should be [τὰς ἑαυτοῦ] act, by his own promises; and so Epiphanius read it, as appears by his Version. But Eusebius (Book i. Chap. 30. Eusebius) has this passage only; sed constingatur, &c. But he was bound by the bond of his Legate, who by his authority had subscribed in the Council. Afterwards, Rufinus adds these Words concerning Lucifer, he was receiv'd; Alexandrianæ decreta concilii, &c. But, had he admitted the determinations of the Alexandrian Council, he saw that all his attempts must have been frustrated. But I see no reason why Lucifer should reject the Alexandrian Synod's determinations. For that Synod had approved of Paulinus's Ordination, as I have remark'd before from Athanasius's Synodick Epistle. And whereas Eusebius (subscribed that Epistle, he also may seem to have approved of Lucifer's Ordination of Paulinus. Yet, the same Eusebius coming to Antioch after the Alexandrian Council, and perceiving the disagreement between the

Catholics, would communicate with neither party, as Rufinus asserts in the fore-quoted Book and Chapter: that is, he obtained as well from Paulinus's as Meletius's Communion. Valef.

(being sent by his Deacon) he had engaged Julianus, that he would assent to the Synod's determinations. Wherefore, he retained the Ecclesiastick Faith, and departed into Sardinia to his own See. But such as at first were aggrieved together with him, do hitherto continue Separatists from the Church. Further, Eusebius, like, a good Physician, travelled over the Eastern Provinces, where he perfectly recovered those that were weak in the Faith, teaching and instructing them in the Doctrines of the Church. Departing from thence, he arriv'd in Illyricum and afterwards went into Italy, where he took the same course.

C H A P. X.

Concerning Hilarius Bishop of Poitiers.

BUT Hilarius Bishop of Poitiers (which is a City of the second Aquitania) had prevented him, having before-hand laid the foundations of such points as were agreeable to the Catholic Faith [in the minds] of the Bishops in Italy and Gallia. For he, returning first from banishment, arrived in those Countries before him. Both of them therefore vigorously defended the Faith. But Hilarius, being a person endow'd with a great stock of eloquence, asserted the Homoëusian opinion in Books which he wrote in the Latin tongue: wherein he sufficiently confirmed * that Faith, and powerfully confuted * That is, the Arian Tenets. These things hapned a little after the recalling of those that had been banished. But you must know, that at the same time Macedonius, Eusebius, Eusebius, and Sophronius, (and [the rest of that Sect] who were all called by one general name Macedonians) held frequent (a) Synods in various places. And having called together those who in Seleucia were followers of their opinion, they Anathematized the Prelates of the other party; I mean, the Acacians. They also rejected the Ariminum Creed, and confirmed that which had been recited at Seleucia. Which Creed was the same that had before been set forth at Antioch, according as we have remark'd in our foregoing * Book. And * See Book when by some persons they were asked this * Chap. question: You who are termed Macedonians, 39. if you differ in your sentiments from the Acacians, how comes it to pass, that you have (b) communicated with them (c) until now, as (b) This was with good reason objected against the Macedonians, that whereas they dissent from the Acacians in the Draught of the Creed, and were deposed by them in the Seleucian and Constantinopolitan Synod; yet notwithstanding this, they communicated with them. Basilius, 'tis certain, accuses them upon this account in his 73 Epistle ad Sanctos Monachos. Basilius's words there are to be understood concerning Eusebius and the Macedonians, who blamed Basilius, because he had heretofore communicated with Eudoxius, as 'tis apparent from his 79th Epistle to Eusebius. Valef.

(c) Nicephorus understood this passage of Socrates otherwise; he words it thus: τὴν πρὸς τοὺς τῶν ἀδελφῶν διακρίσιν, ὑπογράψας αὐτοῖς τὸ ἀνέγγραφο ἐκ τῶν καθεστῶτων, i. e. Why do you now dissent from the Acacians, with whom you have heretofore agreed and communicated? Nicephorus therefore seems to have taken these words [ἀλλὰ νῦν αὐτοῖς] for [ἀλλὰ νῦν, hitherto]. But I like not this exposition, and am of opinion, that [κατανοήσας, did communicate] is by Socrates used instead of [κατανοήσας, do communicate].

C H A P. XI.

How the Emperor Julianus exacted Money from the Christians.

Which Basilus does mightily confirm in his fore-quoted Epistle, and Epiphanius (in Hæres. Semiarum.) Where he says, that although the Semiarum were divided into several Factions, yet they differed in words only, but in reality agreed in the same opinion: in so much that it would be very difficult to assign the point wherein they disagreed amongst themselves. But upon a more mature consideration of the matter, I judge Nicephorus's sense of these words to be truer. For Socrates says, that Eusebius, Eustathius, and the rest of the Macedonians did at this time (that is, in the Reign of Julian) first make up a Body of their own Set, and, having convened Synods, did confirm the Creed of the Antiochian Synod, and anathematize Acacius with his Followers: and that when they were questioned by some, why they had communicated with the Acacians (whose Creed they did reject) in long after the Seleucian Synod; they returned this answer by Sophrontius to wit, The Western Prelates erred, in regard they asserted the Homosian Faith; the Easterns, being followers of Acacius' opinion, professed the Son to be unlike the Father; but we keeping the middle way, do affirm the Son to be like the Father according to his substance. This is Sophrontius's answer. Which that it may satisfy the question proposed, this must necessarily be understood, to wit: Since therefore the Acacians entertained the same Sentiments, it need not be wondered at, that we have hitherto held communion with them. Acacius, 'tis certain, did profess the Son to be like the Father, in the same manner as the Macedonians did. See Socrumen, Book 5. Chap. 12. Valef.

Julianus, being of the same opinion with you? To this demand they return'd an answer by Sophrontius Bishop of Popeopolis a City of Paphlagonia, after this manner: The Western Bishops, says he, were infected (as it were with a disease) with the Homosian opinion. Atius in the East, having adulterated [the Doctrine of the Faith] introduced [an opinion, whereby he maintained] a dissimilitude of substance [between the Son and the Father.] Both these opinions were impious. For, the Western Bishops did rustily knit together in one the distinct persons of the Father and Son, binding them together with that Cord of iniquity, the term Homosians. Atius wholly separated that affinity of nature which the Son hath to the Father, by [introducing] this expression, *Unlike according to * Essence*. Since therefore, [the Assertors of] both these opinions fall into the highest extremes of opposition, the middle way between these two alterations seem'd to us to be more agreeable to truth and piety, whereby 'tis affirmed, that the Son is like to the Father according to Substance.

* Or, Substance.

(d) This is the answer which the Macedonians return'd by Sophrontius to that question, as Sabinus says in his Collection of the Acts of Synods. But, whereas they accuse Atius as being the Author of the † Anomoian opinion, and not of the † Acacian, 'tis apparent, they do fallaciously corrupt the truth, thinking to avoid the Arrians on the one side, and the Homosians on the other. For they are confuted by their own words, that through a desire of innovating they have made a separation from them both. But let thus much be said here, out concerning these [persons.]

† See book 2. chap. 20. note (h.)

is obscure enough. But the censure and reprehension of that answer (which Socrates now subjoins,) seems to be much more obscure. Where Nicephorus give us any assistance here; for he has transcribed this passage of Socrates's almost word for word. Notwithstanding, we will endeavour to produce something in order to the illustration of this place. This therefore, our Sentiment. The Macedonians were ask'd, why 'twas, dissented from Acacius, with whom they had before held Communion. In their answer they blamed the Homosians and Atius. This is nothing to the purpose, says Socrates. For you were not questioned concerning Atius, but concerning Acacius: you do merely sophisticate: For Acacius, as well as you, does condemn Atius's opinion. Now, whereas you condemn Atius's opinion; you are not for that reason any whit less Heretics. For by your own words you are convinced of a Novelty or Elevation, whilst you assert the Son to be like the Father according to substance. Wherein you dissent as well from the Catholick followers of the Nicene Creed, (who profess him to be of the same substance with the Father,) as from the Arrians, who asserted him to be a Creature, or dislike in respect of his Substance. 'Tis certain, Theodoret (Book 4. Hæres. Fabul.) does say, that Macedonius asserted the Son of God to be every way like to the Father; and that he was the first who invented the term Homosians. He was therefore one of the Semiarum, as well as Acacius. Valef.

C H A P. XII.

Concerning Maris Bishop of Chalcedon.

Moreover, at this time, Maris Bishop of Chalcedon in Bithynia being led by the hand into the Emperor's presence, (for he was very aged, and had that dissembler in his eyes termed the Pin and Web;) when he came before him, he reproved him sharply, terming him an Impious person, an Apostate, and an Atheist. The Emperor returned him opprobrious language for his reproaches, calling him blind fellow. And your Galilean God (said he) will never cure you. (For Julianus did usually term Christ The Galilean; and Christians Galileans.) But Maris answer'd the Emperor with a greater confidence: I thank God (said he) for depriving me of mine eyes, that I might not behold your face, who have fall'n into such horrid impieties. The Emperor made no return hereto, (b) but was severely revenged on him [after (c) in the wards.] For when he perceived, that those who Flavianus suffer'd Martyrdom in the Reign of Diocletian, and Spiritus were honour'd by the Christians; and having the observ'd that many persons were very desirous of being made Martyrs, as if he resolv'd to be [as Flavianus and Spiritus were] which reading pleases me best. But Julianus was not afterwards in any instance revenged upon Maris in particular, but he persecuted all the Christians in general, with that sort of persecution which Socrates relates. Nicephorus met with the same reading in his Copy: For thus he has express'd this passage in Socrates's ἡρώδης δὲ διὰ τὸ ἐπὶ τῶν παλιγγίων, but he was in a very horrid manner revenged for this thing. Valef.

revenged

• Or, Logic.

Concerning the Tumult raised by the Heathens against the Christians.

(i) Instead of [ἄρα τὰ χρη-ματά, who preferred riches, &c.]
I suppose it should be] ἀς τὰ
χρηματά, in regard they preferred, &c.] Which emendation is confirmed by Epiph. Scholastici's Version; and by Nicephorus's exprelling of this passage, in his tenth Book. Chap. 22. valef.

ror, by an unjust collection of ill-gotten money, was in a short time mightily enrich'd. For that Law was put in execution, not only where the Emperor was present, but in those places also to which he came not. At the same time also the Pagans made incursions upon the professors of Christianity: and there was a great conflux of such as termed themselves Philosophers. Moreover, they constituted certain detestable Rites; in so much that they sacrificed young Children, as well males, as females, inspected their entrails, and tasted of their flesh. And these were their practices, both in other Cities, and also at Athens and Alexandria. At which City likewise they framed calumnious accusation against Athanasius the Bishop, acquainting the Emperor that he would destroy that City and all Egypt, and therefore that it was requisite he should be driven from that City. The (b) Prefect also of Alexandria, according to the Emperor's command, made an attempt against him.

gypt [who in the Greek is called Presēt of Alexandria] was Hermogenes, as we are informed from Julian's 23d Epistle. Filef.

Concerning Athanasius's Flight.

BUT "he fled again, saying these words to his intimate acquaintance; Friends, let us recede a little while; for 'tis a small cloud, which will soon vanish. Having spoken these words, with all possible celerity he went aboard of a ship, and passing over the Nile, fled into Egypt. They who endeavour'd to apprehend him, made a close pursuit after him. When he understood that his pursuers were not far behind, those that accompanied him, persuaded him to fly into the Wilderness again. But by making use of prudent advice, he escaped those that pursued him. For he persuaded his followers to turn back and meet the pursuers, which was done with all possible speed. When therefore they, who a little before fled, approach'd the pursuers (a) the persons who sought [for Athanasius], ask'd his followers nothing [but this,] whether they had seen Athanasius. They gave them notice, that he was not far off, and said, that if they made haste, they would soon apprehend him. Being after this manner imposed upon, they pursued him very hotly, but in vain. Athanasius having made his escape, came privately to Alexandria, and abided there till such time as the persecution ceased. Such were the miseries which befel the Bishop of Alexandria, after his frequent persecutions and troubles, occasion'd partly by the Christians, and partly by the Heathens. Moreover the Presidents of Provinces, supposing the Emperor's superstition to be a fair opportunity of [increasing] their private gain, treated the Christians very ill, beyond [what] the Imperial Order [commission'd] them to do: one while exacting greater sums of money from them than they ought to have done; at other times inflicting on them corporal punishments. These things the Emperor was sensible of, but conniv'd at them. And to the Christians, making their addresses to him upon this account, his answer was, 'Is your duty, when you are afflicted, to bear it patiently: for this is the command of your God.

tion; in whom this word [nothing] occurs not; either because he found it not in his Copy, or else in regard he disliked that expression. Further, this whole story is taken out of Rufinus. Valef.

Julianus.

C H A P. XV.

Concerning those who in the Reign of Julianus suffered Martyrdom at Merus a City of Phrygia.

AT the City Merus, Amacinius President of the Province of Phrygia, gave order for the opening of the Temple there, and commanded it should be cleansed from the filth heaped up therein by length of time, and that the Images in it should be polish'd and trim'd up. This fact did forely trouble the Christians. One Macedonius, Theodulus, and Tatianus, out of their zeal to the Christian Religion, were unable to bear that indignity. But, having acquired a warmth and fervency of affection towards Vertue, they rush'd into the Temple by night, and brake the Images in pieces. The Governour, highly incensed at what was done, resolv'd to destroy many in that City who were guiltless: whereupon the Authors of this fact rendered themselves on their own accord; and chose rather to die themselves in defence of the Truth, than to see others put to death in their stead. The Governour having seized these persons, order'd them to expiate the crime they had committed, by sacrificing. Upon their refusal to do that, he threatened them with punishment: But, being persons endow'd with a great courage of mind, they disregarded his menaces, and shew'd themselves prepared to undergo any sufferings whatever. And chose to die, rather than be polluted by sacrificing. When therefore he had made these Men undergo all manner of tortures, at last he gave order they should be laid on Grid-irons, under which he commanded fire to be put, and so destroyed them. At which time they gave the highest and most heroick demonstration of their fortitude, by these words of theirs to the President: Amacinius, if you desire to eat broyled flesh, turn us on the other side, lest we should seem half broyled to your taste. After this manner these persons ended their lives.

C H A P. XVI.

How (when the Emperor prohibited the Christians from being educated in the Grecian Literature,) the two Apollinaris's betook themselves to writing of Books.

BUT, that Imperial Law, which prohibited the Christians from being educated in the Grecian Literature, made the two * above-mentioned Apollinaris's far more eminent than they had been before. For, whereas both of them were persons well skill'd in Human Learning, the Father in Grammar, the Son in Rhetorick, they shew'd themselves very useful to the Christians at that juncture of time. For, the Father, being an exquisite Grammarian, † compos'd a Grammar agreeable to the form of the Christian Religion: He also turn'd the Books of Moses into that term'd Heroick Verse: and likewise paraphrased upon the Historical Books of the Old Testament; putting them partly into ‡ Daedyllick Verse, and partly reducing them into the form of * Dramatick Tragedy. He [designedly] made use of all sorts of Verse, that no mode of expression [peculiar to] the Grecian Language, might be unknown, or un-heard of amongst the Christians. But the Younger Apollinaris, a person provided with a good stock of eloquence, explain'd the Gospels and Apostolick Writings, by way of Dialogue, as Plato amongst the Grecians [had done.] Having rendered themselves useful after this manner to the Christian Religion, by their own labours, they vanquish'd the Emperor's subtlety. But Divine Providence was more prevalent and powerful, than either these persons industry, or the Emperor's attempt. For that Law quickly became extinct, together with the Emperor [who made it,] as we will manifest in the procedure [of our History.] And these Mens Works are reputed no otherwise, than if they had never been written. But some one will perhaps make this formidable objection against us; How can you affirm these things to have been effected by Divine Providence? For, it is indeed evident, that the Emperor's sudden death proved very advantageous to the Christian Religion. But certainly, the rejecting of the Christian Writings compos'd by the two Apollinaris's, and the Christians beginning again to be cultivated with an education in the Grecian Literature, can in no wise be of advantage to Christianity. For, the Grecian Literature, in regard it asserts * Polytheism, is very pernicious. To this objection we will (according to our ability) make such a return as at present comes into our mind. The Grecian Learning was not admitted of, either by Christ, or his Disciples, as being divinely inspired; nor was wholly rejected, as hurtful. And this, in my opinion, was not inconsiderately done by them. For, many of the Philosophers amongst the Grecians were not far from the knowledge of God. For, [being furnish'd] with a discursive knowledge, they strenuously oppos'd those that denied God's Providence, of which sort were the Epicureans, and other contentious [Cavillers:] and confuted their ignorance. And by these Books they rendered themselves very useful to the Lovers of piety: but they apprehended not the principal Head of Religion, because they were ignorant of the Mystery of Christ, † Which has been hid from generations and ages. And that this is so, the Apostle in his Epistle to the Romans does declare, in these words: * For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness, and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness. Because that which may be known of God, is manifest in them. For God had shew'd it unto them. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world, are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal Power and Godhead, that they may be without excuse: because, that when they knew God, they glorified him not as God. From these words 'tis apparent, that they had the knowledge of the Truth, which God manifested unto them. But they were obnoxious, in regard when they knew God, they glorified him not as God. Whereas, therefore [the Apostles] prohibited not an education in the Grecian Learning, they left it to the choice of such as were desirous of it. Let this be one argument, in answer to the objection made against us. Another is this, The divinely inspired Scriptures do indeed deliver Doctrines that are admirable and truly divine: they do likewise infuse into [the minds of] those that hear them, both an eminent piety, and exact course of life; and also exhibit to persons that are studious a Faith acceptable to God. But they teach not an Art of reasoning, whereby we may be enabled to answer those that resolutely oppose the truth.

Besides,

* Book 2.

† Chap. 46.

‡ Tit.

Ученица

Титъ Хер

статикъ

тѣмъ сущи

тѣмъ, compiled an art of

Grammar

conform to the Christian mode.

* See see

lit. Post.

Book 2.

Chap. 6.

* Or, Tragedy that might be represented

by Actors.

* Or, a multitude of Gods.

† Col. 1.

* Rom. 1.

18, 30.

21.

Julianus concerning the Emperor's displeasure. But, 'tis said, this Sophista wrote these Orations only, and did not recite them in publick. Moreover, the Emperor, relinquishing his resolution of revenging himself upon those Revilers by deeds, discharged his rage by reciprocal Taunts and Scoffs: For he compiled a Book [against them,] which he entitl'd Antiochicus, or Misopug-n, wherein he has left a perpetual brand upon the City of Antioch. Thus much concerning these things. We must now relate what [mischiefs] the Emperor then did to the Christians in Antioch.

C H A P. XVIII.

How, when the Emperor was desirous to consult the Oracle, the Dæmon gave no answer, being afraid of Babylon the Martyr.

FOR, having given order, that the Heathen Temples in Antioch should be opened, he was very desirous of receiving an Oracle from Apollo * Daphneus. But, in regard the Dæmon inhabiting that Temple, feared his Neighbour (I mean (a) Babylus the Martyr,) he gave no answer: For the Coffin lay hard by, wherein was inclosed the Body of that Martyr. When the Emperor understood the reason thereof, he forthwith issued out an order for the immediate translation of the Coffin. The Christians of Antioch understanding this, [flock'd together all of them,] as well Women, as young Children, and carried the Coffin from Daphne into the City with great rejoycings and singing of Psalms. [The contents of] those Psalms were reproachful reflections upon the Heathenish Gods, and upon those who confided in them, and in their Images.

* There was a Grove in the suburbs of Antioch, called Daphne, which was consecrated to Apollo; whence he was termed Apollo Daphneus. Socumen spends a great many words in describing this Grove, at Chap. 12. Book 5. of his Eccles. Histor. (1) He succeeded Zabimus in the Bishoprick of Antioch, says Eusebius, Book 6. Chap. 2. Eccles. Histor. The same Author (Chap. 39. Book 6.) says that he died in prison (but Cyrilostome, Lib. de S. Basil. Tom. 9. pag. 619. tells us he was beheaded,) in Decius's Reign. Where his body was first buried, is not known: but where ver it was, there it rested, till Galus, Julian's brother, built a Church over against the Temple of Apollo Daphneus, (see Socumen, Book 4. Chap. 12.) into which he caused S. Babylus's body to be translated. After this removal of it, mentioned in this Chapter, 'twas intomb'd within the City Antioch, in a Church dedicated to his name and memory.

C H A P. XIX.

Concerning the Emperor's Wrath, and concerning Theodorus the Confessor.

MOREOVER, the Emperor's Genius and Disposition, which he had [hitherto] kept concealed, was at that time clearly discover'd and manifest'd. For he who before profess'd himself to be a Philosopher, could not moderate himself any longer. But being very easily provok'd to anger by those reproachful Hymns, was ready to inflict the same punishments upon the Christians, which Diocletian heretofore laid on them. But in regard his solicitude about the Persian Expedition afforded him not a convenient opportunity of prosecuting this design, he order'd Salustius Prefect of the Pretorium, to apprehend those persons that had been most zealous and busie in singing Psalms, in order to their being punished. The Prefect (altho' as to his Religion he was an Heathen, yet) did not willingly receive that order. But, in regard he could not contradict it, he commands Julianus many of the Christians to be apprehended, and confines some of them to prison. Upon one young man (whose name was Theodorus, whom the Heathens brought before him,) he inflicted Tortures, and various sorts of punishment, ordering that his body should be lacerated all over; and then, when 'twas suppos'd he could live no longer, he releas'd him from his tortures. But God preserv'd this person: for he surviv'd that confession a long time. Rufinus, who wrote an Ecclesiastick History in Latin, * says, that he convers'd with this Theodorus a long while after this, and enquir'd of him, whether, during his being scourged and racked, he felt an acuteness of pain: And that his answer was, that the pain [proceeding] from his tortures was very little: and that there stood by him a certain young man, who both wiped off the sweat caus'd by his agony, and also corroborated his mind, and that he caus'd that space of time wherein he was tortured, to be a delight to him, rather than a conflict. Let thus much be said concerning the admirable Theodorus. At the same time arriv'd Embassadors from the Persians, requesting [the Emperor] to put an end to the War (a) upon certain express Articles and Conditions. But he dismiss'd them, with these words, You shall ere long see Us in person, and so there will be no need of an Embassy.

ginal; which neither Musculus, nor Christophorus understood, as appears from their Versions. Valef.

C H A P. XX.

How the Emperor perswaded the Jews to sacrifice, and concerning the utter Destruction of Jerusalem.

WHILST the Emperor was very desirous to endamage the Christians some other way besides this, he betray'd his own Superstition. For, being much addicted to sacrificing, he not only delighted in the Blood [of Sacrifices] himself, but thought himself wrong'd unless others would do so too. But, in regard he found but few such men as those, he sent for the Jews, and enquir'd of them, upon what account they abstained from sacrificing, when as the Law of Moses enjoy'd it. Upon their answering him, that they could not sacrifice in any other place, but only at Jerusalem, he gave order, that Solomon's Temple, should be forthwith re-edified. [In the interim] he himself proceeds in his Expedition against the Persians. But the Jews (who for a long time had been desirous of getting an opportune time, wherein their Temple might be rebuilt, in order to their offering sacrifice,) were then very industrious about that work. They also shew'd themselves very formidable to the Christians, and their behaviour towards them was proud and insolent, threatening they would do them as much mischief, as they themselves had formerly suffer'd from the Romans. In regard therefore the Emperor had given order, that the charge [of that Structure] should be paid out of his Exchequer, all things were soon provided; [to wit,] Timber, Stone, burnt Brick, Clay, Lime, and all other materials necessary for building. At which time, Cyrillus Bishop of Jerusalem called to mind the Prophecy of Daniel, (which Christ also has confirm'd in the holy Gospels,)

* See Rufinus's Eccles. Hist. Book 4. Chap. 35.

(a) Eusebius's phrase in the Origin.

Julianus. Gospels,) and (a) predicted in the presence of many persons, that that time would come very shortly, wherein one stone should not be left upon another in that Temple, but that our Saviour's prophecy should be fulfilled. These were the Bishop's words: And in the night there hapned a great earthquake, * which tore up the stones of the old foundation of the Temple, and dispersed them all, together with the adjacent edifices. By reason of this accident, the Jews were extremely terrified. And the fame of it brought many persons, who lived at a great distance, to that place. When therefore a numerous multitude were gathered together, there hapned another prodigy. For there came down a fire from Heaven, which consumed all the Builders Tools. You might have seen Malles, Irons to smooth and polish stones with, Saws, Hatchets, Axes; in short, all things the Workmen had, which were to be used about that work, destroy'd by the flames. The fire prey'd upon these things for a whole day together. The Jews, being in the greatest fear imaginable, acknowledged (tho' unwillingly) that Christ was God. But they obey'd not his will, but were prepossess'd with an opinion of their own Religion, and continued firm thereto. For neither did a third Miracle, which hapned afterwards, induce them to a belief of the truth. For, the night following, the impressions of a Cross, which cast forth beams of brightness, appeared printed upon their garments. Which impressions when they saw the next day, they endeavour'd to wash and rub them out, but could not. They were blinded therefore, as the Apostle says, and cast away that good they had in their hands. Thus was the Temple, instead of being rebuilt, at that time totally demolish'd.

C H A P. XXI.

Concerning the Emperor's Inroad into Persia, and concerning his Death.

Moreover, the Emperor made an irruption into Persia, a little before the Spring, being informed that the Persians were a people that were weakest, and of the least courage in the Winter. For, being unable to endure the cold, they abstain from undertaking any military action at that time. But, according to the Proverb, A Mede will not pull so much as his hands from under his Cloak at that time. [On the contrary,] in regard he very well knew, that the Romans were able to endure a Winter Campaign, he pour'd his Army into the Persian Territories. When therefore they had depopulated a large tract of Ground, [laid waste] many Villages, and Garrisons, they then [began] to take Cities. And, having invested the great City Ctesiphon, he reduced the Persian King to such straits, that he dispatcht frequent Embassies to Julian, entreating him that he might be punish'd with the loss of some part of his Country only, provided he would depart out of his Territories, and put an end to the War. But Julianus was not in the least affected in his mind, nor shew'd any compassion towards these suppliants. Neither did he take into his consideration this common saying, to wit, *To conquer is famous, but to * be more than Conqueror, is odious.* But, giving credit to certain Divinations, which Maximus the Philosopher (with whom he conversed continually) suggest'd to him; and imagining that he should not only equal, but exceed the glory of Alexander the Macedonian [for these reasons, I say,] he rejected the humble addresses of the Persians. And he supposed, agreeable to the opinion of Pythagoras and Plato, that by a Transmigration of Souls he was possess'd of Alexander's Soul; or rather, that he himself was Alexander in another Body. This opinion deceived him, and was the cause of his not admitting of the Persian King's humble address at that time. The King of Persia therefore, perceiving his Embassy to be ineffectual, was reduc'd to a necessity [of fighting.] Whereupon, the next day after he had sent his Embassy, he draws out all the Forces he had against the Roman Army, in order to his giving them battel. The Romans did indeed blame the Emperor, in regard he would not avoid an engagement, when as he might have done it with advantage. Nevertheless, they gave the Enemy battel, and routed them again. The Emperor was in the engagement in person, on Horseback, and encourag'd his men: but he had no Armour on, in regard he solely confided in his hope of success. But [on a sudden] a Dart is cast at him from an unknown place, which pierced through his Arm, and entred his Side: (a) of which wound he died, the person that killed him being unknown. For some say, [the Dart] was thrown by a certain Persian who fled: others, [that it was cast] by one of his own men, which is the strongest and most common report. But Callistus (who had this a military employ in this (b) Emperor's Guards, and recorded his Acts in Heroick Verse,) in his Narrative of this War, says, that Julian was wounded by a Daemon, of which he died. This was perhaps a poetical fiction of his; peradventure 'twas really true: For revengeful Furies have destroy'd many persons. But, however that matter was, this is not unknown, that [this Emperor] was a person, by reason of his too great heat and ardency of mind, unwary; because of his learning, vain-glorious; upon account of his counterfeit mildness, obnoxious to contempt. Julianus therefore ended his life in Persia (as we have said in his fourth Consulate, which he bore with Salustius [his Colleague,] about the twenty sixth of June. This was the third year of his Empire, the seventh upon the from his having been created Caesar by Constantius; and the thirty first year of his Age.

his hand with blood, and threw it up into the air, and said, O Gallilean: (c) he termed our Saviour, and the Christians he called Gallileans: Then hast overcome, &c.

(b) The Greek term ἐκκρίτης, signifies in this place Praefectores Domestici, The Emperors Guards; concerning whom we have spoken at large, in our Notes on Book 14. of Ann. Marcellinus, pag. 32. In this sense Socrates uses this term, Book 4. Chap. 1. This is that Callistus (if I mistake not) whom Libanius (Epist. 120. Bo k 4.) calls Callisto, friend to Salustius Praefect of the Praetorium. For Libanius attests there (as well as Socrates does: here) that he was a Poet. Valef.

C H A P. XXII.

Concerning Jovianus's being proclaim'd Emperor.

THE Roman Army, reduced to the greatest streight imaginable, without delay, on the day after, proclaim Jovianus Emperor, a person

Fullanus. famous, but to * be more than Conqueror, is odious. But, giving credit to certain Divinations, which Maximus the Philosopher (with whom he conversed continually) suggest'd to him; and imagining that he should not only equal, but exceed the glory of Alexander the Macedonian [for these reasons, I say,] he rejected the humble addresses of the Persians. And he supposed, agreeable to the opinion of Pythagoras and Plato, that by a Transmigration of Souls he was possess'd of Alexander's Soul; or rather, that he himself was Alexander in another Body. This opinion deceived him, and was the cause of his not admitting of the Persian King's humble address at that time. The King of Persia therefore, perceiving his Embassy to be ineffectual, was reduc'd to a necessity [of fighting.] Whereupon, the next day after he had sent his Embassy, he draws out all the Forces he had against the Roman Army, in order to his giving them battel. The Romans did indeed blame the Emperor, in regard he would not avoid an engagement, when as he might have done it with advantage. Nevertheless, they gave the Enemy battel, and routed them again. The Emperor was in the engagement in person, on Horseback, and encourag'd his men: but he had no Armour on, in regard he solely confided in his hope of success. But [on a sudden] a Dart is cast at him from an unknown place, which pierced through his Arm, and entred his Side: (a) of which wound he died, the person that killed him being unknown. For some say, [the Dart] was thrown by a certain Persian who fled: others, [that it was cast] by one of his own men, which is the strongest and most common report. But Callistus (who had this a military employ in this (b) Emperor's Guards, and recorded his Acts in Heroick Verse,) in his Narrative of this War, says, that Julian was wounded by a Daemon, of which he died. This was perhaps a poetical fiction of his; peradventure 'twas really true: For revengeful Furies have destroy'd many persons. But, however that matter was, this is not unknown, that [this Emperor] was a person, by reason of his too great heat and ardency of mind, unwary; because of his learning, vain-glorious; upon account of his counterfeit mildness, obnoxious to contempt. Julianus therefore ended his life in Persia (as we have said in his fourth Consulate, which he bore with Salustius [his Colleague,] about the twenty sixth of June. This was the third year of his Empire, the seventh upon the from his having been created Caesar by Constantius; and the thirty first year of his Age.

Julianus. son courageous and nobly descended. He being Tribune of the Soldiers, * when Julianus by publishing an Edict, gave the Soldiers their choice, whether they would sacrifice, or leave their Military Employments; chose rather to lay down his Commission, than obey the command of the impious Emperor. But Julianus, necessitated thereto by the imminent War, had continued him in Commission, amongst his chief Commanders. Being at that time elected to the Empire, he refused it. And when he was forcibly drawn forth by the Soldiers, he cried out, saying, that being himself a Christian, he would not reign over men firmly addicted to Genilism. But, after all of them with one voice answer'd, professing that they also were Christians, he accepted of the Empire. Moreover, in regard he was on a sudden left in very great streights † in an Enemy's Country, and his men being destroy'd by a famine, upon terms he put an end to the War. The Conditions were indeed misbecoming the Roman glory; but they were necessary in that conjuncture. For, being punish'd

† Or, in the Country of the Persians.

(a) In the original, the reading is [Zustatous] εὐχόμενος τῆς ἐξουσίας, being punished into the loss of the dominion over the Syrians; which reading is retained in all our copies. Agreeable to which is Eusebius's Historia Ecclesiastica V. lib. 10, who renders it thus: Amissa namque Syria, & tradita Persis Nisibi, for having lost Syria, and surrendered Nisibi to the Persians; And Nicephorus words this passage thus: Καὶ δὲ τὴν αὐτὴν ἀποστάσιν ἡ αἰκία πρὸς τὸν Περσέως, τὴν αὐτὴν ἀρχὴν καὶ τὴν ἐν Μεσοποταμίᾳ νίκην, &c. Moreover, surrendering some places to the Persians, that were tributary to the Romans, I mean the Government of the Syrians, and, Nisibi in Mesopotamia. But, Julianus surrendered not Syria to the Persians. He gave them Nisibi only, and the Countries beyond the Tigris. Wherefore, I doubt not, but instead of [τῆς ἐξουσίας, the Syrians] it should be [τῆς ἀπὸ τῆς ἐξουσίας, the Borders of the Empire; and accordingly we have rendered it. Then which Emendation, there is nothing more certain. Socrates himself confirms it, who speaking concerning this matter a little after, in this Chapter, says thus, ὅτι τὴν αὐτὴν αἰκίαν ἀπὸ τῆς ἀπὸ τῆς ἀρκεσέως, and ascribed the disgrace of the loss of the Borders to him. Valef.

(b) Between these two words [encouraged] and [death], there was wanting in the printed Copies of Socrates this whole line [ἵνα δὲ τὸν Σπυριδωνὸν ἐκδικῶν, τὴν αὐτὴν αἰκίαν τὴν ἑαυτοῦ, But the Pagans bewail'd Julianus's death] which we have inferred from the Florent. and Sforzian M. SS. Further, from this very one place 'tis evident, that Christophorus made use of no M. S. Copies, in his translation of Socrates. Valef.

which make the Man of Palestine God, and the Son Julianus of God; and by a long dispute and validity of Arguments he evinced, that those [Records] revered and honoured [by the Christians] are ridiculous and meer trifles: having in this matter demonstrated himself to be more skilful and wiser, than the * Tyrian Old Man. But, may that Tyrian be propitious to me, and not be disgusted at what rim is said, (a) in regard he was out-done by his Son! (a) in the Florent.

and Sforzian M. SS. the reading is [ἵνα δὲ τὸν Σπυριδωνὸν ἐκδικῶν, in regard he was out-done by his Son.] But in Libanius's Oration, which I have read in Manuscript, it is thus worded [ἵνα δὲ τὴν αὐτὴν ἀποστάσιν,] which reading pleases me best. This Funeral Oration of Libanius's concerning the praises of Julian the Emperor, is published indeed by Morletus, in the Second Tome of the said Libanius's works; but very corruptly. For, two parts in four of it are transposed; and besides, there are some pages of it wanting. We have some time since found out the transposition of this Oration; and made up its defects from Johannes Alsinus's Manuscript; in which Copy this passage is extant, which Socrates does here quote. Valef.

These are Libanius's the Sophista's words. I am indeed of opinion, that he was a most incomparable Sophista: but, I am confident, had he not entertained the same sentiments with the Emperor, as to Religion, he would have spoken against him all that hath been said by Christians, and (as 'tis very likely,) being a Sophista, would have enlarged upon that subject. For, whilst Constantius was living, he wrote * Encomiums upon him; but after his death, he loaded him with reproaches and abusive accusations. Wherefore, had Porphyrius been an Emperor, he had undoubtedly prefer'd his Books before Julian's: and, had Julianus been a Sophista, he would have termed him an ill Sophista, as he does Eusebius, in his Epitaph upon Julian. Since therefore he, as being of the same Religion with the Emperor, as a Sophista, and as the Emperor's Friend, has related what he thought good; we, according to our ability, will answer what he has written. In the first place therefore, he says, that the Emperor undertook those Books, when Winter had lengthen'd the Nights. This term, to undertake, or attempt, imports, that he made it wholly his business to write a discommendation, as the Sophista usually do, when they instruct young Men in the rudiments of their Art. For he had been acquainted with those Books long before, but then he made his attempts against them. And, having spent a great deal of time in a tedious contest, he did not [oppose them] (as Libanius says) with solid arguments; but for want of truth betook himself to Jest and Drollery, (whereof he was a great admirer,) by which means he derided what is firmly established in those Books. For, whosoever undertakes a contest against another, does usually belie him against him whom he manages the dispute; one while by perverting the truth, at another by concealing it. And he that has a Pique against another, as an adversary endeavours, not only to act, but to speak against him in all things; and delights to turn'the * faults that are in himself, upon him: with whom he is at variance. That Julianus and Porphyrius (whom Libanius calls the Tyrian Old Man) did both of them take great delight in scoffing, is evident from their own Books. For Porphyrius, in the Books he wrote concerning Philosophick History, has made the Life of Socrates a ridicule, who was the eminentest of the Philosophers: and has left such passages upon record concerning him, as neither Melitus, nor Annytus, Socrates's Accusers, would have attempted to say. Concerning Socrates,

* The ill.

C H A P. XXIII.

A Confutation of what Libanius the Sophista has said concerning Julianus.

THE Winter (says he) having lengthened the Nights, the Emperor undertook those Books,

Gravianus. crates, I say a person admired amongst the Grecians, for his Modesty, Justice, and other Virtues. Whom Plato the most admirable Philosopher among them, Xenophon, and the whole † Ors. Quic. † company of Philosophers, not only honour as a person beloved by God, but also repute him to have been endow'd with a wisdom more than human. And Julianus, imitating his * Porphy. rian. * Father, has discover'd the distemper of his own mind in [the Book he entitl'd] The Caesars, wherein he has discommended all the Emperors his Predecessors, not sparing even Marcus the Philosopher. That both of them therefore took great delight in scoffs and taunts, their own writings do sufficiently declare. Nor need I many or solid arguments, but this is sufficient to represent the

(b) After these words this line [ἵνα μὴ αὐτὸν ἐν αἰσῶσι] was wanting in the Printed Copies;
which I inferred from the Sforzian
M.S. Volsf.

of them. But, what Gregorius Nazianzenus has said concerning Fulianus, you may hear [delivered] in his own words. For, in his second Oration against the Gentiles, he says thus: Experience, and his assuming the Imperial Dignity and Authority, evidenced these things to others. But to me they were in a manner apparently manifest long before, at such time as I was conversant with him at Athens. For he came thither immediately after the Innovations attempted by his † Brother, having requested this of the Emperor. The design of this his journey was two-fold; and the one was more honourable, [namely,] to see Greece, and the Schools there: The other was kept secret, known but to a very few, [to wit,] that he might consult with the Sacrificers and Impostors there concerning his own affairs: For his Impiety was not yet in possession of confidence and liberty. At that time therefore, † I will remember, I was no bad Diviner concerning this person, although I pretend not to be one of their number who are well versed in the knowledge and use of these Preditions. But, the unexamined and inconstancy of his Disposition, and the incredible Extravagancy of his Mind, made me a Prophet, if he be the best Prophet, who gives the truest conjecture. For, 'twas my opinion, that no good could be portended by an insatiable Neck; by Soldiers which some-learned Order. - What need I give a particular description of every thing? Before his Actions I said he would be the same that I have since found him to be by his Actions. And, were some of those persons here, who were then present and heard me, they would be easily induced to attest this. To whom when I saw these things. I forthwith shoke the words, How great a mischief to it self does the <sup>Jovianus.</sup> Roman Empire breed up! When I had utter'd these words, I pray'd to God, that I might be a false Prophet: For that was better, than that the World should be filled with such horrid mischiefs, and that such a Monster should appear, the like to which had never been seen before; although many Deluges are recorded; many Devastations by Fire; many Earthquakes and * Chasms; (d) and moreover- many monstrous and inhuman Men; and Beasts that were prodigious and compounded of several kinds, of which Nature produced new forms. Upon this account be ended his life in a manner answerable to his madness.

[illegible]

* Or, opening of the earth.
(d) This passage is so. hr good from Gregorius Nazianzenus, thus: "Εἰς τὴν ἐκείνου ἀπαύραπον ἐξ ἀνείων ἀπολαύσαντες ἐξ οὐρανίου, ὅν ἡ οὐσία ἐκκλυστὸς ἦσθαι, and we have rendred it accordingly. Vale." made

This Character Gregorius has given us concerning Julianus. Moreover, that in those many Books (in the compiling whereof they employ'd themselves,) they have attempted to violate the truth, by perverting some passages of the sacred Scriptures, by making inferences in other some, and by explaining all things

(c) Many of the Ancients have been taken to refute Periphrasis and Julianus; Books against the Chriftians, Methodius, Eusebius, and Apollinaris wrote Books against Periphrasis. Cyrillus wrote against Julian; which Books of Cyrillus are the extant, but Cyrillus is not a genuine Nileus.

(f) In what Books Origen has explained such passages in sacred Writ as might trouble the Readers, and has confuted the fallacious arguments brought against the Christian Religion; 'tis hard to assert. For, in his Books against Celsus, he has in no wife done this. Nor, was it his design in that work, to explain those passages in the sacred Scripture, which had any difficulty in them, but only to answer Celsus's objections. Perhaps, Socrates does mean Origen's epigrams. For in those Books Origen shew'd the congruity of the Opinions of our Religion with those of the Philosophers: as Jerom informs us in his Epistle to Magnus the Orator. In order to his effecting of this, 'twas requisite for Origen to expound those places of Scripture, where some of the contradictions the sentiments of the Philosophers, Pufes.

phemy. That the Emperor made it his business to cavil in his discourses before ignorant and the simpler sort of men, nor in their presence who retain a representation of the truth taken from the sacred Scriptures; is evident from hence: For, having pick'd out as many expressions as upon account of necessity are by way of dispensation used concerning God in a more human manner, and put them and many such like phrases altogether; at length he subjoyns these very words; Every one of these expressions therefore (unless the phrase contains in it some secret and occult sense and meaning, which I suppose), is swift with a deal of blasphemy against God. Thus much he has said in express words, in his third Book against the Christians. And in that Book of his, to which he gave this title (g) Concerning the Cynick Psephology, declaring after what manner sacred Fables gainst Heracles the Cynick; the title whereof is, πρὸς κυνιστὴν, τὴν ὁδὸν τοῦ ζῆναι ὡς κυνικῶς. For, in the 403 pag. of that Book, the passage here quoted occurs. Ettes.

ought

For Nature loves concealment; and the hidden substance of the Gods cannot endure to be thrown into polluted ears in bare and naked words. From these words 'tis apparent, that the Emperor had this sentiment concerning the Divine Scriptures, [to wit,] that they were mystical Discourses, containing in them an abstruse sense and meaning. Moreover, he is very angry, because all men don't entertain the same opinion concerning them; and inveighs against those persons amongst the Christians, who take the sacred Oracles in their plain and obvious sense. But, it was not decent to rail in such manner against the Simplicity of the Vulgar, nor upon their account to use such influence towards the sacred Scriptures: nor yet,

(h) In the Sforzian M. S. the reading here is τὰ καλῶς αὐτῶν τοῦ σώματος. But I am better pleased with my former conjecture, which was to read it thus, τὰ καλῶς ἀνὰ τὸ σῶμα, those things which are rightly understood by others. Although, the reading may be barely thus τὰ καλῶς σῶμα, those things which are rightly understood. For the word [αὐτῶν] crept in hither, from the following line. Vales.

(i) Ἀπελθὼν in the Florentine M. v. the reading is ἐλθὼν, he deserted. Nicephorus (Book 10. Chap. 36. Ecclef. Hist.) words it thus, ἔξδουνται, abjured. Valef.

had beaten him, he fell to writing blasphemous Books against the Christians; as Eusebius Pamphilus has manifestly made it out against him, who has clearly confuted his Books. But the Emperor, having uttered disdainful expressions against the Christians in the presence of unthinking persons, through the same distemper of mind fell into Porphyry's Blasphemy. Since therefore both these Persons voluntarily [deserted the Church and] brake out into impiety, they are punish'd by the very knowledge and consciousness of their own Crime. Further, whereas Libanius the Sophist in derision to the Christians does say, that they make a Man of Palestine, God and the Son of God; in my opinion he seems to have forgot, that he himself has deified Julianus at the close of his Oration. For they almost flourish'd to death (says he) the first messenger of his death, as if he had belyed the God. Then, a little afterwards he adds these words; O thou Darling (says he) of the Demons, Thou Disciple of the Demons, Thou Assessor with the Demons! Altho' Libanius himself understood this otherwise; yet, in regard he avoided not the ambiguity of the term [Demons], which is [sometimes] taken in an ill sense, he seems to have said the same which the Christians usually do in their reproaches. Wherefore, had it been his design to have commended the Emperor, he ought to have shunn'd an ambiguous term; as he did avoid another word; for which being reproacht, he afterwards raz'd it out of his Orations. Moreover, how Man in Christ may be said to be God, and how he was apparently Man but invisibly God; and after what manner both these assertions are infallibly true, the Divine Books of the Christians do evidently shew. But the Heathens, before they believe, cannot understand. For 'tis the Oracle of God which saith, that

* If you will not believe, surely you shall not understand. Jovianus.
Wherefore, they are not ashamed to deify many men; and I wish at least they had been men good as to their morals, just, and sober; and not rather impure, unjust, and persons addicted to drunkenness: I mean, the Hercules's, Bacchus's, and Aesculapius's, by whom Libanius blushes not to swear frequently in his Orations. Whose Sodomies and Adulteries should I give a particular account of, my discourse thereof would be long and a tedious digression. Those that are desirous of information about these things, will find a satisfactory account thereof in (k) Aristotle's (k) Concerning Peplum, (l) Dionysius's Corona, (m) Rheginus's Polymnemon, and in the crowd of the Poets; who by writing concerning these things, do demonstrate to all men, that the Heathen Theology is trifling and ridiculous. Further, that 'tis the peculiar practice of the Heathens, and a thing usual amongst them, with great readiness to deify men; 'twill be sufficient to advertise you by a few instances. To the Rhodians (who consulted the Oracle upon their being fallen into a calamitous distress, an answer was given, that they should worship Attis the Phrygian, an Heathen Priest who instituted mad Ceremonies in Phrygia. The Contents of the Oracle are these.

(M) Suidas relates, that Rheginus Grammaticus wrote a Book with this title, Polymnemon. Valef.

Appease (n) Attis, the Great God, chaste Adonis, (n) That
The Donor of a prosperous Life, and Happiness, Attis is
The beautifully-hair'd Bacchus. the same with Bacchus, Cleonus Alexandrinus also does inform us (In his Persuasion) in these words

 ἡ δὲ Ἀττίς ἐκ ἀνδρῶν τῶν εὐφροσύνης καὶ γέλαστος ὅτι μὴ παύσασθαι τοὺς αἰετοὺς ἀπὸ τῆς πόλεως some will have Attis, deprived of his Genitalia, no fully termed Bacchus.
Demeffenus, in his Oracion pro Coroneā: ὁ βασιλεὺς καὶ μέγας ἱεροποιεῖται· οὗτος ἔστιν, ἢ. καὶ φησιν Εὐδοκίμους [there were] the usual Acclamations of those celebrating Bacchus' Feast) and triumphing in words, Hues Attis. Which words of Demeffenus's Harporation supposed were meant of Attis the Phrygian But some of the Antients, read not in that place of Demeffenus, Attis, but Ates, which is an additional name to Bacchus, as is also Vine. See the Author of the Etymologicum in the term Vin and Ergo Vitis.

The Oracle calls Attis (who by reason of his Love-madness castrated himself,) Adonis, and Bacchus. And when Alexander King of the Macedonians passed over into Asia, the Amphityones made him presents, and Pythia uttered this Oracle.

Adore the Supreme God Jove,
And Minerva Tritogenia,
The King concealed in a mortal Body,
Whom Jove has begotten (o) of a race ineffable, (o) Inited Mortals Defender of Equity, King Alexander, of [dear voice, of a race most incomparably the best] the reading (is the rule of Verse require,) should be ἀφύπνιστος γενεᾷ, of a Race ineffible.] Vale!

These are the words of the Oracle which the Dæmon utter'd at Delpbes : He himself, when he would flatter Potentates, deified them. And this was perhaps done merely out of flattery. But, what shall we say concerning Cleomedes the Champion, whom they have made a God, and utter'd this Oracle concerning him.

The last of the Heroes, Cleomedes Astipalaus.
Him worship with Sacrifices, as being no longer a Mortal.

Upon

Jovianus. Upon account of this Oracle, Diogenes the Cynick, and (p) Oenomaus the Philosopher condemned Apollo Pythius. The Inhabitants of Cyzicum have declared Adrianus to be the thirteenth God. And Adrianus himself has deified Antinous his own * Catamite. These things Libanus does not term ridiculous, and meer trifles; although he very well knew these Oracles, and that single Book, which (q) Adrian wrote concerning the Life of Alexander.
(r) Nor is he himself ashamed to deify Porphyrus: For his words are these, May the Tyrian be propitious to me, whose Books he preferred before the Emperor's. Let thus much suffice to have been said by us by way of Digression, upon account of the Sophista's scoffing and reproaches. I thought fit to omit the rest, which requires a particular Treatise. We must now subjoyn the remaining part of our History.

(s) Nor is he himself ashamed to deify Porphyrus: For his words are these, May the Tyrian be propitious to me, whose Books he preferred before the Emperor's. Let thus much suffice to have been said by us by way of Digression, upon account of the Sophista's scoffing and reproaches. I thought fit to omit the rest, which requires a particular Treatise. We must now subjoyn the remaining part of our History.

(t) Before these words I placed a full-point, following herein Nicæphorus's authority. Moreover, the reading should be [Adrianus non erat, nor is he himself ashamed.] Valef.

C H A P. XXIV.

That the Bishops flock'd from all places to Jovianus, every one of them hoping they should induce him to embrace their own Creed.

AFTER Jovianus's return out of Persia, the Ecclesiastick Commotions were again renew'd. For the Prelates of the Churches made it their business to prevent one another, each of them expecting, that the Emperor would give his assent to their Creed. But he had from the beginning adhered to the Homousian Faith; and openly declared, that he preferr'd that Creed before all others. And by his Letters he encourages Athanasius Bishop of Alexandria, who immediately after Julianus's death, had recover'd the Alexandrian Church. But, being then made more confident and courageous by the Emperor's Letters, he was freed from fear on all hands. The Emperor likewise recalled those Bishops, who had been banished by Constantinus, and had not procured their own revocation by Julianus. Moreover, all the Heathen Temples were then shut up. And [the Dæmon Priests] themselves absconded, some in one place, some in another. The * Philosophers also laid aside their Palliums, and clothed themselves in the common and ordinary habit. Likewise, that (a) publick pollution caused by the blood [of sacrifices,] which they had celebrated in Julianus's Reign, and even to loathsomeness, was then taken away.

(b) Jovianus, after the undertaking whereof, the Pagans believed they were eternally regenerated; as the old inscriptions inform us. This whole Ceremony is incomparably well described at large by Prudentius, in the passion of Remigius the Martyr; pag. 255, &c. Edit. Basil. It was in short thus: The Priest to be Consecrated, being habited in his sacerdotal Vestiments, (adorned with a Crown of Gold, and swags about with a silex Gown), was put into a deep Pit dug into the earth. Over this Pit an Altar made of Planks was erected, through which many holes were bored. Upon this Altar a great Bull was laid, adorned with Garlands; and his horns were gilded; his breast they divided with a consecrated Weapon. A stream of reeking blood gushing immediately out of the large wounds, flowed upon the boarded Altar, and running through the holes made therein, rained down upon the Priest inclosed under the boards; who catcht the shower of gore by putting his head under the falling drops; wherewith he besmeared his garments, and his whole body. See Prudentius, ut supra.

Jovianus.

C H A P. XXV.

That the Macedonians and Acacians, meeting together at Antioch, confirm'd the Nicene Creed.

BUT the affairs of the Christians were in no wife in a sedate posture. For the principal Heads of every Party made their (a) addressees to the Emperor, supposing they should obtain from him power and authority against those by them reputed to be their adversaries. And in the first place, those termed Macedonians present a Libel to him, requesting, that they who asserted the Son to be unlike the Father, might be ejected out of the Churches, and themselves put into their places. The persons who presented this Supplicatory Libel, were Basilius [Bishop of Ancyra, Silvanus of Tarus, Sophronius of Pompeciopolis, Papinios of (b) Zela, Leontius of Comani, Callistratus of Claudiopolis, and Theophilus of Castabali. The Emperor having received their Libel, sent them away without an answer. He expresseth himself only thus to them: I abominate (said he) Contention; But I love and honour those that are * desirous of Unity and Concord. When these expressions were divulged in the hearing of the other parties, they mollified the stiffness of those who were desirous of contention. And this fell out agreeable to the Emperor's intent and design. Moreover, the contentious disposition of the Acacians was then also clearly manifested, and they evidently demonstrated their continual usage of complying with their sentiments who were vested with the supream power. For, meeting together at Antioch in Syria, they entered into discourse with Melitus; who having separated from them a little before, had embraced the Homousian Opinion. And this they did, in regard they saw Melitus was highly esteem'd by the Emperor, who then resided at Antioch. Having therefore made a profession of the Homousian Opinion, and confirmed the Nicene Creed, by a general consent they drew up a Libel, which they presented to the Emperor. The Contents whereof are these.

To the most Pious and most Dear to God, our Lord JOVIANUS VICTOR AUGUSTUS, The SYNOD of Bishops present at ANTIOCH, assembled out of divers Provinces.

Even we our selves are fully satisfied, most Pious Emperor, that your Piety has in the first place studied to assert and constitute the Peace and Unity of the Church. Nor are we insensible, that You have rightly judged a Draught of the true and Orthodox Faith to be the Head and Fountain of this Unity. Wherefore, that we may not be reputed

D d of

Jovianus, of their number who adulterate the Doctrine of truth, we declare to Your Piety, that we do embrace and firmly adhere to the Creed of the Holy Synod heretofore convened at Nicæa. Especially, since that term therein, which to some seems (c) new and unusual, (we mean the term Homōousios), has with caution been explained by the Fathers; so, as to denote, that the Son was begotten of the Father's substance, and that he is like the Father as to his Substance. Not, as if any Passion were to be understood in relation to that inexplicable Generation: Nor, as the term Ousia taken by the Fathers according to any usual signification of it amongst the Grecians; but, [his made use of] in order to the subversion of what has been impiously and audaciously asserted by Arius concerning Christ, [to wit,] that he existed of things which are followed. Which [Tenet] the Anomæans, who are newly sprung up, do with a far greater boldness and audaciousness impudently assert, to the utter ruin and sfor. of Ecclesiastick Unity. Wherefore, we have anxi-ously succed to this our Declaration a Copy of that Creed set forth by the Bishops convened at Nicæa, which we also embrace. It is this, We believe in one God the Father Almighty, and (d) all the rest of the Creed.

Scholasticus meet with it in his Copy, as 'tis apparent from his Version. For thus he renders it, Quando etiam Constantianis nomen, quod aliter se quibusdam habere videtur, dictum causam interpretationem a patribus excepisse. Valef.

(d) We remarked before [Socrat. Book 1. Chap. 2. Note (d)] that the term μὴ ὁμοῦς, is by the Greeks used to signify the Creed, because 'twas commonly learnt by heart. But, the word μὴ ὁμοῦς is useless here. In my judgment, it would be placed better after these words [ἵνα ὁμοῦς], thus ἵνα ὁμοῦς ὁμοῦς. It is this in full. Valef.

* Here follow the [this Libell,] and do give my consent to what is names of above-written. [And so do I] Eusebius of Samosata, Evagrius of (e) Sicili, Uranius of Aphrodisias, Zoilus of Larissa, Acacius of Caesarea, Antipater of Rhodus, Abramius of Urim, Aristodemus of Seleucia upon Belus, (f) Barlaam of this Li. Pergamus, Uranius of Melitina, Magnus of Chalcedon, Eurychius of Eleutheropolis, (g) I-Sorian facoes of Armenia the Great, Titus of Bostra, M. S. it is Petrus of (h) Sippi, Pelagius of Laodicea, (i) A-it is [εὐκαλῶν Sicili], which reading is truer than [αἰκαλῶν, Sicili]. It is the name of a City Situate in the East, concerning which I have yet met with nothing. Amongst the Bishops of the Acaian party who subscribed the Seleucian Synod, Evagrius of Antiochene, of the Province of the Island, is recounted. Valef.

(f) This is neither a Greek, nor a Latine name. In the Tripartite History it is Barlaamius. Valef.

(g) Epiphanius Scholasticus terms him Iscariot. He seems to be the same person with him that is called Iscariot in Basilus's 69 Epistle, which is the Synodick Epistle of the Antiochian Council under Meletius. He is recounted between Cosmas and Narses. Valef.

(h) Upon my warrant, make it Sippi. This Petrus was Bishop of Sippi, a Province of Palestine. He subscribed the Seleucian Synod, together with the others of the Acaian party here recounted, to wit, Zoilus of Larissa, Eurychianus of Eleutheropolis; as you may read in Epiphanius, in Euseb. Semiarian. Sippi was a Town in Palestine, thirty stadia's distant from Tiberias; Josephus mentions it in his own Life. Valef.

(i) In Epiphanius Scholasticus's Version he is called Arabiannus Adrensi, very right. For this is the Arabians, or Arabim, Bishop of Adra, who subscribed the Seleucian Synod, amongst the Bishops of the Acaian party, as Epiphanius relates in Euseb. Semiarian. Where he is placed after Exerefius Bishop of Gerafi, and next before Charifus Bishop of Aegius. Adra or Arabion, is a City of Arabia, under the Bishoprick of Bostra, as Guillelmus Tyrinus informs us. 'Tis certain, Uranius Bishop of Adra is reckoned amongst the Bishops of the Province of Arabia in the first Constantinopolitan-Synod. But, in the fifth Constantinopolitan-Synod, one Dorymenius is counted Bishop of Adra. Valef.

Arabiannus of Antros, Pifo of Adani, by (k) Lamy-Jovianus, drion the Presbyter, Sabinianus of Zeugma, Archana-nasius of Ancyra, by Orphitus and Aëtius Presby-(k) should ters, (l) Irenius of Gaza, Pifo of Augusta, Patri-cius of Paltus, by Lamyron the Presbyter, Ana-tolius of Bercea, Theotimus of Arabi, Lucianus of Arcenus. We found this Libel recorded in the ludicus; for 'tis a name formed ἀπό τοῦ λαοῦς, which signifies Tal-lative. A little after this, instead of Aëtius, the said Epiphanius reads Aëtius; and so I found it written in the Florentine M. S. Valef.

(l) This Person is mentioned by Marcus the Deacon, in his Life of Euphryus Bishop of Gaqa, which you have in Surius. Valef.

work of Sabinius's, entitled A Collection of Synodick Acts. Moreover, the Emperor had taken this resolution with himself, that by kind words and persuasives he would extirpate the Contentiousness of the disagreeing Parties; and he declared that he would not create trouble to any person of what belief soever he were of: but that he would love and highly value such as should be the principal promoters of the Churches unity. That these things were after this manner done by him, Themistius the Philosopher does also attest. For in the Oration he composed upon his Consulship, he admires the Emperor, (m) for his allowing every person a free liberty of worshipping the Deity in such a manner as he desired; whereby he repress'd the humours of Flatterers. Upon whom he made very facetious reflections, saying, 'tis experimentally known, that they worship the Purple, not God; and that such persons differ not from the Eurypus, which sometimes throws its waves this way, at others the quite contrary.

C H A P. XXVI.

Concerning the Death of the Emperor Jovianus.

AFTER this manner did the Emperor at that time repress their fury, who made it their business to cavil and contend. Departing immediately from Antioch, he went to Tarsus in Cilicia, where he buried Julianus's Body. Having perform'd all the Solemnities of his Funeral, he is declared Consul. Designing to go directly from thence to Constantinople, he arriv'd at a place, the name whereof is Dadastrana; it is situate in the Frontiers of Galatia and Bithynia. There Themistius the Philosopher (with others of the Senatorian Order,) met him, and recited his Consular Oration before him, which he afterwards spoke in the presence of the people at Constantinople. Indeed, as well the Civil, as Ecclesiastick affairs of the Roman Empire, being blest with so good an Emperor, would have been managed fortunately and successfully; had not a sudden death ravish'd so eminent a Personage from the Publick. For, being seiz'd with a Distemper, [term'd] an Obstruction, in Winter time he ended his life at the foremention'd place, in his own and his Son Varrianus's Consulship, upon the seventeenth of February. Having reign'd seven months, and lived thirty three years. This Book contains the [Transactions of affairs during the] space of two years and five months.

THE FOURTH BOOK

OF THE

Ecclesiastical History

OF

SOCRATES SCHOLASTICUS.

CHAP. I.

That, after Jovianus's death, Valentinianus is proclaimed Emperor; who made his Brother Valens his Colleague in the Empire. And, that Valentinianus was a Catholick, but Valens an Arian.

THE Emperor Jovianus having ended his life (as we have declared) at Dadastana, in his own and his Son Valentinianus's Consulate, on the seventeenth of February; the Soldiers departing from Galatia, on the seventh day after came to Nicæa in Bithinia, where by a general Suffrage they proclaim Valentinianus

Military employ in the Emperor's Guards each of them gave a demonstration of the zeal they had for their Religion. For being compelled to sacrifice, they chose to leave their Military employments, rather than relinquish Christianity. But, at that time the Emperor Julianus, knowing them to be persons useful to the Publick, removed neither of them from their Military preferment; nor yet Jovianus, who was his Successor in the Empire. But, being afterwards promoted to the Empire, * they were at first like to one another; as to their care about the management of the publick affairs; but they differed (as I have said) about the Christian Religion, and behaved themselves after a disagreeable manner towards the Christians. For Valentinianus did indeed favour such persons as embraced his own sentiments; but he was not in the least troublesome to the Arians. But Valens, desirous to promote the Arians, did most grievously disquiet and disturb those who differed in Opinion from them; as the procedure of our History will evidence. At that very time Liberius presided over the Roman Church: at Alexandria Athanasius [was Bishop] of the Homosians; and Lucius of the Arians, whom the Arians had constituted Georgius's Successor. Euzoius presided over the Arians at Antioch. Those of the Homosian Opinion in that City, were divided into two parties; Paulinus headed the one party, and Melitius the other. Cyrillus was again put into possession of the Church at Jerusalem. The Government of the Churches at Constantinople was in the hands of Eudoxius, an assessor of the Arian Opinion. The Homosians kept their Assemblies in a little Oratory within that City. Those of the Macedonian Heresy, who had (b) dissented from the Acacians at Seleucia, at that time retain'd their Churches in every City. In this posture were the affairs of the Church at that time.

Read of [Socrates] ὁ δὲ Ἀνδριανὸς, had declared for the Acacians, read [Socrates] ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀσπὶ Ἀκασίου, had dissented from the Acacians. Which reading I have followed in my Version. The reading may be [Socrates] ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀσπὶ Ἀκασίου, separated from which is perhaps truest. Nicephorus has altered this passage of Socrates thus, ὁ δὲ Ἀνδριανὸς ὁ δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀσπὶ Ἀκασίου, asserting the same things with the Acacians, which is worst of all. Valef.

(a) I doubt not, but instead of ὁ δὲ Ἀνδριανὸς, in his Consulate, Socrates wrote ὁ δὲ Ἀνδριανὸς, in the same Consulate; that is, in the Consulate of Jovianus Augustus and Valentinianus; that noble young Prince his Son.

* That is, in marshalling of an Army.

† Or, to superior † to that degree of honour he had arriv'd at. When therefore they had created him Emperor, he went immediately to Constantinople, and thirty days after his being proclaim'd, he makes his Brother Valens his Colleague in the Empire. They were both Christians, but they disagreed about the Faith of the Christian Religion. For Valentinianus had a veneration for the Creed of the Nicene Synod: but Valens, by reason of a prepossession, adhered rather to the Arian Opinion. The reason of this his prepossession was, because he had been baptized by Eudoxius [Bishop] of Constantinople, a Prelate of the Arian Religion. Both of them entertain'd a warmth and ardency for that Religion which each adhered to: and yet after they came to the Empire, they differed one from the other very much, in their dispositions. For formerly, in the Reign of Julianus, (when Valentinianus was Tribune of the Soldiers, and Valens had a

CHAP. II.

Valentinianus and Valens.

That Valentinianus went into the Western parts [of the Empire,] and Valens resided at Constantinople, who, upon the Macedonians address to him, that a Synod might be convened, granted their request. And that he persecuted the Homoëusians.

* Or, drew him thither.

† Or, Faith.

BUT, the one of the Emperors, to wit, Valentinianus, went forthwith into the Western parts [of the Empire.] For the care of the publick affairs * necessarily required his presence there. But Valens, after he had resided a little while at Constantinople, had an address made to him by most of the Bishops of the Macedonian Heresie, who requested another Synod might be convened, in order to the amendment of the † Creed. The Emperor, supposing they embraced the same sentiments with Acacius and Eudoxius, permitted it to be done. And so these persons made it their business to assemble a Synod in the City Lampascus. But Valens went with all speed possible towards Antioch in Syria, fearing lest the Persians should break the League they had entered into for thirty years in the Reign of Julianus, and invade the Roman Territories. But the Persians were quiet. Which calm Valens made an ill use of, and raised an irreconcilable War against those who embraced the Homoëusian opinion. He did indeed no harm to Paulinus the Bishop, by reason of that person's exemplary and eminent piety. But he punished Melitium with Exile. He drove all others, who refused to communicate with Euzoïus, from the Churches in Antioch, and subjected them to losses and various punishments. 'Tis said, that he drowned many persons in the River Orontes which runs by that City.

CHAP. III.

That, whilst Valens persecuted those who embraced the Homoëusian Opinion in the East, there arose a Tyrant at Constantinople, [by name] Procopius. And that at the same time an Earthquake happened, and an inundation of the Sea, which ruin'd many Cities.

WHILST Valens did these things in Syria, there arose a Tyrant at Constantinople, by name Procopius. He got together a great force in a short time, and made preparations for an Expedition against the Emperor. This being told to the Emperor, put him into a very great agony, which for a little while repress'd the fury of his Persecution against the Catholics. In the interim that the disquietude of a Civil War was with pangs expected, an Earthquake hapning ruin'd many Cities. The Sea also alter'd its own Boundaries; for in some places it overflowed it so much, that Vessels might fail, where there was a foot-passage before. And it departed from other places in such a manner, that they were found to be dry ground. And this hapned in the first Consulate of the two Emperors.

CHAP. IV.

That, there being a Disturbance in the Secular as well as the Ecclesiastick State of affairs, the Macedonians, having convened a Synod at Lampascus, did again confirm the Antiochian Creed, and Anathemized that [published] at Arimurium, and did again ratifie the Deposition of Acacius and Eudoxius.

THESE things hapning to be thus, neither the Civil, nor the Ecclesiastick State of affairs was in a sedate posture. Those therefore who had requested of the Emperor a power of convening a Synod, met at Lampascus in the same Consulate [which I have even now mention'd.] This was the seventh year from the Synod which had been assembled at Seleucia. Having again confirmed the * Antiochian Creed there, to which they had subscribed at Seleucia, they Anathematize that Creed published at Arimurium by those [Bishops] with whom they had heretofore agreed in opinion: and again condemned Acacius's and Eudoxius's party, as having been justly deposed. Eudoxius Bishop of Constantinople could in no wise contradict these determinations; for the Civil War, which was imminent, permitted him not to revenge himself of them. Wherefore Eusebius Bishop of Cyzicum and his Adherents, were at that time for some little while the stronger party, in regard they asserted that termed Macedonius's Opinion, (a) which before had a very mean repute, but was then rendered more conspicuous and better known in the Synod at Lampascus. I suppose this Synod to have been the reason, why those termed the Macedonians are so numerous in the Hellespont: For Lampascus is situate in a narrow Bay of the Hellespont. This was the conclusion of the Synod of Lampascus.

if it had been [μῆκος ἀεὶ ἔσται]. I am of opinion that this place is faulty, and by a small change is thus to be restored: μῆκος τῆς πόλεως, ἡ πόλις ἐν τῇ καὶ λαμπάκων συνόδῳ γινώσκουσιν παλαιότερον, which before had a very mean repute, but was then rendered more conspicuous, and better known in the Synod at Lampascus. He speaks concerning Macedonius's Heresie, which hitherto (says he) had been obscure and unknown: but then, in the Synod of Lampascus, it became more apparently known. I doubt not but Baronius wrote agreeable to my emendation. Concerning this Synod of Lampascus, see Baronius, at the year of Christ 355. Valer.

CHAP. V.

That, an Engagement hapning about a City of Phrygia between the Emperor [Valens] and the Tyrant Procopius, the Emperor took the Tyrant by the treachery of his Commanders, and put him and them to death, by inflicting new and unusual punishments upon them.

ON the year following, wherein Gratianus and * Dagalaifus were Consuls, (a) the War was in good earnest begun. For when the Tyrant Procopius, having removed from Constantinople, was upon the march with his Army towards the Emperor: Valens, informed thereof, hastens from Antioch, and engages Procopius near a City of Phrygia, the name whereof is Nacolia. In the first encounter he was worsted. But, not long after, he took Procopius alive, Agilo and Gomoarius his Commanders having betray'd him upon [all] whom Valens inflicted new and unusual punishments. For, disregarding the Oaths rather than the words, translates it, Bellum geri captum est, the War was begun to be waged. But, in order to the expressing the singular invencibility and propriety of the Greek phrase, it must be rendered, Belli innumerum, or, Belli vii grassati est: the War was with all diligences taken in hand, or, the force of the War rag'd. Valer.

Valentinianus and Valens. (b) Am- nianus Marcellinus relates so (such thing concerning Agilo and Gensarius Procopius's Captains. He does indeed affirm, that they revolted to Valens's side, but says not, that they were cut in funder with Saws. Marcellinus gives us this narrative only, (see Amm. Marcellinus, Book 26. pag. 328, 329. Edit. Paris. 1636.) that the Tribunes Florentinus and Barchalba, after the fight at Nacolia, delivered Procopius bound to Valens. And, that Procopius was immediately beheaded; and Florentinus and Barchalba soon after underwent the same punishment. Therefore, what Socrates relates here concerning Agilo and Gensarius, and concerning Procopius's being torn in funder, is false. Philostorgius also, in his ninth Book, relates that Procopius was beheaded, and that Florentinus, who delivered him to Valens, was burnt. Valef.

(c) This place is corrupted, as 'tis evident. In my judgment, 'tis thus to be restored: ἐπειδὴ τὰ δ' ἑξῆς ἐπικαταθήναι δεῖται ὁ πρὸς τὸν δεῖται; and we have rendered it accordingly.

C H A P. VI.

That, after the death of the Tyrant, the Emperor, forced those who had been present at the Synod, and all the Christians, to embrace Arius's Opinion.

THE Emperor, having at that time been fortunate and successful in that action, began immediately to disquiet the Christians, being desirous to bring over all persons to Arianism. But he was in a more especial manner incensed against the Synod which had been convened at Lampisac, not only because it had deposed the Arian Bishops, but in regard that Draught of the Creed publish'd at Arminum, had been Anathematized there. Being therefore come to Nicomedia in Bithynia, he sent for Eleusius Bishop of Cyzicum to him. This Prelate had more closely adhered to Macedonius's opinion, as I have said before. Wherefore the Emperor, having convened a Synod of Arian Bishops, compelled Eleusius to give his assent to their Faith. At first he denied to do it: but when he was threatened with Banishment and Proscription of his Goods, being terrified, he gave his assent to the Arian Opinion. He repented immediately that he had consented. And returning to Cyzicum, in the presence of all the people he complained of his being forc'd, saying, that he had given his assent by compulsion, not voluntarily: he also advised them to seek out for another Bishop, because he had been compelled to renounce his own Opinion. But the Inhabitants of Cyzicum, by reason of that great love and affection they had for him, refused to be subject to another Bishop, nor would they permit any other [to govern] their Church. They continued therefore under his Presidency, and would in no wise recede from their own Heresie.

C H A P. VII.

That Eunomius, having ejected Eleusius the Macedonian, was made Bishop of Cyzicum. And concerning Eunomius's Original, and that having been Amanuensis to Aetius [firmated] A-theus, he imitated him.

WHEN the Bishop of Constantinople heard this, he prefers Eunomius to the Bishoprick of Cyzicum, in regard he was a person able

by his eloquence to draw [the minds of] the multitude to his own Lure. Upon his arrival at Cyzicum, an Imperial Edict was published, by which order was given; that Eleusius should be ejected, and Eunomius installed. This being done, those of Eleusius's party, having erected an Oratory without the City, celebrated their Assemblies therein. Let thus much be said concerning Eleusius. We must now give an account of Eunomius. Eunomius had been Amanuensis to Aetius, firmated Atheus, of whom we have made mention * before. Conversing with him, he imitated his Sophistic way of discoursing: adding himself [to the use of] certain insignificant and impertinent terms, and was insensible of his framing fallacious arguments in order to the deceiving himself. Upon this account he was puffed up with pride, and fell into (a) blasphemy, being indeed a follower of Arius's Opinion, but was various ways an adversary to the Doctrines of truth. He had but a very mean skill in the sacred Scriptures, and was unable to understand their meaning. But he was very full of words, always making a repetition of the same things over and over, but could not arrive at the design he had proposed to himself. His seven Books which with a great deal of labour he wrote upon the Apostle's Epistle to the Romans, are a demonstration hereof. For, altho' he has spent a great many words in the explanation thereof, yet he could in no wise (b) apprehend the scope and design of that Epistle. Of the same sort are those other Books of his that be extant. Of which he that should be desirous to make trial, would find a great scarcity of sense amidst a multitude of words. This Eunomius therefore was by Eudoxius (c) preferred to the Bishoprick of Cyzicum. (d) When he was come thither, by making use of his usual Dia-lectical Art, he amazed his Auditors by his unusual expressions; whereupon there arose a disturbance at Cyzicum. [At length] the inhabitants of Cyzicum, not able to endure his arrogant and haughty manner of expressing himself, drove him from their City. He went to Constantinople, where he made his abode with Eudoxius, and was [reputed a] (e) Vacant Bishop. But, that Eunomius was made Bishop of Cyzicum under the Emperor Constantius, in that Synod of Constantinople, which was held immediately after the Synod of Seleucia, as Philostorgius does in express words affirm, Book 5. chap. 3. and Theodoret, Book 2. Chap. 27. & 29. Eccles. Histor. which two Authors have recorded Eunomius's affairs with a far greater accuracy, than Socrates has related them. 'Tis certain, that in Valens's Reign, Eunomius was banished by Valens, because he was reported to be a favourer of the Tyrant Procopius, as Philostorgius affirms. So unlikely is it, that he should have had the Bishoprick of Cyzicum then bestowed upon him. Jeromen has followed Socrates's mistake, in Book 6. chap. 8. Eccles. Histor. Valef.

(d) Instead of [ὁ δὲ ἐπὶ τῷ ἐκείνῳ καὶ τῷ τῷ] it should undoubtedly be [ὁ δὲ ἐπὶ τῷ ἐκείνῳ καὶ τῷ τῷ], when he was come thither. I wonder this was not perceived by Christopherson. For Epiphanius might have shewn him the true reading, who renders it thus, cum illic venisset, when he was arrived there. Valef.

(e) In Civil and Military Offices, some Persons were actually employed in bearing of them; others were Vacantes, [that is, Persons that had the title of such an Office, but were not actually concerned in the management of it; we may term them titular Officers:] who in the Code are said to be precipendi honore otiosi cinguli. So some Tribunes are termed Vacantes in Amm. Marcellinus, as I have remarkt in my Notes on that Historian. After the same manner those Bishops are termed Vacantes by our Socrates, who had the bare name of a Bishop, without a Church, without a Clergy and People, over whom they might preside. Of the same nature almost are those, who now a-days are styled Bishops in Infidel Countries; such a one therefore was Eunomius, when, time be repaired with other small Stones. At this present therefore there is to be seen in some parts of the Wall, patches basely wrought up with very mean materials, laid upon vast and prodigious Stones, which [patches] were at that time made. Let thus much be said concerning the Wall of Chalcedon.

CHAP. IX.

That the Emperor Valens persecuted the Novatians also, who (in like manner as did the Catholics) embraced the Homœusian Faith.

BUT the Emperor desisted not from persecuting those that embraced the Homœusian Opinion; but drove them from Constantinople; and together with them the Novatians also, in regard they owned the same sentiments with them: whose Churches he order'd to be shut up: and gave order that their Bishop also, by name Agellus, should be punished with Banishment. He was a person that had presided over their Churches from the times of Constantine, and had led an Apostolick life. For he always went bare-foot, and made use of but on Coat, observing the command of the Gospel. But the Emperor's rage against the Novatians was stopp'd by a pious and also an eloquent person, by name Marcianus. He had before born a Military employ in the Imperial Palace, but was at that time a Presbyter of the Novatian Church, and taught Anastasia and Carola, Valens's Daughters, the Grammar; (a) by whose names the publick Baths which Valens erected at Constantinople, yet standing, [were called.] Out of veneration therefore to this person, the Novatian Churches which for some small time had been shut up, were open'd again. But the Novatians were not perfectly free from disturbances caused by the Arians: For they were hated by the Arians, because the Novatians loved, and had an extraordinary kindness for the Homœusians, with whom they agreed in opinion. This was the posture of affairs at that time. Further, you are to know, that the War against the Tyrant Procopius was finished in the Consulate of Gratianus and Dagalaifus, about the latter end of May.

(a) 'Tis false, what Socrates here says, that the Anastasian Baths at Constantinople had their name from Anastasia, Valens's daughter, and were erected by Valens. They were built by Constantine the Great, and from his Sisters name were called the Anastasian Baths. Anm. Marcellinus tells us thus much, (Book 26. pag. 320. Edit. Paris 1636.) Where he describes Procopius's Tyrannick design: his Words are these; Mem Procopius diabolini in cogitatione variis, Anastasianus Balneas Petri, a Sorore Constantini Cognominata, the same Procopius, divided into various thoughts, went to the Anastasian Baths, which had their name from Constantine's Sister. At which place in Anm. Marcellinus I have long since remark'd that I was thereon, that Anastasia, Constantine's Sister, was married to Basilianus. After my publishing of these my Notes on Anm. Marcellinus, there was a noble and learned Person in England, who found fault with his Assertion of mine, and has thus deny'd, that Basilianus was ever created Cæsar. Upon what account therefore I was induced to affirm this, I will in short here declare. When the Emperor Constantine (after his conquest of Maximian) had given his Sister Constantia in marriage to Licinius; quickly after that he returned into the Gallia, and sent his Brother Constantius to Licinius, entreating him that Basilianus might be created Cæsar; to which Basilianus, Anastasia, Constantine's other Sister, was married. Sed Licinio talia frustrantur, &c. that is, But when Licinius disappointed him as to those things, Basilianus (by the instigation of Senicio his Brother, who was his bosom-friend) takes up Arms against Constantine. Who being apprehended in the very attempt, was by Constantine's order convicte'd and put to death. When Sinicius the Author of this treachery, was de-mo-niz'd in order to his being punished; Licinius denying that, the agreement betwixt them was broken. This passage occurs in the excerpts of de Vita Constantini, which I heretofore published at the end of Anm. Marcellinus. From which Words I draw these Conclusions: (1) That Constantine treated with Licinius, in order to Basilianus's being created Cæsar. (2) That Basilianus being solicited by Licinius, did not only conspire against Constantine, but made War also against him. Basilianus therefore must of necessity [Be allowed] to have played the Tyrant, and therefore to have by force assumed the Title of Cæsar, which Constantine had thoughts of giving him, had Licinius consented. Being moved by these reasons, I have termed Basilianus, Cæsar, whom notwithstanding I do acknowledge to have been a Tyrant, and do grant that he never was duly and lawfully made Cæsar. Moreover, in regard the Anastasian Baths were at Constantinople before Procopius's insurrection, (as we have shewn from Anm. Marcellinus,) it may be evidently concluded from thence, that they were not built by Valens, in regard at that time he was but newly made Emperor. Further, the reading here in Socrates should be thus [Anastasia sorore, the publick Baths.] Valef.

Valentinianus
and Valens.

CHAP. X.

That the Emperor Valentinianus begat a Son, who bore his Fathers name [to wit, Valentinianus;] he having begat [his Son] Gratianus before his being created Emperor.

NOT long after this War, (a) during the same Consulate, a Son was born to Valentinianus the Emperor in the Western parts, who had his Father's name given him. For he had begotten Gratianus long before his undertaking the Government of the Empire.

(a) Socrates is greater than Valens here. For Valentinianus the Younger, who was born in the Consulate of Gratianus and Dagalaifus, was not Valentinianus, but Valens Augustus's Son. Istinus does expressly affirm this in his Fasti, in these words: Gratiano Nob. & Dagalaifo Consulibus, &c. In the Consulate of the most noble Gratianus, and Dagalaifus, Valentinianus the Younger, Son to Valens Augustus, was born, on the fifteenth of the Calends of February. I know indeed, that in Fuscobus Sirmundus's Edition of these Fasti, the common reading is, Filius Augusti Valentiniani, the Son of Valentinianus Augustus. But, in that most ancient Manuscript belonging to the College of Clermont, from which Sirmundus published these Fasti, I found it in express words written thus, Filius Augusti Valens, the Son of Valens Augustus. Besides the testimony of these Fasti, it may be made evident by many other arguments, that this Valentinianus the Younger, (who was born in the Consulate of Gratianus and Dagalaifus, in the year of Our Lord, 366,) was the Son of Valens Augustus. For, this is the very same Valentinianus, as 'tis on all hands agreed, who was afterwards Consul with Valerius, in the year of Christ 369, and to whom Themistius spake his Consular Oration, which is at this day extant under this Title: Θεμιστιος τῷ βασιλεὺς ἡμεῶν πρὸς. Now, in this Oration, Themistius frequently calls Valens the Father of this Valentinian, and styles Gratianus ἀδελφός, that is, his Cousin German by the Fathers side. See pag. 253. in that Oration. Besides, Themistius does affirm (pag. 254.) that the slaughter and overthrow of the Tyrant Procopius was foretold by God, by the birth of this Valentinian. 'Tis certain, Valentinianus Junior was born when Gratianus and Dagalaifus were Consuls, on the 15th of the Calends of February; as 'tis recorded in Iustin's Fasti, and in the Alexandrian Chronicle. In which year the Tyrant Procopius was vanquished by Valens, on the sixth of the Calends of June, as 'tis affirmed in the same Fasti. But, if Valentinianus Junior had been Son to Valentinianus Senior, his birth had signified nothing to Valens. Further, if this Valentinianus had in reality been Son to Valentinianus Senior, why did he make his residence in the East? How could he have been sent so long a journey from his Father, being as yet but an Infant? For he accompanied Valens in the Gothic Expedition, as Themistius attests not far from the beginning of this Oration. Lastly, 'tis evident from Themistius's quinquennial Oration [i. e. His Oration upon Valens's having arrived at the fifth year of his Empire,] near the close thereof, that Valens had an only Son then when he celebrated his Quinquennial, that is, in the year of our Lord 368. In regard therefore, the most noble Valentinianus was made Consul in the East on the year following, he can be no other Person than Valens's Son. And Themistius, in the close of his Quinquennial Oration (after he had spoken concerning Valens's only Son,) adds these words: ὁ δὲ ἄλλος Ἀλέξανδρος ὁνομαζόμενος, ὁ Σπυριανὸν τῶν τῶν τοῦ βασιλέως ἀποκρίσας, whom I would make an Alexander, and Philosophy shall again boast of such an issue. And in his Exhortatory Oration, which he spake the year after to Valentinianus Junior, he makes an address to the Child almost in the same Words: Σὺ γὰρ ὦν παῖς, ἐπὶ τῷ βασιλεὺς ἡμεῶν γενόμενος, come [Royal] Babe, sit upon my knees! And a little after: οὐρανὸς ἀπέταξε σὺν τῷ βασιλεὺς ἡμεῶν τὸν βασιλέα, ὁ δὲ τὸν βασιλέα ἀνέλαβεν ἐν ταῖς αἰσὶν, Plato and Aristotle shall together with my self instruct Thee, by whom the Great Alexander was tutored. From whence 'tis apparent, that it is one and the same person concerning whom Themistius speaks in both places; and therefore that Valentinianus Junior, whom Themistius speaks to in his Exhortatory Oration, was the same only Son of Valens. But, this Valentinianus Junior was, by another name, called Galerius. For Socrates and Sozomen give him him this name; Sozomen (Book 6. Chap. 16.) does expressly affirm, that Valens had one only Son by [Dominica] his Wife, whose name was Galates. Since therefore, 'tis manifest from what I have just now said, that the most noble Valentinianus was Valens's Son, Valentinianus and Galates must necessarily be one and the same Person. I should think, that the Child might have the surname of Galates given him, because he was born in Galatia, at such time as Valens was at War with Procopius. Moreover, Socrates's mistake (in which error he is followed by Sozomen, Book 6. Chap. 10.) did, in my judgment, proceed from hence; viz. because he confounded the two Junior Valentinians, (one whereof was Son to Valens, the other to Valentinianus Senior), and made but one person of two. For he thought, that the most noble Valentinianus (who was Consul with Vibius) was the same person with that Valentinianus Junior, who, after the death of his Father Valentinianus Senior, governed the Empire with Gratianus. But we have long since refuted this Error, in our Notes on Book 30. of Amm. Marcellinus, pag. 413. Vilef. Valerius, at the now quoted pag. of his Notes on Amm. Marcellinus, does indeed evidently prove that there were two Junior Valentinians; but (contrary to what he affirms here,) he asserts they were both Sons to Valentinianus Senior, whom he there styles Magnus. See his note.

Valentinianus
and
Valens.

C H A P. XI.

Concerning a Hail of an unusual bigness which fell from Heaven, and concerning the Earthquakes in Bithynia, and the Hellespont.

* Or, *Fo-
vinius*'s.
† Xenog-rahus's,
as big as would fill a Man's hand.

ON the following Consulate, which was Lupicinus's and * Fovianus's, there fell a Hail at Constantinople † of a vast bigness, on the second of July, which was like Stones. Many persons said, that this Hail was sent by reason of God's anger, because the Emperor had banished several of the Sacerdotal Order, in regard they refused to communicate with Eudoxius. A little after this time, during the same Consulate, the Emperor Valentinianus proclaimed † his Son Gratianus † Augustus, on the twentieth fourth of August. On the year after, wherein Valentinianus and Valens were the second time Consuls, there hapned an Earthquake in Bithynia, which ruined the City Nicaea, on the eleventh of October. This was the twelfth year after the ruin of * Nicomedia. Soon after this Earthquake most part of Germa, a City in the Hellespont, was destroyed by another Earthquake. Notwithstanding these accidents hapned, yet neither was Eudoxius Bishop of the Arians, nor the Emperor Valens, put into any fear: For they desisted not from persecuting those who differed in opinion from them. [Moreover,] these Earthquakes seem'd to denote the disturbance of the Churches. Wherefore, many of the Sacerdotal Order (as I have said) were banish'd. Only Basilus and Gregorius, by a certain dispensation of Divine Providence, suffered not Banishment, by reason of their eminent piety.

|| Emperor.

* Nicomedia was destroyed by an Earthquake, in the Consulate of Dacianus and Cerealis, about the 28th of August. See Socrates, Book 2. chap. 39.

(a) Basilus was made Bishop of Casarea in Cappadocia; and the second [presided over] Nazianzum, a small City near Casarea. But we shall mention Basilus and Gregorius in the procedure [of our History.]
In the year of Christ 369, as Baronius has rightly observed. But Socrates seems to make Basilus's promotion to that Bishoprick somewhat ancienter. For, in his account at this place of those affairs that were transacted in Valentinianus's and Valens's second Consulate, which was the year of Christ 368, he does acknowledge that Basilus was then Bishop of Casarea, and Gregorius of Nazianzum. But, as to Gregorius, Socrates is manifestly mistaken. For he was not at that time made Bishop of Nazianzum by Basilus, but of Sisima, which Bishoprick he notwithstanding never entered upon, as he himself attests in his Epistles. But in his Verbes concerning his own Life, he evidently complains of Basilus, who (when as he had fix'd his Bishopricks under him,) had preferred him to the Church of a pitiful little Town, although he himself was nothing inferior to Basilus. Valef.

C H A P. XII.

Valentinianus
and
Valens.

That those who imbraced Macedonian's Opinion, being reduced into freights by reason of the Emperor's violence towards them, sent an Embassy to Liberius [Bishop] of Rome, and subscribed to the Homoeusian Creed.

WHEN those who embraced the Homoeusian opinion had at that time been sorely disquieted and put to flight, the Persecutors renewed their rage against the Macedonians: Who, being reduced to great freights by fear rather than force, sent Embassies to one another throughout every City; signifying, that they must of necessity fly, both to the Emperor's Brother [Valentinianus], and also to Liberius Bishop of Rome; and that [twas more eligible for them] to embrace their Faith, than to communicate with Eudoxius's party. (a) They sent therefore Eustathius [Bishop] of Sebastia, (who had been many times deposed) Silvanus of Tarusus in Cilicia, and Theophilus of Castabali, which is also a City of Cilicia: and gave them order, that they should not dissent from Liberius concerning the Faith, but should enter into communion places this with the Roman Church, and confirm the Homoeusian Creed. These persons, carrying along with them their Letters who had dissented [from Acacius] at Seleucia, arriv'd at Old Rome. They us'd could not go to the Emperor [Valentinianus] himself; for he was engaged in a War with the Sarmatae in the Gallia's. But they deliver'd their Letters to Liberius. He [at first] wholly refused to admit them: for he said, that those of them were of the Arian Faction, and could in the year of Christ 368, in which year Valentinianus and Valens were the second time Consuls. Baronius thinks 'twas sent in the year of Christ 365, and grounds his opinion on these two arguments especially. First, Eustathius, with his companions, was sent Ambassador by the Synod of Lampascus. Now, that Synod was convened in the year of Christ 365, (seven years after the Seleucia Synod, as Socrates attests. 'Tis certain, the Embassadors (in their Libel of Faith which they presented to Liberius), do expressly profess that they were Legates from the Synod of Lampascus, and that they brought the Letters of that Synod to Liberius. Secondly, if this Embassy of the Macedonians were sent on the year of Christ 368, it would not have been sent to Liberius, but to Damasus. For Liberius died on the year of Christ 367, in the Consulate of Lupicinus and Fovianus; and on the same year Damasus succeeded upon that See. But, the Macedonian Embassadors presented a Libel of their Faith to Liberius, and from the same Liberius received Letters to the Prelates of their own party, as Socrates relates in this Chapter. This Embassy therefore was not sent in the year 368. These are Baronius's arguments. But I would rather place this Embassy on the year of Christ 367, and will therefore hereof against Baronius, upon this account. Baronius confesses, that Elpidius Presbyter of Rome was sent, together with Eustathius and his Companions, to the Illyricum Synod; the Synodical Letter whereof Theodoretus has recorded, Book 4. Chap. 3. Eccles. History. But the Illyricum Synod, at which Elpidius and Eustathius of Sebastia were present, was convened in the year of Christ 367, or 368; as appears from the inscription of that Letter which the Emperor Valentinianus wrote to the Bishops of Asia, that he might confirm that Synod. For that Imperial Letter has this Title: Valentinianus, Valens and Gratianus, Augusti, to the Bishops, &c. as you may read in Theodoret, Book 4. Chap. 8. Now Gratianus was proclaimed Augustus by his Father, in the Consulate of Lupicinus and Fovianus, on the ninth of the Calends of September, as (besides Socrates) Idatius in his Epist. and the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle, do declare. Therefore, if the Illyricum Synod hapned on the same year whereon the Macedonian Embassy was sent; the Macedonian Embassy must necessarily be placed on the year of Christ 367, in which year Liberius died in the beginning of September. Eustathius therefore might go to Liberius in June, and receive Letters from him in August. Now I am of opinion, that the Illyricum Synod was held on the same year, in the month of September, which Synod Valentinianus the Emperor confirm'd, after Gratianus was created Augustus. Valef.

(b) Socrates should have said The Alamanni, rather than the Sarmatae. For at this time Valentinian was detained in the Gallia's, by reason of his War against the Alamanni. Towards the end of his Reign, he went into Illyricum, in order to his engaging in a War against the Sarmatae. Valef.

ἡτοιμασθέντες ἐν καρτερίας προσέβημεν κοινῶς ἐν αὐτῷ ἵκεναι, &c.] which we have expressed in our Rendition. For they Anathematize not only that Form of the Creed which had been recited in the in the Ariminum Council, but the Aits also at Nice in Iberia, (See Socrates, Book 2. Chap. 37. near the close of that Chapter), to which, being brought to Constance, the Bishops, induced thereto by fraud, had subscribed, as if they had been the Aits of the Niceene Synod. rufes.

By reason of the mad Opinions of Hereticks, who desist not from giving cause of offence to the Ca-tholick Churches; upon this account [we say] we, [desirous] to deprive them of all opportunity [of giving offence] do approve of and assent to the Synod of Orthodox Bishops which has been convened at Lampfacus, Smyrna, and at several ther places : (c) from which Synod we being employed as Legates, do bring a Letter to your Benignity, and to all the Italian and Western Bishops, to hold and keep the Catholic Faith, which having been establisht in the Holy Nicene Synod in the Reign of Constantine of Blessed Memory, by three hundred and eighteen Bishops, hath hitherto always continued intire and unshaken : in which [Creed] the term Homoeousios is holily and piously made use of, in opposition to Arius's perverse Doctrine : in like manner we also, (d) together with the foresaid persons, do under our own hands profess, that we have bel'd the same Faith, and do bold, and will keep it to our last breath : and we do condemn Arius, and his impious Doctrine, together with his Disciples, and those that embrace his Sentiments ; as also, all the Heresie of Sabel-

Piously and Catholicly set forth by the Holy Fa-

I Eustathius Bishop of the City Sebastia, I Theophilus, and I Silvanus, Legates of the Synod of Lampacus of Smyrna, and of other [ Synods, ] have voluntarily and willingly written this confession [Of Faith] with our own hands. And, if any person, after the publication of this Creed by Us, shall be desirous of bringing any accusation, either against Us, or those that have sent Us, let him come with Your Holiness's Letters before such Orthodox Bishops as Your Sanctity shall approve of, and go to tryal with Us in their presence. And if any Crimination shall be made out, let the Author thereof be punish'd. Liberius having bound up and secured the Legates by this Libel, admitted them to Communion, and afterwards disanist them with this Letter.

To Our dearly beloved Brethren and Fellow-Ministers, Evethius, Cyrillus, Hyperichius, Uranius, Heron, Elpidius, Maximus, Eusebius, Eucarpus, Heortasius, Neon, Eumathius, Faustinus, Proclius, Paphius, Arsenius, Severus, Didymion, Britannius, Callicrates, Dalmatius; Aedius, Eustochius, Ambrosius, Gelonius, Pardalius, Macedonius, Paulus, Marcellus, Heraclius, Alexander, Adolius, Marcianus, Sthenelus, Johannes, Macer, Charisius, Silvanus, Phocinus, Antonius, (f) Anytho, (f) In the Florent.

and sforian M. SS. this person's name is constantly written thus, Autbo. - So he is also called in Epiphanius scholasticus. In Christopherson's Version 'tis Aybo, with three Syllables. I never met with this name in all my reading. Perhaps it should be Autbo. Valef, Celsus.

Celfus.

Valentinianus and Valens.

Celsus, Euphranor, Milefius, Patricius, Severianus, Eusebius, Eumolpius, Athanasius, Diofantus, Menodorus, Diocles, Chrysampelus, Neon, Eugenius, Eustathius, Callicrates, Arsenius, Eugenius, Martyrius, Hieracius, Leontius, Philagrius, Lucius, and to all the Orthodox Bishops in the East; Liberius Bishop (g) of Italy, and the Bishops in the West, [wish] health always in

(g) The words of the Lord.

Italy must be expunged. Epiphanius acknowledges them not: or else it must be thus worded: Liberius Bishop and the Bishops of Italy, and those in the West, &c. For thus Liberius distinguishes the Bishops of Italy from the rest of the Western Prelates, in the beginning of this his Letter, in these words; both to our slanders and also to all [the Bishops] in Italy and in the Western parts. Nor is it otherwise explicit in the Libel of Faith which the Legates presented to Liberius. Vale.

(h) It must undoubtedly be [αγαπητοι] αγαπητοι, that it may be referred to the foregoing word [αγαπητοι, Letters]. And thus Epiphanius Scholasticus, and Langus, Nicephorus the Translator, read it. It would doubtless have been foolish to term ancient Bishops τῶν τῶν παλαιῶν ἀγαπητων, persons illuminated with the light of Faith; as it had been some Neoplatonists, or late Converts to the Faith. Vale.

(i) Instead of [αὐτοὶ τῶν ἐκ τῆς ὁρθότητος] it would be better thus [αὐτοὶ τῶν ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐκ τῆς ὁρθότητος], from the Nicene Synod hitherto. So in the Libel of Faith presented to Liberius by the Legates: ἵνα τὸ πᾶν ὁμολογῇ, &c. Which having been established in the holy Nicene Synod—both hitherto ancient continued imire and unshaken. So Musculus and Christophorus read this place. Vale.

(k) It should not be [ἀδελφοί] but [ἀδελφὸν], that is, your Legates themselves. For Liberius means the Libel of Faith, which the Macedonian Legates had presented to him. In which Libel the Legates profess, that as well those Persons by whom they had been sent, did constantly retain that Creed which had heretofore been set forth at Nicæa; as also that they themselves did and always would observe and keep to the same Creed. Musculus and Christophorus supposed that by these words the Nicene Fathers were meant; than which nothing is more absurd. Liberius led them into this mistake, who in his Version of Nicephorus has rendered this passage in relation to the Nicene Fathers. Epiphanius Scholasticus (more truly) supposed, that hereby the Macedonian Legates were meant; which is apparent from his Version. Vale.

which does contain the perfect Truth, and stops the Mouths, and vanquishes all the Shoals of Heretics. For, not of their own accord, but by Divine appointment so great a company of Bishops was convened a braham through faith destroyed so many thousands Valentinian [of his Enemies.] Which Faith being comprehended in the Hypothesis, and in the term Homologous does (like a strong and impregnable Fortress) beat back and repel all the Assaults and mischievous Machinations of Arius's perverse Opinion. Wherefore, when all the Western Bishops had met at Ariminum, whither the Improbability of the Arians had called them together, that either by some kind Persuaders, or (which is truest) [by Compulsion] of the Secular Power, they might destroy, or perversely deny what had with all imaginable caution been inserted into the Creed; their Subtlety advantaged them not in the least. For, almost all those persons then convened at Ariminum, who had at that time been either enticed into error, or imposed upon, are now returned to a right mind, have Anathematized that Draught [of the Creed] published by them convened at Ariminum, and have subscribed to that Catholic and Apostolical Creed ratified and established at Nicæa. And having entered into a Communion with us, they are with a greater warmth incensed against Arius's Opinion, and against his Disciples. Of which business when the Legates of your Love perceived an evident proof, they annexed You your selves to their own Subscription; and do Anathematize Arius, and what was transacted at Ariminum against the Creed ratified at Nicæa:

(l) to which [Transactions]

You your selves, beguiled by Perjury, have subscribed. Wherefore, it seemed agreeable to us, to write to your Love, and to give assistance to those, whose requests are just and equitable. More especially, because we are ascertained by the Profession of your Legates, that the Eastern [Bishops] are come to themselves, and do embrace the same Sentiments with the Orthodox Western Prelates. We make known this to you also, (lest you should be ignorant of it,) that the Blasphemies of the Ariminum Synod are now Anathematized, by those who seem to have been dammed at that time by fraud, and that all persons have unanimously conspired in an agreement to the Nicene Creed. And this ought to be made known to all men by you, that such as have been dammed [in their Faith] * by force and fraud, may now at length return from Heretical darkness to the Divine light of Catholic impudency liberty. Who (if after this Synod they will not vomit up the poison of perverse Doctrine, & renounce & Or, all Arius's Blasphemies, and Anathematize them,) may know that they themselves, together with Arius and his Disciples, and the rest of the Serpents, whether Sabellians, or Patropasians, or whatever other Heresy they are [Followers] of, are excluded from, and are no Members of the Church's Assemblies, which admits not illegitimate Sons. God preserve you in safety, Dearly beloved Brethren.

(l) The erroneous punctuation in Robert Stephens's Edition deceived Christophorus. For, he renders it thus: Cum juravimus abstinere subscriptionibus, to which [Transactions] You I now selves by taking an Oath have subscribed. Langus, and (before him) Epiphanius Scholasticus have rendered it truly, thus: Quibus vos perjurio capiti subscriptionibus, to which you, beguiled by perjury, have subscribed. In the Macedonian Libel of Faith, 'tis said in express words, that the Bishops, being imposed upon by Fraud and Perjury, had subscribed the Creed set forth at Nicæ in Thracia. For the Arius, (see note (e.) in this chapter,) after they had drawn up a Form of the Creed in a Synod held at Nicæ in Thracia, (twice that was the Creed of the Synod of Nicæa. Vale.

Eustathius and those that accompanied him, having received these Letters, went over into Sicilia: where after they had caused a Synod of Sicilian Bishops to be convened, they made a profession of the Homoeousian Faith in their presence, and confirmed the Nicene Creed; and having received from them Letters written to the same same effect, they returned to the persons by whom they had been sent. Who, upon receipt of Liberius's Letter, sent Legates from City to City, to the principal Assertors of the Homousian Faith, exhorting them to meet together unanimo-ly at Tarsus [a City] of Cilicia, in order to the confirming of the Nicene Creed, and that they might put an end to all manner of contentious disputes, which had since that been raised. And this had perhaps been effected, had not Eudoxius (a Prelate of the Arian Religion, one who at that time was in great favour with the Emperor) hindered it. Who being more exasperated because of the Synod summoned to meet [at Tarsus,] framed greater mischiefs against them. Moreover, that the Macedonians, by sending Legates to Liberius, entered into a Communion with him, and confirmed the Nicene Creed; Sabinus himself has confessed in his Collection of Synodical Actions.

* See Gen. against the Madnes of Arius; as were * equal in number to those, by whose assistance blessed Abraham routed the four Kings Forces, were three hundred and eighteen, being all his own Servants.

Valentinian and Valens.

C H A P. XIII.

How Eunomius separated himself from Eudoxius, because he adhered to [his Master] Aëtius. And that (a disturbance being raised at Alexandria by Eudoxius's means,) Athanasius fled again. And that (when the Populace were tumultuous hereupon,) the Emperor being afraid, by his Letters *pacified the Alexandrians, and ordered that Athanasius should be put into quiet possession of his Church again.

ABOUT the same time Eunomius, being separated from Eudoxius, held his Assemblies apart by himself, because, after he had several times entreated him to embrace his Master Aëtius's [opinion,] Eudoxius refused to do that. And yet Eudoxius did not this willingly: (For he rejected not Aëtius's Opinion; in regard it was the same with his own: ) but because all those who embraced the same Sentiments with Eudoxius, (a) declined [Aëtius] as being Herodox. This was the reason why Eunomius made a separation from Eudoxius. After this manner were these matters transacted at Constantinople. But an (b) Edict of the Præfects of the Prætorium sent thither by Eudoxius's care, disturb'd the Church at Alexandria. Wherefore Athanasius, afraid of the irrational and mad violence of the multitude, and fearing lest he should *be look'd upon as the Occasioner of those mad aburdities which might be committed, hid himself four whole months in his Father's Monument. But, when the Populace, [vexed] because of his absence, were tumultuous by reason of their love and affection towards him; the Emperor, understanding that upon this account Alexandria was sorrowful and sad, signified by his Letters, that Athanasius should securely and without fear continue possessor of the Churches. And this was the reason why the Alexandrian Church continued undisturbed until the death of Athanasius. But how, when he was dead, those of the Arian Faction got possession of the Churches again, we will relate a little after this.

C H A P. XIV.

That after the death of Eudoxius at Constantinople, the Arians ordain'd Demophilus; but the Orthodox, by [the assistance of] Eustathius of Constantinople, [made] Evagrius [Bishop of Constantinople.]

FURTHER, the Emperor Valens departed from Constantinople, and (a) hastned towards Antioch again. And being arrived at Nicomedia a City of Bithynia, he made a stop there upon this Valens had account. Eudoxius the chief Prelate of the Arian gone to Faction ended his life soon after the Emperor's departure [from Constantinople,] in Valentinianus's house. But, and Valens's third Consulate, having been in hearing of possession of the Chair of the Constantinopolitan Church (b) nineteen years. Wherefore, the Arians constituted Demophilus [Bishop] in his room. But the Homousians, supposing that a his fair opportunity was offer'd to them, elected Evagrius, a person that own'd the same Creed with them. And (c) Eustathius (who had sometime before been Bishop of Antioch, and had formerly been recalled from Exile in Jovianus's Reign,) ordain'd him. This Eustathius was at that time present at Constantinople, [to which City he came.] with a design of settling and strengthening those of the Homousian Faith where he continued, absconding himself without cause. For Socrates says not, that Valens came to Antioch before, but that he went towards that City; which is certainly most true. But Christophorus's Version seems to have been the cause of Baronius's mistake; for he renders it thus; Imperator Valens denuo Antiochiam ire mairans, the Emperor Valens besting to go to Antioch again. Valens (b) Sozomen's account is truer, who makes Eudoxius to have been Bishop but eleven years. *This certain, Eudoxius thrust himself into the Bishoprick of Constantinople when Eusebius and Euphadius were Consuls, which was the year of Christ 359. He died in the third Consulate of Valentinianus and Valens, in the year of our Lord 370. Wherefore, at this place of Socrates (instead of [Σακκάρια, nineteen]) it ought to be Σακκάρια, eleven; which is confirmed by Epiphanius Scholasticus. Wherefore, Baronius does here also undeservedly reprove Socrates; in regard, not Socrates himself, but the Copies of Socrates's History are here false. Concerning Eudoxius's death, consult Philostorgius, Book 9. Valens.

(c) Sozomen tells us the same story, in his Eccles. Hist. Book 6. Chap. 13. But Baronius, at the year of Christ 370, reproves both these Historians. For he maintains, that Eustathius Bishop of Antioch was dead long before, in Constantianus's Reign. Indeed, Jerome (in his Book de Scriptor. Ecclesiasticis.) does relate, that Eustathius died in exile, and was buried at Trajanople in Thracia, to which place he had been banished. If this be true, Eustathius must necessarily have died in Constantianus's Reign. For Julianus, and after him Jovianus, recalled all the Bishops from exile. It is indeed scarce credible, that Eustathius Bishop of Antioch could live to these times. For, in regard he was at the Nicene Council, which was held in the year of Christ 325; we may suppose him to have been then in the forty fifth year of his age. From this year to the third Consulate of Valentinianus and Valens (wherein Eustathius is said to have been ordained Evagrius at Constantinople) there are five and forty years. So that Eustathius must necessarily have been ninety years old. If he ordain'd Evagrius Bishop in this year. Further, I must not omit, what I have been informed of, from Vitior Tunnensis's Chronicon; to wit, that Eustathius was not interred at Trajanople, as Jerome relates, but at Philippi. For these are his Words: *Post Consulatum tertium Longini, &c. After Longinus's third Consulate, Calendio Bishop of Antioch got together the reliques of his predecessor Eustathius, Bishop and Confessor, from Philippi in Macedonia, and with great honour conveyed them to Antioch. Theodorus Lector says the same, in his 2d Book Excerpt. Hist. Eccles. Baronius does ill, to place this translation of Eustathius's reliques on the year of Christ 482, in regard, as 'tis evident from Vitior Tunnensis's Chronicon, *was performed in the year of our Lord 490, when Longinus II. and Faulhus were Cons. But what Theodorus Lector adds at that place, to wit, that the Eustathians, who before had meetings by themselves, were then at length united to the Catholics, an hundred years after Eustathius's death; is in my judgment false. For, this being supposed, Eustathius would have lived to the year of Christ 390. Valens.*

C H A P.

*Or, interred with.

(a) Constantinople (the term here used) signifies this place to decline, or here an evasion for: in which signification Lucianus uses it in Hermogenis. Longinus and Christophorus render it a violence, to allude. But Epiphanius unacquainted with this signification of the word, has rendered it thus: Sed quoniam omnes unanimiter, illum, cum seculo alterius fatebantur. But because all those of Eudoxius's Opinion confessed him to be of another Self. Valens. This term [τελευτάριος] occurs 2 Tim. 2. 16. where in our English Version 'tis rendered [to shun.]

(b) He means an order of the Præfects of the Prætorium. For 'twas usual, that the Præfect of the Prætorium, as often as he issued out any Edict, should annex the names of the other Præfects of the Prætorium. An instance whereof occurs both in the Gesta purgationis Cæsarii, which are published after the Garbaginian Collation, and also in Theodosius and Valentinianus's Novells. There is a famous evidence of this thing in the ancient Writer De Questionibus veteris et Novi Testamenti. Cap. 97. Valens.

Valentinianus and Valens.

CHAP. XV.

That when the Emperor had banished Evagrius and Eustathius, the Arians sorely oppressed and afflicted the Homoëusians.

UPON the doing hereof, the Arians renewed their persecution against the Homoëusians afresh. What had hapned, soon came to the Emperor's knowledge, who fearing lest a sedition, caused by a contention of the multitude, should ruin the City, sent some Forces from Nicomedia to Constantinople: and gave order, that both persons, as well he that was ordained, as he that had ordained him, should be apprehended and banished, the one to one place, the other to another. Eustathius therefore was exiled to (a) Biza a City of Thracia; and Evagrius was conveyed away to another place. These things having been performed after this manner, the Arians growing more insolent and bold, sorely afflicted the Catholics: [sometimes] they beat them, [at others] they gave them contumelious language; [some] they shut up in prison, [others] they punished with Pecuniary Mults; in fine, they practised all sorts of afflictive and most unsufferable mischiefs against them. Which when they were unable to endure, they went to the Emperor, [with a design] to beseech him, that they might, in some measure at least, be freed from the violence [of the Arians.] But, [altho'] they had proposed this design to themselves, [yet] they were wholly frustrated of their hope, because they expected to obtain it from him, who had been the Author of their injurious usage.

(a) This account disagrees both from what we have related before (Chap. 14. note c.) out of Jerome, and also from the relation of Theodorus Lector, and Theopanes in his Chronicon. For Jerome says, that even in his age

Eustathius lay buried at Trejanople, whither he had been banished. But Theodorus Lector and Theopanes relate, that he was banished to Philippi, and there buried. That Eustathius therefore, who was banished by Valens to Biza, must necessarily be a different Person from Eustathius Bishop of Antioch. Biza is a City of Thracia, heretofore the palace of the Thracian Afores, as Stephanus attests. Eusebius mentions it in his sixth Book, where he speaks of Lucius Lucullus, who subdued the Thracian Bessi. Valsf.

CHAP. XV.

Concerning the Holy Presbyters who were burnt in a Ship, and concerning the Famine, which by the wrath of God hapned in Phrygia upon that account.

FOR, when some choice pious persons, who were Ecclesiastics, being eighty in number, (the principal men amongst whom were Urbanus, Theodorus, and Menedemus,) were arrived at Nicomedia, and had presented a Supplicatory Libel to the Emperor, informing him of the violence and calamitous sufferings which were inflicted on them [by the Arians:] the Emperor, highly incensed, concealed his anger, till such time as he had given a secret order to Modestus the Prefect, for the apprehending of these persons, and putting of them to death. The manner of their death was new and unusual; therefore it shall be recorded. The Prefect being afraid, lest if he should murder these men in publick, * he might raise a tumult of the unthinking Crowd against himself, pretends to send them away into banishment. [This news] being received by these persons with a courageousness of mind, the Prefect orders them to be put on board a Ship, as [if he design'd] they should be carried away and banished: but he commanded the Sea-men, that when they came to the middle of the Sea, they should set the Vessel on fire: that so, being destroy'd after this manner, they might be deprived of a Burial. Thus therefore it was performed. The Mariners sailed out of the Haven, and being arrived at the middle of the Asphacum-Bay, do what they were ordered: and having let the Ship on fire, went aboard another small Vessel which followed them, and so came off. But, a very boisterous Easterly wind hapned to blow, whereby the burning Ship was fiercely driven: in so much that it sailed with a great deal of swiftness, and lasted till it came to a Sea-port, the name whereof is (a) Daicidizus, where it was wholly consumed together with the men in it. Many have reported, that this [horrid villany] continued not unpunished. For there hapned to the same place a (b) Famine all over Phrygia immediately after, that many of the Inhabitants were forced to remove out of that Country for some time, and betake themselves, partly to Constantinople, and partly to other Provinces. For Constantinople, 'tis a place, altho' it nourishes a vast multitude of people, yet always abounds with plenty, both because it has all manner of necessaries for provision imported into it from all places by Sea, and also in regard the Euxine-Sea, lying near it, furnishes it with plenty of Bread-corn, as often as it wants.

* Or, he might raise an irrational tumult of the multitude, &c.

(a) See Menest. (Book 6. Chap. 14.) tells the same story; where he calls this place Daicidizus, and also returns to the City of Bithynia, Cedrenus says, that the City of Bithynia, but Theophrastus gives the name of Daicidizus. Valens. (b) Concerning this Famine there is this Record, in the Old Test. which Sirmondus has published under the name of Iulianus in Valentinian III. and Valens III, &c. i. e. in the third Consulate of Valentinianus and Valens there was a great Famine in the parts of Phrygia. Valsf.

CHAP. XVII.

That the Emperor, arriving at Antioch, did again persecute those that embraced the Homoëusian Opinion.

BUT the Emperor Valens, little regarding the Calamities caused by the Famine, went to Antioch in Syria. During his residence there, he destroyed such as would not profess Arianism. For although he had perfectly ejected the Embracers of the Homoëusian Opinion out of the Churches of almost all the Eastern Cities; yet he was not satisfied therewith, but did besides inflict various punishments upon them. And he destroy'd many more than formerly [had been murder'd by him,] by exposing them to different sorts of death; but more especially by drowning them in a River.

CHAP. XVIII.

Concerning what was done at Edessa, and the reproachful affront put upon the Prefect, and concerning the Faith, Courageousness, and Constancy of those Citizens; and concerning a pious Woman. * Mel.

BUT, we must relate what was done at Edessa [a City] of Mesopotamia. In that City there is a stately and splendid * Church [which bears the name] of Thomas the Apostle, wherein Assemblies in order to the performance of the public duties of Religion are without intermission convened, by reason of that place's sanctity. The Emperor Valens, desirous to view this Church, and being informed that the whole Congregation met therein were [followers] of that Heresie which he detested, struck the Prefect with his own hand, (as 'tis said,) because he had not taken Church

* Mel. it sometimes signifies a place where the religious duties of the place are performed. It is said that by it is meant a taken Church

Valentinianus and Valens.

taken care to have them driven from that place. When the Præfekt, after this manner abused, made preparations (though unwillingly) to obey the Emperor's rage; (for he was not willing to be the instrument of the murder of so many persons;) he gave them notice secretly, to the intent that no person might be found within that Church. But no body heeded either his advice, or his menaces. For on the day following all persons flock'd to the Church: And when the Præfekt with a great company of Souldiers haſtned to the Oratory; in order to his fulfilling the Emperor's rage; a poor Woman, leading her own little Son by the hand, went with great speed towards the Church, and broke through the (a) ranks of Souldiers which guarded the Præfekt.

At which the Præfekt being highly displeased, orders the Woman to be brought to him; and speaks to her after this manner: *Miserable Woman! whither runnest thou in this *undecent manner?* She replied, To the same place that others run to. Have you not heard, said he, That the Præfekt is going to put to death all persons that shall be found there? I have heard so, answered she, and do therefore make haste, that I may be found there (b): And whither draggest thou that little Child, said the Præfekt; the Woman replied, that he also may be vouchsafed the honour of Martyrdom. Upon hearing hereof, the Præfekt made a conjecture of the constancy and resolution of the persons assembled [in the Church.] And he went back immediately to the Emperor, and informed him, that all of them were ready to die for their own Faith.

And declaring withal, that it would be absurd to destroy so many persons in so short a time, he thereby persuaded the Emperor to desist from being enraged. After this manner the Edeſſens escaped their being destroy'd by their own Emperor.

(a) After this little Child, said the Præfekt; the Woman replied, that he also may be vouchsafed the honour of Martyrdom. Upon hearing hereof, the Præfekt made a conjecture of the constancy and resolution of the persons assembled [in the Church.] And he went back immediately to the Emperor, and informed him, that all of them were ready to die for their own Faith. And declaring withal, that it would be absurd to destroy so many persons in so short a time, he thereby persuaded the Emperor to desist from being enraged. After this manner the Edeſſens escaped their being destroy'd by their own Emperor.

And whether draggest thou that little Child, said the Præfekt; the woman replied, that he also may be vouchsafed the honour of Martyrdom [which I have inserted from the Florinus and Sporian M. S. Epiphanius Scholasticus acknowledges them; and so does Rufinus, from whom Socrates borrowed this story. Moreover, from this place also 'tis evident, that Christophorus had perused no M. S. Copies of Socrates. Valeſi.

CHAP. XIX.

That the Emperor Valens slew many persons, the first Letter of whose Name was *Thera, upon account of a certain Necromantick Divination, whereby that was foretold.

(a) This (a) At the same time, a certain destructive Dæmon abused the Emperor's cruelty. For he persuaded some persons to make a strict and over-basis enquiry by a Necromantick Divination, who should succeed Valens in the Empire. Some Heathens had consulted that they might know who should succeed Valens in the Empire, is at large set forth by Ammianus Marcellinus, in his 29th Book. But, 'tis difficult to assign the year whereon it happened. Barnetius, in his Annals places it on the year of Christ 370. I am of opinion, that it was acted in the year of our Lord 371. or at the beginning of the year 372. For Valens, in the year of his reign 371, made his entry into Antioch, at the end of Summer. Gratianus

II. and Probus being Consuls, as I have demonstrated in my Notes on the foresaid Book of Marcellinus, partly from the Laws of the Theodosian Code, and partly from Liberius's Book concerning his own Life. Now, that Tragedy and Conspiracy of those wicked wretches against Valens, happened after his entry into the City of Antioch, as 'tis manifest from Marcellinus. Therefore, it must necessarily happen at the close of the year 371, or at least at the beginning of 372. 'Tis certain, Theophrastus and Cædrenus do place Valens's entry into Antioch on his eighth year. But, the same Theophrastus does ascribe that Conspiracy of those impious Wretches, who had consulted the Oracle concerning the future Emperor, to Valens's ninth year. Which agrees exactly with our opinion, if we may compute Valens's first year from the Consulate of Sovianus and Varronianus. Valeſi.

To which persons, having made use of a certain magical incantment, the Dæmon gave responses, not plain and manifest, but (as he usually does) oblique and ambiguous; by shewing only four Letters, *Thera, and Epſilon, and Omicron, and Delta; saying, that his name, who should reign after Valens, did begin with these Letters, and that his name was compounded.

The report of what had been done came to the Emperor's Ears. But he permitted not God (who manages all things in due and orderly manner) to have the knowledge of things future, and to do what seemed good to him; but, slighting the Sanctions of Christianity, for which he supposed himself to have a zeal and ardency, he put many to death, of whom he had a suspicion that they would seize upon the Empire. Therefore, the Theodorus's, the Theodorus's, the Theodorus's, and the Theodorus's, and as many as had such-like names as these, were deprived of their lives. Amongst whom (b) one (b) In the Theodotus, a person of great valour and courage, a Descendant of a noble Family in Spain, was also put to death. And out of a fear of the imminent danger, many persons [at that time] changed their names, denying those names their Parents had given them when they were young, in regard they were liable to danger. But, let thus much be said concerning this.

Scholasticus also calls him Theodotus. Who this Theodotus (or Theodotus) should be, 'tis uncertain. For I cannot think, it was that Theodotus, (either to Theodotus the Emperor,) of whom Ammianus makes frequent mention in his History. For he lived in the West, and was not slain by the fraud and treachery of malevolent persons, till after Valentinianus's death. And yet this Character added by Socrates [a personage of great valour and courage, a descendant of a noble Family in Spain] does exactly fit him. Valeſi.

CHAP. XX.

Concerning Athanafius's death, and the Promotion of Peter [to his See.]

Further, you are to know, that as long as Athanafius Bishop of Alexandria lived, the Emperor (upon account of some [over-ruling dispensation] of God's providence) forbore disquieting Alexandria and Egypt, knowing for certain, that there was a numerous multitude of persons there, who favoured Athanafius; and for this reason he was afraid, lest a sedition being raised at Alexandria, the Populace, who are naturally hot and violent, should endanger the publick State of Affairs. [Moreover,] Athanafius, after those many conflicts [he had undergone] upon the Church's account, departed this life in the second Consulate of Gratianus which he bore with Probus; he governed that Bishoprick amidst many dangers forry and six years, and left Peter, a pious and eloquent person, to succeed him in his See.

Valentinianus and Valens.

C H A P. XXI.

That after Athanasius's death, the Arians by the Emperor Valens's Order, deliver'd up the Churches in Alexandria to Lucius, who had been Ordained by them before, and committed Peter to Prison.

THe Arians therefore took courage immediately, being rendered insolent by the Emperor's Religion; and without delay they give an account hereof to the Emperor, who then resided at Antioch. At the same time also Euzo us (who presided over the Professors of Arianism at Antioch,) with greediness catches that opportunity so seasonably offer'd; and makes it his design to procure himself to be sent to Alexandria, to the intent that he might deliver possession of the Churches there to Lucius the Arian. Which was also approved of by the Emperor. And forthwith he went to Alexandria, [accompanied] with the Imperial Forces. For (a) Magnus, Lord-Treasurer to the Emperor, went along with him. The Imperial Order was directed to Palladius * Prefect of Egypt, and a command was issued forth, that the military Forces there should give their assistance. Wherefore, they apprehended Peter, and confined him to Prison. After they had dispersed the other Ecclesiasticks some into one place, some into another, they feared Lucius Alex-andrus, in the Letter of Peter.

(a) This Magnus is term'd so, as if he were a great one, because of the Court-Largesses, in the Letter of Peter. (the Person spoken of in this Chapter) part of which Letter Theodor has recorded, Book 4. Chap. 22. Eccles. Hist.

* In the Original he is termed Prefect of Alexandria; which Title was sometimes given to the Prefects of Egypt; as it has been observed before.

C H A P. XXII.

That Sabinus the Macedonian Heretick has made no mention of those many Mischiefs which hapned at Lucius's Insultment. But they are recorded in a Letter written by Peter; who made his escape, and fled to Damasius [Bishop] of Rome. But the Arians and Lucius were the Authors of many mischievous Practices and Cruelties, against those Holy Persons who led a Monastick life in the Solitudes.

Moreover, what mischiefs hapned at Lucius's Induction [into the See of Alexandria,] or what was done against those persons that were ejected, as well in, as without the Courts of Judicature; and how some were subjected to various Tortures, and others were banish'd, even after they had been tortured; [of any of these particulars] there is not the least mention made by Sabinus. For, in regard he was a Semi-Arian, he concealed the enormous Villanies of his Friends. But Peter has manifestly display'd them to the view of all men, in his own Letters, which he sent about to the Churches every-where, after his escape * out of prison. This † person, as soon as he could make an escape out of his imprisonment, fled to Damasius Bishop of Rome. But the Arians, altho' few in number, notwithstanding were re-possest'd of the Alexandrian Churches. Not long after, an Imperial Edict [came forth, wherein] it was ordered, that [all] the Embracers of the Homousian Opinion should be ejected out of Alexandria, and [driven] from all parts of Egypt. And the Governor of Egypt was commanded, with a numerous Army of Soldiers every-where to put to flight and chase away those, whom Lucius should order [to be ejected.] At the same time they molested, disturbed, and in a most cruel and hostile manner assaulted, the Monasteries in the Desert. For armed Men rush'd in upon Persons unarm'd, who would not stretch forth so much as their Hand to strike a stroke; and destroyed them with such cruelty and barbarity, that what they perpetrated against them is inexpressible.

C H A P. XXIII.

A Catalogue of the Holy Monks [who lived] in the Desert.

BUT, in regard we have made mention of the Monasteries in Egypt, nothing hinders but we may give an account in short concerning them. The Monasteries in Egypt had their Original (tis probable) from very great antiquity; but they were enlarged and much increased by a pious Man, whose name was Ammon. This person, when young, had an aversion for Marriage. But when some of his nearest Relatives entreated him not to speak reproachfully of Matrimony, but that he would marry a Wife; he was prevailed upon, and entered into a matrimonial state of life: And immediately after he had taken the Virgin out of the * Bride-chamber, and with the usual solemnity led her into his Lodging-room; at length when his Friends and Acquaintance were gone away, he took the Apostolick Book, read St. Paul's Epistle to the Corinthians, and expounded to his Wife the Apostle's admonitions to married Persons. And making an addition of several particulars from elsewhere, he inform'd her, how many burdensome inconveniences do accompany marriage; how full of grief and disquietude the cohabitation of man and woman is, and what pangs attend a woman great with child; adding withal, the grief and troubles [which arise] from the breeding up of children. [On the other hand] he added the conveniency of chastity, how great a freedom attends a pure life, how unpolluted it is, and void of all uncleanness; and that Virginity places persons in the nearest alliance to God. Having discours'd of these and many other such-like particulars to his Virgin-wife, he persuades her, that before they should have any carnal knowledge of each other, she would together with him renounce a secular life. When they had made this agreement between themselves, they retired to the mountain called Nitria. There they lived in a Cottage, and for some short time made use of one Aestick apartment in common, without the knowledge of any difference between the Masculine and Feminine Sex, but being (according to the Apostle) one in Christ. Not long after, the new and unpolluted Bride spake these words to Ammon: It is not decent for you (said she,) who with the greatest strictness imaginable do profess Chastity, to look upon upon a woman (a) in so narrow an habitation. Wherefore if you please, we will perform our Ascetic exercises apart. With this compact also both parties were well pleased. And being separated one from the other, they thus spent the remainder of their lives; abstaining from Wine and Oyl, and feeding upon dry bread only, which they eat sometimes after one days [fasting,] at others after two, at other times after many. Antonius, who was this Ammon's Cotemporary, saw his soul after his death taken up [into Heaven] by Angels, as Athanasius Bishop of Alexandria does declare in * his Life of Anonius. Moreover, very many persons imitated this Ammon's life: And by degrees the Mountains of Nubia and Seetis were filled with multitudes of Monks. To write whose lives, would be the subject of a particular work. But in regard there were amongst them persons of great piety, who were eminent for their Ascetic discipline, lived Apostolick lives, and did, and said some things that were useful and worthy to be recorded, I thought it expedient [to select] some few passages out of many, and intermix them with my History, in order to the Reader's advantage. 'Tis reported therefore, that this Ammon never saw himself naked, saying, that it was misbecoming a Monk to behold his own naked Body. And being one time desirous to pass a River, he was so loath to uncloath himself; but pray'd to God, that he might have a passage over without impeding the resolution he had taken: and an Angel convey'd him to the other side of the River. Didymus, another Monk, altho' he lived ninety years, yet kept company with no Man during his whole life. Another, by name Arsenius, would not separate the younger Monks, who had committed an offence, from Communion, but those only that were elderly: for he said, that a young Monk being excommunicated, becomes || contumacious; but an elderly Monk does quickly become sensible of the grief of Excommunication. Pior eat his meat walking. When one asked him why he fed after that manner; I will not (said he) go to meat, as to a serious and set work, but as to an incident and by-business. To another, questioning him concerning the same thing, he answered; left. (says he) whilst I am eating, my mind should be affected with any bodily pleasure. Isidorus said, that it was forty years since he was sensible of Sin in his Mind; and that he never consented, either to Lust or Anger. Pambos, a Man illiterate, went to a person, that by him he might be taught a Psalm. And having heard the first verse of the thirty eighth Psalm, which runs thus, * I said I will take heed to my ways, that I offend not with my tongue; he refused to hear the second verse, and went away, saying, that this one verse was enough for him, in case he could learn it perfectly, and in reality practise and perform it. And when he who had given him the verse to learn, reproved him, because he had not seen him in a whole six months space, he answered; I have not yet truly and indeed learnt the verse of the Psalm. Many years after this, to one of his Acquaintance, enquiring of him, whether he had learnt the verse, his answer was, during the space of these nineteen years I have scarce learned to * Fulfill it effectually. The same person (when one gave him Gold [to be bestowed

* And the word of the Apostle, (which has the same import) signifies a Wedding-chamber, Dining-room, or Entertaining-room. See Stephens's Thesaur. G. & L. in the word nuptia. The seventy two Translators do use this term (at Joel 2. 16. and at Psalm 119. 5.) to express the Hebrew word מִדְּבָר, which was a Tabernacle or Tent set up on purpose, for the performance of the Solemnities (usual amongst the Jews) of betrothing between the Man and Woman.

* Or, out of his bonds.
† Peter.

ed for the maintenance of the poor, and said to him, tell the sum which I have given) reply'd, there is no need of telling the money, but of a right and sound disposition of Mind. The same Pambos, upon the entreaty of Athanasius the Bishop, came out of the Desert to Alexandria: And seeing a Woman-player there, he brake forth into tears. When the Persons in presence ask'd him, why he wept; Two things (said he) trouble me; the one is, this Woman's destruction: the other, because I do not use so much diligence and industry to please God, as she does to delight obscene Men. Another of them said, that a Monk, unless he will work, is to be involved in the same condemnation with the covetous and rapacious Person. Petrus was well furnished with a knowledge in Natural Speculations, and frequently expounded sometimes one thing, at other times another, to such as address'd themselves to him. At every one of his Lectures, he made a Prayer to God. But, amongst the Monks [who lived] at that time, there were two pious persons who bore the same name. For each of them had the appellation of Macarius. The one was born in the Upper Egypt; the other came from the City Alexandria. Both of them were famous upon several accounts, [to wit,] for their Ascetic Exercises, for their Morals, for their Conversation, and for the Miracles wrought by their hands. The Egyptian Macarius wrought so many Cures, and drove so numerous a company of Devils out of persons possess'd, that [to relate] what he performed by the Grace of God, would require a particular and separate work. Towards those who came to him, he behaved himself with an austere gravity, temper'd with caution and circumspection. But the Alexandrian Macarius, altho' he was every way like the Egyptian Macarius, yet he differ'd from him in this, that he shew'd himself cheerful and pleasant towards those who came into his company, and by his courteous behaviour and complaisance induced young men to embrace an Ascetic course of life. Evangrius, Scholar to these Macarius's, having before been a Philosopher in words only, learned [from them] that Philosophy [which consists] in deeds and actions. * He having been ordained Deacon by Gregorius Naxianzenus at Constantinople, went afterwards with him into Egypt, where he convers'd with those fore-mention'd persons, and imitated their course of life. Nor were the Miracles wrought by his hands, fewer in number than those performed by his Masters. The same Evangrius wrote Books of very great use: one whereof has this Title (b) The Monk, or concerning a Wise Virtue. Another is entitled, (b) In Head of The Gnostick, or to him who is reputed worthy of the Monk's knowledge. This Book is divided into Fifty Chapters. A third is termed Antirreticus, [or The Refutation, being a Collection] from the Sacred Scriptures, against the tempting Evil (b) Monastic as 'tis apparent from his Version. Notwithstanding Nicephorus (Book 11. Chap. 42.) confirms the common reading. But, as to Evangrius's other Book here mention'd, he words the title of it thus: Γνωστικὸς ὁ δὲ τῶν καλῶν ἀνθρώπων γνώσις, ὁ Γνωστικὸς, ὁ concerning him who is reputed worthy of knowledge. It may also be written (as it is here in Socrates) thus, or to him who is reputed worthy of knowledge: which reading we have followed in our Version. Concerning this Evangrius's Books, see Jerome's Fragment, in his Epistle to Crispion against the Pedagogs (c) where he informs us, that Evangrius was an Origenist. Palladius (in Lusitania) says Evangrius wrote three Books. The first of these he calls Isis, The Saint; the second Marcellus, The Monk; the third Asiaticus, The Refutation, which is against the frauds of the Devil. Palladius terms that Book of Evangrius's, The Saint, which Socrates here calls The Gnostick. Vale.

* See Socrates Hist. chap. 21.

† Or, Origenes, or Expositious.

‡ Or, Origenes.

* See Psalm 39. v. 1.

* Or, Psalm.

† Or, Origenes, or Expositious.

* Evangrius.

(b) In Head of The Monk's knowledge. This Book is divided into Fifty Chapters. A third is termed Antirreticus, [or The Refutation, being a Collection] from the Sacred Scriptures, against the tempting Evil Monastic.

Valentinus
and Valens.

Spirits; it is divided into eight parts, according to the number of the eight thoughts. [He wrote] also fix hundred Prognostick Problems; and moreover, two Books in Verse; the one to those Monks [who live] in Monasteries or Convents; the other to the Virgin. How admirable these Books of his are, they that read them will perceive. It is not unreasonable, as I suppose, to annex to what has been said before, some few passages recorded by him, concerning the Monks: For he says word for word, thus. It is also necessary to make an enquiry into the ways of those Monks, who have heretofore walked

* Or,
Rightly.

* uprightly, and to conform [our selves] to the pattern thereof: For many things have been well said and done by them. Amongst which this was the saying of one of them, That a drier, slender, and not irregular sort of Diet, joynd with Love, will in a short time bring a Monk to a Port void of all inquietude. The same Monk freed one of his Brethren from his being disturbed with Apparitions in the Night, enjoying him to minister to the Sick, whilst he was fasting. And being asked [why he commanded him to do that,] such troubles as these [said he] are composed and extinguish'd with nothing so easily, as with mercy and compassion. A Philosopher of those times came to Antonius the Just, and said unto him, O Father, how can you hold out, being destitute of the comfort of Books? Antonius replied, My Book, O Philosopher, is the nature of things made, and 'tis ready at hand as often as I am desirous of reading the Words of God. That aged person the Egyptian Macarius, that chosen Vessel, asked me, Why by remembering the Injuries we receive from Men, we destroy that Strength and Faculty of Memory which is in our Minds: But by remembering the mischiefs done to us by the Devils, we continue unhurt? And when I was doubtful what answer I should make, and entreated him to explain the reason hereof to me; the first [said he] is an Affection of the Mind, which is contrary to nature: The second is agreeable to nature. I went one time to the Holy Father Macarius, at Noon-day, when it was very hot, and being most extremely thirsty, requested some Water to drink. His Answer to me was, Content your self with the Shade; for many persons who are at this time travelling by Land, or making a voyage by Sea, do want [the refreshment of] that. Then, I conversed with him about Abstinence, and he said unto me, Be courageous and confident, my Son: For these twenty years compleat, I have not taken my fill either of Bread, Water, or Sleep. For I have eaten my Bread by weight; I have drank my Water by measure:

(c) Instead of [ἐκείνῳ τῷ ὅτι] the reading in the Florentine M. S. and in Nicephorus is [ἐκείνῳ τῷ ὅτι ὁ πατήρ] a little part of a sleep, or, a nap. For that sleep, which Macarius took by leaning his head against a Wall, was a part of a sleep, rather than a sleep. For he slept but a very little while. Wherefore, he is said to have stollen, rather than to have taken asleep. Valef.

that Book, he gave [the money he had for it,] to feed the hungry, and utter'd this saying worthy to be recorded; I have told that Book which sayeth, * Sell that thou hast and give to the poor. There is an Island about Alexandria, situated at the Northern part of that City, beyond the Lake called Mareotis. Near that Island dwells a Valentinian Monk (d) of Parembolē, and a most approved ascetic person amongst the Gnosticks, who has declared, [that all things practised by the Monks, are done for] (a) Three reasons, for the sake of God, of Nature, on the account of Custom, of Necessity, and of the Work of the Hands. It was the usual saying of the same person also, that by nature there was only one virtue, even as this but that in respect of the Faculties of the Soul, it place For was divided into several Species. For the light of Christ the Sun, said he, is without any figure; but it does usually receive its figure from the Windows through it thus; which it enters. Another of the Monks was wont in a manner to say, I do therefore every way eschew pleasures, new as that I may * prevent the occasions of anger. For I know very well, that anger does always † militate for pleasures, and does disquiet my mind, and expel knowledge. One of the aged Monks said, that Charity knows not how to keep the † Depositum of Meat or Money. This was another saying of the same person; I do not remember that I was ever twice deceived as to the same thing by the Devil, of the Gnosticks.

Langus, Nicephorus's Translator, has rendered this passage in Evagrius, thus: Habitas in eā Monachus Gnosticonum Ordinis celeberrimus, in eā [Island] dwells a most famous Monk of the Order of the Gnosticks. But first, Evagrius does not say, that that Monk dwelt in that Island beyond the Lake Mareotis; but only, that he dwelt near that Island. For that's the import of the word παρεμβολή. Secondly, παρεμβολή [Parembolē] does not signify a Seal, or an Order: nor are the Gnosticks taken in this place for a Seal of Heretics; but 'tis a sort of Monks, concerning whom Evagrius wrote a Book. Parembolē therefore is a Village not far from Alexandria, near the Lake Mareotis. Athanasius makes mention of it in his second Apologetic against the Arians, where he produces the Catalogue of Clergy-men, whom Orelanus had in the City, and within the Territory of Alexandria. After his mentioning of the Presbyters and Deacons of Melitius's party, which he had at Alexandria, he adds these Words; αἱ Μοναχὲς Πρεσβύτεροι τῆς Παρεμβολῆς, and Macarius Presbyter of Parembolē. Parembolē is also mentioned in the Notitia Imperii Romani, wherein were the Quarters of the second Trajan Legion under the command of the Comar of the Military Affairs throughout Egypt. Notwithstanding Ammoniacus places Alexander's Parembolē near the Lake Mareotis. Here therefore dwelt that Monk, who was so eminent amongst the Gnosticks. Valef.

These passages are word for word recorded in Evagrius's Book, entitled The Practick. In that Book of his, to which he gave this Title, The Gnostick, he says thus: *We have been informed from Gregorius the Just, that the Virtues and their Contemplations are four; Prudence, Fortitude, Temperance and Justice. And the business of Prudence, he said was, to contemplate those Intelligent and Holy Powers * without any reason.* * Or, without For his Doctrine was, that these were manifested by Wisdom: [The property] of Fortitude [as he affirmed,] was, to persist in what was true, although a resistance were made, and † not to turn aside towards those things which are not. He made answer, that it was the property of Temperance, to receive the Seed from the First [and Great] Husbandman, and to repel him who would * Sow He it over again. [Lastly, he assigned this Work] to Justice, to give an account [of things] agreeable to the worth and dignity of every person; [which] of Virtue does set forth some things obscurely; it gives the knowledge of others by Riddles; and it plainly manifests other some, for the benefit and advantage of the more unskilful and simple Heavens. That Pillar of Truth Basilus, the Cappadocian, said, that that knowledge, which is accidentally procured from Men, is improved by a continual Meditation and Exercise; but, that infused by the Grace † Μὴ μεταβάλλειν, not to turn into, &c. See Colloq. 1. 18. where this term occurs.

* Matth.
19. 21.

Valentini-Grace of God [is increased] by Justice, * Patience, and Mercy: And that the former [sort of Knowledge,] is possible, may be received by those who are liable to Disquietude and Troubles of Mind: But that they only are capable of the latter, who are free from all such Disquietude and Troubles; who also, during the interim of their being at prayer, do contemplate that proper and peculiar Light of their Mind, which does illuminate them.

Athanasius, that Holy Luminary of the Egyptians, says, that Moles is order'd † To place the Table on the North-side. The Gnosticks therefore may know, who it is that blows against them, and let them courageously endure every Temptation; and with a cheerful mind nourish those that come unto them.

(c) Scorpion the Angel of the Church of the Thmüta said, that the Mind having drank a full draught of Spiritual Knowledge, is [thereby] perfectly cleansed: But, that the parts of the Mind inflamed with anger, are cured by love: And that wicked Desires, which flow into [the Mind,] are stopt by Abstinence. Exercise you self with a continual Meditation upon the Discourses and Reasons which relate to Providence and the Judgment [of God,] (says that great and skillful Doctor Didymus;) and attempt to bear in mind the Subject of those Reasons and Discourses. For, almost all persons do err in these matters. And the Reasons and Discourses which concern a Judgment, you will find in the difference of Bodies, and * in all parts of the World. But the Accounts and Discourses which relate to a Providence [you will discern] in those ways which lead us from Vice and Ignorance, to Virtue and Knowledge.

the Elegance of his wit, was first siled Scholasticus, &c. He died in Constantius's Reign, before the Seleucian Synod, that is, before the year of Christ 359. For in this Seleucian Synod, amongst the Bishops of Aca-cius's party, Basilianus is reckoned Bishop of Thmüta, a City of Angu-lia, or Angulianica. For Basilianus is not to be heeded, who (in his Annotations on the Roman Martyrology,) says, Thmüta was a City in the Province Scythia. Scythia was not the name of a Province, but was it self rather in the Province Angulianica. And yet Marcellinus (Book 22.) places Thmüta in (that properly called) Egypt. Valei.

Thus much we have taken out of Evagrius's Books and inferred here. There was also another admirable person amongst the Monks, by name Ammonius, who had so little of curiosity in him, that being at Rome with Athanasius, he was desirous of viewing none of those magnificent works in that City; but saw only the Cathedral of Peter and Paul. This Ammonius, when he was to have been forced to take a Bishoprick, fled away, and cut off his own Right Ear, that by a * Mutilation of his Body he might avoid being ordained a Bishop. Sometime afterwards, Evagrius (who was also to have been forced to [take] a Bishoprick by Theophilus Bishop of Alexandria, and had made his escape, without making any Mutilation upon his own Body;) accidentally met Ammonius, and in a facetious manner said unto him, That he had done ill to cut off his own Ear, and that upon that account he was culpable before God. To whom Ammonius made this return: But do not you think, Evagrius, that you shall be punished, because you have cut out your own Tongue, and out of a love to your self, would not make use of that Grace which was bestowed upon you? Moreover, at that time there were in the Solitudes many other admirable and pious persons, the mention of whom in this Work of ours would be too long and tedious. Besides, we must of necessity digress from the the design we have propos'd to our selves, should we give a particular account of the Lives of every one of these Persons; and of the Miracles they performed by their eminent Sanctity wherewith they were endued. If any one be desirous of an accurate account of these Men, and would know what actions they perform'd and did, what sayings they utter'd conducive to the profit and advantage of the hearers, and how the Wild Beasts were obedient to them: there is a particular Book, elaborated by Palladius the Monk, who was Evagrius's Scholar; wherein all things appertaining to these persons, are with great accuracy discours'd of at large. In which Book [Palladius] makes mention of Women also, who followed a course of life like to the foresaid men. Further, Evagrius and Palladius flourish'd a little after the death of Valens [Angustus.] But we will now return to that place, whence we have digressed.

C II A P. XXIV.

Concerning those Holy Monks who were exiled; how God (by the Miracles they performed) attracted all persons to himself.

WHEN therefore the Emperor Valens had by his Edict given order, that as well the Orthodox in Alexandria, as those in the other parts of Egypt, should be forcibly driven from their Habitations; Depopulation and Ruin forthwith defaced and overthrew all things: whilst some persons were dragg'd before the Seats of Judicature; others thrown into Prison; and others tortured by other methods. For they inflicted various sorts of punishment upon persons that were great lovers of peace and quietness. After these things were done at Alexandria, in such a manner as Lucius thought good, and when Euzoïus was return'd to Antioch, these [two] persons hastned immediately to the Solitudes of Egypt; [I mean] the Commander in chief of the Milice, with a numerous company of Soldiers, and Lucius the Arian. For he himself was not at that time absent, but (without shewing any compassion in the least towards the assembly of those Holy Men) perpetrated worse Barbarities than the Soldiers themselves did. When they arrived at the place, they apprehended the Men performing their usual exercises; [to wit,] praying, curing diseases, and casting out Devils. But these [Wretches] little regarding God's Miracles, would not permit so much as the usual and solemn prayers to be performed in the Oratories, but drove the Holy Persons even out of those places. Nor did they acquiesce in the doing hereof only, but proceeded on further, and (a) made use of Weapons against them. These (a) Instead of [Cruelties] Rufinus says he was (b) present at and saw, and was a fellow-sufferer with these persons. Wherefore, the words of the Apostle were renewed against them. For, they were mock'd of the multitude; [I read] τοῖς ἄλλοις ἐνέχοντο, made use of weapons. This reading is confirmed by Rufinus, Book 2. Chap. 3. Which passage in Rufinus Socrates does here take notice of. Valef.

(b) Instead of [παρ' ἐν] we read [παρὰ, was present at.] See Rufinus, Book 2. Chap. 4. where his Words are these, Quæ præfens vidi loquor, & eorum gesta refero, quoniam in passionibus suis esse promerui. I speak what I was present at, and saw; and I relate their Actions, of whose Sufferings I had the favour to be a Companion. Valef.

Valentini-
anus and Valens.

* He alludes to that passage, at
Heb. 11.
36, 37, 38.
† Kai τὰ
τα μαρ-τυρία, especially when at they received a Testimony, or Commun-
dation, &c.

and * had trial of Scourgings, they were stript naked, were bound, were flogged, were slain with the Sword, [they were] persons that wandered about in the Solitudes, in Sheep-skins, and Goat-skins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented, of whom the world was not worthy; they wandered in Deserts, and in Mountains, and in Dens, and Caves of the Earth: † Nowwithstanding they received a testimony both from their Faith, and from the Works and Cures, which the Grace of God performed by their hands. But, (as 'tis probable) Divine Providence permitted these persons to suffer these things, having provided some better thing, that by those miseries which they underwent, others might obtain salvation in God. And this was demonstrated by the event. When therefore these admirable persons were superior to all that force and violence used towards them, Lucius, quite out of heart, advises the Commander of the Military Forces, to banish the Fathers of the Monks. These [Fathers of the Monks] were the Egyptian Macarius, and he of Alexandria who bore the same name. These persons therefore were exiled into an Island, wherein there was no Christian Inhabitant. In that Island there was an [Heathen] Temple, and a Priest in it, whom all the Inhabitants worshipped like a God. But when these pious persons arrived in that Island, all the Demons there were seized with a fear and trembling. At the same time also this accident happened: The Priest's Daughter possessed on a sudden by a Devil, fell into a rage and overturn'd all things. She was extremely unruly, and could by no means be quieted; but cried out with a loud voice, and spake to those pious persons, saying, Why are you come to cast us out from hence also? These Men therefore did in that place give another demonstration of that * Power of theirs, which they had received from the Grace of God. For they drove the Devil out of the Virgin, and [having restored her] to her right mind, delivered her to her Father; whereby they induced both the Priest, and also all the Inhabitants of that Island to [embrace] the Faith of the Christian Religion. Wherefore, (c) they cast away their Images immediately; changed the Fabric of their Temple into the form of a Church; receiv'd Baptism, and with cheerfulness learned all the [Doctrines] of Christianity. Thus these admirable persons, persecuted upon account of the Homöusian Faith, rendered themselves more approved, brought salvation to others, and made the Faith more firm and strong.

* Or,
Work.

(c) Here, there was a whole line wanting, which we have made good from the Florentine and Sforzian MSS. after this manner [τὰ ἰδὲ εἰδόμενα ἐκείνων τὸ δὲ οἶμα τὸ παρὰ τοῦ θεοῦ ἐκείνων, ταῦτα αὐτοὶ ἐκείνων] immediately changed] the Fabric of their Temple into [the form] of a Church.] Epiphanius Scholasticus found this reading in his Copy; as 'tis apparent from his Version. Valef.

CHAP. XXV.

Concerning Didymus, a Blind Man.

ABOUT the same times God produced another person, by whose Testimony he thought fit the Faith should be corroborated and confirm'd. For Didymus, a man admirable and eloquent, adorned with all sorts of Learning, flourish'd at that time. This person being very young, when he had but just learned to read, fell into a distemper of his Eyes; wherewith he was sorely troubled, and lost his Eye-sight. But God, instead of Corporal Eyes, gave him those of the Mind. For what he could not be instructed in by seeing, he learnt by hearing. For being of an apt and ingenious disposition from his Childhood, and endued with an excellent wit, he far surpass'd even those [(a) ripe-witted Children] who had the acutest sight. For he became Master of the Rules of Grammar with much ease, and arriv'd to the knowledge of those of Rhetorick with more celerity. Proceeding on from thence to Philosophy, with an admirable facility he learnt Logic, Arithmetic, and Music; and treasured up within his own mind the other Precepts of the Philosophers, in such a manner, that he could readily dispute against those who had perfectly learnt those Arts by the benefit of their Eyes. Moreover, he was so exactly well-skill'd in the Divine Oracles of the Old and New Testament, that he publish'd many Discourses upon them: He dedicated Three Books concerning the Trinity; and interpreted Origen's Books Concerning Principles, setting forth (b) Comments thereupon; wherein he asserts that those Books were incomparably well-written, and that their Cavils are frivolous, who accuse Origen, and make it their business to speak reproachfully of his Works: For they are not able, says he, to arrive at the knowledge of that Author's Perspicacity and Prudence. If any person therefore be desirous of knowing Didymus's great Learning, and the fervency of his mind, he may have an account thereof by a perusal of the Books elaborated by him. It's reported, that Antonius [the Monk] discours'd with this Didymus, (c) long before the times of Valens, at such time as he left the Desert, and came to Alexandria upon account of the Arians; and that perceiving the Learning and Knowledge of this person, he spake these words to him: O Didymus! let not the loss of your bodily Eyes trouble you: For you are deprived of such Eyes, (d) as the Flies and Gnats can see with: But rejoice, that you have those Eyes, wherewith the Angels see, by which even God himself is discerned, and his Light comprehended. This was the saying of the pious Antonius to Didymus long before these times [we are creating of]. But at that time, Didymus was look'd upon to be the greatest Paragon and Defender of the genuine Faith, who disputed against the Arians, unravell'd their Sophistick Cavils, and confuted their Adulterate and Fraudulent Discourses.

(c) Epiphanius Scholasticus, and the other translators have rendered this place ill; as if Antonius the Monk had come to Alexandria in the times of Valens Augustus. But, 'tis manifest, that Antonius died in the Reign of Constantius. For one informs us hereof, in his Chronicon, and in his Life of Eulalianus. 'Tis uncertain, in what year of Constantius's Empire Antonius left the Solitudes, and came down to Alexandria; whether it was about the beginning of Constantius's Reign, before the Ordination of Gregorius the Arian; or rather, after the Synod of Sardica, and Athanasius's second restitution. Valef.

(d) Instead of [τὸ οὐκ ὄντα τὸ πρὸς τὸν θεὸν βλέπειν, as the Flies and Gnats can see with], in Cedrenus, at the sixth year of Constantius, the reading is [τὸ οὐκ ὄντα τὸ πρὸς τὸν θεὸν βλέπειν, as the Flies and Gnats can do harm to]. Nor did Epiphanius Scholasticus find it written otherwise in his Copy, as 'tis apparent from this his Version: Quibus & Muscæ & Culicæ nocere possunt, to which the Flies and Gnats can do harm. And yet Rufinus, (Euseb. Hist. Book 2. Chap. 7) out of whom Sozomen borrowed this Story, defends the common reading, which we have followed in our Version. And Jerome also does confirm this our reading, in his Epistle to Castrinus. Valef.

CHAP. XXVI.

Concerning Basilus of Caesarea, and Gregorius of Nazianzum.

DIVINE Providence set up Didymus indeed as an Opponent to the Arians at Alexandria: But [in order to their confutation] in other Cities, [it

Valentini-
anus and Valens.

(a) The word [τὸ
ῥητὸν]

which we have rendered [ripe-witted].

(b) Children
[children].

(c) Must be expunged [must be expunged].

(d) Seems to have crept
in here, out
of the following line. Epiphanus Scholasticus
acknow-ledges it not. For thus he renders it [quid cum a puro fuisse ingenium, vi-ribus invisi-bus]

(e) Concerning these Comments of Antonius
the Monk.

(f) In his life and Book against Rufinus.
Valef.

[it made use of], Basilius Casariensis, and Gregorius Nazianzenus. Concerning whom I judge it now opportune to give a short account. The memory and Fame of these two persons, which is still preserved amongst all men, and the learning contained in the Books written by them, might indeed be sufficient to set forth the praises and commendations of each of them. But, in regard they were persons in an eminent manner useful to the Church at that time, and were preserv'd [by God,] as being the Incentives of the [Orthodox] Faith; the Subject of our History does of necessity engage us in an especial manner to make mention of these two men. Should any one therefore be desirous of comparing Basilius and Gregorius with one another, and of giving an account of the Life, Morals and Virtues that were in them; he would be in a great doubt which of them he should prefer before the other; for they were both equal to one another, whether you respect their [pious and] exact course of Life, or their Learning; I mean as well their Grecian Literature, as their knowledge in the Sacred Scriptures. For, when very young, they went to Athens, and were the hearers of Himerius and Probaresius, the two most eminent Sophists of those times; afterwards they frequented [the School of] Libanius at Antioch in Syria, and by their industry arriv'd at the highest accomplishments of *Eloquence. And when they were judged worthy to be professors of Eloquence, many persons perswaded them to enter upon the teaching and profession thereof. Others advis'd them to practise the Law, but they desisted both these sorts of Life: and discontinuing their studies of Eloquence, embraced a Monastick life. Having therefore had a taste of the Precepts of Philosophy from him who at that time taught Philosophy, at Antioch, not long after they procur'd Origen's Works, and from them got an insight into the interpretation of the Sacred Scriptures. For the great fame of Origen did at that time fill the whole World. When they had with great studiousness exercised themselves in the perusal of those Books, they powerfully oppos'd the Assertors of Arianism. And altho' the Arians *cited Origen's Books, in confirmation (as they supposed) of their own opinion; yet these two persons confuted them, and evidently demonstrated, that they understood not the meaning of Origen. Indeed, the Arians, and their then Abettor Eunomius, altho' they were at that time accounted persons of great eloquence, yet, as often as they engaged in a discourse with Gregorius and Basilius, 'twas made evidently apparent that they were men altogether ignorant and unlearned. Basilius was first promoted to a † Diaconate by Melchius Bishop of Antioch; and that he was preferred to the (b) Bishoprick of his own Country, I mean Cæsarea in Cappadocia, and undertook the Care of the Churches.

year of Christ 371. But the same Author does affirm, that Basilius was yet but a Presbyter, in the eighth year of Valens. See Theophanes's and Cedrenus's words at the said eighth year of Valens. Gregorius Nazianzenus does confirm the same in his Oration de Laudibus Basili. Where he does attest in express words, that Basilius was yet but a Presbyter only of the Church of Cæsarea, at such time as Valens, guarded with a sort of Heretical Prelates, undertook an expedition against the Churches of the East, which he hasten'd to deliver up to the Arians. Moreover, Valens undertook this expedition against the Orthodox on his own third Consulate, that is on the year of Christ 370, as our Socrates does affirm: (compare the 14th and 17th chapters of this 4th Book.) Gregorius Nyssenus confirms this, in his first Book against Eunomius (who had upbraided Basilius with fearfulness and pusillanimity,) where he describes Valens's preparations and expedition against the Churches, in these words: ἐξήλασε ὁ βασιλεὺς Κωνσταντινούπολιν εἰς τὴν ἑσπέραν Βασιλεύς, &c. The Emperor went from Constantinople into the East, put up in his mind with the late successful and fortunate actions he had performed against the Barbarians. That is, after the War against the Goths, and the League made with them. Which happened in the year of Christ 369, as Amm. Marcellinus attests. Wherefore, that Expedition of Valens's to destroy God's Churches, hapned in the year of our Lord 370, as I have now said. Now, that Basilius was then no more than a Presbyter, his Brother Gregorius does in the same place inform us. For, he says, that the Prefect of the Prætorium, to wit, Modestus, at first made use of flatteries, and promised Basilius a Presbiter and an Ecclesiastick preferment, provided he would obey the Emperor. Nyssenus's Words are these: *ταῦτά μιν εἶπε ὁ ἐν Βασιλείᾳ τιμὴν, ὁ τὴν ἐκκλησίαν ἐκκαλεῖται. Therefore Basilius was not Bishop of Cæsarea, at such time as Modestus endeavoured to pervert him. Moreover, Modestus first bore the Prefecture of the Prætorium, when Gratianus II. and Pius were Coss. in the year of Christ 371, as I have remark'd in my notes on the 29th Book of Amm. Marcellinus, pag. 380. It may also be proved by another argument, that Basilius was preferred to the Episcopate of Cæsarea after the year of Christ 370. For Nazianzen in the Funeral Oration which he wrote on him, says that Basilius was but a Presbyter, at such time as that Famine (by far the worst of all the Famines that are mentioned to have hapned at any time) hapned in Cappadocia. Now, this is the Famine, which our Socrates mentions in the sixteenth Chapter of this Book; it hapned in the third Consulate of Valentinianus and Valens. Valef.*

For being afraid; lest the novelty of the Arian Valens opinion should prey upon, and devour the Provinces of Pontus, he went (c) with great haste into those parts: Where he constituted Monasteries, instructed the Inhabitants in his own Doctrines, and confirm'd the minds of those that wavered. (d) Gregorius [being constituted] Bishop of Nazianzenus a small City in Cappadocia, over which Church his own Father had before presided, took in the same course that Basilius did. For he also (things) went up and down to the Cities; and corroborated those that were feeble and dispirited as to his Faith; but more especially, he made frequent journeys to Constantinople, and confirmed the Orthodox in that City by his Preaching and Disputes of courses. Upon which account he was soon after Basilius, that Basilius, as yet but a Presbyter, went into those parts, with a design to oppose himself against the perditions of the Arians. Valef.

(d) Socrates borrowed this out of Rufinus; who (in Book 2. Chap. 9. Ecclesiast. Hist.) writes thus: Gregorius vero apud Nazianzum, &c. But Gregorius, being substituted Bishop in his father's stead, at the Town Nazianzum, beingly bore the storm of the Heretics. And yet 'tis manifest, that Gregorius was not made Bishop, but Coadjutor only to his own father Gregorius, in the Episcopate of Nazianzum; and upon this condition too, that he should not succeed his Father in that Bishoprick; as he himself attests in his Eighth Oration, and in his Poem concerning his own Life. He was first continued Bishop of Samsi by Basilius the Great, who had been the first Founder of this Bishoprick, that he might assure that place to his own Church; as Gregorius attests in the Poem concerning his own Life. From thence he was translated to the Constantinopolitan See, which he quickly left, betook himself to Nazianzum, and governed the Bishoprick of that place some while, till such time as, being wearied out with age and diseases, he made choice of his own Successor. Jerome's account therefore is true, whose words (in his Book De Script. Ecclesiast.) are these: Gregorius primus Samsiorum, deinde Nazianzenus Episcopus, &c. Gregorius, Bishop first of Samsi, and afterwards of Nazianzum, &c. And as strange, that altho' he governed three Bishopricks, yet they were all doubtful and uncertain. 'Tis plain, that in his Epistles he himself does frequently deny, that he ever presided over the Episcopate of Samsi, or ever performed any sacerdotal Office there. Neither Jerome's Scholar, nor Rufinus, do ascribe the Constantinopolitan Bishoprick to him. Lastly, he delivered the Bishoprick of Nazianzum to another, rather than governed it himself. Valef.

(a) What Socrates says here, is in my opinion false; viz. that Basilius and Gregorius, after they had finish'd the course of their learned Studies at Athens, were hearers of Libanius the Sophist at Antioch. Gregorius himself does refute this in his Poem concerning his own Life; where he says, that when he was in the thirtieth year of his age when he left Athens, and that his Friends would have detoured him at Athens, that he might be a Professor of Eloquence; (the same is attested by Rufinus, Book 2. Chap. 9. Ecclesiast. Hist.) but that he fled secretly from thence, and went into his own Country. Valef.

embraced a Monastick life. Having therefore had a taste of the Precepts of Philosophy from him who at that time taught Philosophy, at Antioch, not long after they procur'd Origen's Works, and from them got an insight into the interpretation of the Sacred Scriptures. For the great fame of Origen did at that time fill the whole World. When they had with great studiousness exercised themselves in the perusal of those Books, they powerfully oppos'd the Assertors of Arianism. And altho' the Arians *cited Origen's Books, in confirmation (as they supposed) of their own opinion; yet these two persons confuted them, and evidently demonstrated, that they understood not the meaning of Origen. Indeed, the Arians, and their then Abettor Eunomius, altho' they were at that time accounted persons of great eloquence, yet, as often as they engaged in a discourse with Gregorius and Basilius, 'twas made evidently apparent that they were men altogether ignorant and unlearned. Basilius was first promoted to a † Diaconate by Melchius Bishop of Antioch; and that he was preferred to the (b) Bishoprick of his own Country, I mean Cæsarea in Cappadocia, and undertook the Care of the Churches.

† Or, the Office of a Deacon.
(b) Basilius says, Basilius

was preferred to the Bishoprick of Cæsarea, in the year of Christ 369; and this he attempts to prove from Gregorius Nyssenus's testimony. Theophanes and Cedrenus, in his Chronicle, do place the beginning of Basilius's Episcopate, on the ninth year of Valens, which was the Valentinianus and Valens.

* That is, Basilus and Gregorius. (e) This account disagrees from what the two Gregorius's, (to wit, Nazianzenus in his funeral Oration, and Basilus in his first Book against Eunomius) do relate concerning Basilus. For they do attest, that Basilus was not brought before Molestus the Prefect of the Praetorium at Antioch, but that this was done in the City Caesarea. Sozomen therefore (Eccl. Hist. Book 6. Chap. 16. has truly corrected Sozomen's mistake here; where he relates, that Valens came from Antioch to Caesarea, and ordered Basilus should be brought before the Tribunal of the Prefect of the Praetorium. Further, you must observe, that Valens Augustinus came to Caesarea twice, and made an attempt to vanquish Basilus: His first journey thither was when Basilus was no more than a Presbyter; which (as we have shewn before) was in the year 370. This is evidently confirmed by Sozomen in his sixth Book. When he came the second time thither, 'tis not certain. But I conjecture it was on the year of Christ 371, or 372. Which I collect from Molestus's Praetudure, which falls on those years. Nazianzenus distinguishes these two journeys of Valens in his twelfth Oration, pag. 346. of his Works, Edit. Paris. 1609. Valef.

(f) Sozomen took this out of Rufinus, Book 2. Chap. 9. Eccl. Hist. But Gregorius Nyssenus, in his first Book against Eunomius, says, that Basilus stood before the Tribunal of Molestus the Prefect twice; once when he was Presbyter, and a second time when he was Bishop. But Nazianzen makes no mention of Basilus's former Examination. Valef.

(g) In Rufinus (Eccl. Hist. Book 2. Chap. 9.) this passage is thus worded; Utinam te non mutaret, i. wish you would not have changed your self. In which Words Basilus reproves Molestus, because from being a Catholick he was become an Arian, that he might please the Emperor. We are indeed told by Gregorius (in his funeral Oration) that Molestus was an Arian. Valef.

(h) Here Valentinianus Junior is called by another name, as we have observed before, Chap. 10. of this Book, note (A.) He was surnamed Galates, because he was born in Galatia. Further, in regard Sozomen does here term him puer, a young Child; our Opinion (which we have given in before) is very much confirmed, to wit, that these things were done about the Year of our Lord 371, or 372. For Valentinianus Junior was born in the year of Christ 366; as we have remarked before: From which year to the year 372, are six years complet. So Valentinianus Junior, called also Galates, died at six years old. For a Child of that age is rightly termed puer. Valef.

ter constituted Bishop over the people at Constantinople, by the suffrage of many Bishops. When therefore what * both these persons did came to the Emperor Valens's ears, he forthwith order'd (e) Basilus to be brought from Caesarea to Antioch. Immediately therefore he was convey'd thither, and by the Emperor's order was set before the Tribunal of the Prefects: (f) when the Prefect put this question to him, Why he would not embrace the Emperor's Faith? Basilus with a great deal of confidence found fault with the Emperor's Religion, and commended the Homousian Faith. But when the Prefect threatened him with death, would to God (said Basilus) it might happen to me, to be delivered from the Roads of the Body upon account of the Truth! Then, upon the Prefect's admonishing him to inspect and consider the matter more seriously with himself, 'tis reported that Basilus said, I am the same this day that I shall be to-morrow: (g) I wish that you would not have changed your self. After this Basilus continued that day in custody. Not long after, it hapned, that Valens's Son, a young child, whose name was (b) Galates, was seized with a sore distemper, in so much that his recovery was despaired of by the Physicians. The Empress Dominica, his Mother, did positively affirm to the Emperor, that she had been sorely disquieted with fearful and horrid Visions in her Dreams; and that the Child was visited with sickness, because of the Bishop's injurious usage. The Emperor, taking these things into consideration, sends for Basilus. And to make trial of him, expresses himself to him after this manner: If your Opinion be true, pray that my Son may not die. If you will believe, O Emperor! (replied Basilus,) as I do; and if [you will assent that] the Church shall be united, the Child shall live. When the Emperor would not consent to that, the will of God therefore be done (said Basilus) concerning the Child. After Basilus had spoken these words, [the Emperor] order'd he should be dismiss'd. But the Child died not long after. Let thus much be compendiously said concerning these persons.

Moreover, each of them wrote and published many, and those incomparable Books. Some of which Rufinus says were by * him translated into Latin. Basilus had two Brothers, Petrus and Gregorius. Petrus imitated Basilus's Monastic course of life: but Gregorius [followed] his eloquent way of teaching. He also finish'd that Book concerning the six days work, (which Basilus had taken pains about, and left imperfect) after his Brother's death: and recited a Funeral Oration [in praise of] Meletius Bishop of Antioch, at Constantinople. There are also several other Orations of his extant.

C H A P. XXVII.

Concerning Gregorius Thaumaturgus.

BUT, in regard how are apt to mistake, because of the likeness of the name, and by reason of the Books which in their Title are ascribed to Gregorius, you are to know, that there was another Gregorius of Pontus; who had his original extract at Neocaesarea in Pontus, and was ancients than these [Gregorius's.] For he was * Origen's Scholar. This Gregorius's fame is very great at Athens, at Egvryta, over the whole (a) Pontick Diocess, and (I had almost said) over the whole World. For having left the Schools at Athens, he went to Berytus, (4) at this time studied the Civil Law. Where being informed that Origen did interpret the sacred Scriptures at Caesarea, he went in great haste to that City: And having been an hearer of the Magnificent Exposition of the sacred Scriptures, he bid farewell to [his study of] the Roman Laws, and in future became wholly addicted [to Origen.] By whom he was instructed in the true Philosophy, and after that, his Parents recalling him, he returned into his own Country: Where first of all, whilst he was a Laick, he did many miracles; sometimes healing the diseased; at others driving away Devils by * Letters; [in fine,] he brought over the Professors of Gentilism [to the Faith,] not only by his words, but much more by the works he did. He is mentioned also by Pamphilus the Martyr, in the Books he wrote (b) concerning Origen. Whereto is annexed (c) Gregorius's Oration, wherein he returned thanks to Origen at his departure from him. There were therefore, that I may speak briefly, [many] Gregorius's. The first is this ancient, Origen's Scholar; the second, Nazianzenus; the third, Basilus's Brother. There was also another Gregorius at Alexandria, whom the Arians constituted Bishop [of that City] during the time of Athanasius's Exile. Thus much concerning these persons.

for he means Pamphilus's Apologetic in defence of Origen: concerning which consult I borius, in his Bibliotheca. Valef.

(e) In the Greek, 'tis thus worded: οὐδὲν ἄλλος ἱεροποιῶν ἡμεῖς which Origenius renders thus; Liber Gregorii quo Origen commendavit, Gregorius hoc, ubi in eo has commendat Origen. Christophorus trauitales it thus: Oratio Gregorii in Origenis commendationem inscripta, Gregorius's Oration written in praise of Origen. But, I cannot approve of this Version: For that Oration was not written by Gregorius Thaumaturgus in commendation of Origen, to return thanks to his master, when he left his School. Indeed, the Commentary Letters are termed οὐρακτικά. But there were not any Orationes ouerakal, commendatory Orations. Wherefore, I doubt not but it should be οὐρακτικά; although Nicephorus confirms the vulgar reading. Now, ἀλλοις ἐκτακτικῶς is a Valerianus Oration, as we have remarked in our notes on Euseb. Life of Constant. Book 3. Chap. 21. note (A.) Valef.

Valentinianus and Valens.

C H A P. XXVIII.

Concerning Novatus, and those from him termed Novatians. And, that those Novatians who inhabited Phrygia, altered [the time of celebrating] the Festival of Easter, and kept it on the same day the Jews did.

About this very time, the Novatians, who inhabited Phrygia, altered the day of celebrating the Feast of Easter. How this was done, I will declare; having first of all told you, upon what account the accurate and exact Canon of their Church does at this present flourish in the

(1) The Greeks usually term him Novatus, whose right name was Novatianus. Concerning whole Hæcclie, you may consult Eusebius, (Eccles. Hist. Book 6. chap. 41.) Epiphanius, the Author of the questions on the Old and New Testament, and Theodoret. Valef.

Persecution, which the Emperor Decius raised against the Churches. Becoming a Separatist therefore upon this account, and being elected to the Bishoprick [of Rome] by such Prelates as embrac'd the same sentiments with him, he wrote to the Churches every where, that they should not admit such persons as had sacrificed, to the [sacred] Mysteries; but should exhort them to repentance, and leave the pardoning of their offences to God, who is able, and has power to remit sins. The Inhabitants of every Province having received such Letters as these, gave their Judgments of the things therein signified, according to their own* dispositions and humours. For whereas Novatus had given notice, that those were not to be vouchsafed the participation of the † Mysteries, who after Baptism had fallen into [any] deadly sin; the promulgation of this Canon seem'd severe and cruel to some; but others admitted of this Rule, as just and equitable, and [of great use] for the establishing a pious and more regular course of life.

(b) In the interim that this great controversy was in debate, arrive the Letters of Cornelius Bishop [of Rome], promising indulgence to those who had sinned after Baptism. Upon these two persons writing thus contrary to one another, and each of them confirming what he asserted by testimony of the sacred Scriptures, (c) every inhabitant of the Provinces betook himself to that party, whereto he had before entertained a greater propensity and inclination. For, such persons as delighted in sin, laid hold of the Indulgence then granted, and in future abus'd it to all manner of impiety. [Moreover,] the people of Phrygia seem to be more sober, and persons of better Morals than other Nations. For,

* Or, Modestly.

(c) The expression in the original is, ἐκαστος κατὰ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ; which Musculus renders thus, seu fieri solet, as it is usually done; and Christophorus thus; ut moris est, as the manner is. But I cannot approve of these Versions. For the Grecian Writers makes use of (not κατὰ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ, but) ἐκ τῆς ἑαυτοῦ, to signify, as it is usually done, or, as the manner is. Wherefore, I am rather of opinion, that it should be ἐκαστος κατὰ ἑαυτοῦ, every inhabitants of the Provinces; to Epiphanius Scholasticus read it. For he renders it thus; Singuli Provincialium, &c. Every Subject of the Provinces. κατὰ ἑαυτοῦ has the same import with κατὰ ἑαυτοῦ, which phrase Socrates has made use of a little before, in this Chapter; where his Words are, τοιαύτας τὰς ἐπιστολὰς οἱ κατὰ ἑαυτοῦ ἐπέμψαν, the Inhabitants of every Province having received such Letters as these. Valef.

the Rising Sun, are more addicted to the serving of their Lusts. But the Paphlagonians and Phrygians are not prone to either of these vices. For neither Cirque-Sports, nor Theatrical-Shews, are at this present * esteem'd amongst them. On which account, as well these persons, as others who embrace the same Sentiments with them, in my judgment seem to have given their assent to what was then written from Novatus. For, amongst them Whoring is reputed a most enormous wickedness. 'Tis apparently known, that the Phrygians and Paphlagonians do live more modestly and temperately, than any other Sect of Men whatever. I am of opinion, that it was the very same reason likewise [which prevail'd] with those that inhabit the Western parts, who also have follow'd Novatus's opinion. But Novatus (although he was a Separatist upon account of an accurate and more strict course of life, yet) made no alteration in [the celebration of] the Feast of Easter. For he always celebrated that Festival, after the same manner that those in the Western parts did. Now, the Inhabitants of those parts do always keep that Feast after the Aequinox, agreeable to an usage very anciently delivered to them, even from the time that they first embrac'd Christianity. [Further,] this * person suffer'd (d) Martyrdom afterwards, [to wit] in the Reign of the Emperor Valerian, who rais'd a Persecution against the Christians. But those in Phrygia who from his name that are called Novatians, (e) having an aversion even for that Communion, they were permitted [to hold with the rest of the Catholics] in the celebrating] of this [Festival,] a-and they about this time changed the Feast of Easter also.

(d) The person who suffer'd Martyrdom afterwards, was a Phrygian, who rais'd a Persecution against the Christians. But those in Phrygia who from his name that are called Novatians, (e) having an aversion even for that Communion, they were permitted [to hold with the rest of the Catholics] in the celebrating] of this [Festival,] a-and they about this time changed the Feast of Easter also.

the Rising Sun, are more addicted to the serving of their Lusts. But the Paphlagonians and Phrygians are not prone to either of these vices. For neither Cirque-Sports, nor Theatrical-Shews, are at this present * esteem'd amongst them. On which account, as well these persons, as others who embrace the same Sentiments with them, in my judgment seem to have given their assent to what was then written from Novatus. For, amongst them Whoring is reputed a most enormous wickedness. 'Tis apparently known, that the Phrygians and Paphlagonians do live more modestly and temperately, than any other Sect of Men whatever. I am of opinion, that it was the very same reason likewise [which prevail'd] with those that inhabit the Western parts, who also have follow'd Novatus's opinion. But Novatus (although he was a Separatist upon account of an accurate and more strict course of life, yet) made no alteration in [the celebration of] the Feast of Easter. For he always celebrated that Festival, after the same manner that those in the Western parts did. Now, the Inhabitants of those parts do always keep that Feast after the Aequinox, agreeable to an usage very anciently delivered to them, even from the time that they first embrac'd Christianity. [Further,] this * person suffer'd (d) Martyrdom afterwards, [to wit] in the Reign of the Emperor Valerian, who rais'd a Persecution against the Christians. But those in Phrygia who from his name that are called Novatians, (e) having an aversion even for that Communion, they were permitted [to hold with the rest of the Catholics] in the celebrating] of this [Festival,] a-and they about this time changed the Feast of Easter also.

(e) This place is strangely corrupted. Nor is this fault new; but the Copies were faulty even in Epiphanius Scholasticus's time; for thus he renders it: Hi vero qui ex eo nomine habuerunt, ejusque suæ participes, &c. But those who had their name from him, and were partakers thereof, &c. How Nicephorus read this passage in Socrates, 'tis uncertain, in regard his Greek Text at this place defective. But Lipsius, who had seen a Greek Copy of Nicephorus, renders it thus: Qui vero ejus nomine in Phrygia Confessor, &c. But those that are accus'd of his name in Phrygia, when by indulging themselves, they had degenerated from his Institutions and Communion, at this time altered the Paschal Festival also. I say nothing concerning the other Translators, in whose Versions you will find nothing of soundness. I am of opinion, that the place, by a small alteration, is thus to be made good: ὁ δὲ κατὰ τὴν συνήθειαν τῶν πατρῶν ἐπέμψαν. That is, having an aversion even for that Communion they were permitted [to hold with the rest of the Catholics] in the celebrating] of this [Festival,] There is nothing more plain than this sense. Before Valen's time, the Novatians in Phrygia kept Easter at the same time the rest of the Catholics did. After that, they began to shun the Communion and Society of the Catholics in this matter also. Further, although I do very much approve of Socrates's judgment, who gives an account why the Phrygians more especially embrac'd the Novatian Hæcclie; yet there may another reason be given here. For, Novatus, or rather Novatianus, was (as 'tis said) by Country a Phrygian; to Philostorgius asserts, Book 8. Wherefore, 'tis no wonder, that he had many followers of his own opinion in that Province. Valef.

Valentinianus and Valens. Or, Fountain. garius.) promulgated a Canon, that it should be observ'd [yearly on what day] the Jews celebrated their Feast of Unleavened Bread, and that together with them the Feast of Easter should be kept. These things were told me by a certain (f) old man, who said that he was the son of a Presbyter, and was together with his Father present at the foresaid Synod. At which Synod, neither Agellus Bishop of the Novatians at Constantinople, was present, nor yet Maximus of Nicaea; neither were the Bishops of Nicomedia, or Cotacium at it: altho' these persons were the chief Regulators of the Novatian Religion. These things were after this manner transacted at that time. But, not long after the Church of the Novatians was divided into two Parties upon account of this Synod, as we will declare in due place. We must now pass from hence, to [a relation of] what hapned at this very time in the Western parts.

we must not here omit Nicephorus's words concerning our Socrates: he says thus, Book 11. Chap. 14. Hæc sibi remissima esse Socrates qui hoc loco non abhorre re se Novatianorum institutis palam præ se ferre, a sene quodam scribit, &c. Socrates (who in this place plainly shews himself not to be a detractor of the Novatian Principles) relates that these things were told him by a certain old Man, &c. Notwithstanding, I am not of Nicephorus's opinion. Valef.

C H A P. XXIX.

Concerning Damasus Bishop of Rome, and Ursinus. How, a Disturbance and Sedition hapning in Rome upon their account, there followed a great slaughter of Men.

WHilst the Emperor Valentinianus lived in peace, and tranquillity, and was voracious towards no Sect; Damasus succeeded Liberius in the Government of the Bishoprick of Rome.

(a) Under whom the Church of Rome hapned to be disturb'd, upon this account. One Ursinus, a Deacon of the same Church had been a Competitor, when the Election of a Bishop was made. But, in regard Damasus was preferred [before him,] Ursinus, unable to bear the being frustrated of his expectation, made it his business to (b) hold assemblies that were schismatical and separate from the Church; and perfwades certain mean Bishops to ordain him [clandestinely] in a secret place. And he is ordained, not in a Church, but in an obscure place, in that called (c) Sisinnius's Pallace. Upon the doing hereof, a dissention was raised amongst the Populace. They disagreed among themselves, not upon account of the Faith, or [any] Herefie, but about this only, [to wit,] who ought to be put in possession of the Episcopal Chair. Hereupon there hapned [frequent] conflicts of the multitudes; in so much that many were killed, on account of that variance. For said to which reason, many persons as well Laicks, as Altar contrary to another. Hence comes the term μυσθωμενισμός, a sort of Schism, concerning which Basilus speaks, in his Canonical Epistle to Amphyloctius, de Baptismo Hæreticorum. Valef.

(c) Ann. Marcellinus (Book 27. pag. 337. Edit. Valef.) calls it Sisinnius's Pallace; where, says he, there is a little private assembling place of [the Professors of] the Christian Religion; in which [during the conflicts between Damasus and Ursinus's Parties] there was in one day an hundred and thirty seven dead Bodies found, &c. Read the Historians following Words; from the whole passage 'tis plain, how disorderly the Elections of a Bishop of Rome then were, and at what an Ecclesiasticks, were punish'd by (d) Maximus Valentinianus and the then Præfect [of the City] and so both Ursinus at that time ceased from [prosecuting] his attempt, and also those who had a mind to be his Followers, were quieted.

out of Rufinus, Book 2. Chap. 10. Eccles. Hist. In that year, whereon Ursinus raised his Schism, Ursinus, not Maximus, was Præfect of the City, as Ann. Marcellinus attests, Book 27. pag. 337. But, in regard this Schism lasted many years, 'tis possible that Maximus (who was Præfect of the Annona,) might take cognizance of this business, and torture some Ecclesiasticks, as Rufinus relates. This Maximus was Præfect of the Annona, in the seventh year of Valentinianus as Socrates does assert in his Chronicon. Marcellinus speaks much concerning this Maximus, in his 28th Book. Valef.

C H A P. XXX.

How (after the Death of Auxentius Bishop of Millain,) a Sedition hapning on account of the Election of a Prelate to succeed in that See; Ambrosius, President of the Province, going with a military Force to appease these Tumults, was by a general Suffrage (the Emperor Valentinianus having given his consent also) preferred before all persons, and elected Bishop of that Church.

ABOUT the same time there hapned another thing worthy to be recorded, which came (a) Surprize to pass at Millain. For, (a) Auxentius Bishop of that Church being dead, who had been ordained by the Arians, the Inhabitants of Millain were again disturbed about the Election of a Bishop: and there was a great contention amongst them, some making it their business to elect one person, others another. When a Sedition was raised about this matter, the Governour of that Province (a person vested with a Consular Dignity, whose name was Ambrosius, bearing lest some absurdity might happen in the City, [caused] by that tumult, ran into the Church, in order to his appealing of the uproar. After that these people upon his coming thither were quieted, and that he had repress the irrational fury of the multitude by a long and very useful exhortatory Oration; there hapned on a sudden an unanimous agreement amongst all persons; who cried out, that Ambrosius deserved the Bishoprick; and all made it their request that he might be ordained. For, by that means only, [twas said] the People would be united, and embrace a concordant opinion concerning the Faith. In regard therefore, this unanimous consent of the People seemed to the Bishops that were present, to proceed from some divine [order and appointment,] without delay they laid hold of Ambrosius: and having baptized him, (for he was then but a Catechumen,) they forthwith went about the promoting of him to the dignity of that Bishoprick. But, because Ambrosius (though he received Baptism with much willingness, yet) refused the Episcopal dignity with all imaginable earnestness; [the Bishops] acquaint the Emperor Valentinianus with what hapned. The Emperor, admiring the unanimous consent of the people, word for word out of Rufinus's Book 2. Chap. 11. Eccles. Hist. For, he observes the same order that Rufinus does, after Damasus's ordination forthwith subjecting Ambrosius's promotion. But, although Rufinus and Socrates have conjoined their two Ordinations, as if they had been made at one and the same time; yet there was a great interval of time between each ordination. For Damasus entered upon the Bishoprick of Rome in the Consulate of Lupicinus and Febricius, on the year of Christ 357. But Ambrosius was promoted to the Episcopate of Millain in the year of our Lord 354 in the third Consulate of Gratianus, which he bore with Equitius; as Baronius has observed from Saint Jerome's Chronicon. Valef.

people, and acknowledge what had come to pass to be the work of God, declared to the Bishops, that they ought to obey God, who commanded he should be Ordain'd; for that he was elected by the suffrage of God, rather than of Men. Ambrosius being after this manner constituted [Bishop,] the Inhabitants of Milaine, who had been at variance before, were by his means reduced at that time to unity and concord.

C H A P. XXXI.

Concerning Valentinianus's Death.

BUT after this, when the Sarmatæ made incursions into the Roman Territories, the Emperor undertook an Expedition against them, at the head of a vast Army. The Barbarians informed of these great preparations for a War, and being sensible of their own inability to make a resistance, sent an Embassy to the Emperor, and requested that they might obtain a Peace upon certain conditions. When the Embassadors were introduced into the Emperor's presence, and appear'd to him to be vile and despicable Fellows, he ask'd, whether all the Sarmatæ were such sort of persons. The Embassadors made answer, that the noblest Personages of their whole Nation were come to him: Whereupon Valentinianus was highly incens'd, and crying out with a very loud voice, said, That he was very unfortunate to have the Roman Empire devolve upon him, when such a Nation of Barbarians, so vile and contemptible, was not satisfied to continue in safety within its own limits; but would take up arms, || depopulate the Roman Territories, and audaciously break out into a War. And he tore himself in such a manner by his crying out, that all his Veins were open'd, and every one of his Arteries broken. [A vast quantity of] Blood gushing out after this manner, he died in the Cattle called Bergition, after Gratianus's third Consulate [which he bore] with Equitius, about the seventeenth of the month November; when he had liv'd fifty four years, and reigned thirteen. Valentinianus therefore having ended his life, the Milice in Italy, on the sixth day after his death, proclaimed his Son (who had the same name with his Father)

Valentinianus (a very young child) Emperor, in (a) Ancinum a City of Italy. The Emperors, informed hereof, were displeased, not because Valentinianus Junior (who was Brother to the * one Emperor, and the father's Nephew) was made Emperor: but in regard he had been proclaim'd without either of their being acquainted with it, whom they themselves were about to proclaim. Notwithstanding, both of them gave their consent to his being made Emperor. After this manner was Valentinianus Junior seated on his own Father's Throne. Further, you must know, that this Valentinianus was begotten by Valentinianus Senior, of Justina, which Woman * he married whilst Severa his former Wife was living, on this occasion. Justus, his Father to Justinus Senior, na, (who heretofore, to wit, in Constantius's Reign, had been Governour of the Province Pi-Valentinianus and Valens.

centum, had a Dream, wherein (to his own thinking) he saw himself delivered of the Imperial Purple [which he brought forth] out of his right side. This Dream being divulged at length came to Constantius's hearing also. He guessing at the meaning of the Dream, to wit, that an Emperor should * descend from Justus, sent one who dispatch'd him. His Daughter, Justina, bereaved of her Father, for a considerable while continued a Virgin. Some time after, she became known to Severa, Wife to the Emperor Valentinianus, and was continually conversant with the Empress. And a firm familiarity was contracted between them, she bathed herself also together with her. When therefore Severa had seen Justina washing her self, she was + won- Or, in derfully taken with the Virgins beauteous composition of body, and discoursed concerning her in the Emperor's presence; [saying] that that Virgin, Justus's Daughter, was endow'd with so admirable a completeness of body, that she herself, altho' a Woman, was notwithstanding enamoured with her delicate shape. The Emperor treasured up his Wife's discourse in his mind, and consulted about his marriage of Justina; yet so as not to divorce Severa, of whom he had begotten Gratianus, and created him Augustus but a little before. He therefore dictated a (b) Law, and made it publick throughout (b) There every City, that any one that would, might have two lawful Wives. This Law was promulg'd. And he married Justina, by whom Valentinianus Junior, and three Daughters, any where: Justa, Grata, and Galla. The two former of which perished in their resolution of continuing Virgins: but Galla was afterwards married to the Emperor * Theodosius the Great, of whom he begat a daughter, Or, The has with by name Placidia. For he had Arcadius and Honorius by (c) Placidia his former Wife. But we shall speak in particular concerning Theodosius, and his Sons, in due place, not in this fair. Indeed such a Law as this (in my judgment) is in no wise agreeable to Valentinianus a serious Prince, and a Christian. Therefore this whole story of Justina's marriage, is in my opinion, of a credit doubtful and uncertain. Vale.

(c) Euphanis Scholasticus calls her (not Placidia, but) Flavilla; which is true: For to the ancient Coins term her. But, 'tis strange that Greek writers should so frequently be mistaken in this name. For we have rememb'd before, that Placidus is by Socrates often u. d. instead of Flavillus, who was Bishop of Antioch. Further, this Flavilla was the daughter of that Anomius, who was Consul with Silvius, as Themistius informs us, in his Gratiani Adiuncti, to Theodosius, for the Peace made with the Goths. Vale.

C H A P. XXXII.

Concerning the Philosopher Themistius: And, that Valens, appeas'd by the Oration he spake to him, did in some measure mitigate his Persecution against the Christians.

VALENS, making his Residence at Antioch, continued in the interim undisturbed by foreign Wars. For the Barbarians did on every side contain themselves within their own Territories. But he * persecuted those who embraced the Homocousan Opinion, in a most grievous manner, and every day invented greater and more acute punishments [to be inflicted] on 'em. Till such time as the Philosopher Themistius reduced his great cruelty to something of a moderation,

(a) We meet with a double mistake here, the one committed by Socrates's Transcribers, the other by Socrates himself. We have corrected the Transcriber's error (a), in stead of Ancinum, had made it Ancinum, from the authority of the Sporian and Florian MSS. It will be sufficient not to take notice of Socrates's mistake here; who calls Ancinum a City of Italy, whereas it belongs to Paenonia. Vale.

* That is, to Gratianus.

† To wit, Valens's Brother's Son.

* That is, Valentinianus Senior, na, (who heretofore, to wit, in Constantius's

Or, should be born of.

Or, in love with.

(b) There is no mention of this Law of Valentinianus, any where: Not in Amm.

Marcellinus, who has with adodius Severus great accuracy.

(c) Flavilla is not in Themistius.

Or, The has with adodius Severus great accuracy.

Or, The has with adodius Severus great accuracy.

Or, The has with adodius Severus great accuracy.

Or, The has with adodius Severus great accuracy.

Or, The has with adodius Severus great accuracy.

Or, The has with adodius Severus great accuracy.

Or, The has with adodius Severus great accuracy.

Or, The has with adodius Severus great accuracy.

Or, The has with adodius Severus great accuracy.

Or, The has with adodius Severus great accuracy.

Valens.

(a) This Oration
of Themistius, is valens, i
at the time extant, published in Laine by arise a Duditis.
of.] And Socrates says Themistius spoke in that Oration concerning the difference of Philosophy.
Opinions occurs in Duditis'.
at length,
this fury
of his also was repressed by this accident.

ration, by that (a) Speech he spake to him; wherein the Philosopher advertises the Emperor, That he ought not to admire at the disagreement of Opinions amongst the Christians. For, that the discrepancy of Sentiments amongst them was small, if compared with the multitude and confusion of Opinions amongst the Grecians. For they entertained above three hundred Opinions. [Further,] that as touching Opinion there would of necessity arise a wonderful dissent [from the variety thereof.] And yet that God is delighted with this difference of Opinion [concerning himself,] to the end that all persons may more highly revere his Majesty, even upon this very account, because 'tis not obvious and easy to have a knowledge of him. The Philosopher having spoken these and such-like words as these, to the Emperor, he became more mild in future. Notwithstanding, his rage was not hereby perfectly and entirely appeased; but, instead of Death, he imposed Exile as a punishment, upon Ecclesiastick persons; till at length, this fury of his also was repressed by this accident.

The words are these; Atres quidem, quorum magnus in vita usus & delectatio est, &c. Indeed, those Arts, of which there is great use in this life, and which are very delightful had never arrived at such an height and elegance, had there not been a discrepancy of judgments, and a certain little amongst the Artists themselves. For, had not Philosophy in itself the Mother of all valuable Arts, raised from mean and small beginnings, increased by the dissent of Learned Men in such a manner, that nothing may seem wanting to its absolute perfection? Further, what Socrates says is spoken to Themistius in that Oration, to wit, that God is desirous of this variety of opinions concerning himself, that Men may have a greater reverence for the Majesty of his Deity, because the knowledge of his Divinity is in no wise obvious and easily attainable; occurs in Duditis's Version, at page. 508. where 'tis thus worded: Quocirca quod a cognitione nostri à se longissime removet, &c. Wherefore, in regard he has removed himself at the greatest distance from our Knowledge, nor does humble himself to the capacity of our wit; 'tis a sufficient argument, that he does not require one and the same Law and Rule of Religion from all persons, nor leaves every Man a Licence and faculty of thinking concerning himself, according to his own, nor another Man's liberty and choice. Whence it also happens, that a greater admiration of the Deity, and a more Religious veneration of his Eternal Majesty, is ingendered in the minds of Men. For, it is usually comes to pass, that we loath and disregard those things which are readily apparent, and prostrate to every understanding, &c. Valc.

C H A P. XXXIII.

How the Goths, under the Reign of Valens, embraced Christianity.

THose Barbarians who dwell beyond the Danube, having kindled a Civil War amongst themselves, were divided into two Parties; the one of which was headed by Fritigernus, the other by Athanarichus. When 'twas apparent that Athanarichus's Party was the stronger, Fritigernus flies to the Romans, and implored their assistance against his Adversary. This is made known to the Emperor Valens; and he orders those Soldiers, who were engarrison'd all over Thracia for the defence of that Country, to assist the Barbarians being at War against the Barbarians. And they obtain a Victory over Athanarichus beyond the Danube, having routed his Forces. This was the reason, that many of the Barbarians became Christians. For, Fritigernus, that he might express his thankfulness to the Emperor for the kindness he had done him, embraced the Emperor's Religion, and persuaded those under his command to the same. Wherefore, many of the Goths are even till this present addicted to Arianism, having at that time become Adherents to that Heresie upon the Emperor's account. At the same time also, Ulfila, Bishop of the Goths, invented Gothick Letters, and having translated the sacred Scriptures into the Gothick Language, undertook the instruction of the Barbarians in the Divine Oracles. But, in regard Ulfila instructed not only those Barbarians under Fritigernus, but them also who paid obedience to Athanarichus, in the Christian Religion; Athanarichus, * as if violence were offer'd to the Religion of his Ancestors, inflicted punishments on many of those who professed Christianity; in so much that at that time several Arianizing Barbarians were Martyrs. Indeed, Arius, unable to refute the Opinion of Sabellius the Lybian, fell from the true Faith, and asserted (a) the Son of God to be a new God. But the Barbarians, embracing Christianity with a simplicity of mind, despised this present Life in respect of the Faith of Christ. Thus far concerning those [Goths] who came over to the Christian Religion.

the Syrian and Florent. M. SS. the reading is [the Son of God to be a new God;] accordingly we have rendered it. Valc.

C H A P. XXXIV.

That the Goths vanquished by other Barbarians, fled into the Territories of the Romans, and were received by the Emperor. Which [Reception of theirs] was the occasion, both of the Destruction of the Roman Empire, and also of the Emperor's own Overthrow.

BUT, not long after, the Barbarians having entered into a league of friendship with one another, were again vanquish'd by other Barbarians their Neighbours, called the Huns; and being driven out of their own Country, they fly into the Roman Territories, promising they would serve the Roman Emperor, and do whatever he should command them. This came to Valens's knowledge; who foreseeing nothing, gave order that the Suppliers should have a kind and merciful reception, shewing himself in this one instance only, mild and compassionate. He assigns therefore to them [for their habitation] the parts of Thracia; judging himself to be in a most especial manner fortunate upon this account. For, it was his sentiment, that he should in future be in possession of a ready and well-furnish'd Army against his Enemies; and he hoped, that the Barbarians would be a more terrible Guard [to the limits of his Empire] than the Romans. Upon this account, he in future neglected the increasing and filling up of the Roman Milice. He despised those old Souldiers, who in former Wars had fought against his Enemies with much courage and gallantry; and he (a) put a money-value upon that Militia, which the Inhabitants of Pro-

Florus.
M. S. the reading is [quod pene, &c., he reduced into money,] which, it I mistake not, is the truer. Notwithstanding, the common reading [to wit, quod pene, &c., he put a money value upon,] is found, and needs no alteration. For Chrysostom uses this term in this sense, in his 67 Homily on Matth. 21. The old Glosses expound quod pene, &c. by Attus, he values by money. Further, what Socrates remarks here, (b) quod Valens, instead of supplies of Souldiers, did afterwards, &c. is of Gold of his Province; is also related by Zmm. Marcellinus, book 10, page. 441. which place, because 'tis corrupt even in our Edition, I will here let down, as it ought to be amended: Eruditi adulatoris in majus fortunam principis extollentibus: quod ex ultimis servis in pecunia [not Thracensis nec opinati essent, bi] valens, et non opinanti offerret, et collatis in annum suis & alienigenis milibus, iterum habere exercitum; & pro militum supplemento quod provinciam annum pendebatur, thesauris accedere auri cumulus magnus. Valc.

vines

* Or, being routed the Enemy.

Edessa, not at the latter end of Valens's Reign. And I had rather follow Aufidius's opinion, than that of Socrates and Socumen. The most we have to say of this opinion, is grounded on Socrates's words at the close of this chapter, where he says, that Maxima the Queen having made a Peace with the Romani, betrothed her daughter to Vilior the Roman Lieutenant General. Now, Vilior, about the latter end of Valens's Reign, "was too old to have any thoughts of marrying a Wife. Valef.

That the Emperor, by reason of his Care and Solitude about a War with the Goths, remitted something of his Persecution against the Christians.

For, the Barbarians having been put into possession of Thracia, and quietly enjoying that Roman Province, could not [with moderation] bear their fortunate success: but enter upon a War against those who had been their Benefactors, and subverted all places throughout Thracia and the adjoining Countries. These things falling out after this manner, came to Valens's hearing, and made him desist from banishing those that embraced the Homöusian Opinion. For, being troubled at this news, he left Antioch forthwith, and came to Constantinople. Upon the same account also, the War [he had waged] against the Christians in that City, was finish'd. Moreover, at the same time Eugenius, Bishop of the Arrian Faction at Antioch, departed this life, in the fifth Consulate of Valens, and in Valentinianus Junior's first. And Dorotheus is constituted [Bishop] in his place.

tion. But in regard he was brought before Lucius, who at that time was in possession of the Churches there, he refused Ordination, and exhort himself after this manner to Lucius! Indeed, I account my self unworthy of the Sacerdotal Function; but if this thing be advantageous to the Affairs of the Publick, Lucius shall not * Ordain me, for his Right Hand has been filled with Blood. When Lucius told him, that he ought not to give reproachful language, but should rather learn the Points of Religion from him; Moses replied; An account of the Points [of Religion] is not now required. For the villainous Actions you have committed against the Brethren, do sufficiently demonstrate, how Christian-like Sentiments you have. For a Christian strikes not, reviles not, does not fight; for a Servant of the Lord ought not to fight. But your Facts do loudly cry out, by those who have been exiled, who have been cast to the Wild Beasts, and who have been committed to the Flames. [Moreover,] things seen by the Eyes contain a greater and more convincing demonstration, than what is receiv'd by hearing. When Moses had said these and such-like words as these, his Friends carried him to the Mountain, that he might receive Ordination from those [Bishops] who lived in Exile there. Moses therefore having been after this manner consecrated at that time, the Saracen-War had an end put to it; and for the future Maria continued to strict an * Alliance • Or, with the Romans, that she betrothed her Daughter to Victor the Roman Lieutenant-General. Thus much concerning the Saracens.

That the Saracens also at that time embraced the Faith of Christ, (a Woman, by name Mavia, being their Queen,) and took one Moses, a pious and faithful Person that led a Monastick life, to be their Bishop.

After the Emperor's departure from Antioch, the Saracens, who before had been their Allies, revolted from the Romans at that time; they were led by one Marcia a Woman, [the King] her Husband being then dead. All places therefore (a) towards the East, were at that time destroy'd by the Saracens. But an Act of Divine Providence repress'd their fury by this means. A person whose name was Moses, by extracting a Saracen, leading a Monastick life in the Solitudes, became exceedingly eminent for his Piety, Faith, and Miracles. Marcia, Queen of the Saracens, requesting she might have this person to be Bishop over her Nation, [promising] upon this condition to put an end to the War. The Roman Commanders hearing this, supposed it would be grateful, if a Peace were made upon these terms; and forthwith gave order for the performance hereof with all possible celerity. Moses therefore was seized, and brought (b) from the Solitudes to Alexandria (b) in order to his being initiated into the Sacerdotal Function; as soon as he was initiated, we read [ἐκτεθειμένος, in order to his being initiated, &c.] Further, the story concerning Moses's being made Bishop of the Saracens, and concerning the Peace made with them, Socrates has taken out of Rufinus, Book 2. chap. 6. Eccl<sup>e</sup>s. Hist. but has not observed Rufinus's order. For Rufinus has placed it about the beginning of Lucius's Episcopate, after the persecution of the

That after Valens's departure from Antioch the Orthodox in the East ( more especially those at Alexandria ) took courage ; and having ejected Lucius, restored the Churches again to Peter, [who was returned] fortified with the Letters of Damasus Bishop of Rome.

AT the same time that the Emperor Valens left Antioch, those persons in all places who had been persecuted, were mightily encouraged, especially the Alexandrians; (a) Peter at that time returning from Rome with the Letters of Damasus the Roman Bishop, whereby the Homoiousian Faith and Peter's Ordination were confirm'd. The Populace therefore refusing courage, turn out Lucius, and substitute Peter in his place. Lucius went immediately on the board a Ship, and sail'd to Constantinople. But Peter, having lived but a little while after this died, and left Timotheus his Brother to succeed him in his See.

returning;] and the full-point, which is (in some copies) placed before these words, must be expunged. Epiphanius Scholasticus seems to have followed this reading. Valf.

returning : ] and the full-point, which is (in some copies) placed before these words, must be expunged. Epiphanius Scholasticus seems to have followed this reading. Vale!

Valens.

C H A P. XVIII.

That the Emperor arriving at the City Constantinople, and being reproach'd by the People upon account of the Goths, marches out of the City against the Barbarians: And coming to an Engagement with them near Adrianople, a City of Macedonia, is slain by them; after he had lived fifty years, and reigned sixteen.

[Moreover,] the Emperor Valens coming into Constantinople about the thirtieth of May, in his own sixth, and in Valentinianus Junior's second Consulate, finds the People in a very sad and dejected condition. For the Barbarians, who had already over-run and ruined Thracia, did now plunder and destroy the very Suburbs of Constantinople; there being then no Forces ready that were fit to make a resistance against them. But when the Barbarians attempted to make nearer approaches, even to the very City-Walls, the Citizens were grievously troubled thereat; and murmur'd against the Emperor, as if he himself had brought the Enemy thither, because he did not forthwith march out against them, but deferred the War against the Barbarians. Moreover, when the Cirque-Sports were exhibited, all with one consent exclaim'd against the Emperor, because he was negligent of the publick affairs. They cried out: therefore with a great deal of earnestness, Give us Arms, and we our selves will fight. The Emperor was highly incensed at the hearing of these Exclamations against himself; and about the eleventh of June (a) marches out of the Ci-

(a) The reading must be [ὁ γενναίως, marches out;] not [ὁ γενναίως, passet by.] Moreover, the same days [which Isocrates here assigns for Valens's entry into, and march out of Constantinople,] are recorded in Idaius's Fasts, in these words: Valens VI. & Valentinianus II. &c. In Valens's sixth and Valentinianus's second Consulate, Valens Augustus entered Constantinople, from the East, on the third of the Calends of June [that is, the thirtieth of May.] And on the same year Valens Augustus went out of the City to the Forts, on the third of the Ides [that is, the eleventh] of June. Valen-

ty, threatening that if he return'd he would punish the Constantinopolitans, both for the reproaches they then cast upon him, and also because they had heretofore been Abettors of Procopius's Tyranny. Having therefore said, that he would totally demolish the City, and * Plough it up, he march'd out against the Barbarians: Whom he drove a great way from the City; and pursued them as far as Adrianople, a City of Thracia, situate in the Frontiers of Macedonia. Ingaging the Barbarians at that place, he ended his life on the ninth of August, in the now mention'd Consulate. This was the fourth year of the (b) two hundred eighty ninth Olympiad. 'Tis reported by some, that he was destroy'd by fire, after he had taken refuge in a certain Village, which the Barbarians assaulted and burnt. But others affirm, that having changed his Imperial habit, he ran into the midst of the main body of Foot; and when the Horse attempted a defection, and refused fighting, the Roman Foot were surrounded [by the Barbarians,] and wholly cut off in the Engagement: Amongst whom (c) it is said the Emperor lay, but was not known, his Imperial habit (whereby it might have been manifested which was he,) being not upon him. He died after the fiftieth year of his age, having govern'd the Empire thirteen years with his Brother, and reign'd three years after him. This Book contains [an account of Affairs during] the space of sixteen years.

διανορδς, and τελανορδς, instead of διανορδς, and τελανορδς. Val-

THE FIFTH BOOK
OF THE Ecclesiastical History
OF
SOCRATES SCHOLASTICUS.

The P R E F A C E.

BEfore we begin the History of our Fifth Book, we make a request to those who shall read this Work Gratissimi, of ours, that they would not blame us; because designing to write an Ecclesiastick History, we in*terminis* terminis therewith the Wars also which have at several times hapned, so far as we could procure a an true Relation thereof. For we do this upon several accounts. First, to bring [the Readers] to a knowledge of what has been transacted. Secondly, that our Readers may not be cloy'd, (a) by being continually detained with [a perusal of] the contentious Disagreements of Bishops, and with the Designs they framed against one another. But most especially, that it might be made apparent, that when the Affairs of the State were disturbed, those of the Church also (by a certain Sympathy as it were,) became distemper'd and disorder'd. For, let any Man make an Observation, and he will find, that the Mischiefs of the State, and Troubles of the Church, have gather'd Strength and spread together. For, he will perceive, that they have either had their rise at one and the same time, or else have immediately followed one another. And sometimes [the Calamities] of the Church led the way; then follow the [Commations of the] State: at others, on the contrary. So that I cannot persuade myself, that the interchangable Course [of these things] does proceed from any fortuitous Accident, but that they take their beginnings from our Iniquities: And that Calamities are sent for the chastisement thereof. For, according to the Apostle † Some Mens Sins are open before-hand, going before to Judgment: † 1 Tim.
and some [Men] they follow after. Upon this account therefore, we have interwoven some Affairs transacted in the State, with our Ecclesiastick History. What was done in the Wars during the Reign of Constantine, because 'tis so long ago, we could not find an Account of. But we make a cursory mention of the Actions done since, according to the Relation thereof, which we have received from Persons yet living. We do without intermitting any one of them, include the Emperors in this our History, because from such time as they began to embrace the Christian Religion, the Affairs of the Church have depended upon them; and the greatest Synods have been, and at this present are * convened by their determination and appointment. Moreover, we have made mention of the Arian Heresie, because it has disquieted the Churches. Let this be sufficient to have been said by way, of der may Preface. We will now begin our History. observe from this

Passage, in whose power it was in those days to summon General Synods.

C H A P. I.

How (after the Death of Valens) when the Goths laid siege to Constantinople, the Citizens sallied out of the City against them, having those Saracens who were under Mavia's Command, to be their Auxiliaries.

AFTER the Emperor Valens had ended his life
by an unknown sort of death, the Barbarians made their approaches again to the very Walls of Constantinople, and ruined the Suburbs on every side of it. The Citizens, sorely vexed thereat, on their own accord sallied out against the Barbarians, every one taking what came next to hand for Arms. * Dominica, the Emperor's Wife, gave every one that went out upon this piece of service, such pay out of the Imperial Treasury, as was usually allow'd to Soldiers. Some few Saracens, their Confederates, assisted them; being sent from Mavia, whom we have mentioned before. When the Citizens had after this manner made a resistance against them at that time, the Barbarians retreated farther off from the City.

Gratianus.
Valens. Jun.
Theodosius.

CHAPTER II.

That the Emperor Gratianus, having recalled the Orthodox Bishops from their Exile, drove the Heretics out of the Churches, and took Theodosius to be his Colleague in the Empire.

(a) Some men mention this Law of Gratianus's book 7. chap. 1. and so does Theodor.

Gratianus being together with Valentinianus Junior in possession of the Empire, and detesting his Uncle Valens's cruelty towards the Christians, recalled those who had been Exiled by him. Moreover, he made a (a) Law, that persons of all Sects might, without any distinction, securely meet together in their Oratories; only the Eusebians, Photinians, and Manicheans, were excluded out of the Churches. Being also sensible of the languishing condition of the Roman Empire, and of the growth of the Barbarians; and [perceiving also] that the State was in want of a valiant and courageous Man, he chooseth Theodosius (a person descended of a noble Family in Spain, who had perform'd many a brave piece of service in the Wars, and upon that account had by all men been long since judg'd worthy of the Empire, even before Gratianus's Election of him) to be his Colleague in the Empire. Having therefore proclaimed him Emperor in Sirmium, a City of Illyricum, in the Consulate of Ausonius and Olybrius, on the sixteenth of January he divides with him the care of managing the War against the Barbarians.

That happened in the year of Christ 378. This Law of Gratianus's is not now extant. And yet it seems to be mentioned in the fifth Law in the Theodosian Code, de fide Catholicâ. Vale.

CHAPTER III.

What Bishops were in possession of the Precedency over the greater Churches at that time.

AT this time Damasus presided over the Church at Rome, who had succeeded Liberius. Cyrillus was as yet in possession of the Church at Jerusalem. The Antiochian Church (as I have said,) was divided into three parts. For Dorotheus the Arian, Successor to Eusebius, was possessor of the Churches. Of the rest one part paid obedience to Paulinus, the other to Melitius, who was recalled from Banishment. Lucius, altho' living in Exile, presided over the Arians at Alexandria: The Professors of the Homoiousian opinion in that City were headed by people of Timotheus, Successor to Peter. Demophilus was in possession of the Churches at Constantinople, who succeeded Eudoxius in the presidency over the Arian Faction. Those that abominated Communion with him, celebrated their Assemblies apart by themselves.

* Ev. p. 179. § 1. living in Exile. Lucius was not banished; the Homoiousian opinion in that City were headed by people of Timotheus, Successor to Peter. Demophilus was in possession of the Churches at Constantinople, who succeeded Eudoxius in the presidency over the Arian Faction. Those that abominated Communion with him, celebrated their Assemblies apart by themselves.

CHAPTER IV.

How the Macedonians, who had sent an Embassy to Damasus [Bishop] of Rome in defence of the Homoiousian Creed, returned again to their old Heresie.

THE Macedonians, after their Embassy sent to Liberius, for some time held a perfect and entire communion with the Churches throughout every City; intermixing themselves with those, who from the beginning had embraced Gratianus's that Draught of the Creed [publish'd] at Nicæa. But when the Emperor Gratianus's Law [was promulg'd, which] allow'd a Liberty to [several] Sects, they made it their business * to hold separate assemblies again. Being met together at Antioch in Syria, they determined again, that the term Homoiousios was to be abominable, and that a communion was not in any wise to be held with those who embraced the Nicene Creed. But they proceeded not in their attempt. For many of their own party, finding fault with their [inconstancy,] because sometimes they decreed one thing, at others another, left them, and in future became firm Adherents to those that embraced the Homoiousian Creed.

Concerning what hapned at that time at Antioch, upon Paulinus's, and Melitius's account.

CHAPTER V.

Moreover, at the same time arose a great difference at Antioch in Syria, upon Melitius's account. We have told you * already, that Paulinus Bishop of Antioch, by reason of his eminent Piety, was not banish'd; and that Melitius, after he had been restored by † Julianus, was again banish'd by * Valens, and at length recall'd in † Gratianus's Reign. At his return to Antioch, he found Paulinus very much decay'd by reason of his great age. Immediately therefore all those who were Melitius's Favourers, used their utmost endeavours to make Melitius Paulinus's * Coadjutor. But, upon Paulinus's saying, that it was contrary to the Canons, to admit of a Coadjutor who had been Ordained by the Arians; the People make use of force, and cause him to be Consecrated in one of the Churches without the City. Hereupon a great difference arose; but afterwards the People came to an agreement upon these terms. Having assembled † those persons that were reput'd fit to be intrusted with the Bishoprick, they find them to be in all six; of which number Flavianus was one. They bound these Men by an Oath, that none of them should make an interest for the Bishoprick, after the death of one of the * Prelates; but that they should permit the Survivor to continue possessor of the See of the Person deceased. Having given them an Oath after this manner, the People came to an agreement, nor was there any further dissention amongst them. But, the † Luciferians made a separation from the rest, for this reason, because Melitius, who had been Ordained by the Arians, was admitted to the Bishoprick. Whilst affairs at Antioch were in this posture, a very urgent occasion oblig'd Melitius to take a journey to Constantinople.

† The City is in Syria. † See Book 3. Chap. 9.

CHAPTER VI.

That Gregorius of Nazianzum was, by a general Suffrage of the Orthodox, constituted Bishop of the Constantinopolitan Church; at which time the Emperor Theodosius (after his Victory over the Barbarians,) fell sick at Theſſalonica, and was baptized by Ascholius the Bishop.

AT which time, Gregorius was translated from the Bishoprick of Nazianzum to that of Constantinople, by the common suffrage of many Prelates.

Ff 3      They

Gratianus
Valen. Jun.
Theodosius.

They were in all an hundred and fifty. The principal Persons of the Macedonian Party, were Eusebius of Cyzicum, and Marcianus [Bishop] of Lampfacus. [Of this Sect] there were thirty six [Bishops], most of whom came from the Cities about the Hellepont. They met therefore in the Consulate of Eucharius and Evagrius in the month of May. The Emperor and the Bishops that embraced his Creed, did their utmost to bring Eusebius and his Followers over to their own side; putting them in remembrance of the *Embassy, which they had sent by Eusebius to Liberius heretofore Bishop of Rome; and (b) that not long since they themselves had entered into a promiscuous Communion [with the Orthodox,] on their own accord: And that they, having once acknowledg'd and profest an agreement in the [points of] Faith, did not do what was right and honest, now to attempt a subversion of what had been well and wisely determin'd by themselves. But the Macedonians, little regarding either admonitions, or reproofs, chose rather to profest the Arian opinion, than to give their assent to the Homoeusian Creed. Having made this answer, they departed from Constantinople, and wrote to their followers in every City, ordering them in no wise to give their consent to the Creed of the Nicene Synod.

But the [Prelates] of the other party staid [at Constantinople] and entred into a consult about the Ordination of a Bishop. For Gregorius, as we have told you a little before, refused the Bishoprick, and prepared for his departure to Nazianzum. There was a person, by name Nestarius, [a descendant] of a Senatorial Family, a sweet-temper'd Man, admirable for his whole course of life, (c) although he bore the Prætor's Office. This person the people seized upon, elected him Bishop, and he was Ordained by the hundred and fifty Prelates then present. Moreover, at the same time [the said Prelates] promulg'd a Sanction, that the Bp. of Constantinople should have the (d) privileges of honour after the Bishop of Rome, because that City was the seat of the Prætor's Office. [The Bp. of Constantinople] was to be consecrated by the Bishop of Rome, and to have the same honours as the Bishop of Rome.

(c) Instead of [the] Prætor's Office, [the Bp. of Constantinople] had rather read [the] Prætor's Office. [The Bp. of Constantinople] was to be consecrated by the Bishop of Rome, and to have the same honours as the Bishop of Rome.

(d) The Prætor's Office. [The Bp. of Constantinople] was to be consecrated by the Bishop of Rome, and to have the same honours as the Bishop of Rome.

New-Rome. They did again confirm the Nicene Creed, and constituted (e) Patriarchs, having made a (f) division of the Provinces; that so

(e) The first mention (if I mistake not) of Christian Patriarchs (so I term them, because the Jews had grand Officers among them thus termed, long before this time;) in any Author worthy of credit, is at this place in our Socrates. However, there is no small stir among Learned Men, about defining the time wherein these Patriarchs were first constituted in the Christian Church. Valefius, in his Notes on this Chap. and in his third Book of Ecclesiastical Observations upon Socrates and Sozomenes does in a great many words assert, that the Patriarchal Authority was confirmed by the sixth Canon of the Nicene Synod. This assertion of his is sufficiently confuted by Dr. Beveridge, in his Annotations upon that sixth Canon, pag. 52, &c. At which place, and in his notes on the second Canon of the Constantinopolitan Council, pag. 93-94 the said Learned Doctor is of opinion (agreeable to our Socrates here,) that Patriarchs were first constituted by this second Œcumenical Council held at Constantinople. Nevertheless, he grants, that most of those privileges, which Patriarchs afterwards challenged were given them by other Councils. Lastly, Dr. Barrow's sentiment is, that this Dioecesan (or Patriarchal) Form did soon after the Nicene Council creep into the Church, without any solemn appointment, by a spontaneous assumption and jurisdiction. See his excellent Treatise of the Pope's Supremacy, pag. 240, &c.

(f) The Roman Emperors who preceded Constantine the Great, committed the chief management of affairs in the Civil State of the Empire to one, or at most to two Præfects of the Prætorium. But Constantine the Great introduced a new partition of the Empire, (as Sozomenes tells us, Book 2. of his Hist. pag. 439, 440 Edit. Lugd. 1611.) and divided the management thereof amongst four Præfects of the Prætorium; one whereof was Præfect of the Prætorium in the East, a second of Asyriam, a third of Italy, and a fourth of the Gallies. Each of these Præfects had several Dioeceses under them: every single Dioecesis was a Combination of divers Provinces together into one Territory. What Dioeceses every one of these Præfects had under their District, and what and how many Provinces were included in each Dioecesis, the learned Reader may see in Guidas Panciroli's Notitia imperii, dignitatum, &c. Edit. Lugd. 1668. From which Author we will transcribe the five Dioeceses (for so many he had under him,) of the Præfect of the Prætorium of the East, as they occur at fol. 3 and 4, of his Comment: because they are necessary, in order to the clear understanding of what we have to say further here. Sub dispositione virorum Illustrum Prætorii per Orientem, &c. Under the dispose of the Illustrous the Præfects of the Prætorium throughout the East, were these Dioeceses, under whom: The East, Egypt, the Asian, Pontick, and Thracian Dioeceses.

The Provinces of the East [or Eastern Dioecesis] are XV.

The Provinces of Egypt [or Egyptian Dioecesis] are VI.

The Provinces of the Asian Dioecesis X.

The Provinces of the Pontick Dioecesis XI.

The Provinces of the Thracian Dioecesis VI.

In conformity to this Model of Government in the Civil State, the Regiment in the Church (which before had been Metropolitick when the Provinces were independent on each other in Ecclesiastical Administrations,) was adapted. This Dioecesan Form of Government might, 'tis probable, privately creep into the Church; in that interval of time between the Nicene and Constantinopolitan Councils which is the opinion of Dr. Barrow (See Note (e.) in this Chapter) But, 'tis certain, it was confirm'd by the Fathers convened in this second Œcumenical Synod; which Sanction they made upon this occasion. A little before the summoning of this Synod, Melchior Bishop of Antioch in the East, took a journey to Constantinople, whence, together with some other Bishops, promoted Gregorius of Nazianzum to the Constantinopolitan See. So Sozomenes tells us, Book 7. Chap. 3 and 7. Soon after Melchior had done this, Peter Bishop of Alexandria sent some Bishops from Egypt to Constantinople, who claimed Maximus the Cynick Bishop of that City. See Sozomenes Book 7. Chap. 9. Now, in the Political Partition of the Roman Empire, (as you may see by that Draught we have here given you of the

Gratianus
Valen. Jun.
Theodosius.

*See Book 4. chap. 12. to what Sozomenes has remarked concerning this Matter in Chap. 4. of this Book. Valef.

+ That is, the Orthodox.

(c) Instead of [the] Prætor's Office, [the Bp. of Constantinople] had rather read [the] Prætor's Office. [The Bp. of Constantinople] was to be consecrated by the Bishop of Rome, and to have the same honours as the Bishop of Rome.

(d) The Prætor's Office. [The Bp. of Constantinople] was to be consecrated by the Bishop of Rome, and to have the same honours as the Bishop of Rome.

(e) The Prætor's Office. [The Bp. of Constantinople] was to be consecrated by the Bishop of Rome, and to have the same honours as the Bishop of Rome.

(f) The Prætor's Office. [The Bp. of Constantinople] was to be consecrated by the Bishop of Rome, and to have the same honours as the Bishop of Rome.

(g) The Prætor's Office. [The Bp. of Constantinople] was to be consecrated by the Bishop of Rome, and to have the same honours as the Bishop of Rome.

(h) The Prætor's Office. [The Bp. of Constantinople] was to be consecrated by the Bishop of Rome, and to have the same honours as the Bishop of Rome.

(i) The Prætor's Office. [The Bp. of Constantinople] was to be consecrated by the Bishop of Rome, and to have the same honours as the Bishop of Rome.

(j) The Prætor's Office. [The Bp. of Constantinople] was to be consecrated by the Bishop of Rome, and to have the same honours as the Bishop of Rome.

(k) The Prætor's Office. [The Bp. of Constantinople] was to be consecrated by the Bishop of Rome, and to have the same honours as the Bishop of Rome.

(l) The Prætor's Office. [The Bp. of Constantinople] was to be consecrated by the Bishop of Rome, and to have the same honours as the Bishop of Rome.

(m) The Prætor's Office. [The Bp. of Constantinople] was to be consecrated by the Bishop of Rome, and to have the same honours as the Bishop of Rome.

(n) The Prætor's Office. [The Bp. of Constantinople] was to be consecrated by the Bishop of Rome, and to have the same honours as the Bishop of Rome.

(o) The Prætor's Office. [The Bp. of Constantinople] was to be consecrated by the Bishop of Rome, and to have the same honours as the Bishop of Rome.

(p) The Prætor's Office. [The Bp. of Constantinople] was to be consecrated by the Bishop of Rome, and to have the same honours as the Bishop of Rome.

Gregory

Gratianus Gregorius [Bishop] of Nysa, a City also in Capadocia, (who was Basilius's Brother; and Orreus [Bishop] of Meletina in Armenia, had the (b) Patriarchate of the Pontick Diocese for their allotment. To Amphilochius of Iconium, and Optimus [Bishop] of Antioch in Pisidia, was assign'd the Asian [Diocese]. To Timotheus [Bishop] of Alexandria was given [the Superintendency over the Churches] throughout Egypt. The administration of the Churches throughout the East was committed to the Bishops of that Region, [to wit] to Pelagius of Laodicea, and Dionorius of Tarsus; but to the Antiochian Church were reserv'd the Privileges [of Honour], which were given to Meletius then present. They likewise decreed, that if need required, a Provincial Synod should determine the Ecclesiastick affairs of every Province. These Sanctions were confirm'd by the Emperor's own consent. Such was the conclusion of this Synod.

his own name; which Church the embracers of Macedonius's opinion were heretofore in possession of, at such time as they were Separatists from the Arians; but were then expelled by the Emperor, because they refused embracing of his Faith. Moreover, at the same time Meletius Bishop of Antioch fell into a Distemper, and died: in praise of whom Gregorius, Basilius's Brother, spoke a (a) Funeral Oration. Meletius's Body was by his Friends convey'd to Antioch. Such as were favourers of Meletius, did again refuse to be subject to Paulinus; but caused Flavianus to be substituted in the place of Meletius. By reason whereof a new division did again arise amongst the People. Thus the Antiochian Church was afresh divided into two Parties, on account of their Bishops, not of their Faith.

CHAP. X.

That the Emperor ordered a Synod of all the Sects to be convened, at which time Arcadius his Son was proclaimed Augustus; and that the Novatians (who as to their Faith embraced the same Sentiments with the Homöusians) were the only persons that had permission to hold their Assemblies within the City. But the other Hereticks were forced from thence.

BUT, there were disturbances in other Cities also [which hapned] at such time as the Arians were ejected out of the Churches. On account whereof I cannot choose but admire the Emperor's Judiciousness and Prudence. For he suffered not (so far as it was in his power [to prevent them,]) the Cities to be filled with tumultuous disturbances: But within a short space of time, order'd a Synod of all the Heretics to be again convened, supposing that by a mutual conference of the Bishops, one concordant opinion would prevail amongst all men. I am of opinion, that this design of the Emperor's was the cause of that fortunate success he [then] had. For, about the same time, by a particular dispensation of Divine Providence, the barbarous Nations were reduced to a subjection to him. And amongst others, Athanasius King of the Goths made a surrender of himself with all his own people unto him,

(a) who soon after died at Constantinople. Moreover, at that time the Emperor proclaim'd his son Arcadius, Augustus, in the second Consulate of * Morobaudes which he bore with Saturninus, on the sixteenth of January. Not long after these things, the Bishops of every Sect arriv'd from all places, in the same Consulate, in the month June. The Emperor therefore having sent for Nectarius the Bishop, consult'd with him, what project should be made use of that the Christian Religion might be freed from diffentions, and the Church reduc'd to an union. And he said, that that controversy which caus'd a separation in the Churches, ought to be discuss'd, that so by a removal of the discord, an agreement might be effected in the Churches. At the hearing of this, Nectarius was full of anxiety and sollicitude. And having sent for Agellus then

(a) Athanasius King of the Goths, entered Constantinople in the Consulate of Eucherius and Evagrius, on the eleventh of January, and died on the twenty fifth of the same Month, as is recorded in Isidore's Epist. and in Aurellinus's Chronicon. On the year following, which was the year of Christ 382, when Amatius and Syzgirus were Consul, the whole Gothick Nation surrendered itself to Theodosius, on the 3d of October, as says the same Isidore. Vale.

* In the Greek he is called Morobaudes here, and hereafter.
† His name in the Greek is Saturninus.

CHAP. IX.

That the Emperor Theodosius [ordered] the Body of Paulus Bishop of Constantinople to be honourably translated [from the place of his] Exile. At which time also Meletius [Bishop] of Antioch departed this life.

AT that time the Emperor translated the Body of Paulus the Bishop from the City Ancyra; whom Philippus Prefect of the Praetorium had banish'd upon Macedonius's account, and had order'd him to be strangled in Cucusus a Town of Armenia, as I have * already mention'd. [Theodosius] therefore, having receiv'd [his Body] with much honour and reverence, deposited it in the Church which now bears note (a.)

* See Socrates, Book 2. Chap. 26. & Book 2. Chap. 16. note (a.)

(a) This Funeral Oration of Meletius Bishop of Antioch is now extant amongst the Works of Gregorius, Nysaeus, Vale.

Grati- then Bishop of the Novatians, (in regard he was Valen. then a person that embraced the same sentiments Jan. with him as to the Faith) he makes known to Theodas him the Emperor's intent. He, as to other things, was indeed a very pious person; but being not very able to maintain a dispute concerning the Doctrine [of Faith], he proposes his Reader to manage a Conference. But Sisinnius (an eloquent Man, and well-experienced in affairs, one who had an accurate skill in the Expositions of the Sacred Scriptures, and in Philosophick opinions) knew that these Disputations do not only not unite Diffinitions, but also raise Heresies to an higher degree of contention. Upon which account he gave Neftarius this advice: In regard he very well knew, that the Ancients avoided the attributing a beginning of Existence to the Son of God; (for they apprehended him to be co-eternal with the Father;) he advises him to shun Logical disputes; and to produce for evi-

(b) Τὰς λαμβάνειν τῶν παλαι-ων. Christophorus renders these words thus: The forms of the Creed delivered by the Ancients. Epiphanus Scholasticus thus: The Traditions of the Ancients. I like neither Version. For Socrates means the Books of the Ancient Doctors of the Church; and more especially, the interpretations of Sacred Scripture put forth by them.
[This certain, what he terms
ἐκδόσεις [Expositions] here, he does a little after call τὰς ἀκριβῆς ἀποδείξεις, the Books of the Ancients. Wherefore I have here chosen to render it Expositions, as Misulus does. For, what Socrates here calls ἀκριβῆς,
a little lower he terms ἀκριβῆς ἀποδείξεις, the Exposition of the Ancients. Valc.]
(c) Instead of ἀνεσχηματιστος, accommodated; it must undoubtedly be σερραματισθῶν, flourished.] Which Emendation is confirmed by Epiphanius Scholasticus: non tunc hic renders it:
De antiquis Ecclesiæ Doctrinis, qui ante divisionem floruerunt, constantem the Ancient Doctors of the Church, who flourished before the Division. Valc.]

Neftarius having heard all this from Sisinnius, goes in great haste to the Palace; and makes the Emperor acquainted with the advice which had been given him. The Emperor embraces it with much eagerness, and handled the matter prudently. For, without discovering his design, he ask'd [the Chiefs of the Hereticks] this one question, Whether they had any respect for,
and admitted of those Doctors of the Church [who lived] before [the rise of] the diffenti-on? Upon their non-refusal of them, and their affirming that they highly revered and honour'd them as being their Masters; the Emperor enquired of them again, whether they would acquiesce in them as witnesses of the Christian Religion worthy be credited? When the Chiefs of the Sects and their Legicians (for they had amongst them many persons well-provided for the combat of dispute;) heard this, they knew not what to do. For every one of them fell into a disagreement of opinion; some affirming that the Emperor's Proposal was good; others [thinking] it not conducive to their design:
For some were one way affected towards the Books of the Ancients, others another. Nor could they any longer agree amongst themselves; and they differed not only from other Sects, but those of the same Sect differ'd one from the other. Concordant malice therefore, like the tongue of those ancient Giants, was divided, and their Tower of mischief demolish'd. After the Emperor perceived their confused + Or, Distention, and [was sensible] that they confided in diffipation only, and not in the exposition of the Ancients, he betook himself to a second project: And orders every Sect to (d) set forth [and o-Cynel deliver in] to him in writing a draught of that Creed which they own'd. Then those [of every Sect] amongst them that were skillfullest and most eloquent, wrote their own opinion, making their use of a great deal of caution and circumspection in their expressions. A day also was pitcht upon whereon the Bishops of each Sect upon summons hadra, he met at the Palace. At which time were present read, as Neftarius and Agellus, Prelates of the Homoeousian Nicophorus Creed; of the Arians, Demophilus; of the (e) Eunomi-ans, Eunomius himself; of those that embraced Macedonius's opinion, Eusebius [Bishop] of Cyzicum. And he,

(d) [and deliver in] to him in writing, a Draught,] &c. Valc.
(e) This Draught of the Creed, which Eunomius then presented to the Emperor Theodosius, I have by me in Manuscript; for which I am obliged to the most Famous and Learned Emilius Bigotius. In the Bavarian Manuscript, and in Livingius's Copy, this Draught of the Creed was placed at the latter end of Gregorius Nyssenus's Books against Eunomius, as Gresser attests. But, in the Florentine Copy, from which Bigotius transcribed this Creed, it was placed at the close of the Books. Nor will it be useless, to insert it here. For, though it contains Eunomius's whole Impiety; yet some things occur in it, as no wise despicable.

EUNOMIUS'S CREED.

Τὸ ὄν ὡς ἑαυτοῦ ἐκ τοῦ οὐκ ἰσχυροῦ Χριστοῦ, We Whereas God and our Savour Jesus Christ, according to a most just sentence, has said, that he will confess before God and the Father, those which should confess Him before men, and that he will deny such as should deny Him; and whereas the A-postolick Doctrine does exhort us, to be always ready to give [an account to everyone that asketh it: Whereas [lastly,] the Imperial commands do require this Confession; with all readings We confess, what our Sentiments are, and that We Believe in one only true God, according to his own Doctrine, not honouring Him with a false voice. For He cannot lie: But is by nature and Glory truly one God; without beginning, always, and eternally alone. Nor parted or divided into many as to his Substance, according to which he is one; nor existing sometimes one, at others another, nor receding from what he is: nor formed from our Substance into three Persons. For he is altogether and wholly one, continuing always alone in one and the same manner. Having no companion of his Divinity, no partaker of his Glory, no Consort of his power, no Assessor of his Kingdom. For he is one and the only Omnipotent God, God of Gods, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. The Highest over all the earth, the Highest in the heavens, the Highest in the Highest, the Heavenly things, true in being what he is, and always continuing so. True in his Works, true in his Words.
The beginning of all Subjection, Power, Empire. Above Conception and free from change, as being incorrupt. Not dividing his own Substance in begetting, nor being the same begetting and begotten, or existing the same Father and Son. For he is Incorrupt. In working no wife moving matter, or members, or natural instruments. For he stands in need of nothing. WE BELIEVE also in the Son of God, the only Begotten God, the First begotten of every Creature, Christ the true God, who subsistent not (before he was,) named the Son without Generation, begotten before every Creature. Not increased. The Beginning of the Ways of God [in order to his] Works, and being the Word in the beginning; not without a beginning. The living Wisdom, the operating Truth, the subsisting Power, the begotten Life; as being the Son of God giving life to the living; and restoring Life to the dead; the true Life enlightening every Man that cometh into the World: Good, and the Author of Good things; in regard he is begotten of the Goodness and Power of the Father: who hath not divided with him that has imparted the Dignity, nor with any other, his Father's Substance, or Kingdom. But by Generation is made: Glorious, and the Lord of Glory. Who has received Glory from the Father, but has not partaken of the Father's Glory. For, the Glory of the Almighty is incommunicable, as he himself has said, I will not give my Glory to another. Who has been glorified by the Father before ages. Who has been glorified by the Father through ages, and throughout the whole rational and created Substance. Whom the whole celestial Shire dar-dard. For he is the Lord and King of Glory, as being the Son of God and God; the Framer of things immortal and mortal, the Framer of spirits and of all flesh. For all things were made by him, and without him nothing was made. The King and Lord of all Life and breath of those [Creatures] that were made by him. For all things were de-vised unto him by the Father, according to his holy expression, and the Father hath

Gratianus Fufina. (Mother to Valentinianus Augustus.) a Woman that was a Arian, during her Husband's life, had no power to be mischievous towards the Embracers of the Homoian Creed. But after [her Husband's death,] when her Son was very young, she went to Millain, and raised great disturbances against Ambrosius the Bishop, issuing out an Order that he should be banish'd. And whilst the People made a resistance [against this Order,] out of their excessive love to Ambrosius, and oppos'd those that endeavour'd to hale him away into Exile; in that interim news came, that Gratianus was treacherously slain by the Tyrant Maximus. For Andragathius Maximus's Lieutenant (being hid in a Carriage put into the form of a woman's Horse-litter, and carried by Mules; and having given the Guards a Command, that they should before-hand spread abroad a report, that the Emperor Gratianus's Wife was in that Litter;) meets the Emperor before Lyons, a City in France, passing the River. The Emperor supposing it to be his Wife, was not aware of the Treachery: but, as a blind man does into a Ditch, fell into the hands of his Enemy. For Andragathius leapt out of the Litter on a sudden, and slew Gratianus. Gratianus therefore ended his life in the Consulate of * Marobaudes and Saturninus, after he had reigned fifteen years, and lived twenty four. This accident cool'd the Emperor's Mothers heart against Ambrosius. Moreover, Valentinianus, though against his will, complied with the necessity of that juncture, and admitted Maximus to be his Colleague in the Empire. At which time Probus, afraid of Maximus's power, resolves upon a retreat into those parts of the Empire nearer to the East. Immediately therefore he departs out of Italy; and arriving in Illyricum, he fix'd his residence (b) in Thessalonica [a City] of Macedonia.

* Or, Marobaudes.

(b) I will here propose my doubt to the Reader. I am of opinion therefore, that Thessalonica, which was the chief City of Macedonia, was under Theodosius's Empire. My reasons are; (1.) because Theodosius, after he had been Proclaimed Augustus by Gratianus at Sirmium, went to Thessalonica, resided there a long while, and receiv'd the Embassies of the Cities of the East; and when he fell sick, he was baptized by Abolus Bishop of that City, as Zosimus, Prosser, Socrates, and others do relate. (2.) During his Residence in that City, he published many Laws, which are extant in the Theodosius Code, in the Titles de file Civilibus, and de Hæreticis; which Laws are dated at Thessalonica. (3.) Lastly, in the Constantinopolitan Synod, at which 'tis manifest the Eastern Bishops only were present, Abolus Bishop of Thessalonica is reckoned, as may be seen in the eighth Chapter of this Book. After Theodosius's times, there is no doubt but Thessalonica was under the Eastern Emperors. For 'twas the chief City of the Oriental Illyricum, which contained Macedonia and Dacia, as we are informed from The Notitia of the Roman Empire. But, whether or no it was under the Eastern Emperors, about the beginning of Theodosius's Reign; may, as before, be doubted. For Aurelius Victor, and Zonaras do expressly affirm, that Gratianus gave Theodosius only the East and the Indies. And Zosimus relate, that Valentinianus Junior (upon his division of the Empire with his Brother,) had Italy, Africa, and Illyricum. Neither had Constantius, or Valens (who governed the Eastern Empire before Theodosius) Illyricum under their Dominion. In the times of Valens, 'tis certain, Misernius Præfekt of the Pretorian, governed Italy, Africa, and Illyricum at the same time; as Amm. Marcellinus attests. Notwithstanding, Valens (after his Brother Valentinianus's death) seems to have annex'd Macedonia and Dacia to his own Empire, by the consent of his Brother's Sons. Which Collection I make from the close of Amm. Marcellinus's thirty first Book; where he says, that Valens's Soldiers and Palatines, who had been besieged by the Goths at Adriople, went out after that Siege was broken up, and hasten'd some two Dacia, others into Macedonia, supposing, that Valens had retired thither. See Amm. Marcellinus, pag. 468. Edit. Par. 1636. Valef.

C H A P. XII.

Valen. Jun.
Theodosius.

That the Emperor Theodosius having provided a numerous Army against Maximus, (at which time Flaccilla bore him his Son Honorius;) left Arcadius at Constantinople; but went himself to Millain, where he came to an Engagement with the Tyrant.

BUT the Emperor Theodosius was extremely full of care and sollicitude, and formed a very powerful Army against the Tyrant; being afraid lest he should treacherously murder Valentinianus Junior also. At the same time arrived Embassadors from the Persians, requesting Peace of the Emperor. Moreover, then also a Son was born to the Emperor, named Honorius, of whom his Wife Flaccilla was deliver'd, in the Consulate of * Richomerus and Clearchus, on the * Or, ninth of September. In the same Consulate died Agelius Bishop of the Novatians, a little before [ Honorius's birth. ] On the year following, whereon Arcadius Augustus bore his first Consulate with Bauton, Timotheus Bishop of Alexandria ended his life, who was succeeded in that See by Theophilus. A year after this, Demophilus Bishop of the Arians Herefe, concluded his life. The Arians sent for one Marinus, a Bishop of their own Herefe, out of Thracia, whom they intrusted with the Bishoprick. But Marinus sat [Bishop] not long. For under him the Arian Sect was divided into two Parties, as we shall declare hereafter. Wherefore they sent for Deotobus out of Antioch in Syria, and constituted him their Bishop. In the interim, the Emperor proceeded to a War against Maximus, and left his Son Arcadius Augustus at Constantinople. Arriving at Thessalonica, he finds (a) Valentinianus and those about him in great sadness and anxiety, because out of necessity they had admitted the Tyrant to be Emperor, as it were. But Theodosius, in outward appearance, gave no indication of his mind [in favour of either side.] For he neither (b) rejected, nor admitted Maximus's Embassy. But he could not endure the sight of a Tyrannical Government over the Romans, cover'd with the specious pretence of an Imperial name. Having therefore musterd his Military Forces, he march'd to (c) Millain. For thither Maximus was already come.

(a) The Phœcis, τὰς εὐδαίμονας, which Theodosius renders ill, thus, Valentinian's Soldiers. For himself.

who was on this year (when Valentinian himself was the third time Consul, with Eutropius), conquer'd by Maximus, (as Sulpicius informs us, in his first Book concerning the Life of Marinius) and together with his Mother Fufina, his Præfekt and Comites, fled to Thessalonica. Valef. (b) But Zosimus says, that Maximus's Embassy was received by Theodosius, and that he acknowledged him to be Emperor and admitted of his Statues; and ordered Cyregius Præfekt of the Pretorian in the East, that Maximus's Statues should be propoed to publick view at Alexandria, and that he should declare to the people that Maximus was Colleague of his Empire. Which thing Sigonius (in his Book de Occidental Imperio) has done ill to place on the year of Christ 364, when Richomerus and Clearchus were Consuls; in regard it was done in Valentinianus's third Consulate, which he bore with Eutropius, on the year of Christ 367. For, on this year Cyregius was Præfekt of the Pretorian. Valef.

(c) He should rather have said Aquileia: For thither Maximus went, as Zosimus and the other Chronologers do inform us. Valef.

C H A P. XIII.

Concerning the Disturbance raised at Constantinople by the Arians.

ABOUT the same time that the Emperor was busied in the War, the Arians in Constantinople raised a disturbance, by this Artifice. 'Tis usual

Valen. usual with * Men to frame stories of things they Theodofius. are ignorant of. And if at any time they have * This Cha gotten an occasion, they spread greater Ru-raller does mours concerning the things they have a mind well befit to, being always extremely desirous of Changes too many and Alterations. This was the case of Conflan- Persons of tinople at that time. For some framed and divulour own ged one thing concerning the War which was Nation at waged at that great distance, others another ;
this jun- always presuming upon the worst event of afdure. fairs. And when nothing of action had happened in the War, as if themselves had been Spectators upon the very Spot, they discours'd concerning things which they knew not : [to wit.]
that the Tyrant had gotten a Victory over the Emperor's Army, That thus many were slain on this side, and so many on that ; and that the Emperor was just upon falling into the Tyrant's hands. Then the Arians, at that time highly incensed, (for they were sorely vex'd because those that had been persecuted by them heretofore, were now in possession of the Churches within the City : ) began to enlarge the Reports.
But afterwards, some of the stories that were told, induced even the Coyners themselves of these false rumours to believe, that the reports they had framed and divulged, were not feign'd but undoubtedly true. For, such persons as had taken them up upon hear-say, affirmed to the Authors of these Lies, that the account of Affairs was exactly agreeable to what they had heard from themselves. Whereupon, the Arians became embolden'd, brake out into an irrational violence ; threw fire into the Palace of Nectari- us the Bishop, and burnt it. This was done in Theodofius's second Consulate, [which he bore] with Cynegius.

CHAPTER XIV.

Concerning the Emperor Theodosius's Victory, and the Tyrant's Overthrow.

But whilst the Emperor was upon his march towards the Tyrant, the Forces under Maximus's Command, inform'd of the great military preparations, could not so much as resist an assault of the same thereof ; but, being put into a consternation, bound the Tyrant, and deliver'd him to the Emperor. He was slain in the same Confularé, on the (a) twenty seventh of August. But Andragathius (he that slew Gratianus with his own hand,) after he understood that Maximus was routed, cast himself into the adjacent River, and was drowned. Then, both the Victorious Emperors made their Entry into Rome. Honorius, Theodosius's Son, a Child very young, was with them. For after Maximus was vanquish'd, his Father sent for him from Constantinople. They continued therefore at Rome, celebrating their triumphal Festivals. At which time Theodosius the Emperor shewed a signal instance of his Goodness and Clemency; towards (b) Symmachus, a person that had been Consul. For, this Symmachus was the eminentest person of the Senate at Rome, and was admired for his great skill in the Roman Literature. There are now extant many Orationes of his written in the Latin tongue. But, in regard he had composed an Oration in praise of Maximus whilst he was alive, and had spoken it to him in publick, he was afterwards charg'd with the crime of High-treason. Upon this account he was afraid of a capital punishment, and took sanctuary in the Church. But the Emperor had so great a reverence for the Christian Religion, that he not only highly honour'd the Prelates of his own Faith; but gave gracious reception to the Novatians also, who embraced the Homousian Creed. Therefore, that he might gratifie Leontius Bishop of the Novatian Church at Rome, he pardon'd Symmachus's crime. Symmachus having his pardon granted him, wrote an Apologeticke to the Emperor Theodosius. Thus this War, which at the beginning seem'd to threaten [the Empire] with great calamity, was terminated by this sudden conclusion.

CHAPTER XV.

Concerning Flavianus of Antioch.

AT the same time these affairs were transacted (a) at Antioch in Syria. After the death of Paulinus, the people who had been his Followers, had an aversion for Flavianus. Upon which account they caus'd Euvagrius to be ordained Bishop of their own party. He having not long surviv'd his Ordination, no other person was afterwards constituted in his place; which was effected by the diligence and endeavours of Flavianus. Notwithstanding, those that had an aversion for Flavianus, in regard he had violated his * Oath, kept their assemblies apart by themselves. But Flavianus left no stone unturned, (as the saying is), that he might bring these persons also to own a subjection to him. Which he effected soon after, [to wit:] when he had appeased the anger of Theophilus then Bishop of Alexandria, by whose intercession Flavianus procured a reconciliation also with Damasus Bishop of Rome. For both these Prelates had been incensed against Flavianus, not only on account of his perjury, but also in regard he had given an occasion of a separation, amongst that people who had been brought to an agreement. Theophilus therefore being pacified, sent Isidorus a Presbyter, and reconciled Damasus, as yet offended; telling him, 'twas very conducive for the effecting an union amongst the people, to pass by the fault which Flavianus had committed. Communion being after this manner restored to Flavianus; the people of Antioch were within a small space of time reduced to a reconciliation. Such was the conclusion of this affair at Antioch. For the Arians in that City were ejected out of the Churches, and had their meetings in the Suburbs thereof. Moreover, in this interim died Cyrillus Bishop of Jerusalem, who was succeeded by Johannes, ver'd him to the Emperor. He was slain in the same Confulate, on the (a) twenty feventh of Auguft. But Andragathus, the thawful Gratianus with his own hand, after he underftood that Maximus was routed, caft himfelf into the adjacent River, and was drowned. Then, both the Victorious Emperors made their Entry into Rome. Honorius, Theodofius's Son, a Child very young, was with them. For after Maximulus was vanquifhed, his Father fent for him in Hydruntum. The fame is recorded in thofe Fefiti; which Jacobus sirmondus has publifhed under Maximus's name. For, in thefe words there: Theodofius Aug. II. & Cynegio Cof. &c. In the fecond Confulate of Theodofius Auguftus [which he bore] with Theodofius Auguftus, the Tyrant, that publick Enemy, slain by Theodofius Auguftus, three Miles from Aquileia, on the fifth of the Calends of Auguft [that is, on the 28th of July] Alfo, his Son Viftor is slain a few days after, in the Gallia, by Theodofius's Comes. Further, this Viftor had been created firft Cefar, and then Auguftus, by his Father; as we are informed from this old Infcription recorded by Sigonius, in his 9th Book, de Occidentalibus Imperio. DD. NN. MAG. C. C. MAXIMO, ET FL. VICTORI PIISS. FELICIBUS SEMPER AUGUSTIS BONO R. P. NATIS. Where you fee Maximus has two Pranominis, to wit, Magnus Clemens, Sulpitius Severus (Book a. Hiſtor. Sacr.) calls him Clemens Maximus. But, by Oroſius he is termed Magnus Maximus. Valef.

CHAPTER XVI.

Concerning the demolition of the Idol-Temples at Alexandria; and concerning the Fight betwixt the Pagans and Christians, which hapned on that account.

At the very same time, this disturbance also happened at Alexandria. By the solicitation of Theophilus the Bishop, the Emperor issued forth an Order, for the demolition of the Heathen Temples at Alexandria; and gave command, that this Order should be put in execution by Theophilus's care. Theophilus being thus empower'd, us'd his utmost endeavours in order to the exposing the Heathen Mysteries to ignominy and contempt. He cleans'd Mithra's Temple, and destroy'd that belonging to Serpis. He also expos'd to publick view the bloody Mysteries

* That is, Mitra's Temple: what their Mysteries were, Jarman has told us, Book 3, chap. 2.

+ Pieces of Wood made in fashion of a Man's privities.

at Alexandria, more especially those that profess Philosophy, upon sight of the doing hereof, were unable to repress their discontent; but made *Sec Bouk
3: chap. 2,
an addition to the * former tragic actions which they had perpetrated. For, upon a sign given which they had agreed on before-hand, they made an unanimous assault upon the Christians, and murder'd every one they met: Moreover,
the Christians defended themselves; and thus mischief was attended with mischief. This fight was continued so long, till a satiety of slaughter put an end to it. Few of the Heathens were destroy'd in this conflict; but of the Christians [here fell] a great many. The wounded on both sides were innumerable. After the perpe-tration of this action, a fear seiz'd the Heathen who dreaded the Emperor's anger. Wherefore, having done what they pleas'd, and satiated their minds with slaughters, they absconded, some in one place, others in another. Moreover, many of them fled from Alexandria, and dispers'd to themselves into several Cities. Amongst which number were the two Grammarians. (a)

(c) Some etymology of this Helladius the Grammarians, are extant in Petrus of Bibbione's
Valer.

† Πιεστης; that is, The Ape's Priest. For the Egyptians worship an Ape, as Lucian tells us, in his piece, De Συστήν.

(3) Strabo (Geog. 17.806) tells us that his friend, the Prefect named Euvargis, is the Commander-in-chief of the Militia in Egypt; he names Romanus Eumypius likewise (in the Life of Aelius), names both these persons; and attests that they gave a great assistance to Theophilus Bishop of Alexandria, in destroying the Temple of Serapis. I will relate Eumypius's own Words here, because they want correcting; (the Eunap. in Vita Aedifici. p. 63. Edit. Colon. Allobrog. 1616 : ) καὶ τὰς τοῦ Κισσοῦ ἱερὰ ταύτης ἐσάραξαν· ἐπὶ οὐδ' αὖτε τὴν βασιλείαν, ὅθεν καὶ ὁ θεοσεβὴς καὶ ἀπεργασθεὶς τὸν καταρτισμὸν τῆς πόλεως ἐπέστειλε· καὶ τοὺς ἀποστάτας πάλιν αὖτις καταλάβετο· "Εὐμύριος δὲ τὸν στρατὸν ἀφ' οὗρου Ποντοῦ ἀπὸ τῆς ναυῆς ἀγέρωντος ἐγένετο· ἀπόδοξεν· That is, the Temples about the City were destroyed; and the King was slain; and the Emperor, who had undertaken the Conquest, fled; and the People, who were the Emperor's Enemies, returned home; and the exorable Persons, who were certain Eumyrians, that reign'd over the haughty Giants: Eucteus being then Governor of the Civil affairs, and Romanus intrusted with the Command of the Militia throughout Egypt. On my peril, correct it thus: "Εὐαγγέλιον τῆς πόλεως Ἰερουζαλὴμ, Εὐαγγέλιον being then Governor of the Civil affairs. In the Theodosian Code, (cited de Paganis), there is a Law extant of Theodosius, directed to this Εὐαγγέλιος Prefect of Egypt, and to Romulus Comes of the Illiriae throughout Egypt; which Law was dated at Aquileia, in the Consulate of Tetastianus and Symmachus. From which Law it may be concluded that Severian's Temple was demolished at Alexandria, in the year of Christ 390. And that the Temple was destroyed in 390, and says, this Temple was destroyed when Timotheus and Prometheus were Consul; which was the year of Christ 380. And this, in my judgment, is the truer. For Οὐγενιος Prefect of the Praetorium, at his being sent into Egypt, had a command from Theodosius, that he should pull down the Hearen-Temples; as Zosimus relates in his first Book. And he had executed that command, as Idatius attests in his 388. Note Οὐγενιος died in his own Consulate, on the year of Christ 388. Valse.

The Temples therefore were ruin'd, but the Images of their Gods were molten into Caldrons, and into other utensils necessary for the Alexandrian Church; the Emperor having given [the Images of] the Heathen-Gods [to that Church,] for the relief of the Poor. Wherefore Theophilus brake in pieces all [the Images of] the Gods, gave one, to wit, the Image of the fore-mention'd God, which he order'd to be preserv'd unmelted, and caused it to be set up in a publick place; lest (said he) the Heathens should in Ages to come deny, that they had been Worshippers of such Gods. At which action [of Theophilus's,] Ammonius the Grammarians was, to my knowledge, highly disgusted: for he was wont to say, that the Religion of the Gentiles had suffer'd most horrid abuses, (c) because but one Image only was not melted down; but was preserv'd merely to render Gentilism ridiculous. But Helladius made his boasts in some persons hearing, that in the Conflict he had slain nine men with his own hand. Such were the doings in Alexandria at that time.

(c) Instead of [ lra mñ xj ] it should be [ ʃti mñ xj ], because but, &c. ]

Image of their God Simius, which Theophilus had ordered to be reserved on purpose. And thus Epiphanius, Scholasticus has explained this place in Socrates, much better than Christopherson; who understood those Words of Socrates [Ἰσθὺς τῶν Θεῶν] as spoken concerning a certain (or rather uncertain) God. Vale!

Socrates
means the
to be re-plained this understood
g a certain

CHAPTER XVII.

Concerning the Hieroglyphical Letters found in the Temple of Serapis.

[Moreover,] at such time as Serapis's Temple was rifled and demolish'd, there were Letters found [in it] engraven on stones; (a) which [Letters] they call Hieroglyphical. These characters had the forms and resemblances of Crosses. When the Christians and Heathens saw these characters, each party * adapted them to their own Religion. For the Christians, who affirm that the Cross is the sign of Christ's salutary Passion, thought this Character was properly and peculiarly theirs. The Heathens alledg'd it was some thing [that belonged in] common both to Christ, and to Serapis; for a Character [said they] made in form of a Cross, betokens something amongst the Christians, another amongst the Heathens.

(4) Instead of [τὰ καλὴ γλῶσσις] εὐλογημένη, called an Hieroglyphick;] it ought rather to be thus written [τὰ καλὴ μῦθα ἱερα γλῶσσις], which [Letters] they call

Hieroglyphical : ] to Epiphanius Scolasticus seems to have read. Inde, sacres and Sacramen do relate, that these Hieroglyphical Letters were found in the Temple of Serapis, cut upon the Wall thereof. But Africanus does not say they were found there: He tells us rather, that they were kept and expounded at Canopus. At his second Book Eccles. Hist. chap. 26; these are his Words: Jam vero Canopi quæ enumerat superfluitatis flagitia ! &c. But now, who can enumerate the superfluous impieties at Canopus? Where, under a pretext of their sacerdotal Letters, (for so they call the ancient Letters of the Egyptians :) there was in a manner a publick School of Magic Art. Valef.

G g Whilest

in force to this day amongst other Heresies; where the term Canon is manifestly taken for a Rule and Decree. But Petavius is not of Petavius's opinion. His reasons are. (1) The propriety of the Greek tongue admits not of this sense. (2) If a new Canon were then made concerning the institution of a Penitentiary Presbyter, he queries, where, and in what Council it was published. Valerius's Sentiment therefore is; that the term Canon is here to be taken for the Maricula, or Roll of Ecclesiastical Officers belonging to the Church. In which sense, he says, 'tis taken in the 2<sup>d</sup> Can. Council. Chalcedon. pag. 112. Edit. Bevereg. where ('tis true) it must be taken in a more comprehensive sense, than to signify the Clerus only; that is, those who are ordained by imposition of hands: because the Fathers in that Canon speak of all the Ecclesiastical Officers, such as were the Oeconomus, the Defensores, the Manfionarii, &c. concerning whom see Dr. Bevereg's Notes, pag. 109. But, whether it is to be used in this sense here, I determine not; let the Learned judge.

Valen. Jun. Theodosius. such Persons as had sinned after Baptism, might make a confession of their Crimes (c) before this Presbyter instituted for that purpose. This Canon is in force to this day amongst other Heresies. Only the Homosufians, and who embraced the same Sentiments with them, as to the Faith, the Novatians, have refused [making use of] the Penitentiary Presbyter. For the Novatians admitted not of this * additional Function at its first institution. But [the Homosufians] who are at this present in possession of the Churches, after they had retained [the Office of the Penitentiary] for a long time, abrogated it in the times of Neftarius the Bishop, on account of this accident which happened in the [Constantinopolitan] Church. There came a (d) Gentlewoman to the Penitentiary [of the Church of Constantinople];

we have declared at note (a.) in this chapter, mostly in Mr. Hooker's own words. Which incomparable Author, in the forecited Book of his Eccles. Polity, has by unexceptionable authorities made it evident, (whatever the Learned Reader may find said to the contrary by Baronius at the year of Christ 56, by Petavius in his Diatriba about this point, which occurs at pag. 225. of his notes on Epiphanius, or by Bellarmine;) that the ancient ἐξουσιαι, or confession, which the Primitive use to speak of in the exercise of repentance, was made openly in the hearing of the whole both Ecclesiastical Consistory and Assembly. After the institution of Penitentiary Presbyters in every Church, this public confession was abrogated; and such as were guilty of Crimes, confessed them not πρὸς τὸ λαὸν, in the presence of the people, but (as Socrates here says) πρὸς τὸν ἐπισκοπὸν καὶ τὸν πρεσβύτερον, before this Presbyter instituted for that purpose. The same is confirmed by Sozomen, Book 7. Chap. 16. where he tells us, how a Presbyter Elected to the Office of a Penitentiary, was to be qualified. One of his qualifications was, that he ought to be ἐκκλησιαστικός, a person that could hold his tongue: by which 'tis plain, that the confessions made to him were private, and to be kept concealed.

* That is, the Office of the Penitentiary. For these Hereticks admitted no Person to their Communion upon any repentance, who was once known to have sinned after Baptism: See Engeb. Eccles. Hist. Book 6. Cap. 43. which practice of theirs, how fair lower their pretence might seem, made sinners not the fewer, but the closer, and the more obdurate.

+ To wit, from the Persecution under the Emperor Decius, till after the Election of Neftarius to the Episcopate of Constantinople.

(d) Valerius, in his note here, starts this query; whether the confession made by this Gentlewoman were publick, or private? In order to the answering whereof, he remarks, that the confit twice before the Penitentiary. At her first confession, she made known all her sins; whereupon the discoverer her having been deputed by the Deacon. These two confessions (continues Valerius) were different both in time and manner. The first was of all her faults κατὰ μέρος, particularly (as Socrates words it;) the second was of one crime only. All which may perhaps be true. After this remark made, Valerius concludes both these confessions to have been secret; and which (says he) is apparent from these two reasons; (1) because publick confession was never in use in the Church: (2) in regard Socrates says, that this Woman accused not herself before the People, but before the Penitentiary. Valerius's first reason appears evidently false, not only from Mr. Hooker's Words quoted before, and the unquestionable authorities he there produces to prove what he asserts; but from a passage in Sozomen, Book 7. Chap. 16. where that Ecclesiastical Historian, (giving reasons of the alteration which the Grecians made, by abrogating publick confession, and instituting Penitentiaries throughout all Churches to take the confessions and appoint the penances of secret offenders,) assigns this for one: ὅτι τὸν λαὸν, καὶ ἐκείνους, καὶ ἀποκρύπτει τοὺς ἁμαρτίας, &c. It did from the beginning deservedly seem burlesome to the Priests, that sins should be declared before the whole congregation of the Church as witnesses, in a Theatre as it were; from which Words 'tis evident that publick confession was once in fashion in the Church. Valerius's second reason we have before cleared and confirmed by the joint Testimony of Socrates and Sozomen. See note (c.)

sinople; to whom] she made particular confession. Valen. Jun. on of those sins, which she had committed after her Baptism. The Presbyter advised the woman to fast, and pray continually, that together with her confession, she might have some (c) work also worthy of Repentance to shew.

(f) Some time after this the woman detected her sins as she felt of another crime. For she confessed that she had been a Deacon of that Church had lain with her. Upon her discovery hereof the Deacon was ejected out of the Church; and the (g) people were in a kind of tumult disturbed. For they were not only offended at what was done, but also because that fact had brought an infamy and disgrace upon the Church. When therefore Ecclesiastical persons were reproached upon this account, one Eudemon a Presbyter of that Church, by birth for this an Alexandrian, advised Neftarius the Bishop, (1) to abolish the Penitentiary Presbyter's Office; and to leave every person to his own conscience, rarely for the participation of the [Holy] Mysteries; (2) to do publick penance, the Church being indulgent towards the modesty of Matron. (3) Nothing occurs at this passage, which may make us think this Matron's penance was publick. (3) in regard she is enjoined to fast and pray continually; that may be understood of private satisfaction, which she performed at home and in secret. To which reasons of Valerius's, a fourth may be added, drawn from the Penitentiary's Office: which was to take the Confession of secret sinners, to advise them the best way to be could for their souls health, to comfort and counsel them, but not to lay on them more than private penance. See note (a.) in this chapter.

(f) In the original 'tis thus express'd, ἡ δὲ γυνὴ μετὰ τὸν ὁρισμὸν αὐτῆς, has the same import here with μετὰ τὸν, That is, in pursuance of time, or some time after this. For Socrates's meaning is, that this was the woman's second confession. Which is confirmed by Nicephorus and Sozomen; who (in his Eccles. Hist. Book 7. Chap. 16.) words this passage thus; τὴν δὲ λαβὼν ἐν τῷ ἐκκλησιαστικῷ, διεκρίθη, καὶ ὡς ἐποίησε τὴν ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ τὴν ἐν τῷ ἐκκλησίᾳ, ὡς ἐποίησε τὴν ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, ὡς ἐποίησε τὴν ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, &c. But the woman came to [the Penitentiary,] and deputed, &c. Val.

(g) Here arises a difficulty, to wit, how this fact could come to the people's knowledge, if the woman's confession were secret? How else the Bishop could know this wicked fact, who degraded the Deacon on account thereof? My Sentiment is, that the Penitentiary Presbyter, to whom the woman had confessed this impious act, first sent the Deacon, reproving him before the woman, and forced him to a confession of his Crime; then, he made a report of the whole matter to Neftarius the Bishop, by whom he had been set over the penitents, and whole deputy he was in that Office. For the Bishop himself reconciled penitents. Nor ought any one to make this objection, if we admit what you have said to be true, it follows that the secrets of confession may be discovered. I deny that confession. For the Penitentiary Presbyter made known the Deacon's wickedness only to the Bishop; the Matron's name he concealed. Further, the Deacon's degradation does plainly confirm what I have asserted. For Neftarius the Bishop could not have deposed him, had he not had intimation from the Penitentiary, who had detected the Deacon of what he did. Val.

(b) The Learned Reader must have observed, that there is nothing wherein the Romanists do more disagree amongst themselves, than in their accounts of this fact of Neftarius. Petavius (in his notes on Epiphanius, pag. 243.) does maintain, that Neftarius abrogated publick penance only, but continued confession, that is, private confession for publick, he says, was never in use in the Church. Valerius (in his note at this place) does assert, that neither confession, nor penance were abolished by Neftarius; but that the Bishop removed this particular Penitentiary Presbyter only, and that but for a time, because of the discontented people's indignation. One Agellinus, (who is mentioned by Pacellinus, in his 92<sup>d</sup> Note on Saint Cyprian's Treatise de Lapsis.) wrote a Book on purpose to shew that Neftarius did but put the Penitentiary from his Office, and abrogated not the Office itself. But all these assertions are palpably contradicted (1) by the whole advice which Eudemon gives Neftarius in this chapter, to wit, of leaving the People from that time forward to their own Consciences; (2) by the Conference between our Socrates and Eudemon, which follows in this chapter; wherein complaint is made of some inconvenience which the want of this Office would breed; (3) by that which the History declares concerning other Churches, who did as Neftarius had done before them, not in deposing the same Man (for that was impossible) but in removing the same Office out of their Churches, which Neftarius had abrogated in his. All these particulars are evident from this chapter in Socrates's which whom Sozomen (Book 7. chap. 16.) agrees, and adds further, that in no wise be observed. Besides, in his Epistle to the Colossians he does loudly affirm, that [such] Observations are a shadow. Wherefore he says, * Let no man judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of any holy-day, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath-days; which are a shadow of things to come. And in the Epistle to the Hebrews, this very [Apoll] does confirm the same things in these words, † For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law. The Apostle therefore, and the Gospels have no where imposed the yoke of servitude on those who have approached the preaching [of the Faith:] but have left the Feast of Easter, and the other Festivals, to be honoured by their gratitude and benevolence, who have had benefits conferred upon them [on these days.] Wherefore, in regard Men love Festivals, because thereon they have a cessation from their labours, each person in every place, according to his own pleasure, has by a certain custom celebrated the memory of the saving Passion. For neither our Saviour, nor his Apostles, have enjoyn'd us by any Law to observe this Festival. Nor have the Gospels, or the Apostles threatened us with any Mult, Punishment, or Curse, as the Mosaic Law does the Jews. For, 'tis merely for the History's sake, in order to [a publishing of] the reproach of the Jews, (because they polluted themselves with blood on their very Festivals,) that it has been recorded in the Gospels, that our Saviour suffered even on the Days of unleaven'd bread. Moreover, it was not the Apostles design, to make Laws concerning Festival-days, but to introduce good Life and Piety. And it seems to me, that, as many other things in several places have been establish'd by custom, so the Feast of Easter also had a peculiar observation amongst all persons from some old usage, in regard none of the Apostles, as I have said, have made any determinate Decree about it. Now, that the observation of this Festival had its original amongst all Men in the primitive times from Custom rather than Law, the things themselves do demonstrate. For, in Asia the Less, most people kept the fourteenth day of the Moon, disregarding the Sabbath-day. And tho' this was their practice, yet they never made a separation from those who celebrated the Feast of Easter otherwise; till such time as † That is, anger, sent an * Excommunicatory Libel to the effect that † Quarodecimani in Asia. For which fact Irenaeus Bishop of Lyons in France severely reprov'd † Vicior by Letter; and blaming him for his immoderate heat; and informing him, that altho' of the Ancients differ'd in their celebration of the Feast of Easter, yet they did in no wise separate from a mutual communion. Also, that Polycarp Bishop of Smyrna, (a) who afterwards suffer'd Martyrdom under Gordianus, communion in Gordianus's reign, but that of Marcus Antoninus, as 'tis manifest from Eusebius, and other Writers. 'Tis certain, that Irenaeus does relate, (in his third Book against Heretics, which piece he wrote during Eleutherius's Prebendancy over the Roman Church;) that is, in the times of Marcus Antoninus, that Polycarp had at that time suffer'd Martyrdom. Wherefore these Words [who afterwards suffer'd Martyrdom under Gordianus] are rather to be placed a little above, after these [Irenaeus Bishop of Lyons in France.] For they are more accomodate to Irenaeus, than to Polycarp. But let the prudent Reader, determine hereof according to his own arbitrement. I know indeed, that in St. Benignus Divionensis's Chronicle, the Martyrdom of Irenaeus Bishop of Lyons is placed before Polycarp's. For the Author of that Chronicle does relate, that Irenaeus, after his Martyrdom, appeared to Polycarp Bishop of Smyrna in his sleep, and commanded him to send Benignus into the Gallia's. But these are meer trifles. Valef.

More-

dated with Anicetus Bishop of Rome, and made Valef. Jun. no separation from him on account of this Festival, altho' Polycarp himself, according to his own Country-usage [prais'd] in [the Church of] Smyrna, kept Easter on the fourteenth day of the Moon, as Eusebius lays in the * Fifth Book of his Ecclesiastical History. Some there-fore in Asia the Less, as I have said, kept the fourteenth day of the Moon. Others in the

(b) Eastern parts, celebrated that Feast on the † Sunday indeed; but they differ'd concerning the Month. Those [first mentioned] were of opinion, that the Jews were to be followed, altho' they observed not an exact Rule. (c) These celebrated Easter after the Aequinox, refusing to keep that Feast with the Jews. For they affirm that Easter must always be kept when the Sun is in Aries, on that Month which the Antiochians term Xanthicus, and the Romans April. And in their practise hereof, they followed [as they affirmed] not the modern Jews who mistake almost in all things, but the Ancients of that Nation, and Jesephus; agreeable whereto are the words of that Author in his Third Book of the Jewish Antiquities.

And thus these Persons disagreed amongst themselves. But all other [Christians] in the Western parts, as far as the Ocean it self, are found to have celebrated Easter after the Aequinox, from a very ancient Tradition. For all these persons kept it after this manner, and have never disagreed amongst themselves. Nor the Nicene did the * Synod under Constantine alter this Synod. Festival, as (d) some have noised it abroad. For Constantine himself writing to those persons who differ'd about this Festival, advis'd them, in regard they were but few, to become Followers of those who exceeded them in number. You will find the Emperor's Letter entire, in the Third Book of Eusebius's Life of Constantine. But that part of it [which treats] concerning the Feast of Easter, runs thus: — * And since 'tis a * See Euseb. Hist. lib. 10. c. 22. Constantine the Great, who kept Easter indeed after the Aequinox. But always fixt that Festival on the month Xanthicus, or April, before the eighth of the Idea (that is, the sixth day) of April; as Socrus attests, book 7, chap. 18. Valef.

(e) He means (I think) the Mons missa, and Pepusian, who kept Easter indeed after the Aequinox. But always fixt that Festival on the month Xanthicus, or April, before the eighth of the Idea (that is, the sixth day) of April; as Socrus attests, book 7, chap. 18. Valef.

(d) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(e) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(f) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(g) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(h) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(i) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(j) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(k) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(l) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(m) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(n) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(o) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(p) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(q) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(r) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(s) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(t) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(u) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(v) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(w) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(x) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(y) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(z) To wit, the Audians. For these Heretics affirmed that the Nicene Synod first altered the Paschal solemnity; as Epiphanius attests, p. 822. Edit. Petr. v. Valef.

(q) In Rob. Stephens's Edition, this place is pointed thus :  $\frac{3}{2} \frac{2}{2} \frac{2}{2} \frac{2}{2}$

(iv) I doubt not but instead of ἡμετέρας ἐκ τῆς καθολικῆς Sozomene wrote ἡμετέρας ἐκ τῆς καθολικῆς, but they are in most things conform; and so Nicephorus has worded it. Musculus and Christophorus read thus also. For Musculus has rendered it thus: Sed in multis se imperiali conformant Ecclesie, but in many things they conform themselves to the Imperial Church. Christophorus translates it after this manner: Sed tamen ex multis majorē partē, primariā apud illos Ecclesia cōfitecundam sequuntur, but yet much the greater part, they follow the custom of the Primary Church amongst them. Neither of these

these Translators understood what was meant by these Words here, to wit, in ædificandis Ecclesiis. Socrates usually gives this appellation to the Catholic Church, because at that time it had gotten the chief power and authority. So in chap. 19. of this Book, of the Novatians he opposeth the ædificandis Ecclesiis to the Novatians who are in possession of the Churches, that is, the Catholics: Ναυατιανὸν εἰς τὸ εἰς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τοῦ κυρίου καὶ τοῦ ἐκκλησιασμοῦ καὶ τῆς ἐκκλησίας, &c. For the Novatians admitted not of this additional Function at its first institution. But [the Homocousians] who are at this present in possession of the Churches, &c. Valef.

In sum, in all places, and amongst all Sects, you will scarcely find two Churches exactly agreeing about their Prayers. At Alexandria, a Presbyter does in no wise Preach. And this [usage] had its beginning from such time as Arius raised a disturbance at that Church. At Rome they fast every (x) Saturday. (y) At Cæsarea in Capadocia they exclude those from Communion who have sinned after Baptism, as the Novatians do. The same is also practised by the Macedonians in the Hellepont, and by the Quartodecimani in Asia. The Novatians in Phrygia admit not of *

* That is, those who have had two Wives successively one after another.

* Digamists. Those Novatians who inhabit Constantinople, neither openly admit, nor openly reject them. But in the Western parts they are openly † received. The Bishop, who in their several times presided over the Churches, were (in my judgment) the Occasioners of this diversity. And those who received these Rites and Usages, transmitted them to posterity in manner of a Law as 'twere. To give in a Catalogue of all the Rites and Customs in use throughout all Cities and Countries, is a thing difficult, or rather impossible. But these we have produced, are sufficient to demonstrate, that the Feast of Easter was by reason of some certain usage celebrated in a different manner in every particular Province. Wherefore, they are too profuse in their talk, who have spread abroad a rumour, that [the time of celebrating] Easter was alter'd in the Nicene Synod. For the Fathers conven'd in that Synod made it their business to reduce the people, (who at first differed from the far greater part of the Church,) to an agreement. Now, that there hapned many differences upon this account, even in the Apostles times, was a thing not unknown even to the Apostles themselves, as the Book of the Acts does attest. For when the Apostles understood, that a disturbance was raised amongst the faithful, by reason of a dissention of the Gentiles; being all met together, they promulgated a Divine Law, drawing it up in form of a Letter: whereby they freed Believers from a most burthenfome servitude and vain contention about these things; and taught them a most exact * way of living better, which would lead them to true piety; mentioning to them only such things as necesfamily ought to be observed. The Epistle it self is recorded in the Acts of the Apostles: yet no thing hinders but we may insert it here. * The Apostles, and Elders, and Brethren, send Greeting unto the Brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch, and Syria, and Cilicia. For as much as we have heard, that certain which went out from us, have troubled you with words, subverting your souls, saying, ye must be circumcised, and keep the Law, to whom we gave no such commandment: it seemed good unto us, being assembled with one accord, to send chosen Men unto you, with our Beloved Barnabas and Paul: Men that have hazarded their lives for the name of Our Lord Jesus Christ. We have therefore sent Judas and Silas, who shall also tell you the same things by mouth. For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burthen than these necessary things: that ye abstain from meats offered to Idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which if you keep yourselves, ye shall do well: fare ye well. These things pleased God. For these are the express words of the Letter, It seemed good to the Holy Ghost to lay upon you no greater burthen than these necessities to be observed. Notwithstanding there are some, who disregarding these [Precepts], suppose all Fornication to be a thing indifferent; but contend about Holy days, as if it were for their lives: [these persons] invert the commands of God, and make Laws for themselves, nor valuing the Decree of the Apostles; nor do they consider, that they praise the contrary to those things which seemed good to God. It were indeed possible, to have extended our discourse concerning Easter much farther, and to have demonstrated, that the Jews observe no exact Rule, either in the time, or manner of [celebrating] the Paschal solemnity; and that the Samaritans, who are a Schism of the Jews, do always celebrate this Festival after the Æquinox. But this Subject requires a particular and more copious Treatise. I only say this, that they who so affectedly imitate the Jews, and are so solicitously accurate about Types and Figures, ought in no wise to dissent from them, [in any particular whatever.] For, if they have taken a resolution of observing all things with an accuracy; they must not only observe days and months, but all other things also, which Christ (constituted under the Law) did after the manner of the Jews, or which he suffered unjustly from the Jews; or [Lastly], which he wrought typically whilst he was doing good to all Men. [For instance,] he entered into a Ship and taught: He ordered the passover to be made ready in an upper room: He commanded the Ass that was tied to be loosed: He proposed him, who bore a pitcher of water, as a sign to them for hastening their preparations of the passover: [these things, I say they must observe] and infinite others of this nature which are recorded in the Gospels. And yet they who suppose themselves to be justified by this Festival, make it their business to observe none of these things in a bodily manner. For no Doctor ever preach'd out of a Ship: no Person ever went up to an upper room, and celebrated the Passover there: they never tyed, and again unloosed an Ass that was tyed: [in fine] no person ever enjoyed another to carry a pitcher of water, to the end that the Symbols might be fulfilled. For they thought that these and such like things as these * favoured rather of Judaism. For the Jews are solicitous about keeping their (x) solemn Rites and Ceremonies in their bodies, rather than in their souls. Upon which account they are obnoxious to the Curse, because they conceive the Law of Moses [to consist] in Types and Figures, but [understand it] not according to the truth. But those persons, who are favourers of the Jews, do indeed refer these things to an allegorical sense and meaning: But they raise an irreconcilable War about days and months, contemning an allegorical interpretation of them; in so much that, as to this particular, they themselves as well as the Jews, are of necessity condemned, and bring the sentence of Excommunication upon themselves. But I think this sufficient to have been said concerning these things. Let us now return to our Subject, whereof we have made mention a little * before: to wit, that the Church [once divided] rested not in that first division; and that those who were divided, did again engage one another, and taking hold of a small and very frivolous pretence, raised mutual separations

* Or, form of good life.

* Or, manner of living Jewishly.

* See chap. 20. at the beginning.

† Chap. 11. and divisions. The Novatians, as I have † said, were divided amongst themselves on account of the Feast of Easter: Nor was the division among them concerning this [Festival] single. For some throughout divers Provinces [observed it] after one manner, others after another; and they disagreed amongst themselves not only about the month, but about the days of the week also, and about other matters of a small importance, part of them holding separate Assemblies, and part joyning in a promiscuous Communion:

C H A P. XXIII.

Concerning the Arians at Constantinople, who were also termed the Psathyriani.

Moreover, there arose dissensions amongst the Arians, upon this occasion. The contentious questions daily [started] amongst them, had reduced their discourses to some absurdities. For, whereas it has been always believed in the Church, that God is the Father of the Son, the Word; there hapned this Query amongst them, whether or no God could be called Father even before the Son existed? And, in regard they asserted, that the Word of God was not begotten of the Father, but existed of * nothing; being thus mistaken about the first and chiefest Article of Faith, they deservedly fell into an absurd contentions about a bare word. Dorotheus therefore † who had been sent for from Antioch by them, maintained, that [God] neither was nor could be termed a Father, before the Son existed. But Marinus (whom they had called out of Thracia before Dorotheus) having got a fair opportunity, (for he was vext because Dorotheus had been preferred before him;) undertook to defend the contrary opinion. For this reason there hapned a dissention amongst them; and being divided on account of the aforesaid Term, each party held separate Meetings. Those under Dorotheus continued posselt of their own Meeting-houses. But Marinus's followers built themselves private Oratories, wherein they had their Assemblies; and asserted that the Father was always the Father, even when the Son existed not. Moreover, the maintainers of this assertion were termed (a) Theodosians, because one Theodotus by Country a Syrian, a * Psathyropola by Trade, was a zealous defender of this Opinion. Selenas Bishop of the Goths became a follower of these persons Tenets: † He was a Man of a mixt descent, a Goth by his father's side, by his mother's a Phrygian. And upon this account he taught in the Church very readily in both these Languages. Further, this faction soon after quarrelled amongst themselves; Marinus disagreeing with Agapius, whom he himself had preferred to the Bishoprick of Ephesus. But these two contended not one with another about [any point of their] Religion, but about * Primacy; the Goths divided with Agapius. Wherefore, many of the Ecclesiastics under their jurisdiction (abominating the contest raised between them two, as being the product of their vain-glory,) deserted them, and became adherents to the Homousian Faith. When therefore the Arians had continued divided amongst themselves during the space of (b) thirty five years, afterwards, (c) under the Reign of Theodosius Junior, in the Consulate of Plintha Master of the Milice, and according to the Heresie of the Psathyriani, being persuaded to cease from contending, were again united in one body [with the rest of the Arians]. And they made a Sanction [amongst themselves] in form of a Law as it were, that that Aresdus's Query, which had caused the separation between them, should in future never be mentioned. But they could bring this to effect no-where save at Constantinople only. For in other Cities (if any of these two parties chanced to be inhabitants therein,) they persisted in their former separation. Thus much concerning the division amongst the Arians.

here relate) to the Consulate of Monaxius and Plintha [or Plintha] there are twenty five years. Valef.

(c) Instead of [ἐν τῇ συνόδῳ, in the Consulate] it must undoubtedly be [ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ, under the Reign.] For the word synodus crept into this place from the following line. Valef.

C H A P. XXIV.

That the Eunomians also raised Factions amongst themselves, which had various denominations given them derived from the names of their first Founders.

Moreover, neither did the Eunomians continue undivided. For Eunomius himself had long before this made a * separation from Eudoxius, who † Ordained him Bishop of Cyzicum, making this his pretence, to wit, because Eudoxius refused to give reception to his master Atinus, who was Ejected [out of the Church.] But those Heretics who had their name from him, were after this divided into several Factions. For first, one Theopromius a Cap-

* Or, things which are not.
† See chap. 12. of this Book.

Valen. Iud. Theodosius.

(a) Theodosians
res gives an account of these Heretics Book 4.
† Hæret. Fabul. Valef.
† That is, a Catechiser.
† Selenas.

* Or, Precedence.

(b) It must be twenty five years; and according to the Heresie of the Psathyriani, being persuaded to cease from contending, were again united in one body [with the rest of the Arians].
† For, from Aresdus's third and second Consulate there are twenty five years. Valef.

which Socrates does valen. Jun. a Cappadocian (who had been instructed in the Art of disputing by Euthimius, and understood Aristotle's Categories, and his Book concerning Interpretation, but * indistinctly and imperfectly;) having wrote Books, to which he gave this Title concerning the exercise of the Mind, incur'd the displeasure of those of his own Heresie, and was by them ejected as a Defector of their Sect. This person afterwards held Assemblies separate from them, and left behind him an Heresie which bore his own name. Then, one Eutybius at Constantinople, upon account of a very † slight Controversie, made a separation has his Meetings apart. Theophrastus's Followers are termed Eunomio-Theophrastiani: and the Adherents of Eutybius are called Eunomio-Eutybiani. What those slight and trifling words were, about which they differ'd, I judge it unworthy to be recorded in this History, lest I should too far digress from my purpose. [I will mention this] only, to wit, that they have adulterated Baptism. For they baptize not into the Trinity, but into the Death of Christ. There was also for some time a Dissention amongst the Macedonians, when one Eutropius a Presbyter held separate Assemblies; and Cartorius would in no wise agree in Opinion with him. And there may perhaps be some other Sects descended from these in other Cities. But in regard I make my Residence in Constantinople, where I was born and educated, I have resolved to be larger in my Relation of what has been transacted in that City; both because I my self have been an eye-witness of some of those transactions, and also in regard the affairs transacted in that City, have been more eminent, and worthier to be remembered. And these things happen'd not at one and the same time, but at different times. Now, if any person be delirious of knowing the names of the various Sects, he may have an account hereof, by reading that Book entitled Ancoratus, which Epiphanius Bishop of Cyprus compiled. Let this be sufficient to have been said concerning these matters. But the affairs of the State were disturbed upon this occasion.

C H A P. XXV.

Concerning Eugenius's Tyranny, and the Death of Valentinianus Junior; also, concerning the Emperor Theodosius's Victory over the Tyrant.

IN the Western parts, a Grammarian by name Eugenius, having sometime been a Teacher of the Latin tongue, afterwards left his School, and undertook a Military Employment in the Emperor's Palace, where he was made (a) Magister of the Emperor's Desks. And in regard he

(a) Magister of the Emperor's Desks. And in regard he was a Person of great eloquence, and upon which I have render'd thus, Magister Scriniorum Imperatoris, Master of the Emperor's Desks: for the Greeks call those ἀρχεις, whom the Latins term Magistros Scriniorum, Masters of the Desks; as Ctesias has truly remark'd. But Salsmasius, in his notes on Vopiscus, pag. 481. affirms, that the ἀρχεις were the Proximi of the Sacred Desks, not the Magisters. For his opinion is, that there was only one Master of all the Desks, who had under him four Antigraphi or Proximi [that is, Clerks:] to wit, one in each Desk. But Salsmasius is disprov'd, first by the Theodosian Code; and secondly, by the Notitia Imperii Romani. For, in the Notitia Imperii Romani, there are four Masters of the Desks of the Roman Emperors reckon'd; to wit, the Master of the Memory, the Master of the Letters, the Master of the Libels, and the Master of the Greek Letters. And, in the Theodosian Code, in the sixth Book, there is a particular Title de Magistris sacrorum Scriniorum, whom the Emperors will have preferred before the Vicarii. But concerning the

Proximi, there follows another Title, at a great distance from this wherein the Emperors give order only, that the Proximi, after two years space, should leave the Scrinia, and be followed by the Vicarii. From whence 'tis evident, that the Proximi of the Desks are distinguished from the Magisters: for the Magisters were chosen by the Emperors Codici [or Letters Patent], as were the rest of the Officers of the Palace. But the Proximi came to that place by degrees and order of promotion; and they were more than one in every Desk; whereas there was but one Magister in each Desk. The Proximi therefore are not the ἀρχεις; in regard there were only four ἀρχεις, as we are inform'd from the Glosses of Fulgentius Antecessor. See Fe. trus Parisius in Excerpt. Legationum. Philostorgius relates, that Eugenius was prefer'd to the dignity of a Magister, before he broke out into his Tyranny. Valef.

that account more highly esteem'd than others, Theodosius, he could not with moderation bear his prosperous success. But, taking one Arbogastes (born

(b) In stead of [Gallia the Less,] the reading in the Florentine M.S. is truer, thus [Gallia,] Arbogastes was not born in Gallia, but in Francia, as all Affricans agree. Valef. (c) In stead of [from them] promiss of greater places than red. Val.

(d) Valentinianus Junior was murder'd at Vienna, in Arcadius's second Consulate which he bore with Rufinus; as Iadius rightly informs us in his Fastis. But Arcellinus says, that fact was perpetrated in the Consulate of Taurus and Symmachus, on the 1st of March. Nowwithstanding, this appears to be false, from the fourth and fifth Law in the Theodosian Code de Apollatio. Valef.

(e) Zosimus (in his fourth Book) says, that only Arcadius was left by Theodosius at Constantinople; and that Honorius followed his Father in his Expedition against Eugenius. The same is asserted by Marcellinus in his Chronicon. But Philostorgius agrees with Socrates. Valef.

(f) Here there is a defect in the Greek Text; their Words [from Aquileia thirty six miles] being wanting. Which Valesius says, he perceived from Antonini's Itinerary, and from Sigisius in his ninth Book de Imperio Occidentali.

(g) Here there is a defect in the Greek Text; their Words [from Aquileia thirty six miles] being wanting. Which Valesius says, he perceived from Antonini's Itinerary, and from Sigisius in his ninth Book de Imperio Occidentali.

Theodosius. God to be his assistant ; and was in no wise frustrated of his request. For Bacurius his own Master of the Milice was so far encouraged, as to run with his Van-guard to that part where the Barbarians were *hardest prest upon by the Enemy, who broke through their Ranks ; and routed those that a little before were on the pursuit. There hapned another accident also, worthy of admiration. For a very violent wind arose on a sudden, which retorted the Darts cast by Eugenius's Forces, upon themselves ; and moreover, it carried those thrown by Theodosius's Souldiers with a greater force against the Enemy. So prevalent was the Emperor's Prayer. The success of the Battle being after this manner turned, the Tyrant cast himself at the Emperor's feet, and requested that his life might be saved. But the Souldiers beheaded him, as he lay prostrate at the Emperor's feet. These things were done on the sixth of September, in Arcadius's third, and Honorius's second Consulate. But Arbogastes (who had been the Author of these great mischiefs) being on his flight upon the third day after the Battle ; as soon as he knew there were no hopes of life for him, ran himself through with his own Sword.

[he ordered] that † Cirque-Sports should be exhibited, on which very day he died.

* Or, running of Horses.

* Or, routed.

BUT, the Emperor Theodosius contracted an ill habit of Body, from the Troubles and Disquietudes he underwent in this War. And supposing that his Life would be ended by that Distemper which was upon him, he was more solicitous about the publick Affairs, than [concerned] at his own Death ; considering with himself, how great Calamities do usually befall Subjects after the Death of their Emperor. Wherefore he sends forthwith for his Son Honorius from Constantinople, being desirous to settle * the State of the Western Empire. After his Son's arrival at Millain, he seemed to be somewhat revived from his Distemper ; and gave order for the celebration of Triumphant Cirque-Sports. And before Dinner he was very well, and was a Spectator at the Cirque-Sports. But after Dinner he was taken very ill on a sudden, and could not come to see the † Games. † Or, the But, having given his Son order to preside at the Cirque-Sports, he died on the Night following, in the Consulate of Olybrius and Probinus, on the seventeenth day of January. This was the first year of the two hundred ninety fourth Olympiad. The Emperor Theodosius lived sixty years, and reigned sixteen. This Book contains [an account of Affairs transacted] during the space of sixteen years and eight months.

* Or, the Western parts.

C H A P. XXVI

How the Emperor falling ill after his Victory, sent for his Son Honorius to Millain ; and thinking himself somewhat recovered from his Distemper,

THE SIXTH BOOK
OF THE Ecclesiastical History
OF
SOCRATES SCHOLASTICUS.

The P R E F A C E.

WE have finish'd the Task enjoyed by You (most Sacred Man of God Theodorus!) in the Five foregoing Books ; wherein, according to our best ability, we have comprized the History of the Church from the Times of Constantine. But you must know, that we have not been curious about our Style ; for we considered, that should we have been careful about an Elegancy of Expression, we might peradventure have mist of our design. Besides, could we have accomplish'd [our design,] yet we were altogether unable to write such things as are extant in the Compositures of Ancient Historians ; whereby any one of them might suppose himself able either to amplify, or disimprove Transactions. Further, such a Style would in no wise have edified the Many and the Simpler sort of Persons ; who are desirous of knowing Affairs only, not of admiring the Stile for its elegant Composure. That therefore our Work might not be unuseful to both these sorts of Persons; to the Learned, because 'tis unworthy of being compared with the elegant Stile of Ancient Writers; and to the Unlearned, in regard they cannot attain to [the knowledge of] Affairs, being concealed by a Pride and Over-elegancy of Expression: We have designedly made use of such a Stile, as seems indeed to be lower and more mean, but is notwithstanding plainer and more conspicuous.

H h of

* Or, as seems indeed to be plainer and more perspicuous, but is notwithstanding lower and more mean.

(a) This whole Clause [either because (according to the Proverb,) Truth is bitter] is in my judgment to be expunged, in regard it disturbs the Sense.

Or, if it has a place here, it must be put at the close of the period, after these Words [extol not their Actions.] If this displeases any one; 'twill be sufficient, to expunge the particle [i, either,] and put this Clause to the head of that following. Valef.

(b) To wit, in the Comedies of Menander, and others. You may see the same in Plautus's and Terentius's Latin Comedies; wherein the Servants do usually call their Masters barely by their Names. Valef.

But, before we begin our Sixth Book, we must give this Premonition: In regard we undertake [the writing a Narrative] of the Affairs which have happened in our own Age; we are afraid, lest we should seem to record such things as will displease many Persons: (a) Either because (according to the Proverb,) Truth is bitter; or in regard we mention not their names, whom [all Men] have a great love for, with an Encomium; or, [Lastly] because we extol not their Actions. The Zealots of our Religion will condemn us, because we do not give the Bishops the Title of Most dear to God, or Most Holy, or such like. Others also will [sometimes makes curious Remarks, because we term not the Emperors Most Divine, and Lords; nor [do give them] those other Titles which are usually attributed to them. But, in as much as I am able to prove and demonstrate from the Testimony of Ancient Writers, that a (b) Servant amongst them did usually call his Master by his proper name, and made no account of his Dignity [or Title,] by reason of the urgency of Affairs; and in as much as [my endeavour is] to obey the Laws of History, which do require a sincere, pure, and true Narrative of Transactions, free from all manner of Masks and Covers; I will in future proceed in the same Narration; recording those things which either I myself saw, or could learn from those who had seen them; and making a judgment of the Truth from their not varying in their Relations, who told me them. But, my Labour in discovering the Truth hath been great, in regard many, and those different Persons, gave me an account of Affairs; some of whom affirming they were present at the transacting of these things; and others asserting they knew them better than any other Persons.

CH A P. I.

That after the Death of the Emperor Theodosius, when his Sons had divided the Empire [between them,] and Arcadius had met the Army returning from Italy, after some short stay there; Rufinus the Praefectus Praetorio was killed by the Souldiers at the Emperor's Feet.

Arcadius and Honorius.

THE Emperor Theodosius having ended his Life in the Consulate of Olybrius and Probinus, on the seventeenth of the month January; his Sons succeeded him in the Roman Empire. Arcadius had the Government of the Eastern Empire, and Honorius of the Western. [The Bishops] who presided over the Churches at that time, were Damasus in the Imperial [City] Rome; Theophilus at Alexandria; Johannes in possession of the Churches at Jerusalem; and Flavianus of those at Antioch. At Constantinople, [termed also] New Rome, Nectarius filled the [Episcopal] Chair, as we have related in the foregoing Book. About the eighth of the month November, in the same Consulate, Theodosius's Body was brought [to Constantinople,] and interred by his Son Arcadius with an honourable and solemn Funeral. Not long after this, on the eight and twentieth of the same month, the Army also arrived, which had been employed in the War against the Tyrant, under the Emperor Theodosius's command. When therefore the Emperor Arcadius (agreeable to the usual custom) had met the Army without the City-gates, the Souldiers at that time slew Rufinus the Emperor's Praefectus Praetorio. For Rufinus lay under a suspicion of turning Tyrant, and 'twas believed, that he had called the (a) Hunni (a barbarous Nation) into the Roman Territories. For at that time they destroyed Armenia, and some parts of the East, by making Incursions into those Provinces. Moreover, on the same day whereon Rufinus was killed, Marcianus Bishop of the Novatians died. He was succeeded in that Bishoprick by Sisinnius, of whom we have made mention * above.

were solicited by Rufinus, to invade the Roman Provinces. The same is asserted by Marcellinus in his Chronicon. But Sozomen (Book 8, chap. 1.) agrees with Sozomen. Nor, is there any disagreement between the forecited Authors. For Rufinus called in both those Nations against the Romans; the Goths first, under their Chief, Alaricus: After the Goths were routed by Stilicho, he excited the Hunni to assault the Goths, as Claudian tells us, in his first Book against Rufinus; and in his second Book, he sets forth the same more clearly, near the beginning thereof. But Sigonius, in his tenth Book de Occidentali Imperio, where he makes it his business to relate this whole Story, speaks not one Word concerning this Irruption of the Hunni; which negligence of his is inexcusable. Valef.

CH A P. II.

Concerning Nectarius's Death, and the Ordination of Johannes.

WITHIN a small interval of time, Nectarius also, Bishop of Constantinople, departed this life, in the Consulate of Caesarius and Arterius, about the twenty seventh of the month September. Forthwith therefore, a Contention arose about the Ordination of a Bishop; and some desired one Person, others another. When a Consult had been several times held about this matter, it was at last concluded on, that Johannes a Presbyter of the Antiochian Church, should be sent for from Antioch. For a fame was spread concerning him, for his || Learning and Eloquence. Within some small space of time therefore, the Emperor Arcadius (with the common consent of all Persons, I mean the

* Or, a trouble, or, earnestness.

+ This Person was termed Chrysostome, that is Golden mouth. || Or, fitness to be Clergy, a readiness.

were situated without the City. But a Learned Person, who has lately published the Life of John Chrysostome in French, does affirm they were within the City of Antioch: to whom notwithstanding, I cannot assent. This more probable, that these Little Houses were placed in the Suburbs, to the end that Pious and Religious Persons, who were continually employed in Contemplation and reading of the sacred Books, might be far remote from noise and disturbance. But what the same Learned Person objects out of Theodoret, (to wit, that Diodorus was continually conversant in Antioch, and made a courageous resistance against the rage and force of the Arians;) does in no wise weaken our opinion. For Diodorus, as often as he pleased, could easily come out of a Monastery in the Suburbs, into the City. Valf.

*Arcadius
and Honorius.*

Of these two Diodorus, afterwards made Bishop of Tarjus, wrote many Books, being intent upon the bare Letter [and obvious sense] of the Sacred Scriptures; but avoiding the (d) Allegorical interpretation thereof. Thus far concerning these Persons. Moreover, Johannes, (who (e) convert frequently and familiarly with Basilius (f) at that time ordained a Deacon by Meletius, that letius, but afterwards constituted Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia) was made Reader of the Antiochian Church, by (g) Zeno the Bishop in his retires, εἰς τὸ ἰδιότῃ, literally; but avoided the more abstruse and mystical sense. Jerome says the same concerning him, in his Book de Scriptis Ecclæ. Extant ejus in Apollonius Commentarii, &c. his Comments upon the Apostle are extant, and many other pieces, belonging rather to Eusebius Emisenus's Character: whose sense altho' he has followed, yet it could not imitate his eloquence, because of his ignorance in Humane (or Secular) Learning. Jerom says, that Diodorus has followed Eusebius Emisenus's sense, that is, his method in explaining the Scriptures. Let us see therefore, what sense Eusebius Emisenus has followed. Jerome himself will inform us; whose Words concerning Eusebius Emisenus are these: Magnifique Historiam Scenici, ab eis qui declamare volunt, studiose imitatur legimus, et habere rursus followed Effortu, he is most studiously read by those, who have a mind to declaim. From whence it appears that Eusebius in his exposition of the Scriptures, has chiefly followed the Historical and Literal sense; but has not touched the Mythick and Allegorical. For the term Scenica comprehends these senses. Allegorical therefore differs from Theoria, as a Species does from the Genus. Indeed, Diodorus Bishop of Tarjus, of whom we now speak, had written a Book with this Title, Τὸ διακρίνει Θεορίας καὶ Ἀλληγορίας, that is, what may be the difference between Theoria and Allegoria. But I wonder at Jerome, who says that Diodorus was instructed neither in Eloquence, nor in the knowledge of humane Learning. And yet Theodoret (Hitor. Book 4.) compares his eloquence to a most limpid River; and Photius in his Bibliotheca does attest, that in his discourses he was clear and perspicuous. Valf.

(e) That Chrysostome convert familiarly with Basilius, 'tis evident from Chrysostome's Books de Sacerdotio. But who that Basilius was, concerning whom Chrysostome speaks in those Books, 'tis uncertain. Socrates does in this place affirm, that it was Basilius Magnus. Photius (in his Bibliotheca) says it was Basilius Bishop of Selencia. Baronius (at the Year of Christ 382.) does deservedly disprove both these Opinions. Chrysostome ('tis certain) does attest in the beginning of his Book, that himself and the Basilius, concerning whom he there speaks, had always the same Masters. Now Basilius Magnus learnt Rhetorick at Arsenis; but Chrysostome was Libanius's hearer at Antioch a long while after that. If it were Basilius the great, whom Chrysostome affirms to have obtained the principal place amongst his own Companions and Friends, doubtless some footsteps of his Friendship would at this day be extant in Basilius's Epistles. But, amongst so many of his Epistles which have been preserved to our times, there occurs not one, written to our Johannes. Wherefore I agree with Baronius, who says, that that Basilius who was companion to Chrysostome, was Basilius Bishop of Raphanea, or else Basilius Bishop of Ephesus. For both these Persons were Chrysostome's Contemporaries, in regard they subscribed the Constantinopolitan Council. Valf.

(f) In stead of τὸ ἀντὶ τοῦ διακρίνει, sometimes made a Deacon, &c. In my judgment it should be τὸ ἀντὶ τοῦ διακρίνει, at that time made Deacon, &c. For it follows [but afterwards constituted Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia]. Epiphanius Scholasticus confirms our conjecture, as 'tis apparent from his Version; for thus he renders it, qui tunc a Meletio factus erat Diaconus, who was then made Deacon by Meletius. Further, Basilius was made Deacon by Meletius Bishop of Antioch. But that Book is full with Fables and Lies. Doubtless, in regard Basilius the Great was by lawful degrees promoted to be Reader and Presbyter at Cæsarea, (as Gregorius Nazianzenus does attest, in his Funeral Oration concerning the praises of the same Basilius) 'tis scarce credible, that he should have been made Deacon any where else, but at Cæsarea. Valf.

(g) Nicephorus (whit Author he follows, I know not,) makes this Zeno, Bishop of Gaza or Majma. But, whereas Zeno was created Bishop of Majma in the Reign of Theodosius, (as Socratus relates Book 3. chap. 8.) he must necessarily be a different Person from that Zeno who ordained Chrysostome Reader; in regard Chrysostome was made a Reader in Valens Augustus's Reign, about the year of our Lord 370. But Baronius (at the Year of Christ 382.) says that this Zeno (by whom Chrysostome was ordained a Reader of Antioch) was Bishop of Tyre, the same Person who was present at the Constantinopolitan Council; and was then (Meletius being absent) his Deputy in the Church of Antioch. In which thing I do really assent to Baronius. But whereas he reproves Socrates there, for his saying, that that Zeno was Bishop of Jerusalem; therein the Cardinal is evidently mistaken. For Socrates does not make Zeno Bishop of Jerusalem; he only says, that Zeno the Bishop, returning from Jerusalem, ordained Chrysostome Reader of Antioch. Now Zeno had made a journey to Jerusalem, either on the account of Prayer, (as it was the custom of those times,) or by reason of some Ecclesiastick Affair. But neither arises a difficulty. For, if Zeno in his return from Jerusalem, ordained Chrysostome Reader of Antioch; the City of which he was Bishop, must necessarily be farther remote from Jerusalem, than Antioch was; or at least it must lie at the side of Antioch. Which cannot be said of the Cities Tyre, and Gaza. For both those are far nearer to Jerusalem, than Antioch is. Therefore, this Zeno, who ordained Chrysostome Reader of Antioch, was Bishop of some other City. In Basilius the Great's 69th Epistle, there is mention of one Zeno a Bishop, who was present at the Antiochian Council under Meletius; but the name of his See is not set down. I know Palladius (in the Life of Chrysostome) does relate, that Chrysostome was ordained Reader by Meletius. But this, in my judgment, is so to be understood, that that may be said to have been done by Meletius, which was performed by Zeno, supplying his place. Valf.

turn from Jerusalem. Whilst he continued in the degree of a Reader, he wrote a Book against the Jews. Having not long after obtained the dignity of a Deacon from Meletius, he wrote his Books concerning Priesthood, and those against Sargirius: Moreover, those concerning the incomprehensible nature of God, and those concerning * Subintroductæ women. After this, when Meletius was dead at Constantinople; (for he made a journey thither, on account of Gregorius Nazianzenus's Ordination;) Johannes made a separation from the † Meletianists, nor did he communicate with Meletius's Paulinus; but lived quietly for the space of three whole years. Afterwards, when Paulinus was dead, he is ordained Presbyter by (b) Evergirius, (b) This is Paulinus's successor. This (to speak compendiously) was Johannes's course of life, before his being made Bishop. He was a Person (as 'tis said) sober and morose, by reason of his [over-much] Zeal for temperance; and (as one of his intimados has reported;) from his younger years more addicted to anger, than bashfulness. Because of his * Sanctity of Life, he was not cautious and circumspect in relation to things future; and by reason of his † plainness, he was open and easy. He used too great a liberty in speaking to those who discoursed him. In his teaching, he made it his chief business to improve the Morals of his hearers; and in his conferences, he was supped by those who knew him not, to be proud and arrogant.

* Or, Reverence of Life. † Or, simplicity, or singleness. Valf.

C H A P. IV.

Concerning Serapion the Deacon, and how by his instigation Johannes became offended with, and an enemy to his Clergy.

THIS being the humour and disposition of Johannes, after his promotion to the * Episcopate, he was more supercilious and severe towards his Clergy than was fitting; his design in that being (as he expected,) to rectify the lives of those under him. Immediately there-fore

*Arceus
and Eunuchus.
Hated.*

+ Or, dis-pleas all men.

|| Or, he chose to eat with no body.

fore at his very entry [upon the Bishoprick] he seemed rough and austere to the Ecclesiasticks, and incurred their **Odium*, many of them became his Enemies, and declined him as an angry person. Serapion his Deacon incited him to alienate all Mens minds from himself. And on a time, when all the Clergy were present, he spake aloud to the Bishop, after this manner, You will never be able (O Bishop!) to get the mastery over these Persons, unless you drive them all out with one Rod. This expression of his excited an Odium against the Bishop. Not long after the Bishop ejected many Persons out of the Church, some for one reason, others for another. But they (as it usually happens in such violent proceedings of Governors,) enter into a Combination against him, and calumniated him to the People. That which induced the hearers to a belief of what was spoken against him, was, that the Bishop would not eat with any body, nor would he upon any invitation go to a Feast. Upon which account most especially, the Calumny against him improved, and grew greater. Upon what design || he refused to eat with any Person, no one could ever certainly tell. For those who are desirous of defending him, say that he had a very weak Stomach, and could hardly digest meat; for which reason he did eat alone. Others affirm, he did this on account of his Astectick and most severe course of life. Whatever of truth there was in this matter, it was of no small advantage to his Accusers, in order to their calumniating him. Notwithstanding, the People did highly approve of him upon account of the Sermons he preach'd in the Church, loved the Man exceedingly, and disregarded those Persons who attempted to accuse him. Moreover, what his Sermons were, (as well those published by himself, as them taken by the Notaries from his mouth as he preach'd them,) how elegant, inviting and perswasive, it is needless now to declare, in regard those that are desirous may read them, and reap abundant benefit from them.

C H A P. V.

That Johannes differed not only with the Clergy, but with the Magistracy also. And concerning Eutropius the Eunuch.

AS long as Johannes was offensive to the Clergy only, the designs framed against him were weak and infirm. But after he attempted to reprove many of the Magistracy also, beyond the bounds of what was fit, then the envy against him was much more enkindled. Many things were spoken against him, most whereof were in future believed by the Hearers. But that which made an addition to the calumny, was the Oration at that time spoken by him against Eutropius. For Eutropius the Eunuch (the chief Person of the Bed-chamber to the Emperor, the first Eunuch that was vouchsafed the dignity of a Consul by the Emperor,) desirous to be revenged upon some persons who had taken sanctuary in the Church, made it his business to get an Edict published by the Emperors, prohibiting any Person from flying into the Churches for sanctuary; but that such as had fled thither should by force be drawn out thence. But [Divine] Vengeance follow'd immediately hereupon: for the Law was pro-

mulged, and not long after Eutropius himself, having offended the Emperor, made his escape into the Church. The Bishop therefore (whilst Eutropius lay under the Altar, and was terrified with fear,) (a) sitting in the Pulpit (out of which it had before been his usage to preach, in order to his being heard more easily,) made an Oration in reproof of him. Whereupon he seem'd to give a greater offence to some Persons, because he was not only incompassionate towards an unfortunate Man, but on the contrary evenly reproved him. Eutropius therefore at that time to the bearing the Consulate, was by the Emperor's order beheaded, for some crimes [he had committed.] His name was raised also out of the Fasti Consulares, and only Theodorus's name, who had been his Colleague in the Consulate, was (b) recorded therein. 'Tis reported likewise, that Bishop Johannes, making use of his usual freedom and boldness in speaking, did sharply reprove Gaius also, at that time Master of the Miltice, because he took the confidence to make a request to the Emperor, that one of the Churches within the City might be assign'd to the Arrians, who were of the same opinion with himself. He also reprov'd several other of the Grandeens upon various accounts, with much freedom and boldness; by reason of which liberty of his, he gained the Ill-will of many Persons. Wherefore, Theophilus also Bishop of Alexandria, soon after Johannes's Ordination, began to consider, how he might undermine and ruin him. And most commonly the Bishops Preached standing on the steps of the Altar. We are informed hereof from King Childeric's Conversation, in which simonius has recorded, in his first Tome of the Councils of France, pag. 300; but it is there imperfect. We will make good one defect in it, from the most ancient Corbetian Manuscript, after this manner: Qualiter in sacilegus Dei injuria vindicetur, nostrum est pertractandum. Et quia fides nostra ut verbo de altario sacerdotis faciente quancunque de Evangelio, Propheta vel Apostolo fuerit admittitum, in quantum Deus dat intellectum: ad nos querimonia processit, &c. The sense of these Words, which are very corrupt, is this: Because the Priests have complained, whilst they make Sermons to the People, that the Banfarriers [what the import of that Word is, I cannot find] walk through the fields, and reap the People from the Church; Therefore we command, &c. See Baronius at the year of Christ 407, number 17. Valef.

(b) Hence 'tis, that in the Fasti of Prosperus, Idatius, and Cassiodorus, this year has only Maulus Theodorus Consul, Eutropius's name being expunged. Concerning Eutropius's death, consult Zosimus. Valef.

C H A P. VI.

Concerning the Tyranny of Gaius the Goth, and the Disturbance raised at Constantinople; and concerning his Death.

I Will now relate an affair worthy to be recorded, which hapned at this very time; and will demonstrate, how Divine Providence freed the City and Roman State from the greatest danger imaginable, by unexpected assistance. What that was must now be declared. Gaius was by extract a Barbarian. Having made himself a

H h 3 Sub-

*Arceus
and Eunuchus.
Hated.*

(a) From this place his application, that the Bishop there before did not usually Preach out of the Pulpit. For this Socrates takes notice of as a thing singular in Cyril's Oration, that he went up into the Pulpit, that he might be the easier heard by the People. Most commonly the Bishops Preached standing on the steps of the Altar. We are informed hereof from King Childeric's Conversation, in which simonius has recorded, in his first Tome of the Councils of France, pag. 300; but it is there imperfect. We will make good one defect in it, from the most ancient Corbetian Manuscript, after this manner: Qualiter in sacilegus Dei injuria vindicetur, nostrum est pertractandum. Et quia fides nostra ut verbo de altario sacerdotis faciente quancunque de Evangelio, Propheta vel Apostolo fuerit admittitum, in quantum Deus dat intellectum: ad nos querimonia processit, &c. The sense of these Words, which are very corrupt, is this: Because the Priests have complained, whilst they make Sermons to the People, that the Banfarriers [what the import of that Word is, I cannot find] walk through the fields, and reap the People from the Church; Therefore we command, &c. See Baronius at the year of Christ 407, number 17. Valef.

(b) Hence 'tis, that in the Fasti of Prosperus, Idatius, and Cassiodorus, this year has only Maulus Theodorus Consul, Eutropius's name being expunged. Concerning Eutropius's death, consult Zosimus. Valef.

* Or, the first of the Eunuchs.

*Arcadius
and Honorius*

those of his Party who could not get out of the City were slain; and perceiving that his sacrifices were unsuccessful to himself, left [St. John's] Church, and went in great haste into Thracia. Being come to Cheronesus, he endeavoured to pass over from thence, and take Lampascus, that from that place he might make himself Master of the Eastern parts. But upon the Emperor's sending Forces immediately both by Land and Sea, there appear'd another admirable effect of Divine Providence. For whilst the Barbarians, wanting Vessels, patch'd up Ships in great haste and disorder, wherein they might make their passage; on a sudden the Roman Navy appear'd in sight, and a West-wind blew hard. The Romans had a safe and easy passage in their Ships; but the Barbarians, together with their Horses in their Ships, were tossed up and down and dispersed by a Storm, and at length perish'd in the Sea. Many of them also were destroy'd by the Romans. After this manner a numerous multitude of Barbarians at that time lost their lives in their passage: But Gaina got away from thence, and flying through Thracia, falls into the hands of another party of the Roman Forces, by whom he is slain, together with the Barbarians in his company. Let thus much be sufficient to have been

(e) The true reading seems to be [ἀπὸ τοῦ δὲ Θεοδοίου καὶ τῶν Ταλίων], curiously concerning Gaina, Vale.

(f) Alvoetes were heretofore titled Scholastic, as we are informed from Justinian's 74th and 75th Novel. The words of Marcian in his 15th Homily, are these: ὁ δὲ βασιλεὺς παλαιὸν πρεσβύτερος, &c. He that desires to have a Knowledge in Foreign Languages, goes and learns the Letters. And when he has been the first there, he goes to the School of the Romans, where he is the last of all. Again, when he comes to be the first there, he departs to the School of the Pragmatic [or, Practicants] where he is again the last of all, and Arcarius [or Novice]. Then, when he is made a Scholasticus, he is Novice, and the last of all the Lawyers. Again, when he becomes the first there, then he is made a President [or Governor of a province]. And when he is made a Governor, he takes to himself an Assistant or Assessor. See more in Praxeus Pitheus's Glossary ad Novellus Juliani Antecessoris, and in Theophrastus's Glossary in the term Σχολαστικός, & Ἀρχι-επί-τολ.

* In the year of Christ 401, April. See Book 6 chap. 11. man State were thus tempestuous, those intrusted with the Prelacy, abstained not in the least from framing designs and plots one against another, to the reproach and disgrace of the Christian Religion: For at this very time the Bishops employ'd their thoughts about raising Tumults and Insurrections against one another. Which mischief took its beginning from Egypt, upon this account.

*Arcadius
and Honorius.*

CHAP. VII.

Concerning the Dissention which hapned between Theophilus [Bishop] of Alexandria, and the Monasticks in the Solitude. And how Theophilus Anathematized Origen's Books.

A Little before this, a question had been started, whether God were a Body, and had a Human shape; or whether He were incorporeal and foreign, not only to an Human, but to any other bodily shape and figure whatever. By reason of this question, Strifes and Contentions were raised amongst many Persons: Some favouring this Opinion; others patronizing that. The greater part of the plainer and simpler sort of Ascetics asserted, that God was corporeal, and had a Human shape. But most [other Persons] condemned their Opinion, affirming God to be incorporeal, and wholly void of all manner of bodily shape. Whole Sentiment was embraced by Theophilus Bishop of Alexandria; inasmuch that he inveighed publicly in the Church, in the presence of the People, against those who asserted God had an Human shape; and did himself expressly determine, that he was incorporeal. The Egyptian Ascetics understanding this, left their Monasteries and came down to Alexandria; and raised a tumult against Theophilus, condemning him of impiety, and were resolved to kill him. Theophilus, acquainted herewith, was sorely perplex'd, and employ'd his Mind about a Device, how he might avoid the Death he was threatned with. Being come into the presence of these Men, he address'd himself to them in a flattering way, and spoke to them on this wise: * Whilst I behold you, to my thinking I see God's Countenance. These words mollified the fury of the Monks. Their return to him was: If you speak true, [to wit,] that God's Countenance is like ours, then Anathematize do behold Origen's Works. For some Persons have disputed the face of out of those (a) Books, and contradicted our Opinion. (b) The But if you refuse to do that, expect from us the treatment in meat due to impious persons and enemies to God. Origen will do whatever seems good to you, (replied Theophilus) and therefore be not incens'd against me: For I my self do abominate Origen's Books, and judge those Persons worthy of reprehension who admit of them. Theophilus therefore having after this manner given the Monks a repulse, dismiss'd them. And perhaps the Controversie about this matter, which had come to this height, might have been quieted and appeased; had there not another accident forthwith hapned of this nature. There presided over the Monasteries in Egypt four pious Men, Dioscorus, Ammonius, Eusebius, and Euthymius. These Persons were own Brothers; and from their [stature of] body were termed The Long. They were eminent both for their [Sanctity of] life and eloquence: And upon that account their fame was very great at Alexandria. Moreover, Theophilus Bishop of Alexandria had an high esteem for these Men. For which reason he constituted one them, to wit, Dioscorus, Bishop of Hermopolis; having by force constrained him [to undertake that Ecclesiastick Charge.] Two more of them he intreated to continue with him, and could scarcely persuade them to it: But in regard he was Bishop, at length he forced them look upon you in the same manner that I see God. (a) The But if you refuse to do that, expect from us the treatment in meat due to impious persons and enemies to God. Origen will do whatever seems good to you, (replied Theophilus) and therefore be not incens'd against me: For I my self do abominate Origen's Books, and judge those Persons worthy of reprehension who admit of them. Theophilus therefore having after this manner given the Monks a repulse, dismiss'd them. And perhaps the Controversie about this matter, which had come to this height, might have been quieted and appeased; had there not another accident forthwith hapned of this nature. There presided over the Monasteries in Egypt four pious Men, Dioscorus, Ammonius, Eusebius, and Euthymius. These Persons were own Brothers; and from their [stature of] body were termed The Long. They were eminent both for their [Sanctity of] life and eloquence: And upon that account their fame was very great at Alexandria. Moreover, Theophilus Bishop of Alexandria had an high esteem for these Men. For which reason he constituted one them, to wit, Dioscorus, Bishop of Hermopolis; having by force constrained him [to undertake that Ecclesiastick Charge.] Two more of them he intreated to continue with him, and could scarcely persuade them to it: But in regard he was Bishop, at length he forced them

*Arcadius
and Honorius.*

(b) Johannes Lau

noins (in true inter)

non of the duces this page, sh

(c) Instead of [παρηγγίλις τῇ,
and they refused [I read [παρηγγίλις τοῖς, then they refused.
Valef.

their frequent disputes with him, [had strongly asserted] that God was incorporeal, and in no wife had a human shape: For, human passions do of necessity accompany an human shape. And this had been diligently inquired into by the Antients, especially by Origen. Although this was Theophilus's own sentiment concerning God, yet that he might be revenged of his enemies, he was not ashamed of contradicting what he and they had well and truly asserted. But * he imposed upon most of the Monks; persons innocent indeed and sincere, but who were un-skillful in learning; yea most of them illiterate.

For he sends Letters to the Monasteries in the Solitudes, giving them advice that they ought not to be perverted by Diofcorus, nor his Brethren, who affirm God to be incorporeal. For God [said he,] according to the [testimony of the] Sacred Scriptures, hath eyes, ears, hands, and feet as Men have. But those Persons about Diofcorus, being followers of Origen, do attempt to introduce an * impious opinion; to wit, that God hath neither eyes, nor ears, nor feet, nor hands. With this impudence he deceives most of the Monks; and there arises a very hot dissension amongst them. Such as had their minds * cultivated with Learning, were in no wise caught with this fraud; but continued their adherence both to Diofcorus and Origen. But the simpler sort, who were the most in number, and had the greatest warmth and zeal, forthwith made an insurrection against the Brethren. A division therefore was made amongst them; and they re-proach'd one another as impious Persons. Theophilus's Party term'd the Brethren Origenists; and impious Persons. On the contrary, the other Faction stiled those instigated by Theophilus || Ant- || That is, thropomorphite. Whereupon no small contention persecution arose, and an irreconcilable war was kindled affirmed between the Monks. As soon as Theophilus un- God had derstood that his design succeeded according to an humane his own mind, he went to Nivria (where the Monasteries are) accompanied with a great multitude, and (d) Arms the Monks against Dio- fcorus and his Brethren. They having been in great danger of losing their lives, at length with the great difficulty made their escape. Johannes of Constantinople was in the interim wholly ignorant of what had been done in Egypt; and he grew famous for his Learning and Eloquence, on account whereof he became eminent [in all places.] He was also the first Person that enlarged the Prayers [usually made] in the No- urnal Hymns, [which he did] for this reason.

Nirina by Theophilus. For, they were forced from thence, but the that were the defenders of Origen, whom, together with his Serius, Theophilus had condemned in the Alexandrian Synod. Socrates seems to have been impoed upon by some Person that was an Origenist, who favouring Ammونیus and his Brethren, had given Socrates, a Narrative of that bulinefs, otherwise than it really was. Barnabas, not content to fix the Noxian Heresie upon our Socrates does openly call him an Origenist. But we only by this, that Socrates had this relation from some one of Ammونیus's friends. I do not, in the least doubt, but that Theophilus, and the rest that adhered toward Origen, and his brethren, made the Error; of Origen and the Crime of Heresie his pretext only; as he did afterwards frame the same Ca-lumn against Fohn Chrysostome. Valef.

CHAPTER VIII.

Concerning the Prayers of the Nocturnal Hymns [sung] by the Arians and Homoſuſians; and concerning the ingagement which hapned between them: and that the ſinging of Hymns in parts, wherein one ſang one Verſe, another another, had its original from Ignatius (a) Theophorus.

rius is usually filled. This term is differently accented in the Greek, which makes its import different also. For it is written ὁ ἄνθρωπος it denotes a Divine Person, one whose Soul is full of God. It is the God one &c., its import is passive, and implies to be born or carried by God. We should, therefore, have named Men, that Ignatius had this title from our Saviour's taking him up in his arms. For, he was that very Child (they say) whom our Saviour (Mar. 9. 26.) took up, and lay in the midst of his Disciples. Others, on the contrary, affirm that this Story to be groundless and uncertain. See Dr. Cave's Life of Ignatius.

 $\sim \text{O}_2$  and in

Arcadius
and Honorius.Covered,
of Arcadius Walks.

THE Arians, as we have said, had their meetings without the City. Every week therefore, as often as the Festival days occur'd (I mean the Sabbath, and Sunday,) whereon Assemblies were usually held in the Churches, they flock'd together within the City, about the publick "Piazas", and sang Hymns adapted to the Arian Heresie, answering one another by turns. And this they did for the most part all night long. Early in the morning they sang the same alternative Hymns, pass'd through the midst of the City, out of its Gates, and so went to the places where they met. But in regard they would not desist from making use of such terms as gave a provocation to the Assertors of the Homousian Opinion: (for they frequently sang such words as these; Where are they who affirm Three to be One Power?) Johannes being afraid, left any of the more ignorant sort might be drawn away from the Church by such Hymns, in opposition to them appoints some of his own People, that they might employ themselves in singing of Nocturnal Hymns, and by that means both obscure the Seditious of the Arians about these things, and also confirm his own Party [the Orthodox] in the profession of their Faith. This design of Johannes was seemingly good and useful; but the conclusion of it was Disturbance and Dangers. For, in regard the Hymns of the Homousians, in their singing them in the night, were performed with more of pomp and show: (for Johannes invented Silver-Crosses, whereon were carried Wax-tapers lighted; the Emperess Eudoxia being at the charge hereof;) the Arians, who were very numerous, and posselt with an envious emulation, resolv'd to be revenged, and to make an attack against them. For by reason of that power and sway which they had formerly had, they were as yet hot and ready for such conflicts, and likewise they despised their Adversaries. Without delay therefore, on one of those nights they engaged. Brise, the Emperess's Eunuch, who at that time was the Singers Instructor, received a wound in his Forehead by a Stone: and moreover, some Persons on both sides were slain. The Emperor incens'd hereat, prohibited the Arians from singing their Hymns any more in publick. Such, as we have declared, were the Transactions then. We are further to relate, whence this usage of singing alternative Hymns in the Church had its original. (b) Ignatius the third Bishop of Antioch in Syria from the Apostle Peter, who also convers'd with the Apostles themselves, saw a Vision of Angels, praises the Holy Trinity by singing of alternative Hymns, and he deliver'd that way of singing, which he had seen in his Vision, to the Antiochian Church. Whence the same Tradition was spread over all other Churches. This is the account we have received concerning alternative Hymns.

(b) I cannot imagine whence Socrates has this Story. For singing the Holy Trinity in this manner, that Flavianus and Diodorus were the first Persons, who in Constantius's Reign divided the Quires of Singers at Antioch into two parts, and gave them David's Psalms, to be sung alternatively, or by turns; which usage being first practis'd at Antioch, afterwards spread over all the Churches of the World. Theodoret attests this in his Hist. lib. 2. cap. 24. as does also Theodorus Mopsuestenus (a Person antecedent than he) who lived in the same times with Flavianus and Diodorus. The odorous words are quoted by Nicetas in Thesauris Orthodoe fidei, lib. 5. cap. 30. Altho' that way of singing Psalms seems to have been used by the Syrians, before Flavianus and Diodorus's times. For Theodorus writes, that Flavianus and Diodorus were the first Persons, who translated that kind of Psalmody which they term Antiphona; [That is, when one singeth one Verse, another another] out of the Syrian Language into the Grecian; and that those two Persons appear'd almost the only Authors of this thing, to all the parts of the World.

What therefore the Syrians had done long before Flavianus's time, (to wit, in singing of David's Psalms alternatively in Syriack;) that Flavianus and Diodorus order'd to be done, by the Grecians of Antioch in their singing the Psalms in Greek. Valel.

C H A P. IX.

Concerning those termed The Long Monks, and Arcadius how Theophilus having conceived an implacable hatred against Johannes upon their account, made it his business to get him deposed [from his Bishoprick.]

NOT long after this, the Monks together with Disforus and his Brethren, went from the Solitude to Constantinople. They were accompanied by Isidorus, a Person for whom Theophilus had heretofore had a great

* See the second Chapter of this Book.
(a) Besides this reason of Theophilus's hatred against Isidorus, Sequester (Book 8. Chap. 12.) relates two other causes. The first was, because Isidorus had refused to give evidence in favour of Theophilus's S-ster. The second, because he had reproved Theophilus for his over-much diligence in building Churches, whereby he wasted the Money of the Church, which ought rather to have been bestowed on the poor. I am easily induced to believe, that these were the Reasons of Theophilus's hatred against Isidorus; in regard both Socrates and Sequester do expressly attest it. Notwithstanding, Isidorus was not for these reasons ejected out of the Church; but was condemned by the sentence of the Synod, on account of Origen's Errors, which he maintained; as Basilius has long since informed us from Palladius in Lausica. Valel.
(b) S. Arsenius, who succeeded Chrysostom in his Bishoprick, is term'd a sequester by Sequester, Chief-Presbyter, in the Acts of the Synod at Quercum; and one Marcellinus is fill'd episcopus Isidorus, Chief-Deacon. Sequester calls this Peter Arch-Presbyter. This is a name of honour, not of indictment. For the Bishops elected whom they pleas'd out of the College of Presbyters to be Arch-Presbyters, as Libertus informs us in his Breviarium, chap. 14. Valel.

For he had been sent by Theophilus to Damasus, Bishop of Rome, that he might make a reconciliation between him and Flavianus Bishop of Antioch. For Melchius's Adherents made a separation from Flavianus on account of his Oath, as has been declared * before. Isidorus therefore being returned from Rome, and summons'd by Peter to give in his evidence, affirm'd that the Manichean Woman was admitted [to the Sacrament] agreeable to the Bishop's consent: and that the Bishop himself admitted the [Sacred] Mysteries to her. Hereupon Theophilus was highly enraged, and out of anger ejected them both [out of the Church.] This was the occasion of Isidorus's accompanying Disforus and his Brethren to Constantinople; that the designs which had fraudulently been formed against them, might be impeded and laid open before the Emperor himself, and Johannes the Bishop. Johannes informed hereof, gave the Men an honourable reception;

*Arcadius
and Honorius.*

ption; and excluded them not from communion of the Prayers; but said, he would not allow them a Communion of the [Sacred] Mysteries, before cognizance had been taken of their Case. Whilst the affair was in this posture, a false report is brought to the hearing of Theophilus, as if Johannes had both admitted them to the Sacred Mysteries, and was also ready to give them assistance. Wherefore [Theophilus] made it his whole business, that he might not only be revenged upon Dioscorus and Isidorus, but cast Johannes also out of his [Episcopal] Chair. He sends Letters therefore to the Bishops of every City, concealing indeed his own design, and to appearance blaming therein Origen's Books only: [notwithstanding,] Athanasius, (who lived long before him,) in confirmation of his own Faith, has frequently made use of the authority and testimony of Origen's Writings, in his Orations against the Arians.

CHAP. X.

That Epiphanius [Bishop] of Cyprus being also led away by Theophilus's Fruits, convened a Synod of Bishops in Cyprus, to determine against Origen's Writings; and reproved Johannes for reading Origen's Books.

HE became reconciled also to Epiphanius Bishop of Constantia in Cyprus, with whom he had heretofore disagreed. For Theophilus (a) had been angry with Epiphanius, in regard he entertained subject thoughts of God, and substituted a Human shape. Altho' Theophilus embraced these sentiments concerning God, and reproved those who supposed the Deity had an human shape; yet by reason of the hatred he had conceived against some other persons, he openly denied his own thoughts; and at that time entered into a friendship with Epiphanius (with whom he had before been at difference) as if he had altered his mind, and entertained now the same sentiment with him concerning God. He was very earnest with Epiphanius likewise, to convene a Synod of the Bishops in Cyprus, that therein Origen's Writings might be condemned. Epiphanius being by reason of his singular piety, a person of a plain disposition, and unacquainted with subtlety, was soon induced into error by Theophilus's Letters. And having assembled a Synod of the Bishops within the Island [Cyprus]: prohibits the reading of Origen's Books. He sent Letters also to Johannes, intreating him to abstain from reading Origen's Works; and [requesting] that he also would convene a Synod, and make the same determination he had done. Theophilus therefore having wound in Epiphanius, a person famous for his piety, to embrace his own Opinion; and perceiving that his design thrived according to his wish; became more confident, and he also himself (b) assembled many Bishops; in which Convention (agreeable to what had been done by Epiphanius) a sentence of Condemnation was pronounced against the Writings of Origen, who had been dead (c) almost two hundred years: Not that this was Theophilus's principal design, but [he did it chiefly] to be revenged on Dioscorus and his Brethren. Johannes gave little heed to what he was acquainted with, either from Epiphanius, or Theophilus himself; his mind being wholly employ'd about preaching in the Churches; and for that indeed he was extraordinarily eminent: But he altogether slighted the Plots and Designs form'd against him. But after it came to be apparently known to most persons, that Theophilus made it his business to divert Johannes of his Bishoprick, then all those Men who had an hatred for Johannes, joyn'd in their raising calumnious complaints against him. And many, as well of the Clergy, as of the Grandeurs who had a great interest in the Imperial Palace, supposing they had a very fair opportunity offer'd them of being reveng'd upon Johannes, procur'd a Grand Synod to be convened at Constantinople, sending into divers parts [for the Bishops,] partly by Letters, and partly by Messengers.

that Heresie in the Year of Christ 399. Which was done after many Conferences concerning that matter, held by the Bishops who came thither, as Justinianus informs us in Sisipius's Dialogues de l'us B. Marini. After this Theophilus sent a Synodick Letter to all the Bishops, and he wrote a particular Letter to Epiphanius, beseeching and intreating him that he would convene all the Bishops of the Island, condemn the same Heresie himself, and subscribe his Synodick Letter. This Letter of Theophilus's is at this day extant, translated by St. Jerome. Valef.

(c) See Staxorior de seculis 177. The particle de must be expunged. Moreover, Socrates here uses a period number for an imperfect. And for this reason he adds the Term seculum. That is, almost, or, thereabout. But if we would speak exactly, above fifty Years must be taken from this number. For Origen died on the year of Christ 252, as may be made out from what we have said at us (b.) and (c.) on English Ecclesiastical History. Book 7. chap. 1. From which Year, to the Year of Christ 399. wherein Origen was condemned in the Alexandrian Synod, there are 147 Years. Valef.

CHAP. XI.

Concerning the [two] Syrian [Bishops] Severianus and Antiochus, how, and for what reasons they disagreed with Johannes.

Moreover, the Odium against Johannes was increased by another accident of this nature. There were two Bishops who flourished at one and the same time, by extract they were Syrians, [their names] Severianus and Antiochus. Severianus presided over the Church of Gabala, which is a City of Syria; and Antiochus over that of Ptolemais situate in Phenice. Both of them were famous for their eloquence. Severianus, though he seem'd to be very learned, yet did not pronounce the Greek tongue exactly and distinctly: But whilst he spoke Greek, his voice had the sound of Syriack. Antiochus came first to Constantinople from Ptolemais; and having for some time preached in the Churches [of the Imperial City] with much labour and diligence, and from them procur'd a great sum of Money, at length he return'd to his own Church. Afterwards, Severianus being inform'd that Antiochus had gotten a great deal of Money at Constantinople, made it his business to follow his example. Having therefore exercised himself very much, and made many Sermons, he also comes to Constantinople: Where being courtously received by Johannes, for some time

(b) Socrates
(and Sozomen
who ha:

Arctius and Honorius.
* Or, maxim of the Magistrate.

time he sooth'd and flatter'd him, and was notwithstanding belov'd and honour'd by Johannes: In the mean while he grew famous for his Sermons, and on that account came to be taken notice of by *many great Personages [of that City,] and moreover, by the Emperor himself. It hapned that the Bishop of Ephesus died at that time, and Johannes was necessitated to make a journey thither, to Ordain a Bishop there. Being come to that City, and finding some endeavouring to promote one person to the Bishoprick, others another, (who also strove very earnestly amongst themselves upon their account, for whom they gave their Suffrages;) Johannes perceiving that both Parties contended most pertinaciously, and would in no point be obedient to his admonitions; resolv'd to put an end to their contention † without offending either Faction. He himself therefore prefer'd one Heraclides his Deacon, by Nation a Cypriot, to the Bishoprick. And so both parties desisted from their mutual contentiousness, and were at quiet. On this account Johannes was necessitated to stay at Ephesus a long time. In the interim that he resided there, Severianus gain'd a greater esteem and affection from his Auditors at Constantinople. Nor was this thing unknown to Johannes; for he was with all imaginable speed acquainted with whatever hapned. When therefore Serapion (of whom we have made mention † before) suggested to him, and told him the Church was disturb'd by Severianus, Johannes was provok'd to an emulation. And having † incidently taken away many Churches from the Novatianists and Quartodecimani, he return'd to Constantinople; where he renew'd the care of the Churches which were incumbent on him. But no body was able to endure Serapion's haughtiness and arrogance. For in regard he was in possession of a great † interest and favour with Johannes the Bishop, his insolence towards all persons was immeasurable. For which reason the Odium also against the Bishop became more enkindled. Upon a time, when Severianus pass'd by him, Serapion refus'd to give him the honour due to a Bishop; but continued in his seat, demonstrating thereby that he had but a very slight esteem for Severianus's presence. Severianus could not bear this contempt of Serapion's; but spake with a loud voice to those that were present, If Serapion dies a Christian, Christ hath not been incarnate. Serapion having gotten this occasion, did openly render Severianus odious to Johannes. He conceal'd the first Clause of the Sentence [to wit, this,] if Serapion dies a Christian; and affirmed that Severianus said these words only; doubting Christ was not incarnate. He produced a company of his own [Faction] who attested that the words were spoken so. Johannes therefore forthwith expels Severianus out of the City. This coming to the knowledge of the Empress Eudoxia, she reproves Johannes severely; and gave order that Severianus should forthwith be recalled from Chalcedon in Bithynia. He return'd immediately. But Johannes declined his Friendship; nor could he be induced thereto by the intreaty of any one: (a) Till at length the Empress Eudoxia, in that Church called The Apostles, cast her Son Theodosius (who now reigns successfully, but was then a very labour, or,

† Or, Without
unable.

† Book 6,
Chap. 4.
* Or, By
the by.

† Or, Liberty and assistance.

(f) Instead of [ds
i Basilius
as, in so much that the Empress, in my judgment it should be [ds i n Basilius, till at length the Empress,] Nor do I doubt but Socrates wrote thus. Ni- cephorus words it expressly according to our Emendation. And in sequence the reading is [ds i n, until,] which is the same. Valef.

young Child;) before Johannes's knees, and Arctadius, (b) having adjured him frequently by her Son, and with much ado prevail'd with him to admit of a friendship with Severianus. After this manner (b) Kas therefore these two persons were to appearance ds i n reconciled: nevertheless they retained a ran- ds i n cour'd mind one towards another. Such was the ds i n occasion of Johannes's grudge against Severianus. adjured ds i n him by her Son. The Ancients were wont to swear by their Children. So in Virgil,

Per caput hoc juro, per spem surgentis illi:
I swear by this head, by the hopes of growing Iulus.

After the same manner, when they would earnestly outreat others, they beseeched them by their own Children, and whatever they accounted most dear to themselves. In this manner therefore Eudoxia spake to Johannes Chrysostome at that time: By this little Child of mine, and your spiritual Son, whom I brought forth, and whom you received out of the sacred Font; be reconciled with Severianus. 'Tis certain Chrysostome had received Theodosius Junior out of the sacred Font, as Nicephorus relates at this place, from Simeon Metaphrastes, as I suppose. Further, Baronius places this reconciliation between Severianus and Chrysostome, on the year of Christ 401, in the Consulate of Vincencius and Fravitus. But I had rather place it on the year following. For if it be true that Theodosius was then baptized, as we have before related from Nicephorus: (which is indeed highly probable; for Eudoxia would not have brought her Son into the Church of the Apostles, had he not been baptized,) this reconciliation of the Bishops must necessarily happen on the year of Christ 402. For Theodosius Junior was born in the Consulate of Vincencius and Fravitus, (which was the year of Christ 401,) on the tenth of April. For so 'tis recorded in the Alexandrian Chronicle, and in Marcellinus's which was put forth by Onfricius. The reading in Simondus's Edition is false, where it is on the eleventh of April. Nor is it credible, that he could be baptized, except in the Easter of the year following. If any one notwithstanding shall maintain, that he was baptized a few days after his birth, (as Marcus seems to intimate in the Life of Porphyrius;) we will allow this, if he pleases. But who can believe, that Theodosius would have been brought into the Church by his Mother, and placed at Chrysostome's Knees, before he was a year, or ten months old? Valef.

C H A P. XII.

That Epiphanius coming to Constantinople, held Assemblies, and perform'd Ordinations contrary to Johannes's mind, that he might gratifie Theophilus.

Not long after this, Epiphanius the Bishop comes again out of Cyprus to Constantinople, induced thereto by Theophilus's * Perfwasives: * Or, Ar-
He brought along with him † a Copy of a Sentence of a Synod, wherein he had not declared † Tà ka Origen to be Excommunicate, but had condemned his Books only. Arriving therefore at Saint John's Church, (which is distant from the City seven miles,) and coming ashore, he celebrated an Assembly, (a) and ordain'd a Deacon; after which he entered into the City. That he might gratifie Theophilus, he declined Johannes's Invitation, and lodg'd in a little private House. And charge so-having called together those Bishops who were ds i n then at Constantinople, he produced a Copy of the Sentence of Condemnation against Origen's a mistake, because he has said, Books, and recited it to them: (b) Having no-tained a Deacon at Constantinople without the consent of the Bishop of that City. Epiphanius had done that before indeed, in the Diocess of John Bishop of Jerusalem, as 'tis manifest from Jerome's Epistles. Socrates therefore, and those that follow him, being deceived by the likeness of the name, thought that was done by Epiphanius in the Church of John Bishop of Constantinople. This device Baronius has invented to excuse Epiphanius. But, who sees not, that there is no reason, why we should charge Socrates with a Lye in those things which he himself was able to see? For what had been once done already by Epiphanius in Palestine, why could it not afterwards be made use of by the same person at Constantinople? For there was not so great a Crime in ordaining a Deacon, whom notwithstanding Epiphanius ordained not, but by the entreaty of the multitude that stood by. Valef.

(b) Instead of [ds i n, I have nothing:] it must doubtless be [ds i n, having nothing:] in the next line, we read [ds i n, were pleased:] instead of [ds i n, is pleased.] Valef.
thing

Acacius
and Honorius.

thing against those Books, only he and Theophilus were pleased to reject them. Some [of the Bishops] out of that reverential respect they bore Epiphanius, subscribed [this Decree of the Synod:] but very many of them refused to do it. Amongst which number was Theotimus Bishop of Sytybia, who made this answer to Epiphanius. I [said he] will neither be injurious (O Epiphanius!) to a person who has long since ended his life piously; nor dare I attempt so impious a fact, as to condemn what our Predecessors have in no wise rejected; and (c) agree specially when I do not (c) know of any ill Doctrine in the Books of Origen. After this he produced a Book of Origen's, which he began to read, and showed the Ecclesiastick Expolitions [of Scripture which occur'd] therein. And then he subjoyn'd these words: They who are injurious towards these Writings, perceive not that they fix a reproach upon those very Books, concerning which these are written. This was the return which Theotimus (a person eminent for his piety and rectitude of life) made to Epiphanius.

Notwithstanding, 'tis my opinion, that there is something more wanting here. And after the word [Origen,] I think the place is to be made thus, ταύτα εἰρησ, μενεσίους τὴν βιβλίαν, having said these Words, and produced a Book, &c. Which is confirmed by Sozomen and Nicephorus. And Epiphanius Scholasticus seems to have read thus, as may be collected from his Version. Valef.

C H A P. XIII.

What this Writer can say in defence of Origen.

BUT in regard such as delight in reproaching have imposed upon many persons, [and dissuaded them] (a) from reading Origen, as being a blasphemous Author; I judge it not unreasonable to discourse a little concerning them. Vile and despicable Men, who of themselves can't arrive at an eminency, are desirous of getting a name from diffamming those who are better than themselves. The first person affected with this distemper was Methodius Bishop of that City in Lycia, named Olympus. Then, Eusebius, who for some small time presided over the Church in Antioch. After him Apollinaris, and lastly, Theophilus. This Mefs of Revilers have calumniated Origen, but proceeded not in one and the same method. For one has broke out into an accusation against him upon one account, another upon another; whereby each of them hath sufficiently demonstrated, that he has fully approv'd of whatever he has not found fault with. For, whereas one blamed him in particular for one opinion, another for another, 'tis manifest that each of them has wholly admitted as true what he had not cavil'd at; his silence approving of that which he hath not found fault with. Methodius indeed, when [in his Books] he had in many passages severely inveigh'd against Origen, does notwithstanding, afterwards unlay as it were what he had written; and (b) admires the

(b) Baro-
nius, at the year of Christ 402, does charge Socrates here with a Lye and Calumny, because he has said that Methodius (when he had before reproach'd Origen,) did afterwards unlay what he had written, and set forth his praises. But Baronius affirms, that Methodius did the contrary. For when he had at the beginning praised Origen, afterwards having detected his Errors, he inveigh'd against him. Baronius confirms this by the testimony of Eusebius, who in the sixth Book of his Apology in defence of Origen, writes thus: Quomodo ausus est Methodius nunc contra Origenem scribere, qui has & hae de Origenis locutus est dogmas: Non daret Methodius scribere against Origen non, who has spoken in these and these things, concerning Origen's opinions. Which passage in Eusebius St. Jerome quotes in his Apology against Rufinus, to shew that he had done the same thing which Methodius did before. But Eusebius, in the place now cited, does not say; plainly, that Methodius had before spoke in defence of Origen. For he does not say [who had spoken these and these things concerning Origen's opinions:] but only [who has spoken, &c.] which may be taken on either side. Therefore Socrates is not to be charged with a Lye. Valef.

Man in the (c) the Dialogue to which he gave Acacius the title of Xenon. But, I do affirm, that an addition is made to Origen's commendation, from his being accused by these persons. For (c) Methodius wrote his Books commonly in the way of Dialogue, for entertaining of Dissentiments concerning the Holy Trinity; legues, as [these Men, I say,] do most evidently demonstrate and bear witness to his true and orthodox Faith. And by their not blaming him in this particular, they commend him by their own testimony. But Athanasius a courageous Defender of the Homoeopsonian Faith, in his Orations against the Ariens, does with a loud voice cite this Author as a Witness of his own Faith, interweaving his words with his own, after this manner: The most admirable and laborious Origen, (says concerning he) does by his own testimony confirm our Sentiment the Right concerning the Son of God, affirming him to be co-eternal to the Father. They therefore who reproach Origen, have forgot themselves [and consider not] that they speak calumniously of great Athanasius, Origen's praiser. But let thus much be said concerning Origen. We will now return to the Sequel of our History.

some Excerptions. Of the same sort also was this Dialogue of his, entitled Xenon, that is, the House of Entertainment, wherein Summers lodge. For, α-σαδενον is a place for Virgins to dwell in: so this is an house for Strangers to dwell in. This Book is mention'd in Rufinus's Bibliotheca, in his Excerptions out of Methodius's Book εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν, where these Words occur; οὗτοί τινες οἱ καὶ οἱ ἀπὸ τῶν κατὰ τοὺς μαρτυροῦντας ὑμῶν ἐκπεσόντων τῶν ἡμετέρων, μαρτυροῦνται μὴ τὴν ἐξουσίαν τὴν κατὰ τὴν ἐκκλησίαν ἀποκρίσιν ἀλλὰ καὶ τὴν οἰκίαν ἡμετέραν, &c. διότι καὶ οὐκ ἐστὶν οὐκ ἐστὶν, &c. Which place the Translator has rendered very ill; it is thus to be translated: For passage in the Gospel [saith not that which is Holy to the Dogs, nor Pearls before Swine] is thus explained by Xenon, that by Petrus means the most secret Mysteries of the Religion given by God: But the Hogs, &c. the great Methodius says, &c. In this Dialogue therefore, the title whereto was μετὰ τὸν οἶκον, at Origen's was introduced, by name Xenon, against whom Methodius disputed, not in his own name, but under another Person, as Plotius attests in the same Excerptum. Hence 'tis apparent, that that Dialogue of Methodius, which Socrates calls Xenon, was the same to which Plotius gives the title of μετὰ τὸν οἶκον; and that Xenon is not to be taken for a place of Entertainment, but rather for a Person of the Dialogue. But (some one will object) that in that Dialogue intitled Xenon, Origen was highly commended by Methodius; but in the Dialogue intitled μετὰ τὸν οἶκον, Methodius terms him a Centaur. For so 'tis extant in two places in Plotius's Excerptum. My answer is, 'Tis possible that in the beginning of that work Methodius might have seem'd sharp upon Origen; but in the end or procedure of it, he might find a Retreat as it were, and quit him highly. Notwithstanding, if any one has a mind still to maintain, that the Dialogue Xenon differed from that intitled μετὰ τὸν οἶκον; then it must be said, that Xenon was not the proper name of any Man, but that thereby is rather meant the whole School of Origen, wherein the Audiens and Scholars, coming from divers parts of the World, were conversant. Which in my judgment is the truest. 'Tis certain, if Xenon was a proper name, it would have the accent in the last syllable have one. Valef.

C H A P. XIV.

How Johannes (having invited Epiphanius to come to [his Palace] and be refusing, and continuing his holding of separate Assemblies in the Church of the Apolitics,) admonished and reproved him, because he did many things contrary

Aradius
and Honorius.

ry to the Canons. Whereat Epiphanius was terrified, and returned into his own Country.

(a) This beginning is too abrupt; especially in regard that digression concerning Origen went before. Therefore in my judgment [i. e. b.] should precede here; and the beginning of the next period should run thus, ὁ δὲ ἐκ ἐπὶ ἐκ. But his answer was, &c. Valef.

* Or, before a Catholic, or, general
dijunction.

† Or, reproach.

(b) Instead of [i. e. c.]
in should in my judgement [i. e. d.]
[although this reading be disagreeable to all our Copies.] For
it appears to what follows, to be right
and now.
Valefius.
(c) The reading in the Florentine M.S. pleases me best; which is, ἐλπίσας μὴ ἐν ἑαυτοῖς τὴν αὐτῶν αἰτίαν, ὡς οὐκ ἔστιν, ἐπιστῆναι ἐν τῇ ἑαυτοῦ πατρίδι. Moreover Baroni-us does deservedly desire these Predications of Epiphanius and Chrysostome, as fabulous and forged. Socrates relates them not for true and certain; and in my judgment they are altogether misbecoming Holy Men and Bishops. Valef.

(d) Baroni-us does indeed place that contest between Epiphanius and Chrysostome on the year of Christ 402. But concerning Epiphanius's death he differs from Socrates, Sozomen, and the other Writers, who tell us that Epiphanius died soon after, in his return to his own Country. And yet Baroni-us confesses he knows not what year Epiphanus died on. Which I cannot wonder at enough. For, whereas Baroni-us follows Socrates and Sozomen in the foregoing account of that contest which hapned between those two eminent Men, what reason had he to differ from them about the death of Epiphanius?
They might indeed have been mistaken in their relating the mutual predications between Epiphanius and Chrysostome; nor is it sufficiently manifest, whether or no they predicted those accidents to one another. But the things which hapned to each of them are most certain, nor could Socrates and Sozomen be ignorant hereof; the latter of whom was born at Salamine, over which City Epiphanius had been Bishop; and both of them were almost Epiphanius's Contemporaries.
It ought therefore to be look'd upon as certain from the Testimony of these Writers, that Epiphanius died at the close of the year 402, or at least on the beginning of the year following, before the Synod at Quercum. Theophilus informs us hereof in his Epistle to Saint Jerome, which Epistle Jerome has prefixed before Theophilus's Paschal Epistle, which he translated into Latin. For in that Epistle Theophilus speaks these Words concerning Chrysostome then condemned: Sed ille, ut ceteris episcopis fugiatis racionem, &c. But he, not to mention his other Crimes, admitted the Origenists to a familiarity with himself, and preferred many of them to the Sacred Office, on account of which fact he seduced the Hearts of his own of God Epiphanius of Blessed memory, (who shined as a bright Star in the World amongst the Bishops;) and therefore had deserved to bear, Babylon is fallen, is fallen. Where you see Theophilus does speak of Epiphanius, as then dead; for he terms him a Man of blessed memory; and he intimates, that he was dead before Chrysostome's condemnation. Valef.

Aradius
and Honorius.

C H A P. XV.

How after Epiphanius's departure, Johannes made an Oration against Women; and upon that account (by the care of the Emperor and Empreſs,) a Synod was convened against him at Chalcedon, and he is ejected out of his Church.

FOR, after Epiphanius's departure, Johannes received information from some Persons, that the Empreſs Eudoxia had animated Epipha-nius against him. And being a Person of an hot disposition, and of a ready expression; without delay he made an Oration in the presence of the People, the Contents whereof were the dis-commendation of all Women in general. The Multitude understands that Oration so, as if it had been * Enigmatically spoken against the * Dirty, Empreſs. This Speech is taken in writing by or, ob-malevolent Persons, and brought to the knowledge of the Emperors. The Empreſs, informed hereof, complains to the Emperor of the injury done to herself, and tells him that her injury was his. She takes care therefore, that Theophilus should forthwith convene a Synod against Johannes: which was in like manner urged by Severianus; for he still retained his grudge [against Johannes]. Within a small interval of time Theophilus arrived, accompanied with many Bishops of several Cities [whom he had summoned together
by his Letters.] (a) For, the Emperor had given him this order by his Rescript. They flock'd together, most especially, who were displeas'd with Johannes, some upon one account, others on another.
They came also, whom Johannes had turned out of their Bishopricks. For Johannes had depofed many Bishops in Asia, when he went to Ephesus upon account of ordaining Heraclides. All of them therefore by agreement met together at Chal-cedon [a City] of Bithynia.
One Cyrinus was at that time Bishop of Chalcedon, by Country an Egyptian;
he prated [against Johannes] before the Bishops,
terming him an impious,
arrogant, and (b) inexorable person. With which words the Bishops were mightily pleased.
But Marutha Bishop of Mesopotamia, against his will trod upon Cyrinus's Foot: By reason of

(a) Instead of [i. e. c.]
Basilius, &c. Moreover, the Emperor, [i. e. d.] I had rather it should be [i. e. e.] &c. For the Emperor, &c. Moreover, Chrysostome affirms the contrary to what is laid here, in his Epistle to Innocentius. For he says that the Emperor commanded Theophilus to come to Constantinople alone, to plead his cause; but,
that he came thither, accompanied with many Bishops. Notwithstanding, these things may be reconciled, if we say that the Emperor gave Theophilus this order at the beginning, when the Monks had gone to him. But afterwards, at the instigation of his Wife Eudoxia, the Emperor commanded Theophilus to bring the Bishops out of Egypt with him. Valef.

(b) Aynelol. Musculus renders it inflexible. Chrysostom, contumacious. I would rather translate it inexorable; for we fall down at their knees, whom we entreat. Valef.

*Arcadius
and Honorius.*

which [bruise] he was in very great pain, and could not accompany the rest of the Bishops in their passage to Constantinople. He therefore continued at Chalcedon; but the rest failed over to Constantinople. None of the Ecclesiasticks went out to meet Theophilus, nor shewed him the usual respect and honour: for he was known to be [Johannes's] open Enemy: The Alexandrian Mariners, whose Corn-fleet hapned to be there at that time, went forth to meet him; and received him with Acclamations of joy. Theophilus refused to go into the Church; but took up his Lodgings in one of the Emperor's Houses named Placidiana. Thence-forward many Accusations were raised against Johannes. Nor was there the least mention now made concerning Origen's Books: but they betook themselves to other absurd Criminations. Provision being made before-hand after this manner; the Bishops met at a place * near the City Chalcedon, termed the † Oak, whither they cited Johannes immediately, that he might make his Defence in reference to the Crimes he stood charged with. Together with him they summoned in Sedrapion [his Deacon,] Tygris the Eunuch a Prefbyter, and Paulus a Reader: For these persons were accused together with Johannes. But, in regard Johannes made use of an (c) Exception, and refused those that summon'd him in, as being his Enemies, and appeal'd to a General Council; without any delay they cited him in four times. And when he refused to appear, but gave them always the same answer, they condemned and deposed him; laying no other crime to his charge but this only, that upon his being summon'd he would not appear. This business being divulged about Evening, put the Multitude into the greatest tumult imaginable: Wherefore they watched all night long, and would in no wise suffer him to be taken out of the Church; but cried out, that cognizance ought to be taken of his Case in a greater Synod. But the Emperor issued out an Order, that he should be forthwith ejected, and carried into banishment. Johannes understanding this, surrendered himself about (d) Noon on the third day after his Deposition, the People not knowing of it. For he was afraid, lest a disturbance might have been raised upon his account. So, he was convey'd away [and banish'd.]

manner they fix'd the occasion of this Calumny upon Theophilus. For his frauds could no longer continue concealed; but [were discovered] both by many other Indications, and also because he communicated with Discorus and those termed the Long Monks, (a) soon after Johannes's Deposition. Moreover, at that time Severianus also (in a Sermon which he preach'd in the Church,) supposing he had a fair opportunity of reproaching Johannes, spake these words, Although Johannes had been condemned for nothing else, yet his proud and arrogant Disposition was crime (b) sufficient [justly to have occasion'd] his Deposition For Men are forgiven all other sins, but God respects the proud, as the Sacred Scriptures inform us. These words provoked the Populace to an higher degree of obstinacy and contention. Upon which account the Emperor gave order he should be recalled immediately. Brijo therefore the Emperess's Eunuch being sent, found him at (b) Prænetum, which is a Mart-Town situate over-against Nicomedia, and ordered him to return to Constantinople. But in regard Johannes, after he was recalled from exile, refused to enter the City, before he had been declared innocent by a greater Judicature; in the interim therefore he abode in (c) a Village at some distance from the City, termed Mariane. Upon his making delays, and refusing to enter the City, the multitude was incensed, and forthwith began to cast forth opprobrious words against the Emperors. For which reason Johannes was forced to return. The Populace therefore went forth to meet him with [expressions of] the greatest veneration and honour, and bring him directly to the Church; entreating him to place himself in the Episcopal Chair; and (according to his former usage) pray for peace upon the People. Upon his refusing to do that, and saying that that ought to be done by a determination of the Judges, and that it was necessary his Condemners should acquit him; the Multitude grew more inflamed, they being extremely desirous to see him sitting in the [Episcopal] Chair, and to hear him preach again. At length the People prevailed to have these things done. And Johannes after he had seated himself in the Episcopal Throne, according to his usage prayed for peace upon the People: and moreover, being constrained thereto, he preach'd a Sermon to them. This thing gave Johannes's Adversaries an occasion of [raising] another calumnious accusation against him. But concerning that they spake not one word then.

Note (k.) which the Larines do sometimes call Suburbana. Wherefore Ortelius (in his Theſaurus Geographicus) is miſtaken, in his ſuppoſing Mariame to be the Suburbs of Conſtantinople; whereas it was a Village, ſo called from its Builder, Soromen (Book 8. Chap. 18.) before this Village was then in the Empreſs Eudoxia's poſſeſſion. Valeſ.

CHAPTER XVI.

That the People being tumultuous because of Johannes's Banishment, Briso the Empress's Eunuch was sent to bring him back again to Constantinople.

BUt the people were intolerably tumultuous. And (as it usually happens in such cases) those who had conceived an hatred against him changed it into a compassion, and affirmed him to be calumniated, whom a little before they desired to see deposed. Upon this account therefore they were the most numerous, who exclaimed both against the Emperor, and the Synod of Bishops. But in a more especial

CHAPTER XVII.

That upon Theophilus's desiring to discuss Heraclides's Cause absent, and Johannes's refusing to permit him; an Engagement hapned between the Constantinopolitans and Alexandrians, wherein many were slain [on both sides.] At which Theophilus and some other of the Bishops were terrified, and fled from the City.

BUT in the first place Theophilus made an attempt to call in question Heraclides's (a) Ordi-

(a) Ordination; that so, if possible, he might make that an occasion of deposing Johannes [again.] Heraclides was not present; but was judged in his absence, as if he had unjustly beaten some persons, bound them with chains, and caused them to be led thorow the midst of the City Ephesus.

And when Johannes and his Favourers affirmed, that judgment ought not to be * passed upon those that were able; the Alexandrians on the contrary stiffly maintained, that Heraclides's Accusers ought to be admitted, altho' they accused him in his absence. A tumult therefore and a sharp conflict was forthwith raised between the Constantinopolitans and Alexandrians: And a Fight hapned, wherein many persons received Wounds, and some few were slain. Upon fight hereof, Theophilus fled forthwith to Alexandria: the same thing was done by the other Bishops, excepting a few who were of Johannes's side. And all of them made their escape and went to their own [Sees.] These things hapning thus, Theophilus was condemned in the judgment of all Men. Moreover, the Odium against him was increased, by his being in no wife ashamed of reading Origen's Books constantly after this. Being asked therefore by one, Why he would again embrace those Books which he had condemned; his answer was this: Origen's Books are like a Meadow adorned with all manner of Flowers. If therefore I find any thing that is good amongst them, I gather it: But if any thing appears thorny to me, that (in regard it pricks) I let alone. This was Theophilus's answer; but he considered not this saying of wife

Solomon: that † the words of the wife are as goads, and they ought not to kick against them, who are pricked by the Precepts [contained therein.] For these reasons Theophilus was condemned in all Mens judgments. Moreover Dioscorus (one of those termed The Long Monks) Bishop of Hermopolis, (b) died a little after Theophilus's Flight, and was honoured with a splendid Funeral, being buried in the Church at The Oak, wherein the Synod upon Johannes's account had been convened. But Johannes employed himself about Preaching: And ordains Serapion (for whose sake the Odium against him had been raised,) Bishop of Heraclaea in Thracia. Not long after, these things also hapned.

(b) Dioscorus Bishop of Hermopolis was dead before the Convention of the Synod at The Oak, but was he buried in the Church at the Oak, but in St. Mocius's Church; as Sozomen attests Book 8. chap. 17. St. Mocius's Church was at Constantinople, as we are informed by Procopius and others. Wherefore Socrates is mistaken, who attributes that to Dioscorus, which was rather to have been laid concerning his Brother Ammonius. For, at such time as the Synod at Quercum [that is, the Synod at the Oak,] was summoned, Ammonius fell into a distemper: And having passed over to The Oak, he died soon after, and was honoured with a splendid Funeral, in the Monastery of that place, as Sozomen tells us, Book 8. Chap. 17. Valef.

C H A P. XVIII.

Concerning Eudoxia's Silver-Statue; and how Johannes was ejected out of his Church again on account of that, and conveyed into Banishment.

(a) Silver-Statue of the Empress Eudoxia, cloath'd in a Womans Stole, had been erected upon a Pillar of Porphyry. It stood upon an high Basis, not very near, nor yet at any great distance from that Church named Sophia:

but there was the distance of half the breadth of the Street between them both. At that Statue publick Sports were usually celebrated. Johannes supposing what was performed [at those Sports] to be done in contempt to the Church, re-assumed his usual freedom and boldness of Speech, and armed his Tongue against those who did these things. And whereas he ought to have perwaded the Emperors by an Exhortatory Oration, to abstain from such Sports; he did not do that; but made use of his sharp Tongue, and reproach'd those who had ordered these [Sports] to be performed. The Emperess did again apply these Expressions to herself. And supposing Johannes's words [to be spoken] in contempt to her, she makes it her business to have another Synod of Bishops convened against him. Johannes, made sensible hereof, preach'd that famous Sermon of his in the Church, the beginning whereof is this: * Herodias rages again, she is again disturbed, she dances again, she again desires to receive John's Head in a Charger.

Hereby the Emperess was more highly exasperated. And not long after the Bishops arrived, to wit, Leontius Bishop of Ancyra in Galatia the Left: Ammonius of Laodicea which is in Pisidia: (b) Briso of Philippi in Thracia: Acacius of Beræa in Syria, and some others. After these Prelates were come, those who had accused Johannes before, were set up again. Johannes was embolden'd with a greater degree of confidence before these Judges: and desired that the Crimes he was accused of, might be inquired into. [In the interim, the Feast of of] Our Saviour's Nativity approached, and the Emperor, as he had usually done before, went not to the Church; but gave Johannes notice, that he would not communicate with him, till such time as he should clear himself of the Crimes he stood charged with. Farther, in regard Johannes's Accusers shew'd a despondency and fearfulness of mind, by reason of his great confidence, the Bishops that were present superseded their researches into any thing else, and affirmed that a scrutiny was to be made concerning this only, to wit, That after his deposition he had thrust himself into his Episcopal Chair, without having had it adjudg'd to him by the authority of a Synod. When Johannes made answer, that sixty Bishops who held communion with him, had decreed that; Leontius rejoyned [in these made in the Consulate of Theodosius Junior and Rumoris, which was the year of Christ 403: his words are these, Eudoxia Arcadii uxoris Jupior porphyreticam Columariam argentea Statua juxta Ecclesiam pollis hædusis sistit; a Silver Statue of Eudoxia, wife to Arcadius, placed upon a Porphyry-pillar near the Church still stands. Ideophanes relates the same, who says, that that Statue was erected in that place called Pistratia, near the Church of St. Irenæ; and that at the dedication thereof the Prefect of the City (who was a Manichean and a Semipagan) excited the People to shout and dance in such a manner, that the Divine Service could not quietly be performed in the Church, because of the noise made by the multitude of Dancers. Notwithstanding, Baronius places the Dedication of this Statue on the year of Christ 404. But in regard Marcellinus Comes, in his Chronicon does in express Words place it on the Consulate of Theodosius Junior and Rumoris, I judge it more safe to follow his opinion; provided it be said to have been made after the Synod at Quercum, and after Chrysostome's first condemnation, that is, about the close of the year 403. And this is confirmed by Socrates: For he adds a little after, that when the Nativity of our Lord drew near, Arcadius gave Johannes notice, that he could not come to the Church. Now Johann was deposed a little before Easter, in the Year of Christ 404. Valef. * Παύλῳ ἡγουμένῳ ὑμῶν, καὶ ἡγουμένῳ ἡμεῶν, καὶ ἡγουμένῳ ἡμεῶν, καὶ ἡγουμένῳ ἡμεῶν, &c. This Homily occurs at Tom. 7. pag. 545. of Sir Henry Savill's Edition of Chrysostome.

(b) This Eriso seems to be a different Person from Briso the Bishop, (who (as Cedrenus tells us) was one of John Chrysostome's Scholars. And Socrates seems to have put Philippi instead of Philippopolis. For Philippopolis is an eminent City of Thracia. But Philippi is a City of Macedonia. Valef.

these words,] (c) But they were the more in number, O Johannes ! who condemned you in the Synod. Again, when Johannes urged, that this (c) Canon was not a Canon of the Catholic Church, (b) but of the Arians making ; (for the Bishops at the year of the Christ 404.) * See Socrast. Book
2.chap.10.
heretofore, convened at Amioch in order to the subversion of the Homœo-sian Faith, out of their hatred to A-rhanasius made that Canon : [Leon-tius and his Party] rejected his defence, and pronounced sentence against him ; not considering, that by making use of that Canon, (c) they deposed Arhanasius also. These things were transacted at the approach of the Feast of Easter.

ned Johannes; of which twenty nine were Egyptians, the rest were of divers Provinces, as Theodorus (in Palladius, in his Dialogue concerning the Life of Chrysostome;) relates from the Acts of the Synod at the Oak. But who he was afterwards recalled to Constantinople, he had been admitted to Communion by fifty five Bishops. Either therefore Socrates must necessarily be mistaken, who has said that Chrysostome was condemned by more Bishops, than those by whom he had been admitted to Communion and reformed; or else it must be said that Palladius is out. Unless any one will reconcile these things by saying that, viz. that Leontius the Bishop has here reckoned the suffrages of the Bishops together, who had condemned Johann Chrysostome in both Synods, as well that held at the Oak, as the other assembled at Constantinople. For although, at such time as Leontius spake these Words, the Bishops present in the Constantinopolitane Synod had not pronounced Sentence against Chrysostome, yet Leontius, who knew they were incensed against Chrysostome, made not the least doubt of their Suffrages. Vale.

(d) Palladius tells us, that this very answer was given by John Chrysostome's defenders, against the Canon of the Antiochian Synod; and to wit, that that Canon was made by the Arian Bishops. But Chrysostome's Adversaries rejected this defence, asserting that Canon to have been made by the Catholic Bishops. And when Epiphanius, a Bishop of Chrysostome's party, urged them to subscribe that draught of the Creed then promulged by those Bishops; they answered in presence of the Emperor, that they were ready to subscribe it, but they put off that business to another time. Therefore, what must we determine concerning this question? Athanasius indeed, in his Book de Synodis, does wholly reject that Antiochian Synod, together with its draught of the Creed, as having been held by the Arians with a design to subvert the Nicene Creed. But to Athanasius (who cannot be a sufficient Witness in his own case,) we in the first place oppose Hilarius, then Pope Julius, and lastly, all the Eastern and Western Bishops, who have now at length by a general consent admitted of that Synod. Hilarius, ('t is certain, (in his Book de Synodis)) does fully admit of it, and commands that form of the Creed drawn up there, as being useful and necessary, on account of the Heresies which sprang up after the Nicene Council. Moreover, Pope Julius wrote a Synodical Epistle to all the Bishops who had been convened in that Synod <sup>1</sup> amongst whom were Ephesus, Narcissus, Theodorus, and Otarius. Which Synodical Epistle Athanasius does record intact, at pag. 739, &c. Tome 1. Edit. Paris. 1626. In the Title and Body of that Letter, Julius terms them Beloved Brethren; which undoubtedly he would never have done, had he looked upon them to have been Arians. Now, what reason had he to look upon them to be Arians, who as yet had not been condemned by the sentence of any Synod; and amongst whom there were many stiff maintainers of the Nicene Creed, which Baronius himself does not deny? Of which sort was Anastase Bishop of Gadesse in Gappadocia, whom Julius names in the first place concerning whose praises Basil the Great has a peculiar Epistle extant. Lastly, all the Easterns have acknowledged that Synod to be Catholic, and inserted its Sentences into the Book of Canons, soon after John Chrysostome's times, as appears from the Chalcedon Council. And at length the Western Church has by degrees admitted of those Canons, rendered into Latin by Dionysius Exiguus. Notwithstanding, in John Chrysostome's times, they were rejected, in regard they were not received by a general consent of the whole Church, nor as yet admitted by the Romish Church. Pope Innocentius, in his Epistle to the Constantinopolitan Church, (which Soxomen has recorded, Book 8. Chap. 26.) does in no wise admit of these Canons. Valer.

(e) Chlorophyllus supposed that these Words were spoken by Socrates concerning the Bishops convened in the Antiochian Synod. But he thinks they are to be understood concerning the Bishops then assembled at Constantinople against John Chrysostom. And in this sense Epiphanius Scolasticus and Ormsluc took this place: For Epiphanius has rendered it thus, Non intelligentes, quod dum haec regula vertitur, Athanasium quoque deponerent; not understanding, that whilſt they make uſe of this Canon, they depoſed Athanaſius alſo; and Miſculus has tranſlated it happily after this manner: Ne cogitantes, non Johanneſem ſe modo, ſed & ipſum Athanaſium hoc Canone uſentes deponere, nor but even Athanaſius himſelf. Valeſ.

The Emperor therefore gives Johannes notice, that (f) he should not come to the Church, because two Synodshad condemned him. Wherefore Johannes desisted in future, and went not any more to the Church. On which account those of his Party left the Church immediately, and celebrated Easter in the publick Baths termed Constantiane. There were with them many Bishops, Presbyters and others of the Ecclesiastick Function; who were termed Johannite, because from that time they held Meetings in several places apart by themselves. Johannes appeared not at all in publick for the space of two months, till such time as the Emperor issued out an Order for his being carried away into Exile. By virtue whereof he was drawn out of the Church, and convey'd into Banishment. On which very day some of the Johannite set the Church on fire. Whilst that was burning, an Easterly Wind blew, which conveyed the Fire to the (g) Senate-house, whereby that was burnt. This hapned on the twentieth of June, in Honorius's sixth Consulate, which he bore with Ariftenetus. Moreover, what mischiefs the Praefect of Constantimpe (whose name was (b) Optatus, an Heathen as to his Religion, and therefore an hater of the Christians) did to Johannes's Friends upon account of this Fire, and how he destroyed many of them by a capital punishment, I think fit to omit.

before in this chapter : where he relates, that Arcadius at the approach of Christmas, gave Fohn notice, that he could not come into the Church, unless Fohn (who had been condemned by the sentence of a Synod,) should first clear himself. After the same manner therefore, at the approach of Easter, Arcadius gives Fohn notice, that he could not go to the Church, as long as Fohn, condemned now by two Synods, resided therein. Vale!

(g) This Edifice was called the Senate-house. The author of its Alexandrian Chronicle, at the sixth Consulate of Honorius in which he bore with Aspurgantia, has these words: ἡ ἀρχαία τῆς βουλῆς καὶ τοῦ κράτους καὶ νεκρῶν τῶν διῶν ἡ ἀρχαία βουλευτικὴ ἡ καὶ τοῦ κράτους καὶ νεκρῶν τῶν διῶν. And on a sudden the Great Church was burnt together with the Senate-house, [freed] by those who held it, termed the Xylocrotes, on the second day, at the sixth hour. See Chronic. Alexand. 144. 145. 146. 147. 148. 149. 150. 151. 152. 153. 154. 155. 156. 157. 158. 159. 160. 161. 162. 163. 164. 165. 166. 167. 168. 169. 170. 171. 172. 173. 174. 175. 176. 177. 178. 179. 180. 181. 182. 183. 184. 185. 186. 187. 188. 189. 190. 191. 192. 193. 194. 195. 196. 197. 198. 199. 200. 201. 202. 203. 204. 205. 206. 207. 208. 209. 210. 211. 212. 213. 214. 215. 216. 217. 218. 219. 220. 221. 222. 223. 224. 225. 226. 227. 228. 229. 230. 231. 232. 233. 234. 235. 236. 237. 238. 239. 240. 241. 242. 243. 244. 245. 246. 247. 248. 249. 250. 251. 252. 253. 254. 255. 256. 257. 258. 259. 260. 261. 262. 263. 264. 265. 266. 267. 268. 269. 270. 271. 272. 273. 274. 275. 276. 277. 278. 279. 280. 281. 282. 283. 284. 285. 286. 287. 288. 289. 290. 291. 292. 293. 294. 295. 296. 297. 298. 299. 300. 301. 302. 303. 304. 305. 306. 307. 308. 309. 310. 311. 312. 313. 314. 315. 316. 317. 318. 319. 320. 321. 322. 323. 324. 325. 326. 327. 328. 329. 330. 331. 332. 333. 334. 335. 336. 337. 338. 339. 340. 341. 342. 343. 344. 345. 346. 347. 348. 349. 350. 351. 352. 353. 354. 355. 356. 357. 358. 359. 360. 361. 362. 363. 364. 365. 366. 367. 368. 369. 370. 371. 372. 373. 374. 375. 376. 377. 378. 379. 380. 381. 382. 383. 384. 385. 386. 387. 388. 389. 390. 391. 392. 393. 394. 395. 396. 397. 398. 399. 400. 401. 402. 403. 404. 405. 406. 407. 408. 409. 410. 411. 412. 413. 414. 415. 416. 417. 418. 419. 420. 421. 422. 423. 424. 425. 426. 427. 428. 429. 430. 431. 432. 433. 434. 435. 436. 437. 438. 439. 440. 441. 442. 443. 444. 445. 446. 447. 448. 449. 450. 451. 452. 453. 454. 455. 456. 457. 458. 459. 460. 461. 462. 463. 464. 465. 466. 467. 468. 469. 470. 471. 472. 473. 474. 475. 476. 477. 478. 479. 480. 481. 482. 483. 484. 485. 486. 487. 488. 489. 490. 491. 492. 493. 494. 495. 496. 497. 498. 499. 500. 501. 502. 503. 504. 505. 506. 507. 508. 509. 510. 511. 512. 513. 514. 515. 516. 517. 518. 519. 520. 521. 522. 523. 524. 525. 526. 527. 528. 529. 530. 531. 532. 533. 534. 535. 536. 537. 538. 539. 540. 541. 542. 543. 544. 545. 546. 547. 548. 549. 550. 551. 552. 553. 554. 555. 556. 557. 558. 559. 560. 561. 562. 563. 564. 565. 566. 567. 568. 569. 570. 571. 572. 573. 574. 575. 576. 577. 578. 579. 580. 581. 582. 583. 584. 585. 586. 587. 588. 589. 590. 591. 592. 593. 594. 595. 596. 597. 598. 599. 600. 601. 602. 603. 604. 605. 606. 607. 608. 609. 610. 611. 612. 613. 614. 615. 616. 617. 618. 619. 620. 621. 622. 623. 624. 625. 626. 627. 628. 629. 630. 631. 632. 633. 634. 635. 636. 637. 638. 639. 640. 641. 642. 643. 644. 645. 646. 647. 648. 649. 650. 651. 652. 653. 654. 655. 656. 657. 658. 659. 660. 661. 662. 663. 664. 665. 666. 667. 668. 669. 670. 671. 672. 673. 674. 675. 676. 677. 678. 679. 680. 681. 682. 683. 684. 685. 686. 687. 688. 689. 690. 691. 692. 693. 694. 695. 696. 697. 698. 699. 700. 701. 702. 703. 704. 705. 706. 707. 708. 709. 710. 711. 712. 713. 714. 715. 716. 717. 718. 719. 720. 721. 722. 723. 724. 725. 726. 727. 728. 729. 730. 731. 732. 733. 734. 735. 736. 737. 738. 739. 740. 741. 742. 743. 744. 745. 746. 747. 748. 749. 750. 751. 752. 753. 754. 755. 756. 757. 758. 759. 760. 761. 762. 763. 764. 765. 766. 767. 768. 769. 770. 771. 772. 773. 774. 775. 776. 777. 778. 779. 780. 781. 782. 783. 784. 785. 786. 787. 788. 789. 790. 791. 792. 793. 794. 795. 796. 797. 798. 799. 800. 801. 802. 803. 804. 805. 806. 807. 808. 809. 810. 811. 812. 813. 814. 815. 816. 817. 818. 819. 820. 821. 822. 823. 824. 825. 826. 827. 828. 829. 830. 831. 832. 833. 834. 835. 836. 837. 838. 839. 840. 841. 842. 843. 844. 845. 846. 847. 848. 849. 850. 851. 852. 853. 854. 855. 856. 857. 858. 859. 860. 861. 862. 863. 864. 865. 866. 867. 868. 869. 870. 871. 872. 873. 874. 875. 876. 877. 878. 879. 880. 881. 882. 883. 884. 885. 886. 887. 888. 889. 890. 891. 892. 893. 894. 895. 896. 897. 898. 899. 900. 901. 902. 903. 904. 905. 906. 907. 908. 909. 910. 911. 912. 913. 914. 915. 91

(b) This (if I mistake not) is the Manichean and Sempagau Prefect of the City, who, at the dedication of Eudoxia's Statue, had mocked the Christians, as we have related before (see Note (a) in this chapter,) from Theophrastus. Palladius (in the Life of Chrysostom) speaks concerning the same Optatus; that when he was Prefect of the City, he compelled the Noble Matrons either to communicate with Arctius, who had been put into Sebus Chrysostom's Bishopric, or else to pay two hundred pounds of Gold into the Exchequer. Valef.

CHAPTER XIX.

Concerning Arfacius, who was ordained Johannes'; Successor, and concerning Cyrinus [Bishop] of Chalcedon.

Some few days after, Arsacius is ordained Bishop of Constantinople; he was Brother to Nestarius, who had been Johannes's Predecessor in that Bishoprick, and had governed it well: but he was very aged. For he was above eighty years old. During his calm and peaceable presidency over that Bishoprick, by reason of his singular mildness, Cyrimus Bishop of Chalcedon, * whose foot Maruthas Bishop of Meſopotamia had unawares trod upon, was in so very ill a condition, that his foot putrified, and he was forced to have it cut off. Nor was this amputation performed once only, but it was many times iterated. For † the Gangrene preyed upon his whole * See chap. 15.

† Or, the

* See chap. 15.

+ Or, the distemper.

Arcadius
and Honorius.

Chap. 15.

+ See the close of the foregoing
Chapter.

body, in so much that it seized his other foot, which he was forced to have cut off also. I have mention'd this thing for this reason, in regard many persons did affirm, that Cyrinus suffered all this on account of the opprobrious words he had spoken against Johannes; for he frequently termed him an inexorable person, as I have said before. And because [about the same time] their fell an hail, [the stones whereof were] of a vast bigness, at Constantinople and in the Suburbs round that City; (which hapned in the fore-mention'd Consulate, about the thirtieth of September :) this was said to have been an act of Divine vengeance for Johannes's unjust deposition. These reports had more of credit given to them, and were improved by the Emperors death, which hapned soon after. For she ended her life on the fourth day after the hail fell. Others affirmed, that Johannes was deservedly deposed, because, when he was in Asia and Lydia, he had seized upon many Churches belonging to the Novatianists, Quartodecimani, and some other [Hereticks, to wit,] at such time as he made a journey to Ephesus on account of Heraclides's Ordination. But, whether Johannes's deposition were just, agreeable to their saying who were incensed against him; or whether Cyrinus underwent a due punishment for his reproachful language; and whether the hail fell, and the Emperors died, upon Johannes's account; or whether these things hapned for other reasons, or for both, God knows, who is the Discerner of things secret, and the just Judge of Truth it self. I have recorded what the common reports of men were at that time.

C H A P. XX.

How, after Arsacius, Atticus obtained the Constantinopolitan See.

BUT Arsacius did not long survive his taking the Bishoprick: For, on the following Consulate, which was Stillicon's second, and Antemius's first, about the eleventh of November he died. Many persons being exceedingly desirous of obtaining the Bishoprick, and for that reason much time having been spent, on the following Consulate, which was Arcadius's sixth, and Probus's first, a religious person was promoted to the Bishoprick, his name Atticus. By original extract he was of Sebastia in Armenia, but had followed an Aseetic course of life from his younger years; and, besides his being furnished with a competency of Learning, he was endowed with a greater degree of natural prudence. But I shall speak concerning this person hereafter.

C H A P. XXI.

Concerning Johannes's departure to the Lord in exile.

JOHANNES being carried into banishment, died at Comana upon the Euxine Sea, the fourteenth of (a) September, in the following Con-

(a) Instead of [November,] it must be [September,] as it is in the Sfortian M. S. and in Epiphanius Scholasticus's Version. Nor did Nicephorus read otherwise, who adds, that the day whereon Johann Chrysostome died, was dedicated to the Exaltation of the Holy Cross. For so it was agreeable, that he who had passed his whole life under the Cross, and had gloried in nothing but in the Cross of his Lord, should be loosed from the Frame of his body on that Festival, as the same Nicephorus does elegantly write. Valef.

fulate, which was Honorius's his seventh and Theodosius's second. He was a person (as I have said before) by reason of his zeal for Temperance, more addicted to anger than bashfulness; and because of his sanctity of life, he always made use of too great a liberty of speech. But it is to me a wonder, how he, who was so zealous a follower of Temperance, should teach in his Sermons, that Temperance was to be contempt'd. For, whereas the Synod of Bishops allowed Repentance but once to those who lapsed after Baptism, he was so bold as to say, [ (b) although] you have repented a thousand times, approach. For which doctrine many of his acquaintance rebuked him; but more especially Sifinnius was said Bishop of the Novatianists: who wrote a Book against this saying [of Chrysostome's,] and reproved him sharply for it. But, these things hapned long before this time.

He had little reason to question Socrates's authority, because he lived in the same times, and could have heard the Sermons, as well of Chrysostome, as of Sifinnius Bishop of the Novatians. Moreover, it may be more certainly concluded from this passage, than from any other, that Socrates was a Novatianist. For he does both put an ill interpretation upon Chrysostome's saying, and also openly favours Sifinnius Bishop of the Novatian party, against Johann Chrysostome. You must know further, that this saying was objected to Chrysostome by Bishop Nacian in the synod ad Quercum; because he gave Sinners a liberty, in regard he taught, if you have sinned again, repent again. And, as often as you sin, come to me and I will heal you. Valef.

C H A P. XXII.

Concerning Sifinnius Bishop of the Novatianists, what expressions he is said to have used in his discourses with Johannes.

BUT, I judge it not inopportune, to speak something briefly concerning Sifinnius. He was (as I have often said) an eloquent person, and an excellent Philosopher: But in a more especial manner he had taken pains about Logic, and was incomparably well versed in interpreting the Sacred Scriptures: In so much that Eunomius the Heretick would [out of fear] frequently avoid his judicious and powerful acuteness in discourse. His diet was not slender. But though he was eminently temperate, yet his Fare was sumptuous and magnificent. His way of living was splendid and delicate, [he was clad] in a white garment, and bathed himself twice a day in the publick Baths. Being one time asked by one, why he that was a Bishop would bathe twice a day; his answer was, because I cannot bathe thrice. At another time, when out of respect he went to give Arsacius the Bishop a visit, he was asked by one of those about Arsacius, why he would wear a garment misbecoming a Bishop? And where it was written, that a Priest should be clothed in a white garment? His answer was, Tell me first where it is written, that a Bishop should wear a black garment? And when he that asked him, was in doubt [how to return answer] to this contrary question, Sifinnius added; You, said he, can never shew that a Priest ought to wear black. But Solomon is my Author, whose words are, * Let thy garments be white. And our Saviour in the Gospel, appeared clothed in a white garment. Moreover, Moses and Elias, wearing white garments, to the Apostles. Having with readiness said these and many other such words as these, he was greatly admired by those that were present. When Leontius Bishop of Ancyra in Galatia

Arcadius
and Honorius.
Chap. 9.(a) In what Homily this was said by Chry-ostome,
I cannot find. And yet we have little reason to question Socrates's authority,
because he lived in the same times,
and could have heard the Sermons,
as well of Chrysostome,
as of Sifinnius
Bishop of the Novatians.
Moreover,
it may be more certainly concluded from this passage,
than from any other, that Socrates was a Novatianist.
For he does both put an ill interpretation
upon Chrysostome's saying, and also openly favours Sifinnius
Bishop of the Novatian party, against Johann Chrysostome.
You must know further,
that this saying was objected to Chrysostome by Bishop Nacian
in the synod
ad Quercum;
because he gave Sinners a liberty,
in regard he taught, if you have sinned
again, repent
again. And,
as often as you sin, come to me and I will heal you.
Valef.* Ecclef.
9. 8.
† Luke 9.
be shewed
Moses and Elias, wearing white garments,
to the Apostles.
Having with readiness said these and many other such words as these, he was greatly admired
by those that were present.
When Leontius
Bishop of Ancyra
in Galatia

Arcadius and Severianus could not then bear Serapion's contempt; but immediately, even before cognizance had been taken of the Cause in a publick Synod; with an (a) Oath condemns Serapion, and not only [divests him] of the dignity of a Deacon, but excommunicates him also from the Church.

Johannes hearing this, took it very ill: But afterwards, when the business came under scrutiny before a Synod, and Serapion excused the fact, and averr'd that he saw him not, and also produced witnesses [in confirmation thereof;] the whole Synod of Bishops then convened pardon'd him, and entreated Severianus to admit of Serapion's excuse. But Johannes, the Bishop, that he might fully satisfy Severianus, removes Serapion, and suspends him from the * Office of a Deacon for a weeks space: although he used him as his Right Hand in all businesses, in regard he was a most acute and diligent person about Ecclesiastick Disputes and Answers. Notwithstanding, Severianus could not thus be prevailed with: but made it his whole business to get Serapion not only wholly degraded from his Diaconate, but excommunicated also. Johannes was sorely vexed hereat, went out of the Synod, and left the Bishops then present to determine the

* Or, the honour.

Cause, having spoken these words to them: Do Arcadius and Honorius, you inquire into the Cause, and make such a definitive Determination as you shall think fit. For I refuse to determine the difference between them. After Johannes had spoken these words, and was risen up, the whole Synod arose likewise, and left the Cause in the same state it was in, blaming Severianus rather, because he † acquiesced not in what had been said by Johannes the Bishop. But Johannes admitted not Severianus to a familiarity any more in future: but advised him to return into his own Country, signifying thus much to him: Severianus, (said he) 'tis not expedient, that the Diocess you are intrusted with should for so long a time continue unlook'd-after, and destitute of the presence of its Bishop. Wherefore, hasten your return to your Churches, and neglect not the Gift [which God hath bestowed] upon you. When Severianus had begun his Journey, the Empress Eudoxia, informed hereof, reproves Johannes, and causes Severianus to be forthwith recalled from Chalcedon in Bithynia. He came back immediately. But Johannes declined a Friendship with him, and could by no persons entreaty be prevailed upon: till such time as the Empress Eudoxia, in that Church called the Apollon, cast her Son Theodosius Junior, then a very young Child, before Johannes's knees, and having conjured him frequently by her Son, with much a-do perswaded him to admit of a Friendship with Severianus. After this manner therefore, || &c.

† Or, was not obedient to what, &c.

|| See chap. 11. at the latter end of it.

THE SEVENTH BOOK OF THE Ecclesiastical History

OF

SOCRATES SCHOLASTICUS.

CHAP. I.

That after the Emperor Arcadius's Death, (who left his Son Theodosius, then eight years old;) Anthemius the Prefect had the chief management of affairs in the Empire.

THE Emperor Arcadius having ended his Life on the First of May, in the Consulate of Basilius and Philippus; Honorius his Brother [still] govern'd the Western Empire: the Eastern was under the Government of his Son Theodosius Junior, at

* That is, Western Government of his Son Theodosius Junior, at that time eight years of age. Anthemius the Prefect of the Praetorium had the chief management of the publick affairs. He was Grandchild to that Philippus, * who in Constantinus's Reign ejected Paulus the Bishop, and introduced Macedonius into his See. (a) He encompassed Constantinus (Book 14. chap. 1.) relates that this Anthemius enlarged the Pomerium, [that is, a space about the Walls of a City or Town, as well within as without, which was not to be built upon] of the City Constantinople, demolished the old Walls, and built new ones towards the Continent, which (says he) are now standing: and that he finished the work with incredible swiftness; to wit, within the space of two months. For so Tender Agrippa relates, that is, Walls to the Landward, and not as Langus does, Brick-walls. But Nicephorus seems to be mistaken, who attributes that to Anthemius, which was done long after

* See Socrates Book 2. chap. 16. (a) Nicephorus

Wicer by Cyrus Præfett of Constantinople, (as Codrenus relates in his Chronicon), on the 26th year of Theodosius Junior. Further, I would very willingly expunge this whole Clause in our Socrates. For it disturbs the sense, and seems to have crept from the Margin into the Text. Vale!

Honorius and Theod. Jun. tinople with a great wall. Of all the men of his own times, he was accounted, and in reality was the most prudent person. He never did any thing without advice, but consulted with many of his acquaintance concerning what ought to be done ; chiefly, with (b) Troilus the Sophist, who, besides the (c) wisdom that was in him, was Anthemius's equal in political knowledge. Wherefore, almost all things were done with his chief-Troilus's advice.

affrinders, (as beſides Socrates) Syncius informs us in his Epiſtles to Troilus. Socrates mentions the ſame Troilus, at Chap. 6. Book 6. where he ſpeaks concerning Eufebius Scholaſticus, who wrote Gain's War in Perſe. Suidas has mentioned the ſame Perſon, in the Word Τρωϊλος, where he affirms that he wrote Politick Oraſions, and Books of Epiſtles. Valeſ.

(c) Instead of [εὐλίας, friendship] the reading in the Florentine M.S. is truer, thus, [σοφίας, wisdom]. Which Emendation is confirmed by Nicephorus. Valef. Valefius (in his accounts of the Life and Writings of Socrates and Szozomen) reads σοφιστίας, Philosophy, which alteration in the reading he makes in his Appendix to his Notes on Socrates and Szozomen.

CHAP. II.

Concerning Atticus Bishop of Constantinople, what manner of person he was as to his Temper and Disposition.

During therefore the Emperors being in the eighth year of his age, Atticus was in the third year of his Episcopate over Constantinople, and was highly eminent. He was a person (as we have said * before) besides his great Learning, pious and prudent. Wherefore, he much augmented the Churches under his jurisdiction. For he did not only defended those of his own Creed, but cauled the Hereticks also to admire his prudence. He was in no wise vexatious to them ; but when he had attempted to terrifie them, afterwards he shewed himself mild towards them. Nor was he careless about his studies : For he bestowed much pains in reading ancient Writers, spending whole nights in perusing them. Wherefore he was not unacquainted with the Discourses of the Philosophers and Sophists. Moreover, to those that address to him, he was pleasant and delectable : He groaned with such as were sorrowful; and, that I may speak summarily, he was a Pharisee and a Prophet. * He was

* Book 6.
chap. 20.

* 1 Cor. 9.
22.

Or, without premeditation.

CHAPTER III.

Concerning Theodosius and Agapetus Bishops of Synnada.

[illegible]

ΔΙΑΥΑΝΔΙΜΟΝ CΤΝΑCΙC.

This Coyu was in the Archibus of that illustrious personage the Lord Breyntien, concerning the meaning whereof when I was asked by the Learned Franciscus Ogerius, (to whom Patinus had communicated that Coyu), my answer was; It was to be read thus, His wardus quoades. For the Symmedanijs worshipped Jupiter under the name of Pandemos, because having heretofore been gathered together out of many sorts of people in Greece, by Acamas, Theseus's son, they inhabited the City Synada. Whence says Stephanus, the City was so named, ὡς ἐκ πολλοῦ λαοῦ, ἀπὸ τῶν ἀλλοτρίων. Further, those people out of whom the Colony of the Symmedanijs was first collected, were of two sorts; to wit, the Macedonians, and the Athenians, or Ionians, who were in Asia; as the same Stephanus relates. Whence we understand, why (in the Emperor Caracalla's Coyu, which Johnes Trifolius has set forth), the Symmedanijs; are termed Dorians and Ionians. For, this is the inscription, ὡς ἐκ πολλοῦ λαοῦ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀλλοτρίων. For the Macedonians, a Colony whereof Acamas brought thither, were originally Dorians. But the Athenians who went thither with Athen Theseus's son, and the Colonies which Acamas is reported to have pitched out of Asia, were Ionians, so termed from Ion the Athenian. Val-

(b) It is a famous question, and usually disputed on both sides, whether it be lawful for Catholics, especially Bishops, to persecute Heretics. In the determination whereof, I am of opinion, that a distinction is requisite. For this certain, that on account of clanking Money together it is not lawful for Catholics to molest and vex Heretics; which thing Theodosius Bishop of Synnada at that time did. Also, to persecute them by criminal sentences, and to strip their blood, is in like manner unlawful; as Iulian and some other Prelates of Spain did in their persecution of the Prisillianists. To whose communion when St. Martin had for some time joined himself, he acknowledged that great detriment befell him from that thing; as Sulpicius Severus does relate in his Life. Notwithstanding, it is and always was lawful for Catholics, to impute the aid of Princes and Magistrates against Heretics, that they be restrained, kept within the bounds of duty; lest they should behave themselves insolently over the Catholics, or lest they should inquit over and look at the Catholic Religion. St. Augustine confesses indeed, that therefore this was his sentiment, to wit, that Heretics were not to be molested and vexed by Catholics, but that they were to be invited by all influences of manurance and mercy. But afterwards he altered his opinion, thinking most certainly informed, that the Laws of Princes made against Heretics, are useful to Heretics themselves in their Conversion. And he says this was acknowledged by the Donatists themselves, who had afterwards returned to the Catholic Church. For they affirmed, that they had never returned to the Church, but had always continued in their error, had they not been provoked and drawn as it were by those Penalties and Molds contained in the Imperial Laws. There is a most elegant passage of Augustine's [about this matter] in his 48th Epistle to Vincentius; to which is to be added another passage of the same Author, in his 9th Book against Gaudentius, chap. 23. Vale!

(c) ΔΙΑΚΟΝΕΙΣ ἡ αὐτῶν μεροειδένως. That is, he drew and bound them as it were to judges tribunals. Traitors thought these words were spoken concerning Bonds, as if Theodosius the Bishop had brought the Heretics bound before the Judges. In which sense Nicetas also took this passage. But Sozomen's words will not bear this meaning Vals.

clit's

Honorary
and Theod. Jun.

ture. More especially, he did several ways disquiet their Bishop, whose name was Agapetus. But in regard the Governours of Provinces in no wife had (as he supposes) a sufficient power to punish [Hereticks,] he ran to Constantinople, and petition'd for Edicts from the Prefectus Prætorii. In the interim therefore that Theo-

(1) Instead of [ἀποφασισμὸς madness] Nicephorus and Crisostomus, read [ἐκ τῆς course, device, or purpose :] with which reading am best pleased. Vale!.

(c) We read [ταπεινότητος, unguity,] agreeable to the reading in Epiphanius, Scholasticus, and Nicephorus. The other reading is μεγαλότητος, contrary to reason, or unexpected. Vales.

CHAP. IV.

Concerning the Paralytical Jew, who was cured by Atticus the Bishop in Divine Baptism.

THIS was one useful accident which befel the Church in the times of Atticus. Nor was the state of these times without Miracles, or Cures. For a Jew, who had been a Paralytick for many years, was confined to his Bed. And when all medicinal Remedies had been applied to him, and no prayers of the Jews could do him any good; at length he betook himself to Christian Baptism, hoping that this would be his only true and salutary Physician. Atticus the Bishop was soon acquainted herewith. Having therefore instructed him in the Rudiments of Christianity, and declared to him the hope in Christ, he ordered him to be carried in his Bed to the Font. The Paralytick Jew receiving Baptism with a sincere Faith, immediately upon his being taken out of the Water in the Font, was freed from his Disease, and continued sound and healthy in future. This [admirable] Cure, the power of Christ vouchsafed to shew to men even in our times: by reason whereof many Heathens believed and were baptized. But the Jews, although they seek after Signs, notwithstanding could not be induced [to believe,] by present Miracles. Such benefits as these were conferred upon men by Christ.

- Trouble with the Pulse.

CHAP. V.

How Sabbatius, who from being a Jew had been made a Presbyter of the Novatianists, deserted those of his own Opinion.

BUt many persons flight these things, persisted in their Impiety. For the Jews did not only disbelieve these Miracles which hapned; but such persons also as were studious followers of them, were found to hold the same Sentiments they did. For Sabbatius, of whom we have made mention a little * before, not willing to continue in the degree of a Presbyter to which he had been promoted, but being from the beginning ambitious of a Bishoprick, in these times separated from the Church of the Novatianists, making the observance of the Jewish Passover his pretence. Holding therefore As-semblies that were schismatical and separate from his own Bishop Sifinnius, in a place of the City which is termed Xerolophus, where Arcadius's Forum now is, he attempted an audacious fact * that deserved many punishments. For, on one of his Meeting-days, he read a passage in the Gospel, whereat these words occur, † Now it was a feast of many dangers.
called the Passover of the Jews; to which he made an addition of his own, that was never written,
 nor ever heard of before; to wit, these words,
Cursed (says he) be that person who celebrates the Passover (a) not on the days of unleavened bread. (a) Ege-rephus *like not the version of Langus
 and Christianophorus,
 who have rendered this place
 thus: maledictus
 qui ab his azimis pascha celebrat.*
*These words of his being heard, spread immediately. And the simpler sort of the Novatian Laity, circumvented by this artifice, betook themselves to him. But his fraud proved un successful to himself: and his forgery had an unhappy event: for not long after (b) he celebrated the Festival by way of Anticipation, when many persons flock'd to him. And whilst they were keeping the (c) Solemn Vigils by watching all night in the Church, a Demoniacal terror seized them; as if Sifinnius their Bishop was come with a great multitude, [to fall] upon them. Hereupon a disturbance was raised, as it usually happens, and they being shut by night in a strait place, trod upon one another:
 in so much that above seventy persons of them lost their lives. For this reason many deserted Sabbatius. Notwithstanding, some possessed with a * rude anticipate opinion, continued with him. But how Sabbatius violated his Oath, and got into a Bishoprick, we will declare by and by.
 *Or, Rustic, or,
 Clownish.
 † See Luke
 22. 1.*

*Or, Ru-ed Bread- stick, or, In my Glownish. judgment it must be rendred
thus, be-
For in the Greek it which imports beyond

(6) The  $\alpha\epsilon\gamma\lambda\iota\sigma\mu\epsilon\varsigma$   $\epsilon\sigma\tau\epsilon\tau\alpha\iota$   $\epsilon\tau\epsilon\tau\iota\mu\epsilon\tau\alpha\iota$ . Which Langus and Christophorus render anticipa. Cum ex anticipa opinione Festum Pasche celebratur, ante celebratur the Paschal Festival by an anticipated opinion. I like Anticipationis Verrius better, who translates it thus: per anticipationem celebratur, be celebrated [the Festival] by way of anticipation. For Sabbatum celebrating the Paschal solemnity after the Jewish manner, prevented the Christians, and kept that Festival before the Sunday. If these Words are thus to be understood; it must be written,  $\alpha\upsilon\tau\epsilon\gamma\lambda\iota\sigma\mu\epsilon\varsigma$   $\epsilon\sigma\tau\epsilon\tau\alpha\iota$   $\alpha\epsilon\gamma\lambda\iota\sigma\mu\epsilon\varsigma$ . Sorater uses the same term a little lower in this Chapter; where speaking concerning the same thing, his words are:  $\tau\eta\iota$   $\alpha\epsilon\gamma\lambda\iota\sigma\mu\epsilon\varsigma$   $\alpha\epsilon\gamma\lambda\iota\sigma\mu\epsilon\varsigma$   $\kappa\epsilon\gamma\lambda\iota\sigma\mu\epsilon\varsigma$ , posset with a rudè anticipa opinion. Where notwithstanding,  $\alpha\epsilon\gamma\lambda\iota\sigma\mu\epsilon\varsigma$  seems to be taken for an anticipate opinion. Valef.

(c) I understand The Vigil of the Paschal Festival. Nor can it be your pascha, or any other than the Vigil of the Paschal Festival. For Sabbaths (although he celebrated Easter, and celebrated it with the Jews yet) kept the Vigils on the Paschal Sabbath with the rest of the Christians; with whom also he celebrated Easter-day in a dissimbling and negligent manner, as Socrates has related before, in Book 5, chap. 21. And thus this passage in Socrates was understood by Nicéphorus, whose Words his Translator hath not rendered well.

g * Book. 5-
chip. 21.

S κινδύνον
 ἔξω, worthy of many dangers.
 † See Luke
 12: 32.

words are these : τὴν δὲ ἐκκλησίαν πανοικίαν τὸν ἀρχιεπίσκοπον ἡγεῖν δεσπορεῖσθαι, &c. Which are to be translated thus, But in regard they celebrated the solemn Vigil with a congruous worship merely for fashion's sake, &c. Moreover, why Sabbatists (although he followed the Jews in the observance of Easter, notwithstanding) would feign a celebration of Easter with the Christians, this in my judgment is therefor ; because he feared the Laws of the Emperors who had made a Sanction that they should be accounted Hereticks, who kept not Easter on one and the same day with all other Christians. This was the command of the Emperor Theodosius, in the ninth Law of the Theodosian Code de Hereticis. Valef.

Honorius and Theod. Jun.

C H A P. VI.

Concerning those who at that time were the Ring-leaders of the Arian Opinion.

DOrotheus Bishop of the Arian Heresie (who had been translated by the Arians from Antioch to Constantinople, as we have related * before,) having lived an hundred and nineteen years, died in Honorius's seventh and Theodosius Augustus's second Consulate, on the sixth of November. After this person Barba presided over the Arian Sect : In whose time the Arian Heresie was very happy in having two eloquent Men, both whom were dignified with a Presbyterate. The name of the one was Timotheus ; the other was called Georgius. Georgius was furnish'd with more of Grecian Literature : but Timotheus had bestow'd greater pains about the Sacred Scriptures. Moreover, Georgius had Aristotle's and Plato's Books always in his hands ; but Timotheus was an admirer of Origen : And in his Expositions of the Sacred Scriptures in publick, he [shew'd himself] not to be unskilled in the Hebrew Tongue. Timotheus had formerly been an Adherent to the Sect of the P[er]sathyrani. But Georgius had been ordained by Barba. I my self discours'd with this Timotheus, and evidently perceiv'd how ready and expedite he was in returning answers to those who question'd him, and in explaining the most obscure places which occur in the Sacred Scriptures. He always quoted Origen as a most evident Witness of what he asserted. I cannot therefore but wonder, how these two persons should persist [in their adherence] to Arianism ; the one of whom had Plato always in his hand ; and the other had Origen in his mouth. For neither does Plato assert, that the second and third Cause (as he usually terms them) took a beginning of Existence. And Origen every where acknowledges the Son to be co-eternal with the Father. But, tho' they continued in their own Church, yet the Arian Heresie was by them reduced to a better and more moderate temper. For by their own Doctrine they banish'd many of Arius's Blasphemies. But thus far concerning these persons. Not long after this, Sissinius Bishop of the Novatianists died, in the same Consulate, and Chrysanthus is ordained, concerning whom we shall speak hereafter.

C H A P. VII.

How Cyrillus succeeded Theophilus Bishop of Alexandria.

SOME little time after this, Theophilus Bishop of Alexandria fell into a * Lethargick distemper, and died in Honorius's ninth and Theodosius's fifth Consulate, on the fifteenth of the month October. And a contention being rais'd there also about the Bishoprick, some endeavour'd to place Timo-theus the Arch-deacon in the Episcopal Chair ; and others Cyrillus, (a) who was Theophilus's Sister's Son. When a Sedition arose hereupon amongst the People, Abundantius Commander of the Militie [in Egypt] favour'd Timotheus's Party. Wherefore, on the third day after Theophilus's death, Cyrillus was placed in the Chair, and came to the Bishoprick with a greater power than Theophilus had done : For from that time, the Bishops of Alexandria (b) surpassing the Sacerdotal degree and bounds, exercis'd a Principality, and took upon them the [Secular] Government of Affairs. Cyrillus therefore forthwith shut up the Churches of the Novatianists at Alexandria, and in the first place he took away all their sacred Vessels and Ornaments ; after which he deprived their Bishop Theopemptus of all he had. (c) phelus was Cyrillus's Uncle by the Father's side ; his Words are, ὁ δὲ ἀδελφὸς τοῦ πατρὸς : Theodore terms him only ὁ ἀδελφός, Uncle. Whereas I rather believe he was Cyrillus's mother's brother. In Sequence there is mention of Theophilus's Sister. Eusebius Hieronymus and Epiphanius Scholasticus term Theophilus Cyrillus's Cousin-german ; which is ill done : But from thence 'tis clearly intimated, that Cyrillus was related to Theophilus by his Sister. Valef.

(b) Instead of [ἡγεῖν τὴν ἐκκλησίαν ὑπὲρ πάντων, from the Sacerdotal degree and order] it must doublets be [ἡγεῖν τὴν, &c. surpassing [or beyond] the Sacerdotal, &c.] according as Sir Henry Savill had noted at the margin of his Copy from Christophorus's Book. Notwithstanding both Translators have followed the common reading, which is not to be endured. Sozomen, 'tis certain, speaking concerning the same thing at chap. 11. of this Book, uses the Word ἡγεῖν : τὴν βασιλικὴν ἐκκλησίαν (says he) ὁ δὲ οὐλὸς τῆς Ἀλεξανδρινῆς ἡγεῖν ἡγεῖται, ἡ δὲ δυνάμεις ἀπὸ πάλαι ἀρχιεπισκοπῆς ; that is, The Roman Bishoprick, having (like that of Alexandria) surpass'd the Sacerdotal degree and bounds, and degenerated long before into a secular principality. Valef.

C H A P. VIII.

Concerning Maruthas Bishop of Mesopotamia, and how the Christian Religion was by him propagated in Persia.

ABOUT the very same time the Christian Religion hapnd to be propagated in Persia, upon this account. Between the Romans and Persians frequent Embassies are continually sent :

(a) for there are several reasons, why they should frequently send Embassies to one another. There hapnd therefore to be a necessity at that time, that Maruthas Bishop of Mesopotamia (whom we have mentioned a little * before) should be sent by the Roman Emperor to the King of the Persians. The Persian King having found that this person was endowed with an eminency of Piety, honoured him highly, and gave him attention, as being really and truly a Friend of God. The Magi, (b) whose interest is great with the Persian King, were incensed hereat. For they were afraid lest he should persuade the King to turn Christian. For Maruthas by his Prayers had cured the King of a Pain in his Head, wherewith he had been a long while troubled, which the Magi could not cure him of. Wherefore, the Magi betake themselves to the inventing of a fraudulent design. And whereas the Persians worship Fire, and the King was wont to adore a Fire which was always burning in a certain House, they hid a Man under Ground, whom (at such time as the King

(a) Instead of [ἡ δὲ ἀδελφὸς, &c. but there are several] it is better thus, ἡ δὲ ἀδελφὸς, &c. For there are several, &c. Valef.

(b) Instead of [ὅς ἐστιν ἀρχιεπίσκοπος, &c. who are numerous, &c.] it must undoubtedly be [ὅς ἐστιν ἀρχιεπίσκοπος, &c. whose interest is great with the Persian King.] Thus Nicephorus reads. Valef.

* Book 6 chap. 15. and 19.

* Or, a drouge disease.

Honorius and Theod. Jun. * Or, praised.

King usually * worshipped, they ordered to speak [to this effect:] that the King ought to be thrust out of doors; for he had done impiously, because he supposed a Priest of the Christians to be dear to God. Idigerdes (for that was the Persian King's name,) having heard these Words, altho' he revered Maruthas, notwithstanding, had thoughts of sending him away. But Maruthas, a Man truly acceptable to God, was very earnest in putting up his prayers, whereby he detected the fraud which the Magi had framed.] He addressed himself [therefore to the King in these words, Be not deluded, O King! But go into [the house], and when you shall hear the voice, dig up the ground, and you will discover the Fraud. For the fire speaks not, but the invention of men does this. The King of the Persians is persuaded by Maruthas, and goes into the little house again, * where fire is kept always burning. And when he had heard the same voice again, he order'd the place to be dug up where he that utter'd the words, which were supposed to be God's, was found. Therefore, the King was highly incensed, and gave order that the * Tribe of the Magi should be || decimated. After this was done, he spoke to Maruthas to build Churches wheresoever he pleased. From that time the Christian Religion was propagated amongst the Persians. Moreover, Maruthas having then left Persia, return'd to Constantinople. But, not long after he was sent Ambassador again to the Persians. And the Magi betook themselves to the invention of Plots and Intrigues again, to hinder his being admitted by the King. (c) For by a device they raised a most horrid stink in that place, (d) into which the King usually came; and the calumniously accused the Christians, as if they had caused it. But when the King, in regard he already had a suspicion of the Magi, made a more exact scrutiny about the occasioners [of this stink,] the Magi were found again to be the causes of this ill smell. Wherefore he punished many of them again: but he had a greater honour and esteem for Maruthas. And he loved the Romans, with whom he embraced a friendship. Yea, the King himself wanted but little of turning Christian, after Maruthas, together with (e) Abdas the Bishop of Persia, had shewed another * Miracle. For both these Persons, when they had fasted long, and been earnest in prayers, cast out a devil that vexed the King's Son. But Idigerdes, before he became a perfect Christian, was prevented by Death. His Kingdom devolved to his Son Varraanes: in whose time the League between the Romans and Persians was broken, as we shall declare hereafter.

* Or, where the unquenchable fire was.

* Or, Stork, or, Rake, || That is, every tenth man was to death.

(c) We read [Theophrastus] for by a device, &c.] not [Theophrastus] is, And by a device, &c.] Otherwise, a rejection of the same particle would be odious and unpleasant. Many errors in these particles are usually committed by Transcribers of Boet, whilst they write too hastily. Valef.

* Tryal, or, Expectation.

(d) Here we read αερόχρησται, instead of αερόχρησται. Valef.
(e) Epphramus Scholasticus calls this Bishop of Persia Ablaanes. Nicephorus terms him Abdas. In the Sforzian M.S. he is stiled Anidas. Valef.

CHAP. IX.

Who were Bishops of Antioch, and Rome at this time.

ABOUT the very same times, Flavianus died at Antioch, and was succeeded in that Bishoprick by Porphyrus. After Porphyrus, Alexander Presided over that Church. At Rome, Damasus having held that Bishoprick eighteen years, was succeeded by Siricius. After Siricius had presided there fifteen years, Anastasius governed that Church three years; and after Anastasius, Immacentius. He was the first that began to persecute the Novatianists at Rome, whom he deprived of many Churches.

Honorius and Theod. Jun.

CHAP. X.

That Rome became subject to the Barbarians at that time, and was destroyed by Alarichus.

AT that very time Rome hapned to be taken by the Barbarians. For one Alarichus a Barbarian, (who had been an Allie of the Romans, and had assisted the Emperor Theodosius in the War against the Tyrant Eugenius, on which account he was honoured with (a) Roman dignities,) could not bear his fortunate success, (Book 4.) relates, that Alarichus, after the expedition against the Tyrant Eugenius, wherein he had done excellent service, was Commander of no Roman Forces, but returned into Thracia, and kept with him those Barbarians only, whom he had commanded. But, a little afterwards, when being sent for by Aspinus, he had ruined Grecia and Epirus, he was created Master of the Stilice throughout Illyricum; as Claudian informs us in his second Book against Eutropius.

Vastator Aschius Gentis, & Epirum nuper populus inivit, Praefidit Illyris. Nam quos obsequit, amicus Ingreduiur muros, illis responsa daturus, Quorum conjugibus poritur, natiq;ue peremitt. Sic hostes pensare solent. — Valef.

He presumed not indeed to seize the Empire; but retired from Constantinople, and went into the Western parts. Being arriv'd in Illyricum, he laid all places desolate immediately. The Thessalians resisted him in his march, about the mouths of the River Peneus, from whence there is a pass * over the mountain Pindus to Nico * Or, pilus [a City] of Epirus. And coming to an engagement, the Thessalians killed about three thousand [of his Forces.] After this the Barbarians that were with him, burnt and ruined whatever was in their way, and in fine took Rome it self. Which City they destroyed, and burnt the greatest part (b) of the admirable works and structures therein: but they made plunder of the money, and divided it [amongst themselves.] They also forced many of the Senatorian Order to undergo various punishments, and [afterwards] slew them. [Alarichus] likewise, in contempt to Empire, proclaimed one Attilus Emperor. Whom he ordered to go guarded like an Emperor one day; and the next made him appear in a servile habit. After he had done all this, he fled, being terrified with a Rumor, as if the Emperor Theodosius had sent an Army to fight him. Nor was this Rumor false; For an Army did really come. And he was unable to bear the fame thereof; but, as I have said, fled away. 'Tis reported, that as he went to Rome, he was met by a pious Person that led a monastick life, who advised him not to rejoice in [perpetrating] so great and notorious mischiefs, nor to delight in slaughter and blood: To whom Alarichus made this return. I go not thither of my own accord. But some * thing does every day vex and disquiet me, * Or, some saying, go to Rome, and ruin that City. Thus body much concerning this Person.

(b) Instead of [Θαυματον ἔργων καταστροφῶν, of their admirable works and structures] I think it must be [τῶν θαυματον ἔργων καταστροφῶν, of the admirable works and structures therein:] Which reading we have expressed in our Version. Valef.

CHAP.

C H A P. XI.

Concerning the Bishop of Rome.

After Innocentius, Zosimus was possessor of the Churches at Rome, for the space of two years. After whom, Bonifacius presided over that Church three years, who was succeeded by Celestinus. And this Celestinus deprived the Novatianists also at Rome of their Churches, and forced their Bishop Rufinilla to hold his Meetings in private and obscure Houses. For till this time the Novatianists flourished mightily at Rome, had many Churches, and assembled numerous Congregations therein. But envy* impaired them also; the Roman Bishoprick, having (like that of Alexandria) surpassed the Sacerdotal Degree and Bounds, and degenerated long before into a Secular Principality. And for this reason the [Roman] Bishops would not permit, even those who agreed with them in the Faith, peaceably and quietly to celebrate their Meetings, but took from them all they had; only they praised them for their agreement in the Faith. Notwithstanding, the Constantinopolitan Bishops were not thus affected: for they not only permitted [the Novatianists] to have their Meetings within the City, but had a singular love and affection for them also, as I have sufficiently declared already.

C H A P. XII.

Concerning Chrysanthus Bishop of the Novatianists at Constantinople.

After Sisinnius's death, Chrysanthus was by force made Bishop. He was the Son of that Marcellinus, who had been Bishop of the Novatianists before Sisinnius. From his younger years he had had a military Employ in the Palace; afterwards, in the Reign of Theodosius the Great, he was made Consularis of Italy, and after that Vicarius of the Britannick Islands; for his management of both which Charges he was much admired. Being grown elderly, he returned to Constantinople; and desiring to be made Præfect of that City, he was against his will compelled to take the Bishoprick. For Sisinnius having mention'd him at the time of his death, as a fit person for the Bishoprick, the Novatian People, with whom Sisinnius's Words were a Law, attempted to draw him by force, even against his will. But when Chrysanthus fled, Sabbatius supposing an opportune season was offer'd him, wherein he might be made Possessor of the Churches, gets himself ordain'd Bishop for some obscure [ Prelates ] and slight Oath which he had bound himself in. Amongst those who ordain'd Sabbatius Bishop, Hermogenes was one, who had been excommunicated and cursed by Sabbatius, for his blasphemous Books. But Sabbatius's design proved unsuccessful to him: for the People hating* his unreasonable ambition, (because (a) he did all things with a design of getting into the Bishoprick,) made it their whole business to find out Chrysanthus.

* Or, his immorality.

(a) ὅτι πάντα ἃ ἐποίησε ἐποίησεν μετὰ σκοπόν. This expression is not in my judgment good Greek. Nicephorus in regard he lik'd it not, altered it thus: πάντα ἃ ἐποίησε ἐποίησεν μετὰ σκοπόν, he moved every rope to get into the Bishoprick. But in my mind, this place in Socrates is to be thus restored: ὅτι πάντα ἃ ἐποίησε ἐποίησεν μετὰ σκοπόν, because he did all things with a design of getting into the Bishoprick. Vale!

thus, Whom they found absconding in Bithynia, whence they brought him by force, and preferred him to the Bishoprick. He was a person of as great prudence and modesty, as any man was: and by his means the Church of the Novatianists at Constantinople was preserved and increased. He was the first person who distributed Gold* of his own to the Poor. He received nothing from the Churches, save only (b) two Loaves of bread for the Blessed Bread every Sunday. Moreover, he was so careful about his Church, that he took (c) Ablabius the eloquentest Orator of his own time, from Troilus the Sophists's School, and ordained him Presbyter: whose elegant and acute Sermons are now extant. But Ablabius was afterwards constituted Bishop of the Novatianist Church at Nicæa, in which City he taught Rhetorick at the same time also.

propera pecunie, of his own money. (b) The Loaves which the Faithful offered for a sacrifice, were termed the Loaves of Benediction, for so Dionysius Exiguus renders the 59th Canon of the Laodicean Council; ἵνα ἡ εὐχὰ τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος ἀπὸ τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος, ἡ ἡμεῖς ἐν τῇ εὐχῇ τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος, τὸν ἅγιον πνεῦμα ἔσμεν ἐν τῇ εὐχῇ τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος. The bread of Benediction ought not to be offered in Lent, except on the Sabbath and on Sunday only. Of these Loaves some were taken for the Eucharist: the rest were allotted for the food of the Clergy by the Bishop; who also took some of them himself, as much as he would, as we are informed from this place. You must note further, that Socrates says ὅτι οἱ ἁγιοὶ ἐκείνην, ἀπὸ τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν. For the Bishop, according to his own arbitrement, disposed of the Oblations of all the Churches, which were under his own jurisdiction. See Gelasius's Decretals, cap. 27. Vale!

(c) Ἀβλάβιον τὸν σοφιστὴν. Sir Henry Savil from Christophorus's Book, at the Margin of his own Copy, hath mented it thus, ὁ ἁγίου. Which reading Christophorus has followed. But in my judgment, it must be thus written, ὁ ἁγίου, &c. The best Orator of his own time, &c. The Scholars of the Sophists, who learned Rhetorick, were heretofore termed Rhetoricians. Notwithstanding, all the Sophists Scholars had not that appellation, but the eminentest of them only, who being initiated by a certain Rite, wore a Rhetorician's Pallium which was red or scarlet-coloured. We are informed hereof by Cyrillus in his Lexicon: ἡ ῥητορικὴ, ἡ ἐκκλησιαστικὴ τὴν τὴν ἁγίου πνεύματος ἐκκλησίαν. That is, Pallium's were certain Cloaks. Some [were worn] by Rhetoricians, which were red and scarlet-coloured: others, by Philosophers, which were of a dark-colour. This was the Badge, worn by them daily. But by what Rite Rhetoricians were wont to be made at Athens, Olympiodorus (in exerptis Historiarum apud Photium.) Gregory Nazianzen, and Eusebius do declare. Vale!

C H A P. XIII.

Concerning the Fight which hapned at Alexandria between the Christians and Jews, and concerning Cyrillus the Bishop's Difference with Orestes the Præfect.

About the same time the Jewish Nation were driven out of Alexandria by Cyrillus the Bishop, for this reason: The Alexandrians are more seditious and tumultuous than any other people; and if at any time they get an occasion, they [usually] break out into intolerable mischief: For their rage is not appeased without blood. It hapned at that time, that the Populace of that City were tumultuous amongst themselves, not upon any weighty or necessary occasion, but by reason of that mischief which abounds in all Cities, I mean an earnest desire of looking upon Dancers. For in regard a Dancer gathered great multitudes together on the Sabbath-day, because the Jews work not on that day, nor are busied in hearing their Law, but [spend their time in seeing] Theatrical Shows, that day usually occasion'd mutual Factions and Divisions among the People. And although this was in some measure regulated and repressed by the Præfect of Alexandria, nevertheless the Jews conti-

continued enraged against those of the contrary Faction: and besides their being always enemies to the Christians, they were much more incensed (a) against them on account of the Dancers. Therefore, when Orestes, Prefect of Alexandria (b) made a Police (so the Alexandrians do usually term public Orders,) in the Theatre; some of Bishop Cyrillus's Favourers were present there also, being desirous to know the Orders that were made by the Prefect. Amongst whom was a person, by name Hierax, a teacher of the (c) meaner sort of Learning.

Notwithstanding Nicephorus retains the common reading, Valef.

(b) Ἐπίσκοπος τῆς πόλεως Epiphanius Scholasticus was mistaken in thinking there was a Festival which the Alexandrians called Politia. Nor was Christopherfon left out, in supposing the publick Edicts of the Imperial Prefects to be so termed by the Alexandrians, which Orestes published then in the Theatre. In which he is doubly mistaken. First, because he thought that all the Imperial Edicts were by the Alexandrians called Politia; whereas, those Edicts only had that name, which belonged to the quiet and profit of the City. Agreeable whereto, those Orders made in respect to the prices of Corn and other vendible Commodities; usually exposed to sale in the Market, at Paris we now term in French a Police, and the Orders of Police. Secondly, Christopherfon mistakes in supposing that these Edicts were published by Orestes in the Theatre. For Socrates does not say so, but only that Orestes made, (that is, dictated, or rehearsed to his Officers) these Orders in the Theatre. For the Roman Magistrates were wont to sit in Judgment and decide Matters in the Law, in the Theatre, Circus, or in any other place they had a mind to. So Amm. Marcellinus relates (Book 15.) concerning Leonatius Prefect of the City. Moreover, the Orders then made by Orestes, respected the Theatre, and the publick shows. Valef.

(c) ἡ ἀκατάστατος (which are the terms here used,) do import the first Rudiments which Children learn. The teachers hereof are by the Greeks termed Grammatistæ, and by the Latines Literatores. Valef.

He was a zealous hearer of Cyrillus the Bishop, and always mighty diligent about raising the * Clippings at his Sermons. The Jewish multitude spying this Hierax in the Theatre, cried out immediately, that he came into the Theatre for nothing else, but to raise a sedition amongst the people. Moreover, Orestes had long before conceived an hatred against the Secular Government of Bishops, because it diminished much of their power who had been appointed Governours of Provinces by the Emperor; and also more especially, because Cyrillus was desirous of prying into his Acts and Orders. Having seized Hierax therefore, he made him undergo tortures publicly in the Theatre. With which Cyrillus being acquainted, sends for the chief of the Jews, and threatened them with condign punishment, unless they desisted from being tumultuous against the Christians. Of which menaces after the Jewish multitude were made sensible, they became more pertinacious; and contrived Plots to damnify the Christians. The chiefest of which designs of theirs, and which occasion'd their expulsion out of Alexandria, I will relate here. Having agreed upon a Sign amongst themselves, [which was,] that every one of them should wear a Ring on their fingers made of the bark of a Palm-tree-branch, they took a resolution of making an attack upon the Christians by a night-fight. One night therefore they sent some persons provided for that purpose, who cried out in all the || streets of the City, that Alexander's Church was on fire. The Christians hearing this, ran some one way, others another, that they might preserve the Church. Then the Jews fell upon them immediately, and slew them: they abstained from killing those of their own party, by shewing their Rings; but they murder'd all the Christians they hapned to meet with. When it was day, the Authors of this nefarious fact were not concealed. Cyrillus highly incensed hereat, went accompanied with a great multitude to the Jews Synagogues (so they term their Houses of Prayer) which he took from them: He also expelled the Jews out of the City, and permitted the multitude to make plunder of their Goods. The Jews therefore, who had inhabited that City from the days of Alexander the Macedonian, were all forced to remove naked from thence at that time, and were dispersed some in one place, others in another. Adamantius, [one of them] (d) a Professor of Physick, went to Constantinople, and fled to Atticus the Bishop; and having turn'd a Professor of Christianity, returned afterwards to Alexandria again, and fix'd his residence there. But Orestes Prefect of Alexandria the Greeks was highly incensed at what was done; being exceedingly troubled, because so great a City was on such a sudden emptied of so numerous a company of Inhabitants. Wherefore he acquainted the Emperor with what had been done. Cyrillus himself likewise made known the Wickedness to the Emperor; nevertheless he sent Messengers to Orestes; on account of procuring a Reconciliation. For the People of Alexandria compelled him to do this. And when Orestes would not admit of any conferences about a Reconciliation, Cyrillus (e) held forth the Book of the Gospels to him, thinking he should by that strike a Reverence into Orestes. But when he would not be mollified even by this means, but continued an irreconcilable War between himself and Cyrillus, this accident hapned afterwards. Eusebius in his Book De Vita Sophistarum. Such a one also was Gessu the Physickian in the times of the Emperor Zeno; concerning whom see Stephanus Byzantius, in the word γῆα. Damascius (in the Life of Ildorus) spends a great many words about this Gessu; and from him Suidas, in the word γῆα (f). Where he divides Physick into two parts, Theory and Practice. Valef.

(e) Cyrillus therefore held forth the Book of the Gospels, that thereby he might conjure and earnestly beseech Orestes Prefect of Egypt, to be reconciled with him. We have remarked already (see Book 6. chap. 11. note b.) that the Ancients did usually conjure and earnestly beseech, by those things which they used to swear by. The Christians usage was to swear by the Gospels, laying their Hands on those sacred Books, as 'tis evidently known. Valef.

C H A P. XIV.

That the Monks of Nitria came down to Alexandria in defence of Cyrillus, and raised a Sedition against Orestes the Prefect.

SOME of the Monks who inhabited the mountains of Nitria, retaining an heat of mind from Theophilus's times, who had armed them unjustly against Dioscorus and his Brethren; were incensed with a Zeal then also, and took a resolution of fighting courageously in defence of Cyrillus. About five hundred persons therefore of them went out of their Monasteries, came down to the City, and observe the Prefect going forth in his Chariot. They came to him, and called him Sacrificer and Pagan, and gave him many other reproachful terms. The Prefect having a suspicion that a Plot was framed against him by Cyrillus, cried out that he was a Christian, and had been baptized by Atticus the Bishop at Constantinople. But when the Monks heeded not what he said, one of them, by name Ammonius, flings a stone and strikes Orestes on the head: by which wound he was all over besmear'd with blood; and his

K k

Or, of ritors fecer.

* Κλῖπται, clippings of Hands; such as is now used at Physicks then before used at Sermons.

† Or, ἡ δὲ Nitria.

|| Or, in all the Wards of the City.

person has done ill to mend it thus, Theodosius's Seventh Consulate; whole Version led Baronius into a mistake, as you may see at the year of Christ 415. From the incomparable Florentine and Sforzian MSS. I have mended this place thus; Theodosius's sixth Consulate; which Emendation is confirmed by the Fasti Consulares. Vale.

Baronius and Theod. Jun.

C H A P. XVI.

That the Jews, entering upon another War against the Christians, were punished.

Some time after this, the Jews renewed their absurd and impious practises against the Christians, and were punish'd [again for them.] At a place named Immetar, which is situate between Chalcis and Antioch of Syria, the Jews (as 'twas their usage) exhibited some Sports. During their Sports they perform'd many mad actions, excited thereto by their drunkenness; and in their Recreations reproach'd not only the Christians, but even Christ himself. And in derision to the Cross, and to them who put their trust in Him that was crucified, they attempted this villainous fact. Having seized a Christian Boy, they bound him to a Cross, and hung him up. At first they laugh'd at and jeer'd him: But becoming afterwards enraged, they scourged the Boy till he died. For this reason there hapned a sharp conflict betwixt them and the Christians. And after the Emperors were acquainted with this fact, an Order was issued out to the Governours of the Province, to find out and punish the Authors thereof. Thus the Jews, who inhabited that place, were punish'd for the Wickedness they had committed in their Sports.

C H A P. XVII.

Concerning Paulus Bishop of the Novatianists, and concerning the Miracle done by him, when he was about to have baptized a Jewish Impostor.

\ Or, under him.*

AT the same time, Chrysanthus also Bishop of the Novatianists, having presided seven years over the Churches * of his own Sect, ended his life in the Consulate of Monaxius and Plinthus, on the twenty sixth of August. He was succeeded in the Bishoprick by Paulus: who before had been a Teacher of Roman Eloquence; but afterwards bad adieu to the Roman Tongue, and betook himself to an Asteticke course of life: And having gather'd together a Monastery of Religious Men, he followed a way of living not unlike that led by the Monks in the Desert. For I found him to be really such a Person, as Evangrius says the Monks who live in the Solitudes ought to be. For he imitated them exactly in all things, in continued fasts, in speaking little, and in abstaining from eating Creatures that have life. Moreover, for the most part he abstain'd from Oyl and Wine. Besides, his care and solicitude about the Poor was eminent and extraordinary. He was very diligent in his visits to the imprison'd; he interceded likewise for many Persons with the Judges, who readily hearkned to him on account of his eminent Piety. What need I be large in my relation concerning him? I will mention one action of his, highly worthy to be recorded in writing. A Jewish Impostor pretending himself converted to the Christian Religion, had been frequently baptized, and by that device had gather'd much money. When he had deceived many Sects [of the Christians] by this fraud: (for he had received Baptism from the Arians and Macedonians;) having no more Persons whom he might put tricks upon, at length he came to Paulus Bishop of the Novatianists; and affirming that he earnestly desired Baptism, requested he might obtain it from his hand. He approved of the Jew's desire; but said he would not give him Baptism, before he had been instructed in the Grounds and Principles of the Faith, and had exercised himself with fastings several days. The Jew therefore having contrary to his own mind, been compelled to fast, was so much the more urgent in his Intreaties for Baptism. Wherefore Paulus, because he would not offend him, now grown importunate, by any longer delays, makes provision for his Baptism. And having bought him a white Vestment, and order'd the * Font to be filled with Water, he brought the Jew to it with a design to baptize him. But * an invisible act of Divine Power caus'd the Water to vanish [on a sudden.] In regard the Bishop and those that were present, (having not the least suspicion of any such thing as had hapned) supposed the Water to have run out by the passage underneath, whereby it was usually let out; they filled the Font again, having with great accuracy stopp'd up its passages every where. And when the Jew was brought the second time to the Font, all the Water disappeared again. Then Paulus spake these words; Either you are an Impostor, O Man, or else, being ignorant, you have been baptized already. A great multitude of People therefore running together to see this Miracle, one of 'em knew the Jew, and was certain that it was the same person who had been baptiz'd before by Atricius the Bishop. This Miracle was perform'd by the hands of [Paulus] Bishop of the Novatianists.

Honorius and Theod. Jun.

\ Or, the belly of the Font.
* Or, accor-tain im-visible power of God.*

C H A P. XVIII.

How, after the Death of Isdigerdes the Persian King, the League between the Romans and Persians was broken, and a bloody War hapned, wherein the Persians were worsted.

AFTER the Death of Isdigerdes King of Persia, by whom the Christians in that Country were not persecuted in the least, his Son, by name Vararanes succeeded in that Kingdom; and being induced thereto by the Magi, he vexed the Christians severely, inflicting on them various Punishments and Persian Tortures. The Christians therefore in Persia, constrained thereto by necessity, fly to the Romans, entreating them not to neglect, and see them wholly destroyed. Atricius the Bishop receives the Suppliants kindly; and made it his business to assist them to the utmost of his power. Likewise, he acquainted the Emperor Theodosius with what had hapned. It fell out at the very same time, that the Romans were offended with the Persians upon another account: because the Persians would not restore the Miners of Gold, whom they had hired of the Romans; and in regard they had deprived the Roman Merchants of their trafficks. To this occasion of difference, the flight of the Christians in Persia to the Romans Wares, or, made an accession. For the Persian King dispatch'd away an Embassie immediately, to demand the Fugitives. But the Romans would in

\ Or, Merchandizes.*

Honorius
and Theod. Jun.

no wife deliver up those who had fled to them, not only because they were desirous of preferring them as being Suppliants; but in regard likewise of their readiness to do any thing in defence of the Christian Religion. Wherefore they chose rather to have a War with the Perrians, than permit the Christians to be miserably destroyed. Hereupon the League was broken, and a fierce War broke out, concerning which I judge it not inopportune to give a short Narrative. The Roman Emperor sent part of an Army first, which was commanded by Arđaburius. He made an irruption into Perfia through Armenia, and ruined one of the Perſian Provinces termed Azazene. Narſeus the Perſian King's General marched out to oppose him at the head of a great Perſian Army. And coming to an Engagement, was worsted, and fled. [Afterwards] he judged it advantageous to make a sudden irruption through Meſopotamia into the Roman Territories, being unguarded, [thinking] by this means to be revenged on the Romans. But this Design of Narſeus's was not unknown to the General of the Romans. Having therefore in a short time laid Azazene desolate, he likewise marched into Meſopotamia. Wherefore Narſeus (notwithstanding he was furnished with a numerous Army, yet) could not invade the Roman Provinces. But, coming to Niſſibis, (which is a City situate in the Confinnes [of both Empires] and belongs to the Perſians,) he sent a Message from thence to Arđaburius, desiring they might come to an agreement between themselves about the management of the War, and that a place and day for an Engagement might be set. Arđaburius gave the Messengers this answer: Tell Narſeus [thus,] the Roman Emperors will not fight when you have a mind they should. Moreover, the * Emperor perceiving that the Perſian muster'd up the whole force of his Kingdom for the carrying on of this War, placed all his hopes of Victory in God, and besides sent vast supplies of Forces. Now, that the Emperor (in regard he put his whole confidence in God,) received benefit from him immediately, 'twas from hence evident. The Constantinopolitans being very anxious and doubtful about the event of the War, the Angels of God appeared in Bitbynia to some Persons going to Constantinople about their private concerns, and bad them tell [the Constantinopolitans,] that they should be of good courage, and pray to God, and be confident that the Romans would be Conquerors. For they said, that they themselves were sent from God to be the Managers of the War. At the hearing hereof, the City was not only encouraged, but the Soldiers also became more bold and valiant. Whereas therefore (as I have said,) the War had been removed from Armenia into Meſopotamia, the Romans shut up the Perſians in the City Niſſibis, to which they laid siege. And having made wooden Towers, which moved upon Engines, they brought them to the Walls, wherewith they killed many of those who fought from the Walls, and [of them] who ran to their assistance. Varranes King of Perſia hearing that his Country Azazene was laid desolate, and his Army besieged within the City Niſſibis, resolved to go in person with all his Forces against the Romans: But, being afraid of the Roman Army, he called the Saracens to his assistance, who were then governed by Alamundarus, a valiant and warlike Man. He brought a numerous multitude of Saracens with him, and spake to the King of Perſia to be confident and courageous, he likewise promised, that he would quickly make the Romans his Prisoners, and deliver Antioch in Syria to him. But the event succeeded not according to his promise. For God posselt the Saracens with a vain and irrational terror. Who supposing the Roman Forces to be falling upon them, became terrified, and not finding how they might make their escape, cast themselves armed as they were into the River Euphrates, wherein about an hundred thousand Men were drown'd. These things fell out after this manner. But the Romans who laid siege to Niſſibis, being informed that the King of Perſia was bringing many Elephants along with him were terrified, and having burnt all their Engines which they had made use of in the Siege, (a) retreated into their own Country. But what Engagements hapned afterwards; and how Arđaburius, another Roman General, killed the valiantest Person amongst the Perſians in a single Duel; and how Arđaburius destroyed seven valiant Perſian Commanders in an Ambuscade; or after what manner (b) Vitanius another Roman General vanquished the Remains of the Saracen Forces, I think fit to omit, lest it should seem to digress too far from my Subject.

Arđaburius rendered into Latin, this Roman Commander is termed Arđaburius Which name I like best. This Victory of the Romans over the Perſians hapned in the Consulate of Eustathius and Agriola, on the year of Christ 401, as Marcellinus informs us in his Chronicon; the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle says the same; who relates, that the Emperor Theodosius had news of that Victory, in the month Corpius, on the eighth of the Ides of September, on the third Feis. This was the fourteenth year of Theodosius Junior's Reign. Wherefore Theophanes is mistaken in his Chronicle, who places this Victory of the Romans over the Perſians on the eighteenth year of Theodosius. Valef.

C H A P. XIX.

Concerning Palladius the Courier.

Moreover, the Emperor Theodosius was in a very short time acquainted with the Actions [of his Forces.] After what manner the Emperor had so sudden an account of what was done in places at so great a distance, I will relate. It was his good fortune to have a * Servant of a vigorous Mind and strong Body, his name was Palladius. This Person could ride on Horse-back at such a rate, that in three days space he could go to those places which are the Boundaries of the Roman and Perſian Territories, and again in as many days return to Constantinople. The same Man passed through all other parts of the World with an incredible swiftness, whithersoever the Emperor sent him. Wherefore, an eloquent Person utter'd this Saying on a time concerning him: This Man by his swiftness makes the Roman Empire, which in it self is large, seem to be little. Moreover, the King of the Perſians was amazed when he heard these things of this Man. But, let thus much be said concerning Palladius.

THe Roman Emperor residing at Constantinople, and being informed of a Victory apparently given him (a) by God, was so good, that altho' his Forces had managed the War

(4) The Florentine apparently given his For M.S. inserts two Words here, altogether necessary, after this manner: ἡ ἀποδοχή [in Θαύ] ἀποδοχή
αὐτῶν, a victory apparently given him [by God.] Which Words (before I had gotten this Manuscript), I had put in at this place, from Nicephorus, and Epiphanius Scholasticus's Version.
Vale.

Words here, altogether after this manner:  $\epsilon\omega$ [ $\epsilon\alpha$   $\epsilon\alpha\iota$ ]  $\alpha\alpha\alpha\alpha\alpha\alpha\alpha\alpha$ , a victory apparently won [ $\epsilon\alpha$   $\epsilon\alpha\iota$ ] Which I [ $\epsilon\alpha$ ] I had gotten that I, I had put in at this am Nicephorus, and E-Scholasticus's Version.

mans had made a great Ditch for their own security, sends one Maximinus (an eloquent person, who was (b) Assessor to Ardaburius the General) Embassador about a Peace. When this Person was come to the Persian King, he ac-

(b) Afflo
 Embassador about ion was come to rendered ill, Araduribus the Communitus Collegue. Musius
 has translated it better, Afflor Epiphanius scholasticus renders it Cancellor, which is the sam<sup>e</sup>. Concerning the Councilors or Afflores of Judges, as well Crui as Illitry, I have made many remarks in my Notes on Anon. Maritimus § which 'tis unnecessary to repeat. Further, this Musius seems to be the same Person, who was afterward sent Embassador by the Emperor Theodosius to Asiatic;
 as Trifolius relates in his Expositio
Legationum: Where he attests, that he was nobly defended, and had been very useful to the Emperor in many Affairs. Valc.

ed it ill, Ardaubarius the
ers Collegae. Maximus
allated it better, Alexan-
drus scholasticus renouencellor, which is the concerning the Council Affessors of Judges, as il as Military, I have my remarks in my Notes
Marcellinus ; which tis ry to repeat here. Fur-
Maximus seems to be Persian, who was after Embassy to the Theodorus to Attila ;
s relates in his Excerptis
um : Where he attests, was nobly defended, and very useful to the Em-
many Affairs. Valef.

Immortals, (their number is ten thousand [and they are] valiant Men,) superior to the Emperor and God, these Bese-came to the Emperor: and said, that a release was not to be admitted of before (c) they had made an attack upon the Romans, then carelessly and negligent. The King is perjured by them, shuts up the Ambassador in prison, and sends the Immortals to put their design upon the Romans in execution. Being come [to the place appointed,] they divided themselves into two parties, and took a resolution of furrowing part of the Romans Army. The Romans seeing but one party of the Persians, made provision to receive their attack. The other parwas not to be admitted of before (c) they had made an attack upon the Romans, then carelessly and negligent. The King is perfwaded by them, ſhuts up the Embaſſador in priſon, and ſends the Immortals to put their deſign upon the Romans in execution. Being come [to the place appointed,] they divided themſelves into two parties, and took a reſolution of ſurrounding part of the Romans Army. The Romans ſeeing but one party of the Perſians, made promiſe to receive their attack. The other party was not ſeen by them : For they ruſht forth to fight on a ſudden. But when the Engagement was juſt beginning, the Army Roman un-

(d) Sidonius makes mention of this Procopius, in his Panegyric of Anthemius Augustus; where he relates, that he was Son-in-law to Anthemius heretofore Consul and Patricius of Protorio; who during Theodosius Junior's minority, had had the chief management of Affairs in the Empire. False.

fore had furrounded the Romans, were themselves encompassed. After the Romans had in short time slain every man of these, they set up on those who issued forth upon them from the Ambuscade, every man of whom likewise they dispatch with their Darts. Thus, those termed the Immortals amongst the Persians, were al-

of them manifestly proved to be Mortals; Christ inflicting this punishment upon the Perſians, becauſe they had murder'd many pious perſons that were his worſhippers. The Perſian King, inform'd of this overthrow, pretended himſelf wholly ignorant of the action: and having given admiſſion to the Embaſſy, he ſpoke to the Embaſſador in this manner: We embrace a Peace, not that We yield to the Romans: but We [do it to] gratify You, becauſe We have found You to be the prudenſteſt Perſon of all the Romans. (e) Thus the War which had been undertaken upon the account of thoſe Chriſtians who lived in Perſia, was concluded. Which thing happened in the Conſulate of the Two Auguſti, Honorius being the thirteenth, and Theodoſius, the tenth year Conſul, on the fourth year of the three hundredth Olympiad. The perſecution [which had been raiſed] againſt the Chriſtians in Perſia ceaſed at the ſame time alſo.

καταβηται δὲ ὁ βασιλεὺς ἀπὸ τοῦ ποταμοῦ, thus the river which had been understood upon the basis of these Christian sources for the Persian War, was concluded. Which thing [that is, the conclusion of the War] happened in the Consulate of the two Augusti. So Epiphanius Scholasticus read, as its apparent from his Version. For thus he renders it: Et hoc modo bellum propter Christianos exortum de Persarum regione cessavit. Coniungit autem Consulate Honorii XII. & Theodosii X. This certain, in this Consulate the Persian War was not waged, but concluded. For it had been begun on the foregoing year, when Eustathius and Agricola were Consul, as I have remarked before; see chap. 18. note (6). Th1. I confirm'd by Murellinus in his Notitia, in these Words: Honorio XII. & Theodosio X. Conf. Persia cum Romanis pacem pepigerit, in Honorio; thirteenth and Theodosio; trentis Consulate, the Persians made a Peace with the Romans. Valef.

CHAPTER XXI.

After what manner Acacius Bishop of Amida, behaved himself towards the Persian Captives.

Moreover, the good Action of Acacius Bishop of Amida, rendred him much more eminent at that time amongst all Men [than he had been before.] For, when the Roman Soldiers would by no means restore the Persian Captives (whom they had taken when they ruin'd (a) Azazene), to the King of Persia; and the Captives, in number about seven thousand, were in the interim destroyed by famine; (which thing was the occasion of no small grief to the King of Persia) Acacius thought that business was in no wise to be then neglected

(a) So he has termed this Province before, a chap. 18. Theopane.

(b) Having [therefore] called together the Clergy under himself: Man [and Brethren] said he, Our God stands not in need of Dishes or Cups: For he neither eats nor drinks, in regard he wants nothing. Whereas therefore the Church is possessor of many Vessels of Gold and Silver by the Beneficence and Liberality of those who belong to it, 'tis agreeable that by a sale of these Vessels we should both (c) redeem the Captives from the Soldiers, and also provide them Food.

Amm. Marcellinus attests, Book 25. which is sometimes termed Arxanene, and Araxiane, and Araxene, as I have remarked at the fore said Book of Amm. Marcellinus. Valef.

(b) Instead of [συγκαλέσας τὸς υἱοὺς αὐτοῦ κληρικοὺς ἀνδρας, ἔφη] But having called together the Clergymen under himself, he said, this place would be written more elegantly, thus [συγκαλὼν τὸς υἱοὺς αὐτοῦ κληρικοὺς ἀνδρας, ἔφη, &c.] Having [therefore] called together the Clergy under himself: Men [and Brethren] said he, &c., And if Epiphanius Scholasticus read, as 'tis apparent from his Verlion. Our Emendation is plainly confirmed also by Nicomachus. Vale!

(c) 'Πυλαῖαι τῶν δεσμωτῶν τῶν ἀναιρεμένων. Christoporus renders it ill, to redeem the Captive Soldiers: for those who had been taken Prisoners by the Romans in Argene, were unarmed; most of them being Bjors, who inhabited that Country. Besides, the Romans are termed Soldiers by way of Emphasis, to distinguish them from the Barbarians, as I have noted at Amm. Marcellinus. So our Sevates calls the Romans, Soldiers, almost in the next words after these. Valef.

Honorius and Theod. Jun.

Having discours'd of these, and many other such like things as these to them, he order'd the vessels to be melted down, and having paid the Soldiers a ransom for the Captives, and fed the Captives [for some time,] he afterwards gave them money to bear their charges, and sent them home to their King. This action of the admirable Acatius highly astonish'd the King of Persia, because the Romans made it their business to conquer their Enemies both ways, as well by War, as by Beneficence. And 'tis said, that the Persian King was very desirous that Acatius should come into his presence, to the end he might enjoy a sight of the Man; and that that was effected by the Emperor Theodosius's order. When therefore God had given so eminent a Victory to the Romans, many Persons who excelled for their eloquence, wrote * Panegyrics in praise of the Emperor, and recited them in publick. Moreover, the Emperor's Wife wrote a Poem in Heroick Verse: for she was a woman of a great eloquence. For, being the Daughter of (d) Leontius the Athenian Sophist, she had been instructed by her Father, and cultivated with all manner of Literature. When the Emperor was about marrying of this Woman, Atticus the Bishop made her a Christian, and at her Baptism, instead of Athanais, named her Eudocia. Many persons therefore, as I have said, recited Panegyrics; some with a design to make themselves taken notice of by the Emperor; others endeavouring to publish the powerfulness of their own eloquence; being altogether unwilling, that that Learning they had gotten by much labour, should lie concealed.

* Or, Panegyric Orations.

(d) This is the Leontius (if I mistake not) whom Olympiodorus relates by his own care and Industry to have been promoted to the Sophistick Chair at Athens, when as he himself Valef.

as yet declined it; as Photius declares in his Bibliotheca.

C H A P. XXII.

Concerning the Excellencies, wherewith the Emperor Theodosius Junior was endow'd.

BUT I, who am neither studious about being taken notice of by the Emperor, nor desirous of making a shew of eloquence, have taken a resolution of setting forth those Excellencies wherewith the Emperor is endow'd, sincerely and without any Rhetorical flourish. For, in regard his Virtues are so singularly useful, my sentiment is, that to pass them over in silence would be loss to Posterity, which would be defrauded of the knowledge thereof. In the first place therefore, although he was born and educated in the * Imperial Palace, yet he contracted nothing of an Effeminacy or Stupidity from that Education. But was [always] so prudent, as to be reputed by those who addressed to him, to have attained a knowledge and experience in most affairs. His patience in undergoing hardships was such, that he could endure heat and cold courageously; and would fast frequently, especially on those days term'd Wednesdays and Fridays. And this he did, out of an earnest endeavour of observing the Rites of the Christian Religion with an accuracy. He govern'd his Palace so, that it differed not much from a Monastery. Wherefore he, (a) together with his Sisters, rose early in the Morning, and recited alternative Hymns in praise of God. Moreover, he could lay the Sacred Scriptures by heart. And with the Bishops who conferred with him, he discoursed out of the Scriptures, as if he had been an Ecclesiastick of a long standing. He was much more diligent in making a Collection of the Sacred Books, and of the Expositions which had been written thereon, than Ptolemaeus Philadelphus had been heretofore. For Clemency and Humanity he excelled all Men by far. The Emperor Julianus, altho' he was a profest Philosopher, yet could not moderate his rage and anger towards the Antiochians who had * derided him, but inflicted most acute tortures upon † Theodorus. But Theodosius had farewell to Aristotle's Syllogisms, and exercised Philosophy in deeds, getting the mastery over Anger, Grief, and Pleasure. He never revenged himself upon any one who had been injurious to him. Yea, no Man ever saw him angry. Being on a time asked by one with whom he was pleased to be familiar, why he never put to death any person who had injured him? his answer was, Would to God it were possible for me to restore to life those that are dead! To another questioning him about the same thing, (b) 'Tis no great or difficult thing (said he) for him (b) Epiphanius that is a Man, to die: but 'tis God's property only by his means repentance to restore to life him that is once dead. Further, his practise of this Virtue was so constant and earnest, that if any person had happened to commit a crime which deserved a capital punishment, he was never led so far as the City-gates onwards on, his way to the place of Execution, before a pardon was granted, whereby he was immediately recalled. When on a time he exhibited a Show of hunting Wild Beasts in the Amphitheatre at Constantinople, the people cried out, Let one of the boldest expent (c) Bestiarii encounter the enraged Wild Beasts. Epiphanius is not, saith he, a great nor difficult thing for a Man to die, because neither [is it a great or difficult thing] to God alone, by repentance to raise a Man once dead. For you must understand [is it a great or difficult thing] to be used in common to both clauses. Nicephorus Callistus has worded this passage thus: ὁ δὲ ἐν τῷ, καὶ τὸν ἀνθρώπον οὐκ ἐμὴν ἐκείνου. Οὐδὲ γὰρ ἐν αὐτῷ, τὸν ἀνθρώπον τῇ ψυχῇ ἀνακαταστήσει. Which words Lingus has rendered thus: Nihil est novi, dixit, quibus homo quum sit, et vitā excedat: solus autem Deus, cum qui semel mortuus sit, per penitentiam ad vitam revocare. I am new thing, said he, that he who is a Man should depart out of this life: but 'tis God's property only, by Repentance to recall to life him who is once dead. But I like not Nicephorus's using τῇ ψυχῇ instead of οὐκ ἐμὴν. For, the discourse here is not concerning the life of the soul, but that of the body. Wherefore, I approve rather of Mansuetudo the Version, who has rendered it thus: Ex penitentia vero revocatur cum qui semel mortuus sit, non est nisi soli Deo possibile. But by repentance to recall him who is once dead, is a thing possible only to God. Notwithstanding this Version pleased not Christophorus, because it may seem to attribute repentance to God. But this expression may be born with, in regard God in the sacred Scriptures is now and then said to repent himself of some fact. Valef.

(c) Sealiger in his Notes on the fourth Book of Manilius, and (after him) Salmasius in his Notes on Capitolinus, pag. 258, have long since observed, that the Greeks called those αεζέζοντες (which is the term here used,) who let themselves out to fight with wild Beasts. But I approve not of their confounding the Confessors with these αεζέζοντες. For the Confessors were another sort of Persons, as I have remarked on Eusebius, (Book 4. chap. 15. note n.) who sought not with the wild Beasts, but distasteth them at a distance. Valef. See Eusebius Pamphilus's Book concerning the Martyrs of Palestine, chap. 3. note (b).

Honours and felicity.

To whom he gave this answer, You know not that We are wont to be Spectators at Shows with delicacy and humanity. With which saying he instructed the People, to be in-future delighted with Shows, wherein there was less of cruelty. Further, his Piety was such, that he honoured all God's Priests; but most especially those whom he knew to be more eminent for Sanctity of life. 'Tis reported, that when the Bishop

(d) This City, and the name of this Bishop, are equally unknown to me. Valef.
* Say-ion; all Translators (whom I have seen) except Valef, renders it his Sack-cloth; the Greek term comprehends both significations.

dead Bishop's Sanctuary. There hapning tempestuous weather one year, he was forced to exhibit the usual and fer Shows in the Cirque, in regard the people were extremely earnest for them. But when the Cirque was filled with Spectators, the Storm increased, and there was a vast fall of Snow; at which time the Emperor gave an evident demonstration, how he was affected towards God; [for] he made proclamation by the Cryer to the People, in these words: 'Thy much better, that we should omit the Show, and all joy in prayer to God, that we may be preserved unharmed from the imminent Storm.' The Cryer had scarce made an end of proclaiming these words, when all the People began to supplicate God in the Cirque with the greatest joy imaginable, and with a general consent sang Hymns to him: and the whole City became one Congregation. The Emperor himself went in the midst [of the multitude] in a private habit, and began the Hymns: nor was he frustrated of his hope [at that time.] For the air returned to its former serenity; and instead of a scarcity of Bread-corn the Divine Benevolence bestow'd a plentiful crop upon all Persons. If at any time a War was raised, in imitation of David, he fled to God, knowing him to be the Disposer of Wars; and by his prayers he managed them successfully. I will here relate therefore, how, a little after the Persian War, (when the Emperor Honorius was dead, in the Consulate of Aclepiodotus and Marianus, (e) on the fifteenth of the month August) by putting his confidence in God, he vanquished the Tyrant Johannes. For, 'tis my sentiment, that the actions which hapned at that time are worthy to be recorded: because what befel the Hebrews (who were led by Moses) in their passage over the Red-Sea, the same [almost] hapned to the Emperor's Commanders, at such time as he sent them against that Tyrant. Which actions I will relate in short, leaving the ampleness of them, which does require a peculiar work, [to be set forth at large] by others.

C H A P. XXIII.

Concerning Johannes, who tyranniz'd at Rome after Honorius the Emperor's death. And how God * mollified, by Theodosius's prayers, deliv-red him into the hands of the Roman Army.

* Or, bowed, or inclined.

Theod. Jun. Honorius Augustus therefore being dead, the Emperor Theodosius informed thereof, conceals it, and deceives the Populace [by feigning] sometimes one thing, at others another. But he sends his Military Forces secretly to Salona; which is a City of Dalmatia; to the end that if any Rebellion should happen in the western parts, a force to resist it might not be far off. Having made provision after this manner before-hand, he then pub-

† That is, Honorius.

(x) This is the Johannes, Primicerius [or, Chief] of the No-taries, who when Rome was be-sieged, had been sent Embassa-dor to Alarichus King of the Goths, whose Friend and Guest he had been, as Zosimus relates, Book 4. Vale!

|| Or, Fortunateness.

admitted Colleague in the Empire. Theodosius imprison'd his Embassadors, sends away Arbuthinus, Master of the Milice, who had done excellent service in the Persian War. He being arrived at Salome, fail'd from thence to Aquileia, and had ill success as he then thought; (but 'twas afterwards demonstrated to be prosperous.) For, an unlucky wind blew, which drove him into the Tyrant's hands. Who having taken Arbuthinus, hop'd Theodosius would be necessitated to elect and proclaim him Emperor, if he were desirous of preserving the life of his Master of the Milice. And the Emperor, when inform'd hereof, was really in an agony, as was also the Army which had been sent against the Tyrant, lest Arbuthinus should suffer any mischief from the Tyrant. Moreover, Apfar, Ar-buthinus's Son, when he understood that his Father was taken by the Tyrant, and knew that many Myriads of Barbarians were come to the Tyrant's assistance, knew not what course to take. But, the prayer of the Emperor, beloved by God, at that time prevailed again:
For an Angel of God in the habit of a Shepherd, became a Guide to Apfar and the Forces with him, and leads them through the Lake, which lies near to Ravenna. For in that City the Tyrant resided, where he detained the Master of the Milice Prisoner. No Person was ever known to have pass'd through this Lake.
But God rendred that passable at that time, which before had been impassable. (b) When therefore they had pass'd the Waters of the Lake [as if it had been] over dry Ground, they found the Gates of the City open, and seiz'd the Tyrant. At which time the most pious Emperor gave a demonstration of his religious affection towards God. For whilst he was exhibiting the Cirque-Sports, news was brought him that the Tyrant was destroy'd. Whereupon he speaks to the People: Come, said he,
if you please, let us rather leave our Recreation, and go into the Church, and put up our Thanksgivings to God, in regard his Hand hath destroy'd the Tyrant.
These were his words; and the Shows ceased immediately, and were neglected: And all Persons went through the midst of the Cirque, singing praises together with him with one consent of mind and voice, and went into God's Church. And the whole City became one Congregation. Being come into the place of Prayer, they continued there all day.
Particle is to be added, after this manner, And when they had pass'd the Waters of the Lake as if it had been over dry Ground. Valef.

Theol. Jun. and Valentinianus. Person, Bishop of the Novatianists there; he asked him, How many years have you been a Bishop? When he made answer [that he had been a Bishop] fifty years; You are happy, O Man, (said he) in regard you have been diligent about so good a Work for such a long time! He spake these words to the same Aclepiades; I do indeed commend Novatus, but the Novatianists I can in no wise approve of. Aclepiades amazed at this strange expression, replied, how can you say this, O Bishop? To whom Atticus made this answer; I commend Novatus, because he refused to communicate with those persons who had sacrificed: for I my self would have done the same. But I do not in any wise praise the Novatianists, in regard they exclude the Laicks from Communion on account of very light and trivial Offences. To which Aclepiades made this return; there are, besides sacrificing, many other Sins unto death (as the Scriptures term them,) on account whereof (b) you not only exclude Ecclesiasticks, but we Laicks also from Communion, leaving to God alone a power of pardoning them. Further, Atticus (c) foreknew even the time of his own death. For at his departure from Nicæa, he spake these words to Calliopius a Prefbyter of that place: Hasten to Constantino-

(b) 'Twas not only you, but we Laicks also, who must be excluded; which neither Nicæan, nor Epiphanius, Scholasticus, nor the other Translators do acknowledge. Unless, instead of αἵμα, any one has a mind to substitute αὐτοῖς, and read thus; You in a certain manner exclude Ecclesiasticks. But, this place wants not difficulty. For, it may seem to be concluded from hence, that Ecclesiasticks in the Catholic Church, who had been excommunicated for more enormous Crimes, were cut off from the Church without all hope of pardon; but Laicks not so. Which may be thus explained. Laicks, who had been separated from Communion on account of public Crimes, recovered Peace and Communion again by the remedy of penitency, at least once. But to Ecclesiasticks who had been excommunicated, the door of penitency was shut. For they were not admitted to public penitency. They continued therefore for ever excommunicated. For which reason Ecclesiasticks were very rarely excommunicated: but were either deposted, or suspended from their Office for some time, or at least reduced to a Laick-communion. But, the first Canon of the Nicæan Synod does gain say this; wherein the Ecclesiasticks who had committed Fornication or Adultery, are driven from Communion, and brought to penitency. This passage may be explained otherwise also. For, from such time as Nestorius abolished the Penitentiary, all Laicks had a free power of communicating left them; nor was any one removed from Communion on account of a deadly Crime, except Ecclesiasticks only. Valef.

(c) Atticus did not only foreknow the day of his own death, but long before his death, he built himself a Sepulchre, as I am informed from an ancient Epigram; which because 'tis not yet extant in Print, I will here annex;

Παύλος σιλεντάρειος ἐπὶ τάφῳ δὲ τῷ αὐτοῦ κατασχεδωσάτω.

Ἀττῖλὸς ἐς ζωνὴν με παραγρηῖο· ἐπὶ δὲ αὐτῷ
Θυμὸν θάλασσαν ἔειπε, λαλῶντα τάφον.
Παύλῳ ὡς ἀφ' οὗτος θάνατον φέβον· εἰ δ' ἄν τις
ἦεν αὐτῷ, σὸς μὲν ἔστω τάφος. i. e.

Paulus Silentarius's Composure on the Tomb of one Atticus.

Atticus, whilst he was living, (in whose mind a Fortitude not to be daunted shined.)
Dug me his Grave, in common hope of Fate unraffable and uncompionate.

Such were his Virtuous Actions, that Death's fear and Frightful Terrors, by him slighted were.
But by the Sun, to late posterity his Sun-like wisdom shall recorded be.

This Epigram is extant in Constantinus Cephalas's Anthologia, not yet Printed. 'Tis my sentiment, that Atticus Bishop of Constantinople is meant hereby. For I know no other Atticus, to whom this Elogy of Wisdom and Virtue can be agreeable. Notwithstanding, this is contradicted by Paulus Silentarius's being inscribed the Author of this Epigram, who (as 'tis manifest from Agathias's Testimony,) flourished long after Atticus, in Justinian's times. Wherefore, either the Inscription of the Epigram, or our Conjecture, must of necessity be false. Valef.

before Autumn, if you are desirous of seeing me again alive. For, if you delay, you will not find me living. Upon his saying whereof, he mistook not. For in the twenty first year of his Episcopate, on the tenth of October, he died, in Theodosius's eleventh, and Valentinianus Caesar's first Consulate. Moreover, the Emperor Theodosius being then in his return from Theffalonica, was not at his Funeral. For Atticus was interred the day before the Emperor's Entry into Constantinople. Not long after Valentinianus Junior was (d) declared Augustus, about the twenty third of that same October. (d) The Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle understood this passage in Socrates amiss. For he thought, that Valentinianus Junior Placidia's Son, had been filed Augustus on the 23d of October: but Socrates says not so; he relates only, that Valentinianus's having been Proclaimed Augustus was published at Constantinople on the twenty third of October. Which two things are vastly different. Signonius (Book 11. De Occidentali Imperio) relates that Valentinianus was created Augustus at Revenna on the Ides (that is, the fifteenth) of October, in Theodosius Augustus's eleventh and Valentinianus's own first Consulate. 'Tis certain, on the eighth of October in the same Consulate, Valentinianus was as yet but Cæsar, as we are informed from the 47th Law in the Theodosian Code de Episc. Eccles. & Clericis, dated at Aquileia. By which place Signonius was chiefly induced, to place Valentinianus's being proclaimed Augustus on the Ides of October, and to relate it to have been made at Revenna. For in regard it was published at Constantinople on the twenty fifth of that same month, it could not have been done later. Onofrius (in his Fastis) has followed Signonius's opinion. Further, Marcellinus and Fordaines (in his Book De Successione Regnorum) do mention this Declaration to have been made at Revenna: but Olympiodorus and Marius (in his Chronicon) say 'twas done at Rome. Valef.

C H A P. XXVI.

Concerning Sifinnius, Atticus's Successor in the Constantinopolitan Bishoprick.

AFTER Atticus's death, a great contest happened about the Ordination of a Bishop, some desiring one person, others another. For, one party ('tis said) were earnest to have Philippus a Presbyter; another, Proclus; who was a Presbyter also. But the whole Body of the People with a general consent wished Sifinnius might be made [Bishop:] who was a Presbyter also himself: he had not been constituted *over any of the Churches within the City, but *Or, he had been promoted to the Presbyterate in a Village belonging to Constantinople, the name whereof is Elaea; and 'tis situate over against the Imperial City; in which Village the Festival of our Saviour's Ascension was from [an ancient] time.) usage celebrated by the whole People in general. All the Laicks were desirous to have this Man [made Bishop,] both because he was a Person singularly eminent for his Piety, and also more especially in regard his diligence in relieving the indigent, was earnest even beyond his power. The desire therefore of the Laity prevailed: and Sifinnius is ordained on the twenty eighth of February in the following Consulate, which was Theodosius's twelfth and Valentinianus Junior Augustus's second. Afterwards, Philippus the Presbyter (because Sifinnius was preferred before him) was very bitter and large in his (a) Invectives against that Ordination, (a) Phosius (in his Bibliotheca, chap. 35.) attests the same; where his words concerning Philippus Sida's Christian History are these: ὁ δὲ τῷ αὐτῷ τῷ ἱεροῦ συγγεγῆς, &c. But in this History he is very severe upon Sifinnius, because, when as they were both of the same degree and order, and he himself seemed superiour in eloquence and all sort of literature; yet Sifinnius (says he) was elected to the Archiepiscopal See. Valefius.

Theod. 100. in that [voluminous work, termed the] Chri- and Valen- stian History, which he wrote; wherein he cam- inianus. uniates both the person ordain'd, and also those who had ordain'd him; but more especi- ally the Laity. And his expressions are such,
that I am unwilling to record them; for I can in no wise approve of his rashness, in having been so audacious, as to commit such things to writing. But, I judge it not inopportune to say something in short concerning him.

C H A P. XXVII.

Concerning Philipppus the Presbyter, who was born at Side.

Philippus was by Country a Sidenfian. Side is a City of Pamphylia, at which Troilus
 the Sophista had his original Extract; of his own relation to whom Philipppus boasted. Whilst he was a Deacon, he had had frequent converse with * Bishop Johannes. He was a very laborious and painful Student, and had made a Collection of many Books, and those of all sorts. He imitated the Asian Style, and wrote many Books. [For, he consulted the Emperor
Julian's Pieces, and compiled a Christian History, which he divided into six and thirty Books.
 Each Book contained many Tomes, in so much that in all they were near a thousand. The

* That is,
Chrysos-
tomus.

† Or, Subject, or Argument.

* Speculations, Precepts, or,
 Axioms.

† Contents of each Tome equal'd the Tome it self in bigness. This work he entitled not an Ecclesiastick, but a Christian History. In it he heaped together variety of Learning, being desirous to shew, that he was not unskilled in Phi- losophick Literature. For which reason, he makes frequent mention therein of Geometrical, Astronomical, Arithmetical, and Musical * Theo- rems. He also describes Islands, Mountains, Trees, and several other things not very momentous. Upon which account he has made it a loose work : and therefore hath (in my judgment) rendred it useless both to the Ignor- ant, and to the Learned also. For, the Ignor- ant are unable to inspect the height and grandeur of his Stile. And those that are well versed in Learning nauseate his insipid repetition of words. But let every one pass a judgment upon those Books according to his own liking. I only say this, that the times wherein affairs have been transacted are confounded by him. For when he has mentioned the Times of the Emperor Theodosius, he runs back to those of Athanasius the Bishop. And this he does very frequently. Thus much concerning Philipppus. 'Tis requisite that we should now declare what hapned in Sisinnius's Time.

C H A P. XXVIII.

That Sisinnius ordained Proclus Bishop of Cyzi- cum : but the Inhabitants of that City would not admit him [to be their Bishop.]

The Bishop of Cyzicum being dead, Sisinnius ordained Proclus Bishop of that City.
 When therefore he was about going thither, the Inhabitants of Cyzicum prevent him, and ordain
 a person that was an Ascetic, his name Dalma- tius. And this they did in contempt to a (a) Law by which 'twas established, that the Ordination of a Bishop [there] should not be made con-

(a) What Law this was and by whom made 'tis uncertain.
 My Sent-

trary to the Constantinopolitan Bishop's mind.
 But they disregarded this Law, as being [said they] a personal Prerogative granted only to Atticus. Proclus therefore continued destitute indeed of the Precedency over his own Church, but he flourished and grew famous for his Ser- mons [preach'd] in the Churches of Constanti- nople. But we shall speak concerning this person in due place. Sisinnius having survived his being made Bishop not full out two years, ended his life in the Consulate of Hierius and Ardaburius, on the twenty fourth of the month
December. He was a person, for his temperance, good life, and love to the poor, highly eminent.
 As to his Temper, he was a person to whom access might easily be had, and of a disposition plain and without falsehood; therefore no lover of business. For which reason busy men were offended at him; amongst whom he had the character of a slothful person.

made in a Council of Bishops, Socrates would have used the term Canon, rather than have called it a Law. After Atticus's death, the Inhabitants of Cyzicum disregarded this Law. For they said, that that privilege had in an especial manner been granted to Atticus, and belonged not to his Successors. But, they were mistaken. For long before Atticus, the Constantinopolitan Prelates had given Bishops to the Inhabitants of Cyzicum. For, in Constantinus's time, Eudoxius
Bishop of Constantinople ordained Eudoxius Bishop of Cyzicum. See Libertus's Breviarium, chap. 7. Vales.

C H A P. XXIX.

That after Sisinnius's death, [ the Emperors ] sent for Nestorius from Antioch, and made him
Bishop of Constantinople; who quickly disco- ver'd his own Temper and Disposition.

After Sisinnius's death, the Emperors were pleas'd not to prefer any person of the Constantinopolitan Church to that See, because they were men studious of vain-glory : altho'
 many were very earnest to have Philipppus, others not fewer in number [ strove to get ] Proclus, ordained. But they resolv'd to send for a For-reigner from Antioch. For there was a man there, by name Nestorius, born at the City Ger- manicia, who had a good voice, and a readiness of expression. Wherefore they determin'd to send for him, as being a fit person to teach the people. After an interval of three months therefore, Nestorius is brought from Antioch :
 Who was cried up indeed for his temperance amongst many persons; but what a temper'd man he was as to other things, the more prudent discover'd from (a) his first Sermon. For, being (a) ordained on the tenth of April, in the Consulate of Felix and Taurus; addressing himself to the Emperor, he forthwith utter'd that famous expression in the presence of all the people. Give to be veneme ( said he, ) O Emperor ! the Earth cleared by care-from Hereticks, and in recompence thereof I will fully observe, give you Heaven. Assist me in destroying Hereticks, what the and I will assist you in vanquishing the Persians. Bishops Although these words were extremely plea- (especial-sing to some of the Vulgar, who had concei- ly the Preved an hatred against Hereticks; yet to those lates of the greater Church
 ches) said in their first Sermon to the People. For from that Sermon a conjuncture was made of the Faith, Doctrine, and Temper, of every Bishop. Wherefore they were wont to take particular notice of, and remember their sayings. A remark of this nature Socrates has made before, at Book 2. chap. 43. concerning the first Sermon of Eudoxius Bishop of Constantinople, And Theodoret and Sophianus declare the same concerning Meletius Antiochenus's first Sermon to the people. Vales.

(who

Theod. Jun. and Valentinianus. (who, as I have said, had skill in giving a conjecture of his sentiments from his expressions) neither the levity of his mind, nor his inclination to anger and violence joyn'd with his vain-gloriousness were concealed: in regard he contained not himself during the smallest space of time, but broke out into such expressions as these; and (if I may use the Proverb) before he had tasted the Water of the City, shewed himself an enraged Persecutor. On the fifth day therefore after his Ordination, he takes a resolution to demolish the Arian's Oratory, in which they performed their Devotions secretly; whereby he drove those Hereticks to a desperation. For when they saw their place of Prayer pulling down, they threw fire into it and burnt it. Moreover, the fire spread further, and consumed the adjacent buildings. Whereupon a tumult was raised all over the City, and the Arians made preparations to revenge themselves. But God the keeper of the City, permitted not the mischief to gather to an head. However, Nestorius was in future termed an (b) Incendiary, not only by the Hereticks, but by those also of his own Faith. For he desired not, but framed intrigues against the Hereticks, and did his utmost to subvert the City. For he attempted to molest the Novatianists also, his envy spurring him on, because Paulus Bishop of the Novatianists was famous in all places for his piety. But the Emperors by their admonition repressed his fury. Now what mischiefs he did to the Quartodecimani throughout Asia, Lydia, and Caria, and how numerous the multitudes were that came to their deaths by his means at Miletum and Sardis in a tumult there raised, I think fit not to mention. But, what manner of punishment he underwent, as well for these [wickednesses], as for his unbridled * tongue, I will declare hereafter

(b) Incendiary. I chose to render it an Incendiary (as Epiphanius does,) rather than burnium, a Fire, though, 'tis possible, this is the true import of the word. Valef.

* Or, unbridled tongue.

C H A P. XXX.

After what manner the Burgundions embraced the Christian Religion, in the Reign of Theodosius Junior.

I Will now relate a thing worthy to be recorded, which hapned about this very time. There is a barbarous Nation, which has its habitation beyond the River Rhine, they are called the Burgundions. These persons lead a * quiet life. For they are almost all Carpenters; by which [trade] they earn wages, and get a livelihood. The Nation of the Hunni by making continual Inroads upon this people, depopulated their Country, and frequently destroyed many of them. The Burgundions therefore, reduced to a great strait, fly for refuge to no man; but resolved to commit themselves to some God. And having seriously considered with themselves, that the God of the Romans did vigorously assist and defend those that feared him; by a general consent they all came over to the Faith of Christ. Going therefore to one of the Cities of Gallia, they made a request to the Bishop, that they might receive Christian Baptism. The Bishop order'd them to fast seven days, in which interval he instructed them in the grounds of Faith; and on the eighth day baptized and dismissed them. Being encouraged therefore [ hereby, ] they marched out (a) against the Hunni, and were not frustrated of their expectation: For the King of the Hunni (a) (whose name was (b) Optar), having burst himself in the night by eating too much; the Burgundions fell upon the Hunni then destitute of a Commander in chief, and a few engaged very many, and conquered them. For the Burgundions being in number only three thousand, destroyed about ten thousand of the Hunni. And from that time the Nation of the Burgundions became zealous Professors of Christianity. A Hunni:] about the same time, Barba Bishop of the Arians for died, in Theodosius's thirteenth and Valentinianus's third Consulate, on the twenty fourth oppressed of June, and Sabbathus is constituted Bishop in his stead. But, let thus much be said concerning these things.

* Or, more joyful.

(b) This person (as I suppose,) is Optar King of the Hunni; whom Fordeus (in his History of the Goths, chap. 35.) relates to have been the Brother of Rea, and Mandichus Atilia's Father. Valef.

C H A P. XXXI.

With what Miseries the Macedonians were afflicted by Nestorius.

MOREOVER, Nestorius behaved himself contrary to the usage of the Church, (a) and caused others to imitate himself in such things, as 'tis apparent from what hapned during his being Bishop. For, one Antonius Bishop of Germa a City in the Hellepont, imitated Nestorius's rage towards the Hereticks, and made it his business to persecute the Macedonians, taking the Patriarch's order as a pretext for his Apology. The Macedonians for some time endured his vexatiousness. But after Antonius began to disquiet them more vehemently; being unable to undergo his molestation any longer, they [grew desperate, and] brake out into a cruel madness; and having privately sent some men who preferred what is pleasant before that which is good, they murder him. The Macedonians having perpetrated this villanous fact, Nestorius took hold of what had been done as an occasion of his own rage. And he persecuted the Emperors to deprive them of their Churches. As well those Churches therefore which they had before the old walls of Constantinople, as by a very them [they were possess of] in Cyzicum, were taken from them; as were likewise many others, which they had in the Villages of the Hellepont. Some of them came over to the [Catholic] Church, and embraced the Homoian Faith. But, as 'tis proverbially spoken, Drunkards never want Wine, nor contentious persons strife. It hapned therefore, that Nestorius, who busied himself in expelling other persons, was himself turned out of the Church, for this reason [following.]

Nor do I doubt but Socrates left it thus written. Otherwise, what he adds concerning Antonius Bishop of Germa, would in no wise agree with that which goes before. At the very next Words, instead of [as 'tis apparent from what hapned from him,] I read [as 'tis apparent from what hapned during his being Bishop.] Which Emendation seems to me altogether necessary. For, that which follows concerning Antonius the Bishop, was in no wise done by Nestorius. Valef.

Theod. Jun. and Valentinianus.
he asserts not Christ to be a meer man; as Photinus and Paul of Samosata did, we are evidently informed even from his own discourses which he hath publish'd. Wherein he does in no place destroy the Hypostasis of the Word of God; but every where professes him to have a proper, real and peculiar Person and Existence: nor does he deprive him of a subsistence, as did Photinus and Paul of Samosata. Which Tenet the Manicheans and Montanus's followers have been so audacious as to assert. That this was Nestorius's opinion, I my self have found, partly by reading his own works, and partly from the discourses of his Admirers. Further, this frigid and empty discourse of Nestorius has rais'd no small disturbance in the World.

C H A P. XXXIII.

Concerning the horrid wickedness committed upon the Altar of the Great Church by the Fugitive Servants.

These things having been transacted [after this manner,] there hapned a most detestable fact, perpetrated in the Church. For, the Servants of one of the Great Men, Fellows that were Barbarians, having by experience found their Master to be cruel, fled to the Church, and with their swords drawn leapt upon the Altar. Being intreated to go out, they could by no means be prevailed upon; but hindred the Divine Services. And holding their naked swords in their hands for [the space of] many days, they stood in a posture to make resistance against any one that approached them. Moreover, when they had killed one of the Ecclesiasticks, and wounded another, at last they slew themselves. Whereupon, one of those then present said, that the prophonation of the Church was no good sign, [in proof whereof] he added two Iambicks of a certain old Poet:

(a) Nicophorus quotes these two Verses, thus:
Σκῆπτρα ἔχ' οὐ ταύτα γινώσκουσι,
ὅτι· Ὀτραι τοὐ παλίου ἐκκατακλινέμεθα
ῥαδί.
But the latter Verse would be written better thus:
Ὀτραι τοὐ παλίου ἐκκατακλινέμεθα
ῥαδί. Valef.

(a) For such Prognosticks happen in that while, When horrid Crimes the Churches do defile.

Nor was he who spake these words, mistaken in his Sentiment: For (as it was conjectured,) a Division amongst the people, and his Deposition who had been the Occasioner of this Division, was hereby portended.

C H A P. XXXIV.

Concerning the former Synod at Ephesus convened against Nestorius.

For within a small interval of time, the Bishops in all places were by the Emperor's Edict order'd to meet together at Ephesus. Immediately after the Feast of Easter therefore, Nestorius went to Ephesus, accompanied with a great and promiscuous multitude, where he finds many Bishops met together. But Cyrillus [Bishop] of Alexandria made some delays, and came not till about Pentecost. On the fifth day after Pentecost, Juvenalis Bishop of Jerusalem arriv'd. Whilst Johannes [Bishop] of Antioch was slow in coming, the [Prelates] that were present began to debate the Question. And Cyrillus of Alexandria made some onsets [of dispute,] being desirous to disturb and terrifie Nestorius; for he had conceived an hatred against him. Moreover, when many asserted the Deity of Christ, Nestorius exprest himself thus, I cannot term him God, who was two months and three months old. And therefore I am clear from your blood; nor will I in future come to you any more. Having said this, he afterwards held Conventions with the other Bishops, who were Followers of his Opinion. So that the persons present were divided into two Factions. Those of Cyrillus's party * staid in the Council, and cited in Nestorius. But he refused to come in, and deserd his appearance till the arrival of Johannes [Bishop] of Antioch. Whereupon those of Cyrillus's party, (after they had several times read over Nestorius's Discourses about this Question, which he had made to the people; and from the reading thereof had given in their judgment, that he had constantly spoken blasphemously against the Son of God) deposed him. When this was done, (a) Nestorius's party made up another Synod apart by themselves, and depose Cyrillus, and together with him Memnon Bp. of Ephesus. Not long after these transactions, Johannes Bishop of Antioch arriv'd: and being informed of what had been done, was highly displeased with Cyrillus, as being the Occasioner of the disturbance which had hapned, in regard he had with so much rashness and precipitancy proceeded to the deposition of Nestorius. But Cyrillus, and together with him Juvenalis, to revenge themselves upon Johannes, depose him also. These affairs being after this manner confus'd and disturb'd, Nestorius perceiving this contenti- on had arriv'd to such a height as to ruin communion, retracted, and termed Mary Theotocos, saying, Let Mary be styled Theotocos, and let all animosities cease. But tho' he made this retraction, yet no body admitted of it. For at this present he continues deposed, and lives in exile at Ossis. And this was the conclusion of the Synod held at that time. These things were done in the Consulate of Basilius and Antiochus, on the twenty eighth of June. But Johannes after his return to Antioch, assembled many Bishops, and deposed Cyrillus, who was then gone home to Alexandria. However, they laid aside their enmity soon after, came to a reconciliation, and restored one another to their Episcopal Chairs. But after Nestorius's deposition, a most violent disturbance seized the Churches of Constantinople: For the people were divided by reason of his frigid and empty babbling, as I have said already. But all the Clergy by a general consent Anathematiz'd him. (For so we Christians do usually term the sentence against a Blasphemer, when we propose it to publick view on a pillar as it were, and render it visible to all persons.)

Theod. Jun. and Valentinianus.
* Or, made up the Synod.
(a) Socrates mistakes at this place, in attributing that to Nestorius which was done by Johannes Bp. of Antioch. Therefore Evagrius and who has follow'd him (as Nicophorus do) deservedly reprehend them, as we are informed from the Acts of the Ephe- sine Synod, was transacted in this manner. When Nestorius had been condemn'd and deposed by the holy Synod, and the Letters of Deposition had been sent to him, he sent forth with a relation to the Emperer Theodosius, wherein he complain'd of his Adversaries violence, and that they would not expect the coming of the Eastern Bishops, who, 'twas said, would quickly be there. This relation was subscribed by ten Bishops of Nestorius's Party. On the fifth day after, comes Johannes Bishop of Antioch, with the Eastern Bishops. Who having understood what had been done, assembled together the Bishops (as well as the Eastern Prelates whom he had brought with him, as those ten, which (as we have said) had subscribed Nestorius's Relation,) and deposed the Bishops Cyrillus and Memnon. At this Little Council of Johannes's, Nestorius himself was not present, because, having been condemn'd by an Episcopall sentence, he had not been restored by the determination of a Synod. But the Bishops of his party, whom the sentence of the Synod had in no wise touch'd, were present.

Theod. Jun.
and Valen-
tianus.

C H A P. XXXVII.

Concerning Silvanus, who was translated from Philippopolis to Troas.

Silvanus had formerly been a Rhetorician [in the School of] Troilus the Sophista. But in regard he proposed to himself an accuracy in the profession of the Christian Religion as his chief design, and exercised himself in the severities of an Asketick life, [on account hereof] he refused to (a) wear the Rhetoricians Pallium. But afterwards Atticus the Bishop (b) laid hold of him, and ordained him Bishop of Philippopolis. After he had lived three years in Thracia, and found it himself unable to endure the cold (for he had ill, thus, a very thin, lean, and infirm body;) he entreated Atticus, that he would ordain another in his stead, affirming that he refused to live in Thracia upon no other account, than because of the cold. Another person therefore having for this adding a very reason been ordain'd in his room, Silvanus word of continued at Constantinople, and with a most exquisite diligence followed an Asketick course of life. He was so great a stranger to delicateness and fineness, that he would frequently appear speaks not in publick amongst so numerous a concourse of people as were in that populous City, shod only with Sandals made of (c) Spartum. After some interval of time the Bishop of the Church but concerning this of the Rhetoricians. For he says, that Silvanus had before been a Rhetorician, that is, an Advocate out of Troilus the Sophist's School: but afterwards left off his Pallium, and embraced a Monastick life. Concerning the Rhetoricians Pallium, see what we have remarked before at Book 7. chap. 12. Note (c.). To which may be added this passage out of Theophylactus Simocatta's Menodora, which he spoke in praise of the Emperor Mauricius, after Phaulcas's death: σπουδαίοντες οὐ δόμοι ψι χεῖρας, τὸ δὲ ὑπόπαιον αὐτὸ ἔμελλεν. τὸ δὲ ἄλλοτε ἀνὴρ τῆς βίου. Which words Theophylactus himself cites in the Eighth Book of his History, chap. 12. Whence it may be gathered, that the Rhetoricians Pallium was white, not red, or scarlet coloured, as we have noted before from Cyrillus and Basilus Grammaticus. Gregorius Nazianzenus speaks also concerning the Rhetoricians Pallium, in his sweetest Oration concerning the praises of Basilius, pag. 328. Edit. Paris, 1609. where Basilus (by the same mistake) has rendered it Pallia Philologica, the Philologic Pallium. Valef.

(b) I agree not with Christophorus, who has rendered this place so, "as if Atticus had sent for Silvanus to come to him. What need was there of sending for him, who was present at Constantinople, to wit, a Rhetorician in the School of Troilus the Sophist, who taught Rhetoric at Constantinople. The word ἐνέσχετο signifies something more, to wit, to lay hold of, and use force towards any person. By this term therefore Socrates shews, that Silvanus was against his own will, and with a reluctancy, made Bishop of Philippopolis by Atticus. Philippopolis is the Metropolis of that Country, strictly and properly called Thracia. You must know further, that the Ordination of the Metropolitans of Thracia, belonged then to the Bishop of Constantinople. For the Patriarchs by a certain singular privilege ordained Metropolitans, as I have observed at large in my Dissertation on the sixth Canon of the Nicene Council. [The Learned Reader will meet with this Dissertation of Valerius's at pag. 188. of his Notes on Socrates and Sozomenus. Edit. Paris, 1668.] Hence 'tis, that the same Atticus, Patriarch of Constantinople, ordained the said Silvanus Bishop of Troas, upon the request of the Inhabitants of that City. For Alexandria Troas [or, Alexander's Troas,] was the Metropolis of Phrygia. This is in express words establish'd by the twenty eighth Canon of the Chalcedon Council, [which occurs at Tom. 1. pag. 145. Edit. Beveridge,] which treats concerning the privileges of the Constantinopolitan See: to wit, that the Metropolitans only of the Thracian, Pontic, and Asian Diocesis, should be ordained by the most holy Constantinopolitan See: the Decrees being (as usually) first made by the common consent of the Clergy and Laity, and directed to the Patriarch of Constantinople. For this the aforesaid Canon does determine, Ἀποκριτῶν ἐκείνων καὶ τῶν ἐκ τῶν ἐπιστολῶν αὐτῶν πρὸς τὸν ἀναγινωσκόντα. The Decrees made as usually, being agreed upon and transmitted to him. The Canon means the Decree of Request, such a one as the Corinthians sent to Bonifacius, desiring they might have Perigenes for their Bishop; as we have observed before at Chap. 36. Note (c.) Valef.

(c) 'Apostolus Christianus corinthios. Christophorus renders it, Sandallis indutus fuisse confessus, shod with Sandals made of Hay. Epiphanius Scholasticus (who is followed by Langus, Nicephorus's Translator, Book 14. Chap. 39.) translates it Joleas de sparso, Sandals of Spartum.

L 1 2

Spartum

But in regard the Inhabitants of the foresaid City refused to admit him, the Bishop of Rome ordered he should be constituted Bishop in the Metropolitan See of Corinth; the Bishop of that Church being dead. Over which Church Perigenes presided as long as he liv'd. Gregorius of Nazianzum was first of all Bishop of Safimi one of the Cities in Cappadocia: Afterwards he was made [Bishop] of Nazianzum. Melitus had formerly presided over the Church in Schofia; and afterwards he Govern'd that in Antioch. Alexander Bishop of Antioch translated Dositheus Bishop of Seleucia to Tarsus in Cilicia.

(d) Reverentius [was removed] from Arci [a City] of Phenice, and afterwards translated to Tyre. Johannes was translated from (e) Gordum [a City] of Lydia to (f) Proconnesus, and presided over the Church there. Palladius was translated from Helenopolis to Aphrodisia. Alexander was translated from Helenopolis to Adriani. (g) Theophilus was translated from Apamea [a City] of Asia, to Eudoxiopolis anciently termed (h) Salambrina. Polycarpus was translated from Saxantapristi [a City] of * Mesia, to Nicopolis of Thracia. Hierophilus was translated from Trapezopolis [a City] of Phrygia to Plotinopolis in Thracia. (i) Optimus was removed from Agadama in Phrygia to Antioch [a City] of Pisidia. Silvanus was translated from Philippopolis in Thracia, to Troas. Let thus many be sufficient to have been named at present, who were removed from their own Cities to other [Sees.] But I judge it useful to speak something in short concerning Silvanus, who was translated from Philippopolis in Thracia to Troas.

(k) Nicephorus makes Gordum a City of Lyca, not Lydia; but all other [Writers] assign it to Lydia. Further, this Johannes Bishop of Proconnesus was present at the Ephesine synod, as 'tis recorded in the first Action of that Council. Valef.

(f) In the Florentine Manuscript 'tis Proconnesus. In Nicephorus, in the Jus Græco-Romanum, and in the Acts of the Ephesine Council, 'tis written Proconnesus. The Author of the Etymologicon in the word προκόννησος defends both readings. And deduces the original of this name (which has the Letter (i) added) from hence, either because this Island furnishes the other Islands with marmour, μαρμαίκα, that is, Gratis, freely, or for nothing; or else from the Word εὐσεύς, which signifies Hinnuleum, a little Hind. But Dionysius Atheniensis (in his Book [entitled] κρίσειν, which he wrote concerning the building of Cities,) says 'twas call'd Proconesus from the multitude of Harts there, which they term προκύνες. Others will have its name derived from a Vessel which the Greeks call προβύς, because when the Mileti at first brought a Colony thither, they were met by a Virgin carrying such a Vessel. Valef. In Robert Stephens's Edit. 'tis termed Proconesus.

(g) In the fourth Book of the Jus Græco-Romanum, pag. 931 he is termed Theophilus. And so he is called in the Tripartite History (which Epiphanius Scholasticus translated;) and in Jus Carnotensis (in Prologo Decreti). But Nicephorus terms him Philippus, which I wonder at. Valef.

(h) From the Florentine and Sfortian Manuscripts, and from Nicephorus and Epiphanius Scholasticus, instead of Salambrina, we have made it Salambriz. 'Tis a City of Thracia, which the Greeks heretofore termed Selymbria, as Strabo and Stephanus do attest: But afterwards 'twas called Salambrina. So in the Itinerarium Burdigalense: Manlio Selembria [is mentioned which was] 44 Miles distant from Constantinople. Valef.

(i) This is the Optimus Bishop of Antioch in Pisidia, of whom the Emperor Theodosius makes mention in the third Law of the Theodosian Code, de Fide catholica; to whom (together with Amphilochius of Iconium), the Charge and Administration of the Churches of Asia is committed. Valef.

Spartum is a kind of Shrub like our Broom, of which they made Bonds to tie their Vines, Ropes for Ships, and (as it seems) Sandals also. Such Sandals as these were those termed Carbatina; concerning which see Julian's Psephus Onasmith. Book 7. chap. 22. Hesychius (in the word καρβατιν, says they were mean shoes worn by the Peasants) and expounds that term thus, καρβατιν a shoe with one sole.

Theod. Jun. and Valentinianus. of Troas departed this life. On which account the Inhabitants of Troas came [to Constantinople] to desire a Bishop. Whilst Atticus was considering whom he should ordain, it happened that Silvanus came to give him a visit. As soon as Atticus saw him,

(d) Instead of [Ἐπίθης, laid upon] we read [Ἀπὸ θῆς, be laid aside] agreeable to Chrysostom's and Sir Henry Savil's reading. Valf.

avoiding the Care and Government of [this] Church. For Troas is not a cold place. Behold, God has provided you a convenient place for the infirmest of your Body. Delay not therefore, Brother, but go to Troas. Wherefore Silvanus removed to that City: where he did a Miracle, which I will now relate. A vast Ship for carrying of burthens, made for the conveyance of great pillars, (such a vessel they term Plate;) had been newly built on the shore of Troas. This Vessel was to be launched. But tho' many ropes [were fastned to the Ship,] and a great number of persons [did their utmost] to hale it [Seaward,] yet it was not in any wise to be moved. After this had been done for many days, then they thought that a Devil detain'd the Vessel. Wherefore, they went to Bishop Silvanus, and entreated him to make a Prayer in that place. For they believed, that by that means only the Ship was to be drawn into the Sea. But he entertaining modest thoughts of himself, stiled himself a Sinner, and said, That was a work to be done by some righteous person, not by him. When they continued their suit with a greater earnestness, he went to the shore: Where after he had pray'd, he took hold of one of the ropes, and bad them set close to the business. And when they had haled the Ship on a little, he ran swiftly into the Sea. This Miracle perform'd by Silvanus's hands, stirred up those of that Province to piety. But Silvanus was a good Man as to other things also: For perceiving that the Ecclesiasticks made a gain of their Contentions who were engag'd in Suits at Law, he would never make any one of the Clergy a Judge: but receiv'd the Libels of the Litigants himself, and called one of the faithful Laicks to him, whom he knew to be a lover of justice; to whom he committed the hearing of the cause,

(e) In Robert Stephens's Edition the reading is [ἀνίστασθαι, he arose]. In the Florent. MS. it is ἀνίστασθαι. Wherefore, I doubt not but Socrates wrote [ἀνίστασθαι, be freed, or released]. For the common reading, in my judgment, is not to be born; although Nicephorus confirms it. Valf.

* Or, Has not been unfruitful.

us return to that place, from whence we have digressed. After Maximianus therefore was ordain'd Bishop of [Constantinople] in the Consulate of Bassus and Antiochus, about the twenty fifth of October, the affairs of the Church were in a sedate and quiet posture.

C H A P. XXXVIII.

Concerning the Jews in * Crete, how many of them turned Christians at that time.

ABOUT the same time, many of the Jews [who dwelt in Crete, turn'd Christians, on account of this calamitous accident. A certain Jew, who was an Impostor, feign'd himself to be Moses; and affirm'd himself to have been sent from Heaven, that he might (a) lead out the Jews who inhabited that Island, and conduct them through the Sea. For he was (as he said) the same person who preserved the Israelites heretofore [by leading them] through the Red-Sea. For the space of one whole year therefore he travelled about to all the Cities of that Island, and persuaded the Jews who inhabited therein, to believe these things. And he exhorted them to leave their money and possessions: for he promised, that he would lead them through a dry Sea into the Land of Promise. They, deceived by such hopes as these, neglected all employments; and moreover despised the things they possessed, permitting any persons they met with to take them. When the day was come which had been set by this Jewish Impostor, he himself went before, and they all followed with their Wives and little Children. He leads them therefore to a Promontory which * ran out into the Sea, and order'd them to cast themselves from thence into the Ocean. They who came first to the precipice, did so, and lost their lives immediately, part of them being dash'd [in pieces] against the rocks, and part drowned in the waters: And many more of them had perish'd, had not some Fishermen and Merchants (who were Christians,) by the disposal of Divine Providence hapned to be present. These persons drew out and saved some of them who were almost choaked with the waters; who having been in so imminent danger, were then sensible of their own madness. They kept the others also from casting themselves into the Sea, by telling them that those were destroyed who had thrown themselves in first. The Jews therefore, having at length understood the Imposture, blamed their own indiscretion in believing. But when they endeavoured to [seize] the Pseudo-Moses and kill him, they could not apprehend him: For he disappeared [on a sudden;] and this made most men suspect that he was a destructive Devil, who had clothed himself with an human shape, that he might destroy their Nation in that Country. By reason of this calamitous accident, many of the Jews then in Crete, bade adieu to Judaism, and embraced the Faith of the Christian Religion.

Theod. Jun. and Valentinianus. This Island is now termed Candia.

* Or, hung over into, &c.

Or, false Moses.

Or, bore them selves so.

C H A P. XXXIX.

Concerning the Fire which hapned in the Church of the Novatians.

NOT long after this time, Paulus Bishop of the Novatians got the repute of a person truly beloved by God, and indeed render'd [his own reputation] far greater than what it had been before. For, there hapned a most furious theod. Jun. rious fire [at Constantinople,] such a one as had never † been known before. For a great part of the City was destroyed by this Fire: In so much that the (a) greatest Granaries, and that termed the (b) Achillean Bath, were burnt down. At length the Fire, consuming [all things in its way,] approach'd the Novatianists Church, which stands near Pelargus.

with an asphat. And Langus translates it Barns, or Granaries. Proclus renders it Maxima edifices, the greatest Edifices. Christoforus, fortissimè munimenta, the strongest Fortresses. I had rather follow Langus. For ἀίο is a barbarous Greek Word, which signifies a Burn of Granary; as Meursius has long since observed in his Glossary. In the Kings Copy I found it written ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ. Further, there were five publick Barns or Granaries at Constantinople; to wit, four in the fifth Ward. Valef.

(b) In the Alexandrian Chronicle (pag. 728. Edit. Monach. 1615,) the Word, are these: On theobulus Augustus's fourteenth Consulate, which he bore with Maximus, there arose a great fire from the Neorion, which burnt down the Granaries and the Achillean Bath, in the month Loeb, &c. Epiphanius Scholasticus renders it, Thermusque vocatur Achillean, that termed the Achillean Bath. Which Rendition is confirmed by Marcelinus Comes in his Chronicle, (pag. 26. Edit. Paris, 1619,) at the Consulate of Maximus and Paterius, which was the year of Christ 443. His Copy (says he) Thermarum quæ Achillean dicuntur, ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ, in their Consulate, that termed the Achillean Bath was [after it had been rebuilt] dedicated. And the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle affirmeth the same (pag. 730. Edit. ut prius,) in these Words ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ, &c. In the same Persons [that is, Maximus's and Paterius's] Consulate, the publick Bath termed Achillean was dedicated, in the month Andaneus, before the third of the Ides of January. The Achillean Bath therefore (after it had been consumed by fire, in the fourteenth Consulate of Theodosius which he bore with Maximus) on the year of Christ 433, was rebuilt and dedicated on the tenth Year after. Valef.

When therefore Paulus the Bishop saw his Church in danger, he rush'd into it [and ran] as far as the Altar, where he * commended the Preservation of the Church and the things therein to God; nor did he omit the pouring forth his Prayers both for the City and for the Church. † And God heard his Prayer, as 'twas demonstrat'ed by the event. For tho' the Fire brake into the Church through all the Doors and Windows, yet it did no harm. It wholly consumed many adjacent Edifices on every side of it: but you might have seen the Church it self in the midst of the whole Fire, triumphing over its raging Flames. And when this Fire had continued two whole days and as many nights, it was wholly extinguish'd, after it had burnt down a great part of the City. But the Church appear'd entire and untouched. And (which is more to be admir'd) there was not the least * appearance of Smoak to be seen on its Timber or Walls. This hapned about the sixteenth of August, in Theodosius's fourteenth Consulate which he bore with Maximus. Since which time the Novatianists do celebrate [the Memory of] their Church its having been preserv'd, every year about the sixteenth of August; on which day they put up their Thanksgivings to God: And all Persons in a manner, not only Christians but very many Pagans also, since that time honour that place, by reason of the Miracle which hapned therein; and have a veneration for it as being truly holy. But thus far concerning these things.

C H A P. XL.

That Proclus succeeded Maximianus the Bishop.

Maximianus having quietly govern'd the Churches two years and five months, died in the Consulate of Arcobindus and Aspar, on the twelfth of April. That day hapned to Theod. Jun. fall on the Week of Fast, [to wit] the Week and Valentinianus. which immediately precedes the Feast of Easter: and it was the * fifth day of that Week. That is, At which time the Emperor Theodosius made a Thursday prudent provision for this affair. For left a debate should arise again about the Election of a Bishop, which might raise a disturbance in the Church; he delay'd not, but whilst Maximianus's Body lay as yet unburied, order'd the Bishops that were present [in the City] to place Proclus in the Episcopall Chair. For the Letters of Cælestinus Bishop of Rome, wherein he approved of (a) this [Election,] were then come; (a) Instead of [more] which Letters he had sent to Cyrillus [Bishop] of Alexandria, to Johannes [Bishop] of Antioch, and to (b) Rufus [Bishop] of Thessalonica; informing them, that nothing hinder'd him (who had been nominated and actually was Bishop of one City) from being translated to another. Therefore after Proclus was placed in the Episcopall Chair, he made a Funeral for the Body of Maximianus. But we have now an opportunity of speaking something in short (at the concerning Proclus.

434.) has truly remarked, that these Letters of Cælestine Bishop of Rome were not written on this year, but two years before; to wit, when (after Nestorius's Deposition,) they were busy about electing a Bishop of Constantinople. 'Tis certain on this year (when Arcobindus and Aspar were Consuls) Cælestine was dead, and Asyllus had succeeded him in the Bishoprick of Rome. Valef.

(b) Valefius has told us before (at note c. on chap. 36,) that Rufus Bishop of Thessalonica was deputed the Vice-gerent of the Apostolick See [that is, Rome] throughout Achaia and Macedonia. He adds here, that he had the same Vice-gency throughout Illyricum, as the Epistles of Innocentius and Bonifatius Bishops of Rome do declare, which are to be seen in Lucas Holstenius's Roman Collection. For (continues Valefius) the Bishops of Thessalonica had that privilege from the times of Pope Damasus; as we learn from the same Collection. Balsamo (in his Comments on the Synod in Trullo, pag. 359 Edit. Paris, 1620.) affirms, that the Bishops of Thessalonica were heretofore the Legates of the Roman Bishop; and that the Bishop of Rome has a power of constituting Legates in the Constantinopolitane Patriarchate; but denies that he has a power of ordaining Bishops; whereon Balsamo is much mistaken. For these Provinces, which then when Balsamo wrote, were under the Constantinopolitane Prelate, had heretofore been under the Bishop of Rome. Further, the Nicene Synod has determin'd, that the ancient usage should be observ'd. Thus far Valefius. But, as you see, he gives no reason to confute what Balsamo has said, to wit, that the Bishop of Rome has no power to ordain Bishops within the Constantinopolitane Patriarchate. And therefore I will (and so may the Reader too, if he please.) suspend my belief, till more reasons are assign'd. This passage in Balsamo (here quoted by Valefius) occurs in Dr. Beveridge's Synod. Tom. 1. p. 154. See the Learned Doctor's Notes, pag. 126.

C H A P. XLI.

Concerning Proclus the Bishop, what manner of Man he was.

Proclus was from his younger years a Reader, he frequented the Schools, and employ'd his time in [the study of] Rhetorick. Being come to Man's estate, he was for the most part conversant with Atticus the Bishop, and had been his Notary. When he had made a great Proficiency, Atticus promoted him to the Diaconate. Having been prefer'd to the Presbyterate, Sisinnius (as I have said * before) ordain'd him Bishop of Cyzicum. These things had hapned long before this. But 'twas at this time that he obtained the Chair of the Constantinopolitane Church. He was a Person endowed with as good a Disposition and Morals, as was any Man whatsoever. For having been educated under Atticus, he studiously imitated

Theod. Jun. and Valentinianus. all that was good in him. (a) But he exercised a patience far greater than Atticus. For he, * now and then, shew'd himself terrible to Hereticks. But Proclus was calm and mild to all persons: * Ev. xi. 14, upon occasion.

(a) In Rob. Stephens's Edition, the reading is, τὴν δὲ ἀνείκασιν πλεονεξίαν ἢ ἐν ἑαυτῷ. But he exercised a patience far greater than he [Atticus]. Theod. Jun. and Valentinianus. hid. The word [δ] as were different from those embraced by him [Proclus], hid. is wanting self.

in the Sforzian MS. Wherefore I doubt not but Socrates left it written thus, τὴν δὲ ἀνείκασιν πλεονεξίαν ἢ ἐν ἑαυτῷ. But he exercised a patience far greater than Atticus. Which Emendation is confirmed by Epiphani. Scholasticus and Nicephorus, for Nicephorus (Book 14. ch. 38.) words it thus, ἀνείκασιν δὲ ἢ πλεονεξίαν ἑαυτοῦ. Moreover, he was far more patient than they, [that is, than John Chrysostome and Atticus.] And Epiphani. Scholasticus renders it thus: sed in isto patientia posterior apparuit, sed in him a better [or more desirable] patience appeared. Valer.

(b) We read [τὴν δὲ], in regard — by this means;] before which words we have put a Colon. Valer.

C H A P. XLII.

That this Writer spends many words in praise of the Emperor Theodosius Junior's Probity.

ON account hereof therefore, Proclus was highly commended by the Emperor. For * He himself also was like to such as were true Prelates; nor did he any wise approve of those, who were desirous of persecuting others. Yea, I can speak it with confidence, that for meekness he excelled all those who were true and genuine Ecclesiasticks. (a) And what is recorded of Moses in the Book of Numbers *; Now the Man Moses was very meek, above all the men which were upon the face of the earth; the same may be now said of the Emperor Theodosius, to wit, that he is very meek, above all the Men which are upon the face of the Earth. For by reason of this his meekness, God hath subdued his Enemies under him, without military Engagements, as hath been demonstrated by his Victory over the Tyrant † Johannes, and [shall be made evident] from the Destruction of the || Barbarians, which succeeded that soon after. For what manner of assistances have been given by God to Just Men heretofore, such like have even in our times been bestow'd on the most Pious Emperor, by the God of the Universe. Nor do I write this out of flattery, but I will give a Narrative of Affairs (which all Men have been thoroughly acquainted with,) as they truly are.

(a) The discourse will be more graceful and Emphatical, if we add a Particle thus, ὡς καὶ ἀρεῖ, &c. And what is recorded, &c. and so make this the beginning of a period. Thus Nicephorus reads it. Valer. * Numb. 12. 3.

C H A P. XLIII.

How great Calamities those Barbarians underwent who had been the Tyrant Johannes's Auxiliaries.

FOR after the Slaughter of the Tyrant, those Barbarians whom he had called to his assistance against the Romans, made preparations to over-run [and ruin] the Roman * Provinces. * Plinius, τὰς ἡλίκας. When the Emperor heard of it, according as his usage was, he committed the care of this affair to God: and having been earnest in Prayers, not long after obtain'd what he desired. Further, it will be advantageous, to hear what [Calamities] befel the Barbarians. Their Commander in chief, whose name was (a) Rougas, is killed by a clap of Thunder. Then follow'd a Plague, which destroy'd most of the Men under his command. Nor was this only sufficient; but Fire also descended from Heaven, and consumed many of those who remained. And this put the Barbarians into the greatest terror imaginable, not so much because they had dared to take up Arms against the valiant Nation of the Romans; as in regard they found them assisted by a powerful God. Moreover, Proclus the Bishop preach'd a Sermon at that time in the Church, wherein he applied a Prophecy [taken] out of Ezekiel to the deliverance effected by God at that juncture; [for which discourse] he was greatly admired. The Prophecy runs thus: And thou son of man, prophesie against (b) Prince Gog, Rhos, † Ezech. 38. ver. 2, 23, death, and with blood, and with an overflowing rain, &c. 23. In and with stones of hail. And I will rain fire the Sepulchre and Brimstone upon him, and upon all those which him, &c. 24. And upon many Nations [which are] with him. And I will be magnified and glorified, and I will be known in the eyes of many Nations. And they shall know that I am the Lord. On account thereof therefore, as I have said, Proclus was much admired. But on the Emperor, because of his meekness, many other [Blessings] were conferred by Divine Providence. Amongst which this was vulgar one, [which I will now relate.] whereof Hieronymus has rendered it thus, Principem capitis Mithri, Prince of the chief of Mithri. Wherefore, what Langus remarks here concerning the Rhigi, is in my Judgment foreign to this place. Valer. In the Hebrew, the Words of this Text are יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ exactly, which in the margin of our English Version is render'd exactly thus, Prince of the chief of Mithri. Socrates quotes this whole Text out of Ezekiel, in the Words of the Septuagint Version, and we have translated them accordingly. The difference between the Greek Version and Original Hebrew at this Text is great. Our English Translators (as they generally do, in here) follow the Hebrew.

C H A P. XLIV.

That the Emperor Valentinianus Junior married Eudoxia the Daughter of Theodosius.

HE had a Daughter by his Wife Eudocia, her name Eudoxia. His * Cousin Germanicus * See Book 7. chap. 24. whom he had made Emperor of the Western Parts, desired he might marry this [Princess.] To which when the Empe-

Theod. Jan. and Valentinianus.
 Emperor Theodosius had given his consent, and both the Augusti (after they had deliberated about celebrating the marriage at some place on the Frontiers of both Empires,) had resolved each to make a journey half way, and do it at Thessalonica: Valentinianus sends Theodosius intimation by Letter, that he should not give himself that trouble: for, that he would come in person to Constantinople. Having therefore secured the Western parts [with a sufficient guard,] he comes to Constantinople on account of the marriage. Which having been celebrated in the Consulate of (a) Isidorus and Senator, he took his Wife, and returned into the western parts. Such a felicity at this befall the Emperor at that time.

(a) These persons were Consuls in the year of Christ 436.
 But Profer, Marcellinus Comes in his Chronicon, and the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle, disagree with Socrates. For those Authors relate, that this marriage was celebrated in on the year following, whereon Aetius bore his second Consulate with Sigisvultus, in the month of November. The same is confirmed by Fordanes in his Book de Successione Regum; where, after he has spoken concerning the Whoredom committed by Honorio with her Procurator Eugenius, which was done in the Consulate of Arcobindus and Alfara, on the year of Christ 434. He adds these words; Posthac tertio anno Valentinianus, &c. On the third year after this the Emperor Valentinianus comes from Rome to Constantinople, in order to his marrying Eudoxia daughter to the Emperor Theodosius: and having given all Illyria as a Gravity to his Father-in law, after the Celebration of the Marriage, he returned with his Wife to his own Kingdom. Cassiodorus Senator attests the same concerning the Donation of the Western Illyrium (Book 1. variarum. Epist. 1. pag. 684. Edit. Aurel. Alodog. 1622.) in these words: *Placidium mundi cognoscere celebratum, avorum [or, principum, &c., aliquorum, as 'tis in some Copies:] Prospicia gloriosius purpurato filio studuisse percipimus: cuius dam remissione administrat Imperium, indecenter cognoscitur innumeratum. Numum denique sibi amissionis Illyrici comparavit, saltaque est conspectio regnantis, divisio dolenda provinciarum.* Valef.

C H A P. XLV.

That Proclus the Bishop persuaded the Emperor to translate the Body of Johannes from the place of his Exile [where he had been buried,] to Constantinople, and to deposit it in the Church of The Apostles.

* He means those termed the Johannites. See Book 6. ch. 18. † Or, by Prudence.
 NOT long after this time, Proclus the Bishop reduced * those [to the Church] who had made a separation [from it] on account of Bishop Johannes's deposition; having mitigated their disgust by a † prudent expedient. What that was, we must now relate. After he had persuaded the Emperor [to give his consent thereto,] he brought the body of Johannes, which had been buried at Comani, to Constantinople, on the thirty fifth year after his deposition. And when he had carried it through the City publicly, in great pomp and state, he deposited it with much honour and solemnity in that termed the Church of The Apostles. Those persons therefore who had made a separation on Johannes's account, were by this means prevailed upon, and became united to the Church. And this happened in the sixteenth Consulate of the Emperor Theodosius, about the twenty seventh of January. But I cannot forbear wondering here, how [it came to pass,] that Envy should assail and corrode Origen after he was dead, and yet spare Johannes. For Origen was excommunicated by Theophilus about two hundred years after his death. But Johannes was admitted to communion by Proclus, on the thirty fifth year after he died. So great was the difference between Proclus's disposition, and that of Theophi- lus. But prudent Men are not ignorant, Theod. Jan. and Valentinianus.

 (a) in what manner these things have been, and daily are, done.

(a) By these words Socrates does plainly discover his Opinion. For he would say, that these things are usually done through envy, or out of favour. For because Origen was condemned by Theophilus, so many years after his death; that Socrates ascribes to Theophilus's envy towards Origen himself, or against those termed the Long Monks. And whereas Johannes Chrysostome was brought back with honour into his own Country, on the thirty fifth year after his death; that Socrates attributes to the love and benevolence of Proclus and the people of Constantinople. But I am not of Socrates's opinion: For although in affairs of this nature, the affections of Men have some effect; yet Divine Justice and Providence, whereby the Church is governed, does always over-rule. Origen therefore was condemned for his heterodox Opinions; and Johannes Chrysostome, being consecrated for his Integrity of Life and Doctrine, continues in the Church to this very day. Valef.

C H A P. XLVI.

Concerning the Death of Paulus Bishop of the Novatianists, and concerning Marcianus who was his Successor.

SOME little time after the removal of Johannes's body, died Paulus also, Bishop of the Novatianists, in the same Consulate, about the twenty first day of July: Who at his own Funeral reduced all the disagreeing Heresies into one Church in a manner: For they all accompanied his body to the * Grave with singing of Psalms: because whist he lived, all [Sects] loved him exceedingly for his † Sanctity of life. But because the same Paulus performed a memorable action just before his death, I judge it useful to insert it into this History, for their advantage who shall peruse this Work. For, that during his sickness he observ'd his usual Ascetic [discipline as to his] diet, and transgressed not in the least [the rules] thereof; and, that he never omitted performing the [usual] prayers with a fervency; [all this] I think fit to leave unmention'd; left by spending time in giving a narrative hereof, I should obscure that memorable and most useful action (as I have said) which he performed. What that is, must now be declared. Being near dying, he sent for all the Presbyters belonging to the Churches under him, to whom he express himself thus: Take care about electing a Bishop [over your selves] whilst I am alive; left afterwards your Churches be disturbed. When they made answer, that the election of a Bishop was not to be left to them: for in regard [I said they] some of us have one Sentiment, others another, we shall never nominate the same person: But we wish, that you your self would name that Man whom you desire [to be your Successor.] To which Paulus made this return: Deliver me then this Profession of yours in writing [to wit,] that you will elect him whom I shall appoint to be chosen. When they had done that, and confirmed it by their subscriptions, (a) he sat on his bed, and (without discovering it to those who were present, wrote Marcianus's name in the paper. This Person had been promoted to the Presbyterate; and likewise had been instructed in an Ascetic course of life under Paulus: but was then gone to travel. After this he sealed up the

(a) Ἀναξιδίας τῆς κλίνης. In Nicéphorus's 'tis ἐπεγραφίδας, he sate upon; in which Author these Words are added ἡ χεῖρ τοῦ λαοῦ, and having taken the Paper: which seem altogether necessary. Valef.

Theod. Jun.
and Valen-
tinianus.

the Paper himself, and caused the chief of the Presbyters to seal it up also, and then deliver'd it to one Marcus, (who was Bishop of the Novatianists in Scythia, but had at that time made a journey to Constantinople;) to whom he spake these words: *If God shall permit me to continue much longer in this life, restore this * Depositum to me [now] committed to your trust to be kept safely. But, if it shall please him to remove me out of this World, in this Paper you will find whom I have elected to be my Successor in the Bishoprick.* When he had spoken these words, he died. On the third day therefore after his death, when they had unsealed the Paper in the presence of a great multitude, and found Marcianus's name therein, they all cried out that he was a worthy and fit Person. And without delay they dispatch'd away some Messengers who might seize him. They took him by a pious fraud at his Residence in Tiberiopolis [a City] of Phrygia; from whence they brought him along with them, and about the twenty first (b) of our M.S. the same Month ordained, and placed him in the Episcopal Chair. But enough concerning these things.

(b) Altho' our M.S. Copies alter not the reading here; yet I agree with Christopherson and Sir Henry Savil, who have mended it thus [of the month August]. Doubtless, in regard Paulus Bishop of the Novatianists died on the twenty first of July, and the Paper wherein he had named Marcianus to be his Successor, was unsealed three days after his death, as Socrates has told us before; 'tis not to be supposed, that Marcianus could be ordained Bishop on the twenty first of the same month, to wit, July, in regard he absconded in Tiberiopolis a City of Phrygia: from whence he was to be brought to Constantinople, that he might be there constituted Bishop of the Novatianists. Valef.

C H A P. XLVII.

That the Emperor Theodosius sent his Wife Eudocia to Jerusalem.

Moreover, the Emperor Theodosius offer'd up his Thanksgivings to God for the Benefits which he had conferr'd upon him. And this he performed, by honouring Christ with singular and eminent Honours. He likewise sent his Wife Eudocia to Jerusalem (a) For she had obliged her self also to a performance of this Vow, if she might see her Daughter married. But the Empress herself also * beautified the Churches at Jerusalem, and all those in the Eastern Cities, with various Ornaments, both when she went thither, and likewise at her return.

(a) Instead of [x] 38 dñd, for she had obliged her self; that is, Eudocia. Thus Epiphanius Scholasticus read, as appears from his Version; whi h is thus, Hoc enim & ipsa votum habuerat, si filiam videret nupram, For she herself also had [made] this vow, if she might see her Daughter married. Valef.

C H A P. XLVIII.

Concerning Thalassius Bishop of Caesarea in Capadocia.

Theod. Jun.
and Valen-
tinianus.

About that very time, to wit, in Theodosius's seventeenth Consulate, Proclus the Bishop attempted a wonderful thing, the like to which has not been performed by any of the Ancient Bishops. For Firmus Bishop of Caesarea in Capadocia being dead, the Caesareans came [to Constantinople,] and requested they might have a Bishop. And whilst Proclus was considering whom he should prefer to that See, it hapned that all the Senators came to the Church on the Sabbath, to give him a visit, amongst whom was (a) Thalassius also, a personage who had born a Prefecture over the Provinces and Cities of Illyricum. But [though] (as it was reported) he had been the Perlon pitch'd upon who was about to have the Government of the Eastern parts committed to his care by the Emperor; [yet] Proclus laid his Hands on him, and instead of his being constituted a Praefectus Praetorio, made him Bishop of Caesarea. Thus successful and prosperous were the Affairs of the Church. But I will here close my History, with my Prayers [to God,] that the Churches in all places, the Cities, and Provinces may live in peace. For, as long as peace flourishes, those that are desirous to do it, will have no subject for their writing an History. For we ourselves (who have perform'd what you enjoynd us in Seven Books, O Sacred Man of God, Theodosius!) should have wanted matter for this our History, if the Lovers of Seditions and Tumults would have been quiet. This Seventh Book contains [an account of Affairs transacted during] the space of two and thirty years. The whole History, which is comprized in Seven Books, contains the space of an hundred and forty years. It begins from the first year of the two hundredth seventy first Olympiad, wherein Constantine was proclaimed Emperor; and ends at the second year of the three hundredth and fifth Olympiad, wherein the Emperor Theodosius bore his seventeenth Consulate. Which action of Proclus's Socrates does not without cause wonder at, as new, and not practis'd by former Bishops. Nestarius indeed, when he was Praetor of Constantinople, had been created Bishop of that City. But, the Emperor's consent had been a first obtain'd, as Socrates has told us before. But here Proclus, merely by his own impulse, laid his Hands on a Praefectus Praetorio, who by the Emperor had been design'd to the Government of the Oriental Prefecture. Notwithstanding, it is to be understood, that the Emperor's consent was afterwards obtained, who approved of what Proclus had done. But, in promoting inferior Magistrates to Ecclesiastick Degrees, the Prince's consent was in no wise necessary. For the Praefectus Praetorio's approbation was sufficient, under whose dispose the Presidents of Provinces were. We have an eminent instance hereof in the Life of St. Germanus Altitiodorensis, which was written by Constantian Presbyter. Which Germanus being President of a Province, and Ambrosius Bishop of Altissiodorum [a City in France, now call'd Auxerre] having a mind to appoint him his Successor; Ambrosius procur'd the consent of Julius, Praefectus Praetorio of the Gallia's, before he attempted to do that; as 'tis related in Book 1. chap. 3. concerning the Life of St. Germanus. Further, thi: Thalassius Bishop of Caesarea was present at the false Synod at Ephesus [conven'd] against Flavianus, as we are inform'd from the Acts of the said Synod, which are recorded in the first Action of the Chalcedon Council. Valef.

The End of Socrates Scholasticus's Ecclesiastick History.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY

O F

Evagrius Scholafticus
EPIPHANIENSIS,
(And [One] of the EX-PRÆFECTS,)
IN SIX BOOKS.

Translated out of the GREEK, according to that Edition fet forth by VALESIIUS, and Printed at PARIS in the Year 1673.

Together with

VALESIIUS's Annotations on the said Historian ; which are done into ENGLISH, and set at their proper places in the Margin.

Hereunto also is annexed an Account of the foresaid Historian's Life, and Ecclesiastick History, Collected by VALESIIUS, and Rendred into ENGLISH.

---

L O N D O N :

Printed by J. M. for A. and J. Churchill, at the Black Swan in Pater-Noster-Row. M DCC VIII.

V A L E S I U S S A C C O U N T

OF THE

L I F E,

AND

Ecclesiastick History,

OF

EVAGRIUS SCHOLASTICUS Epiphanienfis.

Evagrius Scholasticus was by Nation a Syrian, as was also † Theodoret: Born at Epiphania † He was (which was a City of Syria Secunda;) as he himself has declared in the Title of his <sup>Bishop of</sup> own Work. Therefore I wonder at Gerardus Vossius, who (in his Book de Historicis <sup>Cyrenz and</sup> Græcis, pag. 498,) relates that Evagrius was born at Antioch. <sup>set about</sup> But Evagrius himself, (both in the Title of his History, and also in his <sup>writing an</sup> Third Book, Chap. 34,) does expressly attest that he was born at Epiphania. For, speaking there concerning Cosmas Bishop of Epiphania, his Words are these; Κοσμάς τῆς ἡμετέρας ἐπαρχίας Ἐπιφανείας, ἡ τὴν δεξιὰν αὐτοῦ ἐχει, &c. Cosmas Bishop of our Epiphania, in the Vicinage whereof runs the [River] Orontes, &c. Besides, Photius (in his Bibliotheca, chap. 29,) affirms that Evagrius was born in Epiphania, a City of Syria-Cæle. But, which is strange, Nicephorus Callistus does in two places term our Evagrius (not Epiphanienfis, but) Ἐπιφανί, that is Illu-

<sup>trius</sup> Ecclesiastick History. (which Valeſius has publish'd with the other Greek Historians of the Church) towards the latter end of Theodosius Junior's Reign, at the same time that Socrates and Sozomen wrote theirs. He began where they did, (to wit, from those times whereat Eusebius closed his History;) and ended with them, viz. at the latter end of Theodosius Junior's Empire. 'Tis more than probable, that he wrote after Socrates and Sozomen. For (1) all the Ancients were of this Opinion: (2) He that reads his History, will find it nothing else but a Supplement of Socrates and Sozomen their Histories. (3) Theodoret himself, in the first Chapter of the first Book of his History, says these Words: τῆς Ἐκκλησιαστικῆς ἱστορίας τὰ λοιπὰ ἀναρτῶμαι προσποιεῖσθαι, I will attempt to commit to writing the Remains of Ecclesiastick History. (4) Lastly, He published his History after the Year of Christ 448. (as Valeſius demonstrates in his Preface before his History;) whereas Socrates and Sozomen had finished their Histories on the Severensish Consulate of Theodosius Jun. that is, in the Year of Christ 439. He is most particular in his Account of the Affairs of the Eastern Church, in regard he liv'd there. His Books of Ecclesiastick History are but five in number (as he himself intimates at the close of his fifth Book,) wherein he comprehends the Affairs translated in the Church, during the space of 105 Years.

ous. For, in Nicephorus's First Book, chap. 1. the words are these; ὁ γὰρ ἡμεῶν Ἐυάγριος ὁ Ἐπιφανίτης, &c. Moreover, Evagrius the Illustrious, &c. And, in Book 16. Chap. 31; Nicephorus quoting a passage of Evagrius, out of his Third Book, Chap. 34. (which passage I have just now mentioned) expresses himself thus, οὕτως δὲ ὁ Ἐυάγριος ὁ Ἐπιφανίτης καὶ αὐτοῦ ἱστορεῖ, Moreover, in like manner as Evagrius the Illustrious has related concerning Severus. But my Sentiment is, that Transcribers have mistook at both those places, and have written Ἐπιφανίτης [Illustrious] instead of Ἐπιφανείας [Epiphanienfis.]. Doubtless, Nicephorus might have been evidently inform'd, from Evagrius's own Words which he there produces, (which we have also quoted above,) that Evagrius had been born at Epiphania. Further, Evagrius was born in the Reign of Justinianus Augustus, on the Year of Our Lord 536, or 537, as I have demonstrated from Evagrius's own Testimony, in my † Notes on Book 4. Chap. 29. of his History. On the Year of † See Eva- Christ 540, his Parents committed him to the care of a School-Master, that he might learn the grius's Ec- clesiastick Letters. At which time (when Thomas Bishop of Apamia had given notice to the History, Book 4. Neighbouring Cities, that on a set Day he should show the enlivening Wood of the Cross, chap. 29. which was kept at Apamia;) Evagrius was lead to that City by his Parents, and with Note (f.) his own Eyes saw that Miracle, which was then perform'd in the Church; as himself at- tests tells in his Fourth Book, Chap. 26. Now, this happened on the Year of Christ, 540 3, when the Persians, having made an irruption into Syria, had burnt Antioch: which was done in Justinus Junior's Consulate, as we are informed by Marsellinus Comes, and Marius in his Chronicon. Two years after this, when † The Lues Inguinaria began to rage in the East, Evagrius was as yet under in a School-Master, learning the Letters, and was seized by that Pestilence, as he himself attests, Book 4.

The Life of Evagrius Scholasticus.

 chap 29. Having afterwards left the Schools of the Grammarians, he betook himself to the Study in of Rhetorick. And when he had made a great proficiency in that Art, he was registered * amongst the company of Advocates. Whence he got the Appellation of Scholasticus: which term signifies

† The Plague in the Groyne.
* Or, in the number.

† ὁ ὕψιστος μαθὼν περὶ ἡμῶν, ἀπερχέσθαι καὶ μεμνημένοι ταύτης· ἵνα ὅταν ἡμεῖς ἐκείνῳ πρῶτον ἀπερχέσθαι ἐν τῷ ὄρει τῶν ῥωμαίων, καὶ ἐν τοῖς ὅλοις τῶν ἐθνῶν. πάλιν ἐκεῖ ὅταν ἡμεῖς πρῶτον ἀπερχέσθαι ἐν τῷ ὄρει τῶν περὶ ἡμεῖς ὄντων, καὶ ἐν πόλει ἐκεῖ ὅταν ἐκείνῳ ἀπερχέσθαι ὅταν ὅταν ἡμεῖς ὁλοκληρώσθαι, ὅταν ὅτι διελθόντων ἀρχαῖς καὶ ἐκείνῳ ἐν ταῖς πόλεσιν ἐκεῖ ἡμεῖς πρῶτον, τότε τὴν πόλιν ἡμεῖς. Καὶ ὅταν ἡμεῖς ἀρχῶν, λαμβάνει καὶ τοὺς βοῦν τὸ σωματικὸν ἐσθλόν.

Valefius quotes this passage out of Macarius, in his Notes on Socrates, book 6. chap. 6. Note (f.)

See Note (b) in that chapter. Evagrius, Book 1. * chap. 18: "Tis certain, he could not be an Advocate at Epiphania, (which, as we have declared already, was the place of his Nativity;) in regard that City had no Judiciary Forum, but brought its Causes to Apania, in which City the Consularis of Syria Secunda held a Court of Judicature. But, for my believing Evagrius to have been an Advocate at Antioch, rather than at Apania, this is my chief Reason; because he was mostly conversant in that City, where he married a Wife also, and begat Sons of her. He married a Daughter likewise in that City, as himself attests in his Fourth Book, chap. 29. And after she, together with her Son, had ended her Life by the Pestilential disease, on the 1st year of Mauricius, Evagrius, deprived of his Wife and Children, re-married, and took to Wife a young Virgin in that City, as he relates B.6.ch.8. Where he attests also, that the whole City kept holiday on that account, and celebrated a publick Festivity. * both in Pom-

Turn in Pomp,
 both in Pomp.
 * See note
 (b) in this chapter.

pous Shows, and also about his marriage-bed. Whence 'tis by the way apparent, how great his authority was at Antioch. Moreover, he wrote his History at Antioch, as may be Collected from the twentieth * chapter of his First Book. Where speaking concerning the Empress Eudocia's Jerusalem-journey, he says, she came to Antioch: ἡ χερσὶν ὑπερὸν ὅτι τὴν ἀγίαν ἱεροπόλιν Χερσὶν αὐτῇ Θεῷ ὑψίστῳ, ὁδῶντος τοῦ πνεύματος, that is, a long time afterwards, in her journey which she made to the Holy City of Christ our God, she [Eudocia] comes hither, (to wit, to Antioch.) Evagrius therefore liv'd at Antioch when he wrote this History. Hence 'tis that Evagrius is so diligent in recounting the Works and Publick Edifices of the City Antioch; as may be seen in his First Book, chap. 18, and in his Third Book, chap. 28. At which places he does not obscurely intimate, that he liv'd at Antioch, whilest he wrote these things. Hence 'tis also, that he mentions with so much care and diligence, the Earth quakes, wherewith Antioch was now and then shaken: and that in the Notation of the times he always makes use of the Antiochian Years. Lastly, this may be Collected from the seventh chapter of his Sixth Book, where he relates, that Gregorius Patriarch of Antioch (having been accused of Incest, before Johannes, Comes of the East, by a Silver-smith,) appealed to the Emperor, and to a Synod. And when he went to Constantinople, in order to the prosecution of his his Cause before the Emperor and Synod, he took Evagrius along with him, as his Affessor and Councillor, that he might make use of his advice. By which Words Evagrius does plainly enough declare himself to have been an Advocate and a Lawyer. For Affessors were wont to be taken out of their Body, as well by the Civil as Military Magistrates. Nor was Evagrius Councillor to Gregorius in this criminal Affair only, but in other Causes also. For in regard Gregorius was Patriarch of the Oriental Church, and * could not but have the Examination of many Causes every Day, he must necessarily stand in need of some Affessor, who might suggest to him the Forms of Right and of the Laws. Indeed, Evagrius's Words do fully declare what I have to have,

O, rough
 &c.

Causes every Day, he must necessarily stand in need of some Affessor, who might suggest to him the Forms of Right and of the Laws. Indeed, Eoagrius's Words do fully declare what I have

§ See Evagrius book
 6, chap. 7. Eu-
grius book
 6, chap. 24.
 † That is,
 the Volume
 of Relations,
Letters,
 &c.

The Life of Evagrius Scholasticus.

not without the consent of Gregorius the Patriarch, in the Reign of Tiberius Constantinus; he had the Dignity of a Quæstorius bestow'd upon him by the same Emperor. And not long after, when he had made an Oration concerning the Praises of Mauricius Augustus, on account of the Birth of the most noble Child Theodosius, he receiv'd the Codicills of a Præfecture from the same Mauricius; as he himself attests at the close of his History. Evagrius's Words there are thus translated by Christophorus: Pro quibus duos honoris gradus consecuti sumus: Quæsturam à Tiberio Constantino, & minus Tabularum servandarum, in quibus Præfectorum nomina inscribebantur, à Mauricio Tiberio. For which we have obtained two Degrees of Honour: A Quæsture of Tiberius Constantinus, and the Office of keeping the Tables, wherein the Names of the Præfects were inscribed, of Mauricius Tiberius. Which ill Rendition deceived Gerardus Vossius and Philippus Labbæus. For Vossius (in his * Book de Historicis Græcis), treading in Christophorus's steps, says thus: Pro duobus autem bisce * Libris ait gemino se honore esse affectum. Nam à Tiberio Constantino Quæsturâ fuisse ornatum * Pat. 274. Edit. Ludg. Bat. 1651. Sed à Mauricio consecutum esse, ut Tabulis publicis præset: Now, for these two Books, he says, he had a double Honour conferred on himself. For he was honoured [as he saith] with a Quæsture by Tiberius Constantinus: And, that he obtained of Mauricius, the having the charge of the public Tables. But Philippus Labbæus (in his Dissertation de Scripturis Ecclesiasticis), hath interpolated Christophorus's Version after this manner: Seque duos honoris gradus ait consecutum * Repaired, or, put a new face upon. ad Tiberio Constantino ad Quæsturam evectum; tum à Mauricio munus adeptum servandarum Tabularum, in quibus non tam nomina, quam ipsa Præfectorum acta inscribebantur: And he says that he himself obtained two Degrees of Honour: And in the first place, that he was preferred to a Quæsture by Tiberius Constantinus; and secondly, That he procured of Mauricius the Office of keeping the public Tables, wherein not only the Names, but the Acts of the Præfects were inscrib'd. Museus has done much better, who hath render'd the Passage in Evagrius thus: Quarum etiam Gratiâ duas dignitates sumus consecuti: à Tiberio Constantino Quæstoratum largiente, Mauricio vero Tiberio Literas Hyparchicas mittente, on account of which [Volume of Relations, Letters, &c.] *we have obtained two Dignities: [one] from Tiberius Constantinus, who gave us a Quæstorate; and [another] from Mauricius Tiberius, who sent us his Hyparchicall Letters. He would have said, The Codicills of a Præfecture, which the Latines term * Letters also, as I have long since observ'd* * Or, Lett. terr. Pa. centi. himself à τῷ βασιλεῖ, [one] of the Ex-Præfects, because he had been rewarded with the Codicills, of an honorary Præfecture by the Emperour. After this, the same Evagrius published Six Books of Ecclesiastick History, beginning from those times wherein Theodoret and Socrates had closed their Histories; that is, from the Ephesine Synod, wherein Nestorius was condemned and deposed: to wit, from the Year of Christ 431. And he has continued his History to the twelfth Year of the Emperor Mauricius, which was the Year of our Lord 594. In his Third Book, at Chap. 33, speaking concerning Severus Bishop of Antioch, he says that at such time as he wrote these Things it was the Six hundredth forty first year of the Antiochians. In regard therefore the Antiochian-Hæra precedes that of our Saviour's Nativity forty eight Years; if from the number 641 we subtract 48 Years, it will be the Year of Christ 594. The same may also be Collected from Book 4. Chap. 29. where Evagrius writes, that whilest he penned this History, that Plague in the Groyne, which had almost wholly destroy'd the whole World, had already rag'd two and fifty Years. Now, this Plague began to rage two Years after Antioch had been taken by the Persians, that is, in the Year of Christ 542. To which number of Years if you add 52, it will be made the Year of Christ 594. Further, Evagrius's diligence is chiefly to be commended, because, undertaking to write an Ecclesiastick History, he made a Collection of whatever was pertinent to that Subject, out of the best Writers, to wit, Priscus, Johannes, Zacharias, Eustathius, and Procopius [who were all] Rhetoricians. His Style likewise is not to be found fault with. For it has as a Beauty and Elegancy; as Photius does also attest. But the chief thing commendable in Evagrius is, that of all the Greek Writers of Ecclesiastick History, he is the only Person, who has kept the Doctrine of the true Faith intire and undefil'd; as (after Photius's Baronius has observ'd in his Annals. Notwithstanding, he deserves Reproof for this, viz. because he has not used so much diligence in searching out the Monuments of Ecclesiastick Antiquity, as in reading Profane Writers. Indeed, almost the whole Sixth Book is spent in a Narrative of the Persian War. Besides, his Style in many places is Redundant and Luxuriant, as Photius has truly remark'd in his Bibliotheca. An Instance of which superfluity of Expression you have in Book 1. Chap. 2. where he speaks concerning Nestorius after this manner: Ἡ δὲ τοῦτο γλῶσσα, καὶ κατὰ δόξαν συνέειρον, &c. that Tongue full of Hostility against God, that second Sambedrim of Caiphas, &c. and, in Book 2. Chap. 3. where he describes S<sup>t</sup> Euphemia's Church, which was at Chalcedon: The same redundancy of Style, the Studious Reader will of himself easily observe, in many other places.

Moreover, R. Stephens was the first Person that Printed Evagrius's History in Greek, from one only Manuscript Copy belonging to the Kings Library, which Manuscript is very new, and not extraordinary good. For in many places 'tis defective and imperfect. But we have mended and perfected Evagrius's History in so many places, from two Manuscript Copies of the best note, that it may seem now to have been first publish'd. The first of the Copies was the Florent. Manuscript, [taken] out of S<sup>t</sup> Laurence's Library, which the most famous Michael Erminius compared with the Geneva Edition, and sent me the Various Readings written out with his own Hand. On which account I profess my self very much obliged

M m

The Life of Evagrius Scholasticus.

obliged to him. This Manuscript is the best and ancientest of all the Copies of Evagrius. For 'tis written in Parchment, [and was transcribed] about five hundred Years since more or less, as I have been inform'd by one that saw it, viz. Emericus Bigotius, an excellent Scholar, and a Person who has deserved well of Learning: By whose Favour and Intervention I receiv'd the fore-mention'd Various Readings, sent by the most famous Michael Erminius. In the same Florentine Manuscript, some not unlearned Scholæ were written in the Margin, which we have put into our Annotations, in their due places. But, the Reader is to take notice, that in this Florentine Manuscript is contain'd Socrates Scholasticus's History also, the various Readings whereof of the same Erminius sent me long since, written out with his own Hand; as I have attested above four Years since, in that Preface I prefixt before my Edition of Socrates and Sozomen. The second Manuscript Copy was taken out of the Library of that most Illustrious Prelate Dionysius Tellerius, Arch-Bishop of Rheims: This is no very ancient Copy; but 'tis a good One, and transcrib'd by the Hand of a Learned Man. This Copy was of great use to us in many places, as we have now and then shewn in our Annotations.

---

THE
FIRST BOOK
OF THE Ecclesiastical History
OF
EVAGRIUS SCHOLASTICUS Epiphanienſis,
And [one] of the EX-PRÆFECTS.

The Writers Preface [wherein he declares] on what account he betook himself to the Writing of this present History.

EUSEBIUS Surnamed PAMPHILUS, a Person both eminently Eloquent as to other things, and so powerful in his Writings also, that by his Persuasions he might be able (if not to render them (a) perfectly Orthodox, yet) to prevail upon his Readers so far as to embrace our [Sentiments:] Eusebius surnamed Pamphilus [I say,] Sozomen, Theodoret, and Socrates, not Christian in the best and most accurate manner have set forth in Writing, both the Advent of [our] Compassionate God amongst us, and his Ascent into the Heavens; and also those things which the Divine Apostles, and other Martyrs have courageously performed in their Combats [in defence of the Faith;] Moreover, whatever else hath been transacted by those of our Religion, whether praise-worthy, or otherwise, till some (b) part of the Emperor Theodosius's Reign. But, in regard no Person hath hitherto given an orderly Narrative of the Transactions that hapned afterwards, which [notwithstanding] are not much inferior to them; I have resolved (though I am but little versed in such things,) to undertake this Work, and to compile an History of those Affairs; being very confident, that by his assistance, who infused Wisdom into Fishermen, and made the Tongue of a Brute utter an articulate Voice; I shall raise Affairs already buried in Oblivion, give Life to them by my Discourse, and render them immortal by an [eternal] Commemoration: to the end that every one of my Readers may know, what [has been done,] when, where, how, against whom, and by whom Affairs have been transacted, until our own times: And [to the end that] nothing worthy to be remembered, may lie concealed by a remis and dissolute Slob, and (which is its next Neighbour,) Oblivion. Divine Assistance therefore being my Guide, I will begin, where the Authors I have already mentioned, closed their History.

perly termed ἀνεκλόγητος. Photius (in his Bibliotheca) speaks thus concerning Socrates Scholasticus, ἀνεκλόγητος ὁ δὲ τὸν διῃκουσιν ὁ ἄλλος ἐπὶ ἀνεκλόγητος. Moreover in his Sentiments he is not very Orthodox. The meaning of this place therefore, is this: Eusebius (although he be very fit to persuade his Readers to embrace the Christian Religion, yet) is not able to make them very accurate in the Doctrine of the Christian Faith, in regard he himself seems to have inclined towards the opinion of the Arians. For, this was the Sentiment of many Persons concerning Eusebius Pamphilus; whom I have sufficiently answered, in the Preface I have written to the same Eusebius's Ecclesiastick History. Valef.

(b) The Word [ἡμεῖς, pari] is wanting in the Kings, in the Florentine, and in the Tellerian M. SS. nor is it in Robert Stephens's Edition. The Geneva-Primmers were the first that put in this Word, from Christopherson's Copy, the Various Readings whereof are extant at the end of the Cologne-Edition. Christopherson has expressed this Word in his Version. For thus he renders it: Ad aliquam partem Regni Theodosii, so some part of Theodosius's Reign. But it seems more elegant to me, to suppress, rather than add this Word. If a Word must be added, I had rather add ἡμεῖς, time. Valef.

CHAP. I.

That, after the Destruction of the impious Julian, when the Heresies had been a little quieted, * the Devil afterwards disturbed the Faith again.

WHEN the impiety of Julian had now been drowned in the blood of the Martyrs, and Arius's madness bound in the Fetters made at Nicæa; and when Eunomius and Macedonius, (a) driven away by the Holy Spirit [as it were] (a) ἐκ τῆς ἁγίας πνεύματος, Christopherson and Sir Henry Savil have mended it thus, ἐκ τῆς ἁγίας πνεύματος, compelled, or, rejected by force. But, that reading it much better, which the Florentine and Tellerian MSS. give us, to wit, ἐκ τῆς ἁγίας πνεύματος, driven away — as it were by an invincible wind. 'Tis a Metaphor taken from Shipwreck'd Persons who are driven away by the violence of a Storm. Evagrius compares the Holy Spirit to a wind, by the force whereof Eunomius and Macedonius being driven away, were at length Shipwreck'd at Constantinople, to wit, condemn'd in the Constantinopolitan Synod: Valef.

by an impetuous wind,] had been shipwreck'd about the Bosphorus, and at the sacred City Constantinople: when the Holy Church having laid aside her late filth, and recovering* her pristine beauty and gracefulness, was clothed† in a fine, &c. vesture of gold wrought about with divers colours; and made fit for her Lover and [Celestial] Bridegroom: the Devil, Virtue's enemy, unable to bear this, raised a new and || unusual kind of war against us; condemning the worship of Idols, which now lay trampled under foot, and abandoning Arian's servile madness. He was indeed afraid of making an attack against [our] Faith, [openly] as an enemy, in regard it was fortified by so many and such eminent Holy Fathers; and [because] he had lost many of his Forces in the Siege thereof. But he attempts this business in such a method [rather] as thieves make use of, by inventing certain Questions and Answers, whereby he in a new manner* perverted the erroneous to Judaism; the Wretch being insensible that he should be foil'd† even this

For, that one (b) term, which before he had made the sharpest resistance against, he now admires and embraces: rejoicing mightily (tho' he could not wholly *vanquish us, yet) that he was able to adulterate even but one word. Having therefore many times (c) wound up himself within his own malice, he (d) invented the change of one letter, which might indeed †lead to one and the same sense, but notwithstanding would separate the understanding from the tongue; left with both they should confess and glorify God in a concordant and agreeable manner. Further, in what manner each of these things was perform'd, and what conclusion they had, I will declare in their due places and times. Wherefore† to I will likewise add whatever else I could find worthy to be related, altho' it may seem foreign to my subject; [resolving] (e) to close my History where it shall seem good to the compassionate and propitious Deity.

* Or, re-
dressed.
† Or, even from hence.
way.
(b) He means the term Homoiou-tous, [that is,
move.
* Or, remove.
† Or, re-
draw.
For the malignant Devil made his chiefest resistance against this word,
in regard it was the Beeftom as it were of all Heresies, and therefore† to I will likewise add whatever else I could find worthy
to be related,
altho' it may seem foreign to my subject;
[resolving] (e)
to close my History where it shall seem good to the compassionate and propitious Deity.

(c) Ἰαυ-αριώδους
a term used to denote the manner how a serpent moves; which is incomparably well express'd by Virgil, in these words,
— *Sinuatusq; immensa volumine terga,
And he winds up his vast Back in a Roll, or, Volume.*

(d) Instead of [ἰερέως] I had rather make it [ἱερέως]; as it is in the Tellerian MS. Further, 'tis very intricate, what word Eusebius should mean here. The term Homoioutous, [that is, of the substance, or, essence] might indeed be meant. But, because in this word there is an addition (rather than a change) of one Letter, [to wit, of the Letter ι]; therefore the Propositions [ἔξ, and ἐν], that is, [of, and in] are rather to be meant; which Propositions raised great Stirs and Commotions in the Church, on account of the Eusebian Heresy; some affirming that Christ was to be adored, [as subsisting] of two natures, others, [as subsisting] in two natures. Valef.

(e) This place wants not difficulty. Amulius renders it thus: Ubi absolutum hanc historiam benigno Deo commendavero, Where I shall have commended this completed History to the benign God. But this rendition is not to be born with: Therefore Christophorus has translated it otherwise, to wit, after this manner: Itaque finem scribendi faciam, ubi Deo clementi ac propitio visum fuerit, And there I will make an end of writing, where it shall seem good to the mild and propitious God. But, neither does this translation fully satisfy me: For, first, Eusebius says not, αὐτὸς ἐν ἑαυτῷ, in the future tense, but αὐτὸς ἐν ἑαυτῷ, in the present tense. Secondly, I do not remember that I ever read this phrase [αὐτὸς ἐν ἑαυτῷ] in such a sense as to import, to finish an History. Ἀποτίθησθαι signifies properly recondere, to lay up: whence ἀποτίθησθαι imports a repository, or, store-cell for Wines. It signifies also to lay on the ground, or, deposit in a monument. Ἐπιτίθησθαι in his Lexicon renders ἀποτίθησθαι by ἐκτίθησθαι, to erect. The same Ἐπιτίθησθαι αὐτὸς ἐν ἑαυτῷ does signify ἐκτίθησθαι, to expose, or, set forth. Ἐκτίθησθαι signifies is contrary to the former. Ἐκτίθησθαι, to hide, and to set forth, or, promulge, are contrary the one to the other. I had rather therefore render this passage of Eusebius thus: Historiam edidimus, quando clementi placeret Deo, [and] shall put forth my History, when it shall please the gracious God. Notwithstanding, if any one shall prefer Christophorus's Version, I will not much resist it. 'Tis certain, Eusebius (in the seventh Chapter of his first Book) uses these words, † ὅταν ἀποτίθῃς, so as to signify, he ended his life. Nevertheless, in the thirteenth Chapter of this Book, Eusebius uses this word in this sense, viz. to relate, or, set forth. For thus he says, † ἀποτίθῃς, αὐτὸς ἐν ἑαυτῷ, † ἀποτίθῃς, αὐτὸς ἐν ἑαυτῷ, &c. Moreover, Theodosius also wrote, and elegantly set forth, [or, related,] &c. And in the 11th Chapter of this Book, ἀποτίθῃς is used in the same sense, instead of ἐκτίθῃς, he set forth. Alid in the beginning of his second Book, Eusebius uses ἀποτίθῃς, instead of ἐκτίθῃς, he will set forth. Valef.

CHAP. II.

How Nestorius was detected by his Disciple Anastasis, who in his Sermon, term'd the Holy Mother of God, not * Theotocos, but † That is, † Christotocos: for which reason [Nestorius] was pronounced an Heretick.

For as much as Nestorius (that tongue full of hostility against God, that second Sannedrim of Caiphas; that shop of blasphemy, wherein Christ is again (a) bargain'd for, and sold; (a) Suppohis natures being divided and torn in vnder, of whom not one bone had been broken on the very Cross it self, according as it is written; nor had his woven-coat in any wife been rent by the murderers of God) has rejected and abandon'd in the term Theotocos, ([a word] long since framed by many of the [most] approv'd Fathers by [the inspiration of] the Holy Spirit;) and, instead thereof, has coin'd and form'd [the term]
Christotocos, an adulterate coin [as it were, thus: offistamp'd by himself: and has refilled the Church with innumerable wars, making an inundation of civil blood therein: I shall not, I suppose, want matter agreeable and fit for the composition of an History, nor [shall I despair] of bringing it to a conclusion, if (by the cooperation of Christ, who is God above all) I shall begin from the blasphemy of the impious Nestorius. Now, the war of the Churches had its original from hence. [There was] one (b) g-Anastasis a Presbyter, (a person of a very unsound opinion, an ardent lover of Nestorius's and his Jewish sentiments) who had accompanied Nestorius in the journey he made in order to [his entering upon] the Bishoprick [of Constantinople].
In which journey (having had a conference with Qui Theodorus at Mopsuestia, and heard his opinions,) in qua Christus demum cruciatur & divenditur, instruxit; who furnished up a shop of Blasphemy, wherein Christ is again killed and sold. Neither of these have they rendered it well: For, neither is there any such Greek word as εὐνοειναι. I wonder at Sir Henry Savile, who set this most ridiculous commendation of Christophorus, at the margin of his Copy. It should have been rendered thus, That shop of Blasphemy, wherein Christ is again bargain'd for, and sold at a price. For εὐνοειναι signifies properly, I make a bargain; and εὐνοειναι is a bargain, or, agreement; as it is in the old Gloss. Which term occurs frequently in the Books of the Greek Luxur. Valef.

(b) This Anastasis was Symeon to Nestorius Bishop of Constantinople. Which is attested by Theophanes in his Chronicon, and by Anastasis Bibliothecarius. For the Patriarch had their Symeon (that is, those that kept in the same Cell with them, or those that dwelt with them) whom they chose out of the Order of Presbyters. So, in the Epistle of the Constantinopolitan Synod to Hormisdas Bishop of Rome, about the Election of Epiphanius Patriarch of Constantinople: which Epistle Baronius records at the year of Christ 530. Amongst the Legates sent from the Synod, is named Asterianus Presbyter of the Greater Church, and Co-habitator, [that is, the person who dwelt with him] to Epiphanius the Patriarch. Epiphanius himself also had formerly been Presbyter and Symeon to John, Patriarch of Constantinople, as Diogenes attests in his Epistle to Pope Hormisdas. Lastly, John had also been Presbyter and Symeon to Timothy, Patriarch of Constantinople; as Vidor Timonenus informs us in his Chronicon, in these words: Agapeto V. C. Cof. Timotheus C. P. Episcopus, Obrebellat Synodi Chalcedonensis, quinto die Aprilis occubuit, & Johannes Cappadox in cella propria atque Presbytero Episcopatum tradidit; [on 5th April, mend it thus, & Johanni Cappadoci Synello proprio agapeto Presbytero]

Church, pag. 32. Edit. Lond. 1680.) tells us, that the Greeks do still term this Sunday, καὶνὸν ἡμέραν, the New Sunday: and that 'tis also called ἡμέραν ἀνακαινιστικὴν. Meursius says it should be ἡμέραν ἀνακαινιστικὴν, that is, regenerating, or, renewing Sunday: See Meursius's Glossary, in the word ἀνακαινιστικὴν.

CHAPTER IV:

How Nestorius was deposed by the Synod, before the arrival of [the Bishop of] Antioch.

When therefore fifteen days were past beyond the day prefixt, the Bishops who had been called together for that reason (supposing that the Eastern [Bishops] would not come at all, or if they did, that much time would be spent before they could be got together) [meet together in one place] (a) the divine Cyrillus administering and the place of Caelestinus, who (as it has been said) governed the Bishoprick of the Elder Rome: they summon in Nestorius therefore, entreating him that he would give in his answer to [the accusations] brought against him: Who on the day before promised

Θεωρεῖται διακρίσεις, καὶ τὸν κατὰ τὴν τύπον, τῶν ἱεροποιῶν, ὡς ὀριστοῦ, τῆς ἀποστολικῆς ἐκείνης ἐκκλησιαστικῆς τῆς Divine Cyrillus admiringly, &c. In which clause (as the Learned Doctor Barrow remarks, in his Treat. of the Pope's Suprem. pag. 289.) a word seems to have fallen out. Zomaras (on the 1 Can. Synod. Ephes. Tom. 1.
 Edit. Bever. pag. 100.) explains this passage more plainly, in these words: Περὶ τῆς ἐκείνης ὁρίσθησαν πάντες τὸν ἐκ τῶν ἀποστόλων καὶ τῶν Πατρῶν ἀλλήλων ἀφ' ὧν ἐκείνη ἐστὶ καὶ τὸν τῶν κατὰ τὴν, The Holy Cyril Pope of Alexandria presiding over the Orthodox Fathers, and also holding the place of Celsine. And Photius thus: τὰ ῥήματα κατὰ τὴν ἐκείνην τῶν καθ' ἑαυτὸν καὶ παλαιῶν, [Cyril] supplied the feast at the person of Celestine [Bishop] of Rome. From which Authors
 'tis plain, that Cyrillus had the disposal of Celestine's single suffrage, and that Pope's legal concurrence with him in his Adings in that Synod: But Cyrillus had no Authoritative Precedency from Celestine, because the Pope could by no delegation impart that, himself having no title thereto, warranted by any Law, or by that President, thus depended on the will of the Emperors, who disposed of it according as they law reason. A notable instance whereof we meet with in the next Ephesine Synod (which in design was a general Synod, legally convened, though by some misarrangings it proved abortive,) mentioned by our Evagrius in the 10th Chapter of this Book: where, the Fulius, (or rather the same Pope Leo's Legate was present, yet by the Emperor's Order (see the words of his Letter, Syn. Chalced.
 Act. 1. p. 59. Disforis Bishop of Alexandria presided. Nicephorus Book 4. Chap. 34.) tells us, That in regard Celestine Bishop of Rome could not be present at this Synod, by reason of the dangers of such a voyage he made Cyrillus his Deputy: and that from this time Cyrillus, and the succeeding Bishops of Alexandria challenged the same Pope, &c. Doubtless Nicephorus is mistaken herein. For, Dionysius Alexandrinus (in his third Epist. to Philemon, part of which is quoted by Eusebius, Eccles. Hist. Book 3. c. 7.) mentioning Heracius, his Predecessor in the Alexandrian See, says these words concerning him: Ἰδὼν ἰσθὶ τὴν κατὰ τὴν τῶν τύπον παρὰ τὸ μακάριον ἡμῶν ἡμεῶν ἡμεῶν πατριάρχου, I received this Rule and Canon from Heraclius our Blessed Pope. And Athanasius (in his second Apologetic, Tom. 1. pag. 786. Edit. Paris, 1627.) has recorded an Epistle written to him from Hierbas, which has this title, Ἀθανασίῳ μακαρίῳ πατρί, To Athanasius the Blessed Pope. Therefore these words of Nicephorus are (as Valesius says truly in his Note here) inepta & fal-sissima, foolish and most untrue. And, that other remark of Valesius here, which he makes from the former part of the now cited passage in Nicephorus (to wit, that as well Nicephorus, as those from whom he borrowed this, doubted not but the Bishop of Rome was the Sovereign Judge of all the Churches;) is questionable no less foolish and false.
 'Tis indeed true, that the Bishops of Rome have some Centuries since claim'd an Authority not only of presiding in, but also of inditing and convening General Councils. But, how unjust this Claim is, as well in respect of Right, as Practice, will be evident to him, who with attention and consideration shall peruse these Ecclesiastical Histories. Look back to what Socrates says in the Proem to his fifth Book: οὐκ ἔστιν ὡς θεοὶ βασιλεῖς (says he) τῶν ἐκείνων ἐκκλησιῶν, &c.
 We do continually include the Emperors in this our History, because from such time as they began to embrace the Christian Religion, the affairs of the Church have depended on them, and the greatest Synods have been, and as this presents are convened by their determination and appointments. But, for a most full and compleat satisfaction in these points, viz. concerning the Bishop of Rome's Sovereign Power to indite and preside in General Councils: I refer the Reader to the Learned Dr. Barrow's Treatise of the Pope's Supremacy, pag. 274, &c.

to come, if there should be an occasion for it; but [afterwards] neglected to fulfil his promise; and having been thrice call'd, after that he appear'd not; [whereupon] the Bishops convened undertook the examination [of the matter.] And when Memnon Bishop of Ephesus had reckon'd up the days which had pass'd after the set day, [they were in number sixteen days;] and when the Letters of the divine Cyrillus, which had been written by him to Nestorius, and also Nestorius's [Letters] to Cyrillus had been read; moreover, when that sacred Letter of the famous Caesestinus, which he sent to the same Nestorius, had been annexed: Further, when Theodotus Bishop of Ancyra, and Acacius who presided over the * See of Melitina, * Or, Chair, had declared those blasphemous Expressions, which Nestorius had manifestly and openly belch'd forth at Ephesus: [lastly,] when many sayings of the holy and most approved Fathers, who have expounded the right and sincere Faith, had been joyn'd together; and also, when the various Blaphemies foolishly and madly utter'd by the impious Nestorius, and been reduced into an Order: [I say, after all these things had been done] the Holy Synod pronounced sentence [against Nestorius] in these express words: Moreover, in regard the most Reverend Nestorius would neither obey our Summons, nor admit the most Holy and most Religious Bishops sent by Us, We have been forced to proceed to an examination of his impious expressions. And having found, both from his Letters and Writings which have been recited, and also from his own words which he hath lately spoken in this Metropolis, [which expressions of his] have been confirm'd [by the testimony of many persons,] that his Sentiments and Doctrines are impious; being necessarily induced thereto, both by the [authority of the] Canons, and also by the Letter of our most Holy Father and Fellow-Minister Caesestinus Bishop of the Roman Church, after many tears we have proceeded to [the pronounciation of] this sad sentence. Therefore, Our Lord Jesus Christ, who has been blasphemed by him, hath determin'd by this present Holy Synod, that the same Nestorius is * divested of the Episcop<sup>al</sup> Or, sacerdotal Dignity, and [excluded from] all manner of Sacraments, of, strange

CHAP. V.

That Johannes [Bisshop] of Antioch, coming [to Ephefus] after five days, depofes Cy-rillus [Bifhop] of Alexandria, and Memnon [Bifhop] of Ephefus; whom the Synod pronounced innocent foon after, and depofed Johannes and his Party. And how, by [the interpoſition of] the Emperor Theodoſius, Cyrillus and Johannes were reconciled, and confirmed Neſtorius's Depoſition.

After this most legal and just Sentence, Fo- bannes [Bishop] of Antioch comes to Ephesus, together with the Prelates about him, arriving [there] five days after [Nestorius's] Disposition. And having convened * those [Bishops] of his Party, depose*s* Cyryllus and Memo- nion. But when Cyryllus and Memnon had presented Libelsto that Synod which had been convened with them, (although * Socrates, through ignorance, has related [this matter] otherwise,
Fobannes is summoned to give an account of that Depo-
* Or, ibid
+ See ibid
† See ibid
Book 7.
c. 34-nd
¶ ibid note
(b) in that
Chapter.

Deposition which he had made. Who not appearing after he had been thrice call'd, Cyrillus and Memnon are abolv'd from their Deposition: but Johannes and the [Bishops] of his party are separated from holy Communion, and from all sacerdotal Authority. [Further] Theodosius at first approv'd not of Nestorius's Deposition; but having afterwards been inform'd of his Blasphemy, when he had written very pious Letters to the Bishops, Cyrillus and Johannes, they come to a mutual Agreement, and confirm'd Nestorius's Deposition.

CHAPTER VI.

Concerning Paulus [Bishop] of Emisa's journey to Alexandria, and Cyrillus's commendation [of Johannes] on account of [his] Letter.

WHEN Paulus Bishop of Emisa was arrived at Alexandria, and had made a discourse, which is still extant, in the Church concerning this matter. At which time also Cyrillus, having highly commended Johannes's Letter, wrote word for word thus: † Let the

+ This letter of Cy-Haevens rejoice, and the Earth be glad. For ridito of the partition-wall is demolished, that which caused grief and sadness is ceased, and the occasion of all manner of dissension is taken away; in regard pag. 594. to his own Churches; and the most Religious Emperors, and most dear to God, have invired us in 1656. thereto. Who having been the most incomparable

* Or, mis- Emulators of their Ancestors piety, do preserve the true Faith firm and unshaken in their own Minds: and they take an exquisite care of the Holy Churches, to the end they may obtain both a far-spread and immortal Glory, and also render their Empire most highly renowned. To whom even the Lord of Hosts himself distributeth good things with a * plentiful hand, gives them [power] to vanquish their Adversaries, and freely bestows Victory [on them.] (a) For he cannot lie who has said, As I live, saith the Lord, I will glorify them who glorify me. When therefore my

+ Or, rich. (a) In the incomparable Flo- sic them who glorify me. When therefore my Lord and most Religious Brother and Fellow-Minister Paulus was come to Alexandria, we were filled with joy, and that most deservedly, in regard so great a Person [was come to be] an Intercessor, and was willing (b) to undergo Labours above [humane] strength: That he might vanquish the Envy of the Devil, unite Divisions, and by just removing Offences on both sides, crown both Our of the E. and Your Churches with Concord and Peace. And now, where this Epistle is recorded. (See Binius, as before, p. 595.) it is Εὐχαριστία, will not lie.] But the reading of the Florem. MS. is confirmed by Nicephorus and the Tellerian MS. Vales. In Robert Stephens, the reading here is, Εὐχαριστία, hath not lied.

(c) Τὸς τοῖς ἰσχυροῖς ἀντιπροσώπων. Christophorus has rendered this place very ill, thus, Es graviores quam vires feracem, suscipit in concionando, labores; And in Preaching has undertaken far greater pains than his strength would bear. Ambrosius translates it thus: Et laboribus vires excellentibus collectionem suscipiunt. And with labours exceeding his strength had undertaken a conference. Neither of them has rendered it well. Πεζομαχὸς ἐξέοντος, imports, to endure or undergo labours. So, ὡς ἀνὰ δύναμις, signifies, to bear the vicissitudes of fortune. Plutarch (in Marius), speaking concerning Fuguribus, says these words, ὡς τὴν ἐν ταῖς ἀνὰ δύναμις ἀντιπαραστάσει, τὰς τοῖς ἀνὰ δύναμις ἀντιπαραστάσει. [which was fitted] to bear the changes of fortune. Moreover, these words ὡς ἀνὰ δύναμις ἀντιπαραστάσει may be understood two ways: For we may either understand ἀντιπαραστάσει, humane, (which we have done) or else ἀντιπαραστάσει, Christophorus and Christophorus have embraced the latter sense; as did he also, who rendered the Acts of the Ephefine Council into Latin. Vales.

after the interposition of some words, [he adds:] Moreover; that this dissension of the Church was altogether frivolous and (c) inexcusable. (e) Here, and in the ble, we have been now fully satisfied, since my Acts of the Lord the most Religious Bishop Paulus has brought Ephefine a Paper which contains an irreprehensible Confession of Faith; and has affirmed, that it was written by Your Sanctity, and by the most Religious Bishops there. Now, the Confession runs thus, and inexcusable is inserted in the very same words into this our ble, or Epistle. But concerning Theotocos, and so forth, When We had read these (d) Your sacred words, in the Tel- and perceived, that We Our Selves embraced the same Terian MS. Sentiments; (For, there is one Lord, one Faith, I found it one Baptism;) We glorified God the Saviour of all Men, rejoicing mutually, because as well Your as Our Churches, do profess a Faith which is agree- incomp- rable, both to the divinely inspired Scriptures, and our Vales. also to the Tradition of our Holy Fathers. These (d) in the things may be known by him who is desirous of having an accurate account of those affairs transacted at that time.

instead of [ἐμῶν, our] it is [ἐμῶν, your;] which doubtless is the truer reading, Vales.

CHAPTER VII.

What the impious Nestorius writes concerning his own sufferings; and how his Tongue having at last been eaten out with worms, he ended his life at Oâsis.

BUT after what manner Nestorius was banish'd, or what befel him after that, or in what manner he departed out of this life, and what rewards he receiv'd on account of his Blasphemy; [these particulars] have not been related by the Writers of History. All which had been forgotten, and had been wholly lost and swallowed by [length of] time, nor had been so much as heard of; had not I accidentally met with a Book of Nestorius's, which contains a Narrative of these things. This Father of blasphemy therefore, Nestorius, (who has not raised his building on that foundation which was laid, but hath built [his house] on the sand, and [therefore] it has soon fallen down, according to our Lord's parable;) making an Apology (which was his desire,) in defence of his own blasphemy, (a) against those who had accused him, (because he had introduced some innovation contrary to what was fitting, and had not rightly requested that a Synod should be convened at Ephefus;) amongst other things writes [to this effect:] that he, wholly compelled thereto by necessity, had beraken himself * to [the defence of] this part, in regard the Holy Church was divided, some affirming that Mary was to be term'd † Anthropotocos, or † That is, thers, † Theotocos. That therefore (as he says) he might not offend in one of these two, [viz.] (b) lest he should either joyn things mortal with those that are immortal, or else lest (by being God, taking himself to the other side) he might be deprived of that other party who defended the term Theotocos;] he invented the word Christotocos; place is

(a) Πεὶ τὸν ἐγκαλέσαντα. In the incomparable Florentine MS. I found it written ἐπεὶ τὸν ἐγκαλέσαντα εἰς, against those who had accused him;] which is doubtless the truer reading: εἰ has the same import with αὐτῷ, him. Vales.

* Εἰς τὸτο In the incomparable Florentine MS. I found it written ἐπεὶ τὸν ἐγκαλέσαντα εἰς, against those who had accused him;] which is doubtless the truer reading: εἰ has the same import with αὐτῷ, him. Vales. (b) ὅτι lest he should either joyn things mortal with those that are immortal, or else lest (by being God, taking himself to the other side) he might be deprived of that other party who defended the term Theotocos;] he invented the word Christotocos; place is very obscure; it is in my judgment, thus to be explained: After that Sermon of Anastasis the Presbyter, who was Nestorius's Synchilus, (See Chap. 2. Note b.) there arose a great dissension in the Constantinopolitan Church;

Church: in regard some affirm'd, that Mary was to be termed Theotocos; others Ambrosiocos. And when the Sedition increased daily, Nestorius, desirous to appease it, invented a certain middle term, viz. that Mary should in future be termed Christotocos, the Virgin who bore Christ; lest, if he should term her Theotocos, he might seem to join things mortal with those that are immortal: (which thing he [that is, Nestorius] look'd upon to be impious:) or lest, if he had embraced the term Ambrosiocos, the other party (to wit, those who defend'd the term Theotocos) should have revolted from him, and held their Assemblies apart. This is the meaning of this place; which neither Augustinus nor Christophorus understood. Therefore, instead of [ἡ ἀθάνατος συμπαρακαλούμενη], it must be [ἡ ἀθάνατος, ἡ ἀθάνατος ἀντιπροσώπων]. In the Tellerian MS. I found this reading, ἡ ἀθάνατος συμπαρακαλούμενη. Valef.

He intimates further, that at first the Emperor Theodosius, out of that affection he bore towards him, confirm'd not the [Sentence of *] deposition pronounced against him: but afterwards, that when some Bishops (c) of both parties had been sent from the City Ephesus to Theodosius; (d) and when he also himself requested it, he was permitted to return to his own Monastery; which is situate before the Gates of that City, now called **Theopolis*, and is not expressly named [there] by Nestorius. But, they say, (e) it is now termed Euprepis's [Monastery], which, as we assuredly know, stands before the [City] Theopolis, distant from * Or, deposition.

(c) *Ἐφ' ὧς τε καὶ αὐτῶν; that is, of both parties, as well Catholic, as Nestorian. Augustinus has render'd it ill, thus, ultra citroque, to and fro. Valef.

(d) Instead of [ἀπὸ τῆς αὐτῆς πόλεως], the reading in the Florentine and Tellerian MSS. is [ἀπὸ τῆς αὐτῆς πόλεως], and when he also himself requested it.] Valef.

*That is, Antioch. See chap. 3. (e) From the Florent, and Tellerian MS. I have mended this place thus: ὡς τὸ ὑπερταύτης ὁμοσεως ἀποκατασταθῆναι, it is now termed Euprepis's [Monastery]; the reading before was very foolish, thus, ὑψηλῆς. Valef.

thence not more than two furlongs. Moreover, the same Nestorius says, that having resided there during the space of four years, he had all imaginable honour conferred upon him, and enjoy'd all manner of reverence and respect: but that afterwards, by the Edict of [the Emperor] Theodosius, he was banished into that place called Oasis. But he has concealed that which is the principal thing. For, during

(f) To wit, in the aforesaid Monastery, which was called Euprepis's Monastery. Valef.

Antioch gave [the Emperor] an account thereof, and Nestorius was condemned to perpetual Banishment. (g) He wrote also another Book, composed in the manner of a Dialogue, to a certain Egyptian as it were, concerning his banishment into Oasis; wherein he speaks

(g) I like neither Christophorus's nor Augustinus's Ver- more at large concerning these things. But, tion of this place. The latter of whom renders it thus: Scriptis autem & alium librum more dialogico, velut ad Egyptium quendam de exilio suo compositum. But he wrote another Book also in a Logical manner, to a certain Egyptian as it were, composed concerning his own Exile. And Christophorus translates it thus: Scriptis præterea Nestorius alium Libellum autē & subtiliter, &c. Moreover, Nestorius wrote another little Book, acutely and subtilly, &c. What need was there of acuteness and Logical subtilty in a little Book, wherein Nestorius treated concerning his own banishment into Oasis? Therefore I judge it better to render these Words, [ἡ διαλογικὴ συγγραμμὴ] thus [composed in the manner of a Dialogue]. And thus Nicephorus expounded these Words of Eusebius. For instead thereof, he makes use of the Word διαλογικὴ συγγραμμὴ, more by way of Dialogue Which term Langus renders, disertius, more eloquently: As if Nicephorus had said, λογικώτερον. Valef.

* Or, brought forth.

what punishments he underwent on account of the Blasphemies * coyn'd by him (not being able to lie conceal'd from [God's] all-seeing Eye,) may be known from other Letters, sent by him to the Governour of Thebais. For, in those [Letters] you may find, after what manner (in regard he had not yet undergone condign (b) punishment,) the judgment of God (k) in Ni- seized him, and invol'd him in (i) captivity. cephorus, a calamity of all [Afflictions] the most miserable. (book 16, chap. 36.) But, in as much as he was to endure great- instead of ten punishments, he was let go by the Blennyræ, διεξίνε- amongst whom he had been a Captive. And removing from place to place about the utmost borders of Thebais, by the Edicts of Theodosius, who had determin'd that he should return; and being dash'd against the earth, he ended his days a-great-better his own forepast life: [like] a second Arius, declaring and * forewh- ing by his calamitous death what rewards are appointed for [those who utter] blasphemy against Christ. For both those † Persons blasphem'd Christ in a like manner; Arius, by terming him a Creature; and Nestorius, by thinking him to be a Man. To * whom (because he com- * That is, plains, that the Acts at Ephesus were not rightly to Nes- composed [and made up,] but were framed by fraud and an illegal artifice of Cyrillus;) I would willingly say [thus much:] Why (since Theodosius was his favourer,) was he banish'd, and, without obtaining the least commiseration, condemned to so many Exiles, and concluded his life after such a manner as this? Or why (if the sentence [pronounced] against him by Cyrillus, and the other Prelates about him, were not divine,) both of them being now numbred amongst those departed [and dead], (at which time, as it has been said by one of the Heathen Sages, (k) that which appears not any more in sight (l) Tran- [or, that which survives not any longer] is honoured [honoured] [with a Benevolence that hath no enemy;] has he him- self been condemned as a Blasphemer and an Enemy of God; but Cyrillus is praised and extolled [by all Persons,] as having been a loud [and eminent] Preacher, and a great Defender of Orthodox Sentiments? But lest we should be accused for writing what is false, come on, let us bring forth Nestorius himself into the midst, ways fig- giving a relation concerning these very things, hndrurs; have fallen into various Errors. For Langus renders it thus: Et ambo vos jam ex vitâ hâc excessistis, &c. And both of you have now made your departure out of this life: at which time, as one of the Heathen Sages has said, nothing hinders, but that every Person may be honoured by a free benevolence of Men, no Adversary intervening. And Christophorus has translated it after this manner: Quando, si sapienti inter Gentiles scripti placeret, &c. At which time, as it pleases a prudent Writer amongst the Heathens, every one is usually honoured with a firm and concordant benevolence of Men, provided there be nothing which may justly be an impediment. But, the term ἐπεσθῶν does not always signify an impediment, or Hindrance. For, the Ancients, as well Rhetoricians as Philosophers, used ἐπεσθῶν in such a Sense as to signify the same with ἀντι, and to be in fight, or, appear openly; as Suidas, Harporerion, and the Author of the Etymologicum do inform us. But, the latter Writers, and especially Hierocles the Philosopher, have used that Word to signify an impediment or Hindrance. Therefore Augustinus has rendered this Passage in Eusebius best of all, thus: Quando sit quidam exterorum Philosophorum dixit, quod non est amplius superstiti, nec ullius invicta & contradiçione cum benevolentia honoratur; id est, as one of the foreign Philosophers has said, that which survives not any longer, is honoured with benevolence, without the Envy and Contradiction of any one. Further, in the Margin of the Tellerian Manuscript, there is set at this place, τινος δὲ, that is, this Sentence is taken out of Thucydides. 'Tis extant in Thucydides's second Book, pag. 128. Edit. Francjurs. 1594; in the Funeral Oration which Pericles made. Valef.

ture; the reading is truer, thus, ἐπεσθῶν, punishment. And so I found it written in the Tellerian MS. Valef.

(i) I have mended this place from the incomparable Florentine Manuscript; wherein the reading is thus [ἀρχαίωσεν τῇ ἐσθῶν ἐλευσθῶν τὴν σωφροσύνην] the most miserable; than, which commendation, there is nothing more certain. The reading in Nicephorus is the same also. Valef. In Robertus Stephani's Edition, 'tis thus worded: ἀρχαίωσεν τῇ σωφροσύνῃ ἐλευσθῶν τὴν σωφροσύνην. Valef.

* Or, ratifying, or, confirming. † That is, Arius and Nestorius.

Recite to me therefore [ONestorius?] some passages in the express words of your own Letter, which you wrote to the Governour of Thebais. Because of some [Controversies] lately agitated at Ephesus concerning the most Holy Religion; by an Imperial Order we inhabit Oâsis otherwise [called] Ibis. And after the interposition of some Words, he adds: But after the aforesaid

(l) Instead of [ἐν βαρβαρίᾳ] the reading as it seems, should be [ἐν βαρβαρικῇ ἀστυνομίᾳ]. In the Florentine and Tellerian M. SS. and in Nicephorus, 'tis ἀστυνομία, by Captivity. Valef.
* Or, recovered a Compassion, &c.

we should immediately go out of that Country, in regard the Mazices would suddenly take possession of it after them; we are come to Thebais together with the remainder of the Captives, whom the Barbarians (out of commiseration) brought to us, for what intent I know not. Moreover, they have been every one permitted to go whither they desired: but we by coming publicly to Panapolis, * do exhibit our selves. For we were afraid, lest any one, † by taking an occasion from our Captivity, should either frame an accusation of slight against us, or else [form] a making our captivity forged invention of some other fault. For malice [his] master of en- is productive of all manner of calumnies. Wherefore, We beseech Your * Magnificence, to take care (according to that provision the Laws have made) of our Captivity, and not to deliver a Captive, who is subject to mischief, to the evil Arts of Men; lest all Generations should from hence forth cry out, That 'tis better to be the Barbarians Captive, than to fly for refuge to the Roman Empire. Then, having added an Oath, he made his request [to the Governour] thus: [That You would please] to give the Emperor an account of our Remove from Oâsis * hither, which hapned from our being dismissed by the Barbarians: that so, whatever determination shall be well pleasing to God, may now at length be made concerning us. [Also, out of] the same Nestorius's second Letter to the said Governour: [Whether You will account this present Letter from Us to Your Magnificence, as [written] from a Friend, or as an admonition from a Father to a Son, hear, I beseech you, with patience the Narration [contained] therein concerning many [Matters,] written from us, wherein [We have been as brief as possibly could be. Oâsis otherwise [termed] Ibis, having been several ways ruin'd of late, by an incursion made into it by a multitude of the (m) Nomades.

* That is, for an account of our Remove from Oâsis * hither, which hapned from our being dismissed by the Barbarians: that so, whatever determination shall be well pleasing to God, may now at length be made concerning us. [Also, out of] the same Nestorius's second Letter to the said Governour: [Whether You will account this present Letter from Us to Your Magnificence, as [written] from a Friend, or as an admonition from a Father to a Son, hear, I beseech you, with patience the Narration [contained] therein concerning many [Matters,] written from us, wherein [We have been as brief as possibly could be. Oâsis otherwise [termed] Ibis, having been several ways ruin'd of late, by an incursion made into it by a multitude of the (m) Nomades.

(n) In that Nestorius's mentioned before, the people who ruin'd Oâsis are termed Blenmyæ. Wherefore, Nomades ought here to be taken for an Adjective. Notwithstanding, it may be the proper name of a Nation of Barbarians. 'Tis certain, the Nûbe, neighbours to the Blenmyæ, (who made frequent incursions into the Country of Oâsis, as Procopius informs us, in Book i. Perfic.) were termed Nomades also, or Nomades, which is attested by Stephanus. But some one will object, if Nestorius speaks here concerning one and the same Captivity of Oâsis, how can that stand, which he says in the beginning of this Epistle, in these words: Οὐδέποτε ἦν ἡ πόλις ἡμεῶν ποτὶς ἐπὶ τῶν ἑσθλῶν ἐπιπέσειν. For, the incursion of the Blenmyæ into Oâsis (in which Nestorius had been taken Captive by the Barbarians, and was presently dismissed,) had hapned but a little while before, as he himself attests. But, the incursion of the Nomades had hapned long before, as 'tis apparent from Nestorius's words in this last Epistle, which were just now cited. To all this I answer, that these words ἐπὶ τῶν ἑσθλῶν, do not signify long since, as Langus, Ousebicus, and Christopherson thought. For, the Adverb ἑσθλῶν, signifies lately, as every body knows. Doubtless, this incursion had hapned a little before Nestorius wrote these things. Therefore, it would ought to be referred to the word ἀπαιδεύσθαι. So that, 'tis the same as if he should have said, Oâsis having been several ways ruin'd of late: to wit, by fire, slaughters, and a Barbarick Captivity; as Nestorius has said above. Valef.

And after some words. These things having hapned thus, (by what impulse, or on what occasion Your Magnificence was moved thereto, I know not; we have been sent by Barbarian Soldiers from Panopolis, to Elephantina,] a Town situate in the Borders of the Province Thebais; towards which we have been dragg'd by the forementioned military assistance. And when we had been tired by our travelling more than half that Journey, we again met with an Order of your Magnanimity by word of mouth, [whereby we were commanded] to return to Panopolis. Having therefore been wearied with the Miseries (n) of this so long a Journey, our Body being infirm and aged, and our Hand and Side tired, we came again to Panopolis, in a manner breathing forth our Soul. And whilst we were as yet cruciated with the Calamities and Mischiefs of [our] Pains, another Order written by Your Magnanimity * came † Or, in great haste, whereby we were convey'd again came flying from Panopolis to a place adjoining thereto.

(o) When we supposed, that we should stop here, of [ταῦτα] and were in expectation of the most Victorious ταντινιανῶν, Emperours determination concerning us; on a sudden another [Decree] was again drawn up against us, without any Commiseration, in order to another, [to wit,] a fourth Banishment. And after some few Words, [he continues.] But, I beseech you, let what has been done be sufficient, and [may it be enough] (p) to have Decreed so many Banishments against one Body: And, (q) after the Relations [which have been sent to their Imperial Majesties] by (g) Trans-Your Magnificence, permit, I humbly beseech you, [that an accurate account, of our condition] may [nothing at] be made known to our most Victorious Emperours, who by a even by us also, by whom that ought [to be done.] [small fault] These are our Advices, as to a Son from a Father, were introduced into a great error. Instead of [ἐν τῇ πόλει] it must undoubtedly be [ἐν τῇ πόλει] Presidents of Provinces were heretofore wont to give the Emperor an Account of all things which hapned with them. The doing whereof was termed ἀναγνώσις, and the Relation itself ἀναγνώσις, as I have noted on Ann. Marcellinus. Concerning these Relations of Presidents, Severianus speaks, in his first Oration in Hexameron, the passage whereof I will annex here, because the Translator understood it not: ἀναγνώσις δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀναγνώσων ἀρχόντων καὶ βασιλέων ἀπὸ τῶν ἀρχόντων. ὅτι οἱ ἐν ἀρχαῖς τῶν δέων, &c. For, Brethren, as the Presidents by [sending] Relations, made known all things [that are transacted with them] to the Emperor: so also the Angels, &c. The Translator renders it, the Masters of the Libels and Suggestions; which rendition is ill. For ἀναγνώσις in Chrysostome and the other writers of that age, are nothing else but Presidents or Governours of Provinces. And ἀναγνώσις imports nothing else but Relation or Narrative. Wherefore, in Severianus, it must be written thus; ἀναγνώσις δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀναγνώσων ἐν ἀρχαῖς, &c. Valef.

(r) Instead of [ἐν τῇ πόλει] it must be [ἐν τῇ πόλει]. For, the word [ἐν τῇ πόλει] which preceded immediately, is understood. In the Tellerian M. S. the particle [τῇ] is wanting. Valef.

But if you be angry now, as you have been heretofore, do what you think good; since * no reason is powerful enough to sway your mind. At reason in this manner [Nestorius] in his Letters erful strikes and leaps, with his Fists and Feet, your mind.

and

Or, the Emper.
†
beard.

and reviles * the Emperors and Magificity ;
having not been made prudent by the miseries
he suffer'd. But I have † read a certain Writer declaring his Latter end [ after this manner, to wit,] That his Tongue having been eaten out with worms, be departed to greater and immortal punishments [ which are to be inflicted on him.]

CHAPTER VIII.

How, after Nestorius, Maximianus, and after him Proclus, then Flavianus, were made [Bishops of Constantinople.]

AFTER that destructive Pest Nestorius, Maximianus succeeded in the Episcopate of the famous [City] Constantinople; under whom the Church of God enjoy'd all imaginable peace and tranquility. When he was taken from amongst Men, Proclus enters upon the Government of that See, who had heretofore been ordain'd Bishop of Cyzicum. And after he was gone the common way † of mankind, Flavianus succeeded in that Chair.

CHAPTER. IX.

Concerning the unfortunate Eutyches, and how he was deposed by Flavianus [Bishop] of Constantinople; and concerning the second (to wit, that thievish) Synod at Ephesus.

† That is, Flavianus.
 (A) Instead of κωνσταντινουπολιτι, undoubtedly ἐκ [ἐκ] τῆς κωνσταντινουπόλεως, as Constantinople; which is the reading in the Telluris MS. and in Nicophorus, Book

IN these times, the controverſie about the impious Eutyches was ſtared; a particular Synod having been convened (a) at Conſtantinople: [to which Synod] Eusebius Biſhop of Dorylaeum (who waſte the firſt perſon that had [heretofore] reſuted Nestorius's Blaſphemy, being until then but a Rhetorician) preſented Libels. Therefore, when Eutyches, after he had been ſummon'd [to the Synod,] came not: And at his appearing [afterwards] had been convicted of having ſaid theſe words: I confeſs, that our Lord † had two natures before the union: But, after the union, I confeſs, but one nature: (He affirmed alſo, that the Body of our Lord was not of the ſame ſubſtance with our Bodies.) [After this, I ſay,] he is depoled. But when

14. chap. 47, where Langus renders it thus: Flavianus Synodo Provinciali apud Constantiopolim coactâ, &c. Flavianus, a Provincial Synod having been convened at Constantinople, &c. Whom Christophorus has follow'd. Notwithstanding, I had rather render it particular Synod, as Mausolus does. Indeed, that Synod consisted only of those Bishops, who at that time hapned to make their abode at Constantinople, on account of some Ecclesiastick Affairs: Which Prelates they commonly termed ἐπιστολικοί ἑπισκόποι, Bishops that made their residence for some time only in the City. The Acts of this Constantinopolitan Synod under Flavianus, are related in the Fifth Añion of the Chalcedon Council; where these words occur [see Binius, Tom. 3. pag. 80.] ἀνακληθεὶς τὴν ἁγίαν καὶ μεγάλην αὐτοῦ τὴν ἐκκλησίαν ἐν τῇ ἀρεσκουσῇ μετὰ πολλοῦ, &c. The Holy and Great Synod having been convened [consisting of such Prelates as] resided for some time in the forenamed Great City, &c. If any one be desirous of knowing the names of those Bishops then convened, they occur in the first Añion of the Chalcedon Synod. Valef. See Binius, Tom. 3. pag. 125. Edit. Paris. 1626.

he had presented a supplicatory Libel to Theodosius, * pretending that the Acts of those if the Acts, convened [in that Synod] had been falsified by Flavianus; in the first place a Synod of [the Bishops] that were near Neighbours to Constantinople was assembled. In which (<sup>(b)</sup> some of the Magistrates also being <sup>(b)</sup> Kai present therein) Flavianus is judged. And <sup>πρωτος</sup> when this Synod had confirmed the Acts, as <sup>αποστολων</sup> being true; a second Synod is convened at words

Ephesus. Christo.

hath rendered ill; thus, Some Prelates of Churches; whereas he should have translated it, some of the Magistrates. Nicæborus therefore (Book 14. chap. 47.) has rightly explained the words of Eusebius, after this manner: Εἰς ἁγία καὶ ἁγία ἡ ἐκκλησία, ἢ τῶν ἐκκλησιαστικῶν ἀντιπροσώπων, ἢ τῶν ἐκκλησιαστικῶν ἀντιπροσώπων, ἢ τῶν ἐκκλησιαστικῶν ἀντιπροσώπων, [that is, the Church, or the representatives of the Church, or the representatives of the Church, or the representatives of the Church]. The Abbots of this second Constantinian Synod under Flavianus are extant, recorded in the fifth Abbot of the Chalcedon Council. See Binius, Tom. 3. pag. 129. Edit. ut prius. Where Florentinus the most magnificent Patricius, Memus the Comes and Proximus, [that is, Clerk] of the Desk of Libels and Sacred Cognitions, and Macædonius the Tribune and Notary, are said to have been present at this Synod. Vale!

CHAP. X.

What was transacted by Dioscorus and Chrysa-
*phius [at] the * absurd Synod at Ephesus. * παροϊκῶς*

AT this Synod Dioscorus, Successor to Cyrillus in the See of Alexandria, was appointed to preface : (a) Which thing was effected by the artifice of (b) Chrysaphius (a person of great interest in the Imperial Palace at that time,) out of [his] hatred to Flavianus, reading there met [at this Synod] at Ephesus, Juvencius Bishop of Jerusalem, (c) who had been at the former Ephesine Synod, together with many other Priests [whom he had] about him, but Chrysostom. Together with these met Domnus, Johannes Successor in the Antiochian See : also Bishop (d) Julius, who filled the place of Leo PP. the Seniour Rome. Flavianus likewise was present with them, together with the Bishops about him, who had met it thus, καὶ ἀναβάντες τῷ Χρυσαστῇ. I doubt not but Eugarius wrote thus : τοῦτο πρὸς τὴν ἀνάστασιν ἤρξατο. Which thing [that is, Dioscorus's Precedency in that Synod] was effected by the artifice of Chrysaphius. Further, Chrysostom translates and points this whole passage, in this manner : *Hujus concilii Dioscorus, qui in Alexandria Episcopatus post Cyrillum successit, quo ordinem in Flavium intransitum, retur, praefatus dignatus fuit. Chrysaphius tunc qui legatus in concilium fuerat. Atque Huius Concilii Dioscorus, qui legatus ante Cyrillum in the episcopate of Alexandria, to sit down to be heard against Flavianus might be inflamed, was appointed to be President. For Chrysaphius had craftily attempted this design. But Amulianus's opinion seems far better to me, who before these words ἀναβάντες ὁρμήσας, places a substitution. And thus he renders it thus : *Præsedebat autem et Synodo Dioscorus post Cyrillum Alexandrinus Episcopus : id quod in odio Flaviano infirmum Chrysaphium, &c. At that Synod presided Dioscorus Bishop of Alexandria after Cyrillus, which thing Chrysaphius had so order d out of Alexandria against Cyrillus, & Cc. Instead of these words ὁρμήσας ὁρμήσας, as Sir Henry Savill mends it out of [his] hatred ; Νίτσηβας has the right, ὁ Νίτσηβας τὸν ἀνανήσαντα, by reason of his hatred resisting Chr. breaking out against Flavianus. Valef.

(b) At the margin of the Florentine Manuscript, this Scholion is listed as ἡ δὲ ἐκ τῶν ἑννὰ καὶ ἑξήκοντα ἐπιστολῶν αὐτοῦ ἐστὶν ἡ ἐκ τῆς ἐπιστολῆς τοῦ ἐπισκόπου Κρήτης. That is, Note concerning the Implication of the Chrylaphius, that the Eunuchs of the Bed-chamber have always been mischiefs to the Orthodox Arch-Bishops. Of which thing we have an eminent instance in Eusebius, chief [Eunuch] of the Bed-chamber who in Constantine's Reign persecuted Athanajus, and the other Catholic Prelates. Valef.

(c) Τὸ δὲ αὐτοῖς ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ ῥητορῷ. Chriſtophorſon underſtood theſe words amiſs; as if Euvagrius had ſaid, that Juvenalis had formerly been Biſhop of Ephēſus. But Euvagrius does not ſay ſo; but only that Juvenalis Biſhop of Jeruſalem had been heretofore at Ephēſus; to wit, in the former Ephēſine ſynod, wherein Neſtorius had been condemn'd. Valeſ.

(d) The reading in Nicephorus is the same; but 'tis corrupt, in the sense of Julianus. For so it is truly written in the Aktz of the second Episcopalian Synod, which are recorded in the first Allion of the Chalcedonian Council; Pōi consilium Zenonis & Pōthumiani P. V. C. C. Die Idus Augusti, Sic. After the Conjulate of the most famous Personage Zeno and Pōthumianus, on the first of the Ides of August, in the city of Constantinople, a Synod is convened in the Metropolis Ephesus, by the command of the most Religious and most Christian Emperors, and the most Reverend rend and most Holy Bishops, Diodorus of Alexandria, and Bishop Julianus (who was the Deputy of the most Holy and most Blessed Leo, Bishop of the Roman Church) [sic in the Holy Church, which is call'd Saint] Mary's. Romulus, at the year of Christ 449, relates from Marcellus's Chronicle, that this Julianus was Bishop of Puteoli. Notwithstanding as it is now extant in Marcellus's Secular's Chronicle; the Bishop of Puteoli is not called Julianus but Julius, who was sent with Hilarus the Deacon by Pope Leo, to the second Ephesine Synod. But, in the Subscriptions of the Bishops who so subscribed to this second Ephesine Synod, (which Subscriptions are Recorded in the first Edition of the Chalcedon Council, pag. 141.) he is term'd Julianus the Bishop. For these are the Words there: Julianus Episcopus, venit locum sanctissimi Episcopi Romane Ecclesie, interpresque se Florentio Episcopo Lydiæ, dixit, &c. From which Words it seems to be concluded, that this Julianus, who was present at the second Ephesine Synod, was Julianus Bishop of Cœce, who two Years after was present at the Chalcedon Council, and held there also the Place of Leo Bishop of Rome, as it frequently occurs, recorded in the Acts of the Chalcedon Synod. Observe here Marcellus's Inconsistency; who when he had written at the Year of Christ 449, that this Julianus (who was Legate of the Apostolick See at the second Ephesine Synod) was Bishop of Puteoli; afterwards (at the Year of Christ 451. Chap. 78.) makes him Bishop of Cœce. Valef.

(e) Theodosius having given an Order to Elpidius [in these express words: Let those [Prelates] who before have been the Judges of Eutyches the most Religious * Archimandrite, be present and silent: but let them in no wise take the place of Judges, but expect the common Sentence of all the most Holy Fathers; in regard those things which have been judged by them, are now under scrutiny. In this Synod Eutyches is restored (his Sentence of Deposition being revok'd) by Dioscorus and those about him; * as the Contents of the Acts thereof do shew. And Flavianus, and Eusebius Bishop of Dorylæum, are condemned and depose'd. At the same Synod, Ibas Bishop of the Edesseni is excommunicated; and (f) Daniel Bishop of Carra is depose'd: as is also (g) Irenæus of Tyre, and Aquilinus of Byblus. Moreover, some things were transacted [there] on the account of (h) Sophronius Bishop of Constantinople. In the first Edition of the Chalcedon Synod, pag. 46, where these words here related by Evagrius do occur. Valef.

(f) A little before the second Ephesine Synod, Ibas [Bishop] of Edessa, and Daniel Bishop of Carra had been accused before the Emperor Theodosius by their own Clergy. The Emperor gave order, that cognizance of their Cause should be taken in a Synod at Berytus, in the presence of Damasius, Tribune and Prætorian Notary. The Acts of this Council [at Berytus] are extant, recorded in the tenth Edition of the Chalcedon Synod, (See Binius. Tom. 3. pag. 377.) which begin thus: Post Consulatum Flavii Zenonis & Posthumiani, &c. After the Consulate of the most famous Personages Flavius Zeno and Posthumianus, on the Calends of September, in the second Indiction, &c. I doubt not but it should be written, Consulatum Zenonis & Posthumiani. In the Consulate of Zeno and Posthumianus. Otherwise, this Synod would have hapned after the Ephesine little Council, which was convened after the Consulate of Zeno and Posthumianus, in the Month of August. Now, the Berytin Synod cannot be placed after that Ephesine Synod, in regard mention is made therein of Flavianus Bishop of Constantinople, and of Demetrius of Antioch: Both which, 'tis manifest, were depose'd in the second Ephesine Synod. Add hereto the Testimony of Liberatus the Deacon, who relates in his Breviarium, that this Berytin Synod was convened before Eutyches had fram'd his Heresie. Valef.

(g) Long before the second Ephesine Synod, Irenæus had been driven from his Bishoprick, by an Edict of the Emperor Theodosius; and Phocas had been put into his See. 'Tis certain, Phocas presided at the Berytin Synod, which had been convened on the Year before the second Ephesine Synod. But, because Irenæus had been ejected by the Emperor's Order, not by the Determination of a Synod, therefore he was depose'd in the second Ephesine Synod. Valef.

(h) 'Tis strange, how much Translators have erred in the Version of this place: For Langus, Nicéphorus's Translator, renders it thus: Deinde hæc synodus quogue de Sophronio quadam, &c. This Synod also decreed some things concerning Sophronius, who had come at that time to Constantinople, on account of being that City. Chrysostomus translates it in this manner: Nonnulli bñditi ad hæc curia venerunt Sophronium Episcopum Constantinopolitanum. Some things were said there against Sophronius Bishop of Constantinople. But he ought to have said Bishop of Constantinople. For Sophronius was Bishop of Constantinople, as 'tis apparent from the second Antiochian Synod under Domnus, which is inserted in the 14th Edition of the Chalcedon Synod. The same Sophronius was afterwards present at the Chalcedon Synod, as 'tis recorded in the Acts of that Synod. Now, Constantinople is a City of Phœnicie. Valef.

* Theodoret Bishop of Cyrus was depose'd also. This was by them, as was likewise Domnus [Bishop] of Antioch. (i) What became of that Prelate afterwards, I cannot find. When these things had been transacted in this manner, the second Ephesine Synod at Ephesus was dissolved. (2) In the place of Domnus Bishop of Antioch Maximus was subrogated, as Liberatus informs us in his Breviarium: Who was afterwards confirm'd in his Bishoprick by Pope Leo, as we read in the Tenth Edition of the Chalcedon Council. Notwithstanding, the same Maximus appointed Domnus, as long as he liv'd, a certain Allowance out of the Revenue of his Church, that being content with his Maintenance, he might in future be quiet: Which thing was approved of by the other Patriarchs in the Chalcedon Council, as may be seen in the fore-cited Edition. Valef.

CHAP. XI.

This Writer's Apology in Defence of the Variety [of Opinions] amongst us [Christians] and his Derision of the Pagan Trifles.

BUT, let * none of the Heathens deride us, because the latter [Bishops] depose the former, and always find out some new thing [which they add] to the Faith. For we made upon our Researches after the ineffable Love of God [towards Men] which is past finding out, and being desirous to honour and extol it in the highest manner, do beake our selves to this or that [Opinion]. Nor was any one of those, who invented Heresies amongst the Christians, so weak, that he would so designedly blaspheme; nor has [any such Person] fallen into an Error, with a desire to dishonour the Deity: but 'twas rather his Supposition, that if he should assert this Opinion, he should speak better than those who went before him. Besides, those [Points] which are essentiall, and fundamental, with a general consent we all confess and acknowledge. For 'tis the Trinity which we adore, and the Unity which we glorifie: And God the Word, begotten before [all] ages, who was incarnate by a second Generation, out of his Compassion to Man. But if Innovations have been introduc'd about some other [Points], they have proceeded from God our Saviour's giving [us] a free liberty of judging concerning these things; to the end that the Holy Catholick and Apostolick Church may reduce the things that are said on the one side and on the other, to what is decent and pious, and [may make them] fall into one exact and right way. And for this reason the Apostle [St. Paul] has most perspicuously and truly said: * There must be also Heresies among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest [among you]. And in this also the unspeakable Wisdom of God is to be admired, who hath said to the Divine [Saint Paul]: † For my strength is made perfect in weakness. For, for what reasons the Members of the Church have been rent in sunder, for the very same [causes] the true and irreprehensible Dogmata have been more accurately polish'd and set forth; and the Catholick and Apostolick Church has increased, and been advanced even to the Heavens. But the nonusers of Heathenish Error, who are not desirous of finding out either [the Nature of] God, or his providential Care about Men, do mutually overthrow both

(1) Tò δὲ οὐκ ἐπινοήσας τὴν κτλ. In Nicéphorus (Book 1. 4. chap. 48. where he transcribes this Passage of Evagrius,) the reading is (τὴν κτλ.) κτλ. and appears, which reading is not so good as I judge. Yet, I found it expressly so written in the Tellerian MS. Valef.

* Or, To the Creature.

* Or, Cap. 10. Or, May meet in one exact, &c.

* 1 Cor. 11. 19.

* 2 Cor. 12. 9.

† Or, Cap. 10. Or, May meet in one exact, &c.

both their own and their Ancestors Opinions. For they invent Gods upon Gods, and choofe and name them from their own perturbations of Mind; to the end that by taking to themselves fuch Gods, they may procure pardon for their own lusts and debaucheries. So forfooth, he who amongst them [is accounted] the fupream Father of Men and Gods, having metamorphos'd himself into a Bird, lasciviously snatch't up the Phrygian Boy; and as the reward of his uncleanness,

(b) The child was metamorphos'd into a Bird. He means (I suppose) that Story, which we are told concerning Ganymed Son of Tros K. of Troy (which was one part of Phrygia). This Boy, Jupiter having turn'd himself into an Eagle, snatch't up, and admitted him his Cup-bearer, in the room of Hebe, whom he had displaced; and makes him his Cataline.

gave him his Cup (b), permitting him to begin to drink an inviting Cup to himself, that so both of 'em might in common swallow down their shame together with their Nestor. The fame [Jupiter] defiled himself with infinite other Impieties, which have been interdicted even amongst the vilest of Men. And having changed himself into all the shapes of irrational Creatures, (he himself being of all the most brutish) is made an **Androgynus*, and (c) bears Child not in his belly, but on his thigh, to the end that these things contrary to nature might be done by him. At which birth Bacchus [is brought forth,] who was himself an Androgynus also, and brought a reproach upon both Sexes: he was the Prince of drunkenness, of forbearing greatness caused by fulness of Wine, of Surfeits and Debauches proceeding from so profuse drinking, and of all the distempers rising therefrom. To this (d) Ægiocbus, this loud Thunderer, had sworn they ascribe this (e) as some brave and great to give [Action] they term him Paricide (a Villany whatever he should be) because he drove Saturn, who had unfortunately begat him, out of his Kingdom. What

* A Person that is both male and female.

(c) The Story is this. Semele was the wife of Jupiter (to whom that God had sworn they ascribe this) as some brave and great to give [Action] they term him Paricide (a Villany whatever he should be) because he drove Saturn, who had unfortunately begat him, out of his Kingdom. What craft put upon making this request to him; viz. That he would lie one night with her in the same manner he used to lie with Juno. The God-lover granted her desire; and Semele is burnt up with Thunder: but the Boy was taken out of her womb, and put upon Jove's thigh; of whom he was deliver'd (in such manner as Women are) at the due time. On which account Bacchus (who was the Child thus brought forth) had the name of Bacchus, one that has two Mothers.

(d) Tis an Epithet given to Jupiter, either (1) because he wore the sacred Ægis, [that is, Breast-plate,] or (2) because he was the raiser of Storms, or rather (3) in regard he wore the Skin of the Goat Amalthæa, which had been his Nurse. See Servius upon Virgil's Sibylline, Col. 1320. Edit. Bafil. 1586.

(e) In stead of ἄνδρ' ἑσπερίαν, and some brave, &c.] I doubt not but it should be ἄνδρ' ἑσπερίαν, as some brave, &c.] For, in these Books of Ævagrins, ἄνδρ' is frequently used instead of ἄνδρ' Valef.

* Or, bas should I say of Whoredom, which * has been consecrated amongst them, over which they have made the Cyprian Venus, begotten of a Shell, to preside; which [Goddeſs] abominates continency as a most execrable thing and altogether intolerable: But she is delighted with Whoredoms and all manner of filthy Actions, wherewith 'tis her desire to be appeased. With whom Mars commits an unclean act, and by the craft of Vulcanus is [taken and] expos'd to the view and derision of the other Gods. Any one may also deservedly laugh at their Phalli, their Ithyphalli, Phallagogia, their vast Priapus, and Pan who is worshipped with an obscene Member; and at their Myſteries [celebrated] at Eleuſine, commendable for this thing only, [to wit] that the Sun ſees 'em not, but they are condemn'd to dwell in darkness. But, leaving these things as well to the obscene worshippers as to the worshipp'd, let us spur on our Horse † to the end of the Race, and render the remaining [Transactions] of Theodosius's Reign; manifest and evident to the Eyes of all Men.

CHAP. XII.

In what manner the Emperor Theodosius [prosecuted and] expell'd the Hereſie of Nestorius.

THE same Emperor wrote a most pious Constitution, extant in the First Book of that termed Justinian's Code, which is in number The Third of the First Title. In which [Constitution, Theodosius] incited thereto by God, has with all Suffrages (as 'tis proverbially said) condemn'd * him, for whom he had heretofore had a singular Affection (as Nestorius himself has related;) † and has denounced an Anathema a-† Or, bas gainſt him, recorded in these express words: Juravimus Moreover, We decree, That those who || emulate him with the impious Faith of Nestorius, or follow his detestable Doctrine, (if they be Bishops, or Ecclesiasticks) shall be ejected out of the Holy Churches: sate. But if they be Laicks, they shall be Anathematized. The same Emperor made other Laws on account of our Religion, which do sufficiently demonstrate the Ardency of his Zeal.

CHAP. XIII.

Concerning Saint Symeon the † Stylite.

IN these times, Symeon, [a person] of an holy (a) and most celebrated memory, flourish'd and was * eminent: he was the † Or, con- first person that infirmated the Station spicuous. Alia upon a pillar, the circumference of whose mansion was scarce two cubits; at which Symeon in his time Domnus presided over the Church of Antioch: Who when he was come to Symeon, and had admired his station and manner of life, was desirous of some more secret [converse with him.] Both of them therefore met together, (b) and having consecrated the immaculate Body [of Christ,] they gave one another the Vivific Communion. This Person in the flesh emulated the converse of the celestial powers, withdrew himself from affairs upon Earth, and putting a force upon nature, which tends downward, purged things sublime. And having plac'd himself in the midst, [as it were] between Heaven and things upon Earth, he conversed with ward for most holy, and the like. Our Ævagrins speaking hereafter concerning Gregorius Bishop of Antioch, gives him this Elogy, Stylitæ ἄνδρ' ἁγίου, the most celebrated Gregorius. Valef.

(b) Heretofore the Presbyters celebrated the Church-Service together with the Bishop, and receiv'd the Eucharist from his hand. So in the tenth Action of the Chalcedon Council, Balsamus Bishop of Epheſus, in his supplicatory Libel to Marſianus the Emperor, amongst other things says these words: Τὸ ἅγιον ἕκαστος ἐκ τῆς ἐκκλησίας τῆς ἑαυτοῦ, &c. Having on the day after, all of us perform'd the Publick-Service together, &c. And, at a great distance from that place, the same Balsamus says, pag. 303. ἐπὶ τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν μὴ, &c. Stephanus my Presbyter was with me four years; he perform'd the Publick-Service with me, communicated with me, and receiv'd the Communion from me, as from his Bishop. The same usage also was heretofore practis'd in the Roman Church, to wit, that the Presbyters should every day celebrate the Publick-Service together with the Bishop of Rome, and receive the Communion from his hand. But on Sundays, when the Presbyters were necessitated to perform the Publick Service apart in their own Titles, [Parishes, or, Cures,] on account of the People committed to their charge; they receiv'd the Lord's Body sent by the Acolythi from the Bishop of Rome; that they might not seem to be separated from the Communion of their own Bishop, especially on that day; as Pope Innocent informs us in his Epistle, 10. Decretal. Valef.

† Ἐπὶ τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν to the Mark, or, God.

God;

* On, Pre-
dication.
† See The-
odore's
works,
Tom. 3.
pag. 876, Sec. Edit. Paris, 1612.
This place has been several ways corrected by Learned men to wit, by Christophorus, and Cur- cius, or rather by those from whose Copies they transcribed these emendations. For some, after the word ἐκστασις &
ἐκστασις, and understand that concerning Theodore only.
But I suppose this place is to be restored thus: ἐν τῷ τῷ μακάριῳ
καταλαβόντες καὶ ἀποκαταστή- σαντες τὸν οὐκ ἐκστασιν ἐκείνῳ ἐκείνῳ τῷ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀποστόλου καταλαβόντες. And so I have rendered it: nor do I doubt but Evagrius wrote it thus. Valf.

‡ In the incomparable Flo- rentine MS. I found these words, written at the Margin; πρὸς
μετ' ἐκ ἐκστασιν ἐν τῷ χερσὶ τῷ ἐκ τῶν ἀποστόλων ἐκείνῳ μακάριῳ καταλαβόντες: that is, The judgment of the Fathers concerning the Great Symeon [was] truly judicial in Christ. Valf.

* These few to be prefers words,

God, and together with the Angels glorified him: offering to God from the earth his supplications for men, and procuring from heaven the supernal benevolence upon men. These persons * Miracles have been written by one that was an eye-witness of what he did. Theodore also Bishop of Cyrrus † has recorded them very eloquently. [ But * we have found, that they have been most especially defective in this [ following passage, ] which to this day is preserved amongst those of the Holy Solitude, and from which very persons, we have received it. When therefore Symeon, that Angel upon earth, that Citizen in the flesh of the Jerusalem which is above, had instituted this new, and [ hitherto ] unknown way of living to men; the Inhabitants of the Holy Desert send a messenger to him, whom they ordered to enquire [ of Symeon, ] what this new and strange course of life was, and why he left that way which had been trodden and worn by the Saints, and proceeded in another new one, [ hitherto ] wholly unknown to men? And [ they bade the messenger tell him ] that they commanded him to come down, and go on in the way of the Elect Fathers. Now, if he should shew himself ‡ ready [ and willing ] to come down, their order was, that he should be permitted to follow his own [ way. ] For by his obedience [ they said ] it would be manifest, that by the direction of God he had undertaken this troublesome and afflictive way of living. But if he refused, and would be the servant of his own will, nor would with a readiness forthwith obey their admonition, [ 'twas their order ] that he should be pulled down by force. When therefore the messenger was come to him, and had acquainted him with the command of the Fathers, and Symeon had forthwith put down one of his feet, resolving to fulfil the Order of the Fathers; [ the messenger who had been sent to him ] permitted him to proceed on in his own way, and spake these words [ to him: ] Be strong, and behave thy self like a man: thy station is of God. This truly memorable action [ of Symeon's ] which I have related here, is omitted by those who have written concerning him. [ Further, ] this person was in so high a manner influenced by the power of divine grace, that when the Emperor Theodosius had issued out an Order, that the Synagogues of the Jews inhabiting Antioch ( which had been taken from them by the Christians, ) should be restored to them again; he wrote to the Emperor with so much freedom and confidence, and reproved him so smartly, ( revering [ God ] only his own King, ) that the Emperor Theodosius revoked his own Orders, fulfilled all things in favour of the Christians, removed the Præfatus Prætorio, who had suggested these things to him, from his Government, and entreated the most Holy and * Aereal Martyr in [ these ] ex-

tions and prayers for him, and impart to him the words his own blessing. Moreover, Symeon spent of the Em- fix and fifty years in this afflictive and au- before course of life. In the first Monastery, wherein he had been imbued with the pre- cepts of a divine life, [ he spent ] nine years; he wrote to the Blessed Symeon. The Emperor therefore had prefixed this title before his Letter; τῷ μακάριῳ καὶ ἀσπίῳ μακάριῳ, To the most Holy and Aereal Martyr. Where he terms him Martyr; on account of those great severities wherewith he afflicted his own body; and he styles him Aereal, because he stood on high in the air, in a pillar. The words ὁὐκ ἐκστασιν do undoubtedly declare what I have said; to wit, that those now mentioned, or them immediately following, are the words of the Emperor Theodosius. Notwithstanding, Christophorus has pointed this place otherwise, as 'tis apparent from his Version. For he renders it thus: Et Sanctissimum ac Aereum oraret Martyrem, ut nominatum pro ipso Deum obsecraret. And he besought the most Holy and Aereal Martyr, that he would beseech God expressly for himself. Which punctuation of this passage I can in no wise approve of. Valf. and seven and forty in that place called * The † See the Mandra: during ten years [ of which time ] following Chapter, Note (α.) he performed his combat in a certain narrow place; [ he dwelt ] seven years in the shorter pillars, and thirty years upon a pillar of forty cubits long. His most sacred body, after his departure out of this life, in the succeeding times was brought to Antioch, [ to wit, ] when Leo sway'd the Imperial Scepter, and Martyrius presided over the Church of Antioch; at which time also Ardaburius Master of the Oriental Milice, came to Symeon's Mandra, accompanied with those Military Forces he had about him, and with other multitudes; and guarded the most precious dead body of the blessed Symeon, to the end that the neighbouring Cities might not meet together and steal it. His most holy body therefore is convey'd to Antioch, very great Miracles having been performed even by the way. The Emperor Leo desired it might be given to him by the Antiochians. But the Inhabitants of Antioch, presented a supplicatory Libel to him, wherein were contained these words: In regard we have no wall to our City, ( For After this 'tis fallen by reason of the wrath [ of God: ] ) we have brought [ hitherto ] the most Holy Body that it may be to us instead of a wall and a Fortification. By which words the Emperor Leo was prevailed upon, granted their request, and permitted them [ to enjoy ] the Holy Body. Many of this person's [ Reliques ] have been preserved until our times. Even I myself have seen his holy Head, ( several Ecclesiastics being then present, ) at such time as the most celebrated Gregorius was Bishop of Antioch; when Philippus requested, that the precious Reliques of the Saints might be sent to him, in order to the guarding and defending the Oriental Milice. And, which is to be wondered at, the hair of his Head was not fallen off; but is preserved perfect and entire, as if he were yet alive, and conversant amongst men. The skin also of his forehead was wrinkled indeed, and become hard; but 'tis as yet preserved whole, as are also most of his teeth, & excepting so many of them as have by force been taken away by the hands of faithful persons. [ Which teeth of his ] do by their * form declare, what, how great and eminent a man of God this Symeon was. There lies likewise at his head, a chain made of iron which he wore about his neck; with which his much-renewed Body, worn out by austerities, hath shar'd the honours [ given ] by God. But the place may be mended by a small change, thus: αὐτῷ τῷ ἁγίῳ, &c. excepting for many of them at, &c. Instead of these words, Nicephorus uses, αὐτῷ τῷ ἁγίῳ; which is more elegant. Valf. ἁγίῳ τῷ ἁγίῳ, by [ their ] figure, form, or shape: Valfius reit-

But this happens only on those days, observed in memory of that most holy Person [Symeon.] There are those who say, (nor are we to disbelieve the Miracle, both because of their credibility who affirm it, and by reason of other things which we our selves have beheld:) that they have seen even a his very Person flying up and down this way and that way, with his long beard, and his head covered with a * Tiara, as it was wont to be. The men who come to this place, have free liberty to enter in, and go round the Pillar many times together with their beasts that carry burdens. But a most exquisite care is taken, (for what reason I cannot say,) that no woman should go into the Church. Therefore, they stand without [the Church,] at the Porch, and behold the Miracle. For one of the [Church] Gates is placed exactly opposite to the glittering Star.

* A round ornament, worn by Princes and Priests on their heads; it was heretofore the dress of the Persian women. b 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. c A round ornament, worn by Princes and Priests on their heads; it was heretofore the dress of the Persian women. d 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. e 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. f 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. g 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. h 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. i 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. j 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. k 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. l 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. m 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. n 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. o 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. p 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. q 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. r 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. s 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. t 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. u 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. v 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. w 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. x 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. y 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof. z 'It is also said by Theodorus, that in the Tellemian MS. I found it written, that the account being changed, Valof.

CHAP. XV.

Concerning Saint Isidorus Pelusiota, and Synesius Bishop of Cyrene.

During the same [Theodosius's] Reign flourished Isidorus also, * whose glory (to use a Poetick Expression,) is far spread, a Person celebrated amongst all men, both for his Actions and Eloquence. This man t macerated his Body with Labours in such a manner, and fasted his Soul with sublime and divine doctrines to so high a degree, that he lived an Angelick life upon earth, and was always the living Monument both of a Monastick life, and also of a Contemplation upon God. He wrote

* Niciphorus (book 14. chap. 53. where he transcribes this passage of Evagrius) words it thus; Τὸν αὖτις ἰδὼν Σινέσιον, ὃς ἐν ἐκστάσει ἦν. The same Reading I found in the Tellemian MS. It may also be mended thus; Τὸν αὖτις ἰδὼν Σινέσιον, ὃς ἐν ἐκστάσει ἦν. In Robert Stephen's Edition, the Reading here is, ὃς ἐν ἐκστάσει ἦν. For this, there is an illustrious Elogy in his Epistle to Zenobius Scholasticus, which Ptolemy records in his Bibliotheca. Where he says, That he was by birth an Alexandrian, and venerable amongst the Archbishops themselves. Ἀρχιεπισκοπῶν δὲ καὶ ἱερέων καὶ τοῦ λαοῦ ὃς αὐτὸν ἀρετῶν ἀνὰ Νίσιον. Valof.

many other [pieces] filled [with passages] of manifold utility; he wrote also to the celebrated Cyrillus, from which [Letters] 'tis evidently demonstrated, that he flourished in the same times with the divine [Cyrillus.] But because 'tis my endeavour to adorn * this History as much as 'tis possible, come on, let Synesius [Bishop] of Cyrene come forth, that he may beautify our History t with the eminency of his own Name. This Synesius was accomplished with all other [Arts and Sciences;] but * excelled in Philosophy to so high a degree, that he was the Admiration of those Christians, who in passing their judgments upon what they see, are not [by- assed] either by affection or hatred. They persuaded him therefore, b to be a partaker of the salutary Regeneration, and to take the Sacerdotal yoke upon him, c although he had not as yet embraced the Doctrine of the Resurrection, * nor would be induced to believe that Article: they having most truly conjectured, that these [Sentiments] would follow these Persons other virtues, [in regard] the divine grace would permit [him] to have nothing imperfect. Nor was their expectation frustrated. For, what and how great a Person he proved, is sufficiently attested by the Epistles which he wrote with much Elegancy and Learning after his [undertaking] to the Sacerdotal Function, by the d Oration he spoke to [the Emperour] Theodosius himself, and by those other useful Works of his that are extant.

promoted to the Episcopal dignity at one and the same time. And yet, that this is false, Petavius proves by many Arguments, in his Notes upon Synesius, pag. 2 and 3. Notwithstanding, Evagrius is followed by Photius in his Bibliotheca, and by Nicephorus book 14. chap. 53. Although Nicephorus says not that Synesius had been baptized and ordained at one and the same time; but, that when Theophilus had prevailed with him to receive Christian-baptism, afterwards he endeavoured to persuade him to enter upon the Episcopal Function. See Nicephorus's words, at the book and chapter now cited. Valof.

c Many Persons, I perceive, have perverted themselves. That when Synesius was elected Bishop by the Inhabitants of Ptolemais, he wholly disbelieved the Resurrection of Bodies. Notwithstanding, that this is not true, Synesius himself attests in his 105th Epistle, which he wrote to his brother Euphorius, who was then at Alexandria. In that Letter, he gives reasons why he could not undertake the Bishoprick; offered to him.

One of which is, The Resurrection of Bodies. His Sentiment concerning which point, he declares in these words; ἡ δὲ ὑπομνηστικὴ ἀνάστασις ἡν ἡμεῖς καὶ ἀποφύγομεν ἵνα μὴ, καὶ ποτὶς αὖτις τὴν ἐκείνην ἀποφύγομεν ἐκδοχὴν, ὅτι μὴ ἐπὶ τῇ ἀνάστασις. I account a Sacred and Mystical thing, and am far from assenting to the opinions of the Vulgar. Synesius therefore did not wisely deny the Resurrection of the dead; but expounded it agreeable to the Platonicks, and to Origen. Baronius (at the Year of Christ 410,) thinks, that whatever is said by Synesius in this Epistle, is not spoken seriously, but feignedly and dissemblingly, that he might decline the burthen of a Bishoprick. But Petavius has deservedly found fault with this opinion of Baronius. For he says, that 'tis much more likely, that Synesius wrote these things to his brother in a manner agreeable to what he then thought. But, that having been afterwards instructed by Theophilus and other Prelates, before he was made a Bishop, he embraced a true opinion concerning the Resurrection. Lucas Hoffmannius has at large examined this question, in a peculiar Dissertation, which is in favour to the Studious, we have set forth at the close of our Annotations. [The Learned Reader will meet with this Dissertation, de Synesio Episcopo de fide Episcopatu, at the Close of the third Vol. of the Ecclesiastick Historians set forth by Valefius, at pag 202 of Valefius's Notes.] In the interim, the Reader is to be advertised, that there is a Mistake in the Contents of this Chapter, and in Photius's Bibliotheca, where Synesius is termed Bishop of Cyrene. Synesius was indeed by Country a Cyrenaean. But he was Bishop of Ptolemais, which is a City in Cyrenaica. Valof.

d He means the Oration de Regno. Which notwithstanding was not spoken to Theodosius Junior, but to Arcadius in the Year of Christ 400, that is, ten Years before Synesius had undertaken the Bishoprick; as Dionysius Petavius has rightly observed in his Notes at that Oration of Synesius. Valof.

CHAP. XVI.

How the Divine Ignatius, having been removed from Rome, was deposited at Antioch.

AT the same time also, as 'tis recorded by a Evagrius, * Johannes the Rhetorician and others, does the Divine Ignatius (after he had obtained, quently agreeable to his desire, the bellies of wild-beasts quote the for his Tomb, in the Amphitheatre at Rome; History of this Johannes the Rhetorician in his following books. For instance, in chap. 12 of his second book, in chap. 10. and 23. of his third book, and in the fifth chapter of his fourth book. But he is a far different Person from that Zoilius [built] the Royal Porticus, which [is placed] * at the South-side of Rufinus [his Por-ticus ;] and retains his name even to our age, Robert The reading although the buildings have [frequently] been Edition altered on account of various calamitous accidents. Moreover, Callistus has raised a most and here is magnificent and splendid structure (which as this seems well the Ancients as those of our Age, have to remove termed Callistus's Porticus,) before The positive * that Palace which is made the * Or, though Court of Judicature ; directly at the buildings opposite to the Forum, in which there are is a most beautiful house, the at the Prætorium of the Masters of the Southern part of Ro- mans. After these binus's persons, Anatolius being sent Master of the The lice into the East, built that termed Anatolius's from Chris-Porticus, and beautified it with matter of all topo- sorts. These [Remarks] (though they are son's Copy, foreign to our design in hand, yet) [will not have set it seem] unhandsome and contemptible to lovers forth thus of Learning. the ex

palatium

at the [Southern] side of Rophinu's Palace. Sir Henry Savile also in his Copy which I have by me, has expunged the word Rufinus, and in stead thereof has substituted these [ῥοφίνου] the Roof of the Palace. And thus Chrysostom read, as 'tis apparent from his Version. For he has rendered it thus: Qui ad Australe latu, recti palatii, quod Rufini nomen obtinet, spectat which looks towards the southern side of the Roof of the Palace, which bears the name of Rufinus. But in regard these words [ῥοφίνου] or [ῥοφίνου] begot occur not, either in the Kings, or in the Florentine, or Telerian M.S.S. in my judgment, they ought deferentially to be expunged. Valef. Valestinus has rendered this passage thus: qua ad meridionem latu porticus Rufini sita; which we have expret in our English Version. The import of the Greek, if rendered word for word, is this, as the Southern part of Rophinu's side.

Concerning the [public] Buildings in Antioch, and who they were that erected them.

<sup>a</sup> τὸ ἐκκλησίαν τὴν κατὰ τοῦτο. Misiculus renders it, Mansionem ducum, the Mansion of the Dukes, or chief Military Commanders. Christopherson's Version is not much different; for he renders it thus: εἰς ὅρανον φορὴ in quo pulcherrima domus est quam praefati praefidiorum incolere solent.] Over against the Forum wherein there is a most beautiful house, in which the Praefecti of the Milice [or of the Military Forces], do usually dwell. But, by ἐκκλησίαν in this place, in my judgment, must be understood, (not the Military Commanders in chief, or Masters of the Milice but) the Magistri Praetorii or Duumviri, who in Greek were termed ἐκκλησίαι, as I have already remarked in my notes on Aem. Marcellinus, and Eusebius: [see Euseb. Eccl. Hist. book 7, chap. 11. note (p.)] and book 8, chap. 11. note (c.c)]. Now, why I suppose this word is rather thus to be taken here, this is the reason, because that house is said to have been in the Forum, over against the Palace wherein was the Court of Judicature. Moreover, such a house at this seems to be more agreeable to a Municipal Magistracy, than to a Resour of the Milice. Besides, these houses were in Greek termed ἐκκλησία. Such a one was the Strategium at Constantinople, as I have noted at the first Book of Socrates, [chap. 16. note (d).] Although the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle, in The Translations of the Emperor Severus, brings another reason of this word. But now, having examined the business more attentively; by ἐκκλησίαν I understand here the Masters of the Milice brought into the East, who had a splendid Praetorium in the Forum of the City Antioch. Theophanes mentions this Praetorium, in his Chronicon, pag. 127. ἀρχιεπίσκοπος δὲ τῶν πατρῶν τὸ αὐτοῦ ἐστὶν οὗτον, ὃ ἔως τοῦ θεοδόσιου τὸ ἐκκλησίαν λέγουσαν: For the fire was kindled from the Church of Saint Stephen, and burnt [or, went] as far as the Praetorium of the Master of the Milice. Valer.

Concerning the several Wars, which hapned both in Italy, and Persia, during the Reign of Theodosius.

* During the times of the same Theodosius, frequent Rebellions hapned in Europe, whilst Valentinianus was Emperour of Rome. Which Theodosius repressed, by sending great Forces both by Land and Sea, [which made up] a Foot Army, as a Naval strength. Moreover, he vanquished the Persians (* who were grown insolent, Jüderget, Father to Varanes, being then their

Grammatici; † See Soit must be crates,
made vii-book 7.
τῶ. But chap. 8,
because and 18.

Peace, which lasted until the twelfth year of Anasthufus's Reign. These transactions have been related by other Writers; and are also very handsomely reduced into an Epitome, by Eustathius the Syrian of Epiphania, who has likewise written the Siege of Amida. At the same time, as 'tis said, the Poets Claudianus and Cyrus flourished. Further, this Cyrus arrived at the highest Chair of the Prefects, which [grand Officer]
Tiberian our Ancestours termed The Prefectus Pretorio
MS. In [or Prefect of the Court.] He was also Master of the Western Militie, at which time Carthage was taken by the Vandals, those Barbarians being governed by Genserichus.

Here it must be disjunctus; not disjunctus, as it is in Reber's Stephens's Edit. Valef.

This is the Claudian, whose excellent Verses are at this day extant.
But, a twofold difficulty occurs at this place: (1) How a Latine Poet should come to be mentioned here by Eugarius? (2) Why he is placed by the same Eugarius on the times of Theodosius Junior, when as The Claudians, whose verses we now have, flourished in the Reigns of Arcadius and Honorius, as His writings inform us? The answer to the first Question is easie. For Claudian wrote not only Latine, but Greek Poems also. On which account, in the Old Epigram which was inscribed on the Basis of his Statue, he is said to have had the soul of Virgil and Homer also, transfused into him. He began to write a Latine Poem first in the year of Christ 355, whereon Olybrius and Probinus were Consuls. He wrote an Elegant Poem on their Consulate, which is still extant. When this attempt had succeeded happily to Claudian, it encouraged him to the writing of Latine verses afterwards;
whereas he had published only Greek Poems before, as himself attests in his Elegy to Probinus, in these words:

Romani bibimus primum Te Consule fontes,
Et Laris cessit Graja Tbalia toga.

Incipiensque tuis a facibus omnia cecit,
Fataque debebo postiora Tibi.

'Tis certain, Claudian was by Nation a Grecian, born at the City Alexandria, as Suidas informs us at the word κλαυδιανος. Claudian himself also attests the same, in his Poem to Hadrianus Prefectus Pre-torio, (who was himself also an Alexandrian.) For he writes thus concerning Alexander the Macedonian;

Conditor hic patriæ Sic hostibus ille pereperit.

And in the close of the same Poem, he has these words:

Saviet in miseros cognata potentia civis.
Audiat hæc commune solum, longæque carinis Nota Pharos, &c. Valef.

The Poet Cyrus was by Nation an Egyptian, born at the Town Panopolis. Who having on account of his poetick faculty been highly acceptable to Eudocia Augusta, wife to Theodosius Junior, (for this woman was παρσις, a Great lover of verses;) is promoted by the Emperour Theodosius to the Prefecture of the Pretorium, and to that of the City. He was also Ex-Consul, and Patricius, as Suidas relates. But afterwards, when the Emperess Eudocia, on account of some unknown reason, had left the Palace, and was gone to the City Jerusalem; Cyrus, deprived of his power, is made Bishop of Coesary a City of Phrygia, or rather of Synnars, as the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle and Theopanes do inform us. He lived till the times of Leo Augustus, as Suidas attests. Theophylact (in the 8th book of his History, chap. 8.) makes mention of this Cyrus the Consul and Poet; where he says, that the Church of the God-bearing Virgin at Constantinople, was built by him, in the times of Theodosius Augustus. Valef.

CHAP. XX.

Concerning the Emperess Eudocia, and her daughter Eudoxia; and how [Eudocia] came to Antioch, and [went] to Jerusalem.

Moreover, this Theodosius married Eu-docia, (after she had received salutary Baptism; by original extract an Athenian,

[a Woman] eloquent and beautiful;) by the mediation of Pulcheria Augusta his sister. By her Theodosius had a daughter, [by name] Eu-doxia, whom, when the afterwards came to be marriageable, the Emperour Valentinianus married, having [on that account] gone from the Elder Rome and arrived at Constantinople. [But,] a long time after this, [Eu-docia] in her journey which she made to the Holy City of Christ our God, comes hither; he added here, after this manner: ἡ δὲ ἑρπύστης ὄρεται, But a long time after this, she;
that is, Eudocia. For, unless you add this particle; what follows will be meant concerning Eudocia, Eudocia's daughter; of whom Eugarius has spoken just before. But, the adding of this particle [ἡ, Bar] shews that the discourse is not now concerning Eudocia, but her Mother Eudocia. Valef.

Myself have mistaken. Myself and Christophorus understood this place very erroneously. For, they supposed that by the word ἐκείνη the City of Jerusalem was meant; when as the City Antioch is to be understood. For Eugarius wrote his History at Antioch, in which City he had first the Mansion of his own fortunes, as we have shown in our account of his Life and Ecclesiastical History. Moreover, Niciphanus fell into the same mistake with Myself and Christophorus. For in his 14th book, chap. 50. where he writes out this passage of Eugarius, he understands the word ἐκείνη of the City Jerusalem. But,
'twas easie to have perceived from Eugarius's following words, that these words could not have been meant of the City Jerusalem. For Jerusalem was not a Colony of Greeks, but rather of Jews, and after that, of Romans. Nor did Ulpianus, Libanius, and the other writers here mentioned by Eugarius, write concerning the City Jerusalem. Nor, lastly, could the Emperess Eudocia, who by original extract was an Athenian, speak to the Citizens of Jerusalem in this verse,

Τυρρηνίης ἥντις ἐγὼ ἀνάλωθ' ὄρεται.

I boast that I am of Your Stock and Blood.

'Tis certain, the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle does say, that Eudocia made an Oration to the Antiochians out of a Golden Cle-riot, Valef.

And having made an Oration in publick to the people here, she closed her Speech with this Verse:

I boast that I am of Your Stock and Blood.

(Intimating thereby the Colonies which had been sent hither out of Greece. If any one be desirous of having an exact account of these [Colonies,] Strabo the Geographer, Phlegon, Dio-dorus Sicilius, Arrianus, and Pisander the Poet, place in have written concerning them with great accuracy. Valef.

There were two Pisanders, Poets. The one a Rhodian, who wrote the Poem Heraclea in two books, which treats concerning Heracles the Αἰώνιος. Some make this Pisander ancienter than Hesiod. Others place him on the thirty third Olympiad, as Suidas relates. The other Pisander was a Lycæus, born at Larinda a Town of Lycæa, son of the Poet Nestor. Suidas says he flourished in the Reign of Alexander son of Mammæa. He wrote six books in Heroick Verse, ἡρώϊον ὁμοειμένον, concerning the marriages of the Heroes and Goddesses, which were written with all manner of History, as Suidas attests. Ζεφίμης mentions that work in his fifth Book: where he speaks concerning the building of the City Hemona: ἀπὸ τῶν ἡρώων ὁμοειμένον, ὃ τῷ πρῶτῳ ἡρώϊον ὁμοειμένον ὁμοειμένον, ὁμοειμένον, ὁμοειμένον, ὁμοειμένον; which words of Ζεφίμης, Lucianus translates in this manner; Sicuti Pisander
Poeta memorie prodidit, qui heroum divinarumque nuptiarum
titulo totam hanc propemodum historiam complexus est. As Pisander the Poet has recorded, who under the Title of Heroick and Divine marriages, has in a manner comprized this whole History. This is not the meaning of Ζεφίμης's words. For Ζεφίμης says, that Pisander the Poet, in that Poem of his concerning the marriages of the Heros and Goddesses, has in a manner comprehended all History. Suidas does likewise attest the same; whose words concerning Pisander are these ἡρώων ὁμοειμένον ὁμοειμένον ὁμοειμένον ὁμοειμένον ὁμοειμένον
ἡρώων ὁμοειμένον ὁμοειμένον ὁμοειμένον ὁμοειμένον ὁμοειμένον
he wrote a various History in verses; which he intitled, concerning the marriages of the Heroes and Goddesses, in six books. In this work therefore, Pisander had written concerning Τριπολεμίου the Argive, and concerning Ἰά, who were the first that built Antioch, a City of Syria. Further, this work seems to have been comprehended in sixteen books, and not in six, as 'tis erroneously extant in Suidas.
For Stephanus in his book de Urbibus, cites the tenth, and fourteenth book of Pisander. Valef.

racy:

[ὑπο γῆν, under the earth] read [ὑπὲρ γῆν, above the earth;
which latter reading Nicéphorus (book 14 chap. 50.) has followed.
Besides, the word [δοξά, seem] was wanting here; which we have put in from the Florentine MS. In the Tellerian MS. I found it written [ὑπὲρ γῆν, above the earth. Vale!]
† Τὰς κακὰς ἀπολαύσεις. Musculus and Christophorus have rendered this place very ill. Nicéphorus has explained it well in the

There are amongst them frequent and unwearied bendings of the knees, and [after them] <sup>a</sup> Laborious stations; Desire being the only recreation of their Age, and of their voluntary infirmity. They are a kind of Champions without flesh, Wrestlers without blood; who instead of a splendid banquet and delicious dainties, have a fast, and in place of a full-furnish'd Table, nothing (as near as 'tis possible) that they may taft of. Whensoever a stranger comes to them, though it be in the morning, yet they receive him with a singular hospitality, and friendly invitation to eat and drink; having found out another sort of fasting, to wit, to eat even against their will. So that this thing strikes [all men] with an astonishment, that (whereas they want <sup>a</sup> so many [necessaries] for sufficient food, yet) they are contented with so very few: being enemies to their own wills and nature, but slaves <sup>a</sup> to the desires of their neighbours; that in all things the sweets of the flesh might be expelled, and the soul might have the Government, prudently chusing and conserving what is best and most acceptable to God. Blessed persons, in respect of the life they lead here; but much more blessed on account of their translation to that other, after which they pant continually, hasting to see <sup>a</sup> him whom they love.

field of [τῆς τοῦ πληγῆς διδύμου] it is plainly written thus, τῆς τοῦ πληγῆς διδύμου, so the desires of their neighbours. Sir Henry Sassi had drawn a line under this place, signifying thereby, that there was a fault here. But he saw not how it was to be mended. Nicephorus also retains the vulgar reading. Valef

<sup>a</sup> The πλεονεξία αὐτῶν. The reading in the Tellerian MS. ple-

ses me better; which is [τὸ πλεονεξία αὐτῶν, the thing desired by them;] this to me seems more elegant. Valef.

C H A P. XXII.

What [Structures] the Empress Eudocia built in Palestine, and concerning the Church of the Proto-Martyr Stephen, within which she was piously buried: moreover, concerning the Death of the Emperour Theodosius.

WHEN therefore the Wife of Theodosius had conversed with many such persons as these, and had built many Monasteries, like unto them which I have mentioned; and moreover, had repaired the walls of Jerusalem [and made them] much better; she erected a vast Church, eminent for its <sup>a</sup> splendidence and beauty, [in <sup>a</sup> Or, Excellence] of Stephen the first of the Deacons and Martyrs, about the distance of one furlong from Jerusalem. In which Church she was deposited, after her departure to an immortal life. Further, Theodosius [having ended his life] sometime after these things, or, as some will have it, before Eudocia; and changed the Empire (which had been Governed by him eight and thirty years,) [for an eternal life:] the most incomparable Marcianus assumes the Roman Empire. The Actions therefore, which were perform'd by Him during his Ruling the Eastern Empire, shall most plainly be set forth † in the following Book, † Or, in the following History. provided divine assistance will furnish us with its own favour and benevolence.

THE SECOND BOOK OF THE Ecclesiastical History

OF

EVAGRIUS SCHOLASTICUS EPIPHANIENSIS,

And [one] of the EX-PÆFACTS.

CHAPTER I.

*Concerning the Emperor Marcianus, and what signs preceded, * declaring he should be Emperor.*

* Or, declaring his Empire.

* Or, discourse.

* Or, he was crowned
with.

* Instead of [Patriarch] it must be Prætor, which is the reading in the Tellurian MS. and in Nicephorus, Book 14. This is the Prætor, out of whose Books of History we have the Excerptæ (regardant). Valef.

* Or, endeavouring.

WHAT was transacted during the Times of Theodosius [Junior,] we have comprehended in our First Book. Come on, we will now bring Marcianus forth, that famous Emperor of the Romans; and in the first place we will relate, who and whence he was, and in what manner * he arrived at the Roman Empire: and then we will declare the affairs transacted by him, in their proper places [and times] Marcianus therefore, as 'tis related by many others, and also by * Priscus the Rhetorician, by original Extract was a Thracian, the Son of a Military man. * Desiring to follow his Father's course of life, he went to Philippopolis, [hoping] he might there be enrolled in the Companies of the Millice. As he was going thither, he sees the body of a man newly slain, which lay thrown upon the ground. Near to which he made a stand, (for he was eminent in respect of his other [endowments,] but most especially, on account of his humanity and compassion;) lamented what had hapned, and for a sufficient while desisted from proceeding on his journey, being desirous to perform what was fitting [to be done to the dead body.] When some persons had seen this, they gave the Magistrates of Philippopolis an account of it. Who having apprehended Marcianus, interrogated him concerning the Murder of the Man. When therefore conjectures and probabilities prevailed more than truth it self, and than the tongue of the person accused denying the Murder; and when [Marcianus] was about to undergo the punishment of a Murderer; divine assistance on a sudden discovered the person that had committed the Murder. Who having been punish'd for that fact with the loss of his head, [thereby] * preserved the head of Marcianus. * Or, præ- Being thus unexpectedly saved, he goes to one domus, or, of the Companies of the Millice in that place, forgeat, * it being his desire to enter himself a Soldier therein. They admired the Man, and conjecturing upon good grounds that he would in future become a great person and one of extraordinary worth, they received him most willingly, and enrolled him amongst themselves, not least of all, as the Military Law directs; but, in the place of a Soldier newly dead, whose name was Augustus, they registered Marcianus (who was likewise called Augustus,) in the Muster-Roll. Thus [Marcianus by] his own name was before-hand in possession of the denomination of our Emperours, who at such time as they put on their Purple [assume] the Appellation of Augusti. As if the name had refused to abide with him without the dignity; and again, as if the dignity could have required no other name for its being majestically adorned. So that, his Proper, and his Appellative name was the same; both his Dignity, and likewise his Appellation, being declar'd by one and the same denomination. Moreover, another accident hapned, from which it might be conjectured, that Marcianus would come to be Emperor. For, having had a Mil-lity, to desire and to sue for. So Dionys. Halicarnassensis, about the close of his 14th Book, uses this Phrase, magistratus tibi dedit to sue for an Office. But, Appian usually words it thus, magistratus eis eis plus attulit. And so does the Old Author in Suidas, in the word magistratus. Now, Candidates, when they sued for an Office, were wont nomen suum præstare, to tell their name and be called. Johannes Langus renders it, Militare Sacramentum dicere, to be the Military Oath. Which Version I disprove of. For magistratus is the alium militare, the Muster-Roll, wherein the names of all the Soldiers were registered. Egerius, Book 2. Chap. 3. terms it Magistralium, the List of Soldiers. Evagrius uses magistratus in this sense hereafter in this Chapter; magistratus tibi est augustinus is magistratus magistratus, they registered Marcianus (who was likewise called Augustus) in the Muster-Roll. Further, the names of the Soldiers were inserted into the Muster-Roll, before they had laid the Oath. As Vegetius steels in the fore quoted place. Candidatus solum magis use of the same term, in his first book Histor. where his words concerning Leo are these: et in eo datus est tibi in datus est tibi magistratus magistratus, who was of that Order in Thraciam, having been registered in a Military Company. Valef.

tary Command under Alar [in the War] against the Vandals, it hapned that Marcianus, together with many others, was taken Prisoner, (Alar having been very much worsted by the Vandals;) and brought into a Field with the other Captives; it being Geiserichus's desire to see the Prisoners. After they were gathered together, Geiserichus being seated in an high room, pleased himself with viewing the multitude of those taken Prisoners. And in regard much time was spent [there, the Prisoners] did what each of them had a mind to: (For Geiserichus had given order, that those who guarded the Captives, should loose them from their bonds.) Some of them therefore did one thing, others another. But Marcianus laid himself down on the ground, and slept in the Sun, which was hot and more scorching than usual at that season of the year. [In which very interim] an Eagle came down from on high in the Air, and raising her self by a flight with her face perpendicularly opposite to the Sun, made a shadow like a Cloud over Marcianus, whereby she refreshed and cooled him. Geiserichus wondering hereat, with great foresight conjectured at what would happen; and when he had sent for Marcianus, he caused him to be dismissed from his Captivity, having first bound him in great Oaths, that after his coming to the Empire, he should inviolably keep his faith to the Vandals, and not move his Arms against them. Which ingagement, as Procopius relates, Marcianus did in reality keep and perform. But leaving this digression, let us return to our Subject.

Marcianus was pious towards God, just as to what related to his Subjects: accounting those true riches (not which were hoarded up, or brought together from the Collections of Tribute; but them only) which might supply the wants of the indigent, and render their Estates who possess much, secure and safe. He was formidable, not for his punishing, but because [twas feared] he was about to punish. On these accounts therefore he obtained the Empire, [which fell to him] not by an hereditary Right, but [was] the reward of his virtue; as well the Senate, as all other persons of what degrees and orders soever, conferring the Imperial dignity upon him by a general suffrage, to which they were persuaded by Pulcheria, Whom, in regard she was Augusta, Marcianus married; but knew her not as a Wife, the continuing a Virgin till her death. And these things were done, before Valentinianus Emperour of Rome had confirmed this Election by his own consent. Notwithstanding, by reason of [Marcianus's] Virtue, he afterwards made it authentic. Further, it was Marcianus's desire, that [one] Worship might in common be exhibited to God by all persons, (those tongues, which had been confuted through impiety, being again piously united;) and that the Deity might be praised with one and the same * Doxology.

came to him, both the * Responsales of Lao Bishop of the Elder Rome, affirming that Dioscorus in the second Ephesine Synod, had not admitted of Leo's Letter, wherein was contained † the Doctrine of the true Faith: and also those persons who had been injured by the same Dioscorus, intreating that their Cause might be judged in a Synod of Bishops. But above all Eusebius, who had been Bishop of Dorylaeum, was most † Or, the unfortunately urgent, saying, that by the treacherous contrivances of Chrysaphius Theodosius's * Protector, he and Flavianus had been deposed, because, to Chrysaphius demanding Gold for Flavianus's own Ordination, Flavianus (to shame him) * had sent the sacred Vessels; and because Chrysaphius agreed with Eutyches in his erroneous and false Opinions. Eusebius said moreover that Flavianus had been beaten, and kickt, and in a miserable manner murdered by Dioscorus. Chrysaphius is thus termed by Priscus Rhetor, in his Excerpt. Legationum. The Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle calls him Spasbarius, which we may render Esquire of the Emperour's body. He is termed Spasbarius also in Gestis de pempine Acacii, which Jacobus Sirmondus hath set forth. Valef.

* Theophanes in his Chronicon relates that Theodosius Junior, who then made his Residence at Chalcedon, by the impulse of Chrysaphius commanded Flavianus, (newly ordained Bishop of Constantinople.) that for his Ordination he should send him the Eulogia, [that is, the Loaves of Benediction, or, pieces of the Blessed bread. See Socrat. Book 7. Chap. 12. Note (65)] and also Mauricius's Glossary, at the word Eulogia.] And when Flavianus had sent white loaves, in the name of a Benediction, Chrysaphius made answer, that the Emperour demanded golden Eulogia. In answer to which Flavianus wrote back, that he had no money which he could send, unless instead of money he should present him with the sacred Vessels of the Church. And this thing, as Theophanes says, raised a deadly grudge between Chrysaphius and Flavianus. Valef.

For these reasons, a Synod is convened at Chalcedon, Couriers and Expresses being sent, and the Bishops in all places called together. * by the most pious Emperour's Letters, first at Nicaea: (in so much that, Leo Bishop of Rome, writing to them concerning those persons he had sent to supply his own place, to wit, Paschasius, Luccentius, and the rest, inscribed [his Letters thus,] To those convened at Nicaea;) but afterwards at Chalcedon in the Country of the Bythinians. * Zacharius Rhetor, in favour to Nestorius, does indeed * affirm that he was sent for out of Exile [to this Council.] But, that this was not so, may be conjectured from hence, that the Synod does every where Anathematize Nestorius. The same is also expressly attested by Euthatius Bishop of Borystus (in his Letter to Johannes a Bishop, and to another Johannes a Presbyter, concerning the matters agitated in the Synod,) in these very (as it may words: Those persons meeting again, who demanded Nestorius's Reliques, cried out, against the Synod, [in this sort:] For what reason are Holy Men Anathematiz'd? In so much that the Emperour, being highly incensed, commanded his Guards, to drive them a far off. How therefore Nestorius could have been called [to this Council,] who was dead long before, I cannot tell.

(as an History ought to be written,) but was corrupted with favour and hatred, that is, Evagrius, with affection and partiality, as Evagrius says. Evagrius attests the same concerning him, in Book 3. Chap. 7. And in Chap. 18. of his third Book, he accuses the same Zacharias of negligence. Valef.

† In the Florentine MS. the reading of this place is more entire thus, in the Synod of Chalcedon, Leo Bishop of Rome. And we have rendered it accordingly. Valef. In Robert Stephens Edition, the words [in this Synod, out of Exile,] are wanting.

CHAP. II.

Concerning the Synod at Chalcedon, and what was the Occasion of its being convened.

Wherefore therefore the Emperour's mind was taken up with these desires, that [Further,] so great a plenty [of blood] is extracted out thence, that both the pious Emperours, and also all the Priests [there] convened, moreover the whole multitude which flock together at that place, in a most plentiful manner to partake of it, and likewise send it over the whole World, to the Faithful that are desirous of it. And the congealed blood lasts [so as it is] for ever, nor is the most holy blood in any wife changed into any other colour. * These miracles are performed, not at any determinate period of time, but according as the Life of the Bishop, and the gravity of his Morals shall † deserve. For, 'tis reported, that when ever a Person of probity, and one eminent for his Virtues, does govern [that Church,] this miracle is performed, and that most frequently: but when there is no such Prelate, such divine signs as these do rarely happen. But I will relate another [miracle,] which no time or season || interrupts: nor does it make any difference between the Faithful and the Infidels; but 'tis alike * shewn to all Persons. When any Person comes into that place, wherein the precious Chest is, which contains most of the holy Reliques, † he smells a fragrant scent, which transcends all the usual flavours [smelt] by men. For, this scent is neither like that || which arises from Meadows, nor like that sent forth by any the most fragrant things; nor is it such a one as is made by Perfumers: but 'tis a certain strange and most excellent scent, * which of it self demonstrates the [Virtues and] power of those things that produce it.

And so Nicophorus read for he has expressit this place of Evagrius thus: τοῦτον τὸ ἀράδιστον τὸ δὲ δῶρον, quod dedit the power of that thing which produces it.

CHAP. VI.

Concerning those things which were agitated and established in the Synod; and how Dioscorus [Bishop] of Alexandria was deposed; but, Theodoret, Ibas, and some others were restored.

IN this place, the Synod I have mentioned is convened, the Bishops Paschasius and Lucentius, and Bonifacius the Presbyter, administering (as I have said,) the place of Leo Pontiff of the Elder Rome: Anatolius presiding over the Constantinopolitan [Church;] and Dioscorus being Bishop of [the Church of] the Alexandrians. Maximus [Bishop] of Antioch, and Julianus of Jerusalem [were there also.] Together with whom were present those Prelates whom they had about them; and also those Personages who held the principal places in the eminent Senate [of Constantinople.] To whom they who filled Leo's place, said, that Dioscorus ought not to sit together with them in the Council. For this they [affirmed] was given them in charge by their Bishop Leo, and unless it were observed, they would remove out of the Church. And when [those] of the Senate asked, what were the matters objected against Dioscorus; they returned answer, that he ought to render an account of his own judgement, who, contrary to what was fitting and just, had accepted the Person of the Judge. After which words, when Dioscorus by the Senates Decree had come forth into a place in the midst; Eusebius made his Request, that the Supplicatory Libel; which he had presented to the Emperour, might be recited; which Request he worded thus: I have been injured by Dioscorus; the Faith hath been injured; Flavianus the Bishop hath been murdered, and together with me unjustly deposed by him: do you give order, that my Supplicatory Libel may be read. Which thing when [the Judges] had discoursed of; the Libel was permitted to be read; the contents whereof were these.

* To the Lovers of Christ, our most religious, This, a most pious Emperour, Flavius Valentinianus, whole Pious and Marcianus, always Augusti; From Eusebius, face, as far the meanest Bishop of Dorylaeum, who speaks in words, defence of himself, of the Orthodox Faith, and ways Augusti, is memory who was Bishop of Constantinople. [It is] the design of your power, to make provision for all your Subjects, and to stretch forth an hand to all those who are injured: especially to them who are reckoned amongst the Ecclesiasticks. For hereby you worship the Deity, by whom a power hath been given you to Rule and Govern * the World. In regard things underefore the Faith der the of Christ and we Sun.

have suffered many and grievous things, contrary to all reason and equity, from Dioscorus the most reverend Bishop of the great City Alexandria; we address to Your piety, entreating we may have Right done Or. Now, the business is this. At a Synod lately held in the Metropolis of the Ephesians, (would to God that Synod had never been held, that it might not have filled the World with mischief and disturbances!) that * Good * Tis Iroman Dioscorus, disregarding the consideration of what is just, and [not respecting] the fear of God, (for he was of the same opinion, and entertained the same Sentiments with the vain-minded and heretical Eutyches; but concealed it from many Persons, as 'twas afterwards plainly evidenced from his own declaration: ) † took an occasion, to defend from that accusation which I had brought against Eutyches, a Person of the same opinion with himself, and from that Sentence pronounced against the same Eutyches by Bishop Flavianus * of holy * Tis I memory; [whereby] be assembled a multitude of persons, of disorderly and tumultuous Persons: and having of himself possessed himself of power by money, as much as in him lay, he has weakened the pious Religion of the Orthodox, and has confirmed the ill opinion of the Monk Eutyches, which long since, even from the beginning; hath been condemned by the holy Fathers: Whereas therefore; the matters are not small wanting in the King, and Eutyches, and Tellerian Manuscripts. Christophorus was the first that put in these words; from the Acts of the Chalcedon Council; notwithstanding, they seem not at all necessary at this place. Valef. The said Preface is wanting in Stephens's Edition; where also, instead of μεγ. δόξης, by Eusebius, the Reading is [ ἐκ δόξης, concerning Eusebius.]

Instead of [ τὴν ἐκκλησίαν ], to those who perform the Priesthood; it must without doubt be written [ τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τὴν αὐτήν ], to those who are reckoned amongst the Ecclesiasticks; as the Reading is in the first Edition of the Chalcedon Council, where this Supplicatory Libel of Bishop Eusebius to the Emperour Marcianus is recorded. Valef.

Instead of [ ἐν τῇ πόλει ], I doubt not but Evagrius wrote, ἐν τῇ πόλει, you most pious. Tis certain in the first Edition of the Chalcedon Council, the Reading is ἐν τῇ πόλει, worshipping. Which though it be corrupt, nevertheless confirms our Emendation. Valef.

002 . . . . .

conomy into two Sons; and it likewise expels those from the convention of sacred Persons, who audaciously assert the Deity of the Only Begotten to be possible: it * confutes them also who maintain a Mixture or Confusion in the two Natures of Christ: and it expels those who foolishly assert, that the form of a servant, which Christ took from us [men] is of a Celestial or of some other Substance: Lastly, it Anathematizes such Persons, as seditiously prate of two Natures of [our] Lord before the Union, but after the Union feign [them to have been] one. Following therefore [the steps of] the holy Fathers,

* Or, resist.

ἡ Ἐκκλησία τὸν αὐτὸν ἱερολογεῖν ἡμῶν ἰδὲν ὅτι καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἡμεῖς ἡμεῖς, καὶ ὑποκρίνεται ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐκκλησιαστικοῦ. In the Acts of the Chalcedon Synod, this place is worded otherwise, to wit, in this manner: ἡ Ἐκκλησία τὸν αὐτὸν ἱερολογεῖν ἡμῶν ἰδὲν ὅτι καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἡμεῖς ἡμεῖς, καὶ ὑποκρίνεται ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐκκλησιαστικοῦ. To confess our Lord Jesus Christ [to be] one and the same Son, with one consent we do all teach and declare. Which reading seems to me to be far the truer. Valef.

† We confess our Lord Jesus Christ [to be] one and the same Son, and with one consent We do all teach and declare, that the same Person is perfect in the Deity, and that the same Person is perfect in the Humanity, truly God, and truly Man; that the same Person [subsists] of a rational Soul and Body, that he is Consubstantial to the Father as touching his Deity, and that he is of the same Substance with us according to his Humanity, in all things like unto us, sin only excepted; that, according to his Deity he was begotten of the Father before Ages; but that, in the last days, the same Person, on our account and for our salvation, according to his Humanity, was born of Mary the Virgin and Theotocos: that, one and the same Jesus Christ, the Son, the Lord, the Only Begotten, is inconsciously, immutably, indivisibly, and inseparably * manifested in two Natures: that the difference of the Natures is in no wise extinguished by the Union: but rather, that the propriety of each Nature is preserved, and † meets in one Person, and in one Hypostasis: not as if [he] were parted and divided into two Persons: but [he is] one and the same Only Begotten Son, God the Word, the Lord Jesus Christ, according as the Prophets of old, and Christ himself hath taught us concerning himself, and [according as] the Creed of the Fathers hath delivered [it] to us. These things therefore having with all imaginable accuracy and concinnity been constituted by us, the Holy and Oecumenical Synod has determined, that it shall not be lawful for any Person, to produce, or write, or compose, or think, or teach others, another Faith. But whoever shall dare, either to compose, or to produce, or to teach any other Faith, or to deliver another Creed, to those who have a mind to turn from Gentilism, or Judaism, or from any other Heresy whatever, to the knowledge of the Truth; those Persons, if they be Bishops, shall be * divested of the Episcopal Dignity; if Clergymen, they shall be † degraded. But if they be Monks, or Laicks, they shall be Anathematized. When therefore this Determination had been read, the Emperor Marcianus also [came to] Chalcedon, and was present at the Synod; and having made a Speech [to the Bishops], he returned. Juvenalis also and Maximianus on certain conditions determined those [differences] which were between them about [some] Provinces; and Theodoret and Ibas were * restored; and some other matters were agitated; which, as I have said, [the Reader] will find recorded at the end of this Book [Lastly,] it was decreed, That the Chair of † New Rome, || in regard it was the

* Or, known.

† Or, runs together into one, &c.

* Or, estranged from.

† Or, alienated from the Clergy.

‡ Removed, or put to flight.

* Or, recalled.

† Constantinople.

|| Or, in regard it was the second after the elder Rome.

next See to the Elder Rome; should have precedence before all other [Sees.]

CHAP. V.

Concerning the Sedition which happened at Alexandria, on account of Proterius's Ordination; likewise [concerning what hapned] at Jerusalem.

After these things, Dioscorus * was banished * Or, was to Gangra [a City] in Paphlagonia; and by common Vote of the Synod, Proterius obeyed to dwell at, retains the Bishoprick of Alexandria. After he had taken possession of his own See, a great and most insufferable Tumult arose, the populace fluctuating [and being divided] into different opinions. For some demanded Dioscorus, as it usually happens in such cases: Others adhered pertinaciously to Proterius. So that thence arose many and those deplorable calamities. 'Tis certain Priscus the Rhetorician does relate [in his History] that at that time he came * out of the Province of Thebais to Alexandria, and saw the People making an Attack against the Magistrates. And, that when the Souldiers would have put a stop to the Tumult, the People threw stones at them, and made them run; that after this the Souldiers took refuge in that which heretofore Agrippa had been * Serapis's Temple, where the People besieged them, and burnt them alive. That, the Emperor having notice hereof, sent two thousand new raised Souldiers thither: who having perceived the opportunity of a fair wind, made so prosperous a Voyage, that they arrived at the great City of Alexandria on the sixth day [after they had been ship'd.] That after this, when the Souldiers most filthily abused the Wives and Daughters of the Alexandrians, facts far more horrid and nefarious than the former, were perpetrated. And that at last, the People meeting together in the Circus, entreated * Florus, who was then Commander of the Milice [throughout Egypt,] that he should come at that time to Alexandria. But, the Province of Thebais was not governed by a Profectus, but by a Præfatus; as we are informed from the Notitia Imperii Romani. Besides, Priscus Rhetor says not, that the Governour of the Province of Thebais, but that he himself came then to Alexandria. Priscus had indeed been long conversant in the Province Thebais, with Maximinus the Commander, whose Councilor and Assessor he was, when he waged war against the Nubæ and Blemmyes, as himself informs us in his Excerpt. Legationum. In the Pellierian Manuscript, I found this place written thus: ὁ αὐτὸς ἐκ τῆς Ἐκκλησίας τῆς Ἀλεξάνδρειας, καὶ ἐκ τῆς Ἐκκλησίας τῆς Ἀλεξάνδρειας, καὶ ἐκ τῆς Ἐκκλησίας τῆς Ἀλεξάνδρειας. But I should rather write it thus, ὁ αὐτὸς ἐκ τῆς Ἀλεξάνδρειας. In Robert Stephens's reading here is, ὁ αὐτὸς ἐκ τῆς Ἀλεξάνδρειας καὶ ἐκ τῆς Ἀλεξάνδρειας.

Nicephorus has added some passages here concerning Serapi's Temple, which are sufficiently profound, and which I remember not to have read any where else. Therefore I conjecture, that Nicephorus used these passages out of Priscus Rhetor's History, which then was extant entire. Valef. See Nicephorus's Eccles. Hist. book 15, chap. 8.

Of this Florus (who was Præfatus Aegypti, and also Dux of Egypt.) Jordanes has made mention in his book De Successione Regum, where he writes thus concerning the Emperor Marcianus: Nobilitas Blemmye quæ Æthiopia prolapta, &c. He appealed the Nobades and the Blemmyes, (who had fallen down from Æthiopia.) by Florus Procurator of the City of Alexandria, and drove them from the Territories of the Romans. This Florus had succeeded Theodorus the Angulianus, as we are informed from Liberatus's Breviarium, chap. 14. Under whom Proterius is ordained Bishop, and that Sedition [which Eugarius describes here,] was raised at Alexandria, in the year of Christ 452. On account of which Sedition, when as the publick [allowance of] bread, &c. (which was wont to be delivered out to the Alexandrians), the Baths also, and Shows, by the Emperor's order had been taken from the Inhabitants of Alexandria; the multitude met together in the Circus, and entreated Florus the Præfatus Aegypti, who was come to Alexandria a little before this, that these things might be restored to them. Therefore, this hapned on the year of Christ 453. Valef.

and

Chrysostomus has rendered this place ill, after this manner: In sancta
die festæ Refurrectionis, Theodosium designant Episcopum, in cuius
Hely Festival day of the Resurrection, they chose Theodosius Bishop
Musculus renders it righter, thus, ordinavit in Ecclesiâ Sanctæ Resur- rectionis, Theodorum illum, &c. in the Church of the Holy Resur*rection, they ordained that Theodosius, &c.* Concerning this Church of the Holy Resurrection I have made several remarks in my Notes on Eusebius's Life of Constantine. [See Valerius's Letter to a friend De Analysi & Martyrio Hieroglyphinatio, which Letter he has published at pag. 304. of his notes on Eusebius.] But, concerning the Theodosius, who invaded the See of Jerusalem, consult Barnæus
the year of Christ 452. Valf.

<sup>n</sup> ὁμολογῶν ἐν δόξῃ &c. The term ὁμολογῶν, [confessing] is to be expunged, in regard 'tis superfluous. It occurs not in Nicéphorus, and Sir Henry Savil, in his Copy, had drawn a line under it. Vale!

Again, he that affirms [Christ .so subfist] of two Natures, the same person by a necessary consequence does confess [him] in two Natures; because, by his affirming Christ [to subfist] of the Deity and of the Humanity, he acknowledges him to consist in the Deity and in the Humanity: the flesh being neither converted into

* Or, passing into the Deity, nor the Deity * changed into the flesh, of which [two Natures there is] an ineffable Union. So that, by this expression OF TWO, may at the same time commodiously be understood this also IN TWO, and by this expression IN TWO [may also be meant] OF TWO, the one [expression] being and disjoyned the one from the other, ([which Sentiments they are induced to give entertainment to] either from a certain usage * about their thinking concerning God, or else from their being prepossessed [with a pervasion of mind] to have it so;) that they condemn [the undergoing of] all sorts of death, rather than they will give their assent to the truth. And from hence arose those [mischiefs] which I have mentioned. In this posture were these matters.

* Or, not relinquish'd by the other.

|| Κατὰ τὴν ἀπόφασιν; which may also be rendered, according to a peculiar mode of expression: but 'tis an uncouth phrase, not often to be met with, especially in such a sense as 'tis here used.

* Or, about their opinion of God.

CHAP. VI.

Concerning the Drought which hapned, and the Famine and the Pestilence: and how in some places the Earth in a wonderful manner brought forth fruits of its own accord.

* Or, a scarcity of showers of rain.

ABOUT the same times, here hapned * a great Drought in both the Phrygia's, in both the Galatia's, in Cappadocia, and in Cilicia; in so much that a scarcity of necessaries [followed,] and men made use of unwholesome and destructive food. Whence hapned a Pestilence also. For, because of their change of dyet, they fell sick, and their bodies swelling by reason of the excessive inflammation, they lost their eyes: they were troubled with a Cough at the same time also, and [usually] dyed on the third day. For the Pestilence, no cure could then be found out. But divine providence, the preserver of all things, bestowed on them that were left alive, a remedy against the Famine. For in that barren year, food was showered down out of the air, which they termed Manna, in the same manner as [twas heretofore showered down] on the Israelites. But, on the year following, the good-natured [Earth] brought forth ripe fruits on its own accord. Moreover, [this calamity] destroyed the Country of the Palestinians, and innumerable other Provinces; [these

* The Famine and the Pestilence.

* two] mischiefs spreading themselves over the whole earth.

CHAP. VII.

Concerning the Murder of Valentinianus, and the taking of Rome; and concerning those other Emperours who governed Rome [after Valentinianus's death.]

WHILEST these things * were transacted in the Eastern parts, Aetius † is in a miserable manner murdered at the Elder Rome. Valentinianus also Emperour of the Western parts, and together with him Heraclius, [is slain] by some of Aetius's Guards; the Plot from against them being framed by Maximus (who afterwards posselt himself of the Empire,) because Valentinianus had abused Maximus's wife, having by force debauch'd her. Further, this Maximus, by making use of all manner of violence, compelled Eudoxia (who had been Valentinianus's wife,) to be married to himself. She, deservedly accounting this fact to be contumelious, and the highest indignity, took a resolution to cast every Dye (as the saying is,) [to the end the might be revenged] both for what had been done in relation to [the assassination of] her husband, and also for the reproach which had been brought upon her own Liberty. For, a woman is fierce, and of an anger * implacable, if (when she uses her utmost endeavour to preserve it inviolate,) her chastity be forcibly taken from her, and especially by him who hath been her husband's Assassine. She sends therefore into † Africa, to Gizericus, and having forthwith presented him with many Gifts, and by her Declaration put him into a good hope of what was behind, she prevails with him to make a sudden and unexpected Invasion upon the Roman Empire, promising she would betray all to him. Which having in this manner been performed, Rome is taken. But Gizericus, in regard he was a Barbarian and of a disposition inconstant and mutable, kept not * his promise even with her; but having burnt the City, and made plunder off all [its riches,] he took Eudoxia together with her two daughters, marched back, went away, and returned into Africa. The elder of Eudoxia's daughters, by name Eudocia, he married to his own son † Himericus. But the younger, (her name was Placidia,) together with her mother Eudoxia, he sent some time after to * Byzantium, attended with an Imperial Train and a Guard, to the end he might pacifie Mar-tinople.

For he had highly incensed him, both because Rome had been burnt, and also in regard the Imperial Princesses had been so contumeliously used. Moreover, Placidia is match'd by Marcianus's order, Olybrius having married her; who was look'd upon to be the eminentest personage amongst the [Roman] Senators, and after the taking of Rome had betaken himself to Constantinople. Further, after Maximus, Avitus reigned over the Romans eight months. * After Valentinianus's

Placidia's death, and after the murder of Maximus, Avitus was proclaimed Emperour, first at Tonlose, and then at Orleans, in Valentinianus's eighth Consulate [which he bore] with Anthemius, in the year of Christ 455, on the sixth of the Ides of July as 'tis recorded in the Old Chronicle, which Cyprianus first published in his Fasts. On the year following, the same Avitus was Consul, as 'tis related in the Fasts which Jacobsus Sirmondus has published under the name of Idatius; and on the same year he was deposed at Placentia, as Marius and Cassiodorus inform us in their Fasts, as likewise Old Chronographer put forth by Cyprianus. But, on what day, and in what month Avitus resigned the Empire, I do not find declared by

<sup>a</sup> The passage in Herodotus, which Euvagrius points at here, occurs B. 2. of his History. pag. 157. Edit. Paul. Stephens. 1618. Val. f.

Moreover, <sup>a</sup>during Severus's Governing the Romans, Marcianus changed his Kingdom, and departed to better Inheritance, when he had Governed the Empire <sup>b</sup>seven years only lived in the Consulate of Constantinus and Rufus, on the year of Christ 457, in the month February. Majorianus was proclaimed Emperor at Retinova in the same year, on the Calends of April, that is, almost two months after Marcianus's death. To whom succeeded Severus, on the year of Christ 461, in the Consulate of Severinus and Degalafrus, almost five years after the Emperor Marcianus's death. Further, this Severus was by another name termed Serpentus, as Theophrastus informs us in his Chronicon, pag. 97. in these words, ὁ ἐπὶ τῷ ἔθνει ἐκ τῆς ἀσπίδος. And Severus, called also Serpentus, was Proclaimed Emperor must be read, as the most Learned Franciscus Combesius has rightly concluded. To certain, in the Alexandrian Chronicle he is termed, not, on the fifteenth Indiction, Leo Augustus is put Consul the second time with Serpentus. Now, it manifestly known, that on this year Severus Augustus was Consul with Leo. For so Cassiodorus relates in his Fasti, and also the Old Author publisheth by Cyprian name. Valef.

<sup>a</sup>Marcianus reigned six years and as many months, as Marcellinus relates, and Victor Tunonensis in his Chronicon. He began his Reign in the year, of Christ 450, on the eighth of the Calends of September on the fifth Feria, as 'tis recorded in the Alexandrian Chronicle. And

The Alexandrians therefore observing the time, when Dionysius Commander of the Milice made his Residence in the Upper Egypt, make choice of one Timotheus, surnamed Silurus, to ascend the Archi-Episcopal-Chair; a person who heretofore had followed a Monastick Life, but afterwards was enrolled amongst the number of the Presbyters of the Alexandrian Church. When they had led his person to the Great Church, he was but a Presbyter,) together with four or five persons only heretofore Bishops, and some few Monks, who together with him, were dispersed with the Heretical error of Apollinaris and * that person. On which account having * <sup>Two</sup> <sup>times</sup> then been canonically deposed by Proterius of di- <sup>times</sup> <sup>they mean</sup> vine memory, and by a Synod of [the Bishops of] <sup>Emphatic</sup> <sup>and to Pa-</sup> all Egypt, they deservedly experienced the Imperial <sup>lesful</sup> <sup>ness it</sup> displeasure † by Exile. And after some words <sup>of</sup> <sup>that</sup> <sup>opportunity,</sup> <sup>when</sup> <sup>the</sup> <sup>Emperor</sup> <sup>Marcianus</sup> <sup>2nd</sup> <sup>Emper.</sup> of that opportunity, when the Emperor Marcianus <sup>of</sup> <sup>Sacred</sup> <sup>* Memory</sup> made his departure hence to <sup>God;</sup> <sup>with</sup> <sup>impious</sup> <sup>Expressions</sup> (as if he had been <sup>to</sup> <sup>be</sup> <sup>subject</sup> <sup>to</sup> <sup>no</sup> <sup>Laws,</sup>) be in a most shameless man- <sup>ner</sup> <sup>raged</sup> <sup>against</sup> <sup>[and</sup> <sup>reproach'd]</sup> the same Em- <sup>peror</sup> <sup>and</sup> <sup>impudently</sup> <sup>Anathematizing</sup> the Holy time. <sup>and</sup> <sup>Oecumenical</sup> <sup>Synod</sup> <sup>at</sup> <sup>Chalcedon,</sup> he draws * Or, <sup>refi-</sup> after him a multitude of A<sup>c</sup>censary and disor- <sup>Or,</sup> <sup>fel-</sup> derly fellows, with whom he has made war, con- <sup>trary</sup> <sup>to</sup> <sup>the</sup> <sup>Divine</sup> <sup>Canons,</sup> and to the Ecclesi- <sup>astical</sup> <sup>Constitution,</sup> [in opposition] to the Republic, <sup>and</sup> <sup>to</sup> <sup>the</sup> <sup>Laws;</sup> and † has violently thrust him- <sup>self</sup> <sup>into</sup> <sup>the</sup> <sup>Holy</sup> <sup>Church</sup> <sup>of</sup> <sup>God,</sup> which at that time; the time had its Pastor and Teacher, Our most Holy <sup>trac-</sup> <sup>Farber</sup> <sup>and</sup> <sup>Arch-Bishop</sup> <sup>Proterius,</sup> who then Cele- <sup>brated</sup> <sup>the</sup> <sup>usual</sup> <sup>Religious</sup> <sup>and</sup> <sup>Solemn</sup> <sup>Assemblies,</sup> which <sup>and</sup> <sup>poured</sup> <sup>forth</sup> <sup>his</sup> <sup>prayers</sup> <sup>to</sup> <sup>Christ</sup> <sup>the</sup> <sup>Savi-</sup> <sup>our</sup> <sup>of</sup> <sup>us</sup> <sup>all,</sup> for Your Religious Empire, and for English <sup>our</sup> <sup>our</sup> <sup>Christ-loving</sup> <sup>Palace.</sup> And, after the rous

In the Great Church of the City Alexandria, was termed Cæsaria, as Epiphanius informs us, in Hæc, Arrian, and Libertus, in his Breviarium, chap. 18. But Socrates (Book i. chap. 15.) says the name of that Church was Cæsaria; adrianus declares the reason of this Appellation (in his Epist. ad Solitar.) to wit, because that Church had been built in a place which heretofore was called the Cæsarium, that is, the Temple of the Cæsars. There had been a School in the same place also, and a palace of the Emperor Adrian's, which in succeeding times was termed Licinius's Palace, as Epiphanius attests. Valef.

[ Alexandria ] with the greatest celerity imaginable, (to which he had been urged by the nefarious facts there perpetrated,) and wasusing his endeavours to extinguish the kindled fire of the Sedition; some of the Alexandrians, incited thereto by Timotheus, (as the Contents of the Letter written to Leo [the Emperor] do declare,) murder Proterius by running their swords through his bowels, when he attempted to get away, and had fled as far as the most Holy Baptistery. And after they had tied a rope about him, [they hung him up] at that place termed The Tetrapylum, and shewed him to all persons, jeering and crying out aloud, that that was Proterius who had been killed. After this, they drag'd the body all over the City, and then burnt it. Nor did they abhor tasting of his very bowels, according to the usage of Savage-beasts; as the Supplicatory Libel (wherein all these passages are contained,) sent by all the Bishops of Egypt, and by the whole Clergy of Alexandria, to Leo, who after Marcianus's death, as hath been said, was invested with the Empire of the Romans, [dorth evidence;] the Contents whereof are conceived in these exprefs words.

To the Pious, Christ-Lover, and by-God-designed Leo, Victor, Triumphator, and Augustus; The humble Address presented by all the Bishops of Your Egyptick Diocessis and by the Ecclesiasticks in Your Greatest and Most Holy Church of the Alexandrians.

Whereas by Celestial Grace Thou have been bestowed as a most Exquisite Gift upon the World, it is no wonder if Thou cease not (Most Sacred Emperor!) daily after God, from making Provision for the Publick. And after some other words. And whilst there was an uninterrupted peace amongst the Orthodox Laity, both with us, and also at the City Alexandria, [disturbances were raised] again by Timotheus, who made a separation of himself from the Catholic Church, and Faith, and sent himself off [therefrom,] soon after the holy Synod at Chalcedon, (at which time as if he could have received Ordination from two [Bishops:] not so much as one of the Orthodox Bishops throughout the Egyptian Dioceses being there, who are always wont to be present at such Ordinations of the Bishops of the Alexandrians:) takes possession, as he supposed, of the Archiepiscopal Chair; audaciously attempting manifestly to commit adultery upon that Church, which had its own Bridegroom, who performed the divine [offices] therein, and canonically administered his own See. And after some other words. That Blessed person [Proterius] could do nothing else, than (as 'tis written), * Give place unto wrath, and make his escape to the adorable Baptistry, that he might avoid their incursion, who ran in upon him to murder him: in which † place † he, the most especially, a dread and terror is usually infused into the minds even of Barbarians, and all other Savage and cruel persons, who are ignorant of the adorableness of that place, and of the Grace * Where-flowing therefrom. Nevertheless, these [Ruf- with the fians,] who used their utmost endeavour to bring Baptistry that defign to effect, which from the beginning was en-[they had laid with] Timothy; [these But- Or, re-chers] who would not suffer Proterius to be pre- vrence-served even within those immaculate * Rails, † Libewho revered neither the † sanctity of the place, † us [in the nor the time it self; (for † it was the Festival- um, chap.

day of the Salutory Easter; who dreaded not 5) prelati-[the dignity of] the Sacerdotal Function, to that Pre- which terius was which it appertains to mediate between God and Men; kill that guiltless person, and together with him commit a barbarous murder upon six others. And, after they had carried about his Body which was Wounds all over, and likewise barbarously drag'd it almost throughout every place of the City, and [further] in a most lamentable manner insulted over it; without any thing of compassion they scourged the Corps, insensible of its stripes, cutting it limb from limb. Nor did they abstain, according to the usage of Savage beasts, from tasting of his Entrails, whom a little before they were supposed to have as an Intercessor between God and Men. [In fine,] having cast the remains of his Body into a fire, they threw the ashes thereof into the winds; [by the commission of these Barbarities] far exceeding the utmost Savage acts of wild-beasts: the Occasioner and crafty Controverser of all which Nefarious facts, was Timotheus.

He himself stou up in the Church, whether out of fear he had betaken himself. And there on the same day in the Bishopry, he is slain, torn in pieces, cast out, and his Corps is burnt, and his ashes strewn into the winds. All which Liberatus has almost word for word written out of the Gesta de nomine deaceli, which we owe to Jacobus Strumius. Valef.

Instead of [ἀναγινώσκοντες] it must undoubtedly be written that: ἀναγινώσκοντες καὶ ὁ λόγος, cutting it in pieces, or, limb from limb. Instead of μέλας, the reading in the Florent. MS. is μέλας; which is a very small difference. Nicephorus confirms our Emendation, at Book 15. Chap. 17; who has it expressly written as I had conjectured. Further, this Supplicatory Libel of the Bishops of the Egyptian Diocesis to the Emperor Leo, if any one has a mind to read it entire, occurs in Lamine, in the third part of the Chalcedon Synod, chap. 11. Valef.

Moreover, Zacharias giving a Narrative of these matters [in his History,] is of opinion, that most of these things were done [in such a manner as I have related them;] but says they were occasioned by Proterius's fault, who had raised most grievous Seditions at Alexandria: [he affirms likewise,] that these Facts were audaciously perpetrated (not by the people, but) by some of the Souldiers; which affirmation he grounds on the Letter written by Timotheus to the Emperor Leo. Further, in order to the punishing of these enormities, Stilas is sent by the Emperor Leo.

CHAP. IX.

Concerning the Emperor Leo's Circular Letters.

Also, Leo wrote Circular Letters to the Bishops throughout the whole Roman Empire, and to those persons eminent for their leading a Monastick life; asking their opinion, both concerning the Synod at Chalcedon, and also about Timotheus's Ordination: he sent to them likewise Copies of the Supplicatory-Libels presented to him, as well by Proterius's Party, as by that of Timotheus Athanasius. The Contents of the Circular Letters [of Leo] are these.

A Copy of the most Pious Emperor Leo's Sacred Letter, sent to Anastolius Bishop of Constantinople, and to the Metropolitans, and other Bishops over the whole World.

Emperor Cæsar, Leo, Pius, Victor, Triumphant, Maximus, always Augustus; to Anastolius the Bishop. It was the Desire and Prayer of Our Piety, that the most Holy Orthodox

Churches, and also [all] the Cities * of the Roman Empire, should enjoy the greatest Peace imaginable; nor that any thing should happen, which might disturb their Constitution and Tranquillity. But, what [disturbances] have lately happened at Alexandria, are (we are fully persuaded,) already made known to Your Sanctity. Nevertheless, that you may have a more perfect account concerning all things, what the Causes were of so great a Tumult and Confusion; We have transmitt'd to Your Piety the Copies of the Supplicatory-Libels; which the most Pious Bishops and Ecclesiasticks, coming from the foresaid City [Alexandria] and from the Egyptian Diocesis, to the Imperial City Constantinople, have brought to Our Piety against Timotheus: and moreover, the Copies of the Supplicatory-Libels, which [some persons,] coming from Alexandria to Our Divine Court on Timotheus's account, have presented to Our Serenity: so that, Your Sanctity may apparently know what hath been done by the foresaid Timotheus, whom the populace of Alexandria the * Honorati, the Decuriones, and the Navicularii, desire to have for their Bishop; [and that you may have an account] concerning other matters * contained in The Text of the Supplicatory-Libels; and moreover, concerning the Who these Chalcedon Synod, to which [the forementioned persons] do in no wise agree, as their Supplicatory-Libels, here under-placed, do demonstrate. Let therefore Your Piety cause all the Orthodox and Holy Bishops, who at present are resident in this Imperial City, as likewise the most Pious Ecclesiasticks, forthwith to come together unto You. And having with great care * treated of, and enquired into all things; (as much as the City Alexandria hath already been disturbed, the State and Repose whereof is our greatest care;) acquaint us with Your Sentiment concerning the foresaid Timotheus, and concerning the Chalcedon Synod, without any humane fear, and without affection or hatred, placing before your eyes the only fear of the Omnipotent God, in regard you well know, that you shall give an account concerning this affair to the incorrupt Deity. That the Civil so, We having been perfectly informed of all things, by Your Letters, may be enabled to * promulge an accommodate Edit. * Or, give a see Cities, in form. as in the Provinces.

the πολιτῶν were the Decuriones.] Gregorius Nazianzenus joins them both together, in his 49th Epistle to Olympius, where his words are these: μέγας πολὺς τε καὶ πανόμοιος καὶ ἀνέκτιστος. That is, all the Citizens, the Decuriones, and the Honorati. The same Gregorius, in his 22d Epistle to the Cæsarienses, joins the same persons both together, in these words: τίς ἐστὶν ὁ ἀνέκτιστος καὶ πανόμοιος; that is, all those who are of the Order of the Honorati, or of the Decuriones. The Old Translator therefore of this Letter, renders this passage truly, thus, Honorati & Curiales & Naviculari, the Curiales, and the Naviculari. The Naviculari were the Masters of the Vessels in the River Nile, who convey'd the Corn and publick Provisions from Egypt to Constantinople. Aurelianus seems to have instituted their Body, as he himself shews in his Epistle to Arabianus, which is cited by Vopiscus. These Naviculari, or Navicularii were a Society of Sea-faring Men, ordain'd for Transportation of Corn and publick Provisions in several Quarters of the Empire. (For there was a Body of them in the East, another in Africa, and a third at Alexandria;) they were a set number, and transported the said Provisions at their own expence, succeeding by turns in the charge and burthen; to which their Sons and Heirs were liable, as were also those who posselt their Estates after them, according to that proportion which they posselted. To this Function they were always obnoxious, so that scarcely could they be excused by any great Honour obtained. They were forced to build Ships and Vessell of certain Burthen; but the Materials for them were supplied by the Country. Their Charge was great, and so were their Privileges, as may be seen by various Laws extant concerning them in the Theodosian Code. Valef.

I am of the same Opinion with Sir Henry Savil, who at the margin of his Copy had remark'd, that in his Judgment the reading should be ἀνέκτιστος, contained: so Christopherston read; and 'tis so in Nicephorus.

Phorus, Book 15. Chap. 18. Valc. In Robert Stephens the reading is μαρτυροῦν, given, or, exhibited.

This was the Letter sent to Anatolius. [The Emperor] wrote Letters like this, to other Bishops also, and to those eminent persons, who * Or, lead (as I have said, at that time * lead a life void of the furniture [of living] and remote from matter. Of which number was Symeon, the first Inventor of the Station † in a Pillar, whom we have mentioned in the First [Book of our] History: amongst whom also were Baradatus † Or, upon, and * Jacobus the Syrian.

Nicephorus Callistus terms this Jacobus, Nisibenus, and adds, that mention is made, as well of him, as of Varadatus [Or, Baradatus], by Theodoret in his Historia Religiosa. Notwithstanding, Theodoret, in Chap. 21. of his Historia Religiosa does not say, that Jacobus was a Nisibene; which thing Theodoret would not in any wife have omitted, if Jacobus had indeed been a Nisibene. For, whereas he notes, that this Leo Jacobus was like the former Jacobus Nisibenus, not only in Name, but in Manners, and Dignity, (for both of them no wife have omitted that at that place. Neither does Theodoret Leo [Collected. Book 1.] make this Leo Jacobus, who answered Leo Augustinus his Circular Letters, a Nisibene; nor yet Theopanes in his Chronicon, pag. 96. There is also the extent an Epistle of Theodoret †, written to this Jacobus, in which he terms him a Presbyter and a Monk. Instead of Baradatus, Theopanes styles him Bardas, corruptly, as I think. In the Tenth part of the Chalcedon Synod, pag. 375, amongst the Monks. In whom the Emperor Leo wrote Letters, the first named is the Monk Jacobus Nisibenus, then Symeon and Baradatus. Ephraem Bishop of Antioch makes mention of them also, in his Epistle ad Monachos Syriacos, that is, Severianus; and in his third Oration, which he wrote to the Monks Damianus & Johannes, as it occurs in Phorus. Valc.

CHAP. X.

Concerning those things which the Bishops and Symeones the Syllite wrote in answer [to the Emperor Leo's Circular Letters.]

IN the first place therefore, Leo Bishop of the Elder Rome wrote in defence of the Chalcedon Synod, and disallowed of Timotheus's Ordination, * as having been illegally performed. Which Letter of Leo's, the Emperor Leo sent to Timotheus Prelate of the Alexandrian Church, by † Diomedes the Silentiarius, who was employed in carrying the Imperial Mandates.

* I am of the same mind with Christophorus & Sir Henry Savile, who in the d of [of] adignus, and having been illegally] having mended it [as adignus adignus, as having been illegally performed.]
 † This certain, in these Books of Evagrius, is most frequently put instead of die; which we, following the Authority of the MS. Copies, have mended. But at this place, in regard the Manuscript Copies differed not from the printed ones, we scrupled the altering of any thing. Valc.

b The Name of this Silentiarius was wanting in the ordinary Editions, and in Nicophorus. We have put it in, from the incomparable Florentine Manuscript; wherein it plainly and expressly written thus; Diomedes Silentiarius, by Diomedes the Silentiarius. Concerning the Silentiarius, I have before observed something in my Notes on Ann. Marcellinus. Valc.

c Nicolaus Alemannus (in his Historical Notes on Procopius's Historia Aneas, pag. 103. Edit. Lugd. 1523.) tells us, that the Silentiarius, whom Procopius (as he remarks,) sometimes terms Domestici and Prætorii, were most Officers of the greatest Honour about the Emperor: in regard they were of the Emperor's most Chamber; on which account they were also termed Cubicularii. He says further, that the word Cubicularii (out of which there was an immediate passage into the very Chamber of the Emperor, by reason of the silence there kept in Reverence to the Emperor,) was termed Silentiarii, the Silence; which the Greeks by a corrupt name called συνεσιτις: whence the Cubicularii had the name of Silentiarii. Mensius (in the word συνεσιτις) makes two Orders of these Officers: the first was a meaner sort of Officer, their business was to command the people to be silent and quiet. The other Order of the Silentiarii was far more honourable; they were, says Mensius, over the Secrets of the Emperor, and are reckoned amongst the Clarissimi. See Dr. Hewell's account of these Officers, Part II. of his Hist. chap. 1. pag. 51.

To whom Timotheus returned answer, wherein he blamed the Chalcedon Synod, and [found fault with] Leo's Letter. The Copies of these Epistles are extant * in that Collection of Letters termed the Encyclica. But I have designedly omitted the inserting them, because † * would not have this present Work swell to a Greatness of bulk. The Bishops of other Cities likewise stedfastly adhered to the Sanctions [of the Synod] at Chalcedon, and † unanimously condemned Timotheus's Ordination. Excepting only * Amphilochius [Bishop] of Side; who wrote a Letter to the Emperor, wherein he cried out indeed against Timotheus's Ordination; but admitted not of the Synod at Chalcedon. Zacharias the Rhetorician has written in his Epistles concerning these very affairs, and has inserted in this very Letter of Amphilochius's into his Historia. Moreover, Symeon of Holy Memory wrote two Letters concerning these matters, one addressed to the Emperor Leo, another to Basilius Bishop of Antioch. Of which two Letters, I will insert into this my History that which he wrote to Basilius, in regard 'tis very short; the Contents whereof are these.

Your Leo's Letter; which he wrote in general to all Persons, &c. But Libertus Diocletianus in his Breviarium, chap. 15. does incomparably well declare what these Encyclica [that is, Circular Letters] were, in these words. Imperator scripsit singularum civitatum Episcopis de unius negotio, &c. The Emperor wrote to the Bishops of every City, concerning each affair, consulting what ought to be done, &c. Whom return answer, that the Chalcedon Synod is to be vindicated even unto blood; but that Timotheus was not only not to be reckoned amongst the Bishops, but to be deprived even of the Christian Appellation. And these Epistles or Relations of all the Bishops, in one body of a book, are termed Encyclica. Further, these Encyclica, translated almost all into Latin, are extant in the third part of the Chalcedon Synod, pag. 372; &c. of the Cologne Edition; an exquisite piece of Ecclesiastical Antiquity, which I heartily wish were extant in Greek. There is mention made of these Encyclica in Vitar Thuronius's Chronicon. Valc.

e There is mention of this Amphilochius Bishop of Side, in Pocutius's Bibliotheca, chap. 52. Where the Letters of Artius and Sigismondi Bishops of Constantinople, written to him, are recorded. The same Amphilochius was present at the Ephesine and Chalcedon Synods: as 'tis apparent from the Synodical Acts. Further, Eulogius Bishop of Alexandria, book 9, does attest, that this Amphilochius Bishop of Side, although at the beginning he had affirmed in his Letter to the Emperor Leo, that he could in no wife give his assent to the Chalcedon Synod, yet some little time after, consented and subscribed to that same Synod. Eulogius's words are related by Pocutius in his Bibliotheca, pag. 879; Edit. David Hoeschel, 1611. Valc.

To my most Pious and most Holy Lord, the Religious Basilius Arch-Bishop; the Sinner and mean Symeones [witheth] Health in the Lord.

It is now, My Lord, opportune to say, Blessed be God, who hath not turned away our Prayer, nor [removed] his mercy from us Sinners. For, on receipt of the Letters of Your Dignity, I admired the Zeal and Piety of our Emperor most dear to God, which he hath shown, and [now] does demonstrate towards the Holy Fathers, and their most firm Faith. Nor is this Gift from us, according as the Holy Apostle saith; but from God, who through our Prayers hath given * Him this propensity and singular earnestness * The End of mind. And, after some few words: Wherefore, I myself, a mean person, and of slender account, † the untimely Birth of the Monks, † have made known my Sentiment to his Imperial Majesty concerning the Faith of the six hundred and thirty Holy Fathers convened at Chalcedon; who do persist in, and am grounded upon

<sup>d</sup> Baronius in his Ecclesiastick Annals, at the Year of Christ 519 says that Evagrius is mistaken, in affirming, that that Earthquake which came to pass at Antioch in Trajan's Reign, hapned on the Year (according to the Antiochians Account) 159. For, that Earthquake hapned in the Consulate of Mæfala and Pedus as 'tis manifest from

Dion, who asserts that the Consul Pedo perished in that Earthquake. Further, the Consulate of Massala and Pedo fell on the Year of Christ 115, as 'tis agreed amongst all Chronologers. It was then, according to the Antiochians account, the hundred sixty third year, not the hundred fifty ninth year, as Evagrius says. For the years of the Antiochians precede Christ's Nativity forty eight years. Moreover, concerning these years of the Antiochians, amongst the Ancients the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle has spoken best of all, in the affairs of Julius Cæsar: but amongst the Moderns, Dionysius Petavius [gives us the best account hereof] in his books of Doctrina Temporum, and in the second part of his Rationarium, chap. 14. to which Author nevertheless I can't give my assent in that which he affirms, viz. that the beginning of these years is deduced from the Month October, which was the popular [or ordinary] beginning of the year amongst the Antiochians. In my Annotations on Eusebius, [See Euseb. book concerning the Martyrs of Palestine, chap. i. note (e.)] I have in my judgment, sufficiently demonstrated, that the Antiochians began their year from the Month Diis, or November. Nor, is that true which Petavius writes at the same place, viz. that the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle seems to deduce the beginning of these years from the Month May. For the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle does not say that; he affirms only, that the Decree of the Senate, whereby Antioch was pronounced a free City, was received by the Antiochians on the Month of May, and then also publicly proposed. Valf.

But this [Earthquake] in the times of Leo [happened] on the five hundred and sixth year, as 'tis declared by the most accurate and diligent Writers. Further, this Earthquake ruined almost all the Houses of the New City, the Inhabitants whereof were very numerous, nor was there any part of it empty, or wholly neglected; but 'twas extraordinary beautified and adorned by the [preceding] Emperours magnificence, who strove to out-do one another [in that thing.] Likewise, the first and second fabrick of the Palace fell down; but the other Building continued standing, together with the adjoining Bath; which having been useless before at such time as this calamitous accident happened, was of necessity [made use of] for the bathing of * the Citizens, the other Baths having been ruined. Moreover, the Porticus's before the Palace fell down, and the Tetrapylum [which stood] behind them. Besides, the Towers of the Hippodrome which [were] near the Gates, and some of the Porticus's which led to these Towers fell. In the old City the Porticus's and Houses were wholly untouched by the Ruine: but some small part of Trajan's, Severus's and Adrianus's Baths, was shaken, and overturned. This Earthquake also ruined some [parts] of the Geitonia of [that Region] termed the ' Ofsracine, together with the Porticus's, as likewise that termed the Nymphæum, Every of which particulars Johnannes the Rhetorician has related with a singular ac-

* Or, the City.

In the incomparable Florentine Manuscript, this whole place is written thus; Καὶ τὸ ἵπποδρόμου τῆς πόλεως καὶ τῶν ὑψηλῶν πυλῶν, καὶ τῶν πύργων ἅν' αὐτῶν σὺν, Besides, the Towers of the Hippodrome [or Cirque] which [were] near the Gates, and some of the Porticus's which led to these Towers, fell. Which doubtless is the better Reading. The Gates of the Cirque were fortified with two Towers on each side. There were also some Porticus's, which led to these Towers, from the Gates of the Cirque, as I suppose. In the Tellerian MSS. I found it written, καὶ τῶν πύργων σὺν, some of the Porticus's [which led] to these [Gates]. Valf. In Roberti Stephani, this whole Clause is worded thus; καὶ τῶν ὑψηλῶν πύργων καὶ τῶν πύργων σὺν, καὶ τῶν πύργων σὺν, καὶ τῶν πύργων σὺν, and the Towers of the Hippodrome from the Gate, and some of the Porticus's [leading] from them.

[Instead of [Ofsracine], the Reading in the Florentine and Tellerian MSS. and in Nicephorus, is true; which is thus, Ofsraeme. Our Evagrius mentions this place again, at chap. 8. book 6. But what the Ofsraeme was, 'tis hard to say.—Geitonia is a continuation of Houses which received [or stood behind] the publick Porticus's, which Libanius also confirms in his Antiochians, pag. 372. Edit. Parisi 1627. It was termed Ofsraeme, because the Potters Work-houses were there. The Old Glosses render ὑψηλῶν, scilicet, a thing made of Pottery earth. Valf.

So the Greeks termed the Temple of the Nymphs; which Johnannes describes in his Antiochians, pag. 372. Edit. in primis. Valf.

curacy. This Writer therefore affirms, that a thousand Talents of Gold were by the Emperor remitted to the City out of the Tributary Function; and that to the Citizens [were abated] the yearly Tolls paid to the publick Treasury for those Houses which had been destroyed by that Calamity: and moreover, that the same [Emperor] took care of the publick [Works and] Buildings.

des it thus: *Dixit etiam mille auri talenta Civitati ibi ab Imperatore de tributis esse remissa; & ex Tributis quoque constantium esse, ut ci-vibus ibi qui ex calamitate adfecti erant, ades ipsorum singule publica edificia restituerentur. He says also, that a thousand talents of Gold were by the Emperor remitted to that City of the Tributaries; and that 'twas constituted out of the Tributaries also, that to those Citizens who had been afflicted with that Calamity, their Houses together with the publick Edifices should be repaired. But Christophorus translates it in this manner; *Aut porro, cum Civitati de Tributis mille auri talenta ab Imperatore esse condonata, cum Civibus etiam Vestigia qui ex calamitate afflicti erant: He says further, that both to the City a thousand talents of Gold of the Tributaries were remitted by the Emperor, and also the Taxes [or Customs] to those Citizens, who had been afflicted with that Calamity. Where you see, that both Translators referred these words [τὸν ὑπαγεγονισμένον] to the Citizens; which is in no wise to be born with. For Evagrius would not have said τὸν πᾶσι τὸν ὑπαγεγονισμένον, but rather τὸν ὑπαγεγονισμένον. Nicephorus therefore understood these words righter, to wit, concerning the Houses of private Men, the Taxes whereof the Emperor remitted to the Citizens of Antioch. Nevertheless, Nicephorus has not fully apprehended Evagrius's meaning. For thus he expresses this place of Evagrius; καὶ τὰ δὲ τὸν κοινὸν τῶν οἰκίᾶν χρυσὸν μὲν πάλαι βασιλεῖα ἀπέγραψεν τὴν πόλιν τὸν ἵπποδρόμου καὶ τῶν πύργων καὶ τῶν ὑψηλῶν πυλῶν. That is, as Langus renders it; Terra motus istius gratia, &c. And because of this Earthquake, and on account of the Houses perished, the Emperor, 'tis reported, forgave the City a thousand Talents of Gold, the Tributaries of the Annual Payments. But Evagrius, or rather Johnannes the Rhetorician, says more. For he affirms, that the Emperor remitted to the Antiochians a thousand Talents of Gold of the Tributary Function; but forgave to each Citizen the Tributaries of those Houses which had been ruined by the Earthquake. Now these Tributaries may be understood in a twofold sense; Either (1.) concerning the Annual Pension which by Hires was paid to the Owners [or Lords] of the Houses; Or (2.) concerning the Money which was paid to the Fiscus [Exchequer,] because those Houses had been built upon the publick Soil. In such manner as amongst us, an Annual Rent is wont to be paid by Possessors of Houses as well in the City as Country, to the Lords of the Soil. And in this latter sense I had rather take τὸν κοινὸν [the Tributaries] here. For this word was more frequently used to signify Tributes, Tolls, or Customs, which are paid to the publick. But if this Term should be so taken here, as to signify the Price of Houses which is usually paid by the Hirer, there would have been no Liberality of the Emperor's in that. For he would have given nothing of his own to the Citizens, but that which was another's. *Valf.

[Instead of ὑπαγεγονισμένον & τῶν πύργων] the Reading undoubtedly must be πύργων, the same; add the words & βασιλεῖα, Emperor. And thus Christophorus seems to have read. Further, concerning this Earthquake, Isaac Syrus had written an Elegy, as Marcellinus attests in his Chronicon, in these words: Patrio & Ricimeri Coss. &c. In the Consulate of Patricius and Richimer, Isaac a Presbyter of the Antiochian Church wrote many things in the Syrian Language, and especially against the Nestorians and Eutychians. He likewise bewailed the ruin of Antioch in an Elegy, in such manner as Ephrem Diaconus did the fall of Nicomedia. Valf.

C H A P. XIII.

Concerning the Fire which [happened] at Constantinople.

Here hapn'd together with these [mischiefs.] 'Tis not a like, or rather a far more grievous [ca- amongst] lamity] at Constantinople; this mischievous ac-concerning the year wherein this Fire hapned at Constantinople. For Theophanes and Cedrenus place it on the fifth year of Leo, in the fifteenth Indiction, Leo Augustus being the second time Consul with Severus, which was the year of Christ 462. But Marcellinus Comes and the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle place this Fire of Constantinople in the Consulate of Basiliscus and Hermenericus, that is on the year of Christ 467. Our Evagrius seems to have followed the former Opinion. For the Verb [συμπεσόντων, hapned together,] which he uses at this place, gives an indication of what I have said; to wit, that that Conflagration of Constantinople hapned no long time after the Antiochian Earthquake. Further, concerning that Fire wherewith the City Constantinople was consumed in the times of Leo Augustus, Candidus Isaurus does also write, in the first book of his History, and relates that many things were usefully ordered therein by Aspar the Patrius. Valf.

cident

cident began in that part of the City that lay towards the Sea, which they term the * Ox-Street. 'Tis reported, that about such time as Candles are usually lighted, a certain mischievous and execrable Devil having clothed himself in the shape of a Woman, or rather in reality a poor Woman infligated by the Devil, (for 'tis reported both ways) carried a Candle into the Market, being about to buy some * Salt-fish; and that the Woman set down the Candle there, and went away. And, that the fire having taken hold of some Flax, raised a vast flame, and in a moment burnt † the Market house. After which, that it easily consumed the adjoining buildings, the fire preying all about, not only upon such [houses] as might with ease be fired, but upon Stone-buildings also; and that it continued till the fourth day; and that, having exceeded all possibility of being extinguished, all the middle of the City, from the Northern to the Southern Quarter, five furlongs in length, and fourteen in breadth, was in such a manner consumed; that nothing, either of the publick or private buildings, was left [standing] within this compass, not the Pillars, nor Arches of Stone: but, that all the most hardned matter was burnt, as if it [had been] straw, or [any] such combustible stuff. Further, this calamitous mischief raged in the Northern part, * wherein is the Haven of the City, from that termed the † Balsorot, unto the Old Temple of Apollo. In the Southern part, from Julianus's Haven to those houses which stand not far off from that Oratory termed the Church of * Concordia. And in the middle part of the City, from that termed Constantine's Forum, to that called Taurus's Forum, [it left] a miserable and most deformed spectacle to [the view of] all Men. For, whatever [Edifices] had stood stately to behold in the City, or had been brought to a Magnificence and incomparableness of Beauty, or * accommodated to publick or private uses, were every one on a sudden transformed into mountains and hills, inaccessible and impassible, made up with all manner of Rubbish, which deformed the pristine beauty and sight [of the City.] In so much that even the possesseurs themselves of the places could not discern, what any one of those former [Edifices] had been, and in what place [it had stood.]

ried a Candle into the Market, being about to buy some * Salt-fish; and that the Woman set down the Candle there, and went away. And, that the fire having taken hold of some Flax, raised a vast flame, and in a moment burnt † the Market house. After which, that it easily consumed the adjoining buildings, the fire preying all about, not only upon such [houses] as might with ease be fired, but upon Stone-buildings also; and that it continued till the fourth day; and that, having exceeded all possibility of being extinguished, all the middle of the City, from the Northern to the Southern Quarter, five furlongs in length, and fourteen in breadth, was in such a manner consumed; that nothing, either of the publick or private buildings, was left [standing] within this compass, not the Pillars, nor Arches of Stone: but, that all the most hardned matter was burnt, as if it [had been] straw, or [any] such combustible stuff. Further, this calamitous mischief raged in the Northern part, * wherein is the Haven of the City, from that termed the † Balsorot, unto the Old Temple of Apollo. In the Southern part, from Julianus's Haven to those houses which stand not far off from that Oratory termed the Church of * Concordia. And in the middle part of the City, from that termed Constantine's Forum, to that called Taurus's Forum, [it left] a miserable and most deformed spectacle to [the view of] all Men. For, whatever [Edifices] had stood stately to behold in the City, or had been brought to a Magnificence and incomparableness of Beauty, or * accommodated to publick or private uses, were every one on a sudden transformed into mountains and hills, inaccessible and impassible, made up with all manner of Rubbish, which deformed the pristine beauty and sight [of the City.] In so much that even the possesseurs themselves of the places could not discern, what any one of those former [Edifices] had been, and in what place [it had stood.]

* Or, called.

† In his third book of Imaginibus. For it was called διώροια [Civitas], because the hundred and fifty Fathers of the Constantinopolitan Synod in the Reign of Theodosius the Great, [See Socrates's Eccles. Hist. book 8, chap. 8.] meeting therein, agreed in one opinion concerning the Consubstantial Trinity. Valef.

CHAP. XIV.

Concerning the universal Calamities.

A Bout the same times, when the * Scythian War was raised against the Eastern Romans, the Country of Thracia, and the Hellespont

Eastern Romans, under the Command of Dengizich son of Attila, in the Consulate of Zeno, and Marcianus, on the Year of Christ 469; as Marcellinus Comes relates in his Chronicle. Nevertheless, the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle places that War on the foregoing Year, whereon Anthemius Augustus was Consul; and that the same Consul Ginzirichus Son to Attalus was slain by Anagastus Magister Militum [Master of the Milice] of Thrace: I read Dengizichus, from Priscus Rhetor, who describes this War, pag. 44, 45 of the King's Edition. Further, this Anagastus Magister Militum throughout the Thracia's, who slew Dengizichus King of the Hunni in Battle, had succeeded Arnegisellus Magister Militum. Valef.

were shaken with an Earthquake; as was Ionia, and likewise those Islands called the Cyclades: in so much that in the Islands Cnidus and Cos very many [Buildings] were overturned. Further, Priscus relates, that at Constantinople and in the Country of the Bithynians, there hapned most violent storms of rain, the waters descending from Heaven in the manner of Rivers, for the space of three or four days. And, that Mountains were levelled into Plains, and Villages, overwhelmed with Waters, perished. Moreover, that Islands arose in the Lake Boeiae, (which is not far distant from Nicomedia,) from the vast quantity of dirt and filth conveyed into it. But these things came to pass sometime afterword.

CHAP. XV.

Concerning the Marriage of Zeno and Ariadne.

[Moreover,] Leo takes Zeno to be his Son in Law, by [giving him] his Daughter Ariadne in Marriage. This Person having from his Cradle been called * Aricmesius, after his Marriage assumed the name of Zeno, from a certain * Person so named, who had arrived at great glory amongst the Isauri. But, by what means this Zeno arrived at this [height] of Honour, and on what account he was by Leo preferred before all Persons, Eusebius the Syrian had declared.

* Aricmesius, 'tis δευκλόμενος, Aricmesius. Further, Ariadne married Zeno on the third year of Leo Augustus's Reign, as Theophanes relates in his Chronicle. Valef.

He means Flavius Zeno, who was Consul in the Reign of Theodosius Augustus, on the year of Christ 448, and Magister Militum throughout the East. Concerning whose singular power, see what I have written in my Annotation at Priscus Rhetor's Excerpta Legationum, pag. 207. of the King's Edition. Valef.

CHAP. XVI.

Concerning Anthemius Emperour of Rome, and those Emperours who succeeded him.

BY reason of an Embassie of the Western Romans [to Leo,] Anthemius [by him] is sent [and treated] Emperour of Rome, to whom Marcianus the preceding Emperour had married his own Daughter. [Not long after,] Basiliscus Brother of Verina the Wife of Leo [Augustus], is sent Master of the Milice against Ginzirichus, with a choice Army of Souldiers, a Concerning that vast Army, which the Emperour Leo sent against the Vandals into Africa, Theophanes, Cedrenus, and Idatius in his Chronicle, are to be consulted. Concerning the preparations of the same War, Censidus Isaurus writes also, in the first book of his History; the passage whereof, because 'tis not yet extant, I will annex here: Κωνσταντίνος ἰσαυρὸς ὅταν ἐν τῷ ἁλῶν ἰσταμένη, ἡ εὐδ' ὑπερῶν βασιλευσάντων, ἀπὸ τῶν ἐκστρέψαντων τὴν χεῖρ' βασιλῆαν ἀποσταλὴν γερμανοὺς ἀπέστειλε. ἵκαν ὅτι οἱ ταῦτα ἐπαινεῖται κακοκρίτες, διὰ τὸ ἐν τῷ γένει χερσὶ λίαν τελευταμένηας ποιεῖν ἐκταχολίας. Διὰ τὸ τὰ νῦν ἔχοντα

ἡ δὲ Σουλδαῖος, ἐπιτακτικῶς πρὸς μισθίους, ὃ ἀργεῖον λόγος ἐπαύριον
 οὐκ ἔστιν. ἀπὸ τῶν ἀπολαύσεων ἀρτίων ἐν τῶν ἀπολαύσεων ὃ
 ἐν τῶν βασιλέων ἀπολαύσεων; That is, Candidus the Historiographer says, that Leo, termed also Marcelus, who reigned after Marcianus, spent an innumerable sum of Money in an Expedition against the Vandals.
 For, as those have attested who furnished that money, forty seven thousand pounds of Gold were distributed by the Prefect Praetorius; by the Comes Largitionum were spent seventeen thousand pounds of Gold, and of Silver seven hundred thousand pounds; in regard this charge was abundantly supplied, partly by the goods of Persons proscribed and partly by the Emperor Anthemius. This eminent passage is extant in Suidas, in the word κασιγῆς, but the Author's name is corrupted. In the same place of Suidas, instead of [ἡ δὲ Σουλδαῖος ἀρτίων,] it must be made [τῶν ἀπολαύσεων ἀρτίων, &c.] Further, this Vandalick Expedition had happened in the year of Christ 468, as Baronius has rightly observed; which is confirmed by Cedrenus, Marinus and Marcellinus. Two years after this, another Expedition against the Vandals was undertaken by the Commander (Dux) Heraclius, and Marcellus, as Theophanes relates in his Chronicon, who is the only Person that I know of, who has made mention of this Expedition. Procopius, in his Vandalick, has confounded this second Expedition with the former. Further, this second Expedition had an event fortunate enough. For Gizerichus being put into a fear, was compelled to make a Peace with the Oriental Romans. Valef.

All which have with great accuracy been recorded by Priscus the Rhetorician: as likewise in what manner the same [Emperor] Leo killed Aspar (who had invested him with the Empire, whom he circumvented by Treachery, rendering him this reward, as 'twere, of his own promotion;) and his Sons Aradabius and Pa-rius, whom some time before he had created Ca-sars; that he might possess himself of Aspar's Favour and Benevolence. But, after the murder of Theophanes Anthemius, who had reigned five years at Rome, informs us Olybrius is proclaimed Emperor by Ricimeres;
 and after him Glycerius is made Emperor.
 Whom Nepos having expelled, during the space of five years holds the Empire, and ordains Glycerius Bishop of the Romans at Salo-na, which is a City of Dalmatia. Afterwards Nepos is driven here: ὁ δὲ Σουλδαῖος καὶ ἡ ῥητορικὴ ὃ ἀρτίων λόγος ἐπαύριον
 οὐκ ἔστιν. ἀπὸ τῶν ἀπολαύσεων ἀρτίων ἐν τῶν ἀπολαύσεων ὃ ἐν τῶν βασιλέων ἀπολαύσεων; But having at last been wounded and allured by gifts and many riches, by Gizerichus, he yielded, and was volitionally vanquished, as Priscus the Thracian has related. It must undoubtedly be written thus; ὃ ἀρτίων ἐπαύριον ὃ δὲ Σουλδαῖος, as Priscus the Thracian has related. For Priscus the Historian had described that War, as Evagrius attests. Now Pris-cianus was a Thracian, born at Panium a Town of Thracia, which Town is mentioned by Hierocles. Provincia Europa sub Consulatu urbes quatuordecim. Endoxia, Heraclea, Arcadepolis, Bispe, Panion, Orni, &c.
 The Province Europa under a Consulatus [contains] fourteen Cities.
 Endoxia, Heraclea, Arcadepolis, Bispe, Panion, Orni, &c. Besides Suidas does also affirm, that Priscus the Writer of the Histories was a Panite. Valef.

As to my self it seemeth, I have restored this place not unhappily, after this manner; ὃ ἀρτίων καὶ ἡ ῥητορικὴ ὃ ἀρτίων λόγος ἐπαύριον
 οὐκ ἔστιν. ἀπὸ τῶν ἀπολαύσεων ἀρτίων ἐν τῶν ἀπολαύσεων ὃ ἐν τῶν βασιλέων ἀπολαύσεων; Cedrenus confirms our Emendation, at the twelfth year of Leo Augustus, in these words;
 τῶν δὲ αὐτοῦ ἐν τῶν δὲ αὐτοῦ καὶ ἡ ῥητορικὴ ὃ ἀρτίων λόγος ἐπαύριον
 οὐκ ἔστιν. ἀπὸ τῶν ἀπολαύσεων ἀρτίων ἐν τῶν ἀπολαύσεων ὃ
 ἐν τῶν βασιλέων ἀπολαύσεων; On the same year also Patricius Aspar's Son, is created Caesar by Leo, and is sent to Alexandria to draw off Aspar from the Asian Opinion and to make him faithful and kind to the Emperor. And Theophanes expresses it thus; τῶν δὲ αὐτοῦ ἐν τῶν δὲ αὐτοῦ καὶ ἡ ῥητορικὴ ὃ ἀρτίων λόγος ἐπαύριον
 οὐκ ἔστιν. ἀπὸ τῶν ἀπολαύσεων ἀρτίων ἐν τῶν ἀπολαύσεων ὃ ἐν τῶν βασιλέων ἀπολαύσεων; On the same year Patricius the Son of Aspar, whom the Emperor Leo had made Caesar, went to Alexandria, with a design to draw off Aspar from Asianism, and to render him faithful and friendly to the Emperor. Valef. In Robert Stephens, the Reading is, ὃ ἀρτίων καὶ ἡ ῥητορικὴ ὃ ἀρτίων λόγος ἐπαύριον
 οὐκ ἔστιν. ἀπὸ τῶν ἀπολαύσεων ἀρτίων ἐν τῶν ἀπολαύσεων ὃ ἐν τῶν βασιλέων ἀπολαύσεων; that he might possess himself of Aspar's Majesties.

The Proposition καὶ is to be expunged, which led Translators into a mistake. For Nepos was not made Emperor on the fifth year after Glycerius's Deposition, but on the same year whereon Glycerius had been rejected. (as 'tis related in the Old Fasti, which Cyprianus avers for fourth;) that is, on the year of Christ 474. After this Nepos held the Empire five years. For he was slain when Basilus was Consul alone, on the year of Christ 480; as Marcellinus attests in his Chronicon, and as 'tis affirmed by the Old Author of the Fasti, whom Cyprianus published. From which Author we are informed, that Julius Nepos retained the name of Emperor until his death.
 Valef.

'Tis false, that Glycerius from being Emperor was made Bishop of Rome. Nor is it true, that he was constituted Bishop of Porto, which some have affirmed, following Marcellinus as their Author.

Notwithstanding, Marcellinus does not say so. For his words are these;
Leo solo Cof. Glycerius Caesar Rome Imperium tenuit, &c. Leo holding Consul alone, Glycerius Caesar holding the Empire of Rome, is driven from the Empire by Nepos, Son of the Sister of Marcellinus heretofore Patricius; and of a Caesar is ordained a Bishop in the Port of the City Rome. But in Marcellinus the punctuation is to be altered thus; Imperio expulso Portu prius Romae, ex Cesare Episcopatus ordinatus est. Being driven from the Empire in the Port of the City Rome, of a Caesar is ordained a Bishop. Our Emendation is confirmed by the Old Author of the Fasti, whom I have quoted above; (whose words are these.) Domino Leone Juniori August. Cof. decessit de Imperio Glycerius in Portu urbis Romae, Dominus Leo Junior Augustus being Consul, Glycerius is cast from his Empire in the Port of the City of Rome. 'Tis certain Zeno, in his Book of Successione Regnorum, affirms that Glycerius was made Bishop at Salona. Jordanus's words are these; Orosioque Rome Anthemio Nepotem filium Nepotiani, &c. And having killed Anthe-mius at Rome, he created Nepos Son of Nepotianus (to whom he married his Niece,) a Caesar at Ravenna, by Domitianus his Client. Which Nepos having legally obtained the Empire, expelled Glycerius, (who had given the Kingdom to himself in a tyrannick manner,) from the Empire and made him Bishop in Salona of Dalmatia. At this place therefore in the Greek Text, the word [κασιγῆς] of the Romans is must be expunged, or rather transposed after this manner; τῶν δὲ αὐτοῦ κασιγῆς
καὶ ὁ δὲ Σουλδαῖος, &c. holds the Empire of the Romans, and ordains Glycerius, Bishop, &c. Valef.

From the Empire by Orestes, and after him his Son Romulus, surnamed Augustulus, is made the last Emperor of Rome, 'one thousand three hundred and three years after the Reign of him Co-Romulus. After this [Augustulus,] Odoacer, resuming the name of Emperor, and styling himself King administered the affairs of the Romans.

concerning this Romulus; Basilisco & Armato Cof. &c. In the Consulatus of Basiliscus and Armatus, the Western Empire of the Roman Nation (which Octavianus Augustus the first of the Augusti began to hold on the seven hundred and ninth year from the Building of the City, perfect with this Augustulus, on the year of the Reign of the Emperors his predecessors D X X I I. Jordanus has the same words in his book of Successione Regnorum. Now, this sum makes one thousand two hundred thirty and one years. Therefore Cedrenus must be corrected, who from Romulus the Builder of the City, to this Romulus Augustulus, reckons but one thousand and eighty years. Valef.

The Reading in Robert Stephens is [κασιγῆς], attempt[ing] it without doubt it should be [κασιγῆς], as Nepotianus would it, book 15, chap. 11. In the Teherian MS. I found it written [κασιγῆς], administered,] which Reading pleases me best. Valef.

CHAP. XVII.

Concerning the death of Leo, and the Empire of Leo Junior, and also concerning Zeno his Father.

AT the same time the Emperor Leo ended his Reign at Byzantium, after he had governed the Empire seventeen years, having declared Leo (the Son of his own Daughter Ariadne and Zeno) a very young Child, Emperor.
 After * his death, his Father Zeno * assumes the Purple, Verina the Wife of Leo giving him her assistance, as being her Son in Law. The Child [Leo Elder, Junior] dying not long after, Zeno continued sole * To wit, Possessor of the Empire. But, what was transacted by him or against him, and whatever else happened [in his times,] the following Book, by Robert Stephens, shall declare.

* The End of the Second Book.

Before the following (to wit, the eighteenth) Chapter, in the incomparable Floruntine Manuscript these words were written, καὶ τῶν δὲ αὐτοῦ, The end of the Second Book. Then after the [seventeenth] Chapter, these words occur;
καὶ τῶν δὲ αὐτοῦ καὶ τῶν δὲ αὐτοῦ καὶ τῶν δὲ αὐτοῦ, The matters agitated at the Synod convened at Chalcedon, being reduced into an Epitome, are these. Valef.

The matters agitated at the Synod convened at Chalcedon, being reduced into an Epitome, are these.

An Epitome of the Acts at the Synod of Chalcedon, set at the end of the Second Book.

<sup>a</sup> In the fourth chapter of this Book (where we have this fine passage) these words [मृदु-वि-सृज्यते] are the form of the verb to be in the imperative mood.

From Eusebius the meanest Bishop of Dory-laeum, who speaks in defence of himself, of the Orthodox Faith, and of Flavianus of Blessed memory, who was Bishop of Constantinople. [ It is ] the design of your power, to make provision for all your Subjects, and to stretch forth an hand to all those who are injured : especially to them who are recoucted amongst the Ecclesiasticks. And hereby you worship the Deity, by whom a power hath been given you to Rule and Govern * the World. In regard therefore the Faith of Christ and we have suffered many and grievous things, contrary to all reason and Equity, from Diocorus the most reverend Bishop of the great City Alexandria ; We address to Your Piety, entreating we may have Right done Us. Now, the business is this. After the Synod lately held in the Metropolis of the E-phetians, ( would to God that Synod had never been held, that it might not have filled the World with mischiefs and disturbance ) that † Goodness of man Diocorus, disregarding the considerations of what is just, and not [ respecting ] the fear of God, ( for he was of the same Opinion, and entertained the same Sentiments with the vain-minded and heretical Eutyches ; but concealed it from many Persons, as Titus afterwards plainly evi-

Diocorōs ἐκείνῳ, To the end that it may hear both us, &c. The Reading in the Acts of the Chalcodon Council is the same. Chriſtophoros and Sir Henry Savil, at the margin of his Copy, have mended it thus: ‘Eg’ ὁ δὲ ἡμεῖς ὁ γὰρ, &c. To the end that it may hear our Cause and that of the ſo-mentioned Diocorōs, But I had rather write it ‘Eg’ ὁ δὲ ἡμεῖς ὁ γὰρ, &c. Vale! In Robert Stephen the Reading is ‘Eg’ ὁ γὰρ ἡμεῖς ὁ γὰρ, &c. where also the word [ἀναγνῶν] is wanting.

* Or, the things under the Sun

† Spoken by way of irony.

that [ Letter ] should be received; but, that [ Infead of [ Exe. ] ]
 vry, to him] doubtles the Reading must be [ Exe. ] ] stand [ Id. ] ]
 is confirmed by the Acts of the Chalcedon Council, pag. 52, and 53 Edit. Bin. where these words occur. Gloriosissimi Iudices & Am- plissimus Senatus dixerunt, &c. The most Glorious Judges and the most Noble Senate said, Let the most Blessed Bishop Iuvencius declare why when the most Reverend Bishop Dioscorus made an Interlocution in the reading of the Letter of the most Holy Roman Archbishop that Letter was not read: Iuvencius the most Reverend Bishop of Jerusalem said: Johannes the Presbyter and Primicerius [ Id. ] ] Notaries said: that he had in his hands the Sacred Letters of the most Religious and most Pious Emperours; and I answered that the Imper-p d z
 Exeter

Letters must be read. Further, the very words which Juvenalis had made use of in that second Epheſine Synod, occurs in the aboveſaid 52. pag. where the Acts of the ſecond Epheſine Synod are recorded: Moreover Nicephorus confirms our Emendation in the laſt Chapter of his fifteenth Book, where he gives us a Summary of the Acts of the Chalcedon Council, moſtly tranſcribed from Eusebius. I have been largely on my Remarks upon theſe things, becauſe Chriſtophorus in the ſame Rendering on this place, hath wandered far from the truth. By the way, you may obſerve the fraud committed in that ſecond Epheſine Synod. For, when Hilarius the Deacon, the Legate of the Apoſtolick See, had openly declared to the Biſhops who were preſent, that he had Pope Leo's Letter, and had required that it might be read in the Council: Tobianus the Preſbyter and Primitivius of the Norvices, aroſe and ſaid, that he had in his hands other Letters written from the Emperour to Diſcorus. Then Juvenalis commanded, that thoſe Letters of the Emperour ſhould be read, no mention being made of Leo's Letter. You ſee therefore, that the reading of Leo's Letter was deſignedly impeded, by the fraud of Diſcorus; who, inſtead of Leo's Epistle, cauſed the Emperour Theodoſius's Letter to be read in the Synod. Further, the Teſterian Manuſcript does confirm our Emendation; in which Copy I found it written as I had conjectured. Valſe.

* That is, afterwards no mention was made of that * Epistle. But Thalaffius said, that he bindred not the reading of that Letter; and that he bad not so much † Authority, as that he alone could decree, † Liberty, that it should † be read. When therefore a further progress was made in the reading of the Acts, and some of the Bishops found fault with some words as being false and forged; Stephanus Bishop of the Ephesians was asked, what Notaries

* That is, would not permit Stebani's Notaries to take the Acts in writing. † Or, attended.

compelled to it ] by force and necessity, having been surrounded with innumerable mischiefs, in regard Soldiers [ Armed ] with murdering || weapons had encompassed them. Further, when
<sup>the</sup> <sup>of</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>struments.</sup> <sup>another</sup> <sup>Sentence</sup> <sup>may</sup> <sup>read</sup> <sup>Theodore</sup> <sup>Bishop</sup>

of Claudiopolis said, that no body uttered those Words. Moreover, upon a procedure in reading [the A. B. in this manner] when [the same]

This place, which E. pagans at here, is extant in the first Action of the Caledonian Synod, pa-58. V. a. f. i. e. In these said, from [the Acts, in this manner] when [they came] to a certain place wherein Eutyches had said, [that he Anathematized] those who should affirm that the Flesh of God and our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ had descended from Heaven: the Acts declared, That against these Words Eusebius had said, that those were indeed condemned by Eutyches, who should say that Christ's Flesh had descended from Heaven, but that it was not added by him, whence the Flesh was. The same Acts added also, that Diogenes Bishop of Cyzicum subjoined [these Words:] "declare therefore, from whence? and, that notwithstanding they were not permitted to make any further inquiry into these things. Further the same

Acts so manifest, that Basilus Bishop of Seleucia in Auria, spake [ these words : ] I adore our one *reading in Lord Jesus Christ, \* the Son of God, the only* God the Word; Who after the Incarnation and Union, is known in two Natures. And, that against Council is these Words the Egyptians cryed out : Let no man better, [ke divide Him Who is not to be parted, he ought not to say us ; ] call one Son two. But that the Easterns exclaimed, in their native Mood ; to wit, thus,  $\mu\epsilon\tau\epsilon\tau\epsilon\tau\epsilon\tau\epsilon\tau\epsilon$   $\epsilon\upsilon$   $\alpha\iota\omega\iota$ , declare therefore, from religion's Welf

* In Brian, pag. 58, the reading is, ὁ ὡς τὸ θεὸς ὁ μονογενὴς, τὸν
 ὡς τὸν λόγον, the only begotten Son of God. God the Word.

Anathema to him who parts; Anathema to him who divides. 'Tis contained in the same A.C.s, that Eutyches was asked, whether he would affirm two Natures in Christ. And, that he answered, that he asserted Christ [to consist] of two Natures before the Union: but after the Union, [he acknowledged but] one [Nature in him.] And, that Basilius said [these Words;] unless you affirm two undivided and unconfused Natures after the Union, you assert a confusion and a commixture. But if you add Incarnate and Inhumanate, and do understand Incarnation and Inhumanation in such manner as Cyrillus doth, you affirm the same that We do. For, the Divinity which [is] from [his] Father, is one thing; the Humanity which is from [his] Mother, is another. When they were interrogated, upon what account they had subscribed to Flavianus's Deposition; the Acts declare that the Easterns cried out, We have all sinned, We do all crave pardon. Again further, the same Acts being read on, do manifest, that the Bishops were questioned, for what reason they would not permit Eusebius

In the Acts of the Council, only Basilian have been questioned. Judges and Senators; answer he returned to them, is added there also, standing, Nicephorus confounding reading, which is added, when they were interrogated: which if it be true, it must be said, that he and those who were with him, were interrogated. Judges. Valef.

to come in, when he desired it. To which Dioscorus made answer, that Elpidius brought the Communitory; and, that he affirmed, that the Emperour Theodosius had given order, that Encubius should not be suffered to come in. The Acts do manifest, that Juvenalis also said the same not Authority. Which answers were disallowed of by the Judges. For [they said,] that this Apology was invalid [where a matter] of Faith is the subject of the Conference. After these things, the same Acts do declare, that Dioscorus <sup>b</sup> made a Complaint in these Words, What Cause have we observed, whereas Theodorēt is [suffered to] come in; And, that the Senatours made answer, That Theodorēt was come in as an Accuser. And when Dioscorus subjoynd, that Theodorēt sate amongst the Bishops; the Senatours said again, That Eusebius and Theodorēt should take the place of the Accusers, in like manner as Dioscorus had the place of the Accus'd allotted to him. When therefore all [the Aëts] of the Second Epheline Synod had been read, and the Sentence [of Deposition pronounc'd] against Flavianus and Eusebius, had been likewise recited, as far as that * place, where * Hilarius the Deacon had said, 'This contradicted: the Bi- * Or, ex-[shops of the East and those with them] * pression.

[illegible]

<sup>b</sup> I agree with Christopherſon and Sir Henry Savil; who [ſuppl. ſayd, was ſent for,] mended it thus, [ſuppl. ſayd, made plain.] Which fault I found to have been frequently committed. Manuscript Copies. Valeſ.

<sup>1</sup> This place must be corrected from the first Action of the Synod, pag. 142. Where, after the Sentence of Cōdemn nōunc'd by Diofcorus against Flavianus and Eusebius, when had said, παράσταται ο, Ιερύσε you: Hilarius Deacon of rome, said, καὶ ἐξεδίκριτο, 'is contradicted. Which words out from the Acts of the second Epheſine Synod. Valeſ.

exclaimed, Anathema to Dioscorus: in this very hour * Christ hath deposed Dioscorus: Flavianus hath been deposed by Dioscorus: Holy Lord, do Thou revenge him, Orthodox Emperour, do you revenge Him! Many years to Leo: many years to the Patriarch. Then, when the following words were read, which manifested, that all the then convened Bishops had agreed to the deposition of Flavianus and Eusebius, the most Glorious Judges made an Interlocution in these express words.

to wit, after this manner: ταυτην τη δεη ενδεκα. ταυτην τη δεη ενδεκα. That is, in this very hour [Dioscorus] hath deposed: in this very hour let him be deposed. Which reading I approved of as being the better. But, as this place of Evagrius is to be corrected from the Acts of the Chalcedon Council, so on the other hand, the Acts of the Chalcedon Council are to be amended from our Evagrius. For, instead of these words which follow, δεη αυτες ον εναντι βασιλεως, Holy Lord, do Thou revenge him; it must [in the Chalcedon Acts] be written thus: φρασεως μετὰ διακρισης εναντι βασιλεως. &c. Flavianus hath been deposed by Dioscorus: Holy Lord, do thou revenge him, Orthodox Emperour, &c. as it is in Evagrius and Nicephorus: and so the old Translator of the Chalcedon Council seems to have read: for he renders it thus: San-De domine, tu illum vindica: Catholic Imperator, tu illum vindica, Holy Lord, do Thou revenge him: Catholic Emperour, do you revenge him. From which Version we conclude, that these words [Flavianus hath been deposed by Dioscorus] ought necessarily to precede. Otherwise, whither should these words [do Thou revenge him] be referred? Valef.

* Some body may make a query here, what Patriarch is to be understood at this place. My affirmation is that Anatolius Bishop of Constantinople is meant. Further, two things are remarkable here. The first is, that the oriental Bishops with many years not to the Patriarch, but to another. Secondly, that they term the Bishop of Constantinople simply and absolutely, The Patriarch, to wit, giving him this honour on account of the prerogative of his See. For, in the Constantinopolitan Synod, the second place was assigned to the See of Constantinople. Valef.

We perceive, that a more exact scrutiny concerning the Orthodox and Catholic Faith ought to be made to morrow, when the Synod will be more complete and full. But, in regard Flavianus of Pious Memory, and Eusebius the most Religious Bishop of Dorylæum (from a search made into the Acts and Decrees, and also from this testimony by word of mouth who presided in the Synod then convened; who have confessed that they have erred, and have deposed them without cause, when they had in no wise erred in relation to the Faith: ) have, as 'tis evidently known, been unjustly deposed: it appears to us (agreeable to that which is acceptable unto God,) to be just, (provided it shall please our most Divine and most Pious Lord;) that Dioscorus the most Religious Bishop of Alexandria, Jovenalis the most Religious Bishop of Jerusalem, Thalassius the most Religious Bishop of Cæsarea, Eusebius the most Religious Bishop of Ancyra, Eustathius the most Religious Bishop of Berytus, and Basilius the most Religious Bishop of Seleucia in Isauria, which [Prelates] had power to sit, and presided over the then Synod, should lie interloper under the very same punishment, being by [the issue of the sentence of] this sacred Synod according to the Judges in Canons estranged from the Episcopal dignity: all things which have been consequently done being made known to his most sacred Imperial Majesty.

From the Acts of the Chalcedon Council, pag. 15. (where this interloper under the very same punishment, being by [the issue of the sentence of] this sacred Synod according to the Judges in Canons estranged from the Episcopal dignity: all things which have been consequently done being made known to his most sacred Imperial Majesty.)

* Instead of [ενομεως, fall from,] in the First Action of the Chalcedon Council, pag. 152. it is true written thus [ενομεως, lie under]. For 'tis referred to what went before, to wit, τῶν αὐτῶν ἐνομεως, the very same punishment; and the same herewith is the reading in the fourth chapter of this book, where this Interlocution of the Judges occurs entire. In the fourth Action of the Chalcedon Synod, pag. 217. the reading indeed is ενομεως: but there is a word added in the foregoing Clause. In this manner, τῶν αὐτῶν ἐνομεως ἐντομεως, subjected to the same punishment. If we should retain the word ενομεως, then these words [ενομεως ἐντομεως, being, estranged from] which follow, would be superfluous. Indeed, these two last mentioned words are wanting in the Tellerian and Florentine MSS. and in Nicephorus. Valef.

After these words, the Easterns cried out This [is] a just judgment: but the Bishops of Illyricum exclaimed, We have all sinned, let us all be vouchsafed pardon. And again, when the Easterns acclaimed, This is a just sentence: Christ hath deposed a Murderer, Christ hath revenged the Martyrs: the Senators made an Interlocution, That every one of the Bishops convened, should by himself * declare his own Faith; * Or, so knowing for certain, that the most Divine Emperour did believe, according to that Exposition of the Faith of the three hundred and eighteen [Fathers, assembled] at Nice, and the hundred and fifty Fathers [convened] at Constantinople; also according to the Epistles of excellent the Holy Fathers, Gregorius, Basilus, Hilarius, M. S. the Athanasius, Ambrosius, and according to Cy- words [Caril's two Letters, which were recited at the Constantinopolitan First Synod at Ephesus: for, that the most Pious Leo Bishop of the Elder Rome, had deposed Eutyches according to the same Faith.

of the Chalcedon Council, as may be seen at pag. 152; Edit. Bini. Valef.

The First Session therefore having after this manner been ended, when the most Holy Bishops had come together alone in order to another [Action,] Eusebius Bishop of Dorylæum presented Libels in defence of himself and Flavianus; wherein he accused Dioscorus as entertaining the same Sentiments with Eutyches, and because he had deposed them of the Sacerdotal Function. He added also, that Dioscorus had inserted some words, which had not been spoken at the then convened Synod, into the Acts thereof; and moreover, that Dioscorus had procured that they should subscribe in blank papers. He requested further, that all the Acts of the second Ephesine Synod might be made null by the vote of [the Prelates who] were convened, that themselves might be restored to the Sacerdotal dignity, and that that nefarious opinion might be Anathematized. He requested also after the reading [of his Libel,] that his Adversary might be present. When this was by an Interlocution ordered to be done, Aëtius Arch-Deacon and Primicerius of the Notaries said, that he had gone to Dioscorus, as also to the others; and that Dioscorus had answered, that he was not permitted by his keepers to come to the Council. By making another Interlocution it was ordered, that Dioscorus should be sought for before [the doors of] the Council. And when he was not found, Anatolius Bishop of Constantinople made an Interlocution, that he ought to be sent for, and to be present in the Synod. Which having been done, the messengers sent to Dioscorus returned and said that he told them, I am under custody: let [my keepers] say, whether or no they will permit me to go. [to the Council.] And upon the messengers saying to him, that they had been sent for him, not to the Magistrati, they brought word.

In the third Action of the Chalcedon Synod, only the Bishops met, nor were there any of the Secular Judges, or Senators present in the Council. For, in that Session the Faith was to be treated of: which that they should declare and set forth, the Bishops had before been informed by the most glorious Judges. But the Bishops for a long while refused to do that, saying that the Draught of the Nice Creed was sufficient, which had been confirmed by the Constantinopolitan, and first Ephesine Synods. Nevertheless, at length they had yielded to the Judges request, and promised they would do it. Further, where the Faith is treated of the Secular Judges have nothing to do. In the Third Action therefore, wherein the Faith was to be treated of, no Secular Judges were present. It is further to be remarked, that at this place Evagrius hath omitted the transactions of the Second Action. Evagrius therefore seems to have taken the Third Action for the Second. This is confirmed by the Acts of this very Synod, pag. 172; where it seems to be the Second Meeting, or Action, which now is the Third. Valef.

When this was by an Interlocution ordered to be done, Aëtius Arch-Deacon and Primicerius of the Notaries said, that he had gone to Dioscorus, as also to the others; and that Dioscorus had answered, that he was not permitted by his keepers to come to the Council. By making another Interlocution it was ordered, that Dioscorus should be sought for before [the doors of] the Council. And when he was not found, Anatolius Bishop of Constantinople made an Interlocution, that he ought to be sent for, and to be present in the Synod. Which having been done, the messengers sent to Dioscorus returned and said that he told them, I am under custody: let [my keepers] say, whether or no they will permit me to go. [to the Council.] And upon the messengers saying to him, that they had been sent for him, not to the Magistrati, they brought word.

that Dioscorus had said, I am ready to come to the Holy and Oecumenical Synod; but I am hindered. Whereto Himerius added, that in their return from Dioscorus, the Assistant to the Master of the sacred Offices met them, and that in company with him the Bishops had gone again to Dioscorus, and that he had some things concerning these matters which he had taken in Notes. Which having been read, 'twas manifested that Dioscorus had spoken these expressions words. Having recollected my self, and considered what is expedient [for me,] I answer thus.

⁹ BonJō's
Ἰουλιανὸς
Langus
and Chri-
stophorson
have rendered it
Boethus,
as if that were a proper name. But

name. But
Boude is the name of an Officer. For the Principes officii magistris officiorum was so termed, who was of the Schola [or, Body] of The A-genies in Regnis, as we are informed from the Nostris Imperii Romani. Farther, this Officiarius is the Master of the Offices, was by his proper name called Episcopus, as 'tis recorded in the Third Actum of the Chalcedonian Synod. Valef.

¶ Ex auctoritate. In the Acts of the Chalcedonian Council, in stead of these words, 'tis written, Ex auctoritate; which the old Translator hath rendered thus: Et certa locuti sunt, que in excerptis habeo. And they have taken those words, which I have in my Excerpta [that is, in my account taken thereof in writing:—] 'Tis certain, Himerius was a Notary and a Reader, sent by the Council (together with the Bishops) to Dyscolus, that he might take those things in writing, which should be laid on both sides; for that was the Office of Notaries. The Bishops, as often as they went to a Synod, were wont to carry each his Notary along with them, who were to take the matters transacted in the Synod in writing: to the end that, after the ending of the Synod, each Bishop might carry a copy of the Acts into his own Country. Further, I approve highly of the old Translator's rendering auctoritate excerpta. Whence I am of opinion, that Origens auctoritates ought in Latin to be termed Excerpta. I know indeed, that Origens auctoritates are by Refinus and Jerome commonly termed Excerpta, Excerptis; but my Sentiment is, that 'tis corruptly written, in regard they ought rather to be termed Excerpta. Valef.

In regard the most magnificent Judges who sate in the Session before this, have Decreed several things after many Interlocutions made by every one; and I am now cited to a Second Session, to the end that the foresaid [Decrees] may be voided and made null; 'tis my request, that the most magnificent Judges and Sacred Senate who were at the Former Session, may be present now also, in order to a re-examination of the same matters. To whom Acacius, as 'tis manifestly related in the said Acts, gave answer in these very words. The Holy and Great Synod have not commanded Your Sanctity therefore to be present, that those things which have been transacted before the most Magnificent Judges and the Sacred Senate might be voided and made null: but [the Synod] hath sent us, [with a command] that You should come to the Session, and that Your Sanctity should not be absent therefrom. To whom Dioscorus returned this answer, (as the Acts declare;) You have told me even now, that Eusebius hath presented Libels: I make a request again, that my Cause may be examined before the Judges and Senate. Then, after other things of this nature, which are put into the Acts; those were again sent, who might persuade Dioscorus to be present at what was transacted. Which having been done, those who had been sent returned, and said, that they had taken Dioscorus's answer in Notes, which [Notes] do manifest, that he said these words. I have already signified to Your piety, that I am afflicted with a distemper, and that 'tis my request, that the most Magnificent Judges, also and the Sacred Senate may now likewise be present at the Judgment of those things which shall be inquired into: but in regard my distemper hath increased, upon that account I have made a delay. And the Acts do manifest that Cecropius said unto Dioscorus; that a little before be had not made the least mention concerning his sickness; and that therefore he ought to satisfy the Canons. To whom Dioscorus made this return, I have said once, that the Judges ought to be present. Then, that Rufinus Bishop of Samosata said unto Dioscorus, lata said unto Dioscorus, that the * Agitations and Debates [in the Council] were Canonical, and that Dioscorus, if he were present, might freely speak what he should have a mind to. Dioscorus enquired, whether Iulianus and Epistathius were mod, ]<sup>c</sup> he answered, that that was nothing pertinent to the business. To which words the Acts do set forth, that Diofcorus disjoynted these,

that he had requested the Christ-loving Emperour, [that he would give order] that the Judges also might be present [in the Council,] as likewise those [ Prelates ] who together with him * had been * Or, had Judges. And, that hereto the [ Synod's ] Mes- judged.
sengers said, that Eusebius had accused him only,
and that all the rest ought
not to be present.

And, that to these words Dioſcorus replied, that thoſe other perſons ought alſo to be preſent who had been judged together with him: for, that Eufebius had no private †Caufe againſt him, but †Or, buli [A common one, to wit,] concerning thoſe things †Or, reſe.
account of which all of them had been judged. And again, when the [Synod's] Meſſengers perſiſted [in the ſame things], Dioſcorus made anſwer, what †Or, con-
I have ſaid, I have ſaid once; nor have I any thing further to ſay. To which words [when declared to the Synod,] Eufebius [Biſhop] of Dorylaeum ſaid, that he had [matter of accuſation] againſt Dioſcorus only, and againſt no perſon elſe: and be deſired that Dioſcorus might be cited in by a third Summons. [After this] Actius gave information, that ſome perſons who ſtilled themſelves Eccleſiaſticks, together with ſome others who were Laicks, coming from the City Alexandria, had lately preſented Libels againſt Dioſcorus, and that theſe men were now ſtanding before [the doors of] the Council, and * crying out. When therefore Theodorus, a Deacon of the Holy Church of Alexandria, had in the firſt place preſented [Libels,] and then Iſchirio, who was a Deacon likewiſe; and after him Athanaſius a Preſbyter and Cyrillus's ſiſters ſon; and laſtly Sophronius; in which [Libels] they ac- cuſed Dioſcorus partly for Blaſphemies, and partly on account of bodily [damages] and violent exaction of moneys: a third Citation is iſſued out, wherein Dioſcorus is admoniſhed to come [to the Synod.] The Meſ- ſengers therefore appointed for this buſineſs, being re- turned, made report that Dioſcorus had ſaid [theſe words:] I have ſufficiently informed You Pious; nor can I add any thing elſe thereto.

* I am of the ſame opinion with Learned men, who inſtead of [Bis apud] have, had intended it thus, ſtatim apud bis, ſuſtained exaction; by conjecture, at I think. For our Copies have no alteration here. Yet the Vatican Manuſcript (which I procured opportunitly, whileſt the Edition was in the preſs,) but it plainly written, ſtatim apud bis. Valeſ.

Again, when the re-

* Kavovim το κριτήριο κατανα. Valesius renders it thus;
Canonicum constitutum esse judi-
cium, that a Canonical Indica-
tory was constituted.

And when Divenalis and Tha-come [to the Sy-

<sup>f</sup> Ἀπεκρίνατο, He answered: in Robert Stephens's Edition, the reading is, Eustathius answered: In Valesius's Version 'tis, respondit Pergamius, Pergamius answered.

as likewise those
him * had been * Or, had [Synod's] Mes- judged.

and accused him only,
not to be present.

<sup>t</sup> I am of the same opinion with Learned men, who instead of [βίαι ἀναγκάσεις] had intended it thus, βίαιαι ἀναγκάσεις, violent exaction; by conjecture, at I think. For our Copies have no alteration here. Yet the Tellurian Manuscript (which I procured opportunely, whilst our Edition was in the press,) has it plainly written, βίαιαι ἀναγκάσεις. Vale!

in conscience: and he asked what [punishment] he deserved. Whereon when the Bishops had returned answer, that he had * offended against the Canons, and when Proterius Bishop of Smyrna had said, at such time as the Holy Flavianus was murdered, nothing had been agreeably and orderly done against him: they who supplied the place of Leo Bishop of the Elder Rome, made this Declaration in these express words.

* Or, made himself obnoxious to. † Or, pronounced Sentence.

What Diofcorus who hath been Bishop of the Great City Alexandria has audaciously attempted against the Order of the Canons, and the Ecclesiastick Constitution, hath been made manifest, both by those things which have already been enquired into at the First Session, and also from what hath been done this day. For this person, (to omit many other things,) making use of his own authority, uncanonically admitted to communion Eutyches, (a man that embraces the same Sentiments with himself, who had been deposed canonically by his own Bishop of Holy Memory, we mean our Father and Arch-Bishop Flavianus;) before * his sitting [in the Synod] at Ephesus together with the Bishops beloved by God. But the Apostolick See has granted a pardon to those [Prelates,] for what hath been involuntarily done there by them. Who also to this present continue of the same opinion with the most Holy Arch-Bishop Leo, and with all the Holy and Oecumenical Synod. On which account, he hath received them to his own communion, as being asserters of the same faith with himself. But † this man till this very time hath not desisted from boasting of these things, on account whereof he ought rather to mourn, and lay himself prostrate on the earth. Besides, he permitted not the Letter of the most Blessed Pope Leo, to be read, (which had been written by him to Flavianus of Holy Memory;) and this [he did,] notwithstanding he was several times entreated by those persons who brought the Letter, to suffer it to be read; and notwithstanding he had promised with an Oath that it should be read. The not reading of which Letter has filled the most Holy Churches over the whole world with scandals and detriment. Nevertheless, although such things as these have been audaciously attempted by him, * yet we had some thoughts concerning the vouchsafing to him something of compassion in relation to his former impious Fact, as also to the rest of the Bishops beloved by God, although they had not the same authority of judging that he was invested with.

† Diofcorus.

But, in the Chalcedon Aſſy, and in the fourth chapter of this book, (where this sentence of condemnation occurs,) it is more truly written, it was our design. But, by transposing the preposition, I had rather write it thus, ἀνεχόμενοι ἐπὶ αὐτοῦ, &c. we had considered in relation to, &c. which writing is far more elegant.

* Or, suffered.

But in regard he has out-done his former iniquity by his * latter facts, (for he has audaciously pronounced an excommunication against the most Holy and most Pious Leo Arch-Bishop of Rome the Great; and moreover, (when Libels suff with Crimes were preferred to the Holy and Great Synod against him,) having been canonically called once, twice, and thrice, by the Bishops beloved of God, he obeyed not, to wit, being prick'd by his own conscience; [Lastly,] he has illegally received [to Communion] those, who have been justly deposed by several Synods: [on these various accounts we say]) he himself hath pronounced sentence against himself, having many ways trampled under foot the Ecclesiastick Rules. Wherefore, the most Holy and most Blessed Leo, Arch-Bishop of the Greatest and the Elder Rome, by Us and the present Synod, together with the thrice Blessed and most eminent Apostle Peter, who is the Rock and basis of the Catholick Church, and the foundation of the Orthodox Faith, hath divested him of the Episcopal dignity, and hath * removed him from [the performance of] every Sacramental Office. Therefore, the Holy and Great Synod it self will Decree those things concerning the forementioned Diofcorus, which shall seem agreeable to the Canons.

Matth. 16. 18. As a Comment on which Text take these words of Saint Cyprian, in his book de Unitate Ecclesie, termed also Tractatus de Simplicitate Prelaturum, pag. 139. Edit. Bessl. 1558. Logitur dominus ad Petrum, Ego tibi dico, inquit, quia tu es Petrus, & Super istam Petram edificabo Ecclesiam meam, &c. And the Lord speaks to Peter, I say unto thee, say he, that Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock I will build my Church, &c. And after his Resurrection he says to the same person, Feed my sheep. And although he gives an equal power to all the Apostles after his Resurrection, and says, As the Father hath sent me, so also I send you, &c. Yet that he might manifest the Unity, by his own authority he hath disposed the original of the same Unity as beginning from One. For the rest of the Apostles were the same also, that Peter was, endowed with an equal fellowship, both of honour and power; but the original proceeds from Unity, that the Church may be shown to be one.

When therefore these things had been confirmed by Anatolius, Maximus, and the rest of the Bishops, excepting those [Prelates] who together with Diofcorus had been deposed by the Council; a Relation concerning these [Transactions] was by the Synod written to [the Emperor] Marcianus, and by the same Synod a deposition was sent to Diofcorus, the Contents whereof were these.

Know, that by reason of Your contemning the Divine Canons, and on account of Your contumacy [Shown] towards this Holy and Oecumenical Synod, because (besides other Crimes whereof You have been convicted,) having been the third time called by this Holy and great Synod, according to the Divine Canons to answer to those Accusations brought against You, You have not appeared; on the thirteenth day of this instant month October, You are deposed from your Bishoprick by this Holy and Oecumenical Synod, and are * estranged from every Ecclesiastick duty.

This word [ἀσκήσει] is variously rendered by Translators. For Langus renders it Consecutudinem, Custom. Mosheim and Christophorus have translated it thus; ab omni Ecclesiastica Jure esse abalienatum, and are alienated from all Ecclesiastick Right. The Old Translation of the Chalcedon Council, pag. 214. renders it Functionem, Function; which, in my judgment is the truer Version. In the Libel of Deposition of the same Diofcorus, which the Chalcedon Synod sent, almost in the very same words, to the Clergy-men of the Alexandrian Church who were then at Chalcedon, instead of ἀσκήσει, it is βαρύνε, Degree. In the sentence of condemnation pronounced against the same Diofcorus by the Legates of the Roman See, instead of this word, ἐπίσκοπος, Office, is made use of. Now, these words are therefore added by the Synod, that they might shew, that Diofcorus was reduced to a Laick communion. For he is not only said to be divested of the Episcopal dignity, but is also removed from every Ecclesiastick Office: least any one should think him to be removed from the Episcopal Aſſy: [Or, acting as a Bishop] and thrust down into the degree of the Presbyterate. For to do that, is sacrilege, as is said in the fourth Aſſion of the Chalcedon Synod, pag. 247: Vales.

Then, having written concerning these things to the pious <sup>2</sup> Bishops of the most Holy Church at Alexandria, and when the <sup>2</sup> Edict against Dioscoros had been proposed, this Sessions was ended.

τις τῆς ἐκ-
κλησίας. It should (as it seems) be written κλήρος, Clergy of the Great Holy Synod [or Diocese], Life of Deposition was sent to the Clergy of the Alexandrian Church, who were then at Chalcedon. It may be seen in the Acts of the Chalcedon Council, pag. 214. Due order did require indeed that Diogenis's Deposition should be declared by the Synod to the Bishops of Egypt also. But the Bishops of the Chalcedon Council were to perform that afterwards, in their Synodick Letter. At that time they had done sufficient, in declaring Diogenis's Deposition to the Alexandrian Ecclesiastics who were then at Chalcedon, to wit, to Eusebius the Prefbyter and Oecumenus [or, Steward], [and to Euthalius the Canon, and the rest of the Clergy. To wit, to Euthalius's words that clearly signify that there is no mention here concerning the Bishops of Egypt. For he calls them Bishop of the Alexandrian Church: which appellation agree not with the Bishops of Egypt. Vale.

<sup>2</sup> In Nicophorus 'tis ἡγεμονία. But in the Acts of the Chalcedon Council, the reading is ἡγεσία. In the Tellerian MS. I found it written ἡγεσία. Vale]. And so 'tis in Robert Stephens's Edition.

* Or, conven-
 † The true
 Spirituall
 the true
 Religion.

The foregoing * Session having been thus ended, after this [the Bishops] being again convened, returned answer to the Interrogation of the Judges (who had requested that the † true Faith might be expounded,) [in this manner,] * that nothing further ought to be esta-

Epheſus had confirmed by their own Subſcriptions; and that he had likewiſe another Letter of the ſame Cyrillus, which had been written to Johannes [Biſhop] of Antioch, and which had likewiſe been confirmed: and his requeſt was, that both theſe Letters might be read. And, after an Interlocution had been made concerning theſe [Letters,] they were both recited. Part of the Contents of the former Epistle run word for word thus.

Cyrillus, to the most Pious Nestorius, [my] Fellow-Minister.

Some persons, as I understand, * reproach my <sup>Or, grate</sup> Reputation in the presence of Your Pity, and <sup>and angu</sup> say that frequently, taking an occasion [to do thus] <sup>most</sup> especially, at such time as those of the Magistracy, are met together; and peradventure they suppose, that Your ears are even delighted [with such discourses as these.] And after some words. The Holy and Great Synod therefore hath said, † that He the only begotten Son hath been begotten <sup>† Or, that</sup> of God and the Father according to Nature, very <sup>of</sup> God and very God, the Light of the Light; that He, by whom the Father hath made all things, <sup>de, & born the</sup> descended, as Incarnate, made man, suffered, rose <sup>only begotten Son of</sup> again the third day, ascended into the Heavens, <sup>God, &c.</sup> These Expressions and Forms we also ought to follow, considering with our selves, what is meant by this [proposition,] God the Word was incarnate and was made man. For we do not affirm, that the Nature of The Word having been changed, was made Flesh: nor that it was converted into whole man, who [consists] of Soul and Body. But [We say] that rather, that when The Word had personally united to himself the Flesh enlivened with a rational soul, he was ineffably and incomprehensibly made man, and he hath been styled the Son of man, not according to will only, or good pleasure; nor yet as it were in the Assumption of the person only. And, that the Na-

the particle et must be expunged; in regard 'tis altogether superfluous at this place. Further, the place here meant by Eugenius, is extant in the Second Edition of the Chalcedon Council, p. 159. Edit. Bin. But 'tis to be remarked, of which I have given notice in my preface, before the Copies of the Chalcedon Synod which Eugenius made use of, were different from those we now have. For that which is now to the Third Act, to Eugenius is the Second, as we have seen already. But, that which is in our Copies is intitled the Scythian Act, and will be made manifest by the next and following. Valer.

* The place which Boagrus means here, occurs in the Second Action of the Chalcedon Council, pag. 15. Also, the words of Cecropius Bishop of Sebastopolis, occur in the same page. Valef.

* Ἐνδύσιμον, a Prelude, or, Cessation.

dred and eighteen Holy Fathers, and hath been confirmed by the Holy Fathers, Athanasius, Cyrillus, Celestinus, Hilarius, Basilus, Gregorius, and now again by the most Holy Leo. And our request is, that the [words] of the Three hundred and eighteen Holy Fathers, as also those of the most Holy Leo, may be recited. Which having been read, the whole Synod cried out, in these words; This is the Faith of the Orthodox: Thus we all believe, Pope Leo believes thus, Cyrillus believed thus, the Pope hath expounded it thus. And when there had been another Interlocution, that the Exposition of the Faith [set forth] by the Hundred and fifty Holy Fathers might be recited also, that was likewise read. To which the Synod again cried out, and said: This is the Faith of [us] all: This is the Faith of the Orthodox: Thus we all believe. * After whom Aetius the Arch-Deacon said, that he had at hand the Epistle of the Divine Cyrillus to Nestorius, which all [the Fathers] convened at

tures [are] ardeſe, - wote have come together into a true Unity: but, that of both [Natures there is] one Chriſt and [one] Son; not as if the diverſity of the Natures were deſtroyed by the Union:
 but rather, * that the Divinity and Humanity have perfected to us one Lord, and Chriſt, and Son, by an inef-ſable myſtical and ſecret com-poſite to an Unity. And after ſome few words. But, in regard having perſonally united the humanity to himſelf on our account and for our ſalvation, be proceeded from a woman, for this reaſon be is ſaid to have been born according to the Fleſh.
 For he was not at firſt born a common [and ordinary] man of the Holy Virgin,

and after that The Word *descended upon him: but having been † united <sup>Or, came</sup> from the very womb, he is said to have unde- <sup>Or, unit</sup> gone a Carnal Nativity, that he might procure [to himself] the Nativity of his own Flesh.
 After the same manner we say he suffered, and rose again; not as if God The Word, as to his own Nature, suffered either the Stripes, or the

<sup>d</sup> This place is also extant in the Second Edition of the Chalcedon Synod, pag. 160. Valef.

terlocation, terlocution [had given order,] that an Interval of five days might be allowed them, wherein they might have a meeting [and confer] with the Anatolius Prelate of Constantinople: All the Bishops cried out, and said, We do believe thus: We all believe thus: as Leo, so we believe: no one of us doubts: We have all subscribed. To which [Exclamations the Judges] made an Interlocution in these express words. There is no necessity that you should all meet. But, in regard 'tis agreeable, that those who doubt should be confirmed, let the most Pious Bishop Anatolius choose out of their number who have subscribed, such persons as he shall think fit to teach and inform those that doubt. Whereto those of the Synod subscribed these Acclamations: We entreat * for the Fathers: [Let] the Fathers, who are of the same Sentiment with Leo, [be restored] to the Synod; The Fathers to the Synod: These Words to the Emperor: These Supplications to the Orthodox: These Supplications to Augusta: We have all sinned: Let us all be pardoned. But the Clergy of the Constantinopolitan Church exclaim'd [in these words,] They are but few who cry out: The Synod says not this. After whom, the Eastern Bishops cried out, The Egyptian to Banishment. But the Illyricians excepted, claimed: We entreat [you,] have mercy upon And the all. After whom the Eastern Bishops cried out, fame with that first mentioned, is the reading in the Second Action of the Chalcedon Council. Further, who these Fathers should be, for whom the Bishops entreat, that they may be restored to the Synod, 'tis not difficult to guess. For they are, Juvenalis, Bishop of Jerusalem, Thalassius of Caesarea in Cappadocia, Eusebius, Eustathius, and Basilus; who had been deplored in the First Action together with Dioscorus, by an Interlocution of the Judges and Senators. On account therefore of this Deposition which the Bishops had approved of by their Suffrages, these five Bishops, were present neither at the Second nor Third Action, as 'tis apparent from the Catalogue of the Bishops which is prefixed before those Actions. Besides, in the Third Action, when the Legate of the Apostolick See had pronounced a Sentence of Deposition against Dioscorus, the rest of the Bishops confirmed it by their own Subscriptions: excepting these five, as Eusebius has truly observed above. In the Common Edition of the Chalcedon Synod, pag. 212. the names even of these five Bishops occur written also: but, out of order, and after all the other Bishops. Whence it appears, that they had not subscribed at such time as the Sentence was pronounced, but a long while after, when they had been restored, and had recovered their former Dignity. Moreover, it may be manifestly concluded from what is said above, that that is most true which I have already remark'd, viz. That the Second Action of the Chalcedon Synod is by Eusebius taken for The Third, and The Fourth for The Second. But, which Copies are worthy to be believed, whether those which Eusebius made use of, or them which we have now extant, 'tis not easy to pronounce. To me, the Copies made use of by Eusebius seem more certain. First, on account of their Antiquity; for doubtless they were older than those we now use. Secondly, by reason of their legitimate and true Order of Matters considered. For, after an accurate Examination of Dioscorus's Cause, and after the Interlocution of the Judges, who had pronounced him to have offended against the Canons, and that he was to be deplored; all which was done in the First Action: it remained, that Dioscorus by a synodick Judgment of the Bishops should be condemned. Wherefore, that Action, wherein Dioscorus was deplored by the Bishops by a synodick Sentence, ought immediately to follow The First Action. Therefore Eusebius and Nicephorus have rightly placed it in the second place. A third Reason is drawn from the Fourth Action itself, pag. 177. where Dioscorus is said to have answered the Legates sent to him from the Holy Synod, in this manner: Βασίλειον αὐτὸς ἐκ ἐκείνης ἐκκλησίας. In regard before this, the most magnificent Judges sitting in the Conventions, have determined true things, after a large Interlocution of every one of them, but now a second meeting calls me out in order to the annulling of what has been said before. Nevertheless, that is in the way, which occurs at the close of the Second Action, viz. that the Bishops of Illyricum cried out thus, Dioscorus to the Synod, Dioscorus to the Churches. Which doubtless they would not have dared to say after Dioscorus's Deposition, to which themselves had subscribed. Therefore, the Second Action, where this Acclamation occurs, ought necessarily to precede The Third Action, in which Dioscorus was Canonically deplored. And this I think to be true. Vale.

The Egyptian to Banishment. And when the Illyricians had made the same request which they had made before, the Clergy of Constantinople cried out, Dioscorus to Banishment; The Egyptian to Exile; The Heretick to Banishment. Christ hath deplored Dioscorus. After whom, the Illyricians, and those Bishops of their Party [exclaimed,] We have all sinned; pardon all: Dioscorus to the Synod, Dioscorus to the Churches. And when such like Words as these had preceded, this Session was ended. At the Session after this, when the Senate had made an Interlocution, that the Decrees which had already been given forth should be recited, Constantinus the Secretary read these express Words out of a * Schedule. * Or, Father. Instead of the Decrees.

It must undoubtedly be read ἀποδοκιμασθέντες, the Decrees which had been given forth; which is the reading in Nicephorus, and this reading is confirmed by the Fourth Action of the Chalcedon Synod, pag. 213, &c. Vale.

We perceive, that a more exact Scrutiny concerning the Orthodox and Catholic Faith ought to be made to morrow, when the Synod will be more complete and full. But, in regard Flavianus of Pious Memory, and the most Religious Bishop Eusebius (from a search made into the Acts and Decrees, and also from their Testimony by Word of Mouth, who presided in the Synod then convened; who have confessed that they have erred, and have deplored them without cause, when they had in no wise erred in the Faith: ) have, as 'tis evidently known, been unjustly deplored: it appears to us (agreeable to that which is acceptable unto God,) to be just, (provided it shall please our most Divine and most Pious Lord,) that Dioscorus the most Religious Bishop of Alexandria, Juvenalis the most Religious Bishop of Jerusalem, Thalassius the most Religious Bishop of Caesarea in Cappadocia, Eusebius the most Religious Bishop of Ancyra, Eustathius the most Religious Bishop of Berytus, and Basilus the most Religious Bishop of Seleucia in Isauria, which [Prelates] had power, and presided over the then Synod, should lie under the very same punishment, [and] according to the Canons * be removed from the Episcopal Dignity: all things which have been consequently done, being made known † to his most sacred Imperial Majesty. * Or, made. † Or, to the Divine height.

Then, after the Reading of some other things, the Bishops assembled were asked, whether Leo's Letter agreed with the Faith of the Three hundred and eighteen Holy Fathers convened at Nice, and with that of the Hundred and fifty [Holy Fathers assembled] in the Imperial City [Constantinople] whereat Anatolius, Prelate of Constantinople, and all the Bishops present returned answer, that Leo's Letter agreed with the foresaid Holy Fathers:

and * be subscribed to the forementioned Letter of Leo. These things having proceeded thus, those of the Synod cried out, We all consent, We do all approve, We all believe alike, We all think the same things, We all believe thus. [Let] the Fathers [be restored] to the Synod; [Let] those who have subscribed [be restored] to the Synod: Many years * to the Emperor: Many years † to Augusta. Emperor. The Fathers to the Synod, those of the same Faith, or, to the Synod: Many years to the Emperor: those Augustus of the same Sentiments to the Synod: many years † to the Emperor. We have all subscribed to the Faith: * Or, made. † Or, to the Divine height.

* Christophorus read it in the plural number ἀποδοκιμασθέντες, they subscribed; and so the reading is in Nicephorus: which is confirmed by the Acts of the Chalcedon Synod, pag. 213, &c. Vale.

Faith: as Leo, so we think. After this an Interlocution was made [by the Judges,] in these express Words: We have given a Relation concerning these things to our most Divine and most Pious Lord, and we expect the answer of his Piety. But your Reverence shall render an account to God, as well concerning Dioscorus, who hath been deposed by You, (his Imperial Majesty and we

* Instead of [καὶ αὐτῶν ἐπὶ αἰτίᾳ, concerning all these other things,] the reading in the Florentine and Tellerian MSS. is true; thus, καὶ αὐτῶν ἐπὶ αἰτίᾳ, concerning these [other] five persons; in the Fourth Edition of the Chalcodon Synod, pag. 232, the reading is the same with this last mentioned; as likewise that in Nicphorus. Valef.

nus, which gave the Bishops permission to determine according to their own discretion, concerning the persons who had been deposed, in such manner as the Judges have declared by an Interlocution; [the Bishops] made their Request, saying these express Words: We entreat that they may come in. [Let] those of the same Opinion [be restored] to the Synod: those of the same Sentiments, to the Synod: those who have subscribed to Leo's Letter, to the Synod. Which persons, after an Interlocution, were admitted into the number of the Synod. And after this, the Supplicatory Libels, which had been presented by the Bishops of the Egyptick Diocesis to the Emperor Marcianus, were read; wherein, besides other matters, these things were contained: Our Sentiments are the same with those Expositions which the Three hundred and eighteen [Holy Fathers] set forth at Nicæa, and [with those embraced by] the Blessed Athanasius, and Cyrillus of Holy Memory: We Anathematize every Heresy, that of Arius, that of Eunomius, of Manes, of Nestorius, and that of those who assert, that the Flesh of our Lord is from Heaven, and not from the Holy Theotocos, and Ever-Virgin Mary; * whom [we affirm] to be like to us all, [but] without sin. Then, all [the Bishops] present in the Synod cried out, saying, Why do they not Anathematize Eutyches's Opinion? Let them subscribe to Leo's Letter, and Anathematize Eutyches and his Opinions: Let them give their Assent to Leo's Letter: they are deposed to impose upon us and be gone. Here to the Bishops of Egypt returned answer, That there were many Bishops in Egypt, and that 'twas impossible [for them] to represent the † persons of those who were absent: and they requested, that the Synod would expect their Arch-Bishop, to the end that (according as Custom required,) they might follow his Opinion. For [they said,] that if they should do any thing before the † Election of their Arch-Bishop, all persons of the whole Egyptick Diocesis would fall upon them. And when they had made many entreaties concerning these things, and those of the Synod had vigorously resisted them; by an Interlocution 'twas ordered, that an * Interval should be granted to the Bishops of Egypt, till such time as an Arch-Bishop could be ordained over them. And after this, were presented Supplicatory Libels of some Monks; the sum of which was this, That they might in no wise be forced to subscribe † to certain Papers, * till such time as † Or, in the Synod (which the Emperor had ordained to be certain Papers,) should meet, and take cognizance of those things which had been decreed. After the recital of these [Libels,] Diogenes Bishop of Cyzicus declared that Barfumas, one of those Persons, who were come into the Council, had murdered Flavianus: for that he had cried out kill him. And that, although he was not named in the Libels, yet (contrary to what was right and fitting,) he had gotten entrance [into the Council.] Whereat all the Bishops exclaimed, Barfumas hath ruined all Syria: he hath brought a thousand Monks against us. And when an Interlocution had been made, that the [Monks] who were come together should expect the Synod's determination; the Monks requested, that the Libels composed by them might be read: part whereof was this, That Dioscorus, and those Bishops with him, might be present at the Synod. At the hearing whereof, all the Bishops exclaimed, Anathema to Dioscorus: Christ hath deposed Dioscorus: thrust these persons out of doors: take away the Injury of the Synod: remove the Force of the Synod: [Relate] these words to the Emperor: remove the Injury of the Synod: take away the Disgrace of the Synod. In opposition to whom the Monks cried out, Remove the Injury of the Monasteries. And when the same Exclamations had been made again by the Synod, 'twas ordered by an Interlocution, that the rest of the Libels should be recited. In which 'twas affirmed, that Dioscorus's Deposition had not been duly and orderly made; and that, the Faith being proposed, * be ought to * Or, he be admitted to the Session of the Synod. And in-ought to lest this were done, they would shake their Garments, [and recede] from the Communion of those Bishops who were convened. After the Recital of these words, Actius the Arch-Deacon read the Canon concerning those who separated themselves [from Communion.] And again, when the Monks were divided at the Questions [put to them] by the most Holy Bishops, and afterwards, at the Interrogatory of Actius the Arch-Deacon made as from the Synod; and when some of them Anathematized Nestorius and Eutyches, and others refused to do that: an Interlocution was made by the Judges, [who declared,] that the Supplicatory Libels of Faustus and the other Monks should be read; wherein they requested of the Emperor, that those Monks should not have any further Countenance shown them, who had lately appeared in opposition to Orthodox Sentiments: amongst whom, one Dorotheus a Monk, had termed Eutyches Orhodox. Against him divers Questions concerning Eutyches's Doctrine were, proposed by the Judges. After this, when the Fifth Session was begun, the Judges by an Interlocution declared, that what had been determined concerning the Faith, should be promulged. Then Asclepiades, a Deacon of Constantinople, read the Determination, which they were pleased not to have inserted into the Acts. Against which [Determination] some made opposition; but more consented to it. And when Exclamations had been made on the one side to the Emperor Marcianus by the Monks, in the Fourth Edition of the Chalcodon Synod, pag. 237. In this Libel the Monks request of the Emperor, that the Oecumenical Synod might be convened, (which the Emperor had before given order to be assembled;) which might consult the safety of all persons, and that the Monks might not be compelled by Violence to subscribe. Those Monks, belike, did not believe that Synod to be Oecumenical, at which Dioscorus and the other Bishops of Egypt were not present. They requested therefore, that Dioscorus might be wholly returned, as may be seen in another Libel which it recited afterwards. Valef.

* That is, Cery.

† Or, persons.

|| Or, nomination.

* Or, de ly.

side and on the other, the Judges said, that Dioscorus affirmed he had therefore deposed Flavianus, because he asserted there were two Natures: but, that the Determination ran thus, of two Natures. To which Anatolius made answer, that Dioscorus had not been deposed on account of the Faith; but because he had

* Or, brought an Excommunication upon Leo.

As to my self it seemeth, I have restored this place very happily. For, of these three words [Leo's words, from this instant] I have made one, in this manner, ἀποφύλαξεν, &c. the Judge desired, &c. But Nicophorus, perceiving this place to be corrupted, by adding a word made it good in this manner; and so it is of ἀποφύλαξεν, &c. From this instant the Judges ordered, &c. Which Emendation is contradicted by the Authority of the Acts, and contrary to Eusebius's mind. For the Secular Judges, who by the Emperor's Order were present at the Synod, never Commanded that Leo's Letter should be inserted into the Definition of the Faith; but only desired that of the Bishops: which nevertheless was denied them by the Bishops, as is apparent from the Fifth Action, pag. 250. Valef.

mine Matters in relation to the Faith; or at least, that every one of them should set forth his own Faith; which if they did not, they were to know, that a Synod should be convened in the West. And being asked to declare, whether they would follow Dioscorus who asserted [Christ to consist] OF TWO [Natures,] or Leo [who affirmed] TWO [Natures] IN Christ, they cried out that they believed [agreeable to] Leo: but, that those who made Opposition were Eutychianists. And when the Judges had said, that according to Leo's Opinion [there ought] to be added [in the Definition of the Faith, these words] Two Natures united, "inconvertible, and unstoned For divided, and inconfused in Christ; [the Bishops] intreated them to go into the Oratory of make up the Holy Euphemia's Church. And when the fewer that Judges had entered into the foresaid Oratory, they believed Leo, according as Christophorus renders it; but, that they believed with Leo [or, as Leo did believe,] as Langus and Muculus have rightly rendered it. For thus they had acclaimed, as Leo does, so we believe; as it occurs in the Fifth Action. Valef.

Nicophorus xi' ἀποφύλαξεν. Nicophorus has mended it, and xi' ἀποφύλαξεν, according to Leo. But, I doubt not but Eusebius wrote xi' ἀποφύλαξεν, according to Leo's Opinion. For to the Judges speak in the Fifth Action of this Council, pag. 250. Further, before the word ἀποφύλαξεν, the Verb [δέν, there ought] seems necessary to be added. Valef.

In the Fifth Action of the Chalcedon Council, 'tis written adverbially, thus, ἀποφύλαξεν, xi' ἀποφύλαξεν, xi' ἀποφύλαξεν, inconvertibly, and indivisibly, and inconfusedly. Valef.

Before these, some words seem to be wanting in the Greek Text, which from the Acts of the Chalcedon Council may be supplied after this manner: παρεβύθησαν αὐτῶν ἐν ἐπισκοπῇ ἐνταῦθεν εἰς τὸ μαρτύριον, οἱ ἡγούμενοι ἐνταῦθεν εἰς τὸ μαρτύριον [the Bishops intreated them to go into the Oratory of the Holy Euphemia's Church.] Further, the mistake of Langus and Christophorus is to be taken notice of here; who have rendered μαρτύριον, the Church of the Holy Mary Euphemia. The Synod of Chalcedon was indeed assembled in the Temple, or Church of Saint Euphemia. But, the Treaty, or Conference, concerning the Faith was held in the Oratory of the said Church, according as the Emperor had given Order in the Allocation which is recited in the Council, pag. 250. συνελθόντες τὸ ἐκκλησίαν τὴν ἀγίαν μαρίνην, τοῦ μαρτύριον [the Oratory of the most Holy Church.] For μαρτύριον [Martyrium] is taken for the Church, as it appears from the Third Action of the Chalcedon Synod, where the Bishops are said to have met in the Martyrium of the most Holy and Victorious Mary Euphemia. And in the other Actions of that Council, the same Bishops are said to have come together into the most Holy Church of the same Martyr. In regard therefore 'tis manifest, that the Oratory (wherein some few of the Bishops met only, to treat concerning the Faith, together with Anatolius and the Deputies of the Romish See,) was part of St. Euphemia's Church, it remains to be inquired, what part of the Church that was. St. Euphemia's Church consisted of three spacious Edifices; the first whereof was an Atrium, or Court; the second, the Basilica, [or, the Church itself]; the third, the Altar built in form of a Chapel, as Eusebius tells us in the third Chapter of this Book. The Oratory therefore is the same with the Altar, which now-a-days we term the Choir, or Quire. Nor has our Eusebius done right, in making use of μαρτύριον to signify the Oratory; for the Emperor had not ordered the Bishops to meet in the Martyrium, but in the Oratory of the Martyr, as we have now said. Valef.

together with Anatolius and the Deputies of Leo, with Maximus also of Antioch, and Juvenalis of Jerusalem, and Thalassius of Cæsarea in Cappadocia, and with the other [Bishops,] and when [some little time after] they had gone out from thence, the Definition [of the Faith] was read, the Contents whereof were these: Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and so forth, which we have inserted * above into our History. And when * See chap. they had all cried out, This is the Faith of the Fathers; Let the Metropolitanans now subscribe, This is the Faith of the Apostles; We all follow this Faith; We all think thus: the Judges made an Interlocution in these words: Those matters which have been defined by the Fathers, and which please all persons, shall be Related † to his Imperial Majesty. But, at † Or, to the sixth Session, the Emperor [Marcianus] the Divine came [to the Council,] and made a Speech to the bright Bishops concerning Concord. And † after an Interlocution, by location of the Emperor's, the Definition [of the Faith] was read by Actius, Arch-Deacon of Constantinople, and all subscribed to the Definition. Then the Emperor asked, Whether the Definition were composed by the unanimous Consent of them all? and they all confirmed it with joyful Acclamations. Again, the Emperor made two Speeches [to the Bishops,] which were followed with the joyful Acclamations of them all. After this, by the Emperor's permission, the Canons were * written, or Confirmed, and * to [the City of] the Chalcedonians were read, given Metropolitan Rights and Privileges. * Not a Metropolitan Right or Privilege, but the Name of a Metropolis only, was given to the City of Chalcedon: for these are the words of the Emperor Marcianus's Law: Τὴν καλεσθεῖσαν πόλιν ἐν ᾗ ἡ πόλις πάλαι ἔκειτο, διὰ τὴν ἐκκλησίαν μαρτυρίου τῆς ἁγίας εὐφροσύνης ἱδρυμένης, ὁποῦναι αὐτῇ ταῦτα πνευματικά, συνελθόντων τῶν ἐπισκοπῶν καὶ ἡγουμένων τῶν ἐκκλησιαστικῶν; that is, We have Decreed, that the City of the Chalcedonians, wherein the Synod of the most Holy Faith was convened, should have the privileges of a Metropolis, honouring it with the Name only; so wit, its proper Dignity being preferred to the Metropolis of the Nicomedians. But although the Emperor in these words seems to adorn only the City itself of the Chalcedonians, with the Title of a Metropolis, yet that Privilege belongs even to the Church of the Chalcedonians also. From that time therefore the Bishop of Chalcedon had the Honour of a Metropolis; but, had no Metropolis Right or Privilege, because the Emperor by this Law would have nothing diminished from the Dignity of the Bishop of Nicomedia. The Bishops of this very Council have determined [or judged] the same thing in the Cause of the Bishops of Nicomedia and Nicea; whereas Nicea by the Emperor's Rescript had obtained the honour of a Metropolis, the Judges and Bishops who were in the Council made answer, That this Honour had been given only to the City by the Emperours; nor could the Bishop of Nicea by this Law arrogate to himself a Metropolis Right or Privilege; but was only preferred before the other Bishops of the Province Bithynia: so that, he was accounted in the second place after the Metropolitan, as may be seen in the Thirteenth Action. Further, what the Metropolitan Rights and Privileges were, we are informed from the Canons of the Nicene Council; to wit, that the Ordinations of Provincial Bishops should not be made without the Metropolitan's consent: and that the Metropolitan Bishop should have a Power of calling out the Provincial Bishops to a Council of his own. Moreover, in the Florentine Decree I found it written καλεσθεῖσαν, although in the Chalcedon Council it is always written καλεσθῆναι. Regularly it should be written καλεσθῆναι. But the Ancients seem to have said καλεσθῆναι, 'tis apparent from many places in the Chalcedon Council. Valef.

And

And the Emperor commanded the Bishops to stay three or four days, and that every one should propose [questions] concerning what he had a mind to, in the presence of the Judges; and * that all things should have the two Phœnicia's, and Arabia; and the [Bishop] of Jerusalem the three Palestines [subject to his See.] And after an Interlocution of the Judges and Bishops, they confirmed [this agreement.] And at the * ninth Session Theodoret's Cause was discussed. Who had Anathematized Nestorius, in these words; Anathema to Nestorius, and to him who denies the Holy Virgin Mary to be † Yes, in the Ninth Action, the Cause of Theodoret the Bishop was judged, as our Copies show us. But the Copies of the Chalcedon Synod, which Evagrius made use of, seem to have been different from ours. For, as we have seen a little before, Evagrius reckons a Seventh Ἀξιωμα wherein other Canons were promulgated. Which Action it is at this day wanting in our Copies. Valef.

* Or, what was fitting should be done.

† In Nicephorus, instead of [stronger other things,] it is righter thus, ἵνα, with the accent in the last syllable save one; understand, Considers, Session, or Convention. I wonder, that neither Maximus nor Christophorus perceived this. Valef.

Theotocos, and to him who divides the One Only-begotten Son into two Sons: moreover, I have subscribed to the Definition of the Faith, and to Leo's Epistle. After an Interlocution therefore made by them all, he recovered his own See. In another Session, Ibas's Cause was examined, and those things were read which had been transacted and pronounced against him; the Judges whereof were Photius Bishop of Tyre, and Eustathius Bishop of Berytus. And Sentence was deferred to the following [Session.] At the Eleventh Convention, when many of the Bishops had voted Ibas to * be restored to his Bishoprick, some * Ἐκτετακτα 39. In the Tenth Action of the Chalcedon Council, and in Nicephorus, the Proposition is wanting. But in the Florentine Manuscript, I found it written ἡ ἑσθία; which is the same as if he should have said in session, among, or, of the number of the Bishops. Valef. The Reading in Robert Stephens is ἡ ἑσθία 39.

Bishops opposed it, and said, That his Accusers were without, and they requested that they might be ordered to come in. Those things therefore were read which had been transacted against Ibas. And when the Judge by an Interlocution had given order, that the Acts at Ephesus against Ibas should be read; the Bishops said, that all things which had been done, at the Second Ephesine Synod, were void and null; except only the Ordination of Maximus [Bishop] of Antioch. And they made a request to the Emperor concerning this matter, that by a Law he would decree, that nothing of those things [which had been done] at Ephesus after the First Synod (over which Cyrus of blessed Memory, Prelate of Alexandria, had presided,) should be valid. And Ibas had his Bishoprick adjudged to him. At another Action, the Cause of Bassianus Bishop of Ephesus was discussed; and * was decreed,

* that as well he, as Stephanus, should be deposed, and another substituted in their room. And at another Session, the same thing was put to the Vote and confirmed. In the Thirteenth Action, the Cause Bassianus, between Eudomius [Bishop] of Nicomedia, and as Stephanus Anastasius Bishop of Nicæa was inquired into, who were at strife amongst themselves concerning their own Cities. Moreover, there was a from the Fourteenth Action, wherein the Cause * of Sabianus [the Bishop] was examined. And in fine, it of Ephesus? was determined, that the Constantinopolitan See and that in should have * precedence immediately * Or should another be placed. Bishop should be made; as may be seen in the Eleventh and Twelfth Ἀξιωμα. This place of Evagrius therefore is to be made good thus; ἡ ἑσθία ἡ ἐκτετακτα, that as well he as Stephanus should be ejected, or deposed, and another substituted in their room. Valef.

Instead of Bassianus, it must be made Sabinianus from the Acts of the Chalcedon Council. Of this Sabinianus Bishop of the Perrenses (which is a City in the Euphratesian Province) Liberatus makes mention, in the twelfth chapter of his Breviarium. Also, there is an Epistle of Theodoret's extant, written to this Sabinianus, which is reckoned the 126th amongst his Epistles. Valef.

THE THIRD BOOK
OF THE Ecclesiastical History

OF

EVAGRIUS SCHOLASTICUS EPIPHANIENSIS,

And [one] of the EX-PRÆFECTS.

CHAP. I.

Concerning Zeno's Empire, and concerning his Life.

* Viz. Lco
the second;
See book
2, ch. 17.

BUT Zeno, after the death of his own * Son, was invested with the sole Administration of the Empire; supposing as it were that he could not be possessor of the Dominion of the whole World, unless with [an uncountrollable] Liberty he might prosecute all manner of pleasures which occurred; at his first entrance he yielded himself so wholly up to the attempts

<sup>a</sup> In the most excellent Florentine MS. at this place some Learned Scholiast had set these words; αὐτὸς ὁ Πῦρ ὁμοιωμένης, Oh, the likeness to what it is now! Vale!

* Or, was conversant.

these things in darkness and obscurity: but [to] perpetrate them [to] openly and in the sight of all [was in his judgment] Royal and becoming only an Emperour. But, his Sentiments [in this matter] were ill <sup>a</sup> & absolutely servile. <sup>b</sup> For an Emperour is not taken notice of for this, because he rules over others, but on this account, in regard in the first place he governeth and moderateth himself, permitting nothing that is extravagant or ill <sup>c</sup> to creep into himself: But continues <sup>d</sup> so impregnable against intemperance, that [he may seem to

* Or, like those of slaves.

b<sup>o</sup> On the
the Kings Tellerian, and Florentine

MSS. and in Stephens's Edit. the Adverb ἔν is wanting, which Learned Men had put in by conjecture, unhappily enough. But, I doubt not but it should be written, ἐν τῇ πόλει, &c. and have read it accordingly. Valef.
 * In stead of [εἰσέλθου εἰς τὴν entrance,] in my judgment it ought to be εἰσέλθουσιν, to creep into: and this Reading is confirmed by Nicéphorus, book 16 chap. 1. Valef.

2. Οἶπτος ἐνὶ ἀνάλλῃ, &c. I assent to the Learned, who have long since mended it thus, οἶπτος ἐνὶ ἀνάλλῃ, &c. But continues: so impregnable &c. although the Manuscript Copies vary not here. But Necphorus, when he perceived this place to be corrupted, interpolated it after this manner: κρητύθη ἀνάλλῃ, &c. whence he continues so impregnable. &c. Vales.

be ] a living Image of Virtues, instructing his Subjects to an imitation [ of Himself. ] But he who has prostituted himself to pleasures, by degrees is imprudently made the vilest of Servants, and becomes a Captive not redeemable, * frequently changing his Masters, like the unusefullest sort of Slaves. For innumerable pleasures are made his Mistresses, which can never have an end of their Train and Coherence, and of their succeeding one another : the pleasure which is at hand never stopping, but becomes the Incentive and Preface of another ; till such time as any Person, * really and truly made an Emperour [ over himself, ] can expel that turbulent and tumultuous government of pleasures, reigning in future, and not oppress with Tyranny : otherwise, continuing a Slave to his last breath, he must possess the infernal Pit.

it should be, ὅτως γνήσιον, really and truly made, &c. and to the Reading is in Nicephorus. Valef.

CHAPTER II.

Concerning the Incursions of the Barbarians both in the East, and in the West.

Such a Person was Zeno at the beginning [ of his Government, ] * a Man of an intemperate, <sup>Excessive</sup> and dissolute life. But those who were his Sub- <sup>jects</sup> <sup>& disc.</sup> Christopherson understood not this Phrase, as 'tis apparent from his Version. For he has rendered it thus; Ad hunc modum Zeno in initio imperii sui vitam instituit. After this manner Zeno at the beginning of his Empire ordered his life. Graciani take ἐκαστὸν for Blas, for a difficult and intemperate life. These words take frequently our sense in Dion Cocceianus and others. Hence ἐκαστὸν is taken for Luxury and Delights, as Saïdas attests. Further, the Greeks took Diffolute and Luxurious Persons thus, because they are wont to observe no rule of living. So Dionysius Halicarnassensis in his fifth book speaking of a just King, says these words, καὶ ἐκαστὸν αὐτοῦ &c. ἡσυχῶ. Not at all receding from the Instructions of his Ancestors. Nicephorus therefore has rightly expressed this place of Evagrius thus; ἀποβῆκεν τὴν αὐτοῦ &c. ἡ τὸν βίον κατὰ τὸν ἐκαστὸν &c. an incomplete and disorderly Person, and most extravagantly dissolute in his life. Valde.

jects.

* Or, as well as the Eastern as Western parts, underwent most severe mischiefs and afflictions: on this side the † Saracens ruined all things: on that, a multitude of the Hunni, heretofore termed the Massagetae, made incursions into Thracia, and passed the Danube no body making a resistance against them; Zeno himself also in a Barbarick manner <sup>b</sup> by force took away [ from the Provincials ] what [ the Barbarians ] had left.

† Zeno's demerits ad Barbaricum morem violento atrepto, Zeno being from thenceforth violently hurried away to a Barbarick disposition. But Chrysostom translates it in this manner: Zeno vero reliquit imperii partibus per vim barbaro quadam more ac modo spoliatas. But Zeno in the other parts of the Empire also by force committed spoils in a certain barbarous fashion and manner. But had they consulted Nicephorus, they might have had a right understanding of this place from him. For Nicephorus has explained these words of Evagrius thus: *ὅτι δὲ τέρως ῥησάμενος, ἑλὼν αὐτὸς πλεὶς ἀφῆκεν, ὥς ἂν αἱ βαρβαρὶκοὶ εὐνοίῃ; that is, But whatever had been left by them [ the Barbarians ] was forcibly taken away by Zeno, who in [ the Provincials ] on a less rate than the Barbarians. Further, in the Floruerunt and Telerian MSS. instead of αὐτὸς πλεὶς ἀφῆκεν, in the Plural number, which seems to me more elegant. Valef.*

CHAP. III.

Concerning Basiliscus's Tyranny, and Zeno's Flight.

BUT when Basiliscus Verina's Brother made an Insurrection against him, (For even his own Relations were enemies to Zeno, all Persons equally abominating his debauch'd Life;) he had not so much as a thought in him that was manly and courageous: (For wickedness is a cowardly thing, which breed desperation and despondency, and gives a sufficient indication of an unmanliness of mind, from its being vanquished by pleasures;) but flies with all the haste imaginable, and without a Battel yields so great an Empire to Basiliscus. He endured also a tedious <sup>a</sup> Siege <sup>b</sup> in the Country of the Maurem, where he himself had been born, having his Wife Ariadne with him, (who after [ her Husband's flight ] had left her Mother,) and as many of his Friends as had continued faithful to him. Basiliscus therefore having thus encircled himself with the Crown of the Romans, and proclaimed his Son Marcus Caesar, took a contrary course, both to Zeno, and to those who had been Emperours before [ Zeno. ]

<sup>a</sup> Zeno has a tedious <sup>a</sup> Siege <sup>b</sup> in the Country of the Maurem, where he himself had been born, having his Wife Ariadne with him, (who after [ her Husband's flight ] had left her Mother,) and as many of his Friends as had continued faithful to him. Basiliscus therefore having thus encircled himself with the Crown of the Romans, and proclaimed his Son Marcus Caesar, took a contrary course, both to Zeno, and to those who had been Emperours before [ Zeno. ]

† Zeno had a tedious <sup>a</sup> Siege <sup>b</sup> in the Country of the Maurem, where he himself had been born, having his Wife Ariadne with him, (who after [ her Husband's flight ] had left her Mother,) and as many of his Friends as had continued faithful to him. Basiliscus therefore having thus encircled himself with the Crown of the Romans, and proclaimed his Son Marcus Caesar, took a contrary course, both to Zeno, and to those who had been Emperours before [ Zeno. ]

† Zeno had a tedious <sup>a</sup> Siege <sup>b</sup> in the Country of the Maurem, where he himself had been born, having his Wife Ariadne with him, (who after [ her Husband's flight ] had left her Mother,) and as many of his Friends as had continued faithful to him. Basiliscus therefore having thus encircled himself with the Crown of the Romans, and proclaimed his Son Marcus Caesar, took a contrary course, both to Zeno, and to those who had been Emperours before [ Zeno. ]

† Zeno had a tedious <sup>a</sup> Siege <sup>b</sup> in the Country of the Maurem, where he himself had been born, having his Wife Ariadne with him, (who after [ her Husband's flight ] had left her Mother,) and as many of his Friends as had continued faithful to him. Basiliscus therefore having thus encircled himself with the Crown of the Romans, and proclaimed his Son Marcus Caesar, took a contrary course, both to Zeno, and to those who had been Emperours before [ Zeno. ]

† Zeno had a tedious <sup>a</sup> Siege <sup>b</sup> in the Country of the Maurem, where he himself had been born, having his Wife Ariadne with him, (who after [ her Husband's flight ] had left her Mother,) and as many of his Friends as had continued faithful to him. Basiliscus therefore having thus encircled himself with the Crown of the Romans, and proclaimed his Son Marcus Caesar, took a contrary course, both to Zeno, and to those who had been Emperours before [ Zeno. ]

CHAP. IV.

That Basiliscus recalled Timotheus Aelurus; and, induced thereto by him, sent his Circular Letters to all places, in order to the <sup>a</sup> abrogating of the Chalcedon Synod. <sup>b</sup> Rejection, or, abolishing.

INDUCED thereto <sup>a</sup> by an Embassy of some Persons [ sent to him ] from Alexandria, he recalls Timotheus from Exile, (who had been banished eighteen years;) Acacius [ at that time ] administering the Bishoprick of Constantinople. When therefore Timotheus arrived at the Imperial City, he persuades Basiliscus to send his Circular Letters to the Prelates in all places, and to Anathematize what had been done at Chalcedon, and Leo's Book. The contents of the Circular Letters run thus, <sup>b</sup> Embassies, therefore, which they sent may seem a small and trivial Emendation, is yet altogether necessary. In Nicephorus, his dis to us, or, therefore, Valef.

† Or, To make use of his Circular Syllables.

† Or, Compose of which Letters say these words.

BASILISCUS'S CIRCULAR LETTER.

Emperour Caesar Basiliscus, Pius, Victor, Triumphator, Maximus, always Adorable, Augustus: and Marcus the most Noble Caesar, to Timotheus the most Reverend and <sup>a</sup> most Pious Archbishop of the Great City Alexandria. <sup>b</sup> Or, God-loving.

Whatever Laws the most Pious Emperours our Predecessors have made in defence of the true and Orthodox Faith, whosoever [ of them ] have persisted truly to worship the Blessed, Immortal, and vivisick Trinity; Our Will is, That those Laws, in regard they have always been salutary to the whole World, should at no time be abrogated, and made void: but rather, We promise those Laws as our own. But We, who give Pity and a Zeal for God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ, who hath made Us and advanced us to Glory, a preference before [ all care and sollicitude ] about Humane affairs; and moreover, who believe, that the <sup>a</sup> Concord of Christ's Flocks is the <sup>b</sup> safe-<sup>c</sup> Or, Conty of the Flocks themselves, and of every Subject, Junction, and is the firm and solid Foundation, and immovable Wall of our Empire; being [ on this account ] <sup>d</sup> Or, Saldeservedly moved with a divine zeal of mind, and offering to God and our Saviour Jesus Christ the <sup>e</sup> Or, From uniting together of the holy Church, as the Firstfruits of our Empire, do Enact, That the <sup>f</sup> Basis <sup>g</sup> Or, and Foundation of Humane Felicity, that is the Ground Creed of the Three hundred and eighteen Ho-maments by Fathers heretofore convened at Nicea <sup>h</sup> † by † Or, To the Instinct of the Holy Ghost ( unto which gather [ Creed ] We and all our Ancestors, after with the our Belief thereof, have been baptized, ) shall Holy Spi-only be made use of, and obtain in all God's <sup>i</sup> Or, Hold most Holy Churches [ and in the Assemblies <sup>j</sup> oblige, of ] the Orthodox People; in regard that only <sup>k</sup> † And, <sup>l</sup> † the is the Definition of the true and sincere Faith, Orthodox and is sufficient both for the destruction of any <sup>m</sup> People in Heresie of what sort soever, and also for the <sup>n</sup> all God's compleat and perfect uniting of God's Holy Churches. <sup>o</sup> most holy † So, that those things also shall retain <sup>p</sup> Churches.

their own Strength and Validity; which have been done in this Imperial City by the Hundred and fifty Holy Fathers, in confirmation of the same divine Creed, against them who have uttered Blasphemies against the Holy Ghost: and moreover, all those things which have been done in the Metropolis of the Ephelians, against the Impious Nestorius, and those who * since that have embraced his Sentiments. But We Decree, That those things which have broke the Concord and good Order of God's Holy Churches, and the Peace of the whole World, to wit, that termed Neo's Tome, and all things which in the definition of the Faith at Chalcedon, or in the Exposition of the Creeds, have been spoken or done, on account either of Interpretation or Doctrine, or Disputation, in order to the Innovation, of the forementioned Holy Creed of the Three hundred and eighteen Holy Fathers, shall be Anathematized both here, and every where else, throughout every Church, by the most Holy Bishops in all places, and shall be committed to the flames by whomsoever they shall be found. For thus the Emperours of Pious and Blessed Memory [who lived] before Us, to wit,

* There is indeed ex-decreed concerning all Heretical Opinions. Betant a Constitution of the Emperour Constantine's, wherein the Dogmatical Book of Arius, are ordered to be burnt; which Constitution occurs at page 221. of our Socrates. Nevertheless, the Emperour Basiliscus seems here to mean another Law, which had been promulged by Constantine against all Heretics in general. But that Law hath perished by the injury of time. Yet part of it is still remaining in Eusebius, in the Third Book of his Life of Constantine, chap. 64, and 66. But, there are two Constitutions extant of Theodosius Junior's, concerning the Burning of Nestorius's Books. The former of which makes mention of the Law of Constantine of Blessed Memory, against Arius's impious Books. Further, these Constitutions, of Theodosius occur in the third part of the Ephesine Council. Basiliscus had subjoined these Laws of Theodosius to his own Circular Edict, as 'tis hereafter attested. Valef.

ing therefore after this manner abrogated, let them be wholly cast out of the one and only Catholick and Apostolick Orthodox Church; in regard they alter the eternal and salutary * Terms of the 318 Holy Fathers, and those of the [150] Blessed Fathers, who † have published express Declarations [concerning] the Holy Ghost.

* Or, Limit.

† Or, Have made Sanctions [concerning] the, &c.

* Κατά τὴν ἐπίνοιαν. At this place Nicephorus has rightly added two words, in this manner;

ὅτι καὶ τὴν ἐπίνοιαν. But I affirm that a third word is to be added, thus; ὅτι καὶ τὴν ἐπίνοιαν. For the word [ἐπίνοιαν, terms] is understood; which occurs in the foregoing Clauses.

Valef.

tions made at Chalcedon, against the Divine Creed, [We Decree] that their Heresy shall be Anathematized, who deny that the Only-begotten Son of God was really and truly incarnate and made man by the Holy Ghost, and of the Holy and ever-Virgin Mary the Theotocos, but in a false and monstrous manner assert [that he took Flesh]

* Or, Out

of.

either * from Heaven, or imaginarily and in shew only and appearance; in fine, every Heresy, and if there hath been any other Innovation made, at what time soever, in whatever manner, or place of the whole World, either in sense and meaning, or in words, [framed] in order to a transgressing the said Divine Creed. But in regard 'tis the property of an Imperial providence, by a foreseeing consideration and inspection liberally to distribute security to his Subjects, not only at the present, but for the future also; We Decree that the most Holy Bishops in all places shall subscribe to this Our Divine Circular Letter when * exhibited Or, then to them, and shall plainly declare, that they adhere Or, decidedly to the Divine Creed of the Three hundred and eighteen Holy Fathers, which the Hundred and fifty Holy Fathers have since confirmed; in such manner as those most Holy Fathers afterwards convened at the Metropolis of the Ephelians have definitively Decreed, to wit, a That we ought only to follow the Divine Creed of the Three hundred and eighteen Holy Fathers; in regard it is the Boundary and Limit of the Faith: Anathematizing what ever hath at Chalcedon been made the stumbling-block of the Orthodox Laity, and wholly ejection it out of the Churches, as being become the impediment of the universal and our own [private] felicity. But whatsoever after these our Divine Syllables (which, we believe, are promulged agreeable to [the mind of] God, in regard they procure an Union to God's Holy Churches, whilst-for and desired by all men;) shall at any time attempt to produce, or so much as to name, either by way of dispute, or in their teaching, or writing, at what time, in what manner or place soever, the Innovation which hath been made at Chalcedon against the Faith; our Command is, That such Persons as these (in regard they are the occasioners of Disquietude and Tumult to all God's Holy Churches, and to every one of our Subjects, and are enemies to God and to our safety, according to those Laws promulged long before our time by Theodosius of Blessed and Divine Memory, against this manner of * impro-bity, which [Laws] we have subjoined to this tolerance.

Our Divine Circular Letter; ) if they be Bishops or Clergymen, shall be deposed: but if Monks, or Laicks they † shall be liable to Banishment, to a † Or, Shall fall under Confiscation of all their Goods, and to the extraneous punishments. For thus the Holy and Consubstantial Trinity (at all times adored by our Piety,) the Framers and Envisagers of all things, being by Us now also worshipped, by an abolition of the forementioned || Darnel, and a † Or, Thus confirmation of the true and Apostolick Traditions of the Holy Creed, and rendered propitious and candid, both to Our Soul, and to every of Our Subjects; will ever in future together with Us Govern Humane Affairs, and render them composed and peaceable.

C H A P. V.

Concerning those Persons who consented to Basiliscus's Circular Letters, and rejected the Synod [of Chalcedon.]

AS therefore 'tis related by Zacharias the Rhetorician, Timotheus, newly returned from Exile (as I have said,) gave his consent to these Circular Letters: as did likewise Peter Bishop of Antioch, surnamed * Fullo, who together with Timotheus was present at the Imperial [City Constantinople.] These things having been performed in this manner, † they vote † Seeth d. cote (x.)
that Paulus also should recover the Archiepiscopal Chair of Ephesus. Further, [the same Zacharias] affirms, that Anastasius, who had succeeded

* Or, διὰ πάσης, &c. In Nicephorus 'tis truly written thus, ἐν αὐτῇ πόλει, &c. that we ought only to follow, &c. which Reading Christopher and Sir Henry Savil have embraced. A little after this, where the Reading before was, ὁ δὲ ἁγὸς πνεῦμα, the Boundary and Limit of the Faith; from the Florent. and Telerian MSS. I have made it, ὁ δὲ ἁγὸς πνεῦμα, in regard it is &c. art in Nicephorus. Valef.

† ἢ, ἀποκαθίστην, & ἡγουμένον. In the Telerian MSS. in Nicephorus, I found it written, ἢ ἀποκαθίστην, of the minister, &c. Valef.

ceeded Juvenalis [in the See] of Jerusalem, subscribed the same Circular Letters, as likewise very many others: inſomuch that they were in number about Five hundred, who condemned Leo's * Letter, and the Chalcedon Synod. [The ſame Author] * does alſo ſome where record the Supplicatory Libel preſented by the Biſhops of Aſia <sup>b</sup> convened at Ephesus, to Baſiliſcus; part of the Contents of which [Libel] run thus.

number about five hundred, who conſtitute Leo's * Letter, and the Chalcedon Synod. [The ſame Author] * does alſo ſome where record
 the ſynodical Libel preſented by the Biſhops of Aſia<sup>8</sup> convened at Ephesus<sup>9</sup> to Baſilius;
 it muſt be part of the Contents of which [Libel] run thus.
 made by does record; which I admire Tranſlators perceived not. Z<sup>a</sup> clarus is underſtood, who in his Ecceſiaſtical Hiſtory had recorded this Libel entire, which the Biſhops of Aſia, convened at Ephesus, ſent to the Emperour Baſilius. Valet.

to the Emperor Basiliscus, Baronius in his Annals, at the year of Christ 1076, writes very slightly and negligently: remarking this, that it was celebrated by the Eutychians. But he mentions neither upon what account it was assembled, nor what was transacted therein: it is our office therefore, by our care and diligence to supply what he has omitted. After the Circular Letters sent forth by the Emperor Basiliscus against the Chalcedon Council, Acacius Bishop of Constantinople, the only person of the Patriarchs subject to the Eastern Empire, refused subscribing to these Letters, nor the Constantinopolitans to expunge the Chalcedon Synod out of the Ecumenical Tables. Moreover, the Monks of Constantinople and the clergy opposed Basiliscus. Lastly, the Confabulate threatening to fire the City and the Palace, if the Emperor should permit to put a force upon Acacius and the Catholics. Basiliscus, terrified heretofore, flies from the Imperial City; took from the Constantinopolitan Church their Rights and Privileges, and forbade the Senators to speak to [or salute] Acacius. But afterwards, when he heard that Zeno was on his return out of Isauria; being terrified with fear, he came into the Church together with his wife and children; and excusing himself to Acacius and the Clergy of the Imperial City, restored their Rights to the Constantinopolitan Church, and set forth his Anti-Circular [that is Letters sent against the Circular Letters]. Thus Theodorus Lector informs us, Book 1. The European therefore, thus Theodorus Lector contend with so much force for the confirmation of the Chalcedon Synod; and that not only the Monasteries, but the people also of the Imperial City, and other Pilgrims were there, were excited by Acacius against Basiliscus convened a Council of Bishops of their own party in the City Ephebus in which Council they condemned and deposed both Acacius, and some other Bishops who embraced the same Sentiments with him; and then they treated the Emperor Basiliscus, that he would permit in this former opinion, and would not promulge a Constitution Contrary to his own Circular Letters. In the same Synod, Paulus is ordained Bishop of Ephebus by the Bishops of the same Province, and the Patriarchal privilege is restored to the Ephebus Sen, as our Basiliensis relates in the sixth chapter of his behaviors. Further, this Ephebus Synod was held on the 15th of the month of August, in the year of Christ 477, after the Confabulate was assembled a little before Basiliscus promulged his Anti-Circular Letters. Now Basiliscus published those Letters on that year I have mentioned; when he understood that Zeno was returning out of Isauria with an Army; as I have observed above out of Theodorus Lector. Indeed, the Asian Bishops seem to intimate this in their Letter to Basiliscus, in these words: ἡμῶν τὸ ἔργον ὡς τὸ θεῖον καὶ τὸ ἀποστολικὸν ἐκκαλεσθέντων συνελθόντες, Be pleased therefore to publish nothing contrary to your Divine Circular Letters. Moreover, Theodorus Alarus seems to have predated at this Council. True to Ephebus in the Reign of Basiliscus, and Acacius sent Paulus in the Imperial Chapel, as Evagrius relates from his behaviors. Nor is it likely, that any Patriarch of Constantinople should have been deposed by any other person, than the Alexandrian Bishop, who held the dignity of a Patriarch equal to Acacius. For who can believe that the Constantinopolitan Bishop was deposed by the Bishops of Asia, who long before this, [from the times of Felix Chrysostom], were subject to the Bishops of Constantinople? Vain!

To the most Pious in all things, and the Lovers of Christ, our Lords Basiliscus and Marcus, perpetual Victors, * Augusti. And after some words. You have always seem'd (Most pious and Christ-Loving Emperours!) to be divers ways assaulted, together with the Faith which is hated and oppos'd. And after other words.

as Marcellinus relates in his Chronicon, Theophanes, and others. 'This certain, in Basilijus's Circular Letters he is only termed the most noble Cæsar. But afterwards he was styled Augustus by his Father, as this Letter of the Bishops of the Ephesine Council doth inform us. Also, in the Anti Circular Letter of Basilijus, the same Marcus is named Emperor with his Father. The Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle is mistaken therefore, who relates that Basilijus, as soon as he was proclaimed Emperor, crowned his Son Marcus Emperor. Candidus is yet truer, in the second book of his History, in Photius. Valer.

A certain terrible expectation of Judgment; and an * Ardour of Divine Fire, and the Just * Ζῆλος, & a * Refinement of Your Serenity, will in a short or, a part of time || Seize the Adversaries; who <sup>a</sup> with a certain arrogant folly, as it were with Darts, at-tempt to make an attack against the powerful Lion, or God and your Empire fortified by the [true] Faith; nor do they in any manner spare our Tenacity: but continually assault us with reproaches and lies as if by a necessity and a force we had subscribed to your Divine and Apostolical Circular Letters: whereas we have set our hands thereto with all imaginable joy and alacrity of mind. And after some other words, Be pleased therefore to publish nothing contrary to your Divine Circular Letters; knowing for certain what we have already said, that the whole world will be overturned again, and that the mischiefs done by the Synod at Chalcedon will be found small and trivial, which [yet] have effected these innumerable murders, and have unjustly and illegally poured forth the blood of the Orthodox.

And after other words, We protest before our Saviour Jesus Christ, *We entreat Your piety *Εὐχόμεθα to be free from that just Canonical and Ecclesiastical ἀποτίξις afflict *condemnation and deposition inflicted on unworthy them, and especially [from that inflicted] on οὗτον him, who by many [evidences] has been de-ἀποτίσθαι fined not to have governed the Bishoprick of this read Imperial [City] holily. ἡμεῖς contrary to the Faith and Authority of all Copies, and without any sentence. Besides, he has rendered the following words very badly. Whence it happened, that Baroniſius, who every where follows Christopherſton's Version, could in no wise understand the translators of this Epistolic Council. So great a hindrance is an ill Rendition. Nor had Joban-nes Langus translated this Clause more happily. For he hath rendered it thus: Attestamus coram Salvatore Noſtro Jēſu Chriſto, &c. We attest before our Saviour Jēſu Chriſt, that your piety is free and innocent.
From which we request, that a Just and Canonical and Ecclesiastic Sentence of Condemnation and Deposition may be pronounced against them, and especially against him who hath been many ways found out to have admitted the Bishoprick in the Imperial City impiously.
But the Bishops of Asia do not say this; but request of the Emperour, Basiliscus and Marcus, that they would not communicate any more with Acacius and the other Bishops, whom they themselves had condemned and depozed by an Ecclesiastical Sentence: For this is the import of these words, ἐκδοῦναι τὸν διάκονον τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἐκ τῆς λειτουργίας, &c.; which are to be written in one entire Clause, without any distinction. But Translators, following Nicephorus, and the Edition of Robert Stephens, have placed a distinction after the πρὶν, which led them into a mistake. Vale.

* In this Edition of Valesius's, 'tis ῥηλατῆρας, abuse: it is, I suppose, an error of the Press, put instead of ῥηλατῆρας, condemnation: which is the reading in Stephens's Edition.

[Further] the same Zacharias writes word for word thus. As soon as the Circular and Imperial Letters were published, those persons in the Imperial [City] who were disordered with Οἱ τῆς Εὐτυχῆς Ὀpinion and followed a Monastick life, ἐβύλινξε φαν' ἄσπιν

weſſes. Translators underſtood not theſe words of Zacharias Rector. Nor does Nicephorus ſeem to have underſtood them. For, inſtead of them, he has ſubſtituted theſe; ἡ τοῦ αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἐστὶν εἰκασία, ἀλλὰ φαντασία one who imagine / or fancy. Eusebius's Text: By ἁποφάνει [Phantasia], or Imaginatio]. Zacharias meant the opinion of Eusebius, who asserted, that the flesh of Christ was not true nor consubstantial with us, but Phantasia or imaginary; as may be seen in the Acts of the Chalcedon Council. Hence the Epistles of Avitus Bishop of Vienna, wherein he confutes Eusebius's Error, have this Title, Contra Phantasma, against the Phantasm; as Sirmundus attests. Further, from this place it may be gathered that Zacharias Rector was not an Eusebian, as Baronius thought at the year of Christ 476. For he would never have exprest himself thus, had he been a follower of Eusebius's Sect. It muſt therefore either be said, that theſe are not the words of Zacharias Rector, (which notwithstanding Evagrius affirms) or elſe, that he was not an Eusebian:ſiſt. See chap. 14. Valessupposing they had met with Timotheus as with some unexpected gain, and hoping to reap a great advantage to themselves from the Circular Letters, in great haste betook themselves to Timotheus. And when they had been convinced by him, that the Word of God was of the same substance with us according to the flesh, but Confubstantial to the Father in relation to the Deity, they went back [to their own homes.]

CHAP. VI.

That Timotheus Ælurus recovered the [Bishoprick] of Alexandria, and having restored the privilege of a Patriarchate to the [Church] of Ephesus, Anathematized the Chalcedon-Synod.

THE same [Zacharias] says, that Timotheus leaving the Imperial [City Constantinople,] arrived at Ephesus, and [there] * placed <sup>a</sup> Paulus in the Archi-Episcopal See of the Ephesians. This [Paulus] had long before this been ordained by the Bishops of that Province, <sup>b</sup> agreeable to the more ancient usage: but had been ejected out of his See. Timotheus also restored to the Ephesine Church the <sup>c</sup> Patriarchal privilege, which the Synod of Chalcedon had deprived it of, as I have said. Removing from thence, he comes to Alexandria, and persisted to request those who came to him, to Anathematize the Synod of Chalcedon. Nevertheless, many others of his own Faction receded from him (as 'tis related by the same Zacharias,) as did likewise Theodotus one of those that had been ordained at Rome.

* O, Sea placed <sup>2</sup> Paulus in the Archi-Episcopal See of the Ephefians. This [Paulus] had long before this been ordained by the Bifhops of that ebe(Chain) Province, <sup>3</sup> agreeable to the more ancient ufe: but had been ejected out of his See. Timotheus alfo reftored to the Ephefine Church the <sup>4</sup> Patriarchal privilege, which the Synod of Chalcedon had deprived it of, as I have faid. Removing from thence, he comes to Alexandria, and perfifted to requelt thofe who came to him, to Anathematize the Synod of Chalcedon. Nevertheless, many others of his own Faction receded from him (as 'tis related by the fame Zacharias,) as did likewife Theodotus one of thofe that had been ordained at Joppa by * Theodofius, who was made Bifhop of Jerufalem by fome perfons, at fuch time as Juvenalis went to Conftantinople.

* See book 4, chap. 5.

Paulus should be referred to the See of Ephesus, out of which he had been ejected. For these are Evagrius's words of the fifth chapter of this book, ἡμεῖς οὐτως ἐπαινοῦντες τὴν ἐκείνου ἀρχιεπισκοπὴν ὑποβιβάζομεν, Sed non Vult tunc Paulus alibi [should] recover the Archiepiscopical Chair of Ephesus. Which place Cyprianos has not rendered truly, in this manner; Huius rebus ita confiteor Paulus ad sedem Archiepiscopatus Ephesiani capessendam delinquit, These things having been thus construed, Paulus is chosen to take the Archiepiscopal See of Ephesus. For Paninus was not elected by Aelurus and Ferrus Fullo at Constantinople, that he should take the Ephesine-See; but having been expelled out of the See of Ephesus, he came to Constantinople: where a Council of Eutychianists being convened, it was Decreed that he should recover the Archepiscopate of the City Ephesus. In the fifth chapter of this book, the reading in the vulgar Editions was, ἐπελθὼν Σεβαστο, Come into the Chair. But from the Florentine and Tellurian M.SS. I have mended it, ἐπιελθὼν εἰς τὸν θρόνον. Yet I had rather add a preposition, and write it thus, ἐπιελθὼν restitu to, recover, &c. re. enter upon. Vale!

Ἄνδρες τὸ ἀρχαιότατον συνέλευται. I had rather make it ἀνδρες, &c. agreeable to Ec. Further, what Λαβανος says here is mostly true, to wit, that it was the ancient usage, that the Bishop of Ephesus should be ordained by the Bishops of his own Province. For, from St. Timothy who was the first Bishop of the Ephesians, until Cassianus, and Heraclides, whom John Chrysostom ordained, all the Bishops of the Ephesians were ordained in the same City by the Bishops of that Province, as it appears from the Eleventh Action of the Cræcedon Council, Valef.

For Zacharias does here call the Patriarchal privilege the Right of Primacy, or the privilege of Ordaining Metropolitans. For in this the Patriarchal privilege did properly consist, as I have observed in my Little Book concerning the interpretation of the Sixth Canon of the Nicene Council, which is published at the close of Our Sacraes. Now whereas Zacharias, or rather Eugarius, adds, that this privilege had been taken away from the See of Ephesus by the Council Synod; he means the Sixteenth Action of the Chalcedon Synod; wherein it was Decreed, that the Constantinopolitan Bishops should Ordain Metropolitans in the Asian Diocesis. Vale.

CHAP. VII.

That the Monks having raised a Sedition by the persuasion of Acacius, Basiliscus was put into a fear, and wrote and promulged Circular Letters contrary to those he had published before.

[T]HE same Zacharias relates likewise; that Aecius Bishop of Constantinople was extremely troubled at that he incited the Monks and Populacy of the Imperial [City] against Basiliscus, as being an Heretic. And, that Basiliscus, at length * renounced his Circular Letters, and wrote a Constitution, that what had been surreptitiously [and rashly] done, should be wholly vacated and made null; and, that he sent abroad Letters contrary to his former Circular Letters, wherein he confirmed the Synod at Chalcedon. And these Anti-Circular-Letters (as he terms them,) Zacharias has omitted, who hath written his whole History with partiality and in favour to his own party. But the Contents of them run word for word thus.

Bafiliscus's Anti-Circular-Letter.

Emperours, Cæsars, Basiliscus and Marcus. We Decree, that the Apostolick and Orthodox Faith (which originally and from the beginning hath flourished in the Catholick Churches, which hath obtained even until our Empire, which doth now obtain under our Empire, and which ought forever to obtain, into which we have been baptized, and which we believe) shall only continue inviolate and unshaken, and shall for ever be prevalent in all the Catholick and Apostolick Churches of the Orthodox; and, that nothing else shall be required. For this reason therefore We command, that all things which have been done on account of the faith or Ecclesiastick <sup>a</sup> Discipline under our Empire, whether they be Circular Letters, or other [Letters,] or what ever else, shall be void and null: Nestorius and Eutyches, and every other Hereſie, and all those who embrace the same Sentiments with them, being Anathematized. And [tis our will,] that concerning this Subject, neither any Synod should be convened, nor any other question [started:] but, that these things should continue firm and unshaken. Moreover, [We command,] <sup>b</sup> that those Provinces (the Ordination whereof the Chair of this Imperial and Glorious City hath had) shall be restored to the most pious and most Holy Patriarch and Archbishop Acacius: to wit, the most pious Bishops [that now are, continuing in their own Sees; [yet that] after their deaths on prejudice from this business may arise to the Right of Ordination [belonging to] the Holy Chair of this Imperial and famous City. Now, * it is dubious to no person, that this our Divine Decree has the force of a Divine Constitution. And these things proceeded in this manner.

<sup>a</sup> Or, Constitution.

<sup>b</sup> When by the Emperour Basiliscus's Circular Letter, the Cathedral Synod had been wholly suppressed, the privileges of the Constantinian See which had blished in that Council, seemed to have been taken away by that same Sanction. By which thing Acacius was chiefly moved, and used his utmost endeavour, that the Emperor Basiliscus should revoke the same Constitution. Besides, in the Ephesine Synod, the Patriarchal privilege had been restored to the See of Ephesus by Timotheus Archbishop of the

* Or, It has been dubious.

we have seen before. Which having been done, the Asian Diocesis, the ordinations whereof had been given to the Bishop of Constantinople by the Decree of the Chalcedon Synod, was taken away from that See. There was therefore need of a new Constitution, whereby its Rights and Privileges might be restored to the Constantinopolitan See. This therefore the Emperor Basiliscus now performs, by the publication of these his Anti-Circular Letters. Theodorus Lecter does likewise attack the same, in his first Book Collegian, about the close thereof. Valef.

CHAP. VIII.

Concerning Zeno's Return.

BUT Zeno having (as 'tis reported) [seen in his sleep] the Holy Proto-Martyr Thecla, famous for her many Conflicts, who incited him, and made him a promise that his Empire should be restored to him; marched his Army towards Byzantium. And having with gifts, corrupted those who besieged him, he drives out Basiliscus who had held the Empire two years; and delivers him to the enemy after he had made his escape to the Holy Rails [of the Altar.] On this account Zeno dedicated a spacious Church, eminent for its **splendideus* beauty, to the Proto-Martyr Thecla, at Seleucia situate in the Country of Isauria, and beautified it with many and Imperial Sacred gifts; which are preserved till these our times. Further, Basiliscus is sent into the Region of the Cappadocians, † in order to his being put to death: but he is slain in that Station named **Acusis*, together with his wife and children. And Zeno makes a Law, which abrogates what had been constituted by the Tyrant Basiliscus in his Circular Letters. Then also Petrus surnamed Fullo is driven from the Church of the Antiochians; and Paulus from that of the Ephestians.

Hilary, and Candidus Isaurus in the second book of his Histories, both which Authors relate, that Basiliscus was killed by the sword. But the other Historians tell us, that he dyed by hunger and cold, together with his wife and children. This disagreement of Writers in reference to Basiliscus's death, is taken notice of by Theophanes in his Chronicon, page 107. Valef.

So also the name of this Station is written in Nicetianus. But Cedrenus and Theophanes term it Cuesis. Marcellinus and the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle call it Leminis and Linnis, a Castrum [or, Castle] of Cappadocia, into which Basiliscus was thrust together with his wife and children; and the gate of one of the Towers, wherein he was inclosed, being stop'd up, he perished there by hunger and cold. Valef.

CHAP. IX.

That after Basiliscus's death, the Bishops of Asia, that they might appease Acacius, sent him a Penitentiary-Libel, [craving pardon] for their offence in rejecting the Synod of Chalcedon.

IN the Interim, the Bishops of Asia, in order to their appealing Acacius, excused themselves, and craved pardon, sending a Penitentiary-Libel [to him,] wherein they affirmed, that they had subscribed to the Circular-Letters by force and constraint, not voluntarily; and they swore, that the thing was so,

and that they had not believed, nor did believe otherwise than agreeable to the Synod at Chalcedon. The **purport* of their Letters is this. On, forec. The Epistle, or Petition, sent to Acacius Bishop of Constantinople, from the Bishops of Asia. To Acacius the most Holy and most Pious Patriarch of the most Holy Church at the Imperial [City] Constantinople, New Rome. And after other words. **He hath arrived amongst us and does not know what is right and sitting; who also shall fill your [seat] in his place.* And after a few words. By these Libell [or, Letters] we signify to you, that we have subscribed, and are not according to the intent of our minds, but by Henry's force and constraint, giving our consent thereto in our words and Letters, but not in heart. For by minding it [the assistance of] your acceptable intercessions, thus [together with the assent of the Deity, we believe in] such manner as we have received from those Three hundred and eighteen Luminaries of the world, nothing of and from the Hundred and fifty Holy Fathers, scilicet Nicetians, [we believe] those matters also, which, scilicet certain, have been piously and rightly determined at Chalcedon by the Holy Fathers convened there. Further, whether Zacharias the Rhetorician has calumniated these [Bishops of Asia,] or whether they themselves have lied, in averring that they subscribed involuntarily, I cannot affirm. But in the next words, which follow, it ought to be made quintus temus, your place, instead of quintus temus, our place. Johannes Langus perceived this before us, who has rendered this passage transcribed out of Evagrius thus, Reste sine ad nos vocat, qui locum etiam vestrum obinebit. He hath indeed gone rightly into us, who shall also possess your place. By which words the Bishops of Asia mean the Legate, which Acacius Bishop of Constantinople had sent to them, to wit a Presbyter or a Deacon of the Constantinopolitan Church. But if any one had rather, with Christophorus, read ep' vras, amongst you; we must understand it of the Legate which the Bishops of Asia had sent to Acacius, that he might present the Libel of satisfaction to him. And this I think is true. Valef.

Instead of [ quintus, our ] doubtless it must be [ quintus, your ] as the reading is in Nicetianus. From whom an amendment must be made a little after this, thus, eorum demerito, by dividing the words, which were erroneously made one word. Each emendation is confirmed by the Tellerian Manuscript. Valef.

CHAP. X.

Concerning those who governed the Bishoprick of Antioch.

After therefore Peter [was ejected,] Stephanus assumes the Chair of Antioch: Petrus whom the children of the Antiochians slew with Darts, scilicet harmes As as Johannes the Rhetorician has related. But Stephanus after Stephanus, the Government of that same of Antioch. See was committed to Calendion, who exci- He being ted those that came to him to Anathematize ejected Antiochians, together with Basiliscus's Circular Letters. ter three months,

Stephanus was put into his place, as Theophanes relates in his Chronicon, page 107: to which Writer agrees Gelasius in Gestis de nomine Acacii, and Liberatus in his Breviary, chap. 18. Pope Felix has mentioned the same Stephanus, in the Sentence of Condemnation which he declared against Acacius, and in the Epistle which in the name of the Roman Synod he wrote to all the Presbyters and Archimandrites in Constantinople and Bithynia. Valef.

CHAP. XI.

That the Emperour Zeno took a resolution of persecuting Ælurus: but by reason of his age he had compassion on him and let him alone. And how after Ælurus's death, Perus Mongus was ordained by the Alexandrians. But Timotheus, Proterius's successor, by the order of the Emperour, obtained the Chair of the Alexandrians.

Moreover, Zeno was resolved to have expelled Timotheus out of Alexandria: but understanding from some persons that he was now very aged, and would soon go the way of all men, he altered his resolution. And not long after [Timotheus] paid the common debt [of Nature:] whereupon those of Alexandria by their own authority elect Petrus, furnished Mongus, Bishop. Which, when it came to Zeno's hearing, disturbed him extremely. Wherefore Zeno punished Petrus with death: but he recalled Timotheus [Salophaciolus,] Proterius's successor, who then lived at Canopus on account of a Sedition raised by the people. Timotheus therefore by the Emperour's order recovered his own See.

a Or, enter the Inn, or, house of all men.
† Or, forbade.
a Oī tīc ō. λεξανδρίου ἐπισκο-
ποι, &c.
the Bishops of Alexandria elect,
&c. I had rather write ἐπι-σκοποι, &c.

writing, and to read the whole clause thus, ὁ πρεσβυτερος αὐθις αὐτοπροβουλησιν ἐποίησεν τὴν ἀρχιεπισκοπὴν ἐκείνην whereupon εἰς
τὴν ἀρχιεπισκοπὴν αὐτὴν own authority ἐλέη Petrus furnished Μονγὺς Ἰβήνας, and I am of opinion that Εὐαγγρις wrote thus. 'Tis certain, these words τὴν ἀρχιεπισκοπὴν ἐκείνην cannot be spoken of the Suffragan Ἰβήνας. Besides, Petrus Μονγὺς was ordained but by one Bishop, as it related in Gelasius de nomine Acacii, and in Acacius's Epistle to Pope Simplicius. Υαλέε.

Pope Simplicianus. I doubt not but it should be written αεσιβί-στος, punished. αεσιβίος signifies militare, to punish. Whence the Emperor's motto Punitor is, as Suidas attests. But αεσιβίος (which is the reading in Robert Stephens's Edition) signifies quite another thing. Nicephorus having found this fault in his Copy, expounded the Prepositio, and worded this place of Evagrius thus, καὶ οὗτοι ὑπομνήσαντες Σαδρατὴν ὕμνησαν ὡς τὰς that is He punished those who had elected [Petrum Monachum Bishop] with a capital punishment. And yet Evagrius does not say so. For he relates, that Monachus himself was condemned by Zeno, not the Bishops who had chosen Monachus. 'Tis apparent therefore that Nicephorus had read thus in our Evagrius;
 καὶ τοὺς οὗτοι ὡς Σαδρατὴν ὕμνησαν αεσιβίως, wherefore Zeno punished those with death; and that he understood it as [spoken of the Heretical Bishops who had elected Monachus. Doubtless, the Bishops who had chosen Monachus deserved a furer punishment than Monachus himself, who was elected by them. For they had done that on their own authority, without the Emperours advice and direction: whereas it had been caitumary, by reason of the largeness of the City Alexandria, that the Bishop thereof should not be elected, unless the Emperour's mind were first known. Besides, they had presumed to elect another Bishop when the See was not void, but whilst Macarius Sabaolachos was yet survived. Whereupon the Seditions and Divisions, which seemed to have been extinguished by the death of Trophimus Elurus, were kindled afresh. For the zealous, those Bishops were to be punished with a capital punishment, rather than Monachus. Nevertheless, in my judgment neither is true. For Monachus was punished only with banishment. But the Bishops who had ordained him, are ordered to be punished by Antimeris the Augustinus; as Liberatus affirms in his Breviary, chap.
 16. Velef.

CHAP. XII.

Concerning Johannes who obtained the Presidency over the Alexandrian Church after Timotheus, and how Zeno outed him in regard he had forsworn himself, and restored the Chair of Alexandria to Petrus Mongus.

*I am of* BUT by the advice of some persons, Joban-Christopher and Sir Henry Savil, who instead of [ἐκ παλῆς ἀεὶ ἔστιν] have mended it thus, ἐκ παλῆς ἀεὶ ἔστιν, but by the advice of some persons: which amendment is confirmed by Nicephorus and the Tel-

Brian Menzies writes: Moreover, Libertus in his Breviary chap. 16, affirms that Johannes the Oeconomus [or, Steward] was sent to Constantinople on a far different account. For he says, that Timotheus Salophaciolus, after he had recovered his Episcopal Chair by the Decree of Zeno Augustus, sent some Ecclesiastics to Constantinople, amongst whom was Johannes the Oeconomus, who might give the Emperor thanks for his own restitution. They also made a request to the Emperor at the same time, that if any thing should happen to Timotheus otherwise than well, no other person but a Catholic might be put into his See by the Clergy and people of Alexandria; as we are informed in Glossis de nomine Aetacii. Which thing Zeno in his answer to Salophaciolus's advices, ordered to be done by a Letter written to the Alexandrian Clergy; as Felix attested in his first Epistle to Aetacius, and Gelasius in Glossis de nomine Aetacii. Further, in the Floristine Manuscripts, at the Margin here, these words occur, scilicet 78 de Aetacius, concerning Johannes Tabernaculus, who retain the name of Tabernaculus in the Floristine Manuscripts. I retain this, because he had been a Monk in the Monastery of the Tabernaculus at Campus, where Timotheus Salophaciolus had likewise formerly followed a Monastick life and discipline; as Theophanes relates. Vale!

mes a Presbyter, <sup>b</sup> appointed to be the Steward of the venerable Church of the Holy Forerunner and Baptist John, makes a journey to the Imperial City [Constantinople,] being sent on an Embassy [to make an address to the Emperor,] that if it should happen that their Bishop should die, the Inhabitants of Alexandria might have a <sup>c</sup> liberty of Electing one to preside over their Church whom they should have a mind to. This person, as Zacharias affirms, was by the Emperor discovered to have a design of procuring the Bishoprick for himself. and when he had obliged himself by oaths, that he would never seek to get the Alexandrian Chair, he returned into his own Country. But the Emperor promulgated a Law, that after Timotheus's death, that person should be Bishop whom the Clergy and <sup>d</sup> people [of Alexandria] should Elect. Timotheus having ended his life not long after, this Johannes (as tholicius. Why therefore does Evergrius (or rather Zacharias, of whom Evergrius took it,) say here, that Johannes was Oeconomus of Saint John's Church? For he was not Steward of this Church only; but he look'd after the revenues and money of all the Churches which were under the Bishop of Alexandria, as Libertinus informs us in his sixteenth chapter, in these words: Porro Johannes ex Oeconomis sanctus fuit Hillo Magistro; qui cum reliquis defendit Alexandria. Falsusque est iterum Oeconomus, habens causas omnium Ecclesiarum. Further Johannes of an Oeconomus is made a friend to Hillus the Magister; who together with the rest were down to Alexandria. And he was made Steward again [or, the second time,] having all the Causes of the Churches. Instead of Urbens causas omnium Ecclesiarum, [I think it should be habens gazas omnium Ecclesiarum, being the treasure or riches of all the Churches.] This emendation, Libertinus following words do confirm, which run thus: Qui multa & prestigiosa dixit Hillo Magistro, &c. Who directed [or sent] many of those precious presents to Hillos the Magister, &c. Or mult it be said that the Church of Saint John Baptist was then the Greatest Church of Alexandria? Indeed, heretofore the Greater Church of Alexandria was termed the Cathedral, as I have observed at Socrates. But it is possible, that the Church of Saint John, which had been built there by Theodosius after the demolition of the Serapim, might become the Greater Church, the Episcopal Chair being removed thither. Concerning this Church of Saint John Baptist, Rufinus speaks in chap. 27. of his second book Eccles. Hist. And in the following chapter he adds concerning the Reliques of Saint John Baptist, that in the time of Athanasius they were brought to Alexandria. To which afterwards, the Serapim [or, Serapis's Temple] being demolished, Golden houses (that I may use Rufinus's words, which are Aurea Testa), were erected in the reign of Theodosius. 'Tis certain in this Church of Saint John, the Patriarch of Alexandria performed his Religious assemblies, as Theophanes informs us concerning Diogenes pag. 129. Vale.

page 139. Valer.
The power therefore of Electing their Bishops had been taken from the Clergy and people of the City Alexandria, and the Emperors had removed the privilege of nominating the Bishops of Alexandria to himself, as 'tis apparent from this place. Which we deny not to have been done by force and against the Ecclesiastical Laws. Nevertheless, the Roman Emperours not without reason challenged that power to themselves after the murder of Prætorius the Alexandrian Bishop. In regard the City of Alexandria, by its own inclination prone to Seditions, had several times raised vehement disturbances in the Election of Bishops. Valer.

the same Zacharias has related, gave money<sup>a</sup> disregarding the Oaths wherein [ he had bound himself ] to the Emperor, is constituted Bishop of Alexandria. Which when the Emperor understood, he ordered him to be executed. And by the perswasion of some Persons, the Emperor wrote an Exhortatory Edict to the Alexandrians, which he termed his * Henoticon; and ordered, that the Chair of Alexandria should be restored to Petrus, provided he would subscribe to His Henoticon, and receive those of Proterius's Party to Communion.

It accordingly. Further, concerning this Oath wherein Johannes Takouphos had formerly bound himself in the Emperor's presence, that he would never climb up into the Alexandrian See, Pope Simpli- cius speaks in his seventeenth Epistle to Acacius. Liberatus also attests the same, in his Breviary, chap. 17. Valef.

C H A P. XIII.

That Petrus Mongus embraced Zeno's Henoticon and joined himself to the * Proterians.

THis Disposition, which had been made by the advice of Acacius Bishop of the Imperial City, Pergamius, who was confiscated to Præfect of Egypt carries along with him. He being arrived at Alexandria, and finding Johannes fled, held a Conference with Petrus, and persuaded him to admit of Zeno's Exhortatory Edict, and moreover [ to receive ] those who had dissented from him. He admits therefore of the forementioned Exhortatory Edict, and subscribes to it. He promises also that he would receive those who were of the contrary party. Wherefore not long after this, when a publick Festivity was celebrated at Alexandria, and all Petrus by a general consent agreed to that termed Zeno's Henoticon, Petrus likewise admitted [ to Communion ] those of Proterius's party. And having made an Exhortatory Oration to the People in the Church, he recited Zeno's Exhortatory Edict also, the Contents speaks to whercof were these.

Clergy and Liturg, and by Preaching as it were, exhorts them, like a Priest, to embrace unity. But, this termed an isopsephos for this reason, because by a wholefome Dispensation (as at the first birth it appears,) it invites all Catholics to one and the same Communion, the mention of the Chalcedon Synod being suppressed. Further, this Edict of Zeno bore date on the year of Christ 482; Trocodas and Severinus being Consuls, as Bronius writes. Which is evidently confirmed by Victor Tironensis in his Chronicon. Valef.

Liberatus in his Breviary, chap. 18. relates that Pergamius was not Præfect of Egypt, but Dux [ or Commander of the Mæces ] ; his words are these; Acacius persecutus Zenoni, &c. Acacius persecutus Zeno, that he should write to Apollonius the Augustinian, and to Pergamius the Dux, that they should drive Johannes out of the Alexandrian See, as having seized it contrary to his own Oath, which he had given in the Imperial City; and that they should give their assistance to Petrus Mongus, that he might continue in that See. Valef.

C H A P. XIV.

Zeno's Henoticon.

EMPEROUR Cæsar Zeno, Pius, Victor, Triumphator, Maximus, always Adorable, Augustus; To the * most Reverend Bishops, Clergy, Monks, and Laicks, in Alexandria, and throughout Egypt, Libya, and Pentapolis:

For the words are these: Flavius Zeno Pius, Victor, Triumphator, Maximus, always Augustus, to the Orthodox Bishops, &c. Then Flavius finds fault with that term Orthodox, and expresses his anger against it in many words; that the Emperor should not be afraid of giving the title of Orthodox to a company of Heretics who had no head. Further, this Edict of Zeno was promulgated in the year of Christ 482, as Barenus has recorded. Valef.

Knowing the only right and true Faith ( which the Three hundred and eighteen Holy Fathers convened at Nicea by a Divine Influence have set forth, and which the Hundred and fifty Holy Fathers in the like manner assembled at Constantinople have confirmed; ) to be the Beginning and * Consistency, and the power and infirmation: expugnable † Defence of our Empire: We have † Or, Ar- made it Our business night and day, by all imaginable Attention and Diligence, and by Our Laws, that God's Holy Catholic and Apostolick Church, which is the incorruptible and immortal Mother of Our Scepters, should every where be multiplied and enlarged by that [ Faith: ] and that the pious People continuing in Peace and that Concord [ which bears a relation ] to God, together with the Bishops most dear to God, and with the most Religious Clergy, Archimandrites, and Monks, might offer up their acceptable Prayers for Our Empire. For whilst the Great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ, who was incarnate and born of the Holy Virgin and Theotocos Mary, approves of and readily accepts our concordant Glorification and Worship, all sorts of Enemies shall be consumed and extinguished: and all Nations will submit their Necks to Our Power which is * according to God: * Or, Nest [ In fine, ] Peace, and those Goods that are the to God. Product thereof, temperateness of the air, plenty of fruits, and all other things which are useful and advantageous, shall be conferred upon men. Whereas therefore the irreprehensible Faith doth in this manner † preferre Us and the Roman Aff- † Or, Be- sairs, Addresses have been presented to Us by the gift. most Religious Archimandrites, Hermits, and other Reverend Persons, who with tears made supplication, that an Unity might be made in the most Holy Churches, and that the Members might be joined to the Members, which that Enemy of Good hath long since been very solicitous to disjoin: assuredly knowing, that * should he make war against the entire Body of the Church, he might with ease be vanquished. For from hence it happens, that there are innumerable * multitudes of men, which Time hath taken out of this life in the space of so many years, a part whereof have departed hence deprived of the Laver of Regeneration, and part have gone the inevitable way of mankind without a participation of the Divine Communion: and, that innumerable murders have been audaciously committed, and that not only the Earth, but the Air it self also hath been defiled by an abundant effusion of blood. What man is he, who will not pray, that these things might be changed into a better State

and

† Or, Generations. † To this place of Zeno's Edict Pope Felix alludes, in his Epistle to Zeno Augustus, where his words are these: Dolet corpe pietas tua, quod per diuturnos partis alterne gravesque constitutus, multi ex hoc seculo videantur ablati, aut baptismi aut communionis experiri; Your piety doubtless is grieved, that by reason of the long and fore consist of each party, many may seem to have been taken out of this world, without being partakers of Baptism or the Communion: Val-

the Divine praises night and day, succeeding one another by turns; in so much that they seemed not to sleep. So heretofore in the Gallia's, a continual praising of God is said to have been kept up in some Monasteries. Valef.

CHAP. XX.

Concerning what Felix wrote to Zeno, and Zeno to Felix.

<sup>a</sup> Τὸν αὐτὸν σὺν Νεφωρίῳ ὑποφύκει· ὅτι αὗται Κοινωνία (for so the Latines term them, which the Greeks call Communion;) were written to the Emperour Zeno. But Eusebius says they were written to Vitalis and Misenus the Legates of the Apostolick See. <sup>b</sup> Tis certain, Communionaries were wont to be sent to Ambassadors and such like Persons, but not to the Roman Emperour. For they were as it were Orders and Instructions which publick Ministers ought to shew to observe. Valef.
* That is, Johannes.

he had disregarded his Oath, and committed all manner of Sacrilege: and, that Petrus had not been ordained rashly and without an exquisite Tryal and Examination, but had with his own hand subscribed, that he embraced the Faith of the Three hundred and eighteen Holy Fathers heretofore convened at Nicaea; which Faith the Holy Synod at Chalcedon also had [approved of, and] followed. The express words [Of Zeno's Letter] are these: You ought to be most undoubtedly assured, that both Our Piety, and the forementioned most Holy Petrus, and all the most holy Churches, do Embrace and Revere the most Holy Synod of the Chalcedonians, which hath fully agreed with the Faith in the Synod of the Nicæans.

<sup>c</sup> Κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν. In the excellent Vatican Manuscript. I found it written Κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν: and so also the same Manuscript Copy has it written in other places, as I have remarked before. Indeed, the ancient Copies do confirm this writing of this word, as does likewise the Author of the Etymologicon in the word κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν. Valef.

<sup>d</sup> Ἐπιτομή. There are also extant in the same Acts the Letters, both from the forementioned Cyrillus, and from other Archimandrites of the Imperial City; and also [those] from the Bishops and Clergy of the Egyptick Diocesis, [written] to Felix, against Petrus as being an Heretick, and against those who communicated with him. Further, when the [Monks] belonging to the Monastery of the Acemati, were come to Felix, they accused Misenus and those that accompanied him, because till their arrival at Byzantium, [the name of] Petrus had in secret been recited in the Sacred Diptychs; but, that from that time till now it was recited publicly; and therefore, that Misenus and those who accompanied him had held Communion [with Petrus.]

approve of Christophorus's Version, who has rendered this place thus: Extant pariter in Actis ejusdem Concilii, &c. There are moreover, extant in the Acts of the same Council, &c. For Eusebius makes no mention here of any Council, only takes a view of the Collection of Letters, which belonged to Acacius's Cause. Christophorus thought (because he few mention was made of the Acts by Eusebius;) that it followed immediately, that these things were transacted in a Council. But the matter is not always so. For whatever things were done in any affair, may simply be called Acts, although no Council or Judiciary Proceedings intervened. Valef.

<sup>e</sup> Ὁ ὁμοῦς ἀδελφὸς. The Article ὁ is to be expunged; which is not acknowledged by Nicephorus. Valef.

The Letter likewise of the Egyptians affirmed the same things [with what I have related] concerning Petrus; and further also, that Johannes being a Person Orthodox, had been legally Ordained; but, that Petrus was Ordained only by two Bishops, who maintained the same ill opinion with himself: and, that immediately after Johannes's flight, all manner of punishments had been inflicted on the Orthodox. And that Acacius had had information of all these things by some Persons who had made a journey to him [from Alexandria] to the Imperial City; and he [lastly,] that Acacius was found to be Petrus's retick. So favourer and assistant in all things.

Letter to Pope Simplicius, and Felix in his Synodick Epistle to all the Monks and Archimandrites at Constantinople and in Bithynia. The same is likewise attested by Theophanes in his Chronicon, pag. 107; and by Gelasius in the Gesta de nomine Acacii. Yet Libertius affirms Petrus was ordained by more Bishops than one, although he expresses not their number. Valef.

CHAP. XXI.

That Symeones a Monk belonging to the Monastery of the Acemati went to Rome, and accused those Bishops sent from the Romans to Constantinople as having held Communion with Hereticks; and, that these Legates, and those Persons who held Communion with Petrus, were deposed by the Romans.

These [accusations] were much increased by Symeones, one of those Monks termed the Acemati, who was sent [to Rome] from Cyrillus. For this Person accused Misenus and Vitalis for having communicated with Hereticks; [he avowed] that the name of Petrus was publicly recited in the Sacred Diptychs, and that by this means many of the simpler sort were imposed upon by Hereticks, who affirmed that Petrus was received [to Communion] even by the See of Rome. Symeones added likewise, that when several questions [were proposed,] Misenus and his Companions would not allow of a Conference with any Person that was Orthodox, or make a delivery of Letters to them, or take an exact scrutiny of any thing that was audaciously attempted against the true Faith. Symeones a Presbyter (one that had conversed with Misenus and Vitalis at Constantinople,) was likewise brought in, who confirmed what had been said by the Monks. Moreover,

Acacius's Letter to Simplicius was read, [wherein Acacius] affirmed, that Petrus had been long since Deposed; and that he was a Son of Night. And on these accounts Misenus and Vitalis were removed from the Sacerdotal Function, and separated from the undesired Communion; the whole Synod having given their vote in these express words: The Church of the Romans doth not receive [to Communion] the Heretick Petrus, who hath long since been both condemned by the Vote of the Sacred Chair, and also Excommunicated and Anathematized. Against whom (though nothing else were objected, yet) even this would be sufficient, that having been ordained by Hereticks, he could not preside over the Orthodox. This also was contained [in the said Sentence:] <sup>a</sup> But, that Acacius [Bishop] of Constantinople deserves a severe reproof, the thing it self has demonstrated; because in his Letter to Simplicius he has termed Petrus an Heretick, but at this present hath not detected <sup>a</sup> All other Authors relate, that Misenus was ordained by one Bishop, and he is an Heretick. So says Acacius in his Epistle to all the Monks and Archimandrites at Constantinople and in Bithynia. The same is likewise attested by Theophanes in his Chronicon, pag. 107; and by Gelasius in the Gesta de nomine Acacii. Yet Libertius affirms Petrus was ordained by more Bishops than one, although he expresses not their number. Valef.

<sup>a</sup> This Letter of Acacius's is extant, set forth in Latin amongst the Epistles of Pope Simplicius. The same Letter is mentioned in Pope Felix's Epistle, which contains Acacius's Sentence of Deposition. Valef.

<sup>a</sup> Against whom (though nothing else were objected, yet) even this would be sufficient, that having been ordained by Hereticks, he could not preside over the Orthodox. This also was contained [in the said Sentence:] But, that Acacius [Bishop] of Constantinople deserves a severe reproof, the thing it self has demonstrated; because in his Letter to Simplicius he has termed Petrus an Heretick, but at this present hath not detected detected it to the Emperour: for he ought, if he had loved Zeno, to have done this; but he loves the Emperour with a greater ardency of affection, than he has for the Faith. But let us reduce our Relation to the following Series of affairs. There is extant an Epistle of Acacius's, [written] to the Bishops in Egypt, and to the Eccl-

Flor-
ent MS.
which particle call a great light upon this place.
the same Florentine Manuscript
at the side of these words, this Scholion was written; Οὐ ληστὴ ἐστὶν ἐνταῦθα τὴν ὁμοίαν τῶν Ἀρμενίων καὶ τῶν ἰσχυρῶν ἐκκλησιαστικῶν. Οὐδὲν γὰρ ἐν τῷ πνεύματι καὶ ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ αὐτῶν παρὶ. That is, This Author does not say here expressly, that Acacius was deposed by the [Bishop] of Rome: but Theodorus and Basilus Ciliæ do manifestly affirm this. Nicephorus (book 16 chap. 17.) attests the same concerning Basilus Ciliæ. Further, our Evagrius is undoubtedly reproved by that Scholion, because at this place he speaks nothing of Acacius's Deposition. Evagrius does here relate all things that were transacted in the Roman Synod, which was convened in the year of Circiter 484. against Vitalis and Misenus Legates of the Apostolick See. In that Synod Vitalis and Misenus were indeed deprived of the honour of the Priesthood. But Acacius was only reprehended and rebuked, as 'tis apparent from the Decree of the Synod, here recorded by Evagrius. After this, Felix sent his Synodick Letters to Acacius; wherein these words occurred; Peccasti, ne adicias, & de prioribus supplicia, Tuā esse offensa, make no addition, and supplicate for [your] former failings. After receipt of which Letters, when Acacius till that time, and committed Facts worse than the former; Pope Felix (the Bishop) being a second time convened,) pronounced a Sentence of Deposition against Acacius, and directed it to Acacius, by Taurus Defensor of the Roman Church; which [Sentence] beginn thus: Multum transgressionum reperitis obnoxius, Tu es found guilty of many transgressions. That these things were transacted in this manner, Pope Felix informs us in his Synodick Letter, to the Presbyters and Archimandrites at Constantinople and throughout Byslania. For, after he had written concerning Vitalis and Misenus, and concerning Acacius, who were condemned in the Roman Synod, he adds these words: Possit illi sententiam quæ in Acacium petribatorem totius Orientis Ecclesiæ dicta est, &c. After that Sentence which hath been pronounced against Acacius, the disturber of the whole Eastern Church, being now also conveyed, we have added to these Letters, &c. And a little after; Unde nunc causâ Antiochenæ Ecclesiæ, &c. Wherefore being at this present convened in the presence of the Blessed Apostle Peter avocations of the Antiochian Church, we do again hasten to declare to you how the Custom which hath always obtained amongst us. From which words it appears, that this Letter was written by Felix, in the name of the third Roman Synod, which had been assembled on account of the Antiochian Church; which after Calcedon was ejected, Petrus Fullo had invaded. In this Synod therefore Felix had dictated the Sentence against Acacius, (which begins thus; Multum transgressionum reperitis obnoxius, Tu es found guilty of many transgressions;) and had transmitted it to Acacius, by Taurus the Defensor. Nor can any one say, that that Sentence was pronounced before in the second Roman Synod, at such time as Vitalis and Misenus were condemned; but was sent a little afterwards by Felix, by the order of the Third Roman Synod. For Evagrius refutes this, who does not say, that the Sentence of Deposition was pronounced against Acacius in that Roman Synod wherein Vitalis and Misenus were condemned. Besides, Liberatus in his Breviarium (chap. 18.) does manifestly declare, that that Sentence of Deposition against Acacius was pronounced long after the Condemnation of Vitalis and Misenus. For hear what Liberatus says; Revenit aliquando Legati. Sed præcesserunt Monachi, &c. At which time the Legates return. But the Monks had gone before, who in a previous manner accused them of Treachery. Having been forthwith heard and convicted from those Letters which they had brought, they are removed from their own places. And after some few words; Thæro ad plenum detectus est Acacius Hæreticus, &c. When therefore the first of Acacius was fully detected, Pope Felix put these words in his Synodick Letters: Tu have offended, make no addition, and supplicate for [your] former failings. Acacius having received these Letters, persists in the same mind, neither receding from Petrus's Communion, nor yet perswading him openly to embrace the Chalcedon Synod and the Tome of Pope Leo. Pope Felix understanding this, sent a Writing of Condemnation to Acacius by Taurus the Defensor; the beginning whereof is this, Tu es found guilty of many Transgressions. Valef. * Had this missi ἀποστῆναι. In the Florentine and Tellerian MSS. and in Nicephorus, the Reading is οὐ τὸν σὺν ἡμῶν ἀποστῆναι. Thus Cyrillus Ierosolym seems to have read, and so we have rendered it. At the Clause immediately foregoing, instead of Non ἀποστῆναι σὺν ἡμῶν ἀποστῆναι, For, he ought, if he had loved Zeno, to have done this; I would rather read thus; ἀποστῆναι τὸν σὺν ἡμῶν ἀποστῆναι ἢ ἡμῶν ἀποστῆναι. Wherein, if he had loved the Faith rather than Zeno, he ought to have done this.

After the Roman Synod which was convened on the account of Vitalis and Misenus, and wherein Vitalis and Misenus had been condemned; but Petrus and Acacius were only reproved and rebuked; it was consequent that Evagrius should have spoken concerning the Sentence of Deposition pronounce'd against Acacius, and sent to Constantinople by Taurus the Defensor. And yet Evagrius has not done this here. Whereof two Reasons may be assigned. For, either this was done by Evagrius in Reverence to the Constantinopolitan See; or else, because Evagrius had related that before from Zacharias Rhetor; as may be seen in the eighteenth Chapter. What therefore he had declared there, he look'd upon as superfluous to repeat at this place. Valef.

fasticks and Monks, and to the whole Body of the Laity; wherein he has attempted to repair and make up the Schism which had hapned. Concerning which affair he wrote also to Petrus Bishop of Alexandria.

C H A P. XXII.

Concerning the Disturbances at Alexandria, and in several other places, on account of the Synod at Chalcedon.

THE Schism therefore increasing at Alexandria, Petrus (after he had again a I have nathematized Leo's Epistle, and the Acts of the made good Chalcedon Synod, and those Persons who would not embrace the Writings of Dioscorus and Timotheus;) perswaded some of the Bishops and Archimandrites to communicate with himself, And because he could not induce others [to do the same,] he drove most of them from their own Monasteries. For which Reasons Nephalius b Liberamade a journey to the imperial City and gave Zeno an account of these matters. Whereat Zeno was sorely troubled, and sends Cosmas, one of his own Protectors [to Alexandria;] who gave forth many and great Menaces against Petrus on his Breviaccount of [procuring an] Unity, in regard by his own roughness he had raised a great Disfension.
But Cosmas, when nothing succeeded according to his wish and design, returned to the Imperial City, having only restored the ejected Monks to their own Monasteries. Again therefore the Emperour sends Asinius, whom he had preferred to be Prefect of Egypt and Dux of the Companies of the Militia. He being arrived at Alexandria in company with Nephalius, made a Speech concerning Unity. But when he could not persuade [them to it,] he sent some of them to the Imperial City. Moreover, many Disputes were held before Zeno concerning the Synod at Chalcedon: but nothing was brought to effect, because Zeno did not * wholly assent to the Synod at Chalcedon.

C H A P. XXIII.

Concerning Fravita and Euphemius [Bishops] of Constantinople; and concerning Athanasius and Johannes [Bishops] of Alexandria: also concerning Palladius and Flavianus [Prelates] of Antioch; and concerning some other Persons.

BUT Acacius [Bishop] of Constantinople having * ἐρπύving in this interim gone the common way τῶν. I had [of Mankind,] Fravita succeeded him in his Bi-rather τῶν, in this interim. Further, 'tis to be observed, that Evagrius does in the first place relate Acacius's death. For, of those three Schismatics who rent in sunder the Oriental Church, (to wit, Acacius Bishop of Constantinople, Petrus of Alexandria, and Petrus of Antioch,) the first that departed out of this Life (says Evagrius) was Acacius; then Petrus [Bishop] of Alexandria, who was termed Menus; and last
R r 2

last of all died Petrus Fullo. But Victor Timonenſis in his Chronicon relates, that the first that died of those three I have mentioned, was Petrus [Bishop] of Antioch. For his words are these: Post Consulatum secundum Longini, &c. after Longinus's second Consulship, Petrus [Bishop] of Antioch dies under condemnation, and in his place Calcedon is ordained. But the Eastern Bishops, as Person ignorant, consecrate Johnannes surnamed Codonatus, Bishop over the said Antiochian Church, to whom succeeded Petrus the Heretic. This was the year of Christ 438. Dynamius and Sidifius being Consul. But on the year following, wherein Probinus and Eusebius were Consul, the same Victor Timonenſis records Acacius's death in these words: Eusebio V. C. Col. Acacius Constantinopolitanus Episcopus sub damnatione moritur, &c. The most famous Personage Eusebius being Consul, Acacius, Bishop of Constantinople dies under condemnation, and in his room Flavita is ordained Bishop; to whom (he dying in the third month of his Promotion,) Euphemius Keeper of the Decrees of the Chalcedon Synod was successor in the Bishoprick. And on the next year, Longinus and Fauftus being the second time Consul, the same Victor relates, that Petrus [Bishop] of Alexandria died under Condemnation. But Baronius, in his Ecclesiastical Annals, relates indeed the death of these three Schismatics in the same order with Victor Timonenſis, but not on the same year. For he says, that Petrus Fullo died on the year of our Lord's Nativity 436. And that Acacius died two years after that, that is, on the year of Christ 438; but in Mongus's death he agrees exactly with Victor. But I had rather follow Victor's Opinion, who places Fullo's death on the year of Christ 438. For Calcedon was created Bishop of Antioch on the year of our Lord's Nativity 452, at 'tis manifest from Pope Simplicius's Epistle; and in regard he held that Bishoprick four years, as Theophanes does attest; it must necessarily be said that Petrus Fullo, who on Calcedon is being ejected was put into his place, had possession of the See of Antioch on the year of Christ 436. But who can believe that Petrus Fullo, who committed so many and such notorious Facts during the time of his Episcopate, should have died a few months after his promotion? Petrus Fullo therefore died not on the year of Christ 436, as Baronius thought. But this Argument is with ease refuted; for 'tis grounded barely on Theophanes's Authority, who attributes four years to Calcedon's sitting Bishop. But Calcedon sat Bishop during the space of one year only. For he was ejected by the treachery of his Ordainer Acacius, a little after the Roman Synod, on the year of Christ 433; as we are informed from Pope Felix's Letter to all the Prelates and Archbishops of the Constantinople and throughout Bythynia, and from the Author of the Gesta de Nomine Acacii. But Theophanes and Cedrenus are not obviously mistaken, who relate that Petrus Fullo departed this life after Petrus Mongus. Whom Pope Gelasius has related in his Epistle to the Orientalis, who does attest that of those two Petrus Fullo died first. Valf.

a Theophanes Bishoprick. And when this Flavita had sent relates Synodick Letters to Petrus [Bishop] of Alexandria, Petrus on his part returned him answer in the like Letters wherein he affirmed the same Synodick Letters to things [with what I have mentioned] concerning the Affs at Chalcedon. Moreover, after Flavita's departure out of this Life, (for he sat Bishop four months only;) Euphemius was ordained Bishop in his room. He receives the Synodick Letters, which Petrus had written to Flavita; and having found therein an Anathema against the Affs at Chalcedon, was mightily disturbed, and severed himself from Petrus's Communion. Both these [Prelates] Letters are extant, as well that from Flavita to Petrus, as that from Petrus to Flavita; which, by reason of their prolixity, I have omitted. When therefore Euphemius and Petrus were about to contend one with another, and to convene Synods one against the other; Petrus is prevented by death, and Athanasius succeeds him in his Chair. He attempted to unite the dissenting Persons; but could not effect it, the disagreeing Parties being divided into various Opinions.

c There were at Alexandria in two sorts of Heretics; to wit, the Discorsite, and the Esfaitani: concerning whom Liberatus speaks in his Breviary. The Discorsite wholly condemned and anathematized the Chalcedon Synod. But the Esfaitani, following Zeno's lead [that is, his Hereticism], did not indeed in any wise admit that Synod; yet they pronounced not an Anathema against it. Valf.

This Athanasius having after this sent Synodick Letters to Palladius Successor to Petrus in the Bishoprick of Antioch, did the same [that Petrus had done] in relation to the Synod at Chalcedon. The very same was likewise performed by Johnannes, who after Athanasius succeeded in the Alexandrian Chair. And after the death of Palladius Prelate of the Church at Antioch, when Flavianus had succeeded him in his Chair, Solomon a Presbyter of Antioch is sent by him to Alexandria, who carried \ his Synodick Letters*, and requested Johnannes's Letter in answer to Flavianus. But after this Johnannes, another Petrus succeeds in the Chair of Alexandria. And these things proceeded in the same manner. [as I have mentioned] † till the beginning of [the Emperor] Anastasius's Reign. For he ejected Euphemius [out of his Bishoprick.] Which [translations] I was necessitated to joyn together in one continued series, both for periphrasis's sake, and also that they might with more celerity be understood.

had survived Petrus Alexandrinus, doubtless Athanasius, who succeeded Petrus Bishop of Alexandria, would have sent his Synodick Letters to Petrus Bishop of Antioch. For these Synodick Letters were wont to be sent by the Patriarchs at the very beginning of their Patriarchate. In regard therefore Athanasius sent his Synodick Letters to Palladius Bishop of Antioch, it appears from thence, that Petrus Antiochenus died long before Petrus Alexandrinus. Further, concerning Athanasius's Synodick Letters, Liberatus in his Breviary says these words, Non post multum tempus, &c. No long time after dies also Petrus Mongus at Alexandria, and after him Athanasius is ordained in that See: who himself also communicated with the Constantinopolitan, Antiochian, and Hierosolymitan Church in the Edict. Valf.

CHAP. XXIV.

Concerning the slaughter of Armatius, who was kinsman to the Emperors Verina.

BUT Zeno, by the persuasion of Illus, slew Armatius also, who was the Emperors Verina's kinsman, whom, when he sent [against him] \ Zeno* brought by Basiliscus, Zeno had \ enſlaved* with gifts, and, instead of being an Enemy, had made him a Friend and an Auxiliary. He also creates his Son Basiliscus, Cesar, at the City Nicea. But sids, not when he was come to Byzantium, he slays Armatius by treachery. But he makes his Son Basiliscus, instead of being a Cesar, a Presbyter. Who was afterwards promoted to the Episcopical dignity.

promised, that as soon as he had recovered the Empire, he would make Armatius Perpetual Magister [or Master] of the present Militia; and his Son Basiliscus, Cesar, and his own Affessor; as Theophanes tells us in his Chronicon, pag. 107. Whole words, because they are corrupted, nor could be understood by the Translator, I will annex here. *Ἄνε ἀδελφὲς τῆς πολεμικῆς, ἡ ἐστὶν ὡς ἐπὶ πολλοῦ παραδίδωμι, ἡ ἐστὶν ἡ δαδὶν ἐξουσία, ἡ τὸν υἱὸν αὐτοῦ βασιλεύσαντα ναύαρχον μισίαν ἐς τὸς βασιλεὺς αὐτοῦ, οὐκ αὐτὸν ἐς τὸν βασιλεὺς ἐπὶ τῆς πόλεως. That is, But is also (as it frequently happens) being blinded with gifts [sent] from Zeno, and with a promise of the perpetual Mastership of the Militia, and that Zeno would make his Son Basiliscus, Cesar, and his Affessor; returned with Zeno against Basiliscus. I write therefore, ἡ ἐστὶν ἡ δαδὶν ἐξουσία, αὐτοῦ, and with a promise of the perpetual Mastership of the Militia. Theophanes terms the perpetual Master of the Militia δαδὶν ἐξουσία. The Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle does fully confirm our Emendation. For he writes, that Zeno had made a promise to Armatius, that he would grant to him the Magisterial power of the present Militia as long as he should live. Suidas relates much concerning this Armatius, in the word ἀρματός; which seems to have been taken out of Damascius in the Life of Hippolytus the Philosopher. *Valf.

CHAP. XXV.

Concerning the Rebellion of * Theodoricus the Scythian; and concerning the same person's death.

Theodoricus, by Nation a Scythian, made an insurrection also against Zeno: and having gathered together his own Forces in the [Country] of the Thracians, undertakes an Expedition against + him. And when he had ruined all the Countries before him, as far as the mouth of Pontus, he wanted but little of taking the Imperial City it self; [and had seized it,] had not some of his Greatest Confidants, induced thereto [by gifts,] entred into a Consult || about taking him off. Being informed therefore of this ill design of his own friends against him, he marched back; and not long after this is numbred amongst those departed this life. Moreover, I will declare the manner of his death, which hapned thus. * A Javelin fitted with a loop of leather to cast it with, was hung up before his Tent, agreeable to the mode of the Barbarians. Having therefore a mind to exercise his body, he ordered his horse to be brought to him. And it being not customary with him to make use of a * Srator, he mounted his horse without any help. But the horse, being a beast unmanaged and fiery, before Theodoricus had bestriden him and settled himself, rises with his fore-feet, and began to go forwards upright on his hinder feet only. So that Theodoricus striving with his horse, and not daring to * curb him with the Bridle, least he should fall backwards upon him, nor yet being firmly seated in his Saddle, was tossed this way and that way, and throwa upon the point [of his Javelin,] which ran obliquely into him, and wounded his side. Being conveyed from thence therefore to his bed, and having continued alive some few days, he died of that retained the Greek one. But Christopherson has rendred it worst of all, thus, Haglam assidue bifida, a Javelin with a double point. I have translated it Haglam amantatum, a Javelin fitted with a loop of leather to cast it with. For δυσκλιν is the same with Amentum; to wit, the thing wherewith Darts or Javelins were bound about, that they might be cast as swift as the Enemy. The Old Glosses out of the Library of Petrus Daniel quoted by Turnebus, explain it thus: Amentum, corrigia lancee, quæ erant ansula est ad jactum, that is, Amentum, the Latchet of a Lance, which is also a little handle to cast it. Where ansula is the same with δυσκλιν, to wit, that whereby a Dart is held that it may be thrown. Εψελχιος expounds δυσκλιν thus, ὅτι εὐρίσκει καὶ δυνάμει τὴν ἀσπίδα. Τὸ δὲ δὲ δὲ τὴν τριφυλίαν id, to fit [or clasp together] the fingers about the leather-latchet of a missile weapon. This δυσκλιν used to signifie, to be ready. So Εψελχιος made use of this phrase, ἀποκρινόμενος τοῖς δόκτοις, founds made by the lashings of leather-thongs. [See Εψελχιος, in the word καταβόη:] a Metaphor taken from τὸν ἀσπίδα, ἀπὸ τοῦ δυνάμει καταβόη ἐκάλει, from these Javelins, which they termed amentata [that is, fitted with loops of leather to fling them with;] as Ευστάθιος tells us, at the Second Book of the Iliad. Now, there was a double use of the Amentum. For, it conducted both to the holding of the Dart, and also that it might be thrown against the Enemy with a greater force. Πάλιν.

* Αναστροφὴ δὲ ἐκ ἐκείνης ῥησίδος. In the incomparable Florentine MS. I found it plainly written ἀναστροφὴ, as Learned men had conjectured the reading should be. Now, ἀναστροφὴ is the same with him whom the Latines term a Strator, who is wont to lift his Master on horseback; as Suidas attests: in which Author there is a passage extant of an ancient Writer, who says these words concerning King Μελισσανία, ὅτι μετακινῶντας μετὰ τὸν πῶτον ἀναστροφὴς ἐκείνου. But this Μελισσανία when he was old mounted his horse without a Strator. Where Suidas seems to have taken the word ἀναστροφὴς for a Scale which we vulgarly term a Stirrup. Πάλιν.

* Αναστροφὴν. I think it must be made ἀναστροφὴν, as 'tis in the Tellerian MS. For so the Analogy requires it should; as from πείσθω is derived πείσθω. Suidas expounds ἀναστροφὴν thus, ἀναστροφὴν.

ἀναστροφὴν, to pull back, to curb. But Nicephorus, instead of this word, made use of ἀναστροφὴν, to repress, or, to draw back. Further, the death of Theodoricus hapned on the year of Christ 481, as Marcellinus in his Chronicon attests, in these words: Placidius solo Cassi Theodoricus Triarii filius Rex Gothorum, &c. Placidius being Consul alone Theodoricus Triarius's Son King of the Goths, taking his Forces [along with him] at far as Anaplum, arrives at the distance of four miles from the City; but having done no harm to any of the Romans returned forthwith. Further, hastning into Illyricum, whilst he was going between the moving Carriages of his own Army, he is wounded and stricken thorow with the point of a dart; being upon one of the Wagons, [occasionally] by the motion of his own horse who started; and dies. Valer.

CHAP. XXVI.

Concerning Marcianus's Insurrection; and what hapned in Relation to him.

After these things, Marcianus (the Son of * Anthemius who had been Emperor of Rome, a kinsman by marriage to Leo Zeno's predecessor in the Empire; for he had married Leontia Leo's younger daughter;) having disagreed with Zeno, made an attempt to set up for a Tyrant. [And a sharp engagement hapning about the Palace; wherein many fell on either side; Marcianus routs his opposers. And [by that attack] had posselt himself of the Palace, had he not let that opportunity slip, by deferring that action till the morrow.] For, Opportunity is a swift-wing'd Bird, and whilst she flies at your feet, may peradventure be taken. But after she has avoided your hands, on a sudden she mounts on high, and derides those who pursue her, not suffering her self to be caught by them in future. On which account therefore * Statuaries * Or, I and Painters make her hair long before, but make her shave the hinder part of her head to the very kerns. skin: with great prudence intimating thereby, that as long as Opportunity is behind, she may be perhaps laid hold on by her long hair: but being got before, she makes a perfect escape, not having any thing whereby she may be taken hold of by the Pursuer. Which very thing at that time befell Marcianus, who lost that opportunity which was seasonably offered him, and was not in future able to recover it. For, on the morrow he was betrayed by his own party; and having been wholly deserted, fled to the Church of the Divine Apostles. Whence he was drawn out by force, and banish'd to Cæsarea a City of the Cappadocians. Where keeping company with some Monks, he was afterwards found out to design a private escape. On which account he was by the Emperor sent to Tarjiss of Cilicia, and having had his hair shorn, is ordained a Presbyter. These Transactions are with great elegancy written by Eustathius the Syrian.

Marcianus's (in like manner as our Evagrius does,) soon after the death of Theodoricus the Son of Triarius. But Malchus dissent, in his Byzantine History. For he tells us, that Theodoricus Triarius having heard of Marcianus's Sedition, forthwith drew together vast Forces, and marched towards Constantinople; pretending to give the Emperor assistance; but in reality, that he might make himself master of the Imperial City. Malchus's words, if any one be desirous of reading them, occur at page 86 of the Kings's Edition. Further, Procopius Marcianus's brother, after Marcianus was taken, and his Tyranny suppress'd, fled into Græcia to Theodoricus. And when Zeno sent an Embassy requiring him to be delivered up to himself, he could never prevail to get that done by Theodoricus; as Candidus says, in his Second Book; and Malchus, in the book now cited. Valer.

Anastasius had his original extract at the City Epidaurus, which is now termed Dyrrachium: and [succeeded] Zeno in his Empire, and married * his Wife Ariadne, and in the first place he sends away Longinus (Zeno's brother, who bore the dignity of a Magister, which Officer the Ancients termed The Prefect of the Offices in the Palace, into his own Country. Then, [he gave] many other Jews [a like liberty of returning into their own Country,] who requested the same thing of him.

CHAP. XXX.

Concerning the Emperor Anastasius; and how, because he would not innovate anything in relation to the Ecclesiastick Constitution, the Churches over the whole world were filled with infinite disturbances: and many of the Bishops for that reason were ejected.

[Further,] This Anastasius, being a person very * studious to promote Peace, would permit no innovation whatever to be made, especially in relation to the Ecclesiastick Constitution: and took all imaginable Courses, both that the most Holy Churches might continue undisturbed, and also that every person subject to his Government might enjoy a profound Peace; all Animosity and Contention being far removed both from the Ecclesiastick, and from the Civil State of affairs. The Synod therefore at Chalcedon was in these times, neither publicly asserted in the most Holy Churches, nor yet wholly rejected: but every one of the Prelates acted according to that Sentiment they had embraced. And some of them courageously defended what had been expounded in that Synod, nor would they recede even from one syllable of it's determinations, or admit of the alteration of one Letter: but with much confidence * separated from, and would in no wise endure to communicate with those, who admitted not of that Synod's Decrees. But others, not only embraced not the Synod at Chalcedon and the determinations made by it; but also * Anathematized it, together with Leo's Epistle. Othersome still adhered to Zeno's Hænoticon; [which they did] notwithstanding their disagreement amongst themselves concerning the one or the two Natures: these being imposed upon by the * composition of the Letters; and those having a greater inclination to Peace and Unity. In so much that the Churches of the whole world were divided into private Factions, nor would the Prelates hold Communion one with another. Hence hapned many * Diffentions both in the East, and in the Western parts and throughout Africa; neither the Eastern Bishops keeping up a Society and Amity with the Western or those of Africa, nor yet on the other hand these with the Eastern Prelates. Moreover, the matter proceeded to an higher Degree of absurdity. For, neither did the Eastern Prelates hold a Communion amongst their own selves; nor [would] those who governed the [Episcopal] Chairs of Europe or Africa * cherish a communion one with another, much less with Strangers and Foreigners. Which when the Emperor Anastasius perceived, he ejected those Bishops who made any Innovation out of the Church; where-ever he found any such person, either crying up the Synod of Chalcedon contrary to the usage in those places, or else Anathematizing it. He ejected therefore out of the Imperial City, in the first place Euphemius, as we have related * before, and then Macedonius; after whom Timotheus was made [Bishop.] Flavianus also [was by him ejected] out of Antioch.

this place of Evagrius can't be otherwise explained. For he brings two reasons, why some persons would not acquiesce in Zeno's Edit. He says therefore, that some were deceived by that flattering Oration of the Emperor, which was composed to persuade. But that others, allured with a desire of the peace and repose of the Churches, had acquiesced in this Edit. Valef.

CHAP. XXXI.

The Letter of the Monks of Palestine to Al-cison concerning Xenaia and some other persons.

NOW concerning Macedonius and Flavianus, the Monks in Palestine, in their Letter to * Al-cison, say word for word thus: But, * This Al-cison was amongst themselves; and Alexandria and Egypt and Libya continued within their own Communion. The rest of the East likewise held a Communion separate from others, * in regard the Westerns refused communicating with them on any terms, unless to their Anathematizing of Nestorius, Eutyches, and Dioscorus, they would add Petrus Mongus also, and Acacius. The Churches therefore over the whole world being in this posture, the genuine [followers] of Dioscorus and Eutyches were reduced to the smallest number imaginable. And when they were now just a-alone. Marcellinus mentions him in his Chronicle, who terms him Aleisus. See Baronius at the year of Christ 516. Valef.

* In regard there were two Petrus; at one and the same time, the one Bishop of Alexandria, the other of Antioch; 'tis uncertain which of these two is here meant. But it seems more probable, that Petrus of Alexandria should be meant here; because the Monks of Palestine do immediately speak of Alexandria, of Egypt, and of Libya. Yet, this meaning is hindered by what is objected by the same Monks; to wit, that after Petrus's death Egypt held a separate communion, and that the Orientals were disjoined from their communion. For Petrus Alexandrinus was succeeded by Athanasius, who wrote Synodick Letters to Palladius Bishop of Antioch, and was joyned in a communion with him, as I have observed above from Evagrius and Liberatus. But again, if we should say that Petrus of Antioch were meant at this place, there would be the same difficulty. But, answer may be made, that the Monks do speak here, not of the Patriarchs themselves, but of a whole Diocese, and of the greatest part of the Bishops. 'Tis certain, after Petrus Alexandrinus's death, the Eastern Bishops desired the communion of the Church of Rome; as 'tis apparent from Pope Gelasius's Letter to the Orientals. Valef.

* Τὸν δὲ δὲ ἀποδοξῶν. A negative particle is doubtless to be added; in this manner, * οὐκ ἔστιν αὐτὸ ἀποδοξῶν, in regard the Westerns refused; which is the reading in Nicephorus and in the Tellerian MS. Valef.

bout vanishing in such a manner as not to appear any more in the world. One <sup>d</sup> Xenaïas, [a person agreeable to his name] truly a stranger from God, [on what design we know not, nor what the grudge was which he would revenge upon Flavianus, but] under a pretext of the Faith, as most do say, begins to move against Flavianus, and to calumniate him as a Nestorian. But when Flavianus had Anathematized Nestorius together with his opinion, Xenaïas passes from Nestorius to Diodorus, and to Theodorus, and Theodoret, Ibas, and Cyrus, and Eutheries, and Johannes, and we know not to what persons he had gathered them. Some of them whom had in reality been Asserters of Nestorius's Sentiments: but others of them, suspected to have been [Nestorius's followers,] had Anathematized him, and had ended their lives in the Communion of the Church. Unless [says Xenaïas to Flavianus] you will Anathematize all those persons who are dispermed with Nestorius's Tenets, you are an Embracer of Nestorius's Sentiments, although you should Anathematize him a thousand times, together with his Opinion. By Letters also he excites the Favourers of Diodorus and Eutyches, persuading them to assist him against Flavianus, and to require him not to Anathematize the Synod, but the forementioned persons only. When Flavianus the Bishop had made a long and stout resistance against these men, and against others who together with Xenaïas combined against him, to wit, one <sup>e</sup> Eleusinus [Bishop of the Second Cappadocia, Nicias [Bishop of Laodicea in Syria, and others from other places; (to relate the Causes of which per-<sup>h</sup>aps narrow-<sup>ness</sup> of mind longs not to us, but to others.) at the name length [Flavianus] supposing <sup>f</sup> they would not be Diodorus.

For Xenaïas, an Enemy of the Chalcedon Synod, would not have Anathematized Diodorus, but Diodorus Bishop of Tarsus, and the rest. So, 'tis certain, Victor Timonensis [tells us] in his Chronicon. <sup>g</sup> Johanne Gibbo (sayne) Coli. Anastasius Imp. Flaviano, &c. When Johannes Gibbus was Consul, the Emperor Anastasius, Flavianus being Prelate of Antioch, and Philoxenus Bishop of Hierapolis, convenes a Synod at Constantinople; and persuades them to pronounce an Anathema against Diodorus of Tarsus, and Theodorus of Mopuestia together with their writings, [also, against] Theodoret of Cyrus, Ibas of Edessa, Andreas, Eucherius, Quirinus and Johannes, Bishops, and against all others who asserted two Natures in Christ, and two Forms, and who confessed not one of the Trinity to have been Crucified, together with Leo Bishop of Rome and his Tome, and together with the Chalcedon Synod. Theophanes confirm the same in his Chronicon, pag. 131. <sup>h</sup> Valf.

<sup>i</sup> Καὶ αὐτοὶ τὸ εὐδελον. Victor Timonensis in his Chronicon terms them Quirinus and Eucherius, as we saw in the foregoing note; where Quinegius is put for Cinegius. Further, Nicephorus has at this place substituted the name Eleutherius, instead of Eucherius. <sup>j</sup> Valf.

<sup>k</sup> This Eleusinus [or, Eleusinus] is mentioned by Liberatus in his Breviary chap. 19, in these words, speaking of Severus: Ita ut ob hoc seberet, &c. So that on this account he would write, even to Flavianus himself, as 'tis signified in his own Epistles, and to Maronius Lector, and to Eleusinus and Eutherius Bishops, and to Occumenicus Scholasticus of Maura. The same person is mentioned by Theophanes in his Chronicon, pag. 128 of the King's Edition; whose words Anastasius Bibliobecarius has rendered thus: Anastasius quere potius a preliis, Macedonium Patriarcham accitit ab orthodoxis fide largiebatur. Multi autem Episcoporum Anastasio gratiam prestantes, Chalcedonensis resistebant Convilio, quorum primus erat Eleusinus Sagesmensis. Theophanes's words in Greek are these: ὁ δὲ πρῶτος τῶν ἐκείνων δόξαν. But it must be written, ὁ δὲ πρῶτος τῶν ἐκείνων, which is the reading in the Vatican Copy. Indeed, the Monks of Palestine do affirm, that this Eleusinus was Bishop of the Second Cappadocia. Now, Sagesma is a City of Cappadocia Secunda, (whereof Gregorius Nazianzenus was heretofore Bishop;) as the Old Notitia do inform us, and especially Hierocles. <sup>l</sup> Valf.

<sup>m</sup> ἢ δὲ τὸ εὐδελον. It should, as I think, be written εὐδελος; or rather, a Negative particle isto to be added, in this manner; ποῦδελος δὲ τὸ εὐδελον εὐδελος; and we have rendered it accordingly. Nor do I doubt but Eusebius wrote it thus. But Antiquaries [that is, Transcribers of Books,] writing hastily, omitted the Negative particle at this place. Further, by τὸ εὐδελον, these persons, he meant Diodorus Bishop of Tarsus, Theodorus of Mopuestia, Theodoret, and the rest mentioned above. See Theophanes, pag. 131. <sup>n</sup> Valf.

quit in behalf of these persons, yielded to their contentious humour: and having in writing Anathematized the foresaid persons, sent [his Libel] to the Emperor: For they had incensed him against Flavianus, as being an Assertor of Nestorius's Opinion. But Xenaïas not satisfied even herewith, required again of Flavianus, that he should Anathematize the Synod it self, and those who asserted two natures in the Lord [Christ,] one of the Flesh, another of the Deity. Which when Flavianus had refused to do, Xenaïas accused him again, as being a Nestorian. After many debates in reference to this matter, when the Patriarch had drawn up an Exposition of <sup>o</sup> Flavianus's Faith, wherein he profess that he embraced the Synod as to what related to the Deposition of Nestorius and Eutyches, but not as to its definition and doctrine of the Faith; they renewed should not their Accusations against him, as if he were a secret favourer of Nestorius's Sentiments, unless he would add an Anathematism against the Synod it self also, and against those who asserted two faults in Natures in our Lord, one of the Flesh, another Christ, of the Deity. Moreover, by their many fraudulent words and expressions, they induced the <sup>p</sup> Valf. <sup>q</sup> Mauri also to embrace their own Opinion. And <sup>r</sup> they having drawn up a Writing concerning the Faith, wherein they Anathematized the Synod together in Natures with those who affirmed two Natures, or Pro-nature in prieties [in Christ;] they withdrew themselves from a Communion with Flavianus and Macedonius; and enter into society with others, who had subscribed to their Writings. During this inter-<sup>s</sup> Valf. <sup>t</sup> rim, they enviated the Bishop of Jerusalem also, that he would draw up in writing the Form of his own Faith. Which he having set forth, sent it to the Emperor by the followers of Diodorus.

<sup>u</sup> And that [Copy of it] which they produce, <sup>v</sup> Omnes <sup>w</sup> does indeed contain an Anathematism of those who assert two Natures. But, the Bishop of Jerusalem himself affirms, that it has been adulterated by them, and produces another without any such Anathematism. Nor, need this seem odd to a wonder. For they have frequently corrected the Books of the Fathers. And by [false] here, in Titles have ascribed many of Apollinaris's Books, to Athanasius, to Gregorius Thaumaturgus, and to Julius. By which [Books] especially, they have induced many persons to [embrace] their own impiety. Further, they requested of Macedonius a Writing concerning his own Faith. Who set forth an Exposition thereof, affirming that he knew no other Faith save that of the Three hundred and eighteen, and hundred and fifty [Holy ones of Fathers;] and he Anathematizes Nestorius and Eutyches, and those who assert two Sons, or two Christs, or who divide the Natures: but has made no mention of the Ephesine Synod which deposed Nestorius, nor of that at Chalcedon that attributed some Epistles to Julius Bishop of Rome, which in reality were Apollinaris's. <sup>x</sup> Valf.

<sup>y</sup> So indeed Macedonius behaved himself in the beginning of his Episcopate, whilst he was willing to gratify the Emperor Anastasius, by whom he had been promoted to the Patriarchate. Therefore, many of the Antient Writers have related, that Macedonius at the beginning had subscribed to Zeno's Henoticon. So, 'tis certain, Theodorus Lector affirms, whom Baronius has cautiously reported on that account. For Liberatus relates the same in his Breviary chap. 18; where he speaks concerning Johannes Hemiula Bishop of Alexandria; and a little after that, where he mentions Johannes Niceus, Hemiula's successor. Victor Timonensis in his Chronicon writes thus concerning Macedonius: Anastasio Aug. Col. &c. In the Confessio of Anastasio Augustino, Macedonium Bishop of Constantinople, a Synod being convened, condemnis those who embraced the Decrees of the Chalcedon Synod, and such as defend [the Sentiments] of Nestorius and Eutyches. Lastly, Theophanes in his Chronicon, pag. 120, does wholly agree with Theodorus Lector. <sup>z</sup> Valf.

wherein Eutyches had been deposed. Whereat the * Monasteries about Constantinople were highly offended, and separated from the Communion of Macedonius the Bishop. In the mean while, Xenias and P. Dioscorus having brought over many of the Bishops to their own party, became intolerable; and raised Tumults against those who refused to Anathematize [the Synod.] And against such as would not in the end yield to them, they framed many stratagems, and caused them to be cast into Exile. In this manner therefore, they banish Macedonius, and * Johannes Bishop of Paltrun, and Flavianus. These are the Contents of the aforesaid Letter.

from the communion of Macedonius, and [the Monasteries] of those who had subscribed Zeno's Henoticon, as Theophanes tells us in his Chronicon pag. 122. Valef.

* This, as I think, is Dioscorus Junior, who succeeded Johannes Nicaota in the Bishoprick of Alexandria. Baronius places his ordination on the year of Christ 516, five years after Macedonius's banishment. To whom agrees Theophanes in his Chronicon. But Liberatus contradicts it, who relates Dioscorus's ordination before the deposition of Macedonius. And this Evagrius confirms here. But, after a more accurate examination of the matter, Dioscorus Junior can't be meant here. For Macedonius was ejected out of his Bishoprick on the year of Christ 511, as 'tis manifest from Marcellinus; and in his room was substituted Timotheus, who forthwith wrote Synodick Letters to Johannes Nicaota Bishop of Alexandria; as Liberatus and Theophanes do attest. Whereas therefore Dioscorus Junior succeeded Nicaota, he must necessarily begin his Precedency after Macedonius's deposition. Wherefore, another Dioscorus is meant here. And perhaps, instead of Dioscorus, it must be written Sostrichus.

* Concerning this Johannes, Victor Tunonensis in his Chronicon writes thus: Theodoro Viro C. Caf. Juliano Bgtrinus, &c. The most famous Theodorus being Consul, Julianus of Bosph, and Johannes of Valium voluntarily left their own Churches, and others are put into their places. But Marcellinus in his Chronicon relates that in the Consulate of Paulus and Messianus, on the year of Christ 512. Valef.

CHAP. XXXII.

Concerning the Expulsion of Macedonius [Bishop] of Constantinople, and of Flavianus [Bishop] of Antioch.

BUT, there were other things which secretely wrung Anastasius. For when Ariadne had taken a resolution to cloath Anastasius with the Imperial purple; Euphemius, who presided over the Archi-Episcopal Chair [of Constantinople,] would on no terms give his consent, till such time as Anastasius had delivered to him a Caution [or, Contract,] in writing, written with his own hand, and [confirmed] with great Oaths, that he would preserve the Faith entire, and introduce no Innovation into God's Holy Church, if he should obtain the Imperial Scepter. Which paper Euphemius delivered to Macedonius who was intrusted with the custody of the Sacred Vessels. Euphemius had done these things on this account, because Anastasius was by many persons thought to be addicted to the Manichean Heresy. After Macedonius therefore had ascended the Episcopal Throne, Anastasius was desirous of having his own Caution restored to him, saying it would be a reproach to the Empire, if the forementioned Obligatory-Instrument should be kept [laid up in the Church.] Against which when Macedonius made a resolute opposition, and affirmed that he would not betray the Faith; the Em-perour [Anastasius] framed all imaginable design against him, resolving to eject him out of his [Episcopal] Chair. Certain Boys therefore who were slanderers, were produced, who falsely accused both themselves, and Macedonius of a filthy and unclean act. But, when it was found that Macedonius was deprived of his Genitals; they betook themselves to other Arts and Designs; till at length, by the advices and persuasions of Celer Master of the Offices at Court, Macedonius withdrew privately from his [Episcopal] Chair. But in the Expulsion of Flavianus, they have added other things. For we have received information from some very aged persons, who perfectly remembered what ever had happened during Flavianus's being Bishop; which persons do affirm, that those Monks [who dwell] in that Country termed * Cynegia, and what ever other [Monks] inhabited the first Provinces of the Syrians, perfwaded thereto by Xenias a man [by Extract a Persian;] (which Xenias was Bishop of Hierapolis a City near to Antioch,) and by a Greek name he was termed Philoxenus,) flock'd together, and in a tumultuous and very disorderly manner made an irruption into the City [Antioch,] where they would compel Flavianus to Anathematize the Chalcedon Synod and Leo's Epistle. Whereat Flavianus being extremely troubled, and the Monks pressing on with great violence; the populace of the City made an Insurrection and slew a great many of the Monks; in so much that a vast number of them had the [River] Orontes for their Tomb, their bodies being buried in its waves. There happened another thing also, not much inferiour to this. For, the Monks of Syria-Coele (which is now termed Syria Secunda,) having a mighty affection for Flavianus, because he had lead a Monastick life in a certain Monastery which was situate in a * Country named Tilmogus; * Field, &c. came to Antioch, with a resolution to defend Flavianus: so that at that time also some, and those no small [mischievous accidents] happened. Whether therefore on account of the former [Tumult,] or by reason of [that disorder we have mentioned] in the second place or for both, Flavianus is ejected and banished to Petra, [a Town] situate in the utmost confines of the Palestines.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Concerning Severus Bishop of Antioch.

FLAVIANUS therefore having been ejected, Severus is preferred to the Episcopal Throne of Antioch, on the * five Hundred fifty first * This was the year of Christ 513. For the first year of the Antiochians precedes the vulgar Era of our Lords Nativity 48. years. Severus therefore entered upon the Bishoprick of Antioch on the year of Christ 511, in the month November, in the sixth Indiction. So Marcellinus Comes in his Chronicon Indict. 6. Clementino & Probo Cof. &c. In the sixth Indiction, Clementinus and Probus being Consuls, Severus a worshipper of Eutyches's perfidy, by the desire of Anastasius Cæsar, possessed the See of the Prelate Flavianus, and of a Monk was made a Bishop. Valef.

year

* See book year of Antioch's being styled a free City, 2. chap. 12. in the month Dius, it being the Sixth Indiction note (4.) of the Cycle then [current;] but at this present time wherein we write, it is the Six hundred forty first year. This Severus had Sophron xopolis for the place of his Nativity, which is one omitted of the Cities of the Province Pisidia. He had formerly employed himself in the study of the Law at Berytus. But, having afterwards soon left <sup>Or, The</sup> those studies, when he had received holy Baptism in the sacred Temple of the divine Martyr Leontius who is honoured at Tripolis a City of the Maritime Phœnicie, he betook himself to a Monastick life in a certain Monastery situate in the mid way between the small City Gaza and that little Town termed Majuma.

then was. For, an Indiction is a Circle of fifteen years, after the ending whereof, another Circle begins of as many years. Eusebius terms the partition of the Circle of fifteen years, ἐνδεκάτην τῶν εἰσώνων, which the Latines call Indictionem, an Indiction. But, whereas Eusebius says, that Severus was ordained on the month Dius that is, November; that must necessarily have been done in the seventh Indiction. For a new Indiction was begun on the month September. Eusebius has expressed himself in the same manner before, at book 2. chap. 12; where he says these words concerning the Earthquake, which happened at Antioch in the times of Leo Augustus ἀπὸ τοῦ βασιλέως ὁμοῦσεως τοῦ καλοῦ, on the eleventh partition of the Cycle, that is, on the eleventh year of the partition of the Circle. So in the thirteenth ἔτι τῶν ἱουστινιανῶν, ἡμεῖς & ἡ πόλις ἐκτελέσθη τὸ παλαιὸν ὄνομα; ὡς ἔστιν. Until the second partition of the past Cycle. Valef.

* There was a twofold Phœnicie; the one termed Maritime [because it lay by the Sea-coast;] in Greek called μεγαλὴ, or, Βαβυλὼν; the Metropolis whereof was Tyre. The other named Libanensis, the head City whereof was Emesa; as the Old Notice do inform us. In the Maritime Phœnicie was the most famous City Tripolis. In that City, as Eusebius does here attest the Martyr Leontius was honoured. This is the Leontius, of whom mention is made in the Ménologie, at the eighteenth day of the month July. The Monks, in their Libel pretended to the Patriarch Menas, (which Libel is recorded in the fifth Edition of the Constantinopol. Synod sub Menas.) do attest, that Severus was baptized in this Martyr Church. Valef.

* Libertanus in his Beryriac chap. 19. writes thus concerning Severus: Ἰς οὖν Severus cum federat prius in Monasterio, &c. For this Severus, when he formerly lived [or sat] in the Monastery, admitted use of Zeno's Edict, nor received to communion [?] Petrus Mongus. After this, living in the Monastery of the Abbot Romanus, and of Mamas who presided after him, he was from thence sent to reside as Apoctisarius [that is, Legate] at Constantinople; and becomes one of their number, who were of Petrus Mongus's [party.] This Relation of Libertanus is far different from that of Eusebius. For, Eusebius says, that at first Severus was a Monk in a Monastery which was between Majuma and Gaza. And this is confirmed by Theophanes also. But, that afterwards he resided [or, sat] in the Monastery of the Abbot Nephalius; which was in Egypte, as Eusebius tells us in the two and twentieth chapter of this Book. Out of which Monastery Severus being driven, came [says he] to Constantinople. But Libertanus relates, that Severus sat indeed in two Monasteries: but, attests, that he was not ejected out of any Monastery, but, was made Apoctisarius. But, whose Apoctisarius he was, he says not. I am of Opinion, that he was the Apoctisarius of the Monks of the East, who were of the same Sect with himself. So Theodosius is termed the Apoctisarius of the Monasteries in Palestine, in the first Edition of the Constantinopolitan Synod under Menas. And that Eusebius confirms here. Valef.

* Concern. In which place Petrus the Iberian also, who using this had been Bishop of the same Gaza, and was Petrus the rus, Eusebius has spoken already, at chap. 8. book 2. There is mention made of the same Petrus, in the Libel of the Monks to the Patriarch Menas, which is recorded in the fifth Edition of the Constantinopolitan Synod under Menas. Valef.

* Διὰ τὸν αὐτὸν ἵνα ἐκκελευσθῇ, Had passed through the same exercise [to wit] of a Monastick life.

† Or, party.

‡ Or, party.

Jesus Christ. By this Nephalius therefore, and those who were of his party, [ Severus ] is driven out of his own Monastery, together with several others who held the same opinion with himself. From whence he went to the Imperial City, under the notion of an Embassador, in defence both of himself, and those who had been ejected with him. And there he becomes known to the Emperour Anastasius, as He hath related at large who wrote Severus's Life. Moreover, the same Severus, in the Synodick Letters which he wrote, has in express words Anathematized the Chalcedon Synod. Concerning which matter, [ the Monks of Palestine, ] in their Letter to Aciscion, say these words, Severus The Synodick Letters of Timotheus now [Bishop of] shop of Constantinople, have indeed been approved and admitted of here in Palestine: but the Deposition of Macedonius and Flavianus, both people, and not been allowed of; nor yet Severus's Synodick to Severus Letters. But, those persons who brought them Nice hither, were disgracefully and contumaciously used, of Agreeable to their deserts and betook themselves And to their heels; the popularity of the City and the For Libe Monks having made an Insurrection against them. raus [in this posture was Palestine.] But, of those his Ber who were subject to [the See of] Antioch, some, 19 induced thereto by fraud, were prevailed upon; some, of which number is Marius Bishop of Berytus, that Severus had communion with these Prelates. Indeed, Theophanes [in his Chronicon, pag. 135.] relates, that Timotheus, when he would have inserted Severus's name into the Diphyche, was hindered by the people of Constantinople. Valef.

* Theophanes casts a great light upon this place. He writes (pag. 135.) that Timotheus sent his Synodick Letters, and the deposition of Macedonius, to all the Bishops, that they might subscribe to them: and, that the weaker persons amongst them, afraid of the Emperour, subscribed to each Libel. But that those who were of a mind more stout and courageous, would subscribe to neither. Further, that some, taking a middle way, subscribed to Timotheus's Synodick Letters, but in no wise subscribed to the deposition of Macedonius. Amongst these persons therefore who took the middle way, were the Bishops of Palestine, as the Monks do attest here in their Letter to Aciscion. Valef.

* Ἀπὸ δὲ ἀποδοκιμασίας. Without doubt the reading must be, οἱ ἀποδοκίμαστοι, those persons brought them; as it is in Nicéphorus. In which Author also the reading is fuller by one word; thus ἀποδοκίμαστοι ἐκείνοι. Those persons who brought them thither. Brédin, in the Tellerian Manuscript I found it plainly written, οἱ ἀποδοκίμαστοι &c. Valef.

* In Nicéphorus, this place is otherwise distinguished, to wit, in this manner: ἐξουρῶν τὸ μέγαρον ἐπ' αὐτὸν τὸ δῖον τὸ ἐν τῷ μαζῶν νουθεσίῳ, Fled out of the City: the popularity and Monks having made an Insurrection against them. Which distinction I like best. Valef.

* Τὸν δὲ ἐν ἀποδοκίμα. Nicéphorus words it thus, ἐν ἀποδοκίμα, in Antioch; which I like not. For the Monks of Palestine do not speak of Antioch here, but of the Bishops who were subject to the See of Antioch. For, having before spoken concerning the affairs of Palestine, which were subject to the Patriarch of Jerusalem, they now pass to the Bishops of the East, who were under the jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Antioch; and in the first place they name Marius Bishop of Berytus, which was a City of Phœnicie. Now Phœnicie was under the dispose of the Antiochian Patriarch, according as it hath been agreed in the Chalcedon Synod between Maximus Bishop of Antioch, and Juvencalis Bishop of Jerusalem. Valef.

But others, by force and * compulsion gave their assent to Severus's Synodick Letters, wherein was contained an Anathematism, both of the Synod, and of the rest who had asserted two Natures or properties in our Lord, one of the Flesh, another of the Deity. Some, when through necessity they had given their assent, afterwards altered their minds, and revoked [it:] of which number are the Bishops subject to Apamia. Others wholly refused to assent; of which number are Julianus [Bishop] of Boisri, and Epiphanius of Tyre, and some others, as they say, Bishops. But the Isaurians, now come to themselves, condemn themselves for their former mistake: Moreover, they Ana-Anathematize Severus together with his followers. Tea, some of the Bishops and Ecclesiasticks under Severus, having relinquished their own Churches, are fled away : of which number is Julianus [ Bishop ] of Bostri, and Petrus of Damascus, who reside here with us. <sup>1</sup> Mamas also, which Person seemed to have been one of the two Ring-leaders of the Diofcorians, <sup>2</sup> by whom Severus himself had been instructed; who has condemned their arrogancy. And after the Interposition of other words. But, the Monasteries here, and Jerusalem it self, also most other Cities together with their Bishops, by God's assistance are of one and the same mind in relation to the true Faith. For all which Persons, and for us, pray (most Holy Lord and our most Honour'd Father!) that we enter not into temptation.

<sup>3</sup> Ring-leaders of the Diofcorites [ or, Diofcorians ] by whom Severus had been instructed, are Romanus and Mamas, Abbots of that Monastery which was between Masuma and Gaza. Indeed, Theophaues, in his Chronicle, terms that a Monastery τὸν ἀρεσκόντων τῶν αἰρετικῶν, of Schismatical Monks. Valef.

<sup>4</sup> τὸν δὲ τῶν αἰρετικῶν κληρῶν, By whom Severus himself had been ledged. I had rather write κληρῶν, had been catechized, or, instructed. For the Abbots Mamas and Romanus had instructed Severus; as we have said before, out of Liberatur. Valef.

CH A P. XXXIV.

Concerning the [ Libel of ] Deposition sent to the same Severus by Cosmas and Severianus.

BUT, in regard the forecited Letters do attest, that * those Prelates under [ the Jurisdiction of the Church of ] <sup>1</sup> Apamia receded from [ the Communion ] of Severus; come on, let us add a certain passage, * which have been told by our Fathers, although it be not as yet recorded in any History. <sup>2</sup> Cosmas Bishop of our Epiphania, † in the Vicinage whereof runs the [ River ] Orontes, and Severianus [ Bishop ] of Arctus a neighbouring City, being disturbed at Severus's Synodick Letters, severed themselves from his Communion, and sent a Libel of Deposition to him whilst he sat Bishop of the City Antioch. They deliver the Libel to one Aurelianus * Archdeacon of the Church of Epiphania. Who, in regard he feared Severus, and [ dreaded ] the Grandeur of so great a Bishoprick, after his arrival at Antioch, clothed himself in the habit of a Woman, and comes to Severus, † jesting and playing in the wanton; and by all ways imaginable feigning himself to be a Woman. [ In fine ] having let down the Veil werewith his Head was covered, as far as his Breasts he lamented, and by fetching deep sighs besought assistance; and under the pretence of a Supplicatory Libel, delivers a Deposition to Severus, then going forth. And without being taken notice of by any Person, withdraws out of the crowd which followed [ Severus; ] and by flying purchases his own safety, before Severus knew what the Contents of the Libel were. But Severus, notwithstanding he had received the Libel, and understood what was contained therein, nevertheless continued posselt of his own See, until the death of Anastasius. Further, when Anastasius was informed of what had hapned to Severus, (for, we must not omit the mentioning of an Act of Anastasius's, which was wholly made up of Clemency and Humanity;) he orders Asiaticus <sup>3</sup> who bore the Command of the Militia in Phenice Libanensis, to eject Cosmas and Severianus out of their own Sees, because they had sent a Libel of Deposition to Severus. After Asiaticus was arrived in the Eastern parts, and found many Persons defending the Opinions of Cosmas and Severianus, and that their Cities made a stout resistance in favour of their own Bishops; he gave Anastasius an account, that those Bishops were not to be driven out of their own Sees without bloodshed. So much of Clemency and Humanity therefore was there in Anastasius, that he wrote expressly to Asiaticus, that he would in no wife effect <sup>4</sup> Instead any thing, though never so great and spendid, if of μαλακίας, Asiaticus, at- tempe; it would, if I mistake over the whole world, * during the Empire of Anastasius. Whom some Persons <sup>5</sup> * Or, Unde judged to be an Enemy to the Chalcedon Synod, and have expunged his Name out of the Sacred Tables. But at Jerusalem, even whilst living, he was Anathematized.

<sup>1</sup> Ὁ δὲ δακτύλιος ἐγγύς. We have restored this place from the excellent Florentine and Tellerian MSS. wherein 'tis thus written, τὸν ἀρεσκόντων τῶν αἰρετικῶν ἀρεσκόντων, The Command of the Militia in Phenice Libanensis. There were two Phenice's, as I have marked above; the one termed Maritima, the other Libanensis. Over this Province was let the Dux of Phenice, concerning whom see the Notitia Imp. Rom. Valef.

<sup>2</sup> μαλακίας, Asiaticus, at- tempe; it would, if I mistake over the whole world, * during the Empire of Anastasius. Whom some Persons <sup>5</sup> * Or, Unde judged to be an Enemy to the Chalcedon Synod, and have expunged his Name out of the Sacred Tables. But at Jerusalem, even whilst living, he was Anathematized.

<sup>3</sup> μαλακίας, Asiaticus, at- tempe; it would, if I mistake over the whole world, * during the Empire of Anastasius. Whom some Persons <sup>5</sup> * Or, Unde judged to be an Enemy to the Chalcedon Synod, and have expunged his Name out of the Sacred Tables. But at Jerusalem, even whilst living, he was Anathematized.

<sup>4</sup> μαλακίας, Asiaticus, at- tempe; it would, if I mistake over the whole world, * during the Empire of Anastasius. Whom some Persons <sup>5</sup> * Or, Unde judged to be an Enemy to the Chalcedon Synod, and have expunged his Name out of the Sacred Tables. But at Jerusalem, even whilst living, he was Anathematized.

<sup>5</sup> μαλακίας, Asiaticus, at- tempe; it would, if I mistake over the whole world, * during the Empire of Anastasius. Whom some Persons <sup>5</sup> * Or, Unde judged to be an Enemy to the Chalcedon Synod, and have expunged his Name out of the Sacred Tables. But at Jerusalem, even whilst living, he was Anathematized.

CH A P. XXXV.

Concerning the destruction of the Isaurian Tyrants.

BUT, it will not be disagreeable to the promise we have made * before, if to this History * At book we annex some other [ Transactions ] worthy <sup>1</sup> chap. 11 to be recorded, * which have hapned during the times of Anastasius. Longinus Zeno's Kinsman, being arrived in that [ Country ] wherein he had been born, as hath been shewn * before, † engages <sup>2</sup> * Chap. 29. † Or, Purs en. in an open War against the Emperour. And great Forces having been raised on the one side and on the other, amongst which was Conon, heretofore Bishop at Apamia [ a City ] of the Province of the Syrians, who, in regard he was an Isaurian, bore Arms under the Isaurians; at length the War was terminated [ in this manner. ] The Isaurians who fought under Longinus were all cut off to one Man. But the Heads of Longinus and <sup>3</sup> Theodosius Cor- dorus were sent to the Imperial City by Johannes in his mes Scythia. Which Heads the Emperour [ or, Chronicon ] dered to be [ fixt upon Poles, [ carried about, ] (at Ana- stasius's) and hung up in that [ Suburb ] termed Syca being Con- stantinople : a grateful ful alone; spectacle to the Byzantines, because of those evils this mischiefs they had suffered from Zeno and the Person Ar- chenodorus, and the other Longinus, sur- named Selimuntius, the chief supporter of that Tyrannick Faction, and together with him In- phates in des, are [ taken and ] sent alive to Anastasius, his Chro- nicon, pag. Emperour <sup>4</sup> 118 Valef.

<sup>1</sup> Apamia was the Metropolis of Syria-Parva, or Syria Secunda, to which Epiphania and Arctus were subject, as the Old Notitia inform us. Valef.

<sup>2</sup> * Or, Which hath passed so us from our Fathers.

<sup>3</sup> * Or, which story.

<sup>4</sup> Or, which story.

* Or, The deliver the Libel to one Aurelianus * Archdeacon of the Church of Epiphania. Who, in regard he feared Severus, and [ dreaded ] the Grandeur of so great a Bishoprick, after his arrival at Antioch, clothed himself in the habit of a Woman, and comes to Severus, † jesting and playing in the wanton; and by all ways imaginable feigning himself to be a Woman. [ In fine ] having let down the Veil werewith his Head was covered, as far as his Breasts he lamented, and by fetching deep sighs besought assistance; and under the pretence of a Supplicatory Libel, delivers a Deposition to Severus, then going forth. And without being taken notice of by any Person, withdraws out of the crowd which followed [ Severus; ] and by flying purchases his own safety, before Severus knew what the Contents of the Libel were. But Severus, notwithstanding he had received the Libel, and understood what was contained therein, nevertheless continued posselt of his own See,

<sup>1</sup> ἀρεσκόντων τῶν αἰρετικῶν. *Valef*ius renders these words thus: jocant ac lascivient, rustic [ or, drolling, ] and playing the mauton. The primary signification of the term ἀρεσκόντων is, feignedly to refuse; it imports also to dissemble, or, to play the fool, so behave ones self as that most petulant Woman Acco did; from whose carriage this word had its original.

Emperour and the Byzantines were highly pleased, in regard Longinus and Indes were in the manner of a Triumph lead through the streets of the City, and through the Cirque, [carrying.] Chains made of Iron, which were put round their necks and about their hands. From that time those [Donatives] heretofore named 'The Isaurica' began to be paid into the Imperial Treasury. Now, that was [a sum] of Gold, paid every year to the Barbarians, amounting to the weight of fifty thousand pounds.

e He time thoſe [Donatives] heretofore named *‘The e He the ſaurians began to be paid into the Imperial Treas-Donative, ſury. Now, that was [a ſum] of Gold, paid which the every year to the Barbarians, amounting to the Tyrant weight of fifty thouſand pounds.
Philus had allowed to the ſaurians, and which the Emperor Zeno, though againſt his will, had beſtowed upon them, to procure a Reconciliation. Which Dona-tive the Emperor Anaſtaſius having reſuſed to pay to the ſaurians, they made war againſt the Romans, as Jordanes relates in his book de Succellione Regnum. Valeſ.*

CHAP. XXXVI.

*Concerning the * Saracens, that they made a Peace with the Romans.*

Concerning the * Saracens, that they made a Peace with the Romans.

* Or, Barbarians; term dScenitæ; that is, who dwell in tents.
* Or, The affairs of the Phenices, and Palestine. But, having received a severe overthrow from the Military Commanders in each Province, at last they were quiet, and by a general consent that whole Nation made a Peace with the Romans.

The Reading is in Nicephorus, book 17. pag. 3*. Further, we have remarked already, that there were two Phœnice's; the one termed Libanenſis, the other Mariima. Nor muſt this be omitted, that, that Province is by the Latines ſometimes termed Phœnicem, from the Nominative Cite Phœnix. 'Tis certain, in the Itinerary Tables of the Puizingers, it is called Syria Phœnix; as alſo in the Noſtitia Imperii Romani. In the Manuſcript Copies, 'tis written Dux Phœnicius. Nor found I it written otherwiſe in Ægeſippus, book 3. chap. 20. Valof.

C H A P. XXVII.

Concerning the Siege of Amida, and the Building of [the City] Daras.

Moreover, the Persians, then subject to their King Cavades, broke the League [with the Romans ;] and having left their native Soil, in the first place invaded Armenia, and took the small Town named Theodosiopolis :

<sup>a</sup> Marcellinus Comes, in his Chronicon, says, This City was taken by the Persians, on the tenth Indiction, in the Consulate of Probus and Avienus; that is, on the year of Christ 502. and on the eleventh year of Aurélius's Empire. See Procopius in book 1. Persic. Valef.

* Or, *Imp-
pige.*

Boundary as it were of the Romani and Persian Empire;) a City, from its being a Field: which he fortified with a strong wall, and adorned with various and those splendid Buildings, to wit, Churches, and other sacred Houses, and with Royal Porchis's, publick Baths, and other [ Works, ] of which the most eminent Cities do [un]usually boast. 'Tis said by some Persons, that this place got the name of Dawat, because Alexander the Macedonian, Son to Philip, had totally vanquished Darius there.

C H A P. XXXVIII.

Concerning the Long Wall.

THe same Emperor perfected a vast Work, worthy to be recorded, * which is usually termed The Long Wall, situate in a very convenient place of Thracia. This Wall is distant from Constantinople, about two hundred and eighty Furlongs: it embraces both the Seas, [and runs out] like a Streight to the length of four hundred and twenty Furlongs: it makes the [Imperial] City from being a Peninsula, almost an Island, and affords a most convenient and safe passage to those who have a mind to sail from that place termed Pontus to Propontis and the Thracian Sea. It repels also those Barbarians, who make Excursions out of that termed the Euxine Sea, out of Colchis, from the Lake Maecris, and from the places about Caucasus, and likewise them, who are usually poured in, out of Europe.

flus's third Consulate, on the year of Christ 507. as the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle writes. Concerning this Wall Suidas gives this Relation, in the word τῆρος; Ἀνακτορὸς ὁ Βασιλικὸς τῆρος, &c. The Emperor Anastafius builds the Long Wall, sixty miles from the City Constantinople. It is extended from the Sea at the North, to that at the South. Its length contains forty miles, and its breadth twenty fath. See more in Petrus Gillius's first book de Topographia Urbis Constantinop. cap. 21. Valef.

C H A P. XXXIX.

Concerning that [Tax] termed the Chrysfargyrum, and how Anastasius abolished it.

Moreover, the same Emperour performed an eximious and plainly divine Action, to wit, the perfect and intire * Abolition of that [ Tax ] termed † The Chrysargyrum. Concerning which thing we are now to speak, al-† That it, though it wants the Tongue of a Thucydides, or rather one of more Eminency and Eloquence, [ to give a Narrative of it. ] However, I will declare the matter, not induced thereto by my Eloquence, but confiding in [ the greatness of ] that Action. Upon the Dominions of the Romans, which were so great and so far diffused, was imposed a miserable Tax, detestable to God, and misbecoming even the Barbarians themselves, much less [ agreeable ] to the most Christian Empire of the Romans. This Tax, on what account neglected and tolerated I know * Xixth not, continued till the times of Anastasius, who Emperours, by his Imperial Magnificence abolish'd it. It was Whores imposed both upon many others, who got their their match maintenance from a charitable Contribution, and no difference also upon those Women who sold the Beauty in their ad- of their Bodies, upon * common Whores like mission of wife who prostituted themselves in Bawdy-houses customs [ which which stood in the hidden and obscure places of the City; moreover, upon * Calanities, who affected not only Nature it self, but the Republick also with Ignominy. In so much that, this Tax, instead of a Law, made loud proclamation, that those who had a mind, might securely and with impunity commit such abominable Leachery. Further, that impious and detestable † profit arising from this Tax, was every fourth year paid in to the * First and Chiefest of the Praefectures, by the Collectours who gathered it in all places; so that, it was not the smallest part of this Praefectura, to have * Officers, both its * *Proper * Serinia* (as they term them,) and also * such Officers as managed the Accounts of this Nature; [ and these were ] not Persons mean and obscure, who look'd upon this Employ to be a † Militia as well as the rest. Which when Ana- stasius understood, and had * referred it to the Senate, and had likewise deferredly pronounced this thing to be a detestable impiety, and a wickedness new and unheard of; he made a Law, wherein 'twas declared that it should be wholly abolished, and he burnt those Papers [ which contained a Summary of this Exaction. And, being resolved to make a perfect Holocaust ] as it were [ of this Tax to God, to the end that no one of his Successors in the Empire might in future again renew the old Infamy of this [ Exaction; ] he feigns himself grieved and vexed; * and accused himself of imprudence, and of the highest degree of madness, saying, that by attributing too much to Vain-glory; he had neglected the utility of the Republick, and had rashly and inconsiderately abolished so great a Tax, which had been found out by his Ancestors, and confirmed by so long a duration of Time; before he had duly weighed in his mind the imminent dangers, or the expence of the Milice, (which is the living Wall of the Government,) or [ Lastly ] those [ charges which are necessary ] to the Service of God. Without declaring therefore any of the thoughts of his mind, he signifies, that it was his intent to restore the forementioned Tax. And having sent for those Officers who had been employed in Collecting that Tax, he confess'd that he repented indeed of what he had done; but knew not what course he could now take; or how he might correct his own mistake, in regard all the Papers were burnt, which could have set forth a * Notitia of this Tax. These Persons having, not feignedly, but in reality lamented [ the Abolition of ] this Tax on account of that unjust gain which accrued to themselves therefrom, and pretending the like difficulty [ that the Emperor did, in getting it, restored: ] Anastasius proceeded and entreated them, that they would proceed in all imaginable methods of making a search, whether or no the way of Assisting and Collecting this whole Tax might be found out from those Tables which lay in every place: And having assigned a Salary to each of them, he dispatched them away to make a Collection of those Papers, giving orders, that whatever Paper might be of use in setting forth the Notitia of this Tax, wherever it were found, should be brought to himself; to the end that, after much circumspection, and the most exquisite accuracy imaginable, a Notitia of this whole Tax might be again composed. When therefore those Persons, who were employed in this affair, had some time after made their return, Anastasius seemed very cheerful and full of joy. And he did really rejoice, because he had obtained what he desired. He inquired therefore the manner how, and with dy fees it whom [ these Papers ] had been found, and must be, whether or no any one of this sort [ of Monuments ] were left behind. But, when they had affirmed positively, that great pains had been the same as if he had really rejoiced, because he had obtained what he desired. Further, this Adverb is referred to the Verb Rejoice. Which being most certain, 'tis nevertheless strange, that both Translators should have referred this Adverb to the following word rejoice, thus, And he did rejoice, because he had really and truly obtained what he desired. Valf.

the same import with Referre, proponere, to refer, to propose. The Tellerian MS. confirms our Emendation, wherein I found it plainly written rejoice, as I had conjectured. Valf.

[ Or, Which set forth this Exaction. Some few words after this, instead of [ εἰς τὴν ἀδικήσασιν ἀνέγνω, And had rashly, inconsiderately suspended ] it must be written thus, εἰς τὴν ἀδικήσασιν ἀνέγνω, And had rashly and inconsiderately abolished. Valf.

ter this, instead of [ εἰς τὴν ἀδικήσασιν ἀνέγνω, And had rashly, inconsiderately suspended ] it must be written thus, εἰς τὴν ἀδικήσασιν ἀνέγνω, And had rashly and inconsiderately abolished. Valf.

ter this, instead of [ εἰς τὴν ἀδικήσασιν ἀνέγνω, And had rashly, inconsiderately suspended ] it must be written thus, εἰς τὴν ἀδικήσασιν ἀνέγνω, And had rashly and inconsiderately abolished. Valf.

should have said, ὡς ἀνέγνω really. Further, this Adverb is referred to the Verb Rejoice. Which being most certain, 'tis nevertheless strange, that both Translators should have referred this Adverb to the following word rejoice, thus, And he did rejoice, because he had really and truly obtained what he desired. Valf.

* Such as were once fellow to be desired contrary to Nature.

† Or, gain.

* Officers.

* Proper.

* Serinia.

* Such Officers.

* As managed.

* Not Persons.

* Militia.

* An.

* Anastasius.

* Anastasius.

* Anastasius.

* Anastasius.

* Anastasius.

* Anastasius.

* Anastasius.

* Anastasius.

* Anastasius.

* Anastasius.

* Anastasius.

* Anastasius.

taken by them in the Collecting of these Papers, and had sworn by the Emperor himself, that no other Paper could be found in the whole Roman Empire, which might set forth The Notitia of this Tax: [ the Emperor ordered ] a great fire to be again made of those Papers which had been brought, the ashes whereof he [ caused to be ] put into water; it being his intent wholly to abolish this Exaction; that so, neither the dust nor the ashes, nor any the least remain of this thing, or of the burnt Papers, might be left appearing. But, least whilst we so much extol the *abolition of this Tax, we should seem not to know, what, and how great matters have with partiality enough been related by the more ancient Writers concerning this [ Exaction: ] Come on, I will now produce even those passages also, and will demonstrate them to be false, and most especially, from those very things which they themselves have related.

* Or, Inhibition.

CHAP. XL.

Concerning what Zosimus hath written in relation to The Chryfargyrum, and about the Emperour Constantine.

Zoſimus (one of their number [ who have followed ] the execrable and abominable Superſtition of the † Heathens, ) being highly incenſed againſt Conſtantine [ on this account, ] becauſe he was the firſt Emperour that embraced the Chriſtian Religion, and relinquish'd the abominable Superſtition of the * Græcians; relates, that he was the firſt [ Emperour, ] who invented that termed The Chryſargyrum, and made a Law, that ſuch a Tax as that ſhould be brought in [ to the Treafury ] every fourth year. [ The ſame Zoſimus ] has || loaded that Pious and Magnificent Emperour with infinite other [ Calumnies. ] For, he ſays, that he contriv'd ſeveral other altogether intolerable [ miſchiefs ] againſt [ Perſons of ] all Qualities and Conditions; and, that he cruelly murdered his Son Criſpus, and likewiſe killed his own Wife Eufſia, whom he ſhut up [ and ſtifed ] in a Bath which had been over-much heated. And, that when he had fought amongſt his own Priests for an Expiation of ſuch horrid and nefarious Murders as theſe, and had found none; (for they openly declared, That ſuch black Crimes as theſe could not be purged by Sacrifice;) [ he adds ] that he accidentally met with an Egyptian who had come out of Iberia: and, that having received information from him, that the Faith of the Chriſtians aboliſhed all manner of ſin, he embraced thoſe things which the Egyptian had imparted to him. And, that from that time he relinquish'd * the Religion of his Anceſtours, and made a beginning of Impiety, † as he terms it. Now, that theſe things are notoriously falſe, I will demonſtrate immediately: But, in the firſt place I muſt give a Relation concerning The Chryſargyrum.

* Or, His Paternal Religion.
† Or, As he says.

† Or, ad hoc fact.

CHAP. XLI.

An Invektive against Zosimus, on account of the Reproaches and Calumnies he has cast upon Constantine and the Christians.

Thou sayst therefore, (O destructive and impure * Dæmon!) that Constantine resolving to build a City equal to Rome, at first attempted the erecting of such a great City in the mid way between Troas and Ilium; and having laid the Foundations and raised the Wall to an height, afterwards he found Byzantium to be a place more commodious, and so incompassed that with Walls; which old City he enlarged to such a degree, and adorned it with such † splendid Buildings, that it seemed not much inferior to Rome, which in so many years had by little and little arrived at that Greatness. Thou sayst<sup>ing</sup> further, That he distributed amongst the Byzantine People || The Annona out of the publick Stock, and gave a vast sum of Gold to those who had removed together with him to Byzantium, for the building of their own private Houses. Again, thou writest word for word thus; After Constantine's death, [ the Supreme management of ] Affairs devolved only to his Son Constantius, [ to wit, ] after the death of his two Brothers. And when Magentius and Vetricano had set up for Tyrants, he attacked Vetricano by perswasives. For, both their Armies being come together, Constantius in the first place made a Speech to the Souldiers, and put<sup>ing</sup> them in mind of his Father's Liberality, with whom they had waged many Wars, and [ by means of whom ] they had been honoured with the greatest Gratuities. Which when the Souldiers had read, he redressed Vetricano of his Purple, and drew him in out of the Tribunal [ clothed ] in a private habit; the

Notwithstanding, [thou doest affirm,] that he underwent nothing of molestation from Constantius, who together with his Father hath by Thee been loaded with so many Calumnies. How therefore Thou canst judge it agreeable [to affirm] the same Person to have been so liberal, and so bountiful, and yet so tenacious and forbid, as to have imposed such an execrable Tax; I am [I must confess] wholly ignorant. Further, that he neither slew Fausia nor Crispus, nor for that reason, received our Mysteries from any Egyptian; hear the words of Eusebius Pamphilus, who flourished in the same Times with Constantine and Crispus, and was frequently conversant with them. (For, thou writest not even what thou hast received by Report, much less the truth: in regard thou livest a long time after, [to wit,] in the Reign of Arcadius and Honorius [to whose Times thou hast brought down this History,] or rather, after them.)

lets it must be μὴκεν ̃, in two words; and accordingly we have read it, so mōto ̃ times. And so Nicephorus read, who hath exprest these words of Eusebius thus, αὐτὸς δὲ ὧς ἐγγυλλοῖ κενεὸς; which place of Nicephorus, Lactantius understood not, nor is it apparent from his Version of it. It must be rendered thus, ipse hunc errorem non terminavit, wherein thou hast closed thine History. For Zosimus brought down his Work to the taking of Rome effected by alaricus; as is manifested from Phorici's Bibliotheca. Further, from his passage in Nicephorus and Eusebius, Vossius (in his book of Historicis Græcis) affirms, that Zosimus lived in the times of Theodosius Junius. Yet, neither of those two Authors hath said that of Zosimus. They only say, that he lived under Honorius and Arcadius; with which [Emperours] he terminateth his History.

noted his History, or rather long after them. Indeed, I am of Opinion, that this Zosimus lived about the times of Anastafius. For he cites Olympiodorus Thebaeus, who wrote his History under Theodofus Junior, as Ptoleus attests; and he names Syrianus Philopofphus, who was the Master of Proclus Diadochus. Now, Proclus lived in the times of Anastafius. Lastly, Suidas writes, that Zosimus the Sophist lived in the Reign of Anastafius; whom I think to be the same with Zosimus the Historiographer. For many Rhetoricians and Sophists betook themselves to writing History, as 'tis manifest both from Dionysius Halicarnafseus, and also from many others. And the Dignity of Advocate of the Fiscus [or, Treasury], wherewith Zosimus was adorned, disagrees not much from the Sophistick Dignity. Valeſ.

* This part in the Eighth Book of his Ecclesiastical History [Eusebius] writes word for word thus: Within some small interval of time, the Emperor Constantine (a Person of extraordinary mildness throughout his whole Life, most favourable to his Subjects, and one that had a singular affection for the Divine Doctrine [of our Religion,]) ended his Life according to the common Sanction of Nature, leaving his own Son Constantine, Emperor and Augustus in his stead. And, after some other words: Constantine, Son to this Man, being immediately from that very time [of his Father's death,] proclaimed Supreme Emperor and Augustus by the Souldiers, (but not long before that, by the Supreme God) exhibited himself an Emulator, of his Father's Piety towards our Religion. And, at the close of his History, he expresses himself in these very words: But Constantine the mighty Conqueror, gloriously adorned with all the Virtues of Religion, (together with his Son Crispus, a Prince highly beloved of God, and in all things like his Father,) recovered his own East. Doubtless Eusebius (who survived Constantine,) would never have so highly extolled Crispus, if he had been murdered by his Father. Moreover, Theodoret relates in his History, that Constantine at the very close of his Life, was made partaker of Salutary Baptism at Nicomedia; and, that he deferred it till that time, because he was desirous of being baptized in the River Jordan. Thou sayst moreover, (most execrable and impurest of Mortals!) that the Roman Empire, from such time as the Christian Religion shewed it self, hath decayed, and been utterly destroyed; [which thou affirmest,] either because thou hast read nothing of what hath happened in ancient times, or else with a designed malice to attack the Truth. For, the contrary is manifestly apparent; to wit, that the Roman Empire hath increased together with our Faith. Consider therefore, how about the very [time of the] Advent of Christ our God amongst Men, a most of [the Cities of] the Macedonians were ruined by the Romans: Albania also and Iberia, the Colchi and Arabians, were made Subjects to the Romans. [Consider likewise,] how Caius Caesar, on the Hundredth eighty second Olympiad, in great fights subdued the Galli, Germani, and Britanni, (which Nations inhabited Five hundred Cities,) and annexed them to the Roman Empire; as it hath been recorded by Historians. This is the Caesar, who after the Consul, was the first Augustus of the Roman Empire; who made a way * Tu wir, pa. 108. of our Version.

† See Theodoret's Ecclesiastical History, book 1. chap. 32.

‡ On the Affairs of the Romans.

* Long before Christ's Advent Macedonia had been subdued by the Romans. Moreover, the Albanians, Iberians, and Colchians were conquered by the same Romans long before Christ's Birth. Therefore what Evagrius says here, is nothing to the purpose. But, concerning this whole Inveective of Evagrius against Zosimus, see Fabianus Lemnius's Apology, which he has prefixed before his Edition of Zosimus. Valeſ.

* Suidas relates that Zosimus was a Sophist who lived in the times of the Emperor Augustus. The same is the Reading in the Greek Copies of Nicephorus; but it must be made of Zosimus or Zosimus, &c. On the Hundred eighty second Olympiad, from Eusebius, and the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle, pag. 437. Valeſ.

out of * Polytheism and † Democracy, and introduced a previous Veneration of a Monarchy of Christ. Immediately, all Judaea, and the Neighbouring Countries, were annexed Domitian [to the Roman Empire:] in so much that managed The * First Involvement was then made, in which Christ also together with others was Enrolled, † See Eusebius to the end that Bethlehem might publicly declare the Completion of that Prophecy [which Hist. book had been uttered] concerning it self. For it is, &c. note hath been predicted by the Prophet Micah concerning it in this manner: || And thou Bethlehem, say Micah, thou shalt come forth to me a Governor, who shall rule my People Israel. And after the Nativity of Christ our God, Egypt was added to the Roman Empire, Augustus Caesar, under whom Christ was born, having totally subdued Antonius and Cleopatra who killed themselves. After which Persons, Cornelius Gallus is constituted Praefect of Egypt by Augustus Caesar; and he was the first who Governed Egypt after The Ptolemies, as it has been recorded by Historiographers. Further, how many [Countries] have been taken away from the Persians, by Ventidius, and by Corbulo, Nero's * Duke; by * Or, Com-mander.

* Trajan also, Severus, and Carus; by Cassius likewise, Odenatus of Palmyra, Apollonius, and others: how often have [the Cities] Seleucia and Ctesiphon been taken; as likewise Nisibis, (which sometimes passed into the hands of the Romans, at others, into those of the Persians;) [Lastly,] that Armenia, and the adjacent Nations, have been annexed to the Roman Empire, Thou thy self, together with other Writers, dost relate. But I had almost omitted those things which Thou writest were done by Constantine, who together with his professing of our Religion, valiantly and with great Courage governed the Roman Empire: and what Thy Julian suffered, a partaker of the same Mysteries with thy self, who left such deep wounds upon the Roman State. But, whether any thing of what hath been predicted concerning the end of the World, hath either received * a Prelude, or shall obtain an End, is of a higher Dispensation than: Thou canst conceive. But, if Thou pleaseſt, let us make inquiry, in what manner those Emperours who asserted the Superstition of the Gentiles, and how they who had a value for the Christian Religion, concluded their [Lives and] Reigns. Was not Caius Julius Caesar, the First Monarch of the Roman Empire, murdered by Treachery, and so ended his Life? did not some Souldiers with their Swords kill the other Caius, who was * Nephe-w to Ti-berius? was not Nero murdered by one of his Domesticks? Did not Galba undergo the same Fate? Orbo, and Vitellius also; which three Emperours Reigned only sixteen months. Did not Domitian (who was his Brother,) destroy the Emperor Titus by poison? Was not Domitian himself in a miserable manner removed out of this World by Stephanus? What wilt thou say concerning Commodus, did not he end his Life by [the violent hands of] Narcissus? Pertinax also, and Julian, underwent they not the same Fate? did not Antoninus Son to Severus, murder his Brother Geta, and was not he himself afterwards taken off in the same manner by Martialis? What [of] Macrinus also, was not he carried up and down like a Captive about Byzantium, and nefariously murdered by his own Souldiers? Aurelius Antoninus likewise, born at the City Emesa, was not he slain together with his Mother? and Alexander his Successor in the Empire, fell not he together with his Mother * by the like Fact! What shall we say concerning Maximinus, was not he destroyed by his own Souldiers? What concerning Gordianus, who by Philippus's Treacheries [was murdered] by his own Souldiers, and ended his days? Now, do Thou tell me, was not Philippus and his Successor Decius slain by their Enemies? Gallus and likewise Volusianus, were they not thrust out of their Lives by their own Forces? Emilianus also, fell not he in the same manner? Valerianus, was not he taken prisoner, and carried up and down by the Persians? [In fine,] after Gallienus had been treacherously murdered, and Carinus slain, the [Supream Management of] affairs came to Dioctletianus, and those whom he took in to be Colleagues in the Empire with himself. Of whom, Maximianus Hercules, and his Son Maxentius, as likewise Licinius, were utterly destroyed. But, from such time as the most celebrated Constantine entred upon the Empire, and dedicated to Christ a City built by himself, which bore his own Name; look about earnestly [and see,] whether any of those who reigned in that City, excepting only Julian thy Pontiff and Emperour, have been slain either by their own Citizens, or by their Enemies; or whether any Tyrant hath ever vanquished an Emperour, I save only Basilissus who drove out Zeno: notwithstanding, he was afterwards routed by the same Zeno, and ended his Life. I assent also to what thou writest concerning Valens; [because] he was the Occasioner of such and so vexatious mischiefs against the Christians. For, concerning any other Emperour [besides these,] even Thou thyself canst not say it. Let no Person account these things to be foreign to our Ecclesiastick History; but rather [look upon them as] most useful and † accommodate; in regard the Historiographers amongst the Heathens do designedly attempt to cloud the accurate Knowledge of Transactions. But let us return to the remaining Actions of Anastasius.

* Or, Proem, or, beginning.

* Germanicus c. Caesaris pater Drusi & Minoris Antonia filius, a Tiberio parvus adoptatus, &c. So Suetonius in the Life of Caius Caligula.

† See Eusebius c. 3. of the Nativity of Christ. For about twenty years before our Saviour's Nativity, Egypt was reduced into the form of a Province. Valeſ.

* ἢ μὴν βασιλικῶν. In the Tullerian MS. I found it written, ἢ μὴν βασιλικῶν: but I would rather express it thus, αὐτῶν μόνον, save only, &c. Valef.

† Or, Conducere.

C H A P. XLII.

Concerning * The Chrysotelia.

* Or, Golden Tax.

THE Actions we have already mentioned, were egregiously performed by Anastasius in a manner befitting the Imperial Majesty. But the same Emperour did some things in no wise answerable to those [we have related.]

For he invented that termed * The Chrysotelia, and rated the Expence of the Militia at a very high value, to the great damage † of the Provincials; it should Beside, † he took away the Exaction of the Trib-to grieve, in regard our Evagrius, contenting himself in setting down the bare Name, has omitted to explain the Thing it self; nor has any other of the Ancient Writers, that I know of, made mention of this thing. But as much as I am able to attain by Conjecture, I do think The Chrysotelia to have been nothing else, but a Paying of Gold, which Anastasius first ordered to be exacted from the Provincials instead of the Tributary Fundion. For the old Romans were wont to bring in the Tributes in the very Species themselves, to wit, in Wheat, Barley, Wine and Oyl: out of which, being carried together into the publick Granaries, the Military and Civil Annona was distributed. Moreover, by the Sanctions of the Emperours it had been forbidden, that the Collectors should exact Gold of the Provincials instead of the Species. [To wit, Wheat, Barley, &c.] as may be seen in the Fourth and Fifth Law of the Theodosian Code, Tit. Tributa in istis speciebus inferri. But Anastasius was the first who gave order, that instead of the Species, Money should be exacted of the Provincials. Now, I gather this, partly from the word Chrysotelia it self, whereby is signified a Paying of Gold instead of Tributes; and partly from that which Evagrius speaks in this whole Chapter concerning the Tributary Fundion, as we shall see afterwards. Valef.

‡ Ἀντιστοιχίαι δὲ χρυσολιτῶν δεικνύται. Johannes Leunius has rendered this place very well, in this manner: Et populus suos Vicegales bellis imperis per vindictationem dividendis supra modum gravatus, And he over-much burdened his People that paid Tribute, the Military Expence, being by a Market made Sale of. Magister translates it thus: Et Militares sumptus onerosissimi eorum contribuciones dividendis, And in a most burdensome manner made sale of the Military Expence, contrary to the usual convention. But, Christophorus renders it worst of all, in this manner: Et stipendia Militaria, cum exactionibus, non sine gravissimo Reipublice detrimento dividendis, And sold the Military Stipends together with the Exactions, not without the heaviest detriment to the Republic. But, to the end we may fully understand the thing it self, we will diligently weigh each word. Evagrius therefore says, ὁ ἀντιστοιχίαι. That word signifies in Latine, cum qui vendit, tum that hath sold. Suidas also observes, that a fraudulent selling, sale, is understood by this word. Now, the selling of the Military Expence may be meant in a twofold manner. For, either Anastasius Farmed out the Military Expence to Publicans, in such manner as our Kings are wont to do, who usually let out the Allowance of the Military Annona, [that is, the Souldiers Provisions,] of Cloth, and other things of that nature, to Publicans and Farmers. Or else, that Sale was no other thing than an Aderation, [or, setting a Money-value upon these Expences:] in such a manner as if Anastasius should have rated at a most burthenome value the Military Expence, to wit, Cloth, Arms, Forage, &c. which were wont to be brought in by the Provincials: which thing redounded to the loss of the Provincials, who instead of the Species themselves, were forced to pay a Price. And this latter Sense I have followed in my Translation. Now, by these words, χρυσολιτῶν δεικνύται, Evagrius means not only the Military Stipends, [or, Souldiers Pay,] as Christophorus thought; but all manner of charge belonging to the Militia, to wit, Clothes, Arms, and Provisions. Justinian makes frequent use of this word in his Thirteenth Edict; where he distinguishes also between δεικνύται and Criseis. And he informs us, that the Criseis were the Annona, and the Capita, [or, Forage for the Beasts] which were paid to the Magistrates in Gold: but of what fort the δεικνύται were, he explains not; only he intimates, that the values of them also were exacted from the Provincials; where he speaks concerning The Duc of Libya. Valef.

§ Κατὰ τὴν ὁμοίαν. What Cassiodorus were, Musculus and Christophorus understood not. The Provincials who paid Tribute, are so termed. The Old Glosses explain Cassiodorus, tributerius, a Person obnoxious to the paying of Tribute; Cassiodorus, τὸ ὀντισμὸν, Tributum, Tribute. So Evagrius (book 5. chap. 13.) calls the Tributaries τὸν ὀντισμῶν. Valef.

¶ Πεισθέντι τῷ τῶν φόρων εἰσπράξει ἐν τῶν βασιλικῶν. Amongst the Burthens of the Decuriones, the Exactions, [or, Collection] of the Tributes was not the least. For they out of their own Body made Susceptores [Takers, or Receivers] of The Annona, and Præpositi [or, Overseers] of The Mansions and Granaries; as is evident from the Theodosian Code. In the Title of Decurionibus, and in the Titles of Susceptoribus. Which yet is not so to be understood, as if only the Decurions might collect the Fiscal Tributes. For, both the Officials of the Præfetti Prætorio, and likewise the Officials of the Presidents, were wont to collect the Tributes from the Provincials; as Amm. Marcellinus informs us, book 17. in these words: Denique iussit exemplo, id petendo Caesar imptoraverat a Prefecto, &c. In fine by an unusual Example, Caesar by entreaty had obtained that of the Prefect, that the dispose of the second Belgica, which was oppressed with manifold mischiefs, might be committed to him; so that, on that condition, that neither the Official of a Prefect, nor of a President should urge any one to pay. [In Valesius's Edition of Amm. Marcellinus, pag. 90. where this passage occurs; it is printed thus: . . . . .

'Tis

'Tis moreover said, that [after this,] Vitalianus spent some time at Anchialus, and kept himself quiet. Further, another Nation of the Hunni <sup>4</sup> having past the Caspian Strights, made an Incurſion [into the Roman Provinces.]

<sup>4</sup> Παρά τον τόν κατὰ μέτρον. Or, Suf. The Hunni were a having most wipafſed the lent, &c. Caſpian Strights

At thoſe very ſame times alſo, Rbodus * was ſhaken by a moſt Violent Earthquake, in the dead of the night; which was the third calamity it had ſuffered of that Nature.

[Or, narrow paſſes,] made an irruption into Armenia, Cappadocia, and Pontus, in the Conſulate of Anthemus and Florentius, on the Year of Chriſt 115, as Marcellinus and Viſtor Timonensis relate in their Chronicon. They were alſo termed Sabiri, or Saber, as Cedrenus attests for ſo 'tis to be read in Theophaſtus. From which Authors it muſt be made here μεγιστὴν τὴν ῥοσάναν ῥοσάναν, having paſt the Caspian Strights. 'Tis certain, Niephorus has thus expreſſed this place of Evagrius, at book 16. chap. 38. Through theſe Caspian Narrow Paſſes, the Hunni were wont to break into the Roman Pale, as Procopius tells us Book 1. Perſie. Where he gives an excellent deſcription of theſe Narrow Paſſes, and attests that they had been heretofore fortified by Alexander the Macedonian. Whence, that paſſage of Saint Jerome, in his Epitaph of Fabiola, receives light; which runs thus: Eceſ subito diſcurrentibus Niniſis, Oriens totus iniremit, ab ultimâ Maotide inter Gelaſtem Tinnam, & Maſſagetarum immanes populos, ubi Caucaſi rupibus ſeras Genes Alexandri Claſtra cœbent, erupſiſſe Hunnorum examina. Valeſ.

CHAP XLIV.

That Anaſtaſius being deſirous to add theſe words, Who haſt been Crucified on our account, to the Hymn [termed] * The Triſagium, a Sedition and diſturbance happened amongſt the people. Which [Anaſtaſius] fearing, † made uſe of diſſimulation, and ſoon altered the minds of the people. And concerning the death of Anaſtaſius.

* See Maurin's Gloſſary, in the word terſiſſe. † Or, regned in diſſimulation.

But at Conſtantinople, when the Emperor was deſirous of making an addition of theſe words, Who haſt been Crucified on our account, to [The Hymn termed] The Triſagium; a moſt violent Sedition hapned, as if the Chriſtian Religion had been totally * ſubverted. Macedonius and the Conſtantinopolitan Clergy were the Authors and Abettors of this Sedition,

* Or, Abrogated.

<sup>2</sup> This Severus affirms in his Epistle to * Soterichus, obierius [or Soterichus,] had been ordained Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia by Macedonius Biſhop of Conſtantinople. Who going over afterwards to the Eutychian party, joyned himſelf to the impious Xenaias, as Theophaſtus relates in his Chronicon. 'Tis no wonder therefore, that Severus, a Ringleader of the Eutychians, ſhould have written Letters to Soterichus, a perſon like himſelf, and ſhould in them have accuſed Macedonius a Catholic Biſhop, as being the Author of the Sedition. Severus himſelf was rather the Occaſioner of this Sedition, who had perſwaded the Emperor Anaſtaſius, that to the Hymn [termed] The Triſagium he ſhould add this Claule, Who haſt been Crucified for us, having mercy upon us; as Cedrenus relates in his Chronicon. Further, Proclus Biſhop of Conſtantinople had been taught this Hymn [termed] The Triſagium, by Angela. Which, as ſoon as the Prieſt had approacht the altar, the Channer out of the Pulpit began to ſing, in this manner, ὁ θεὸς ὁ πατὴρ ὁ υἱὸς ὁ ἅγιος ὁ ἀθάνατος ὁ ὁσάνα ὁ ὁσάνα ὁ ὁσάνα. Holy God; Holy Mighty; Holy Immortal; as Joſeph Monachus writes Book 6.

in Phorins Bibliotheca. On account of this Hymn moſt violent Tumults aroſe afterwards in the Church, when the Easterns would add this Claule to it, ὁ σωζόμενος δι' ἡμῶν, Who haſt been Crucified for us, referring it to Jeſus Chriſt. But the Conſtantinopolitans and Westerns rejected that addition, leaſt any perſon ſhould be attributed to the Conſubſtantial Trinity; and in place thereof ſang theſe words, ὁσάνα ὁσάνα ἡμῶν, Holy Trinity have mercy upon us; as Epiphanius *Varriar*ch of Anatholi informs us in Phorins his Bibliotheca. Macedonius did right therefore, who retaining the uſage delivered by Proclus, reſuſed that addition. Valeſ.

Which [Epistle] he wrote before he had obtained the Episcopal Throne, whilt he reſided <sup>2</sup> at the Imperial City, to wit, at that time * when he, together with others, had been ejected out of his own Monastery, as I have * related already. On account of theſe Calumnies, beſides other reaſons † already mentioned, I am of opinion that Macedonius was ejected [out of his See.] From this occaſion the populacy was ill, thar, enraged, and in regard they were not any longer to be withheld, many perſonages of the Nobility were reduced to the greateſt of dangers, and ſeveral of the eminenteſt places [of the City] were burnt down. And when the people had life in the found a certain Country-fellow (who lead a Moniſtick courſe of life,) in the honſe of Marinus Palace, the Syrian, they cut off his head; affirming that by this mans motives and perſwaſions that Expreſſion had been added [to the Hymn.] They alſo put his head upon a pole, [carried it about] and in a deriding manner exclaimed, that he was the Enemy of the Trinity. [Further,] the Sedition increaſed ſo vaſtly, ruining all things, and being ſuperiour to all * Oppoſition, that the Emperor, † compelled by neceſſity, went to the Cirque without his Crown, and ſent the Criers to the people, to make Proclamation, that with all imaginable readineſs he would reſign his Empire: but that it was a perfect impoſſibility for all of them to obtain the Empire, which cannot endure many Colleagues; and, that there was of neceſſity to be one, who might Govern the Empire after him, Which when the people perceived, by a certain Divine impuſe as it were, they altered their minds, and beſought Anaſtaſius to put his Crown upon his head, and promiſed to be calm and quiet [in future.] When Anaſtaſius had ſurvived theſe diſturbances * ſome ſmall interval of time, he departed to another life, having Governed the Empire of the Romans, ſeven and twenty years, three months, and as many days.

above. Beſides in the foregoing chapter he terms it ſo. Valeſ. * Ὁς τὸν τὸν τὸν. Doubtleſs it muſt be, ὁς τὸν τὸν τὸν, and we have rendered it accordingly. So alſo Niephorus read: for he has expreſſed Evagrius's words thus: ὁς τὸν τὸν τὸν, ὁσάνα ὁσάνα ὁσάνα, at that time, when he was driven from his own Monastery. Yet I wonder, that this was not perceived by the Tranſlators, to wit, Mafſulus and Chriſtopherſon. Valeſ.

<sup>2</sup> Nay; Anaſtaſius lived ſeven years compleat after this Sedition Valeſ.

THE FOURTH BOOK OF THE Ecclesiastical History

EVAGRIUS SCHOLASTICUS EPIPHANIENSIS,

And [one] of the EX-PRÆFACTS.

CHAP. I.

* Or, In Concerning the Empire of * Justinus Senior.

A Anastasius therefore being (as I have said,) translated to a better allotment, Justinus, by Extract a Thracian, vests himself with the purple Robe, on the ninth day of the month Panemus, which amongst the Romans is termed July, in the Five hundred sixty sixth year of Antioch's being styled a free City: he was declared [Emperour] by the Imperial Guards, of whom also he was Commander, having been made * Master of the Officers at Court. He obtained the Imperial Dignity beyond all expectation, in regard to, Nicephorus, there were many of Anastasius's relations, who were eminent personages, had arrived at the greatest fortunateness imaginable, and who had procured to themselves all that power which might have invested them with the Imperial Dignity.

Nevertheless, Jordanes in his Book de Successione Regnum, relates that Justinus was by the Senate elected Emperour, not from his being Master of the Office, but Comes of the Guards. To whom agrees the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle, and the *Old Chronicle*ographer whom I long since published at the end of Anastasi's History. Procopius (in his Anecdota, pag. 28.) speaking of the Emperour Justinus as yet a private person, writes thus; * Ἀναστάσιος δὲ αὐτῷ Ἀνακτοῦ βασιλεὺς κτισθέντος ἐπὶ ἐν παλατίῳ πολεμῶν, For the Emperour Anastasi had made him Comes of the Guards in the Palace. The same Procopius makes Justinus, not a Thracian, (as Evagrius, Cedrenus, and Zonaras do,) but an Asyrian, born at the Town Bederiana. Theophanes also says Justinus was an Asyrian. But I cannot enough admire at the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle, who although he makes him a Bederianite, yet terms him a Thracian-Valel.

CHAP. II.

Concerning the Eunuch Amantius, and Theocritus; and in what manner Justinus put these persons to death.

Moreover, there was [at that time] one Amantius the chief person of the Imperial Bed-Chamber, a man of great power [and interest.] Who, in regard 'tis unlawful for a man deprived of his Genitals [as he was,] to be posselt of the Roman Empire, was desirous of encircling Theocritus, a great Confident of his, with the Imperial Crown. Having therefore caused Justinus to be sent for, he gave him vast quantities of money, ordering him to distribute it amongst those who were most fit to effect this thing, and who might be able to invest Theocritus with the purple Robe. But Justinus having with this money purchased, either [the suffrages of] the people, or else the Benevolence of those termed The Guards, (For 'tis reported both ways;) invested himself with the Imperial Dignity. Forthwith therefore he * Or, De * takes off Amantius and Theocritus, together with some other persons.

CHAP. III.

In what manner Justinus slew Vitalianus by treachery.

But, he calls Vitalianus [then] * making, * ἐν τῷ [his Residence] in Thracia, (who had attempted to divest Anastasi of the Empire, to Constantinople: being afraid of his power, within his skill in relation to Military affairs, of the greatness of his Fame then [spread] amongst all men, and of the desire he had to obtain the Empire. But perceiving by a sagacious foresight that he could on no other terms bring Vitalianus within his own power, unless he should feign himself his friend; and having [for that reason] mask'd his face with a fraud not to be detected, he constitutes him Master of [of those Armies] termed The Present Militia.

He wrote, ἐν τῷ στασιάζει παύσθαι, making his Residence; and, that the two former words were omitted by Transcribers. The reading may also be ἐκωνομίσθαι, pinching his Tax, or, docting. Valel.

* Ἐν τῷ καλῶνται πρεσβυτέρω. There were two Armies in the Court of the Roman Emperour, who were called Presbiterii, in Greek, τὸ πρεσβυτέρω. These were commanded by two Magistri Militum, who were termed in Presbiterii, or Prætorales. And in the Eastern Empire, one of these Commanders was a Magister of Foot, the other of Horse. But in the Western Empire, each of them of the East; as the Notitia of the Roman Empire informs us. That Ephraemius was adorned with this dignity, we are told by Johannes Moschus in chap. 37. of his Limnerion; where his words are these: Es tempore vir clementis, & misericordie operibus deditus Ephraemius Conus Orentis erat, &c. At that time Ephraemius, a person of great clemency, and addicted to works of compassion, was son of great clemency, and added to works of compassion, was Comes of the East, and by him the publick Buildings were repaired: for the City had been ruined by an Earthquake. Florus also attests the same, in his Bibliotheca, chapter 28. Valef.

<sup>a</sup> This Isidore excited Ephraemius <sup>b</sup> then Comes of the East, to take all possible Care, that the City might want nothing of those things that were necessary. Which person the Inhabitants of Antioch admired in this very account, and chose him their Bishop. Ephraemius therefore obtains the Apostolic Chair, which was allotted to him as the Reward and Recompence as <sup>c</sup> were of such his providence [towards that City.] Thirty months after this, Antioch was again afflicted with Earthquakes: <sup>d</sup> at which time also it [changed its name, and] was called Theopolis; and the Emperour made provision for it by all other care and diligence whatever.

<sup>e</sup> Tellis Isidore and then also, &c. I would rather read, Isis Isidore, as which time also, &c. Which is the reading in the Tellis Manuscript, and in Nicephorus, who writes, that in Justinian's Reign Antioch had that name given it. The same is attested by Stephanus Byzantinus in the word Isidore, and by Theophanes in his Chronicon. This latter Earthquake happened on the twenty ninth day of November, in the seventh Indiction, two years after the former Earthquake, as Theophanes relates pag. 151; or rather thirty months after the former Earthquake, as Eugarius says truly. For, to many months are reckoned from the twenty ninth of May in the year of Christ 526, to the twenty ninth of November in the year of Christ 528. In which year the Seventh Indiction began to be reckoned from the month September. Whence, that appears to be most true which I have remarked before, viz. that that former Earthquake happened at Antioch on the year of Christ 526; and not on the year 525, as Baonius thought. And yet Baonius has rightly placed the latter Earthquake on the year of Christ 528; which is true. For, whereas he follows Eugarius's Calculation, he ought to have placed that Earthquake on the year 527: in regard the former Earthquake had happened at Antioch on the year 525 of Our Lord's Nativity. Valef.

CHAP. VII.

Concerning Zosimas and Johannes who were Workers of Miracles.

BUT, in regard we have mentioned the fore-said Calamities, come on, we will also insert
some other passages, worthy to be remembered, into this our present Work; which passages were brought to our knowledge by those who saw them. There [was] one Zosimas, a person who exercised himself in a Monastick life, by Extract
a Phœnician, of that Phœnicie termed Maritima;
the place of his Nativity was Sinde, a Village distant from Tyre not full out twenty furlongs. This man, by his abstinence from and use of meats, and by other virtues of his life, had in such a manner <sup>a</sup> possessed himself of God, that he could not only foresee things future, but had also received [from God] the Gift of <sup>b</sup> being free therefore from all manner of perturbation of mind. Being therefore [one time] in the City Cæsarea, which is the Metropolis of one of the Palestines, at the house of <sup>c</sup> a perage of eminency; (his name was Arceflaus, a Person nobly Descended and Learned, and one who had arrived at Honours and those other [accomplishments] which adorn the life of a man:) at that very instant of time wherein Antioch was ruined [by the Earthquake,] this Zosimas all on a sudden grew sad, mourned and sighed deeply, and shed so great a quantity of tears that he wetted the Earth. He also asked for a Censer, and having burnt Incense all over that place where they stood, he prostrates himself on the Ground, in order to his appeasing God with Prayers and Supplications. Then Arceflaus asking him, what that was which troubled him so much, he answered in express words, that the Noise of the Ruin of Antioch just then rang in his Ears. In so much that Arceflaus and those then present, being stricken with an amazement, wrote down the Hour, and found afterwards, that it had so hapned as Zosimas had declared. Several other wonders were wrought by this person; the multitude whereof I will omit, in regard they are even more in number than can be told; and will mention only some of them:

There flourished at the same time with this Zosimas, a man by name Johannes, for virtues like to <sup>a</sup> Arceflaus, him; who had exercised a Monastick and <sup>b</sup> inmate— a life full of matter.

<sup>b</sup> Xo. xxi. Chuziba. So also the reading is in Nicephorus, and Ortelius has retained the same reading in his Theophrastus Geogra-phicus. But in the excellent Eureline Manuscript it is Chuziba; which is doubtless true. For so Johannes Moschus terms that Laura in chap. 24. quo autem venisset in Beroam, & moraretur in Cellis Cusibus, &c.
But when he was come into the Desert, and abode in the Cells at Cusiba, he performed the same works of mercy. For he went through the high way which leads from Jordan to the Holy City.
Where tis observable, that those are termed Cells by Moschus, which Eugarius calls a Laura.
Indeed, a Laura was nothing else but Cells of Monks dispersed here and there, as I have remarked above, at book 1. chap. 21. note (b.) yet Moschus (chap. 24.) call it the Monastery Chuziba.—Valef.

<sup>c</sup> This Johannes was first Abbot and Presbyter of the Monastery Chuziba; whence he had the surname of Chuzibite. But afterwards he was made Bishop of Cæsarea, as (besides Eugarius)
Johannes Moschus informs us chap. 24. Valef.

<sup>d</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>e</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>f</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>g</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>h</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>i</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>j</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>k</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>l</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>m</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>n</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>o</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>p</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>q</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>r</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>s</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>t</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>u</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>v</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>w</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>x</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>y</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>z</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>aa</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ab</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ac</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ad</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ae</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>af</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ag</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ah</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ai</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>aj</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ak</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>al</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>am</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>an</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ao</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ap</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>aq</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ar</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>as</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>at</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>au</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>av</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>aw</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ax</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ay</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>az</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ba</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bb</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bc</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bd</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>be</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bf</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bg</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bh</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bi</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bj</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bk</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bl</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bm</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bn</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bo</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bp</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bq</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>br</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bs</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bt</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bu</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bv</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bw</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bx</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>by</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>bz</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ca</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cb</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cc</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cd</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ce</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cf</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cg</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ch</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ci</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cj</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ck</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cl</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cm</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cn</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>co</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cp</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cq</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cr</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cs</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ct</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cu</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cv</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cw</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cx</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cy</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>cz</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>da</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>db</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dc</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dd</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>de</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>df</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dg</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dh</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>di</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dj</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dk</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dl</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dm</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dn</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>do</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dp</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dq</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dr</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ds</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dt</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>du</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dv</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dw</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dx</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dy</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>dz</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ea</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>eb</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ec</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ed</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ee</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ef</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>eg</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>eh</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ei</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ej</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ek</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>el</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>em</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>en</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>eo</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ep</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>eq</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>er</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>es</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>et</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>eu</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ev</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ew</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ex</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ey</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ez</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fa</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fb</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fc</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fd</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fe</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ff</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fg</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fh</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fi</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fj</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fk</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fl</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fm</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fn</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fo</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fp</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fq</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fr</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fs</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ft</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fu</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fv</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fw</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fx</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fy</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>fz</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ga</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gb</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gc</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gd</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ge</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gf</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gg</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gh</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gi</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gj</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gk</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gl</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gm</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gn</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>go</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gp</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gq</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gr</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gs</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gt</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gu</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gv</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gw</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gx</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gy</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>gz</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ha</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hb</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hc</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hd</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>he</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hf</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hg</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hh</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hi</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hj</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hk</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hl</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hm</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hn</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ho</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hp</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hq</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hr</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hs</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ht</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hu</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hv</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hw</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hx</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hy</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>hz</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ia</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ib</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ic</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>id</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ie</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>if</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ig</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ih</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ii</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ij</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ik</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>il</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>im</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>in</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>io</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ip</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>iq</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ir</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>is</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>it</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>iu</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>iv</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>iw</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ix</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>iy</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>iz</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ja</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>jb</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>jc</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>jd</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>je</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>jf</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>jj</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>jh</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ji</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>jj</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>jk</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>jl</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>jm</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>jn</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>jo</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>jp</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>jq</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>jr</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>js</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>jt</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ju</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>jv</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>jw</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>jx</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ji</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>jj</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>jk</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>jl</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>jm</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>jn</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>jo</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>jp</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>jq</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>jr</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>js</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>jt</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>ju</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>jv</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>jw</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>jx</sup> Or, Fol-
lowed.

<sup>ka</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>kb</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>kc</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>kd</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ke</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>kf</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>kg</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>kh</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ki</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>kj</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>kk</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>kl</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>km</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>kn</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ko</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>kp</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>kq</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>kr</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ks</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>kt</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ku</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>kv</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>kx</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ky</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>kz</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>la</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lb</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lc</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ld</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>le</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lf</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lg</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lh</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>li</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lj</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lk</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ll</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lm</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ln</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lo</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lp</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lq</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lr</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ls</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lt</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lu</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lv</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lw</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lx</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ly</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>lz</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ma</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mb</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mc</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>md</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>me</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mf</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mg</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mh</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mi</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mj</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mk</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ml</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mm</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mn</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mo</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mp</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mq</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mr</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ms</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mt</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mu</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mv</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mw</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mx</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>my</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>mz</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>na</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>nb</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>nc</sup> Or, Followed.

nd Or, Followed.

<sup>ne</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>nf</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ng</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>nh</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ni</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>nj</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>nk</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>nl</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>nm</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>nn</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>no</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>np</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>nq</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>nr</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ns</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>nt</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>nu</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>nv</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>nw</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>nx</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ny</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>nz</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>oa</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ob</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>oc</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>od</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>oe</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>of</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>og</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>oh</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>oi</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>oj</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ok</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ol</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>om</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>on</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>oo</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>op</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>oq</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>or</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>os</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ot</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ou</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ov</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ow</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ox</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>oy</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>oz</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pa</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pb</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pc</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pd</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pe</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pf</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pg</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ph</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pi</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pj</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pk</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pl</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pm</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pn</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>po</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pp</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pq</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pr</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ps</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pt</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pu</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pv</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pw</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>px</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>py</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>pz</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>qa</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>qb</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>qc</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>qd</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>qe</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>qf</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>qg</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>qh</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>qi</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>qj</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>qk</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>ql</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>qm</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>qn</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>qo</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>qp</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>qq</sup> Or, Followed.

<sup>qr</sup> Or, Fol-

CHAPTER IX.

How Justinus whilst he was yet living, took Justinianus to be his Colleague in the Empire.

THE same Justinus having passed the eighth year of his Empire, <sup>a</sup> and also nine months <sup>b</sup> The Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle says, that his Sifters Son is made his Collegue in the Empire, being proclaimed on the first [day of the month] Xanthicus, or April, in the Five hundred seventy fifth year of Antioch's being stiled a free City. And when these affairs had proceeded in this manner, Justinus removes from his Empire here [on earth,] * having ended his life on the first day of Louis, or the month August, when he had reigned four months with Justinianus, and had <sup>b</sup> held the Empire [as well alone, as with a Collegue] nine compleat years [c<sup>a</sup> one month,] and three days. [Further,] months when Justinianus was invested with the sole Government of the whole Roman Empire, and the Synod at Chalcedon had been asserted over all the most Holy Churches, by the order of Justinus, as I have related; [the affairs of the Ecclesiastick constitution were as yet disturbed in some Provinces, and especially at the Imperial City, Constantinople, and at Alexandria: Antimus then Governing the Bishoprick of Constantinople, and Theodosius presiding over the Church at Alexandria. For which both [these Prelates] asserted one Nature [in Christ.]

But the Justinus entered on the Empire on the ninth day of July, in the year of our Lord's Nativity 518. From which time to the Calends of April in the year 527, there are eight years, and as many months, together with nine and twenty days. But if we follow Cedrenus, who relates that Justinian was made Augustus by Justinus on the fourteenth of April, then the Computation of the Alexandrian Chronicle will be most certain. Vale.

<sup>b</sup> The disiunctio harvaris apud in the Tellerian Manuscript, I found it written, disiunctio harvaris apud and had held the Imperial Government, or, the Empire: which reading pleased me best. Vale.

<sup>c</sup> From Eusebii's own Computation 'tis apparent, that these words [one month] must be added here. For in regard he has said a little before this, that on the Calends of April of this year, the eighth year of Julianus's Reign was completed, and that he had reigned over and above, nine months and three days; the consequence is, that on the Calends of August of the same year, nine years were passed together with one month and three days. Whence 'tis Collected, that Julianus's Reign is to be begun from the twenty eighth day of June, according to Eusebii's Sentiment. Valdf.

CHAP. VIII.

Concerning the Universal Calamities.

During the same Justinus's Governing the [Roman] Empire, that [City] now named Dyrrachium (which was anciently called Epidamnus,) was ruined by an Earthquake. As was likewise Corinthus, situate in Achaia. Anazarbus also, the Metropolis of the Second Cilicia, [suffered] a fourth Calamity of this sort. Which Cities Justinus rebuilt by the expence of a vast sum of Money. In these very same times also, Edessa a City of the Ossien, which was vastly great and rich, was drowned by the waters of the torrent of the Scirtus which runs hard by it; in so much that most of the houses were beaten down, and an innumerable multitude of men destroyed, whom the water carried away. Edessa and Anazarbus had their [ancient] names changed by Justinus; for both those Cities were adorned with * his own name.

CHAP. X.

How Justinianus favoured those who embraced the Chalcedon Synod. But [his Wife] Theodora was a Lover of the Contrary party.

Justinianus indeed courageously defended the [ Fathers ] which had been convened at Chalcedon, and the Expositions they had made. But his Wife Theodora [ favoured ] them who asserted one Nature: whether it were ἑστὶν ὁ θεός διὰ τὴν φύσιν αὐτοῦ, because they themselves really thought so. ἡμεῖς δὲ οὕτως ἐκρίναμεν. I think it should be worded thus; εἰτε ὁ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀληθοῦς λόγου ἐξήρταν, whether it were because they themselves really thought so. For the sense requires this reading. Nicephorus in no wife understood the meaning of this passage. But Mulsinus has explained it excellently well in this manner: Sive autem sic verē sentiebant, sive sic dispensatione quādam inter ipsos convenerat; But whether they really thought so, or whether it had been so agreed amongst themselves by a certain dispensation. Christoferson has followed Mulsinus, and began a new period from these words, in this manner. Sive igitur ita reverēsentiant, &c. Whether therefore they really thought so, &c. But we have joynd them with the foregoing words. Valē.

* Or, Who
dwelt in Tents.
He meant the Sara-
cens.
† Or, About him.

* Or, With a vehemency of affection.
† Or, Land of the Romans.

* Or, Endless, or, boundless.
† Procopius.
|| Or, Watchword.
† Or, Watchword.

* Εὖ τῶ
νὴν τέρει;
In this mischief,
or, here-

THE same Procopius, in his book wherein he has related the Affairs of the Vandals, gives a Narrative of † strange things, and which deserve for ever to be kept in memory by Men; Or, The which matter I come now to relate. Humericus who succeeded Gisericus in the Kingdom, in regard he embraced [ the Tenets ] of Arius, behaved himself most barbarously towards those Christians in Africa; forcing them who asserted the Orthodox Opinions to [ retract and ] turn to the Opinion of the Arians. And if any refused to obey his Commands, he destroyed them by fire, and infinite other sorts of death. But he ordered the Tongues of some of them to be cut out. Procopius affirms, that he himself his design; by the Inducement of Proclus, who sate Quæstor to [ the Emperour ] Justinian, the Feud against the Romans was increased. Fur-

* Or. Scit. 484. self <sup>3</sup> saw these Persons when they were at Constantinople, to which City they had fled; and that he conferred with them [and heard them] speak in such a manner as if they had suffered no such thing; [and he says.] that their Tongues indeed were cut out from the very root; but, that they had an articulate Voice, and spake distinctly: [which thing was] a wonder new and unusual. The Constitution of * Justinian mentions these Persons also. Two of whom Lapsed, as the same Procopius relates. For in regard they would not converse with Women, they were deprived of their Voice, and the grace of Martyrdom continued not any longer with them.

* Or. Scit. 484. In the Greek Text of * Justinian mentions these Persons also. Two of whom Lapsed, as the same Procopius relates. For in regard they would not converse with Women, they were deprived of their Voice, and the grace of Martyrdom continued not any longer with them.

CHAP. XV.

Concerning Cabaones the Moor.

* Or. Scit. 484. Moreover, [Procopius] * relates another admirable passage, which was wonderfully effected by God [our] Saviour, amongst Men who were strangers indeed to our Religion, but who behaved themselves piously and holily at that time.

He says, that Cabaones was King of those Moors about Tripoli. This Cabaones, says he, (for I think fit to make use of Procopius's own words, who has elegantly related these matters, as well as others;) having received Information, that the Vandals would undertake an Expedition against him, he behaved himself in this manner. In the first place he ordered his Subjects, to abstain

* Or. Scit. 484. from all manner of Injustice, and * from dainty food and delicious Dishes; but most especially from the company of Women. Then, he pitched two Camps, in the one he himself encamped, together with all the Men: but within the other he shut up the Women, and threatened he would inflict a punishment of death upon any one that should go into the Women's Entrenchment. After this, he sent || Spies to Carthage, to whom he gave these Orders: That if the Vandals, when on their Expedition, should * desire any Oratory † wherein the Christians worshipped, they should make an Inspection into what was done. But, when the Vandals were removed from that place, [he enjoined them] to do all things that were the quite contrary, to that Church out of which the Vandals had made their Removal, and were gone. † It is reported that || he said this also, That he was indeed ignorant of that God whom the Christians worshipped: but 'tis probable, says he, as if he be a strong and powerful [God,] as he is said to be, that he will be revenged on those who injure [his Deity,] and will assist his Worshipers. The Spies therefore, when they were arrived at Carthage, con-

* Or. Scit. 484. tinued there, and * viewed the Preparation of the Vandals: But when their Army had begun their Expedition towards Tripoli, † they put themselves into a mean garb, and followed them. The Vandals on the very first day [of their march] made Stables of the Christian Oratories, into which they brought their Horses, and their other Beasts; omitting the performing no sort of Contumely whatever: also they themselves gratified * their usual unwilfulness, cuff† their Christian Ministers whom on they could take, tore their backs with many stripes, and commanded them to wait on them. But Cabaones's Spies, as soon as ever the Vandals had removed from those places, performed what they had been ordered to do. For they cleansed the Churches immediately, with great care carried away the dung and whatever else had been irreverently put therein, lighted all the Candles, paid the highest Reverence imaginable to the * Ministers, and were indulgent to them in all other instances of kindness and beneficence. Then, they distributed Money amongst the indigent, who sat about those sacred Houses; in this manner they followed the Army of the Vandals. And the Vandals from this very time throughout their whole Expedition committed such impious Facts as these: but the Spies made it their business to apply remedies thereto. But when the Vandals drew near [towards the Moors] the Spies hastened and told Cabaones, as well what the Vandals, as what they themselves had done to the Churches of the Christians, and [informed him] that the Enemy approached. Cabaones hearing this, put his Army into a posture fit to engage. Most of the Vandals, as 'tis said, were destroyed: many of them were taken by the Moors, and very few of that Army returned to their own homes. This overthrow Thrasamundus suffered from the Moors: and not long after this he ended his Life, when he had reigned seven and twenty years over the Vandals.

CHAP. XVI.

Concerning Belisarius's Expedition against the Vandals, and their total overthrow.

The same Procopius relates, that Justinian (in compassion to those Christians who suffered grievously there,) declared [he would undertake] an Expedition [into Africa;] but by the suggestions of Johannes the Praefectus Praetorio, he was diverted from that Design. Yet, he was afterwards admonished in a * Dream, not to desist from that Invasion. Concerning this Vision which appeared to Justinian in his sleep, Victor Tancoung writes thus: Justiniano Aug. IV. Cof. Justinianus Imper. Pfectus Leri, Soc. Justinianus Augustus being the fourth time Consul. Tot Emperor Justinianus, by a Vision of Leri the Bishop who was with a Martyr by Hunericus King of the Vandals, sends an army into Africa against the Vandals, under the Command of Belisarius Master of the Palace. Victor Vitenfis made mention of this Leri Bishop in his first book De Persecutione Vandalorum. Further, concerning this Expedition of Justinian into Africa against the Vandals, Marcellinus Comes speaks also in his Chronicle, and places it on the Fourth Consulate of the same Justinian, that is on the year of Christ 534. Marius Averecensis relates the same in his Chronicle. But Baronius in his Annals reproves Marcellinus, and maintains that the Expedition was undertaken by Justinian in his Third Consulate, on the year of Christ 533. Justinian's Constitution de Confirmatione Digestorum (which is prefixt before the Work of the Pandects,) confirms Baronius's Opinion. But, by Baronius's favour, I think the Opinion of Marcellinus and Victor to be truer. Nor do I doubt, but a fault has crept into Justinian's Constitution, (on the Authority whereof Baronius relies,) and that the Third Consulate of the Emperor Justinian was written by Transcribers of Books instead of the Fourth. And this Justinian himself does so manifestly shew in the fore said Constitution that I think it was not perceived by Baronius. For thus Justinian speaks: Legum autem nostrarum, quas in his Ceditibus, id est, Institutionum & Digestorum, posuimus.

primus, &c. But our Laws which we have put in these Codes, that is of the Institutions and Digests, [shall] obtain their strength from [our] third most happy Constitute of the present twelfth Indiction, on the third of the Calends of January, and shall be of force for ever. For on the twelfth Indiction Justinian bore his Fourth Consulate, as Marcianus Comes attests. But, faine one will object, that the twelfth Indiction was begun from the Calends of September, in Justinian's third Consulate. Therefore, we must have recourse to another Argument, to prove what I have said above; viz. That the Vandalick Expedition was begun on Justinian's Fourth Consulate; and that that Constitution whereon Barontius's Opinion is founded, was written in Justinian's Fourth Consulate. Now, this may be proved thus. In the end of the foresaid Constitution, as well in the Greek as Latine, Justinian makes mention of a Prefectus Prætorio of Africa. But a Prefectus Prætorio of Africa was first created by Justinian in his Fourth Consulate, a little before the Calends of September of the Thirteenth Indiction, as the First Law of the Code de Prefecto Prætorio Africa inform us. For Justinian speaks in this manner: Hec igitur magnitudo tua cognoscens, ex Calendis Septembris future decima tertie Indictionis effectui mancipari procuret. Vale.

For [he was told,] that in case he would give the * Or, As Christians assistance, he should ruine * the Kingdom of the Vandals. Incouraged by this Dream, <sup>b</sup> Ecdusas this Barontius's words out of the first book of his Vandalicks pag. 107, are these: "Ecdusas id est * autorem ex ægypto exoriturus, &c. Which words import, that his seventh year was already past. Now, if we should say that the Vandalick Expedition was undertaken in Justinian's Third Consulate, as Justinian's words do wholly seem to persuade (when about the Summer Solstice, the Roman Navy came up to the Byzantine Port, and soon after set sail from thence (as Procopius relates,) that is about the end of the month June;) Justinian was then in the seventh year and third month of his Empire. For the first day of Justinian's Reign is brought from the Calends of April. But if we should place the Vandalick Expedition on Justinian's Fourth Consulate it will be the eighth year of his Empire; and not the seventh, as Procopius writes: wherefore Barontius's Opinion is true; which is confirmed both by the Emperour Justinian's Authority, and also by the testimony of Procopius. Vale.

* Or, Be Church * without that City, near the Sea-Shore, and besides other Religious respects [by them paid to him,] they also celebrate an Anniversary Festival, which they term Cypriana; and hence the Mariners are wont to call that Storm (which I have even now mentioned,) by the same name with this Festival, because it usually rages at that very time, whereon the Africans are accustomed respectfully to celebrate that Festival. In the Reign of Hunericus, the Vandals took this Church from the Christians by force, drove the Priests out thence with great ignominy, and afterwards

* altered it, in regard it was come into the possession of the Arians. The Africans being vexed and highly displeased on account hereof, they say that Cyprianus appeared and visited [them] frequently in [their] sleep, [and said to some of them,] that the Christians ought in no wise to be solicitous about him: for that he himself in process of time would be his own Revenger. Which Prediction was completed in the times of Belisarius; when Carthage by the Commander Belisarius was reduced to a subjection to the Romans, after the Ninety fifth year of its being lost: when also the Vandals were totally vanquished, the Heresy of the Arians was perfectly driven out of Africa, and the Christians recovered their own Churches, according to the Martyr Cyprianus's Prediction.

de Officio Præfedi Prætorio Africa, are these: "De Africa per nos tam brevi tempore reciperet Libertatem, ante nonaginta quinque annos a Vandalis capta; That Africa should by Us receive its Liberty in so short a time, having been captivated by the Vandals ninety five years before. Marcellinus Comes in his Chronicon relates, that Carthage was taken by the Romans on the ninety sixth year of its being lost. But Victor Tumenensis affirms that Africa was recovered by the Romans under the Command of Belisarius, on the ninety seventh year of the Vandals entrance into it. Vale.

C H A P. XVII.

Concerning the Spoils which were brought out of Africa.

The same Procopius hath recorded this passage. When Belisarius (says he) having vanquished the Vandals, was returned to Constantinople, bringing along with him the Spoils, the Prisoners of War, and Gelimeres himself King of the Vandals; a Triumph was granted him, [at which time] he lead through the Cirque all things that were worthy of admiration. Amongst which there was a vast Treasure; for Gizerichus had heretofore plundered the Palace at Rome, (as has before been related by me,) at such time as Eudoxia Wife to Valentinian Emperour of the Western Romans, (having both lost her Husband by Maximus's means, and also been injured as to her Chastity,) had sent for Gizerichus, promising he would betray the City to him. At which time [Gizerichus] burnt Rome, and carried away Eudoxia with her two Daughters into the Country of the Vandals. When also, together with other Treasures, he made plunder of whatever Titus, Son to Vespasian, had brought to Rome, after his Conquest of Jerusalem; to wit, Solomon's Gifts, which he had dedicated to God. Which Gifts Justinian sent to Jerusalem again, in honour to Christ our God; whereby he exhibited a due honour to God, to whom they had been before dedicated. Procopius says also, That Gelimeres, lying then prostrate on the ground in the Cirque, over against the Emperour's Throne whereon Justinian sat, and beheld what was done, uttered this divine Oracle in his own Country Language, Vanity of Vanities, all is Vanity.

C H A P. XVIII.

Concerning those Phœnicians who fled from the Face of Jesus the Son of Nave.

Moreover; [the same Procopius] relates another thing never mentioned by any Author before him, which is most admirable, * and transcends almost all belief. He relates * Or, And therefore, that The Moors, a Nation of the African-Transcends cans, removed out of Palestine, and took up their habitation in Africa: and, that they are those [People] whom the sacred Scriptures do mention [by the names of] Gergeshites and Jebusites, and those other Nations who were vanquished by Jesus the Son of Nave. And he supposes this thing to be unquestionably true, from a certain Inscription cut in Phœnician Letters, which he affirms that he himself read. [This Inscription he says,] is to be seen near a Fountain;

tain, where two Columns of white Marble are erected, on which these words are cut: WE ARE THEY WHO FLIE FROM THE FACE OF THAT THIEF JESUS THE SON OF NAVE. And this was the conclusion of these transactions; Africa was again reduced to a subjection to the Romans, and paid in the Annual Tributes, as it, had usually done before. 'Tis moreover reported, that Justinian repaired an hundred and fifty Cities in Africa, (some whereof were wholly ruined, and others, as to their greatest part) and, that he made them most transcendently more magnificent than they had been before, [beautifying them] with an eximious Splendideſs, with Ornaments, and with Structures as well private as publick; with the Inclosures of Walls also, and with other vast Edifices, wherewith Cities are both usually adorned, and also [wherein] the Deity is appeased; with plenty of Waters likewise, as well for use, as ornament; some of which Waters were first brought into them by him, the Cities having not had them before; and others he reduced to their ancient course and order.

CHAP. XIX.

*Or, Then derichau. Concerning *Theodoricus the Goth, and what hapned at Rome under him till the times of Justinian, and, that Rome was again reduced to a Subjection to the Romans, after Vitiges had fled out of the City.

I Come now to declare the affairs which were transacted in Italy, and these Procopius the Rhetorician has with great accuracy related till his own times. After Theodoricus, as it has * Book 3. Chap. 27. * already been declared by me, had taken Rome, (having wholly vanquished Odoacer who tyrannized therein;) and had governed the Roman Empire as long as he lived; Amalasuntha, who had been his Wife, undertook the † Tutelage of † Guardias p. † Atalarichus Son to them both, and governed the Empire; she * was a Woman of a Masculine Spirit, and in this manner she managed affairs. This Woman first incited Justinian to a desire of a Gothic War, having sent Embassadors to him, in regard a Plot was framed against her. Further, when Atalarichus had ended his Life, which he did whilst very young, * Theodatus Kinsman to Theodoricus takes upon himself the Administration of the Western Empire. Who, when Justinian had sent Belisarius into the western parts, relinquished his Government; (for being a Person addicted rather to Books and Study, he was wholly unexperienced in Military affairs;) Vitiges a most Warlike Person being in the interim Commander in Chief of the Western Forces. From the History of the same Procopius we may extract this also, that when Belisarius arrived in Italy, Vitiges left Rome; and, that Belisarius with his Army about him made his approach to Rome. Whom the Romans received most willingly, and opened their Gates to him; that having been chiefly effected by Silverius then Pontiff of that City; who on this account had sent Fidelis a Person that had been Assessor to Atalarichus. Thus the City was delivered up to Belisarius without an Engagement: and Rome was again brought to a subjection to the Romans, after [the space of] sixty years, on the ninth of the month Apellatus, which the Latines term December, when Justinian was in the eleventh year of his Empire. The same Procopius relates also, that when the Goths besieged Rome, Belisarius having a suspicion that Silverius Pontiff of that City would betray it, † condemned him to † Or, Carried him away into Greece. a Deportation into Aethia; and made Vigilius Pontiff in his stead.

CHAP. XX.

How those [People] termed The Eruli turned Christians in the times of Justinian.

About these very times, as the same Procopius relates, The * Eruli (who long before had passed the River Danube, at such time as Anastasi Governed the Roman Empire;) having been kindly received by Justinian who enriched them with great wealth, by a general consent turned all Christians, and changed their pristine way of living for a more civilized and quieter course of Life.

of his Gothicks, and Theopanes in his Chronicon, p. 149. These People, in regard they lived near the Lake Mæotis, in Fenny places, were from thence first termed Eluri. For En in Greek signifies Fens, or Fenny places. Jordanes in his Book de rebus Geticis, writes thus concerning The Heruli: Nam prædicta Genti, Abbas Historico reference, &c. For the foresaid Nation, as Abbas the Historian relates, dwelling near the Lakes of Mæotis, in Fenny places, which the Greeks term Ele, were named Eluri. The Author of the Etymologicum says the same in the word Ægæi. Helmodus in his Chronicon of the Slavi, chap. 1. affirms that these Heruli were a Slavick Nation, who dwelt between Albia and Odra, and reach'd a great way out to the South in a long Bay; who also, as he writes, were by another Name termed Heldi. Valt.

CHAP. XXI.

That Belisarius recovered [the City] Rome, which had been again taken by the Goths.

After this Procopius sets forth Belisarius's return to Constantinople, and how he carried Vitiges along with him, together with the Spoils taken out of Rome; also, Totila's seizure of the Roman Empire, and how Rome was again reduced under the Goths Dominion; and, that Belisarius arriving the second time in Italy, recovered Rome again. And how, when the Persian War broke out, Belisarius was again sent for to Constantinople by the Emperour.

CHAP. XXII.

That the Abasgi, turned Christians also in those times.

The same [Writer] relates, that about these very times the Abasgi became more civilized, and embraced the Christian Religion; and, that the Emperour Justinian sent one of the Eunuchs belonging to his Court, by descent an Abasgian, his name Euphrata, amongst the Abasgians, to declare to them, that no one in that Nation should in future have his Genitals cut off with an Iron; nor, that a force should be put upon Nature. For out of these the Servants of the Imperial Bed-Chamber were for the most part chosen, whom they usually term Eunuchs. Then also Justinian built a Church [in honour] of The Theotocos amongst the Abasgi, and constituted Priests amongst them. And from thence forward [The Abasgi] learned

*Or, The ned *The Dogmata of the Christians with the opinions. greatest accuracy imaginable.

CHAP. XXIII.

That the Inhabitants of Tanais also at that time embraced the Christian Religion; and concerning the Earthquakes which hapned in Greece and Achaia.

IT is related by the same Writer, that the Inhabitants of Tanais (those who dwell in this Region, term that Stream [which runs] out of the Lake Maeotis, untill [it falls] into the Euxine Sea, Tanais;) earnestly entreated Justinian to send a Bishop to them; and, that Justinian *Εὐαγρίῳ τῷ τῷ ἴδιῳ. I doubt not but Evagrius wrote Εὐαγρίῳ τῷ τῷ ἴδιῳ ἱεροκλήδῳ ἀντιόχει, and that Justinian brought their petition to effect. For thus Nicephorus words it, book 17. chap. 13. Valef.

*Οὐδ' ἄρ' ἐκ τῆς Μαοτίης ἐκ τῆς Ῥωμαίων Πελοποννήσου [he declares] also, that there hapned dreadful Earthquakes in Greece, Boetia, and Achaia, and, that the places about the Crisean Bay were shaken, and, that innumerable other Towns and Cities were totally ruined. That there hapned likewise Chasms of the Earth in many places: and, that in some places the Ground closed and came together again: but, that in others, [those Chasms] continued.

CHAP. XXIV.

Concerning Narfes a Master of the Milice, and his Piety.

*Προκοπίῳ τῷ ὁρ. Com. mand of the Army. HE relates likewise Narfes's † Expedition, who was sent into Italy by Justinian; and in what manner he Conquered Totila, and after him Teia; and how Rome was taken the Fifth time. Further, those persons who had an intimacy with Narfes do report,

|| We have rendered this Clause, as far as the next full point, according as we found it pointed in Robert Stephens's Edition; the punctuation in Valef's Edition (as the Learned Reader will easily observe,) puts a sense upon these words far different from that we have expressed in our Version.

Engage: and that he should not give the Onset, before he had received the Signal from †Exod. 17. 13. thence. Many other actions, which deserve that is, Ca. great commendation, were performed by Narfes, from †Exod. 17. 13. for he vanquished Busestinus and Sindrinus, and reduced many [Regions,] as far as the Ocean, [to the Roman Empire.] Which †Exod. 17. 13. have [Actions] Agathias the Rectorician has rendered it: corded; but as yet they are not come to our hands.

†Exod. 17. 13. it, as Iud. from her, to wit, The Virgin Mary:

CHAP. XXV.

That Chosroes, Stimulated with Envy at the prosperous successes of Justinian, broke out into a War against the Romans, and ruined many Roman Cities, amongst which [he destroyed] Antioch The Great also.

THE same Procopius has related these matters also, how Chosroes, after he had received information that affairs both in Africa and Italy had succeeded so fortunately to the Roman Empire, was excessively inflamed with envy: and objected some things against the Roman Empire, affirming that the League was violated [by them,] and that they had broken the Peace which had been agreed on [between the two Empires.] And, that in the first place Justinian dispatch'd away Embassadors to Chosroes, who might persuade him not to break that Intermittate Peace [which had been made] between them, nor to violate the Articles of agreement, but rather that the matters in controverfie might be inquired into, and compos'd in an amicable manner. But he says, that Chosroes, corroded by envy which stimulated him within, would accept of none of those rational propals; but with a numerous Army made an Invasion into the Roman Territories, in the Thirteenth year of Justinian's Governing the Roman Empire. [The same Procopius] relates likewise, how Chosroes laid Siege to and destroyed *Sura a City situate on the Banks of The Euphrates, [with the Inhabitants whereof] he seemingly made some Articles of agreement, but dealt with them far otherwise, [perpetrating] all the most Impious and nefarious Facts [amongst them,] having not in the least heed'd the Articles of agreement; and was made Master of that City by Treachery rather than his *Arms. Also, how he burnt *Or, War. Beræa; and after that [made] an Attack upon Antioch, Ephraim being then Bishop of that City, who had left it, *in regard nothing of what he did, succeeded according to his design. Which [Prelate] is reported to have preserved the Church and all [the Edifices] about it, having adorned [the Church] with sacred Gifts, [on this design,] that they might be the price of its Redemption. Moreover, [the same Writer] also gives a most pathetic and lively description of the Siege of Antioch, laid to it by Chosroes, and how Chosroes [becoming master of it] ruined and destroyed all things with Fire and Sword. Also, how *he went to Seleucia a neighbouring City [to Antioch,] then to the Suburb Daphne; and after that to Apamea, Thomas then Governing the Chair of that Church, a person [admirable and] most powerful both in words and deeds. This Prelate wisely refused not to be a Spectator, together with Chosroes, of †The Cirque-Sports in the Hippodrome, (though that was a thing contrary to the usage of the Church;) [it being his desire] by all imaginable ways to gratifie Chosroes, and *Μακεδόνες ἀντιόχει τῶν ἱεροκλήδῳ. I have corrected this place from the Tellurian Manuscripts, and from Nicephorus, in which author it is written thus: Μακεδόνες ἀντιόχει τῶν καὶ ἐμὴν ἀντιόχει. In regard nothing of what he had succeeded according to his design, or, desire. See Procopius Book 2. Persic. where he says, that Ephraim the Bishop was falsely accused for having a design to deliver up Antioch to the Persians; and, that soon after he fled into Cilicia, being afraid of the Irruption of the Persians. But concerning the Ornaments given by Ephraim to the Church of the Antiochians, there is not a word extant in Procopius. Valef.

*Chosroes; Seleucia a neighbouring City [to Antioch,] then to the Suburb Daphne; and after that to Apamea, Thomas then Governing the Chair of that Church, a person [admirable and] most powerful both in words and deeds. This Prelate wisely refused not to be a Spectator, together with Chosroes, of †The Cirque-Sports in the Hippodrome, (though that was a thing contrary to the usage of the Church;) [it being his desire] by all imaginable ways to gratifie Chosroes, and

* Or, Byner * by degrees upon the wood and on the earth, and making nearer approaches to the City, he raised it to so vast a height, and made it surmount the City-wall so far, that from an higher place he could throw darts against those who in defence of the City endangered themselves on the wall. The Besieged therefore, when they saw the Rampire (like a Mountain) coming near and approaching the City, and were in expectation that the Enemy would set foot into the City; very early in the morning attempted to work a Mine directly opposite to the Rampire which by the Romans is termed an Aggeffa; and put fire therein, to the end that, the wood being consumed by the flame, the Rampire of Earth might fall to the Ground.

† See Procopius (son of whom Evagrius borrowed) book 2. Perse. pag. 82. In what manner these Aggeffa were built by the Romans, Apollodorus informs us incomparably well in his Mechanick. Which Book, being lately done into Latine by me, by Gods assistance I will ere long publish, together with some other Writings of the same subject. Valef.

* Or, They And that work was brought to perfection. But, <sup>† Or, Their</sup> after they had kindled the fire, * their project proved unsuccessful, in regard the fire had not a passage, whereby the air being let in, it might catch hold of the heap of wood. Being reduced therefore || to the greatest Non-plus imaginable, they bring forth * that Image framed by God, which the hands of men had not made; but Christ [our] God had sent it to Agbarus, in regard <sup>† Or, Agbarus</sup> Agbarus desired to see him. Having carried this most holy Image therefore into the Mine which they had made, and † sprinkled it with water, they cast [some] of the same [water] upon the pile of fire and on the wood; and immediately (the Divine power giving assistance to their Faith who had done this,) what had before been impossible to them, was brought to effect. For the wood forthwith received the flame, and being in the twinkling of an eye reduced to coals, transmitted it to the wood which lay above, the fire preying all about upon all things. Now the Besieged, when they saw the smoak breaking out above, made use of this device. They brought forth little † Stone-bottles, and having stufed them with Brimstone, Tow, and other matter which would readily take fire, they threw them upon that termed The Aggeffa: which Bottles, (the fire kindling within them by the force of their being thrown,) raised a smoak, and thereby effected this, [to wit,] that it was not perceived that a smoak broke out of the Rampire. For all persons who were ignorant hereof, supposed, that the smoak came out of the Bottles rather than from any other place. On the third day after this therefore, the small Tongues of Fire appeared coming forth out of the earth, and then those of the Perfians who fought † upon the Rampire, were sensible what imminent danger they were in. But Chosroes, as if he resolved to make a resistance against the Divine power, turned the Aggeffa which were before the City, upon the pile of fire; and attempted to extinguish it. But, the fiery pile received the water as if it had been rather Oyl, or Brimstone, or some such matter as is † combustible, and was much more increased, till such time as it had destroyed the whole Rampire, and perfectly reduced the Aggeffa to ashes. Then therefore Chosroes, disappointed of all his hopes, and being experimentally sensible, that he had gotten great disgrace by supposing he could vanquish that God worshipped by us; made an inglorious return into his own Territories.

C H A P. XXVIII.

Concerning the Miracle which was performed at Sergiopolis.

MOREOVER, I will relate another thing, which was done by [the same] Chosroes at the City Sergiopolis; in regard 'tis [a passage] worthy to be recorded, and in reality deserves to be consigned to eternal memory. For Chosroes came to this City also, and attempted to take it by a Siege. After therefore he had made an Attacque against its walls, † the Inhabitants came to a Parley with him about a preservation of the City. And it is agreed [at length reference on both sides,] that the sacred Treasure and Gifts [which had been dedicated to the Church] should be the Ranfome of the City; amongst which [gifts] was that * Crofs also which had been sent thither by Iustinianus and Theodora. After these things had been brought to Chosroes, he asked the Priest and those Perfians who had been sent with him [into the City on that account,] whether there were any thing remaining. Then a certain person of those not accustomed to speak the truth, returned answer to Chosroes, that there were other sacred Gifts of great value, which were concealed by the Citizens who were very few in number. Now, of [the sacred Treasure] which was brought out [of the City to Chosroes,] nothing of value had been left behind consisting either of Gold or Silver, but of another sort of matter more precious, and which was wholly dedicated to God; to wit, the most holy Reliques of the Victorious Martyr Sergius, which lay in a certain oblong Chest covered over with Silver. When Chosroes, perswaded hereby, had sent his whole Army to the City, on a sudden, round the whole Circuit [of the City walls] there appeared an innumerable multitude of Souldiers, who with Bucklers defended the City. Which [Apparition] those sent by Chosroes having beheld, returned, and with admiration declared both their number, and their kind of Armour. But Chosroes, after on a second enquiry he understood that very few persons were left in the City, and those either very aged or very young, the men of strength and vigour being all cut off and destroyed; found that the Martyr was the Author of this Miracle. And being [on this account] put into a fear, and having admired the Faith of the Christians, he returned into his own Kingdom.

† Or, There was a contention of the City. And it is agreed [at length reference on both sides,] that the sacred Treasure and Gifts [which had been dedicated to the Church] should be the Ranfome of the City; amongst which [gifts] was that * Crofs also which had been sent thither by Iustinianus and Theodora. After these things had been brought to Chosroes, he asked the Priest and those Perfians who had been sent with him [into the City on that account,] whether there were any thing remaining. Then a certain person of those not accustomed to speak the truth, returned answer to Chosroes, that there were other sacred Gifts of great value, which were concealed by the Citizens who were very few in number. Now, of [the sacred Treasure] which was brought out [of the City to Chosroes,] nothing of value had been left behind consisting either of Gold or Silver, but of another sort of matter more precious, and which was wholly dedicated to God; to wit, the most holy Reliques of the Victorious Martyr Sergius, which lay in a certain oblong Chest covered over with Silver. When Chosroes, perswaded hereby, had sent his whole Army to the City, on a sudden, round the whole Circuit [of the City walls] there appeared an innumerable multitude of Souldiers, who with Bucklers defended the City. Which [Apparition] those sent by Chosroes having beheld, returned, and with admiration declared both their number, and their kind of Armour. But Chosroes, after on a second enquiry he understood that very few persons were left in the City, and those either very aged or very young, the men of strength and vigour being all cut off and destroyed; found that the Martyr was the Author of this Miracle. And being [on this account] put into a fear, and having admired the Faith of the Christians, he returned into his own Kingdom.

For Philostratus admires; which reading nevertheless I approve not of. But who this Philostratus should be concerning whom Eusebius speaks, and where he should have written this, 'is uncertain. Philostratus an Athenian Historian is mentioned by Georgius Syncellus in his Chronicon, on, on the first year of the Emperor Aurelian. Valel.

Θη will not be happ ask, On the right hand and on the left, * opposite to what the [ Arches ] are placed Pillars, framed of the Thessalick Stone: and they bear up * Hyperæa, which being underpropt by other such like Columns, give a liberty to those that are derisive of looking down from on high upon The Mysteries. To which place also the Emperors comes on Holidays when he is present at the Sacred performance of The Mysteries. But the [ Columns placed ] at the East and West, * are so left, that there should be nothing which might hinder the admiration of so vast a Greatness. The Porticus's of the forementioned Hyperæa, finish so great a Work with Pillars as here are and small Arches. Further, that the Miracle of this Structure may be plainer and more manifest, I have resolved to infer here the [ number of ] Feet, both of its Length, Breadth, and Height, as likewise the empty spaces, and height also of held by no the Arches. The Measure therefore is this. The Columns length from that Door opposite to the Procoptus † Or gate. Sacred * Concha, where the unbloody Sacrifice is offered, unto the [ Concha ] it self, is an hundred and ninty Feet: the breadth from North attels this to South, One hundred and fifteen Feet: the concerning * height from the Center of the Hemisphere to the Pavement, is an Hundred and eighty Feet. The breadth of each of the Arches is * . . . . . Feet. The length from αὐτῶν δὲ οὐκ ἔστιν ἀλλὰ ἐπὶ τῇ αὐτῇ πρὸς τὴν ἀντικείμεν πύλινον; But two of the Arches were raised up into the empty Air, at the rising and at the setting Sun. Valef.

ὁ δὲ τὸν ἀντικείμενον. Translations have rendered this Place very badly. Musæus turns it thus: In dextro latere ad sinistram ordinatae sunt in istis Columnis. In the right side on the left hand Columns are placed in them. Christophorus interprets it in this manner: In dextro latere sunt domini hyperæa et ad levam Columnæ ordine locatae. &c. In the right side, on the left hand to a Man going in. Pillars are placed in order, &c. They were led into a mistake by the omission of one Conjunction, [to wit, &] and which is wanting in Rob. Stephens's Edition; ] which we have put in from the Florentine Manuscript. In this manner, ἐν δεξιῇ ὁ ἕξ καὶ πρὸς τὸν ἀντικείμενον. On the right hand and on the left, &c. It remains now that we explain what those words mean which follow next; οὐκ ἔστιν ἀλλὰ ἐπὶ τῇ αὐτῇ πρὸς τὴν ἀντικείμεν πύλινον. Evagrius himself therefore shall be his own Interpreter; who (in his first Book Chap. 14.) describing the Sacred Church of Symeon the Stylite, says it consisted of four Porticos. [ But, by Valefius's favour, Evagrius's words in that Chapter are these; ἐν τῇ τεταμένῃ πρὸς τὴν ἀντικείμεν πύλινον, beautified with Porticos's of [or, at the] four sides. And then he adds these words, πρὸς τὴν ἀντικείμεν πύλινον, &c. That is, opposite to [or, near to] those Porticos's are placed Pillars; wherefore at this place, instead of αὐτῇ, I would more willingly read αὐτῇ; to wit, by understanding the term ἄλλαν, Arches, Valef.

* These Hyperæa [ Galleries, or, Upper Rooms ] were designed for the Women, that being therein placed apart by themselves, they might behold the solemn performances of the Divine Service, as Paulus Silentarius relates in his Description of Saint Sophia; which Author says, that those Upper Rooms or Galleries, were upheld by six Columns of Thessalick Marble; whereas nevertheless, there were only two Columns below, which upheld the Galleries; pag. 110. Paulus terms them ὑπερῶν ὑψώματα, The Women's Hyperæa; in like manner as our Evagrius does here, and also Procopius in his first Book, where he describes this Church of Saint Sophia: altho' Procopius rather terms them Porticus's. Valef.

† By these words Evagrius sets forth the difference which was between the Columns of the Church of Saint Sophia. For he says, that the Columns which were at the right and left side of the Church, that is, at the North and South, had Galleries or Chambers laid upon them, out of which the Faithful might behold the Sacred Mysteries which were celebrated at the Altar. But the Columns which were placed at the East and West, upheld no Gallery, but were left naked. It was my sentiment that these things were to be more largely explained; for this reason, because I perceived Translators, especially Christophorus, saw nothing here. Valef.

* Ἐν τῇ ἀντικείμεν πύλινον τὴν ἑξῆς κίβητος. He means, I suppose, the most Easterly part of the Church; which, because the whole Structure was a Tholos, must be almost semicircular, or made in the form of a Shell.

† In Rob. Stephens's Edition, as likewise in this of Valefius's, there is an imperfection in the Greek Text here. Curtius, Grynæus, Christophorus, and D<sup>r</sup> Hammer in their Versions, have inserted this number Sixty six, from what Authority I know not. Musæus and Valefius leave a Blank here in their Versions; the latter of whom says nothing concerning this in perfection in his Notes.

East to West [ contains ] Two hundred and sixty Feet. * The breadth of their Light is Sixty five Feet. There are besides at the West the Description of two other Porticus's very splendid, and Open Courts on all sides of an admirable Beauty and Gracefulness. The same Justinian built the Church of The Divine Apostles, which will not readily give precedence to any other Temple. In which Church the Emperours and the Prelates are customarily interred. But, concerning these and such things as these, let thus much every way [ suffice ] to have been said.

published, pag. 254. Paulus Silentarius describes these Windows, in his Ecephrasia, (which the most Learned Perlon Carolus de Fraxino hath newly published;) and Procopius, in his first book De Edificiis, Valef.

† Sozomen says the same in the Close of his second Book of Ecclesiastical History. But, (which is to be taken notice of,) neither of them (neither Evagrius nor Sozomen,) do affirm it was peculiar to the Constantinian Bishops, that they, in like manner as were the Emperours, should be buried in the Church of the Apostles; but they speak in general concerning the Bishops. Indeed Nicephorus (book 8. chapter the last.) does expressly attest, that not only the Constantinopolitan, but other Bishops also, who for sanctity of Life had excelled others were interred there. For it often hapned, that Bishops, either sent for by the Emperours, or making a journey to the Imperial City, on account of Ecclesiastick Affairs, ended their Lives there. Thus in the times of Anastasis, Aleissus and Gajanus died at Byzantium, and by Marcellinus in his Chronicon, are recorded to have been buried in one Sepulcher. Valef.

CHAP. XXXII.

Concerning the Emperour [ Justinian. ] mad- * Or, To nefs rather than kindness [ shown * towards ] the Faction [ the Blue Colour. ] of the Venetian.

† There was also another thing in Justinian, a Envy that exceeded the utmost ferity of Savage [ the words of the Brevet. ] Beasts: ( which whether [ it proceeded ] from a fault of Nature, or from Sloth and fear, I cannot say; but, it took its beginning from that popular Sedition [ termed * Nica. ] For he seemed so † highly to favour the one of the Factions, I mean that [ of the Venetian, ] that they committed murders upon Persons of the contrary Faction at noon-day, and in the midst of the City; and not only feared not punishments, but also obtained rewards: in so much that hence it hapned, that many were made Murderers. Moreover, a liberty was indulged them of entering even into Houses, of plundering the Riches laid up therein, and of selling [ miserable ] Men their own safety. And if any one of the Magistrates had attempted to punish them, he endangered his own safety. 'Tis certain, a Personage who was Comes of the East, because he had ordered some seditious Persons to be beaten with † Bow-strings, he himself was lead through the midst of the City and scourged with Bow-strings.

* See Chap. 13. † Manifestly, or, openly. ‡ Ἰὼν κινῶντες, Those of the Blue.

† Nica: The term signifies originally a Nerve, or, Sinew; it imports also a Bow-string, or, Rope.

Callinicus likewise Governor of Cilicia, because according to the Prescript of the Laws he had inflicted a capital punishment upon two Cilician Murderers, Paulus and Fausinus, who fell upon him and would have murdered him; was Crucified, undergoing this punishment on account of his great prudence in passing Judgment

* Or, Sallustius renders these words: Profratrum, the given colour, faction, i Justitiam.

ment, and of [his observing] the Laws. Hence it hapned, that * those of the other Faction, having fled out of their own Country, and finding reception amongst Men whatever, but being drivet from all places as persons most detestable; beset Travellers, and committed Rapines and Murders: and all places were filled with untimely deaths, Robberies, and such like horrid and impious Crimes. But sometimes † he turned to the contrary opinion, and slew the Petentians themselves; subjecting them to the Laws, to whom he had given permission of perpetrating nefarious Facts, in a Barbarick manner, throughout every City. But, to give a particular Narrative of these matters, is a thing above Relation or [any compass of] time: nevertheless, these things [I have mentioued] are sufficient for the making a conjecture concerning the rest.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Concerning Barfanuphius the Asceta.

AT the same time, Divine persons, and such as were Workers of great Miracles, lived in various parts of the world: but such of them, whose Glory shone every where, [were thus termed.] Barfanuphius by extract an Egyptian: This person led an unseelhy life in the flesh, in a certain Monastery near the Town Gaza: inasmuch that he performed many Miracles, and such as are superiour to [any] Relation. Moreover, 'tis believed that he lives at this present, shut up in his Cell; although Fifty years and upwards are now past, since he hath been seen by any person, or has pertaken of any thing that is upon the Earth. Which things Eusebius Prelate of Jerusalem <sup>a</sup> disbelieving, when he had ordered the Cell, wherein this man of God had inclosed himself, to be dug open, a fire brake out thence, which burnt almost all persons that were there present.

<sup>a</sup> Augustine says, in the Verb [Eusebius] believing [which undoubtedly is corrupted, Nicephorus makes use of disbelieving. And instead of Eusebius Bishop of Jerusalem, the same Nicephorus has Sallustius. Sallustius was indeed Bishop of Jerusalem in the Reign of Constantine Augustus. But Eusebius governed the same Bishoprick about the beginning of Justinian's Empire, as Theophrastus attests in his Chronicon. Valef.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Concerning the Monk Symeon, who for Christ's sake [feigned himself] a Fool.

Moreover, at [the City] Emisa there was one Symeon: this person had in such a manner divested himself of the Garment of Vain-glory, that amongst all persons who knew him not, he was accounted an Idiot, although he abounded with all manner of wisdom and divine Grace. Further, this Symeon for the most part lived alone by himself, allowing no person whatever a Liberty of knowing, either when or in what manner he † prayed to God; not [permitting them to know] at what time he abtained from, or partook of nourishment at home. At some times being abroad in the streets, he seemed * to be a person distracted, and to have nothing of prudence or wisdom in him.

† Or, Remitted the Duty P. o Phisius

* Extr recedit recedit

† Doubtless it must be made recedit, as the reading is in Nicephorus, book 17. chap. 22. Valef.

At other times he would go into a Virtualling-house, and eat of whatever food or provision he met with, when he was hungry. But, if any person bowed his head and revered him; he would immediately run from that place in anger, being afraid that his own Virtue should be found out by the Vulgar. And in this manner Symeon behaved himself in the Forum. But there were some persons that held a familiarity with him, with whom he usually conversed without any thing at all of dissimulation. Amongst those of his acquaintance therefore, one had a maid, who having been debauch'd and got with child by some person, when she was forced by her Masters to declare the man who had done this, she affirmed that Symeon had had to do with her in private, and that she was with child by him, and that she would swear that the matter was so, and (if need should require,) could manifestly prove the thing. Which when Symeon had heard, he assented, saying that he carried flesh about him, which was a frail and mutable thing. But when this matter came to be divulged amongst all persons, and Symeon (as it seemed) was obnoxious to a great ignominy, he withdrew himself, and feigned that he was ashamed. When therefore the Woman's time of delivery was come, and she sat in the usual posture of women in Travail; her Labour caused most acute, many, and intolerable pangs, and brought the woman into the imminent danger of her life. But the Birth * fell not in the least. Symeon therefore being delightedly come thither, when he was requested [by those present] to go to Prayers, he declared before them all, that the woman should not be delivered, until she would confess who was the Father of the child in her womb. Which when she had done, and had named the true Father, the Infant leapt forth immediately. Truth it self doing [as twere] the office of a Mid-wife. The same person was one time observed to go into the house of a Strumpet, and having shut to the door, he and the continued alone for some time; after this he opened the door again, and ran away in great haste, looking round lest any one should see him, whereby he much increased the suspicion. In so much that the Persons who had seen him, brought forth the woman, and enquired of her, both what the meaning of Symeon's coming in to her was, and why he made so long a stay. The woman swore, that for three days before that, because of her want of necessities, she had tasted of nothing but water only: but, that Symeon had brought victuals and meat and a Vessel of Wine along with him, and having shut the door, had spread the Table, and bad her go to supper, and fill herself with provisions, because she had been sufficiently afflicted with want of nourishment; and she fetch'd out the Remains of the victuals [which Symeon] had brought to her. Further, some small time before that Earthquake hapned which shook Phoenice Maritima, wherein * Berytus, Emisa, Byblus and Tripolis, suffered more [than other quakes, the Cities, the same Symeon] holding a whip on Antoninus high in his hand, scourged most of the Columns Martyr's in the Forum, and cried out, Stand, You must stand. Because therefore nothing was done unadvisedly and without design by this man, speaks in some <sup>b</sup> The Ludick were wont to bow their heads, not only before the Bishops and Presbyters, but before the Monks also, to receive their Blessing. An Multitudo instance of which is extant in Saxomen, book 8. chap. 13. Valef.

* Or, Was not in the least forwarded.

<sup>c</sup> Concer ring this Author of Antoninus Martyr's in the Forum and cried out Stand, You must stand Because therefore nothing was done unadvisedly and without design by this man speaks in some

these words: Inde Venimus in partes Syrias, ubi requiescit sanctus Leontius, &c.

some persons present at his doing hereof, took particular notice of those Columns, which he passed by, and did not scourge: which Pillars fell not long after, being ruined by the Earthquake. Moreover, he did very many other things, the Relation whereof requires a peculiar Treatise.

820. Tunc we came into the parts of Syria, where Saint Leontius rests, which City, together with other Cities, was ruined by an Earthquake in the time of the Emperor Justinian. From thence we came to Bihlus, which City also, with all things that were therein, was destroyed. From thence we came into the City Triari, which was likewise ruined. Thence we came into the most splendid City Beryto, wherein there was lately a study of Learning; which was also ruined, as we were told by the Bishop of the City, to whom the persons were known, except the fragments who perished there. Further, that City wherein Saint Leontius rests, is Trijoli, as I have remarked before, book 3. chap. 33. note, (c.) This Earthquake hapned on the twenty fourth year of Justinian's Reign, as Cedrenus writes in his Chronicon, and Theophanes pag. 192. What those Authors relate concerning Bory a City in Phoenice, is memorable, viz. that in that City there was an Haven made by that Earthquake, (thus having been no Port there before,) the Promontory which was called Lithoprosopon being removed. But in Theophanes's written Βόρυς, instead of Βόρυς. By which fault in the writing the Translator was induced to render it Bolras, which is a very gross mistake; in regard Bolras is a Mid-Land City of Arakia. The name of this City is in my Judgment to be reformed in Ananinus Martyr's Itinerary, at that place which I have quoted above. For, instead of the City Triari, it must be written Bory. Valef.

CHAP. XXXV.

Concerning the Monk Thomas, who in like manner feigned himself a Fool.

There was also at the same time one Thomas, who followed the same course of life in Syria-Cæle. This person went [one time] to Antioch, to receive the annual stipend [allotted for the maintenance] of his own Monastery.

* Τὸν μὲν δὲ ἐν τῇ δόξῃ ἐκείνῃ. Who would not admire, that three Learned men should have been mistaken in the Remission of this place? Τὸν μὲν Λαύριον translates it thus: Monachus Ecclesiæ cæsariensis, for he was reckoned of that Church. And Μεθυστα renders it almost in the same manner. But Chrysostomus has translated it worth of all, thus: ab eâ signat, in Ecclesiâ Presbyter fuerat ordinatus, for he had been ordained Presbyter by that Church. These persons thought that these words [ὁ Ζωγῆς, this Thomas] were here to be understood; whereas we are to understand ὁ Ζωγῆς, this annual stipend, or Annus which was given yearly to be distributed out of the Revenues of the Church of Antioch to the Monastery of the Abbas Thomas. Valef.

† Or, Gree.

* Τελωνιον translated to the Mcches, Hospital of the Infirms at the Daphnenian in his 1. Suburb, whilst he was on his Return home. Chap. 83. They laid his dead Body in the Monuments of the Strangers. But, in regard when one or two Thomas had been buried after him, Thomas's Body was dyed in the still above them, God shewing a great Mi-

Church of Saint Euphemia which was in the Daphnenian Suburb. Therefore the Church of the Blessed Euphemia, was near the Hospital, where in strangers were entertained: in such manner as we nowadays fee Churches joyed to Hospitals and Spitals. Further, Jobannes Metochus says, that this Thomas was the Apoecyristus, that is, the Procurator, of his own Monastery. For those were termed Apoecyristas, who managed the affairs of Monasteries and Churches, as Justinian informs us in his sixth Novel. Valef.

tracle, even after his death: for [the other Bodies] were removed and thrust down; * Maschius [the Inhabitants] admire this holy person, and declare [the thing] to * Ephraemius. Then his * Holy dead Body is removed to Antioch with a publick Festivity and [a Solemn] pomp, and is honourably buried in the Cemetery; having at its translation caused the Pestilential distemper, which then raged at Antioch, to cease. And the Inhabitants of Antioch do magnificently celebrate an anniversary Feast [in honour] of this [Thomas] till these our times. But let us † return to the † Or, Turn our course. * proposed Series of our * Present, or, opposite. History.

person Domnus, Valef.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Concerning the Patriarch Menas, and concerning the Miracle which hapned then to the Boy of a certain Hebrew.

Anthemius having been ejected (as I have * Book 11. * said,) out of the Chair of the Imperial Chap. 11. City, * Epiphanius succeeded in that Episcopate: and after Epiphanius, Menas; in whose times hapned a Miracle highly worthy to be recorded. There is an <sup>b</sup> ancient usage at Constantinople, that when a great quantity of the Holy parts of the immaculate Body of Christ our God are left remaining, [some] young Boys of their number who frequent the Grammar-Schools are sent for, that they may eat them. Which thing having hapned at that time, the Son of a * Glaf-maker (as to his opinion a Jew. * Or, Glaf-maker. was † called amongst the other Boys. This child told his Parents, who † Or, Tea enquired the reason of his stay, what had hapned, and what he together with other boys had tasted of. His Father, highly incensed and enraged, snatched up the boy immediately, and threw him into the Furnace of coals, wherein he usually formed Glafs. But his Mother fought for her son, and when she could not find him, she went all about the City mourning and * making great lamentation. And on the third day after standing at the door of her Husband's work-house, she called her Son by his name, † weeping and tearing herself. The Boy knowing his Mother's self voice, answered her out of the Furnace. She breaks open the doors, goes in, and fees her Son standing in the midst of the coals, the fire having not touch'd him in the least. The Child, when afterwards asked in what manner he had continued un-hurt, said, that a woman clothed in a purple Garment came to him frequently, gave him water, quenched the coals that were near him, and fed him as often as he was hungry. Which passage having been brought to [the hearing of] Justinian, he [ordered] the Boy and his Mother to be † Baptized in the Laver of

* We have taken notice of this mistake of Evagrius above at chap. 11. note, (c.) which Nicephorus has also corrected. But Nicephorus himself, whilst he commends Evagrius' error, has committed another. For he relates, that Menas was ordained by Pope Agatho, whereas he was ordained by Agathus in the place of Anthemius, as 'tis agreed amongst all persons. Valef.

* Nicephorus Callistus (Book 17. Chap. 25.) attests, that this Custom, (viz. that the Particles of the Sacred Eucharist which remained, were at Constantinople distributed amongst the Boys to be eaten;) continued even in his age; and he writes, that he himself, whilst he was a Boy and was frequently conversant in the Churches, partook of those parts. Valef.

* Αὐτὴν καλεῖται ἡ μάτηρ αὐτοῦ. Or, Tea herself with weeping.

* ἡ κοινὴ ταῦτα, ἐν τῷ βαπτισμῷ. Or, in the baptism.

of generation; and enrolled them amongst the Clergy: but his father, because he would not embrace the Profession of Christianity, was [by the Emperor's order] crucified in [the Suburb] <sup>a</sup> Syce, as designing to have murdered his own Son. These things hapned in this manner.

<sup>c</sup> Εὐλαβία ὁ Ἰωάννης ὁ Λαυρεντίος renders this place thus: Puerum cum matre dicens Regenerationis Lavacro addidit, deoque dicebat, He admitted the Boy with his Mother to the Divine Laver of Regeneration, and dedicated [them] to God. But Menasius and Christophorus have translated it far worse. For Menasius terms it, servavit, he kept, or preserved. But Christophorus has rendered it thus: Puerum cum matre Lavacro Regenerationis tingendum decernit, He decreed the Boy with his Mother to be baptized in the Laver of Regeneration. I doubt not but the place is thus to be rendered: Puerum simul ac matrem Regenerationis Lavacro baptizatos Clero adscripsit, He enrolled the Boy and his Mother, having initiated in the Laver of Regeneration, amongst the Clergy. Which must be understood in this manner, That the Emperor ordered that Boy to be reckoned amongst the Readers of the Church; but, commanded his Mother to be ordained a Deaconess, Valef.

<sup>d</sup> In this Suburb of the City of Constantine, punishments were heretofore usually inflicted on Criminals, as I have already intimated in my Notes on Book 28. Anm. Marc. lib. p. 362. Where to add a passage of Saint Jerome on his Commentaries on Matthe. 26th, which runs thus: Extra urbem enim & foras portam loca sunt in quibus truncantur caput dimittuntur, & Calvaria, id est, Decollatorum sumptere nomin. Valef.

CHAP. XXXVII.

Who were Bishops of the greater Cities at that time.

AFTER Menas, Eutychius ascends the [Episcopal] Throne [at Constantinople.] But at Jerusalem, after Martyrius, Salustius succeeds in that See, and after him, Helias. After Helias, Petrus; and after Petrus, Macarius; [whose Election] the Emperor approved * not of; so that he was [afterwards] ejected out of his own Chair: * For they affirmed that he asserted Origen's Opinions. After this [Macarius] therefore, Eustochius succeeded in that Bishoprick. After the Ejection of Theodosius, as has been related † above, Zoilus is declared Bishop of Alexandria. And when he was added * to [the Alexandrian Bishops] his predecessors, Apollinaris undertakes [the Government of] that Chair. After Ephraemius, Dominus is entrusted with the [Episcopal] Throne of Antioch.

* Or, Not in jst.
† Indeed, many Monks severed themselves from his Communion, because he was thought to assert Origen's Opinions.
One of their number was the Abbot Eteus, who was also called Bookēs, as Iohannes Moschus relates in the nineteenth Chapter of his Limousium. And yet Theophanes, in his Chronicon cap. 205, says, Macarius was ejected out of his See χριζομενῶ, that is, by subornation, fraud and calumny. But Theophanes relates that in a place wholly unfit and incongruous, to wit, in the Empire of Justinus Junior. Now, Macarius was ordained Bishop of Jerusalem on the year of Christ 546. and having after two years been expelled out of his See, Eustochius was substituted in his room on the year of Christ 548, as Baronijs relates. Nevertheless, Euseb. Timonenis differs herefrom, in his Chronicon. For he attributes eight years of the Episcopate to Macarius, and says that Eustochius was ordained whilst he survived, on the year before the Fifth Synod, that is on the year of Christ 552; and my Sentiment is, that this is true. Valef.

<sup>a</sup> Τὸ αὐτὸν ἵσχυον. The same is the Reading, in Nicephorus also, book 17. chap. 26. But do not think it can be said in Greek, αὐτὸν ἵσχυον. I write therefore, εἰς τὴν αὐτὴν ἵσχυον, &c. For, αὐτὸν ἵσχυον is understood. Valef.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Concerning the Fifth Holy Oecumenical Synod, and on what account it was convened.

DURING therefore Vigilius's precedency over the Elder Rome; whilst in the first place Menas, and then Eutychius [was Patriarch] of Constantinople; and whilst Apollinaris [was Bishop] of Alexandria, Dominus of Antioch, and Eustochius of Jerusalem; Justinian convenes the Fifth Synod, on this Account. The Assertours of Origen's Opinions abounding and growing powerful [in the Monasteries of Palestine,] and especially * in that termed The New Laura; Eustochius made it his whole business to eject them. And going to The new mentioned Laura he drove them all out, and purified them in the Life to a great distance, as being the common pest [of Mankind.] They, dispersed into several places, associated many Persons to their own paring this matter

Theophanes (though in an unfit place, to wit, in the Affairs of Justinus Junior,) writes thus: εὐσεβίου τὸ ἀναλῶν εἰς ἱεροσόλυμα, &c. But Eustochius removing to Jerusalem, out of that barred he bore to Apollinaris, Agatho and Macarius, ejected these Monks of the New Laura, at Origenists. And on this account he himself was also [afterwards] ejected, and Macarius was again restored to his own Chair. Baronijs thinks indeed, that Macarius was restored to his own See, a little before Eustochius's Ordination; and then, that Eustochius had obtained the See of Jerusalem again, because by his Legate he was present at the Fifth Constantinopolitan Synod on the year of Christ 552; as 'tis sufficiently manifest from our Evagrius, and from the Acts of the aforesaid Synod. But Baronijs was widely mistaken. For Macarius [Eustochius being ejected,] was restored to his own See long after the Fifth Synod, in Justinian's Thirty seventh year, on the Twenty fourth year after Basilus's Conulate; as Victor Timonenis relates in his Chronicon, who lived in those very Times, and could not be ignorant of that. Valef.

Theodorus furnished Asidas (Bishop of Casarea the Head-City of the Province Cappadocia; [a Prelate] resident with Justinian, faithful to him, and of whom the Emperor made great use; undertook the Patronage of these [Monks.] Upon * his making a disturbance therefore at the [Imperial] Palace, and terming [Eustochius's] Fact the highest impiety and wicked-impieties; Rufus Abbot of Theodosius's Monastery, * Cyrillus and * Conon [Abbot] of the [Monastery] of Saba (Persons of the chiefest note * amongst the Monastics, both for their own worth, and on account of the Monasteries over which they presided;) are sent to the Imperial City by Eustochius. They were accompanied with others also, not much inferior to them in dignity. And these Men resolved to debate concerning Origen primarily, and concerning Eutychius and Didymus. But Theodorus the Cappadocian, desirous of diverting them to another matter, * proposes to be debated the Cause of Theodorus [Bishop] of Mopuestia, and that menin Administration, &c. Which Cassianus, when he had completed his tenth month in his Administration, departed out of this life; after which the Monks commit the Prefecture to Conon. They command, but God, I suppose, moved the minds of the Monks to this. Now he was a person highly eminent for true Sentiments, all manner of Virtue and good Actions; who also made use of great care and diligence in his Prefecture. For he both collected these Fathers which had departed from thence, being ejected by the Origenists; and likewise erected and as it were renewed the Laura, which by those frequent Tumults and Wars of Heresicks, was now brought to its knees. Iohannes Moschus speaks of the same Conon Governor of St. Saba's Laura, in chap. 87. where he intimates, that he was an Acquaintance of Eustochius's Bishop of Jerusalem. Valef.

<sup>c</sup> Εὐσεβίου τὸ κατὰ Σεβαστείαν Superintendens the Cause of Theodorus. Liberatus relates the same in his Breviarj, chap. 25. Yet Liberatus says nothing concerning Rufus and Conon the Abbots sent by Eustochius to Constantinople. On the other hand Evagrius makes no mention of that Condemnation of Origen, which had been made by the Emperor Justinian by the Endeavour of Pelagius Apollinaris of the Roman See; to which Condemnation all the Patriarchs had subscribed; to wit, Zoilus of Alexandria, Ephraemius of Antioch, Petrus of Jerusalem; as Liberatus writes in the foregoing chapter: now, that hapned on the year of Christ 538. as Baronijs relates. But that Embassy of Conon, Rufus, and the other Palestine Monks, was sent to Eustochius by Constantinople on the year of Christ 551. For on that year Apollinaris was put into the place of Zoilus Bishop of Alexandria, as Baronijs affirms. But Eustochius, out of his hatred chiefly to Apollinaris Bishop of Alexandria, ejected the Monks of the New Laura out of their Monastery, as being Origenists; agreeable to what we have related above out of Theophanes. Valef.

* Or, Chapters. Hereto they also annexed whatever * Heads Origen's followers had [from their Masters] learned to assert; which [Heads] manifested both their agreements, as also their disagreements, and likewise their manifold error. Amongst these there was a Fifth Head [which contained] the Blasphemies broacht by some private persons of that termed The New Law; the Contents of which Head run thus. "Theodorus Afidas the Cappadocian said: If the Angels; poibles and the Maryrs do now work Miracles, and are in so great honour; unless in the Resurrection they shall be made equal to Christ, what manner of Resurrection shall they have?"

To my best remembrance I have noted the same fault somewhere before this. But the place comes not at present into my mind. Valf.

As far as may be gathered from these words of Evagrius, this Theodorus the Cappadocian was one of the Monks of the New Law, which was near the City Jerusalem. This therefore is the Theodorus, follower of Nummus the Origenist, who being afterward made Bishop of Cesarea in Cappadocia, openly undertook the patronage of the Origenists, as Cyrius Scythopolitanus relates in the Life of Simeon Saba. Further, whereas this Theodorus Bishop of Cesarea in Cappadocia acted the chief parts, as I may say, in the Fifth Confession in Synod, as may be seen from his Acts, how is he now accused in the same Synod as an Origenist? We may therefore not without Cause conjecture, that these things which Evagrius, Theophanes, and Cedrenus say were done in the Fifth Synod against Origen, were long after that Synod added to it, on account of the likeness of their Subject: but, were not done at that Synod. So also, the Acts of the Fifth Constantinopolitan Synod under Menas, against Anthemius and Zoaras, were wont to be joyned to this Fifth Oecumenical Synod, as Phocas attests in his Bibliotheca. The same thing may also be proved by what Evagrius subjoyns. For he says, that many impious expressions gathered out of the Books of Evagrius, Didymus, and Theodorus Mopsuestenus, were related to that Synod. Now, if these things had been done in the Fifth Constantinopolitan Synod, as Evagrius says, it would have been altogether superfluous and unuseful, to repeat those expressions of Theodorus, which had so often been reckoned up and condemned in the above said Synod. My Sentiment therefore is, that these things were acted against Origen in another Constantinopolitan Synod on the Year of Christ 538; then, when certain Monks of Jerusalem, who were favoured by Pelagius a Deacon of the Roman Church, and by Menas Bishop of Constantinople, presented a Libel to Justinian, containing certain Heads collected out of Origen's Books; and requesting of the Emperor, that those Heads might be condemned; as Liberatus tells us chap. 23. of his History. See Baronius at the year of Christ 538. Moreover, our conjecture is fully confirmed by what Evagrius writes a little before this; viz. that into those things done against Origen was inserted the Emperor Justinian's Letter to Pope Vigilius concerning the errors of Origen. These matters therefore were not transacted in the Fifth Constantinopolitan Synod on the Year of Christ 533. For on that Year Vigilius was at Constantinople; nor was there any need that Justinian should treat with him by Letters. Wherefore these things were done against Origen long before, to wit, then when Justinian, having received the Libel of those Palestine Monks, wrote a Letter to Menas Bishop of Constantinople concerning the errors of Origen; giving him order, that when he had assembled the Bishops that were present in the Imperial City, and the Abbots of Monasteries, he should condemn those errors. This Letter of Justinian's is extant in Greek and Latin, published at the end of the Fifth Constantinopolitan Synod. In a place altogether foreign and unfit. For it belongs not to the Fifth Constantinopolitan Synod which was celebrated on the Year of Christ 533, but to another Constantinopolitan Synod, which by the Emperor Justinian's order had been convened on the Year of Christ 538. Therefore Baronius has rightly placed that Letter of Justinian at that Year I have mentioned. Now at the close of his Letter Justinian affirms in express words, that he had also written a Letter to Vigilius Bishop of Rome upon the same Subject. For thus he says. Hec porro eadem scripsi non modo ad Sanctitatem tuam, &c. Moreover, we have writ in the very same things, viz. only to your Sanctity, but to the most Holy and most Blessed Vigilius also Pope and Patriarch of the Seinour Rome, and to all the other most Holy Bishops and Patriarchs, of Alexandria, Thopolis, and Jerusalem, that they might both take care of this matter, and also that these things may come to an end. Lastly, those Anathematismes which Nicephorus says were thrown against Origen's opinions in the Fifth Constantinopolitan Synod, occur in the self same words in Justinian's Letter to Menas, which was written long before the Fifth Synod, on the Year of Christ 538; as Baronius informs us from Liberatus. The same also may be proved from the Letter which Gregory the Great wrote to the Four Patriarchs in the beginning of his Epiiscopate. For, although he does expressly profess in that Letter, that with Veneration he gives Reception to the Fifth Constantinopolitan Synod, in which Letter some writings of Ibas, Theodorus, and Theodore are condemned; yet he says not one word concerning Origen's condemnation. Which certainly he would not have omitted, if Origen had been condemned in that Synod. Valf.

The same Fathers related several other Blasphemies of Didymus, Evagrius, and Theodorus, which with great diligence they had collected out of their Books. Further, some interval of time, after this Synod, "Eutychius is ejected, and Johannes is placed in the Chair of the Constantinopolitan Church in his room. This Johannes was born at Sirimis, which is a Village situate in the Cynegick Region, in the Antiochian Territory. These things are carefully written by Evagrius, who has disguised the Cause of Eutychius's deposition, lest he should in any wise offend the Memory of the Emperor Justinian. If any one be desirous of reading a complete Narrative of this matter, 'tis extant in Sirius in the Life of the Blessed Patriarch Eutychius, elegantly written by his disciple Euthathius, and in Nicephorus Book 17. Chap. 29. Baronius says that was done on the Year of Christ 544, which was the Emperor Justinian's last Year. Valf.

This is Johannes Scholasticus who has a Collection of Causes Extant. Victor Tunnenensis in his Chronicon, gives us this account of his Ordination: Anno 37. Imperii sui Justinianus Eutychium Constantinopolitanum Episcopum, &c. In the 37th Year of his Empire Justinian sends into Exile Eutychius Bishop of Constantinople, a Condemner of the three Heads, and of Evagrius the Hermist a Deacon, and of Didymus the Monk an Alexandrian Confessor, whose praises we have produced above from the authority of Isidore Men; and in his room makes Johannes Bishop a like [affair] of the same Error. Valf.

Ex vi. Valf. In the excellent Florentine Manuscript I found it written ἐκείνου, both here and in the following Chapter. Theophanes makes mention of this Manner or Villages, in his Chronicon, pag. 154; where he writes concerning Alamandrus's intrusion into Syria & Βαυρος (says he) τὴν ἐκὼν καὶ ἀποβῆναι ἐν τῷ ἀνατολικῷ ὁρίῳ καὶ τῷ ἀνατολικῷ ὁρίῳ; that is, And he burnt the outward parts of Chalcis, and [ruined] the Manner [or, Possession] Sirimis, and the Cynegick Region. In the Greek, instead of καὶ ἀποβῆναι, Chalcidon, I have mended it thus, καὶ ἀποβῆναι, Chalcis. Valf.

C H A P. XXXIX.

That Justinian * having forsaken the right * Or, Be Faith, asserted the Body of [our] Lord to be incorruptible. Or, Turned aside.

AT the same time Justinian † deflected from the right High-way of [Orthodox] Sentiments, and having entred a path untrodden by the Apostles and Fathers, fell into Thorns and Brambles. Wherewith being desirous to fill the Church, he mist of his design; the Lord having securely fenced * the High-way * with hedges not to be broken, that Murderers [and Thieves] might not break in, as if the wall had been slain and the Fence broken down: [and thus] he fulfilled the Prophets. Prediction. Johannes therefore, who was also termed Catechumenus, having † succeeded Vigilius in the Bishoprick of the Elder Rome, and Johannes born at Sirimis Governing the Constantinopolitan Church, and Apollinarius that of Alexandria, Anastasius successor to Domnus preiding over the Antiochian Church, and over that at Jerusalem * Macarius, who was again restored to his own Chair: This place is chiefly to be taken notice of against the Sentiments of Baronius, who believed Macarius was restored to his own See before the Fifth Constantinopolitan Synod. But this passage of Evagrius refutes Baronius's Opinion; Evagrius informing us here, that Macarius's Restitution was made long before that Synod. To Evagrius agrees Victor Tunnenensis in his Chronicon, in these words: Anno 37. Imperii Justiniani, &c. On the 37th Year of Justinian's Empire, Eutychius Bishop of Jerusalem who had been ordained whilst Macarius was alive, is ejected; and Macarius is again put into his own See. But Theophanes, in his Chronicon, places Macarius's Restitution on the times of Justinian's junior, as I have observed above. Valf.

* Or, The King's way. * Appollus desists, with unspeakable Hedges. In Nicephorus 'tis truer written thus, ἀπὸ τῶν ὁρίων, with Hedges not to be broken. Which writing the Belterian Manuscripts confirms. Valf. * Evagrius mistakes. For Johannes succeeded not Vigilius, but Pelagius was his successor. After whose death, Johannes undertook the Episcopate of the Church of Rome, on the Year of Christ 560. Valf.

* Justinian.

when * he had Anathematized Origen, Didymus, and Evagrius, after Eusebius's Deposition; Justinian writes that which amongst the Romans is called an Edit, wherein he has termed the Body of [our] Lord incorruptible; and incapable of Natural and irreprehensible † passions; affirming that [our] Lord ate in the same manner before his Passion, as he did eat after his Resurrection, his most holy Body having received no change or alteration from its very Formation in the Womb, neither in the Voluntary and Natural Passions, nor yet after [his] Resurrection. To which [Assertions] Justinian [resolved] to force the Prelates in all places to give their assent. But when all of them affirmed, that they earnestly expected [the Opinion of] Anastasius Bishop of Antioch, they [thereby] repress the [Emperour's] first Attempt.

† Or, Affections.

C H A P. XL.

Concerning Anastasius Archbishop of Antioch.

Moreover, this Anastasius [was a Person] both incomparably well skilled in the Sacred scriptures, and also accurate in his Morals and way of living: in so much that he would * take consideration about the most trivial matters, nor would he † be defunct at any time from a constancy and firmness, much less in things momentous, and which had a relation to the Deity itself. And he had * tempered his disposition so, that neither an easiness of access to and conference with him, might render him exposed to what was unmeet and inconvenient; nor should an Austerity and Rigour make him inaccessible in relation to what was fit and rational. In [conferences that were] weighty and serious, he was of a ready Ear, and fluent Tongue: But in [discourses that were] impertinent and superfluous he had his Ears perfectly shut. A bridle repress his Tongue in such a manner, that he † measured his discourse with reason, and rendered Silence far better than Talk. This Person therefore Justinian makes an Attack against, as against some inexpugnable Tower, and sets upon him with all manner of Engines; considering with himself, that if he could ruine * this [Tower], he should afterwards become Master of the City with ease, enslave the Doctrine of the true Faith, and lead captive the Sheep of

* Or, Observe.
† Or, Make an excursion.
* Or, Mixt

† Or, Directed his discourse by reason.

<sup>a</sup> ἡ τὴν τοῦ καὶ αὐτοῦ τῆς πόλεως τῆς Ἀντιόχειας In Nicephorus and the Tellurian Manuscript it is truer written thus, ἐν τῇ πόλει καὶ αὐτοῦ τῆς πόλεως If he could ruine this [Tower.] For so the Rules of Grammar require it should be. 'Tis a Metaphor drawn from Machines used in Sieges, where with Cities are wont to be assaulted. Further, concerning the constancy of this Anastasius Sinaita in defending the true Faith against the Heresy of the Aphthartodocite, Eusebius writes also in the Life of the Blessed Eutychius Patriarch of Constantinople, Valef.

Christ. But Anastasius by a divine height of mind raised himself so far [above the Emperour,] (for he stood upon a Rock of Faith not to be broken;) that by his own Relation sent to Justinian, he openly contradicted him, and in the same [Relation] demonstrated [to him] most Perspicuously and with great Eloquence, that the Body of [our] Lord was corruptible in passions natural and irreprehensible, and that the Divine Apofles and * Holy Fathers both thought * Or, Divine, and taught so. The same answer he returned to the Monks of the First and Second Syria, who had consulted him: and he confirmed the minds of all Persons, and † prepared for the Conflict, reciting daily in the Church that saying of that Vessel of Election; * If any one preach any other Gospel self unto you, than that you have received, though he * Galat. i. be an Angel from Heaven, let him be accursed, &c. Which [words] when all Persons had || weighed in their minds, a very small number only excepted, they imitated him. The same Anastasius wrote a <sup>b</sup> Valedictory Oration to the Antiochians, after he had received Information, that Justinian was resolved to send him into Banishment. Which Oration is deservedly delightful and admirable, for the elegance of its words, strange the abundance of its * sententious * Or, Sentences, the frequent Quotations of Sacred Scripture, and for the Accommodateness of the History.

person, should all mistake in the Rendition of one word. The Græci termed ὑποκρίσεις and ὑποκρίσεις λόγους, Valedictory, or Farwell *Oration*s, and have handed down to us the peculiar method of these *Oration*s, as I have remarked in my Notes upon Eusebius's Life of Constantine, book 3. chap. 21. note (A.) Valef.

<sup>c</sup> Καὶ ὁμοῦς † ἰστέλλει. Sir Henry Savil at the margin of his Copy has mended it, καὶ τὸ ὁμοῦς. For so the Rules of Grammar require it should be. But I have observed that the Rules of Grammar are sometimes despised by our Evagrius. Nicephorus, when he wrote out this passage of Evagrius, instead of the Conjunction Particle, substituted a Preposition, in this manner, καὶ τὸ ὁμοῦς † ἰστέλλει. Valef.

C H A P. XLI.

Concerning the death of Justinian.

But this Oration was not published, God having provided some better thing for us. For Justinian whilst he dictated a Sentence of Deportation against Anastasius and the Prelates about him, was invisibly wounded, and ended his Life, after he had reigned in all thirty eight years and eight months.

The End of the Fourth Book of Evagrius's Ecclesiastical History.

THE FIFTH BOOK
OF THE Ecclesiastical History
OF
EVAGRIUS SCHOLASTICUS EPIPHANIENSIS,
And [one] of the EX-PRÆFECTS.

CHAP. I.

Concerning the Election of [the Emperour]
Justinus, and concerning his Morals.

When therefore Justinian in this manner had fill'd all places with Disquietude and Tumults, and at the close of his Life had received the condign reward of such [Actings,] he departed to the infernal * punishments: but Justinus his Sister's Son, who was intrusted with the custody of the [Imperial] Palace, which [Grand Officer] the Roman Tongue terms * Curopalates, is invested with the purple after his [death:] neither Justinian's departure, nor the Election of Justinus having been made known to any person, save to those that were his Confidants, till such time as he appeared at the * Ludi Circenses, † in order to his performing and undertaking what usually belongs to an Emperour.

* Or, Running of Horses in the Circus.
† Or, about to do and perform, submit himself to the to repeat usages of an Empire.
which here is superfluous; we will remark this only, that the Curopalates always went before with a Golden Rod, as often as the Emperour would appear in publick. Cassiodorus tells us this in his Formula Curopalati, in these words: Considera quia Gratificatione tractaris, &c. Consider with what Gratification you are treated, how being adorned with a Golden Rod, amongst numerous obsequants, you seem to go first before the Royal feet. So also Corippus in Book 2. Chap. 7. De Laudibus Justinii Minoris; where he describes Justinus's procession to the Circus [in these words,]

Tunc ordine longo
Incedunt summi proceres, fulgensque Senatus,
Ipse inter primos vultu præclarus honoris,
Fratris in obsequium gaudens Marcellus abibat.
Dispositæque novus sacre Baduarius Aule,
Successor Socræ, factus max Curopalates.

Concerning this Golden Rod which was wont to be carried before the Roman Emperours, Paulus Silentarius speaks, in his description of the Church of Saint Sophia, not far from the beginning.

Ὁρμήδου δὲ
Ὁ χρυσοῦν ἡν ἰστέον διὰ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἀνέκτων

For I assent not to that Learned man, who hath rendered it; Auricus Socrates, Golden Axes. And at first this dignity was final, for it was under the dispose of the Castrensium [See Dr. Howell's History, Second part, pag 64.] of the Sacred Palace: But afterwards it began to be accounted the chiefest dignity of the Palace, from such time as Justinus Nephew to Justinian bore it. It was a Civil, not a Military dignity, as Alemannus thought; who (in his Notes on Procopius's Historia Arcana,) confounds the Curopalates with the Comes Excubitorum. Valef.

After these [Solemnities] therefore were over, when nothing of an * opposition had in any wise attempted [against him,] he returned to the Palace. [By] the first Edict he promulg'd, the * Prelates who had been convened in all places, were sent home to their own Sees, in order to their worshipping God in the usual and received manner, no Innovation being made in relation to the Faith. And this Action done by him was highly commendable. But, as to his Life, he (book 17. chap. 33.) was dissolute, and * altogether a slave to Luxuries and † obscene pleasures: so ardent a lover also of other mens money, that he sold all things for illegal gain; and revered not the Deity even in the Ecclesiastick preferments, which he made his markets of to any persons he could meet with, and publicly propos'd even these to sale, by * Justinian into various places Vices, Boldness and Sloth, in the first place he caus'd his * kinsman Justinus to be sent for, a for their personage of an universal honour and esteem, both for his skill in Military affairs, and for those other dignities [which he had born:] he at that time made his residence about the Danube, and hinder'd the Avari from passing that River. Justinus can not bear this interpretation. Therefore Christophorus chose to interpret this place concerning the Bishops, who from all places had been assembled together at Constantinople. But neither can I approve of this Rendition; in regard Evagrius says those Bishops were not convened at Constantinople, but ἐκ πανταχῶς, that is, in all places. Valef.

* Tais xelais. Some word seems to be wanting, which may be supplied in this manner; tais enarmatutais xelais, most contrary Vices. And so Christophorus seems to have read. Valef. See chap. 19. note (d.)

† This Justinus was Son to Germanus Patritius, and Cousin-german to the Emperour Justinus, as Johannes Biclaritensis informs us in his Chronicon. Indeed, Germanus and Justinus Junior were akin. For Germanus was Justinian's Nephew by his Brother. But the Emperour Justinus was the Son of Vigilantia Justinian's Sister. Further, this Justinus Son to Germanus had born the Consulate in the year of Christ 540. The Emperour Justinian had created the same person

But I cannot positively affirm whether or no these things were so: however, they were both most flagitious wretches. Addeus was a Notorious * Sodomite. And Atherius omitted no sort of Calumny, but preyed upon the Estates as well of the living, as of the dead, in the name of that Imperial 'House,' of which he was Curator [or, Governour] during the Empire of Justinian. And such was the conclusion of these matters.

* Or, Bag
every

He means
the house of Antio- chus, of which Ar-
chius

CHAP. IV.

Concerning the Edict of our Faith, which Justinus wrote to the Christians in all places.

Moreover, the same Justinus wrote an Edict to the Christians in all places, [the Contents] whereof [ran] in these express words. IN THE NAME OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST OUR GOD, EMPEROUR CÆSAR FLAVIUS JUSTINUS, FAITHFUL IN CHRIST, MILD, THE GREATEST, BENEFICENT, ALEMATICUS, GOTTHICUS, GERMANICUS, ANTICUS, FRANCICUS, ERULICUS, GEPRÆDICUS, PIOUS, HAPPY, GLORIOUS, VICTOR, TRIUMPHATOR, ALWAYS ADORABLE, AUGUSTUS.

My peace I give unto you, says the Lord Christ, our true God. My peace I leave with you, declares the same [Christ] to all men. The purport of which [expressions] is nothing else, but that those who believe in him should unite in one and the same Church: being of the same mind in relation to the true Faith of the Christians, and having an aversion for them who affirm or think the contrary. For, the * Primary safety [which] has been appointed to all men, is the Confession of the true Faith. Wherefore, We also following the Evangelical Admonition, and the Holy Symbol, or Creed of the Holy Fathers, do exhort all men to betake themselves to one and the same Church and Opinion: believing in the Father, in the Son, and in the Holy Spirit, in the Consubstantial Trinity, in the One Deity, or Nature and † Essence, both in word and deed, and ‡ asserting One Might and Power and Operation, in the three Hypostases or Persons, into which we have been baptized, in which we have believed, and to which we have been conjoined.

sons. For, that we may so speak, it is indivisibly divided, and divisibly conjoined. For [there is] One in Three, [to wit,] the Deity, and Three [are] One, in whom [namely] are] the Deity, or, to speak more accurately, which [are] the Deity it self: God the Father, God the Son, God the Holy Ghost, when as each Person is considered by himself; the mind [to wit] dividing those things which are inseparable: the Three [Persons being one] God, understood together, on account of the same Action and the same Nature. For we ought both to confess one God, and also to assert Three *Hypostases or Proprieties. But *O, Subsistences.
God the Word, who was begotten of the Father before Ages and without time, not made; in the last days to have descended from Heaven on our account and for our Salvation, and to have been incarnate by the Holy Ghost, and of our Lady the Holy Glorious Theotocos and Ever-Virgin Mary, and to have been born of her: <sup>a</sup> who is our Lord <sup>αὐτὸς ὁ κύριος</sup> Jesus Christ, one of the Holy Trinity, Glorified <sup>δοξασμένος</sup> together with the Father and the Holy Spirit: <sup>τῷ πατρί καὶ τῷ ἁγίῳ πνεύματι</sup>

ἡμῶς is to the Father and to the Holy Ghost. In Nicephorus, Book 17, Chap. 35, where this Edict of the Emperor Zephyrus concerning the Faith is recorded, this place is read thus: ὁ θεὸς τὸν πατέρα καὶ τὸν ἅγιον πνεῦμα καὶ τὸν ἡμῶς is equal to the Father and to the Holy Spirit. With preceding Clorophorion hath followed. For he renders it thus; Qui est equalis Patri & Spiritui Sancto, ἡμῶς is equal to the Father and to the Holy Spirit. But in this place the equality of the Father and Son is not treated of; but, whether Cœlit be one of the Trinity. I have therefore supplied this place righter from the excellent Florentine Manuscript, in this manner; ὁ θεὸς καὶ ὁ υἱὸς καὶ ὁ ἅγιος πνεῦμα ὁμοῦσι τῷ πατρί, ὁμοῦσι τῷ πατρί καὶ τῷ ἁγίῳ πνεύματι, ὁμοῦσι τῷ πατρί καὶ τῷ ἁγίῳ πνεύματι. Sec. The Trileban M.S. has it written thus; ὁ θεὸς καὶ ὁ υἱὸς καὶ ὁ ἅγιος πνεῦμα ὁμοῦσι τῷ πατρί καὶ τῷ ἁγίῳ πνεύματι. Val. In Rubric Stephens the reading is the same with that set at the beginning of this note.

For the holy Trinity hath not received an addition of a Fourth Person, althoughe one of the holy Trinity, God the Word, hath been incarnate: but he is One and the same our Lord Jesus Christ, Consubstantial to God and the Father according to the Deity, and the same [Person is] of the same substance with us in respect of the Humanity: possible in flesh, and the same [Person] impossible in the Deity. For we acknowledge not One God the Word who wrought Miracles, and another who suffered: but we confess One and the same our Lord Jesus Christ God the Word, to have been incarnate and perfectly made man, and that the Miracles † belong both to One and the same, as likewise the sufferings, which he of † Or, his voluntarily underwent in the flesh on account of our Salvation. For * a man gave not himself for * Or, a certain; but God the Word himself, made man him. tain, or, same one man. without [any] Conversion, ‖ underwent both a Spontaneous Passion, and a death in the flesh for ‖ Or, Re- us. ceived. Although therefore we confess him to be God, yet we deny not that the same person is also Man: and by our confessing him to be man, we deny not the same Person to be also God, Whence, whilst we profess one and the same [Person] our Lord Jesus Christ to be * compounded of both Natures, the Deity and the Humanity. * Or, Made

we introduce not a Confusion into the Union. & <sup>the</sup> ~~Confusion~~ <sup>in</sup> ~~the~~ manner. Christpher has rendered this place ill, in this manner: Non Confusioem in Unitatem introducimus. We introduce not confusion into the Unity. Nor has Musculus done right; who translates it thus: Unitatem non confundimus. We confound not the Unity. I do not wonder at Musculus, who in this Edition of Ingenium always renders Unitatem, Unity, very erroneously. That learned man hath committed the same mistake, who has done into Latin the Fragments of Ephraemus Bishop of Antioch, which are excited in Photius's Bibliotheca. But why Christopher, who every where renders Unio, Copulationem, Copulation, should at this place translate translate it otherwise, I know not. Johannes Longus Nicæporus's Translatour renders it thus: In Unione confusioem non induimus. We induce not a confusion in the Union. Exactly right if you add a Syllable, in this manner, In Unionem, in the Unionem. For the term Union, though it be now a days frequently used in the Schools of Philosophers and Divines, is a barbarous word, when 'tis taken for Unionem. For Unio in Latine signifies Unitatem, Unity; as may be proved from Tertullian, Jerome, Prudentius, Pope Simplicius, and others. Let therefore those Zoiti [Carpenters, or, Carpenters] cease reproving of us, because in the Letter of Alexander Bishop of Alexandria, which is recorded by Socrates book 1. chap. 6. we have translated ἡνωσις, Unio. For we did that from the use and propriety of the Latine Tongue; which they being wholly ignorant of, thought that Unio, Union, was nothing else but Unionem, Unionem. But, betwixt Unio and Unionem, there is as much difference, as between words and words. In Unio or Unity, there is nothing but what is simple or single. But, in Unionem signifying compounded of two is necessarily understood. 'Tis certain, the Old Translatour of the Chalcedon Synod always renders ἡνωσις, Unionem, or, adunation. Valef.

* Or, Shall For be * will not cease to be God, because † a-greatly by us he was made man: nor again, because by Nature he is God, and cannot receive a Subli-meliness to us, will be refuse to be man. For, as † or, Evn: be hath continued God in the Humanity, so also † [though] existing in the † Majesty of the Deity, he nevertheless [continues] Man: * existing Both in the same, and [is] One God and also Man, The Emmanuel. [Further, whereas] we confess him perfect in the Deity, and perfect in the Humanity, of which [two] he is also made up, [yet] † we bring not in a particular Division or Section upon his one compounded Hypostasis: but we show the difference of the Natures, which is not destroyed [or, taken away] by the Union. For, neither has the Divine Nature been changed into the Humane, nor hath the Humane Nature been converted into the Divine. But both [Natures] being understood, or rather existing in the definition and † manner of the proper Nature, we affirm that the Union was made according to the person: now, the Union according to the person imports, that God the Word, that is one Person of the Three persons of the Deity, was united not to a pre-existing Man, but in the Womb of our Lady the Holy-Glorious Theotocos and Ever-Virgin Mary; that from her he be framed to himself in a proper Person Flesh of the same substance with us and subject to like passions in all things, in only excepted, and that it was enlivened with a rational and intelligent Soul. * For

† or, Be: be nevertheles [continues] Man: * existing Both in the same, and [is] One God and also Man, The Emmanuel. [Further, whereas] we confess him perfect in the Deity, and perfect in the Humanity, of which [two] he is also made up, [yet] † we bring not in a particular Division or Section upon his one compounded Hypostasis: but we show the difference of the Natures, which is not destroyed [or, taken away] by the Union. For, neither has the Divine Nature been changed into the Humane, nor hath the Humane Nature been converted into the Divine. But both [Natures] being understood, or rather existing in the definition and † manner of the proper Nature, we affirm that the Union was made according to the person: now, the Union according to the person imports, that God the Word, that is one Person of the Three persons of the Deity, was united not to a pre-existing Man, but in the Womb of our Lady the Holy-Glorious Theotocos and Ever-Virgin Mary; that from her he be framed to himself in a proper Person Flesh of the same substance with us and subject to like passions in all things, in only excepted, and that it was enlivened with a rational and intelligent Soul. * For

† or, Be: be nevertheles [continues] Man: * existing Both in the same, and [is] One God and also Man, The Emmanuel. [Further, whereas] we confess him perfect in the Deity, and perfect in the Humanity, of which [two] he is also made up, [yet] † we bring not in a particular Division or Section upon his one compounded Hypostasis: but we show the difference of the Natures, which is not destroyed [or, taken away] by the Union. For, neither has the Divine Nature been changed into the Humane, nor hath the Humane Nature been converted into the Divine. But both [Natures] being understood, or rather existing in the definition and † manner of the proper Nature, we affirm that the Union was made according to the person: now, the Union according to the person imports, that God the Word, that is one Person of the Three persons of the Deity, was united not to a pre-existing Man, but in the Womb of our Lady the Holy-Glorious Theotocos and Ever-Virgin Mary; that from her he be framed to himself in a proper Person Flesh of the same substance with us and subject to like passions in all things, in only excepted, and that it was enlivened with a rational and intelligent Soul. * For

But all those, who have thought or do think contrary hereto, we Anathematize, and judge them estranged from the Holy Catholick and Apostolick Church of God. Whereas therefore the true * Dog-mata, which have been delivered to us by the Holy Fathers, are asserted; We exhort you all to Concur in one and the same Catholick and Apostolick Church; yea rather, we beseech you. For we are not ashamed, though placed in the sublimity of Royalty, to make use of such expressions for the Consent and Union of all Christians; to the end one Glorification may be † attributed to the Great God and our Saviour Jesus † Sent Christ; and that in future no person might pretend to quarrel about the Persons or the Syllables. For the Syllables tend to one and the same right Faith and meaning: that Usage and † From, which hitherto hath obtained in Gods Holy Catholick and Apostolick Church, [remaining] in all things firm and without Innovation, and continuing [so] to all Futurity.

To this Edict all persons gave their consent, and affirmed [that the Faith and Doctrine] was reduced not so much as one [of the Church's] members, [which] had been rent in sunder, to an Unity, because [the Emperor] in express Words had declared, that [the State of] the Churches had been preserved firm and without Innovation, and for the time yet to come [should] so continue.

Herein, who asserted two persons in Christ, the one of man, the other of the Word. But the word ἡνωσις Syllables was annexed on account of the Eutychians and Accephali, who affirmed that Christ consisted of two Natures before the Union; but after the Union, they asserted but one Nature in him. On the other hand, the Catholics adored Christ in two Natures. Those Syllables therefore are in and in Which though they are different, yet if they be rightly understood, do both aim at one and the same Faith and Opinion, as Justinus adds See Evagrius above, at book 1. chap. 1. note (c.) Further, this Edict was promulgated by Justinus Junior on the first year of his Empire, to wit the year of Christ 665, as Borenius remarks: than which Edict Justinus conferred nothing more upon the Catholic Church: but, satisfying himself in having only expounded the Orthodox Faith, he in future prohibited disputes about the Nestorian and Eutychian Opinion, and permitted every one to think of these matters according to his own arbitrement. From this Edict therefore followed no advantage, as Evagrius observes truly. Wherefore Johannes Bickelensis [his] amidst in his Chronicon, whose words concerning Justinus Junior are these: Qui Justinus anno primo Regnans, &c; Which Justinus in the first year of his Reign, destroyed those things which had been devised against the Chalcedon Synod. And suffered the Creed of the Holy Fathers of the Church convened at Constantinople, (which Creed had been laudably received in the Chalcedon Synod.) to have entrance, and to be sung by the people in every Catholic Church, before the Lord's Prayer was to be repeated. Bickelensis attributes those things to Justinus Junior, which rather belittled Justinus Senior. Valef.

CHAP. V.

Concerning the Ejection of Anastasius Bishop of * Theopolis.

Moreover, Justinus ejected Anastasius out of the Chair of Theopolis; objecting against him, both the profuse expence of the sacred Revenue which had been made, saying it was immoderate, and not according to what was meet and necessary; and also [charging him] with † reflecting abusively on himself. For when Anastasius was asked, why he would fling away the sacred money in so lavish a manner, he replied openly, that it might not be taken away by Justinus that common Pest. But 'twas said that [Justinus] had therefore conceived an old Grudge against Anastasius, because when

• The Em lie demanded money of him * at his promotion to the Bishoprick, Anastafius would not give it him. Moreover, * other matters were objected against Anastafius, by some persons who, I suppose, were desirous of serving and promoting the Emperor's design.

These words, omitted them, as may be seen in book 17. chap. 36. For he has express'd this place of Evagrius thus Τὸν Εὐάγριον δὲ πάλαιος τὸν ἱερεὺς ἐλάττω, ὅτι μὴ ἐπὶ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, ἀλλ' ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ, ὡς ἀρχιεπίσκοπος, ἦν was less that Justinus was angry with him, because he refused to give him money when he demanded it. But 'twas easy to have mended the place of Evagrius, in this manner; ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ καὶ ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ Evagrius refused to give Justinus money who demanded it. And so Christophorus and Musculus seem to have read. For thus Musculus renders it: Dicitur autem Anastasio inuenisse, quod quoniam pecuniam pro Episcopatus collatione exigeret, dare illam noluisset; But 'tis said that he had been angry with Anastafius, because when he exacted money for his Collation to the Bishoprick, he refused to give it. This occasion of hatred therefore against Anastafius was of a long standing, before Justinus had arrived at the Empire. Wherefore Evagrius used the word πάλαιος, which signifies an ancient and contemned Antioch. To certain, whilst Justinian lived, Anastafius had been elected Bishop of Antioch. Now, the Grandes at Court, and those whose interest was great with the Emperours, were wont to exact money of them who were elected Patriarchs, as may be proved by the Example of Chrysapius the Eunuch, who demanded money of Flavianus Bishop of Constantinople; as Evagrius has related above, fee book 2. chap. 2. Nevertheless, this was forbidden by the Novel Constitutions of Justinian. Valef.

• Indeed, Theophanes in his Chronicon, brings another reason, on account whereof Anastafius Sinaita was deposed from the See of Antioch. But, because Translators have in no wise hit the meaning of Theophanes, I will annex his words here: Τὸ δὲ αὐτοῦ ἐρεῖ ἀναστασίῳ δὲ ἐπὶ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, ἐπεὶ δὲ ἐλάττω, καὶ ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ, ὡς ἀρχιεπίσκοπος, ἦν Evagrius refused to give Justinus money when he demanded it. But 'twas easy to have mended the place of Evagrius, in this manner; ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ καὶ ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ Evagrius refused to give Justinus money who demanded it. And so Christophorus and Musculus seem to have read. For thus Musculus renders it: Dicitur autem Anastasio inuenisse, quod quoniam pecuniam pro Episcopatus collatione exigeret, dare illam noluisset; But 'tis said that he had been angry with Anastafius, because when he exacted money for his Collation to the Bishoprick, he refused to give it. This occasion of hatred therefore against Anastafius was of a long standing, before Justinus had arrived at the Empire. Wherefore Evagrius used the word πάλαιος, which signifies an ancient and contemned Antioch. To certain, whilst Justinian lived, Anastafius had been elected Bishop of Antioch. Now, the Grandes at Court, and those whose interest was great with the Emperours, were wont to exact money of them who were elected Patriarchs, as may be proved by the Example of Chrysapius the Eunuch, who demanded money of Flavianus Bishop of Constantinople; as Evagrius has related above, fee book 2. chap. 2. Nevertheless, this was forbidden by the Novel Constitutions of Justinian. Valef.

• Indeed, Theophanes in his Chronicon, brings another reason, on account whereof Anastafius Sinaita was deposed from the See of Antioch. But, because Translators have in no wise hit the meaning of Theophanes, I will annex his words here: Τὸ δὲ αὐτοῦ ἐρεῖ ἀναστασίῳ δὲ ἐπὶ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, ἐπεὶ δὲ ἐλάττω, καὶ ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ, ὡς ἀρχιεπίσκοπος, ἦν Evagrius refused to give Justinus money when he demanded it. But 'twas easy to have mended the place of Evagrius, in this manner; ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ καὶ ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ Evagrius refused to give Justinus money who demanded it. And so Christophorus and Musculus seem to have read. For thus Musculus renders it: Dicitur autem Anastasio inuenisse, quod quoniam pecuniam pro Episcopatus collatione exigeret, dare illam noluisset; But 'tis said that he had been angry with Anastafius, because when he exacted money for his Collation to the Bishoprick, he refused to give it. This occasion of hatred therefore against Anastafius was of a long standing, before Justinus had arrived at the Empire. Wherefore Evagrius used the word πάλαιος, which signifies an ancient and contemned Antioch. To certain, whilst Justinian lived, Anastafius had been elected Bishop of Antioch. Now, the Grandes at Court, and those whose interest was great with the Emperours, were wont to exact money of them who were elected Patriarchs, as may be proved by the Example of Chrysapius the Eunuch, who demanded money of Flavianus Bishop of Constantinople; as Evagrius has related above, fee book 2. chap. 2. Nevertheless, this was forbidden by the Novel Constitutions of Justinian. Valef.

CHAP. VI.

That after Anastafius, Gregorius was made Bishop, and concerning his disposition.

BUT after Anastafius, Gregorius is preferred to the Episcopal Throne, * whose glory, that I may use the Poet's expression, is far spread.

• Musculus and Christophorus have rendered this place very ill, as if by these words Evagrius would have shown, that Gregorius Bishop of Antioch had been eminent for Poetry. But Langius has turned these words righter, thus: Cujus lata est illi Gloria, ut Poetae verbis utar, whose Glory is far spread, that I may use the Poet's Words. Valef. Evagrius makes use of the same expression at chap. 13. book 1. where he speaks of Hilarius Peltusius.

[This person] from his younger years had been exercised in the Monastick Conflicts, and had striven with so much courage and constancy of mind, that in a very short time, || even during his youthful age, he arrived at the highest degrees; and Governed the Monastick of the Byzantium, where he embraced a Monastick life.

[Afterwards,] by the * order of Justinus [he presided over the Monks] of mount Sinai also; in which place he fell into the greatest of dangers, by undergoing a Siege from the Arabians [termed] Scenite. Nevertheless, when he had procured that place a profound Peace, he was called from thence to the Patriarchate. For understanding and virtue of mind, and in all other things he was the eminentest person of all men, and the most active in [effecting] whatever he had proposed to himself; || of an undaunted spirit, and a man not to be induced to yield, or to be afraid of the Secular power.

He made such magnificent distributions of money, and used such a bountifulness and liberality towards all men, that whenever he went abroad, numerous crowds of people besides those that attendants, followed him. And whatever persons could either see, or hear he was going forth, flock'd together. * The honour given to the supremest Powers [of this world] was inferior to that [paid] to this man; for people were for the most part desirous, both of seeing him as near as possibly they could, and coveted to hear him discourse. For he was most excellently qualified to excite a desire of himself in all persons, who upon whatever account came to and conversed with him. For, his aspect was admirable, and his discourse, by reason of his pleasantness of speech, most delightful; as ready as ever was any man, in the present apprehending of a thing, and most quick in action: in || choosing the best || Or, *G*i- advice, and in passing a judgment; as well of his own, as the affairs of others, he was † most prudent. On which account he performed so many and such great things, never deferring any business till the morrow. He was the admiration not only of the Roman Emperours, but of them of Persia also, in regard he so demeaned himself in all affairs, as either necessity required,

|| Ἐκ πρῶτον ἡλικίᾳ, from the first down upon his Child.

• This Em Bo affliction monks. Johannes Langius renders these words thus: Primum vero Byzantii Monasterio profectus, but in the first place he presided over the Monastery of Byzantium. But Evagrius does not say, that Gregorius was a Monk or Abbot of Byzantium, but that he was Abbot of the Monastery of the Byzantium. This seems to have been a Monastery in Syria, wherein Gregorius, whilst he was yet young, had received the Rudiments of a Monastick life. Theophanes in his Chronicon, pag. 106. says Gregorius had been Apocryphus (that is, Procurator, or Agent) of the Monastery of the Byzantium. Valef.

† Or, Arch-Bishoprick.

• Ἐκ πρῶτον ἡλικίᾳ. I conjecture we should read here, πρῶτα τῷ ἐν πᾶσι κρείττω; and in all things he was: the eminentest person of all Men. For so Evagrius expresses himself hereafter, at chap. 19. of this book; where his words concerning Macarius are these; ἦν πρῶτον ἐν πᾶσι ἀκρεῖς τῷ ἀδελφῷ, and every way accurate and immovable. Valef.

• Ἐκ πρῶτον ἡλικίᾳ. I had rather make it ἐκ πρῶτον, going forth. In Nicephorus the reading is ἀδελφῷ, going. Valef.

• Καὶ ὅτι τὰς ἐν τῷ πρῶτῳ. τὸ ἀδελφῷ ἀδελφῷ τῷ ἐν τῷ ἀδελφῷ. Nicephorus read this place otherwise. For, instead of the word πρῶτον he has καταπύλιν. Mundane, or, Secular. Which in my judgment is far righter. Johannes Langius has translated Nicephorus's words thus: Et honorem mundanis dignitatibus debuit, prae viri huius observantia secundo loco habebat, And they placed [Or, had] the honour due to Secular dignities, in the second place, in respect of the observancy of this man. Valef.

the word εὐαγγελιστής signified. Evagrius has made use of this word above, at chap. 42. book 3. At which place we have remarked, that by that word, are meant the Provincial Tributaries, who are also termed Collatores in the Code. From those therefore Marinus the Magister Militum had by force drawn Ditchers and Oxe-drivers, and Taylorers, that he might make use of their Labour in his Army: for he reckoned them not amongst the Souldiers, as Christophorus seems to have thought. Valef.

CHAP. IX.

How Chofroes (after he had sent his General Adaarmanes against the Romans, who afflicted them with many and those severe Losses,) went himself in person to Nisibis.

BUT Chofroes, after he had made sufficient provision of all things necessary for a War, went to a certain [place,] and having pass'd the Euphrates in his own Country, sends Adaarmanes into the Roman Territories, by a [place] termed Circesium. This Circesium is a Town most commodious to the Romans, situate in the utmost confines of the Empire. Which [Town] is fortified not only with walls raised to a vast height; but the Rivers Euphrates and Aboras do likewise encompass it, and make the City as 'twere an Island. But [Chofroes] himself having, together with those [Forces] about him, pass'd the River Tigris, march'd directly to Nisibis. [Though] these things had been done, [yet] the Romans were a long while ignorant of them: in so much that Justinus, giving overmuch credit to report, (which said that Chofroes was either already dead, or drawing his very last breath,) became highly incens'd, because the Siege of Nisibis was protracted so long; and sent some persons who might hasten Maricianus forward, and might forthwith bring him the Keys of the Gates: But when this affair was not in the least forward'd, but rather he himself procur'd great ignominy and disgrace in regard he would attempt those things which could not be done against such and so vast a City, and with so pitiful and despicable an Army; in the first place a message is brought to Gregorius Bishop of Theopolis. For whereas the Bishop of Nisibis was an intimate friend to Gregorius, in regard he had received great presents from him; and moreover being one that was highly displeas'd at the Persians contumelious usage of the Christians, which the Christians had continually suffer'd from them, being also desirous that his own City might become subject [to the Empire] of the Romans; he gave Gregorius an account of whatever was done in the Enemies Country, and in due time made known [to him] all things. Of which [matters Gregorius] forthwith sent Justinus a Relation, declaring to him Chofroes's sudden irruption. But Justinus, involved in his usual pleasures, heeded not what had been written [to him by Gregorius]; nor would he give credit thereto, but only supposed [that true,] which he himself desired. For *tis usual with persons who are dissolute, that they should be both *lothful and confident against the Events [of affairs;] and if any thing happens contrary to their wills, they disbelieve it. He wrote therefore to Gregorius, [in which Letters] he perfectly reject'd those things [told him by Gregorius,] as being wholly false: or if they were true, yet, that the Persians could never prevent the Siege; but, that if they did prevent it, they would retire [from hence] with great loss. [At the same time] he sends one Acacius (a wicked and spiteful person,) to Maricianus, giving him order, that although Maricianus should have set one of his feet into the City, he should nevertheless *turn him out of Commission. Which thing [Acacius] performed exactly, obeying the Emperour's Commands though to the disadvantage of the Republick. For being arriv'd in the [Roman] Camp, he divests Maricianus of his Command, in the Enemies Country, without having acquainted the Army therewith. But the Centurions and Leaders of the Ranks, having understood at their coming off the Watch, that their Commander in chief was turn'd out of Commission, * would not appear in publick any more, but left [the Service,] were dispers'd here and there, and brake up the ridiculous Siege. In the interim Adaarmanes having an Army of Persians and barbarous Semites fit to engage, pass'd by Circesium, and ruin'd the Roman Ter- ritories with all manner of depopulations, burning and killing, designing in his mind or performing nothing that was mean and trivial. He also takes Castles and many Villages, no body making a resistance against him: First, because [at that time] there was no Commander [of the Romans:]; and then, in regard the [Roman] Souldiers were by Chofroes shut up in Daras; as well Excurfions to fetch in forage, as irruptions, were made without impediment. He made an attack also upon the † Theopolites † Antiochians by the Souldiers he had with him; (for he went not thither in person.) Nevertheless, those [Souldiers of his] receiv'd a repulse beyond all expectation, although no body, excepting only a very small number, continued in the City; and though the Bishop was fled, and had carried a long with him the sacred Treasure, because, both most part of the wall was fallen down, and the people also had rais'd a Sedition, being desirous of beginning an Innovation, as it usually happens, and most especially at such times as those. Moreover, [the Seditious] themselves betook themselves to their heels, and had left the City empty; nothing at all being to be found out, * that might either annoy the Enemy, or on the other hand keep them off.

words which I have not yet met with, used in such a sense, as by all the Translatores they are taken here.

CHAP. X.

Concerning the taking of Apamia and Daras.

WHEN therefore * Adaarmanes had been * frustrated in this attempt, having burnt that City anciently termed Heraclea, but afterwards named Gabalice, he took Apamia, which variously had been built by † Seleucus Nicator, a [City] written in ancient Authors. In Theopbanes's Chronicon, he is called Artabanus, and Ardamanes in the Palatine Manuscript Copy. Anastasius Bibliothecarius terms him Dux Ardermanus. In Nicephorus's is εὐαγγελιστής, Ardamanes. In Theopbanes Byzantius, Baraamanes. Hereafter in the thirteenth chapter he is termed Ardamanes. Theophylactus, Book 3, calls him Ardamanes. Valef.

† Seleucus is νικητής. Undoubtedly it must be made νικητής; Nicatoris. For Seleucus the first king of Syria, because of his famous Victories, had the surname of Nicator, as we learn from the Old Coins, which ascribe this Title or Surname to him. Valef. See Valesius's note on Anm. Marci. pag. 41.

heretofore

* Or, It
falsely.

* Τὸ π. διπλόν. In Nicephorus 'is εἰρηός, with a double v. So a little before, where the reading is εἰρηός; Nicephorus has it written εἰρηός, which is more usual. Yet, that word may be written with a double λ, as Hefestius tells us. Valef.

* Or, Remove him from his Command.

† Οὐ παρέχεται τὸ πλῆθος. I think it must be made εἰς τὸ πλῆθος. And so Mosellanus seems to have read. For he renders it thus: Exercitus porro adesse noluit, would not be any more present with the Army. Christophorus likewise states it in this manner, Copias non ulterius ducunt, lead not the Forces any more. But the Greek will not bear this sense. Valef.

† Antiochian.

* Εἰς ἐπὶ
τὴν πόλιν
ἐπέβησαν;

heretofore rich and pophous, but in [process of] time it was become extremely ruinous. Having posselt himself of this City on some Articles of agreement, [for [the Inhabitants] were in no wise in a capacity to make a resistance, the wall by reason of its age being fallen to the ground:] he utterly destroyed it by fire; and when he had made plunder of all things, contrary to the conditions agreed to by him, he went away, and lead away Captive all the Citizens, and [the Inhabitants of] the adjacent Villages. Amongst which [Prisoners] he carried away, alive the Bishop of the City, and that person who was entrusted with the Government [of the Province.] Moreover, he committed all manner of * outrages at his departure, there being no body that might restrain or give him any the least resistance, excepting a very few Souldiers sent by Justinus, under the Command of one Magnus, who was heretofore President

* Or, Cru-
elities.

† Bankers.

of the † Argentarii at the Imperial City, but had afterwards by Justinus been made Curator of one of the Imperial Honfes. And these [Souldiers] also ran away with all the hast imaginable, there having wanted but little of their being all taken by the Enemy. When therefore Adaarmanes had performed these Exploits, he came to Chosroes, who had not yet taken the City [Dava.] His joyning Forces with Chosroes was of great importance to [their] affairs, both because it gave encouragement to their own men, and also struck a terror into the Enemy. Further, [Chosroes] found that City encompassed with a wall, and a vast Rampire of earth cast up hard by the wall, also those Engines [termed] * Helepoles standing ready; and especially the Catapulta wherewith stones are thrown from an Eminence, which [Machines] they usually term † Petraria. || In this manner Chosroes became Master of that City by force, in the Winter time, Johannes the Son of Timostatus being its Governour, who was very little solicitous about it, or rather betrayed it. For both are reported. Now, Chosroes had laid Siege to that City five months and more, no body appearing in its defence. Having therefore brought all persons out of the City, (which were a vast multitude,) and in a cruel manner killed some of them there, and preserved others, which were the most in number, alive; he fortified the City with a Garrison, because its site was commodious; but he himself returned into his own Country.

* Machines used in Sieges, to batter
down the Walls.
† Or, Engines to cast Stones.
|| Or, With
which.

CHAP. XI.

That the Emperour Justinus was seized with a * Frensic: but Tiberius undertook the care of the Republick.

* Or,
Frantick
dissemper.

Which [proceedings] when Justinus was made acquainted with, having in his mind not so much as one thought that was found and prudent, nor bearing his * misfortune so as it becomes a man to do; from such an height of pride and haughtiness he falls into a Frantick dissemper and madness, and in future became insensible of what was transacted. From thence forward therefore Tiberius had the management of the Republick, a person by descent a Thracian, but one who bore the chiefest place of trust, [and was the greatest Favourite] with Justinus.

* To evil must be made some way; as I found it written in the Telle-
rian MS.
Valef.

This person had heretofore been sent [by Justinus] against the * Avari, [accompanied with] a vast Army of Souldiers which had been raised.

* Or, A-bares, or,
Avares.

† The Em-perour Justinus sent Tiberius

But, the Souldiers not endoring so much as the fight of the Barbarians, Tiberius wanted but little of being taken, had not the Divine providence in a wonderful manner protected him, and reserved him for the Roman Empire; which had been reduced to such danger
by Justinus's absurd and rash attempts, that [twas feared least] together with the whole State it should be utterly ruined, and might yield to the * prevalent power and dominion of the Barbarians.

of his Guards, against the Avares, with an Army sufficiently strong,
on the ninth year of his Empire,
as Theopanes relates in his Chronicon, but Johannes Bieleniensis says that was done in the fourth year of Justinus's Empire: where he relates, that from this Battle
Tiberius returned a Conqueror to Constantinople. Which yet is declared to be false by Evagrius and Theopanes. Valef.

* Or, So
great.

CHAP. XII.

That Trajanus having been sent Ambassador to Chosroes, * repaired the affairs of the * Cor-Romans. rected, & restored.

Tiberius therefore resolves upon a † Course
very seasonable, and accommodate to the or, advice.
[present juncture of] affairs; which repaired
the whole misfortune. For * Trajanus, a wife person of the Senatorial Order, a man highly valued by all men for his gray-hairs and understanding, is dispatched away to Chosroes: He was not to perform that Embassy in the name of || the Emperour,

nor of the State;
but was to speak
in behalf only of

† This Bamelus, of the Empire.

[the Empreſs] Sophia.
Moreover, She wrote to Chosroes, [in which Letter] She lamented both the calamities of her Husband, and also the State's being deprived of an Emperour;

adding withall, that 'twas misbecoming [a Prince] to insult over a woman that was a widow, over a || dead Emperour, and over a deserted State: For, that * he himself, when he had fallen sick sometime since, had not only experienced the like [humanity and kind usage,] but had likewise had the best Physicians sent him by the Roman State, who also freed him from his distemper. [Hereby] therefore Chosroes is prevailed upon. And although he was just ready to make an Invasion || upon the Territories of the Romans, yet he concludes a Truce for the space of three years, in the Eastern parts.

But, 'twas thought good, that Armenia * should not be included in the like [Conditions of a Truce:] so that, he might wage War there, provided no body disturbed the Eastern parts upon the Territories [or, affairs] of the Romans. Valef.

† By this Barbarian prince. In my own Judgment I have restored this place very happily, so that instead of the word quoniam, it must be written, quod. For in the Truce which was made between the Romans and Persians, it had been expressly cautioned, that there should be a Cessation of Arms throughout the East only: but in Armenia and Iberia it should be lawful to wage War. See Menander
Proctor in the Sixth Book of his Histories, pag. 157. which author does fully confirm this our emendation. And so does Theophylactus, Book 3. Chap. 12. Valef.

During

(where ancient custom says such Solemnities, I can't were performed,) both of <sup>the</sup> Johannes the Patriarch, <sup>the</sup> Joan whom we mentioned before, together with his <sup>the</sup> Joan Clergy, of the Magistracy and Flourant, and of all this <sup>the</sup> Joan the Grand Officers about the Court; <sup>the</sup> Joan when he had invested Tiberius with the <sup>the</sup> Joan Coat, and had clothed him in the <sup>the</sup> Joan purple] * Robe, with a loud voice [sake publicly [these following words.] * <sup>the</sup> Joan Clock. <sup>the</sup> Joan

proclaimed in the Arrium of the Imperial Palace. For the old custom was, that the Augusti should be proclaimed in the Seventh Miliarium, or, mila, from the City, in the presence of the Army, in the Campus, or Field without the City. And Valens [was] the first that had been titled Emperor in that Suburb, by his Brother Valentinian. After whom, the following Emperours of the East were proclaimed in the same place, as I have long since observed in my Notes on Amm. Marcellinus's 26th book, pag. 115, 116. The Emperor Zeno also was Crowned in the Seventh Miliarium by his own Son Leo, as Victor Tinnensis relates in his Chronicon. Likewise Basilius was a little after titled Emperor in the Campus, as Thorpaeus informs us. Now, the Campus was in the Seventh Miliarium, as Theopylactus attests, book 8. chap. 12. But who was first slated Augustus in the Arrium of the Imperial Palace, at Constantinople, I have not yet plainly found. Indeed, Ingratus Simar seems to have been proclaimed Emperor there, as may be gathered from the first chapter of this book. Valef.

e Theophanes in his Chronicon attests, that (not Johannes Scholasticus, but Eutychius) was then Patriarch of Constantinople. For Johannes Scholasticus died on the Tenth Indiction, in the Month August, the day before the Calends of September. And Eutychius was reitor to his own See on the same year, in the Month October, on the Eleventh Indiction, as Theophanes attests. On the year following (which was the year of Christ 778, in the Twelfth Indiction, on the 26th of September.) this Eutychius Crowned Tiberius Augustus, as Theophanes and the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle inform us. But, on a more attentive examination of the thing, I have perceived nothing is to be found fault with here, for Eusegius speaks not here concerning Tiberius's being proclaimed Augustus, but of the Appellation of Cesar granted to him. Further, Tiberius was made Cesar on the Eighth Indiction, as the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle informs us: at which time Johannes was Patriarch of Constantinople. Vale.

Let not the Magnificence of Your Attire deceive You, nor the Scene of those things which are seen : by which I have been imposed upon, and have rendered my self obnoxious to the Extremest of Punishments. Do You correct my mistake, and with all * Lenity and Manufacture Govern the State. Then pointing to the † Magistrates; <sup>† Eumenides, den</sup> You ought not, said he, in any wise to be per- <sup>light of mind.</sup> swaded by them; and further added, For they <sup>Or, Governours,</sup> have reduced me to those Circumstances wherein You now behold me. [He uttered] several other such like [expressions,] which put all persons into an amaze, and drew from them plenty of Tears. Now, Tiberius was very tall of Body, and besides his Stature, the Comeliest person, not only of Emperours, but of all other Men, <sup>a</sup> as far as any one may conjecture; <sup>b</sup> in so much that, in the first place, even his very shape deserved an Empire. His temper of mind was <sup>c</sup> Sweet and Courteous, [a person] that received all Men kindly even at the first sight. He esteemed it [the greatest] Riches to be liberal to all Men in reference to bountifull Contributions, not only as far as a necessity, but even to an affluence. <sup>d</sup> <sup>e</sup> <sup>f</sup> <sup>g</sup> <sup>h</sup> <sup>i</sup> <sup>j</sup> <sup>k</sup> <sup>l</sup> <sup>m</sup> <sup>n</sup> <sup>o</sup> <sup>p</sup> <sup>q</sup> <sup>r</sup> <sup>s</sup> <sup>t</sup> <sup>u</sup> <sup>v</sup> <sup>w</sup> <sup>x</sup> <sup>y</sup> <sup>z</sup> <sup>aa</sup> <sup>ab</sup> <sup>ac</sup> <sup>ad</sup> <sup>ae</sup> <sup>af</sup> <sup>ag</sup> <sup>ah</sup> <sup>ai</sup> <sup>aj</sup> <sup>ak</sup> <sup>al</sup> <sup>am</sup> <sup>an</sup> <sup>ao</sup> <sup>ap</sup> <sup>aq</sup> <sup>ar</sup> <sup>as</sup> <sup>at</sup> <sup>au</sup> <sup>av</sup> <sup>aw</sup> <sup>ax</sup> <sup>ay</sup> <sup>az</sup> <sup>ba</sup> <sup>bb</sup> <sup>bc</sup> <sup>bd</sup> <sup>be</sup> <sup>bf</sup> <sup>bg</sup> <sup>bh</sup> <sup>bi</sup> <sup>bj</sup> <sup>bk</sup> <sup>bl</sup> <sup>bm</sup> <sup>bn</sup> <sup>bo</sup> <sup>bp</sup> <sup>bq</sup> <sup>br</sup> <sup>bs</sup> <sup>bt</sup> <sup>bu</sup> <sup>bv</sup> <sup>bw</sup> <sup>bx</sup> <sup>by</sup> <sup>bz</sup> <sup>ca</sup> <sup>cb</sup> <sup>cc</sup> <sup>cd</sup> <sup>ce</sup> <sup>cf</sup> <sup>cg</sup> <sup>ch</sup> <sup>ci</sup> <sup>cj</sup> <sup>ck</sup> <sup>cl</sup> <sup>cm</sup> <sup>cn</sup> <sup>co</sup> <sup>cp</sup> <sup>cq</sup> <sup>cr</sup> <sup>cs</sup> <sup>ct</sup> <sup>cu</sup> <sup>cv</sup> <sup>cw</sup> <sup>cx</sup> <sup>cy</sup> <sup>cz</sup> <sup>da</sup> <sup>db</sup> <sup>dc</sup> <sup>dd</sup> <sup>de</sup> <sup>df</sup> <sup>dg</sup> <sup>dh</sup> <sup>di</sup> <sup>dj</sup> <sup>dk</sup> <sup>dl</sup> <sup>dm</sup> <sup>dn</sup> <sup>do</sup> <sup>dp</sup> <sup>dq</sup> <sup>dr</sup> <sup>ds</sup> <sup>dt</sup> <sup>du</sup> <sup>dv</sup> <sup>dw</sup> <sup>dx</sup> <sup>dy</sup> <sup>dz</sup> <sup>ea</sup> <sup>eb</sup> <sup>ec</sup> <sup>ed</sup> <sup>ee</sup> <sup>ef</sup> <sup>eg</sup> <sup>eh</sup> <sup>ei</sup> <sup>ej</sup> <sup>ek</sup> <sup>el</sup> <sup>em</sup> <sup>en</sup> <sup>eo</sup> <sup>ep</sup> <sup>eq</sup> <sup>er</sup> <sup>es</sup> <sup>et</sup> <sup>eu</sup> <sup>ev</sup> <sup>ew</sup> <sup>ex</sup> <sup>ey</sup> <sup>ez</sup> <sup>fa</sup> <sup>fb</sup> <sup>fc</sup> <sup>fd</sup> <sup>fe</sup> <sup>ff</sup> <sup>fg</sup> <sup>fh</sup> <sup>fi</sup> <sup>fj</sup> <sup>fk</sup> <sup>fl</sup> <sup>fm</sup> <sup>fn</sup> <sup>fo</sup> <sup>fp</sup> <sup>fq</sup> <sup>fr</sup> <sup>fs</sup> <sup>ft</sup> <sup>fu</sup> <sup>fv</sup> <sup>fw</sup> <sup>fx</sup> <sup>fy</sup> <sup>fz</sup> <sup>ga</sup> <sup>gb</sup> <sup>gc</sup> <sup>gd</sup> <sup>ge</sup> <sup>gf</sup> <sup>gg</sup> <sup>gh</sup> <sup>gi</sup> <sup>gj</sup> <sup>gk</sup> <sup>gl</sup> <sup>gm</sup> <sup>gn</sup> <sup>go</sup> <sup>gp</sup> <sup>gq</sup> <sup>gr</sup> <sup>gs</sup> <sup>gt</sup> <sup>gu</sup> <sup>gv</sup> <sup>gw</sup> <sup>gx</sup> <sup>gy</sup> <sup>gz</sup> <sup>ha</sup> <sup>hb</sup> <sup>hc</sup> <sup>hd</sup> <sup>he</sup> <sup>hf</sup> <sup>hg</sup> <sup>hh</sup> <sup>hi</sup> <sup>hj</sup> <sup>hk</sup> <sup>hl</sup> <sup>hm</sup> <sup>hn</sup> <sup>ho</sup> <sup>hp</sup> <sup>hq</sup> <sup>hr</sup> <sup>hs</sup> <sup>ht</sup> <sup>hu</sup> <sup>hv</sup> <sup>hw</sup> <sup>hx</sup> <sup>hy</sup> <sup>hz</sup> <sup>ia</sup> <sup>ib</sup> <sup>ic</sup> <sup>id</sup> <sup>ie</sup> <sup>if</sup> <sup>ig</sup> <sup>ih</sup> <sup>ii</sup> <sup>ij</sup> <sup>ik</sup> <sup>il</sup> <sup>im</sup> <sup>in</sup> <sup>io</sup> <sup>ip</sup> <sup>iq</sup> <sup>ir</sup> <sup>is</sup> <sup>it</sup> <sup>iu</sup> <sup>iv</sup> <sup>iw</sup> <sup>ix</sup> <sup>iy</sup> <sup>iz</sup> <sup>ja</sup> <sup>jb</sup> <sup>jc</sup> <sup>jd</sup> <sup>je</sup> <sup>jf</sup> <sup>jj</sup> <sup>jk</sup> <sup>jl</sup> <sup>jm</sup> <sup>jn</sup> <sup>jo</sup> <sup>jp</sup> <sup>jq</sup> <sup>jr</sup> <sup>js</sup> <sup>jt</sup> <sup>ju</sup> <sup>jv</sup> <sup>jw</sup> <sup>jx</sup> <sup>ky</sup> <sup>kz</sup> <sup>la</sup> <sup>lb</sup> <sup>lc</sup> <sup>ld</sup> <sup>le</sup> <sup>lf</sup> <sup>lg</sup> <sup>lh</sup> <sup>li</sup> <sup>lj</sup> <sup>lk</sup> <sup>ll</sup> <sup>lm</sup> <sup>ln</sup> <sup>lo</sup> <sup>lp</sup> <sup>lq</sup> <sup>lr</sup> <sup>ls</sup> <sup>lt</sup> <sup>lu</sup> <sup>lv</sup> <sup>lw</sup> <sup>lx</sup> <sup>ly</sup> <sup>lz</sup> <sup>ma</sup> <sup>mb</sup> <sup>mc</sup> <sup>md</sup> <sup>me</sup> <sup>mf</sup> <sup>mg</sup> <sup>mh</sup> <sup>mi</sup> <sup>mj</sup> <sup>mk</sup> <sup>ml</sup> <sup>mm</sup> <sup>mn</sup> <sup>mo</sup> <sup>mp</sup> <sup>mq</sup> <sup>mr</sup> <sup>ms</sup> <sup>mt</sup> <sup>mu</sup> <sup>mv</sup> <sup>mw</sup> <sup>mx</sup> <sup>my</sup> <sup>mz</sup> <sup>na</sup> <sup>nb</sup> <sup>nc</sup> nd <sup>ne</sup> <sup>nf</sup> <sup>ng</sup> <sup>nh</sup> <sup>ni</sup> <sup>nj</sup> <sup>nk</sup> <sup>nl</sup> <sup>nm</sup> <sup>nn</sup> <sup>no</sup> <sup>np</sup> <sup>nq</sup> <sup>nr</sup> <sup>ns</sup> <sup>nt</sup> <sup>nu</sup> <sup>nv</sup> <sup>nw</sup> <sup>nx</sup> <sup>ny</sup> <sup>nz</sup> <sup>oa</sup> <sup>ob</sup> <sup>oc</sup> <sup>od</sup> <sup>oe</sup> <sup>of</sup> <sup>og</sup> <sup>oh</sup> <sup>oi</sup> <sup>oj</sup> <sup>ok</sup> <sup>ol</sup> <sup>om</sup> <sup>on</sup> <sup>oo</sup> <sup>op</sup> <sup>oq</sup> <sup>or</sup> <sup>os</sup> <sup>ot</sup> <sup>ou</sup> <sup>ov</sup> <sup>ow</sup> <sup>ox</sup> <sup>oy</sup> <sup>oz</sup> <sup>pa</sup> <sup>pb</sup> <sup>pc</sup> <sup>pd</sup> <sup>pe</sup> <sup>pf</sup> <sup>pg</sup> <sup>ph</sup> <sup>pi</sup> <sup>pj</sup> <sup>pk</sup> <sup>pl</sup> <sup>pm</sup> <sup>pn</sup> <sup>po</sup> <sup>pp</sup> <sup>pq</sup> <sup>pr</sup> <sup>ps</sup> <sup>pt</sup> <sup>pu</sup> <sup>pv</sup> <sup>pw</sup> <sup>px</sup> <sup>py</sup> <sup>pz</sup> <sup>qa</sup> <sup>qb</sup> <sup>qc</sup> <sup>qd</sup> <sup>qe</sup> <sup>qf</sup> <sup>qg</sup> <sup>qh</sup> <sup>qi</sup> <sup>qj</sup> <sup>qk</sup> <sup>ql</sup> <sup>qm</sup> <sup>qn</sup> <sup>qo</sup> <sup>qp</sup> <sup>qq</sup> <sup>qr</sup> <sup>qs</sup> <sup>qt</sup> <sup>qu</sup> <sup>qv</sup> <sup>qw</sup> <sup>qx</sup> <sup>qy</sup> <sup>qz</sup> <sup>ra</sup> <sup>rb</sup> <sup>rc</sup> rd <sup>re</sup> <sup>rf</sup> <sup>rg</sup> <sup>rh</sup> <sup>ri</sup> <sup>rj</sup> <sup>rk</sup> <sup>rl</sup> <sup>rm</sup> <sup>rn</sup> <sup>ro</sup> <sup>rp</sup> <sup>rq</sup> <sup>rr</sup> <sup>rs</sup> <sup>rt</sup> <sup>ru</sup> <sup>rv</sup> <sup>rw</sup> <sup>rx</sup> <sup>ry</sup> <sup>rz</sup> <sup>sa</sup> <sup>sb</sup> <sup>sc</sup> <sup>sd</sup> <sup>se</sup> <sup>sf</sup> <sup>sg</sup> <sup>sh</sup> <sup>si</sup> <sup>sj</sup> <sup>sk</sup> <sup>sl</sup> <sup>sm</sup> <sup>sn</sup> <sup>so</sup> <sup>sp</sup> <sup>sq</sup> <sup>sr</sup> <sup>ss</sup> st <sup>su</sup> <sup>sv</sup> <sup>sw</sup> <sup>sx</sup> <sup>sy</sup> <sup>sz</sup> <sup>ta</sup> <sup>tb</sup> <sup>tc</sup> <sup>td</sup> <sup>te</sup> <sup>tf</sup> <sup>tg</sup> th <sup>ti</sup> <sup>tj</sup> <sup>tk</sup> <sup>tl</sup> <sup>tm</sup> <sup>tn</sup> <sup>to</sup> <sup>tp</sup> <sup>tq</sup> <sup>tr</sup> <sup>ts</sup> <sup>tt</sup> <sup>tu</sup> <sup>tv</sup> <sup>tw</sup> <sup>tx</sup> <sup>ty</sup> <sup>tz</sup> <sup>ua</sup> <sup>ub</sup> <sup>uc</sup> <sup>ud</sup> <sup>ue</sup> <sup>uf</sup> <sup>ug</sup> <sup>uh</sup> <sup>ui</sup> <sup>uj</sup> <sup>uk</sup> <sup>ul</sup> <sup>um</sup> <sup>un</sup> <sup>uo</sup> <sup>up</sup> <sup>uq</sup> <sup>ur</sup> <sup>us</sup> <sup>ut</sup> <sup>uu</sup> <sup>uv</sup> <sup>uw</sup> <sup>ux</sup> <sup>uy</sup> doubt but Eccegrinus left it thus written: Our conjecture is confirmed by the Tellerian Manuscript, wherein I found it plainly written in this manner. Away therefore with the rendition of Mufelinas, who translates it thus: Insignis magni, quàm ut quicquam idis conferri possit, more eminenti, eam that any one might be compared to him. But Christophorus turns it in this manner: Pulebrutindis excellenti omnium opinione major, for the excellency of beauty, greater than the opinion of all men. Vajel.

is Καὶ πᾶσιν ἰδοὶ τὸ εἰς τὸ ἀξίον. The reading in the Florentine Manuscript is truer, thus, ὡς πᾶσιν μὲν, &c. in so much that, in the first place, &c. Evagrius alludes to that known Verse of the Tragædian; πᾶσιν μὲν εἰς τὸ ἀξίον τυγχανέειν.

For he considered not, what Petitioners ought to receive, but what it became an Emperor of the Romans to give. *Twas his Sentiment, that that Gold was adulterate || which was Collected with the Tears [Of the Provincials.] Hence (Tis certain) it was, that he remitted the Collection of *one whole years Tribute, to the Tributaries. And those possessions which Adulterary Function, not only in proportion to the damage they had suffered, but also much above [the loss.] Moreover, *those illegal Presents were remitted to the Magistrates, for which [Bribes] the Emperours had heretofore sold their Subjects [to them.] He also wrote Constitutions concerning these matters, making thereby provision for the security of posterity.

* Or, he written ἡρώδης. Valef.

There is extant a Constitution of Justinus Junior, wherein he has remitted to the Provincials the Remains of the Tributes of the past year, until the Eighth Indiction of the Cycle current. Which Justinus seems to have done by the persuasion of Tiberius, whom a little before he had created Caesar, at the beginning of the Eighth Indiction, as the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle informs us. Into this first Constitution therefore of the Emperor Justinus junior, the name of Tiberius the Caesar ought to have been inserted.

At this present there is extant a Constitution of the Emperor Justinus junior, concerning the promoting Rectours of Provinces without reward. Which amongst the Novel Constitutions of Justinus junior is the fifth in number. In that Constitution Justinus gives permission to the Provincials, that they may make known to the Emperor those persons whom they should judge fit to Govern their own Province; and the Emperor promises, that he will give forth the Codices and the Insignia [Marks, Tokens] of Magistracy freely, without any present or gift. Which Law, in regard it bears date on the Eighth year of Justinus junior's Empire, was, we doubt not, set forth also by the persuasion and suggestion of Tiberius the Caesar. Valef.

C H A P. XIV.

That the Emperor Tiberius raised a vast Army [to be employed] against Chosroes; [at the head whereof] he sent Justinianus the Dux, and drove [Chosroes] out of * the Roman Pale.

* Or, Land of the Romans.

Having therefore employed the ill gotten Treasure to a good use, he made provision for a War. And raises to vast an Army * of valiant Men, by listing the choicest Soldiers, both of the || Transalpine Nations who [inhabit] about the Rhine, and also of the || Cisalpine, of the Massageta likewise, and other Scythick Nations; of those also about * Pannonia and Achaia, of the Illyrii and Iavari: that he intermixt near an Hundred and fifty thousand Men with his incomparable Troops of Horfe, and Routed Chosroes: who after his taking of Daras, immediately in the Summer had made an irruption into Armenia, and from thence * ἦλθε ἰσχυρῶς. Without doubt it must be made ἦλθε. *Tis a wonder to me, that this was not taken notice of, either by Nicephorus, or the Translators. Valef.

* Or, Consider of their Enfranchisement.

resolved upon an Invasion of Caesarea, (which is the Metropolis of Cappadocia,) and of the Cities in that Region. He contemned the Roman Empire in such a manner, that when Caesar dispatched away an Embassy to him, he would not vouchsafe the Ambassadors access to himself: but ordered them to follow him to Caesarea: for there, he said, he would * give them audience. But when he saw the Roman Army fronting him, (Commanded by * Justinianus * Brother to that Justinus who had been barbarously murdered by [the Emperor] Justinus) accurately well Armed, the Trumpets sounding an Alarm, the Colours raised in order to an Engagement, the Soldier greedy of slaughter, and with a most incomparable decency breathing forth rage and fury, [lastly] such and so great a number of Horfe, as none of the Sixty Emperours had ever conceived in their mind; he was stricken with a great amazement, fighed deeply at so unhop'd for and unexpected a thing, and would not begin a Fight. When therefore he deferred an Engagement, made delays, spent the time, and only feigned a Fight; the Scythian, a Person that Commanded the Right Wing, makes an Attack upon him. The Persians were not able to bear the Shock of his Charge, but apparently deserted their Ranks; whereupon [Curs] made a great slaughter amongst the Enemy. Then he Attacks the Rere [of the Persian,] where Chosroes and the whole Army had their Baggage: and he takes all the Kings Treasure, and more-over the whole Baggage, in the very sight of Chosroes, who bore it with patience, &c. thought his own trouble might with more ease be endured, than the Attack of Curs, the Persian in this manner therefore Curs, together with his Soldiers, possesses himself of great Riches and Plunder, and drives away the Beasts of burthen together with their Burthens, amongst which happened to be Chosroes's Sacred Fire, adored by him as a God: [after this] he marches round the Persian Army singing a Victorious Song, and about Candle-lighting returns to * the Roman Army, which had now left its Station; neither Chosroes nor the Romans having begun a Fight: only some Skirmishes had happened, and (as it usually happened) Justinianus the Dux, who had been sent by the Emperor Justinus junior, to assist the Roman Army, arrived at the head of the Roman Army, and drove Chosroes out of the Roman Pale. Justinianus the Dux, who had been sent by the Emperor Justinus junior, to assist the Roman Army, arrived at the head of the Roman Army, and drove Chosroes out of the Roman Pale. Justinianus the Dux, who had been sent by the Emperor Justinus junior, to assist the Roman Army, arrived at the head of the Roman Army, and drove Chosroes out of the Roman Pale.

of the East being sent by Tiberius, makes ready for a War, and in his Field which lies between Daras and Nisibis engages in a brave Fight, having with him those most valiant Nations, which in the Language of the Barbarians are termed Hermandi; where he vanquishes the aforementioned Emperor. Valef.

Tiberius Justinus Junior, who had been sent by the Emperor Justinus junior, to assist the Roman Army, arrived at the head of the Roman Army, and drove Chosroes out of the Roman Pale. Justinianus the Dux, who had been sent by the Emperor Justinus junior, to assist the Roman Army, arrived at the head of the Roman Army, and drove Chosroes out of the Roman Pale.

A Theophylactus mentions this person, in book 3. chap. 16. and in book 1. chap. 9. In which places the Latine Translator terms him Cursus. But, he had better have translated it Cursus. For so Alexander Protector calls him, in the sixth book of his Histories, pag. 159. of the King's Edition. In Theophanes's Chronicle, pag. 214, he is corruptly termed κέρς, Crons. Valef.

Alexander Justinus Junior, who had been sent by the Emperor Justinus junior, to assist the Roman Army, arrived at the head of the Roman Army, and drove Chosroes out of the Roman Pale. Justinianus the Dux, who had been sent by the Emperor Justinus junior, to assist the Roman Army, arrived at the head of the Roman Army, and drove Chosroes out of the Roman Pale.

pens,) sometimes one Man [came out] of each Army and engaged in a single Combat. On the night following Chosroes kindled many Fires, and prepared for a Night-Fight: and whereas the Roman Army was divided into two Camps, in the dead of the Night he falls upon those who were Encamped to the Northward. After he had routed them by his sudden and unexpected Attack, he invades Meditina a City that lay near, which was then without a Garrison and destitute of Inhabitants. And after he had burnt down this whole City, he made preparations for his passing over the River Euphrates. But when the Roman Army was got together into one Body, and followed him, being put into a fear in relation to his own safety, he himself got upon an Elephant, and to pass the River. But a vast number of the [Forces] about him were buried in the Torrent of the Euphrates. After he had received information of their being drowned, he marched away from thence. Chosroes therefore having undergone this last punishment for his too great † infolence towards the Romans, in company of those [of his Forces] who had made their escape, went into the East, where he had a Truce, to the end no one might make an Attack upon him. But Justinianus with the whole Roman Army entered the Persian Empire, where he passed the Winter season, no body giving him any the least molestation. About the Summer Solstice he returned, without the loss of any part of his Forces, and with great felicity and much glory spent the Summer about the Confines of both Empires.

† Petroleum or, Con-
tumelle.

CHAP. XV.

That Chosroes being heavily disquieted at his own overthrow, ended his life: but his Son Hormisdas undertook the Government of the Persians.

BUT, an immense [deluge of] sadness being poured in upon Chosroes, (who was now sorely distressed, reduced to a desperation, and overwhelmed with a reciprocal Torrent of Grief,) in a miserable manner took him out of this life; after he had erected an immortal Monument of his own Flight, [to wit] the Law he wrote, that no Emperor of the Persians should in future lead forth an Army against the Romans. His Son Hormisdas succeeds him in the Empire. † Of whom I must at present omit to speak, in regard the sequel [of Transactions] calls me to themselves, and doth expect the * thread of my Discourse.

* Line, or,
Procedure.

† The death of Chosroes King of the Persians is related too soon here. For he died after Tiberius had gotten the Empire, as Theophylactus attests, book

3. chap. 16. which is also confirmed by Menander Protector in his Excerpt. Legat. Wherefore Theophanes is mistaken in his Chronicon, who relates Chosroes's death, and the Inauguration of his Son Hormisdas, in the Empire of Justinus Junior. Valef.
† O' tōv iustōv. In the Tellerian Manuscript I found it written, o' tōv iustōv, of whom I must at present omit to speak: which reading I prefer far before the Vulgar one. Valef.

CHAP. XVI.

Who at that time were Bishops of the Greater Churches.

AFTER the departure of Jobannes, called also Catelinus, out of this life, <sup>a</sup> Bonifacius undertakes <sup>a</sup> In Nice. the Government of the Bishoprick of Rome; he phorus, book 17. was succeeded by another Jobannes, whose successor was Pelagius. The Constantinopolitan Chair, when Jobannes was dead, was restored to Eutychius, who had been Bishop before Jobannes. After Apollinaris, Jobannes succeeds in the Throne of Alexandria, who was succeeded by Eulogius. After Macarius, Jobannes is promoted to the Episcopate of Jerusalem, a person who had been exercised in the Conflicts of an unfurnished life, in that termed the Monastery of the Acemetti; <sup>b</sup> nothing of an Innovation having been attempted in relation to the Ecclesiastick constitution. <sup>b</sup> Christophorus understood these words so, as if Evagrius would have said, that in the times of Jobannes Bishop of Jerusalem, no tumult had been raised in the Church. But to me Evagrius seems to mean another thing; to wit, that during that whole time, wherein these Prelates, here named by Evagrius, late, there had been no tumult in the Church; Valef.

CHAP. XVII.

Concerning the Earthquake which happened at Antioch in the times of Tiberius.

BUT, <sup>a</sup> in the third Year of Tiberius the Cæsar's Governing the Roman Empire, there happened at Antioch and the Suburb Daphne which is near it, a most dismal shaking of the Earth, <sup>a</sup> at the very hottest time of Noon-day. At which time all Daphne was totally demolished by this Earthquake, and the Edifices at Antioch, as well the publick as the private ones, were rent in sunder to the very earth, but fell not to thought the very ground. Some other accidents happened that by likewise, highly worthy to be recorded, both at Theopolis it self, and at the Imperial City also: which disquieted both those Cities, and incited them to the greatest Tumults. [These Accidents] took their * beginning from <sup>a</sup> Ocasus, a divine Zeal, and obtained a conclusion besitting God. Which [matters] <sup>c</sup> I come [now] to give a Narrative of.

Stephanos and Musculus, as may be gathered from their Renditions. But in my judgment, Evagrius seems to mean here the Year of Tiberius's Cæsarean Dignity. For, in the first place the words themselves do sufficiently show that. Then secondly, Evagrius has not yet related Justinus Junior's death, nor the Coronation of Tiberius. For he speaks of these hereafter, in the nineteenth chapter of this book. Wherefore, those things related in this chapter, happened whilst Justinus Junior was yet alive. Valef.

<sup>b</sup> Es t' autē tīs pōnēdētēs tō cōpōtōtōi. It must be thidē es autē, at the very; as 'tis in the Tellerian MS; or, es' autē, as it is in Nicephorus. Valef.

<sup>c</sup> Ἀλλ' οὐκ ἀρξάμενος, I begin to relate. I had rather write, ἔρχομαι, I come: for to Grecians are wont to speak. In the Tellerian MS. I found it plainly written, Ἀλλ' οὐκ ἔρχομαι, I come to give a relation of. Valef.

CHAP. XVIII.

Concerning the Infurrection against the Execrable Anatolius.

One Anatolius (a person at first<sup>a</sup> of the ordinary rank, and one of the Sedentary Mechanicks, but afterwards, in what manner I know not, he had thrust himself into the Magistracy, and into other Offices;) lived in the City Antioch: where also he followed those affairs which he then had in hand. On which account likewise it happened that he contracted an intimate familiarity with Gregorius the Prelate of that City: and made frequent visits to him,<sup>b</sup> partly that he might confer with him, and partly to render his own power and authority greater by often conversing with him.

And one of the Sedentary Mechanicks. The same is the reading in Nicephorus. Further, 'tis strange that three Translators should have been mistaken in the rendition of one word. For Joannes Languis renders it thus: Erant Theopolis Anatolius quidam, ex plebeis libi quidem & ignavis uoxis. There was at Theopolis one Anatolius, a person of the ordinary rank and one of the foolish. Mosculus translates it in this manner: Unus ex multis qui sui vitam delicatè instituerunt. One of those many who lead a delicate life. Christophorus's Version runs thus: Anatolius vir quidam plebeius primùm & mollis. Anatolius a man at first a plebeian and effeminate, or, soft. Which interpretation they seem to have drawn from Suidas and the Author of the Etymologicum; who expounded ἀνδρῆς in this manner, ἀνδρῆς ὁ γυναικώδης, idle and effeminate. But, this term signifies something else here, as is concluded from the preceding term. Wherefore I doubt not, but by this word Evagrius means the Artificer Sellarii, Sedentary Mechanicks, which the Greeks also term ἰδωγός, for the same reason, to wit because they do their work sitting. So Julius Pollux book 7. chap. 1. and the Author of the Etymologicum in the word βραχὺς. Valef.

<sup>b</sup> Τὸ αὐτὸ ὡς πρὸς τὰν βραχὺν λέγουσι. I write, τὸ αὐτὸ ὡς βραχὺν λέγουσι, partly that he might confer with him, the word πρὸς must be expunged, which crept in here from the foregoing line. Valef.

This [Anatolius] was afterwards discovered to have sacrificed [to the Gods,] and having on that account been called to Examination, was detected to be a most execrable wretch, a Conjuror, and a person involved in innumerable impicities. But he † corrupted the Comes of the East with Money; and wanted but little of gaining his diffinition, together with his Accomplices; (For he had several others of the same Morals with himself, who had been apprehended at the same time that he was;) had not the populace made an Infurrection, and by raising a great disturbance, spoiled that design. Moreover, they exclaimed against the Patriarch himself, and said that he * was a party in that Consult. Also, some turbulent and destructive Demon had perwaded some persons, that he was † present together with Anatolius at his [detectable] sacrifices. For this reason Gregorius was reduced to the imminentest of danger, most violent incursions being made against him by the populace. And this suspicion was raised to such an height, that the Emperour as the Tiberius himself became desirous of knowing thing in the truth from Anatolius's own mouth. He gives order therefore, that Anatolius and his Accomplices should forthwith be conveyed to the Imperial City. Which when Anatolius understood, he ran to an Image of the Theotocos hung up by a rope in the Prison, and having folded his hands behind his back, shewed himself in the posture of an humble Suppliant and Petitioner. But she, abominating [the man,] and reproving [the Wretch] as impious and hateful to God,<sup>a</sup> turned [her face] quite backward; an horrid sight, and worthy to be forever remembered: which thing having been seen, without both by all the Prisoners, and also by those who were entrusted with the custody of Anatolius and his Accomplices; was declared to all persons. Moreover, he was seen by some of the Faithful, inciting them against that Pest Anatolius, and saying that he had been injurious to her Son. But after he was brought to the Imperial City, and having been * exposed to the acutest of Tortures, had not any thing in the least to say against the Prelate [Gregorius,] he, together with his Associates, became the Occasioner of greater Tumults there, and [was the Author] of a popular Sedition in that City. For, when some of † them had received a sentence of Banishment, but were not to be taken off by a capital punishment; the populace, incensed by a kind of Divine zeal, put all things into a disturbance, by being exasperated, and highly enraged. And having seized the persons that had been condemned to Exile, they put them into a Boat, and burnt them alive; which sentence the People pronounced against them. They likewise exclaimed against the Emperour, and against Eutychius their own Patriarch, as being betrayers of the Faith: And they were about to have murdered Eutychius, and those persons to whom the Cognizance of this Cause had been committed, going up and down to all places in quest of them; had not providence, the preserver of all things, delivered them out of their hands who sought after them, and by degrees appeased the Rage of so numerous a multitude, in such a manner, that no mischievous Action was committed by their hands. Further, Anatolius himself in the first place was cast to the wild Beasts in the Amphitheatre, and his Body having been torn by them, was afterwards fixt to a Cross. But neither in this manner found he an end of his punishment in this life. For the Wolves having drag'd his impure Body down from the Cross, (a thing never before seen,) divided it for a prey amongst themselves. There was also a certain person amongst us, who (before these things happened,) affirmed, that he saw in his sleep, in what manner the Sentence against Anatolius and his Accomplices should be * pronounced by the People. And an Illustrious * Curator of the Imperial Houses, who was a vigorous defender of Anatolius, affirmed that he saw the Theotocos, who said, how long would he defend Anatolius, who had cast such great contumelies, both on her self, and on her Son. And in this manner were these affairs concluded.

must be written, ἐκ τῆς αὐτῆς εὐσεβείας, turned [her face] quite backward. And so Nicephorus read, who has exprest this place of Evagrius thus, ἐκ τῆς αὐτῆς παύσεως ἀντιπροσώπου, turned her self quite away from him. Whence it appears, that Nicephorus put a Comma before the word τῆς αὐτῆς, after the term ἀντιπροσώπου: which punctuation I do rather approve of. Valef. In Rebert Stephens's Edition, this passage is worded and pointed thus; ἡ δὲ, μοναχὴ θεοῦ ἡ τὴν ἐκείνου ἡ δεικνύσαντα τέλειον, ἐκ τῆς αὐτῆς παύσεως. But she, said a dominating this impious person and perfectly reproving [the Wretch] hateful to God, turned backward.

* Or, Subjected. † Vis. Anatolius received a sentence of Banishment, but were not to be taken off by a capital punishment; the populace, incensed by a kind of Divine zeal, put all things into a disturbance, by being exasperated, and highly enraged. And having seized the persons that had been condemned to Exile, they put them into a Boat, and burnt them alive; which sentence the People pronounced against them. They likewise exclaimed against the Emperour, and against Eutychius their own Patriarch, as being betrayers of the Faith: And they were about to have murdered Eutychius, and those persons to whom the Cognizance of this Cause had been committed, going up and down to all places in quest of them; had not providence, the preserver of all things, delivered them out of their hands who sought after them, and by degrees appeased the Rage of so numerous a multitude, in such a manner, that no mischievous Action was committed by their hands. Further, Anatolius himself in the first place was cast to the wild Beasts in the Amphitheatre, and his Body having been torn by them, was afterwards fixt to a Cross. But neither in this manner found he an end of his punishment in this life. For the Wolves having drag'd his impure Body down from the Cross, (a thing never before seen,) divided it for a prey amongst themselves. There was also a certain person amongst us, who (before these things happened,) affirmed, that he saw in his sleep, in what manner the Sentence against Anatolius and his Accomplices should be * pronounced by the People. And an Illustrious * Curator of the Imperial Houses, who was a vigorous defender of Anatolius, affirmed that he saw the Theotocos, who said, how long would he defend Anatolius, who had cast such great contumelies, both on her self, and on her Son. And in this manner were these affairs concluded.

For the Houses of the Emperours, as well those in the Imperial City, as them in the Suburbs, had their Curators, who look'd after their Revenue. And this dignity was not the meanest, for the persons who bore it had the Titles of Most Glorious and Most Magnificent, as I have remarked before at the third chapter of this book. They seem also to have had a Jurisdiction, as Agathius shews in his Fifth Book, speaking concerning one Anatolius an Ex-consul; ἀρχὴν τῆς τοῦ βασιλέως ἀρχῆς παραδίδωκε, &c. A person that had been borne away with the Dignity of the Consuls, and besides had obtained an Office, [which was,] to take care of and to look after the Houses and posses-

† Or, thought off.

* Or, Was a party of that design. † Εὐχρίτης ὁ ἐπίσκοπος. Gregorius was reduced to the imminentest of danger, most violent incursions being made against him by the populace. And this suspicion was raised to such an height, that the Emperour as the Tiberius himself became desirous of knowing thing in the truth from Anatolius's own mouth. He gives order therefore, that Anatolius and his Accomplices should forthwith be conveyed to the Imperial City. Which when Anatolius understood, he ran to an Image of the Theotocos hung up by a rope in the Prison, and having folded his hands behind his back, shewed himself in the posture of an humble Suppliant and Petitioner. But she, abominating [the man,] and reproving [the Wretch] as impious and * Given out, or, executed. † Τὸν βασιλέα ἐκείνου αὐτοῦ; that is, Curator of the Imperial Houses.

For the Houses of the Emperours, as well those in the Imperial City, as them in the Suburbs, had their Curators, who look'd after their Revenue. And this dignity was not the meanest, for the persons who bore it had the Titles of Most Glorious and Most Magnificent, as I have remarked before at the third chapter of this book. They seem also to have had a Jurisdiction, as Agathius shews in his Fifth Book, speaking concerning one Anatolius an Ex-consul; ἀρχὴν τῆς τοῦ βασιλέως ἀρχῆς παραδίδωκε, &c. A person that had been borne away with the Dignity of the Consuls, and besides had obtained an Office, [which was,] to take care of and to look after the Houses and posses-

Inlands, Cities, and Countreys, which in proceſs of time had been deſerted; and land that before had been wholly untill'd, was by them rendred fertile; and out of them were raiſed numerous Armies, which with great Courage and Valour waged wars againſt other [barbarous] Nations: [in ſine,] every family was fill'd with thoſe that might perform Servile Offices, in regard Slaves could be procur'd at a moſt cheap rate.

CHAP. XX.

How Mauricius vanquished Tamchofroes and Adaarmanes Generals of the Persians.

Moreover, He engaged with the Eminentest of the Persian Commanders, to wit, Tamchoufres and Adnammes, who had made an irruption [into the Roman Pale] with a Considerable Army. In what manner, when, and where this Action was performed, let others relate; or perhaps we will give a Narrative thereof in another work: for our present Subject promises an account of far different affairs. Neverthelefs, **Tamchofrees* fell in that Engagement, not by the Valour of the Roman Army, but by the piety only of their Commander in chief [Mauricius], and by his Faith in God. *Moreover Aadamantes flies with all imaginable haſt, having been ſeverely wounded in that Fight, and loſt many of his own Forces: and that, notwithstanding Alamundarus, who Commanded the † Saracens, had aſted perfidiously, and reſuſed to paſs the River Euphrates, and to give aſſiſtance to Mauricius againſt thoſe Saracens who were in the

* Or, tu, they be taken, if at any time they be * stoppt, elosed, or they prevent the Enemy in their Retreats.
 * Theodorichus, Notwithstanding also, * Theodorichus, who was Commander of the Sythyian Nations, stood not made mention of this Forces about him.
 Command-
 of Theodorichus, in his third book, chap. 17. He was by Nation a Goth, as may be concluded from his name. Valef.

CHAP. XXI.

† Or, Concerning those Signs which † presignified
Mauricius's being made Emperour.

Further, here hapned Signs also shewn from Heaven, which foretold, that Mauricius should be Emperour. For, as he offered incense late at night, within the Sanctuary of the Sacred Houſe of the holy and moſt undefiled Virgin and Theotocos Mary, (which by the Antiochians is termed Eſſian's Church,) the Veil about the Sacred Table ſeemed to be all on fire; in ſo much that Mauricius was ſtruck with Terror and Amazement, and very much dreaded that fight. Gre- gorius Patriarch of that City, ricius, told him, that that * from God; and portended the greatest and most eximious events to him. Christ our God appeared likewise to him <sup>a</sup> in <sup>a certain</sup> Divine insist.

<sup>a</sup> That is when Manricius was in the East. So Nicephorus expounds this place of Evagrius, in the ninth chapter of his 18th book. A little after, from the same Nicephorus, and from the Tellerian MS. I have inserted it, ὅτι τὸ ἐκείνους ἐξέβη, and petitioned him in relation to a revenge; whereas before it was one word, thus, ἐξέβησαν, &c. Vale!

of himself? Moreover, his Parents related to me several other memorable passages, and such as are worthy to be recorded, when I my self made enquiry of them concerning these matters. For his Father affirmed to me, that in his sleep he saw a vast Vine, which sprang out of his Bed at the very time of * his <sup>* Mauri-</sup> conception, and that a great many and those the <sup>cini's</sup> fairest sort of Grapes appeared hanging on it. And his Mother declared, that <sup>It is</sup> at the very <sup>birth</sup> b of the <sup>of a</sup> strange and unusual sweet smell. Also, that the <sup>of a</sup> time of her delivery, the Earth sent forth a <sup>of a</sup> termed <sup>of a</sup> The Empusa had often carried away the Infant, as if he would have devoured it: with Sir <sup>of a</sup> but was unable to do it any mischief. <sup>of a</sup> Symeon, <sup>of a</sup> Henry Sa- likewise who kept his Station upon a Pillar near <sup>of a</sup> Antioch, a man of extraordinary prudence in the <sup>of a</sup> management of affairs, and one adorned with <sup>of a</sup> all the Divine Virtues, spoke and performed many things, which declared that Mauricius should be <sup>of a</sup> Emperor. Concerning which person we shall speak more opportunely in the following book of our History.

red, that at the very time of her delivery, &c. And so the reading is in Nicephorus. In the Tellerian Manuscript I found it written, αὐτὴν τὴν ἰστορίαν, at her very delivery. Vale.

c See, if you please, what I have remarked concerning The Empusa, at the eighth book of Sozomen's History, chap. 6. Nicephorus, who deservedly derides such Old-wiver-fables as these, affirms (chap. 9. book 18.) that in his age this [She-devil] was called Gilo. Those termed Sergie by the Romans, were like to those Empusæ; concerning these Sergie see Festus. The old Glosses, Sergie, νεκρῶν γινώσκουσιν, Leffringus, a Witch. Concerning this Gilo or Gello, which heretofore was believed to snatch away Children, Leo Allarius has remarked much, in his Letter to Paulus Zorobias. Val.

CHAP. XXII.

Concerning the Proclaiming of Mauricius and Augusta.

Further, Mauricius is promoted to the Empire, at such time as Tiberius was drawing his last breath, and had delivered to him his Daughter Augusta, and the Empire instead of a portion, * He survived his being made Emperour but a very short time; but left an immortal Memory for the good Actions he performed. Nor, are they easily to be confined within the bounds of a Narrative. Moreover, Tiberius left an incomparable Inheritance to the Republick, to wit, his Proclaiming of Mauricius Emperour. To whom he distributed his Names also: for he styled Mauricius, Tiberius; and to Augusta [he gave the name of] Constantina. What was performed by them, the following book, divine strength affording me its assistance, shall set forth.

CHAPTER XXIII.

† A Computation of the Times from Justinus Junior, to Mauricius.

Moreover, that the Times may be * distinguished with all imaginable accuracy, you are to know, that Justinian reigned <sup>a</sup> by himself twelve years ten months and a half; <sup>b</sup> with Tiberius [his Colleague,] three years and eleven months. All which time put together, [make up] sixteen years nine months and an half. Tiberius reigned alone four years. So that, from Romulus until the proclaiming of Mavricius Tiberius Emperor, there are concluded to be....., as both the former, and present [description of] the years hath manifested.

[illegible]

the reign of Augustus, was made Cæsar by Julianus, in the eighth Indiction, on the seventeenth day of the month September;<sup>21</sup> 'tis recorded in the Alexandrian Chronicle. But he began his Empire in the twelfth Indiction, on the fifth day of the month October. Hence there are four years and twenty eight days of Tiberius's Cæsaræan power. But, if we had rather follow Theophilistus, who writes, that Tiberius was made Cæsar by Julianus on the seventh day of December, on the sixth Fera; there will be three years and almost ten months, which is, from the year of Christ 574, to the year 581. Further, 'tis to be observed, that Tiberius Constantinus, after the death of Julianus Junior, reckoned the years of his own Empire from the beginning of his Cæsaræan power, as we are informed by the Subscription of the same Tiberius's Synagmatica, concerning the Confirmation of the Emperor Julianus Constantinus, which runs thus, Datus aeto Idus augusti, Sex Idus, et die tertia Idus Augusti. Datus is the third day of the Ides of August, at Constantinople, on the eighth year of the Emperor our Lord Tiberius Constantinus Augustus, and as the third year after his own Consulate, and on the fifth year of the most noble Flavius Tiberius Mauricius the most happy Cæsar. Vale.

CHAP. XXIV.

Concerning the Series of History, which is preserved till our Times.

* Or, Prepared. BY God's assistance, the History of the Church is * handed down to us, digested into one body, by [the industry of the best] Writers. Till the times of Constantine, by Eusebius Pamphilus. From Constantine's Reign, to [the Empire of] Theodosius Junior, by Theodoret, Soz-

men, and Socrates: and [Lastly,] * by those Collections, we have made in this our Sacred Work. The Ancient History, as well Sacred as Profane, is extant, continued in a Series by the Industrious. For Moses, who was the first that began to write an History, (as 'tis most evidently demonstrated by those who have made Collections in reference to these matters;) compiled a true and most exact account of affairs from the beginning of the world, according to the information he had from God himself, with whom he conversed in the Mount Sinai. Others who followed him, preparing a way for our Religion, have in the Sacred Volumes set forth what happened in succeeding Ages. Moreover, Josephus wrote a large History, which is every way useful and profitable. Whatever occurrences, whether fabulous or real, have happened amongst the Greeks and ancient Barbarians whilst the Greeks enjoyed Liberty, and the

was a different person from Nicostratus the Sophist, 'who flourish'd in the Empire of Marcus, as Suidas affirms, and also Georgius Syncellus in his Chronicon. Valef.

<sup>d</sup> ἀπὸ μωθίων ἀγέτωσιν. In my Annotations on the Excerpta Legationum out of Dexippus I have long since remarked, that at this place the reading must be, ἀπὸ σκυθίων, from the Scythick Wars. For Dexippus wrote the σκυθία, that is the Wars which the Romans waged against the Scythians, as Ptoleus attests in his Bibliotheca. Valse-

* Arrianus wrote the Parthica and Alonica, in which books he related the Actions performed by the Romans against the Parthians and Alans. Evagrius therefore means these books here. Valef.

things concerning the same times. The History of the following Times is given us by Zosimus, until the Emperours Honorius and Arcadius. After which Emperours, Affairs have been Recorded by Priscus Rhetor, and others. All these Transactions are excellently well reduced into an Epitome by Eustatbius Epiphaniensis, in two Volumes; the first whereof [comprizes matters transacted] until the taking of Troy, and the second, unto the twelfth year of Anastasi's Empire. From whence, until the times of Justinian, Procopius the Rhetorician hath Recorded affairs. The History of those Times next immediately following, until the flight of Chosroes Junior to the Romans, and his

This is the Eustatbius Syrus whose Testimony our Evagrius has made frequent use of, in the foregoing books.

Concerning this Author Suidas writes thus: *Εὐσταθίου τῷ Σὺν δὲ τῷ Εὐαγρίῳ ἀναγινώσκοντες τὰς ἐκείνου ἐκ τῶν Εὐσταθίου ἐπιφανίου [wrote] a Chronological Compendium of affairs from Alexis till the Emperour Anastasi in Times. At my peril write, ἐκ τῶν Εὐαγρίου, in two Volumes, or Times. I have Evagrius's authority here, for this Emendation. Valef.*

Restoration to his own Kingdom by Mauricius, (who made not any the least delay at that affair, but gave [the Fugitive] a Royal Reception, and with the Expence of a vast sum of money, and accompanied with great forces, conveyed him back into his own Kingdom, * with all possible expedition;) hath been written in a continued Series by Agathias the Rhetorician, and Johannes my Fellow-Citizen and Kinman; although as yet thy have not made their Histories publick. Concerning which affairs, we our selves also, the Divine † Clemency giving us permission, will in the Sequel † Or, Be- give such a Narrative as is accom- modate and agreeable.

* This Johannes was an Epiphaniensis. For, whereas Evagrius calls him his own Fellow-Citizen, he must needs have been an Epiphaniensis, in regard Epiphania a City of Syria, was Evagrius's native place. Wherefore Vossius is mistaken in his book de Hist. Grecis, who thought that this Johannes was by birth an Antiochian. Valef.

The End of the Fifth Book of Evagrius's Ecclesiastical History.

THE

THE SIXTH BOOK OF THE Ecclesiastical History

OF

EVAGRIUS SCHOLASTICUS EPIPHANIENSIS,

And [one] of the EX-PRÆFACTS.

CHAP. I.

Concerning the Marriage of Mauricius and Augusta.

MAURICIUS, After he had obtained the Empire, in the first place made provision for his Marriage. And, agreeable to the solemn usage of Emperors, he takes to Wife Augusta, who was also called Constantina. The pomp of those Nuptials was most magnificently performed, and Banquets and * Jolity [celebrated and observed] in every place of the City. At this Wedding were present Piety and Imperial Dignity, which [two] guarded [Mauricius and Constantina] in the gracefullest manner imaginable, and presented them with the richest Gifts. For, the † First [produced the Father and the Mother [of Mauricius,] (a thing never known to have hapned to any Emperor before,) who consecrated the Wedding with their Comely Gray-hairs and Venerable Wrinkles; his Brethren also, eminent for their Shape, Stature, and Comeliness, who adorned the Nuptial Pomp. The * Second [presented] a Robe interwoven with Gold, adorned with Purple and Indian Stones; Crowns also of the highest value, enrich'd with much Gold and the various brightneses of Gems; all those personages likewise, which bore Offices in the Imperial Palace, and were enrolled in the Militia; who carried Nuptial Tapers in their Hands, were most magnificently clad, to the end they might be known, and with Songs celebrated that Nuptial Solemnity. In so much that, never was there amongst men any thing more Splendid, or * Richer than that || Show. Demophilus, * More writing concerning Rome, does indeed relate, that Plutarchus Chæronensis uttered a † wise saying, viz. that for the sake of that one only † City, Virtue and Fortune had † Remo. entered into a mutual League. But I may say, † Concerning this Demophilus, that Piety and Felicity in such a like manner had come together in one Mauricius; for Piety had vanquished Felicity, and would write in in no wife permit her to make an escape. his Lexicon After this, Mauricius made it his Business to invest and adorn, not his Body only, but his mind also, with the Imperial Purple and Crown. For, of all the Emperors that were his Predecessors, he alone Reigned over himself. And being in reality made an Emperor, he expelled out of his own mind that † Democratical dominion of the Passions. And † Popular, having Conliterated an * Aristocracy within his own Mind, he shewed himself a living Image of Virtue, instructing his Subjects to an imitation of himself. All this is not spoken by me out of flattery. For, why should I utter these words with such a design, since † he is wholly ignorant of what I write? But, that what I have said is really so, will be made evident, both by those Gifts conferred on him by God, and also from the successful Accidents which have hapned at several times; all (or, Demophilus,) here mentioned was a Native of Bithynia, who wrote several useful stories and passages out of the books of the Ancients, as Julian informs us in his Misopog. Demophilus the Bithynian, of which he made a Collection out of various Authors, and composed Relations that were pleasing both to the Younger and the Elder Student. I am far Julian at that place produces a certain passage, which that Demophilus had collected out of Plutarchus Chæronensis, in like manner as our Evagrius does here. Valer. * Demophilus uttered a plain saying. I had rather read, more wisely, altered a wife saying; as Christophorus seems to have read: Further, the place of Plutarch, which Evagrius means here, is extant in his book de Fortunâ Romanorum, not far from the beginning: Valer.

Which

* Or, Con- which must * without controversy be by us ascribed to God.

CHAP. II.

Concerning Alamundarus the Saracen, and his Son Naamanes.

BESIDES all his other [Virtues,] this was the chiefest of his Care, that the blood of none of those who had been guilty of High-Treason, should in any wise be shed. Therefore, he did not put to death even Alamundarus, Chief of the Saraceni, who had betrayed both the Republick and Mauricius himself, as I have * already related: but only punished him with Deportation to an Island, together with his Wife and some of his Children, [ordering him] to dwell in Sicily. But Naamanes Son to this Man, (who had involved the State in innumerable mischiefs, and by the assistance of those Barbarians he had about him, had ruined and enslaved both the Phoenice's, and the Palestine's, at such time as [his Father] Alamundarus was seized;) although all [the Judges] were of opinion that he deserved a capital punishment, was only detained by him under a * Custody at large; and he insisted no further punishment on him. He used the same [Clemency] towards innumerable other persons, as shall be particularly related in due place.

* Or, A
see Custody
at.

CHAP. III.

Concerning Johannes and Philippicus Masters of the Milice, and the Actions done by them.

FURTHER, Mauricius in the first place sent Johannes, (a Native of Thracia,) Commander of the Eastern Milice. Who having been worsted in some Engagements, and got the better in others, did nothing worthy of a Narrative. After him, [he sent] Philippicus, who was related to him; for he had married one of Mauricius's two Sisters. He entered the Enemies Country, ruined all things he met with, and possessed himself of a vast quantity of Plunder. He likewise slew many [Inhabitants] of the City Nisibis, who were of Noble Birth and well defended, and of other Cities also which stood beyond the River Tigris. Moreover, he engaged with the Persians: whereupon a great Fight hapned, in which fell several Persians of the greatest Note, and he took many * Prisoners; he likewise sent away a † Body of Persians unhurt, who had fled to a certain * Eminence conveniently enough situated, when † was in his power to have taken them; after they had made him a promise, to persuade their own King, forthwith to dispatch away [an Embassy] to treat about a Peace. He also behaved himself very well in relation to several other matters, during his command of the Roman Forces; for he freed the Army from all things that were superfluous, and which opened a way to Luxury; and the Soldiers were by him reduced to Modesty, tractableness, and obedience. But these matters must be left to those who have written, or do now write, according as they may either receive information from Report, or are lead by opinion: whose Relation, in regard it either sum-

* Or,
Allee.
† Or,
Troop.
* Or, lib.

bles and is lamed by ignorance, or is softened by Affection and Partiality, or [Lastly] is blinded by * Hatred, does [usually] wander from the Truth.

* Or, Ac
tripally.

CHAP. IV.

Concerning Priscus's Mastership of the Milice, and what he suffered from the Army who raised a Mutiny against him.

AFTER this Philippicus, Priscus, is preferred to the Mastership of the Milice; a Person to whom access was not easily obtained, and one who came not abroad but upon affairs † of consequence. For, it was his Sentiment, that he could transact every thing better and with more ease, if for the most part he continued retired: as if the Soldiery, induced by fear this way rather, would yield a more ready obedience to his Commands. At the time therefore of his first arrival in the Roman Camp, his looks were supercilious and haughty, and his garb too gorgeous; when he * published some [Edicts] also, concerning the Soldiers * perseverance in undergoing hardships in the Wars, in reference to their being completely Armed, and in relation to the Ammon which they were to receive out of the publick Treasury. They having had some intimation of these matters beforehand, at that time broke forth into an open rage; and by a joyned consent made an Attack upon that place where Priscus's Tent was pitched, and in a barbarous manner made plunder of his magnificent Furniture, and of his richest and most valuable Treasure. Moreover, they mist but little of killing him; had he not mounted one of his * Lead-Horses,<sup>b</sup> To which City the Soldiers sent a Detachment of their own Body, and laid Siege to it, demanding Priscus to be Surrendered up to them.

* Περὶ τῶν νόμων. These words are to be understood concerning the Edicts published by Priscus. For the word πρόστασις denotes that; which term has that import and signification I have mentioned. Theopylactus confirms our Exposition, book 3. chap. 1. whom by all means consult. Valf.

* Or, Patient Sufferance.

† ἵππων. ἵππων, an Horse belonging to the Carriages. Christophorus translates it, Vehicularum, a Chariot-horse. These Horses the Latines termed Peredoi, because they conveyed the Redes, as Estius tells us. Evagrius uses this word again, at the fifteenth chapter of this book. Where see what I have observed at note (a.) Valf.

† ἵππων. ἵππων, an Horse belonging to the Carriages. Christophorus translates it, Vehicularum, a Chariot-horse. These Horses the Latines termed Peredoi, because they conveyed the Redes, as Estius tells us. Evagrius uses this word again, at the fifteenth chapter of this book. Where see what I have observed at note (a.) Valf.

CHAP. V.

Concerning Germanus's being forced against his will to undertake the Imperial dignity.

BUT when the Inhabitants of Edeffa refused to do that; they left Priscus there, and by force lay hands upon Germanus Commander of the Militia * in Phoenice Libanensis, whom they create their Leader, and * as much as they were able to do it, their Emperor. Nicephorus (chap. 11. book 18.) the reading is, ἡ ἀρχὴ τῆς πόλεως. This signifies with a mistake on the other hand. For, it must be written, ἡ πόλις ἀρχαία. For, there were two Phoenices that were Provinces, the one termed Libanensis, the other Maritima. Valf.

* ἡ πόλις ἀρχαία. I doubt not but it should be written, ἡ πόλις ἀρχαία. that is, quantum in ipso erat, as much as they were able to do it. Nicephorus confirms our Emendation, who instead of the forecited words of Evagrius, hath substituted these; ἡ πόλις ἀρχαία, as much as in them lay. In the Tiberian MS. I found it plainly written, ἡ πόλις ἀρχαία, &c. Valf.

But,

emperor to make an enquiry into that disturbance. This Johannes was a person unfit to manage the most trivial affairs, much less [to compose] a matter of such consequence. Having therefore filled the City with Tumults and Disturbances and by a publication of his Edicts declared, that any one that would, might accuse the Patriarch: He receives a Libel against him, presented by a certain person who was President of a money-table; wherein 'twas set forth, that Gregorius had had to do with his own Sister, who was given in marriage to another man. He receives likewise [Accusations] from other men of the same kidney, which related to the peace and repose of the City [Antioch,] as if that had been frequently disturbed by Gregorius. As to [the Crime he stood charged with for disturbing] the Repose of the City, Gregorius's answer was, that his defence was ready. But, in relation to other matters objected against him, he appealed to the Emperor and a Synod. Having me-therefore his Aflessor, Councillour and Companion, he went to the Imperial [City, Constantinople,] in order to the making his devotion in Crise against these [Accusations,] And, the Patriarchs in all places, partly in person and partly by their Legates, having been present at the Examination hercof, as likewise the Sacred [the] litanies; when the matter had been thorowly sifted; at length, after many * Adi-

<sup>b</sup> Περί τῆς εὐσεβείας πόλεως. Mosheim renders it, the abundance and plenty of the Annona. Langus and Christophorus translate it, the peace and felicity. The word εὐσεβείας signifies both, as Suidas attests. Valf.

* Or, Con- ons, Gregorius carried the Cause: in so much that, his Accuser was scourged with Nerves, lead about the City, and punished with Exile. From thence therefore Gre- gorius returns to his own See, at such time as the Roman Army in the East was in a Motiny; Phi- lippicus then making his Residence about the Cities Beræa and Chalcis.

place of Evagrius informs us. For Gregorius Bishop of Antioch, when he went to the Imperial City, to make his defence concerning his Accusation of Incest before a Synod of Bishops and before the Senators, carried Evagrius Scholasticus along with him, who might be his Councillour and Aflessor, and might give him advice where there was need. For that is the import of the word μαγιστρός at this place. Further, in this Relation of Evagrius's, many things are observable. First, his saying that Gregorius Bishop of Antioch, when accused of Incest by a Laick before a Secular Judge, appealed to the Emperor and a Synod. (Concerning an appeal to the Emperor, the Letter of the Roman Council to Gratianus Augustus is to be consulted, which was first published by Jacobus Symonides.) Secondly, it is to be observed that Evagrius says, that Gregorius's Cause was tried before the Patriarchs and Metropolitans, and before the Senators. So in the Chalcedon Synod, after the Bishops and Secular Judges were met together, the Cause of Dioscorus Bishop of Alexandria was discussed and determined. In which Synod the most glorious Judges and Senators are always named before the Bishops who were present at that Synod: in like manner as in this place of Evagrius, the Senators are named before the Metropolitans; but they are mentioned after the Patriarchs. Valf.

CHAP. VIII.

That Antioch suffered again by Earth-quakes.

* Gregorius.
F<sup>or</sup> our months after * his return, * on the Six hundred thirty seventh year of Antioch's being styled a Free City, Sixty one years after Christ 399. the former Earthquake, on the last day of the month Hyperboreatus, whereon I had married a young Virgin, and the whole City kept Holiday, and celebrated a publick Festivity, both as to Pomp, and also round my Marriage-Bed; the Nativity of Christ eight and forty years, as I have observed above. Now, that which Evagrius adds, (viz. that this Earthquake happened at Antioch Sixty one years after the former Earthquake which had afflicted Antioch.) agrees exactly with our account. For, the former Earthquake, in Justinus's Reign, had hapned on the year of Christ 328. as I have remarked at the Fourth Book of Evagrius, Chap. 6. note (b) Further, from hence may be gathered the year of the Constantinopolitan Synod, which was convened in the Cause of Gregorius Bishop of Antioch. This Synod Baronius places on the year of Christ 387. But, from Evagrius's authority, I doubt not of its having been assembled two years after. For, whereas this Synod was celebrated four months after that Earthquake whereby Antioch was shaken, and whereas the Earthquake hapned on the Six hundred thirty seventh year of the Antiochians, as Evagrius attests; what I have affirmed is necessarily made out, viz. that the Constantinopolitan Synod was convened on the year of Christ 389. Valf.

† about the third hour of the night, hapned an † * Aug.
Earthquake accompanied with a dreadful noise, τεταραχῆς, which shook the whole City: it overturned δοκίμια, very many Edifices, * and tore up their very foundations. In so much that all [the Buildings which stood] about the most holy Church foundations were totally ruined, only the Hemisphære thereof was preserved, which Ephraem had built of Timber fell'd in the Daphnesian Grove, when it had suffered by an Earthquake in Justinus's Empire. In the Earthquakes which hapned afterwards, the same Hemisphære had been so bowed towards the Northern-side, that it * Apoc.
had Timber-Props wherewith 'twas supported. ἐν τῇ βα- Which Props having been thrown down by the λεῖν, I violent concussion of the Earth, the Hemi- think it sphære returned to the other side, and being must be directed by a certain rule as 'twere, was restored to its proper place. Moreover, there λαβὼν, was re-fell many Buildings of that [Region] termed received, the Ostracine, the Paphlagonian also, of which we our, had.
have made mention † before, and all † Our men- those places called the * Brylia, the Book 1. on is con-Edifices likewise about the most v- Chap. 18. firmed by the nérable Church of the Theotocos, only its middle Thell- Porticus was miraculously preserved. Further, rian Me- all the * Towers in the Campus were ruined, but nscript, the rest of the Building continued entire, excepting only the Battlements of the Walls. For Nicephorus, who some Stones of those Battlements were * Or, hath * driven backward, but they fell not. Turned to of Ev-
Several other Churches suffered like- the contra- wise, as did also the one of the pub- gruities lick Baths, to wit, * one of them which was divi- side. διὰ τὴν ded according to the Several seasons of the year. νημερίαν ἐν τῷ
Ev-
Langus renders it, saque de causa, signa qua id sustinebant, habuimus, and on that account is had Props which bore it up. The Greeks call these Props ἀντισταῖς, in one word, as Eusebius attests. Which term I lately found Philo Mechanicus to have made use of, when I translated his books of Machinis into Latine. In French we call them, Devils. In Latine they are termed Fulcrata, Props, or Shoars. Which term Fulcrata is made use of by Livy, in his description of the Siege of Ambracia. Valf.

* Τὰ καλὸν ἀνα βεῖα. In the Tellurian Manuscript, and in Nicephorus, 'tis Γενεῖα, Brylia, which I rather approve of. Certain pleasant and flourishing places seem to have been so termed, viz. Γενεῖα, which signifies, florere, to flourish; as Suidas attests, and the Author of the Etymologicon in the word Γενεῖα. Valf.

* Οἱ πύργοι τῆς πόλεως. The Translators, Langus, Mosheim, and Christophorus, understood not this place, as 'tis apparent from their Versions. For they have rendered it thus: Omnes quoque turres in plano constitutæ, disjectæ sunt; Also all the Towers, placed in the Plain, were thrown down. I think malui to be the Campus, which was without the Gates of the City Antioch, wherein the Soldiers were wont to be exercised. Athanasius makes mention of this place, in a Supplicatory address, which the Arians had presented against him to the Emperor Julian then residing at Antioch: ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ τῇ ἐν τῇ πόλει ἀντιόχειας τῇ ἐν τῇ πόλει ἀντιόχειας τῇ ἐν τῇ πόλει ἀντιόχειας, that is, the first Congress they had with the Emperor [was] in the Gate Romanensis, when the Emperor went forth into the Campus. Valf. See Athanasius Works, Tom. 21 pag. 27. Edit. Paris. 1627.

* Εὐαγγέλιον τῶν ἀποστόλων ἀντισταῖς ἀντισταῖς. Nicephorus adds some few words here, in this manner: ἀντισταῖς τῶν οὐρανίων ἀντισταῖς; Βο The whole place is thus rendered by Langus: Et utrumque publicum Lavacrum, ex pulcherrimo statu ad eam que ex diametro est deformitatem, collatum; And each publick Bath, faine from a most beautiful condition to that deformity which is Diametrically opposite. Which rendition is by no means to be born with. Nor is Mosheim's translation much better, who renders it thus: Et ex publicis Balneis alterum ipsæ

issem boris dirutum est, And the one of the publick Baths is ruined in the very same hours. Christopherson has expounded this place thus: Et unumque publicum Balneum, quod duobus distinctis temporibus interire, eadem oppressit Calamitas; And the same Calamity ruined each of the publick Baths, which served for two distinct times. But my Sentiment is, that the meaning of these words is this. There were at Antioch two publick Baths, divided according to the Seasons of the year. The one a Summer Bath, the other a Winter-one. Of these Baths, says Evagrius, the one was ruined by that Earthquake.

To supply the want of the Greek text.

An innumerable company of People perished also in this Earthquake; and, as some have made a Conjecture from the publick Amoma, this Calamity destroyed about Sixty thousand persons. But, the Bishop was beyond all expectation preserved, although the House wherein he sat fell, and no Person escaped, save only those who stood about him. Which Persons, when another shaking of the Earth had rent that place, * took [up the Bishop] on their shoulders, and let him down by a Rope, and so made their escape from danger. There happened another thing also, which was Salutory to the City, in regard our Compassionate God sharpened his Menaces with Lenity, and chastized the Sin [of the People] with the Rod of commiseration and mercy. For, no part of the City happened to be burnt, notwithstanding there was so vast a quantity of flame every where in the City, [which arose] from the Hearths, from the publick and private Candles, from Kitchens, Furnaces, and Baths, and from innumerable other places. Further, many Persons of great Note and Eminency perished in this Earthquake; amongst which number was Asterius. And the Emperor administered comfort to this Calamity of the City, by [a supply of] Money [out of his Exchequer].

But, I am not pleased with this Rendition. For 'tis my Sentiment, that the number of the dead could not be made out that way. Wherefore, I had rather explain this place thus. As at Rome, Constance, and Alexandria, the Amoma was distributed to the Citizens, out of the publick stock; so in my opinion, the practice was at Antioch. For Antioch was one of the four greatest Cities of the Roman Empire. From this bread therefore, which they were wont to distribute daily, 'twas easie to collect the number of the dead. Nevertheless, if any one had rather follow Christopherson's Exposition, I shall not much resist him. Especially, in regard there is extant no evidence of any Ancient Writer, concerning the publick Amoma of the City Antioch. Valef.

* δοξάτω ἀνελκόμενος. Nicephorus has added some few words here, in this manner, δοξάτω σὺν τῷ ἐπίσκοπῳ ἀνελκόμενος, took up [the Bishop] together with his Bed, or, Couch, on their Shoulders. I know not whether he added this by conjecture, or found it so written in his own Copy. Valef.

CHAP. IX.

That the Barbarians taking Courage from the Defection of the Army from the Emperor, set upon them, and were worsted by Germanus.

But the Army * persisted in their Defection: in so much that the Barbarians made an irruption into the Roman Territories, being fully periwaded that no Person would hinder them from doing such actions as are usually perpetrated by Barbarians. But, * Germanus marches out against them at the head of the Roman Army, and gave them such a total Rout and overthrow, that not so much as a Messenger was left remaining, to carry the Persians news of their Calamitous Defeat.

his usage is, in book 3. chap. 3. Valef.

CHAP. X.

Concerning the Emperor's Clemency towards the Mutineers.

Moreover, the Emperor rewarded the Army with Money. But, he recalled Germanus with some other Persons from thence, and brought them to Tryal. And though all of them were condemned to undergo a capital punishment, yet the Emperor would not permit them to suffer any thing of trouble or inconvenience; yea he bestowed honours and rewards upon them. Whilst these affairs proceeded in this manner, the Abares made two Excursions as far as that termed the Long Wall, [posselt themselves of] Singidunum, Anchialus, and all Abcacia, and took several other Cities and Castles, and reduced [the Persons they found there] to slavery, destroying all places with Fire and Sword; [no resistance being made against them,] in regard the greatest part of the Roman Army made their residence in the East. The Emperor therefore sends * Antheodreas, a personage of eminentest note amongst the Imperial * Satellites, who might periwade the Army to receive their * Or, former Leaders, and the rest [of Guards, their Commanders.]

third Chapter. He says also, that he was Curator of the House of Antiochus. Valef.

CHAP. XI.

That Gregorius [Bishop] of * Antioch was * Or, sent to pacifie the Army. Theophilus

But when the Soldiers would not endure so much as to hear this order, the management of that whole affair is † committed to † Or, Gregorius; not only because he was a Person † Or, fit to negotiate matters of the greatest importance, but also in regard the Army gave him a deserved deference, and paid him the highest respect and honour. For some of the Soldiers had had Money bestowed on them by him: and [he had supplied] others of them with Clothes, Provisions, and other Necessaries. * at such time as, when registred in the Muster-Roll, they had marched thorow his [Grounds] not a little difficult and obscure. Musculus renders it thus: Quando ad Militiam conscripti ex Catalogo, per ipsum sunt admissi, when having been enrolled to the Militia by Catalogue, they were admitted by him. Christopherson, translates it almost in the same manner; thus: Alti vestitu, cibo, & aliis rebus adiuti tum cum in album militum adscripti & per eum admissi fuerant; Others were assisted with Clothes, Provision, and other things, then when they were registred in the Muster-Roll, and had been admitted by him. Nicephorus also seems to have followed the same sense, who has expressed this place of Evagrius thus: Ἄλλοι τε δὲ δόσι ἐν γυμνασίου ἐγγεγραμμένοι ἦν, δὲ ἐκείνῳ παρέχοντο. Which words Langus renders thus: tum autem quicunque delecti habito per sacramentum Militare in Catalogo adscripti erant, per ipsum id consensu fuerant; then also whomever, when an Election was made, by the Military Oath had been registred in the Muster-Roll, had obtained that by his means. But this rendition does not please me. For the Roman Militia was not at that time so desirable a thing, that there should be need of any persons favour and assistance for this matter to procure any one to be enrolled amongst the number of the Soldiers. Wherefore, I rather think that these words, ἄντ' ἐγγεγραμμένοι ἐν γυμνασίῳ δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν παλαιῶν, are to be expounded thus, Tunc cum Militariis numeris adscripti, per ipsum agros transierant, ac sub hac ut, when registred amongst the Military Companies, they had passed, or marched through his Grounds. Evagrius at this place sets forth the Munificence of Gregorius Bishop of Antioch, who had not only given entertainment to the Soldiers passing thorow his grounds, but had also bestowed on them their Clothes, Provisions for eating, and Money: Indeed, Tufinian uses the term παράδοχος in this sense, in his 1301st

Naval, concerning the passage of Soldiers; ὅς ποτ' ἔτι ἡμετέροις ἐσέληται by ἐν τῇ παλαιᾷ ἀποστολῇ ἀποδείκνυται, in so much that without making complaint [or, without fault] he nourished those of our Army in their passage in every Province. In the Tellurian Manuscript I found this place thus written; ἐν ταῖς ἀποστολῇς ἐν αὐτῇ πελοπον. Valef.

Having therefore sent Messengers all about, he calls together those who were accounted the principal Persons of the Army, to a place termed Litarba, distant from Theopolis about Three hundred Furlongs. To whom, after he was come amongst them, notwithstanding he lay on his Bed, he spake these words.

Ἐν Ἀλιδῷ Coss. 'Tis a Village in the Territory of Chalcis a

City of Syria, whereof the Emperor Julian makes mention in his 27th Epistle. Near this Village were the Winter-Quarters of King Antiochus, the remains whereof were visible in his age, as Julian does there attests, in these words: μυρεὶ τῶν Ἀλιδῶν ἡδὺν ἐν ᾧ ἡ πόλις καλεῖται, & ἐν τῷ δὲ δὲ λειψάνῳ ἔχοντες ἡμετέροις ἀποδείκνυται. Which place Morinus renders thus; Ad Litarbos venit, quod oppidum est in Chalcide: Et castris in viam quandam que reliquias adhuc Antiochisum Hibernorum habebat, I came to Litarbi, which is a Town in Chalcis: and by chance I light upon a certain way which as yet had the remains of Antiochian Winter-Quarters. But I translate it thus; Litarba adventi, qui vicus est in agro Chalcidico. Et viam oppidi que reliquias habebat Hibernorum Regis Antiochi, I came to Litarbi, which is a Village in the Territory of Chalcis. And I found a way which had the remains of the Winter-Quarters of King Antiochus. Theophylact mentions the same Village, in his Chronicon, pag. 111; where he says, that Alanudanus depopulated Syria prima, as far as the Borders of Antioch, and unto Litarba, and Scaphata. But in my judgment, it must be written thus in Theophylact, τὸν ἀστυνόμενον ἀπὸ τῆς ἀστυνόμενης, ἀλλοιούμενον, those possessions termed Litarba and Scaphata. Which emendation is confirmed by his following words. For he adds, ὅς καὶ οὐκ ἐστὶ τῶν καλῶν, and he buys the places without Chalcis. Valef.

CHAP. XII.

Gregorius's Speech to the Army.

It was indeed of Opinion, (Ye Men truly Romans, as well by Name, as for Your Actions!) that You would have long since come to Me, both to * Confer with me about the present Juncture, and to take that Advice also, which My Benevolence towards You doth abundantly promise. Which [kindness of mine] has indubitably been confirmed by former Good Officers, at such time as, by sending You supplies of Necessaries, I As-

* Or, Communicate.

Τὸν μίτρον ὑμῶν καλῶν. Chri. Johnson dream'd I know not what here concerning a Naval Fight of the Romans. A Naval Fight had not been begun at that time by the Romans, but they had engaged with the Persians in a Land-Fight. Our Gregorius therefore has made use of a Metaphor at this place; and compares the Roman Camp to a Ship; and the Mutiny they had rais'd, he compares to a Tempest. Valef.

swaged * Your Naval Tumult, and the Storm which arose from thence. But, in regard That has been neglected till now, (an inducement thereto having peradventure not happened from a love,) both that the Persians, vanquished by Persons without a Leader, might perfectly understand the Valour of Romans; and also, that Your sincere kindness [towards the State,] having been accurately tried by opportunity, and attested by Actions themselves, might every way receive confirmation: (For You have evidently demonstrated, that although You have had Cause of Trouble and Offence against your Leaders given you, yet nothing is more of value to You than the State :) Come on therefore, Let us now consider what is to be done. The Emperor invites you, and has

* Oblivion. promised an * Amnesty of all that is past, having received your Benevolence toward the State, and your fortitude in Battle, in * place of the Boughs and Olive-Branches of Suppliants; and having given you these severest pledges imaginable of his Pardon, in regard he says thus: if God

bath given || Victory to your Benevolence [to- || towards the State,] and (your Offences being preference, dispell'd,) your Courage has shined forth, which the Br- is a most certain argument of Pardon granted; ter.

How shall not I follow the Divine Judgment? The heart of a King is in the Hand of God, and he inclines it which way he pleases. Obey me therefore, ye Romans! with all imaginable speed. And let us * Or, Be not * lose the pre- ter.) sent opportunity, nor frustrate it by letting it slip: for it hates to be taken after it has escaped, and, vex'd as 'twere because it is neglected, never suffers it self to be taken twice.

Be ye Heirs of your Ancestors obedience, as you have been Inheritors of their Valour; that you may every way show your selves Romans, and that no infamous brand may be fixt upon your name, or demonstrate you to be a spurious Issue. Your Ancestors, when under the Government of Consuls and Emperours, by Obedience and Valour possess themselves of the whole World. Manlius Torquatus † Crowned his own † Treason by beheading him; who though he had be- † rous'd; he obeyed himself valiantly, had notwithstanding dis- † tinguish'd the story of Commanders, and the Obedience of the Mi- † litary bank lice, great || things are wont to be performed. But § 3. p. 37. if the one of these two be * separated from the Edu- † cation other, it Halts, Staggles, and Stumbles; in re- † gard these most excellent pair of Virtues are dis- † joynd. Make no longer delays therefore: but † be persuaded by Me, (the Sacredotal Function † does now mediate between the Emperor and his Obedient Army :) and give a demonstration, that what you do is not || Rebellion, but a just indignation || Or, [entertained] for some short time against those Traitors, your Commanders by whom you had been injured. For if you will not flie [to the Emperor] with all imaginable speed, I indeed shall have * done what * Exile is requisite, both in discharge of that Benevolence † ed, or I owe the State, and of my friendship also to those † wards you: but I would have you consider, what the † Exits of Tyrants are. For, in what man- † ner will you terminate the present State of affairs? con- † 'Tis altogether impossible that you should continue † together in a Body. For whence shall the fruits of the Earth be brought unto you, or those con- † veniencies which the Sea affords the * Continent * Or, for a supply; unless you wage War with Christians, Land, and on the other hand be involved in Wars brought upon you by them, whereby you will commit and suffer the horridlest Mischiefs, Villainies, and Re- † proaches imaginable? And what will be the end hereof? Being dispers'd into all places, you will spend the residue of your lives. Revenge will forthwith overtake you, and not suffer any Pardon to be granted you in future. Give therefore your right hands, and let us consider what is advantageous, both to Our selves and to the Government; in regard we have the Festival Days of the Salutary Passion, and of the most Holy Resurrection of Christ our God, to give us assistance in that affair.

CHAP. XIII.

That, after Gregorius's Speech, the Soldiers changed their minds, and received their General Philippicus again.

* Or. Al-seculi.

† St. Mat.
16. 19.

* These Prayers and Supplications may be referred, either to the reconciliation of the penitents, and to the absolution from that Oath wherein the Soldiers had bound themselves; or else to the solemn Prayers, which Gregorius then celebrated before the Tribunes and Centurions of the Roman Army, to whom also he distributed the sacred Communions, as Evagrius attests. So indeed Nicephorus expounds this place: Αναγιν, λέγει δε, ελγιστην τω δεινῳ τῷ τῶν δεινῶν αἰτιας μυστηριωδῶς, ὡς ἀποφῶνισαυ, ὡς ἀποφῶνισαυ, ὡς ἀποφῶνισαυ. He appeared the Deity with Supplications. And having performed the divine Prayers, He implored the immaculate Body τὴν ἁγίαν. Valef.

* H. αὐτοῦ ἡλικῆς. In the excellent Florentine and Vatican Manuscripts, the word ἡλικῆς is added; that is, the Second Feria [or, Monday] of the Great Week, or Passion Week. I found the same E-mendation also written in the margin of The Vatabian Copy. Valef.

* Εὐαγγελιστῶν τε καὶ τῶν βασιλέων. I allent to Chrysophylion and Sir Henry Savil, who have put a point after these words. For in wholly necessary. Moreover, before them, Nicephorus had distinguished this place thus. But the reading in Nicephorus is better, thus, καὶ τῶν βασιλέων, τοῦ τοῦ βασιλέως, τοῦ τοῦ βασιλέως. or, Constantinople. Valef.

* Objection.
† Or. Expedition
with him.

sons who had been vouchsafed Divine Regeneration, to make an Address in their behalf, they fall prostrate before him. And when they had received his right hand, in confirmation of an Amnesty of what was past, they made an Expedition under his Command. In this manner proceeded these affairs,

CHAP. XIV.

Concerning the taking of Martyropolis.

[IN the interim,] one Sittas a Decanus in Martyropolis, vexed at an injury he had received from one of the Military Commanders there, betrays the City [to the Enemy,] observing the time when the Garrison lodged in that City was marched out of it: and having brought in a Persian Cohort, as if it had been a Roman one, he posset himself of that City, which was a place of great consequence to the Romans. He kept most of the younger women within the City; but turned out all other persons, except some few servants. Immediately therefore Philippicus made his march thither, and having invested the City, besieged it, although he had none of those provisions necessary for a Siege. Nevertheless, he made use of what came next to hand in his Attacks, and having wrought some Mines, ruined one of the Towers: but was not able to make himself Master of the City, in regard the Persians fate up all Night, and repaired what had been beaten down. When the Romans had made frequent Attacks against the Wall, they were as often beat off. For, the Darts thrown upon them from an higher place, very seldom mist the Mark they were designed against; in so much that, they were more dammified, than they could do hurt to the Enemy within; and therefore brake up the Siege. And having marched off at some small distance, Encamped; but took particular care of this, that no other supplies of Forces should be let in to those Persians Besieged. But by the order of Mauricius, Gregorius makes a journey to the Camp, and perswades them to return to the Siege. Nevertheless, they were unable to effect any thing more than what they had done before, in regard they were wholly destitute of warlike Engines commonly made use of in the Siege of Cities. On which account the Army was sent into their Winter-Quarters. But in the adjacent Castles, several Garrisons were left, that the Persians might not by stealth get into the City. And on the Summer following, when the Roman Army was got into a body, and the Persians had made an Expedition against the Romans, there hapned a great Fight about Martyropolis. In which Engagement Philippicus got the better, and many of the Persians fell, amongst whom was slain one valiant Prince; but no small number of Persians got into Martyropolis, which was the chief thing they designed to effect. From thence forward the Romans resolved not to lay Siege to that City: for it was impossible for them to take it by Force. But they built another City at seven furlongs distance [from Martyropolis,] upon mountainous and more inaccessible places; that from thence they

In the Florentine and Vatican Manuscripts, the true writing is, ἀποφῶνισαυ; as also Vatabian and Sir Henry Savil had mended it in their Copies. Nicephorus (book 18. chap. 17.) has expounded this place of Evagrius thus: ἀποφῶνισαυ, ὡς ἀποφῶνισαυ, ὡς ἀποφῶνισαυ. having been made Commander of Ten Soldiers amongst the Military Forces. These Officers were by the Latines termed Decani, not Decuriones, as Musculus and Chrysophylion do render it. Vigerius attests this book 2. chap. 8. speaking concerning the Centuriones or Ordinarii; Erant, ἡλικῆς, Decani denis militibus p. αποφῶνισαυ qui nunc Caput Contubernii vocatur. The Decani were Commanders of ten Soldiers, which Officers are now called the head of a File. Valef.

* Τὸν δὲ βασιλέα. Without doubt it must be ἀντὶς, in that City. For to the Rule of Grammar requires. Valef.

* Ἀπὸς ἀπὸν. Four hundred armed Men, as Theophylactus relates, book 3. chap. 5. Valef.

* ἡλικῆς. In the excellent Florentine and Vatican Manuscripts, the word ἡλικῆς is added; that is, the Second Feria [or, Monday] of the Great Week, or Passion Week. I found the same E-mendation also written in the margin of The Vatabian Copy. Valef.

* Εὐαγγελιστῶν τε καὶ τῶν βασιλέων. I allent to Chrysophylion and Sir Henry Savil, who have put a point after these words. For in wholly necessary. Moreover, before them, Nicephorus had distinguished this place thus. But the reading in Nicephorus is better, thus, καὶ τῶν βασιλέων, τοῦ τοῦ βασιλέως, τοῦ τοῦ βασιλέως. or, Constantinople. Valef.

* Or. ἡλικῆς. In the excellent Florentine and Vatican Manuscripts, the word ἡλικῆς is added; that is, the Second Feria [or, Monday] of the Great Week, or Passion Week. I found the same E-mendation also written in the margin of The Vatabian Copy. Valef.

* Or, Contrary Attacks. they might infect it with Stratagems and * Ex-curtions. And these things [the Romans] performed during the Summer; but in the Winter the Army was dismissed.

CHAPTER XV.

Concerning Comentiolus's Mastership of the Milice, and the taking [the Castle] Ochas.

AFTER this, Comentolus, by descent a Thracian, is sent successour [to Philippicus] in the Maſterſhip of the Milice. He Engaged the Perſians in a moſt courageous manner, and wanted but little of loſing his life, (having been beaten down together with his Horſe,) and had not one of his Guards mounted him on 'one of his Led-Horses, and conveyed him out of the Fight. Nevertheless, <sup>b</sup> the Persians were vanquished and fled, having lost all their Commanders; and made their escape to Nisibis. And being afraid to return to their own King; (For he had threatened them with death, unless they brought back their Commanders safe and unhurt :) they enter into a conspiracy.

* Or, Hormisda, the whereof was Varanus Master of the Persian Artifice, who not long before had made his return together with the Forces about him, from an Engagement with the Turks. In the interim Comestolus invested Martyropolis, and leaves the greater part of his Forces there; but he himself, together with some choice Soldiers which he had chosen out from Man, makes an Excursion

he almost impregnable, first left Martyropolis, on the op
the River Nymphius, and deep and craggy Rock; from the City was easily to be feere siege thereto, and left nothing beaten down some part c Catapults, he broke it takes the Castle
fore, the Persians despaired of holding Marty

in the same manner, wherein Evagrius Oebus. Therefore, as well from the light, it appears, that Oebus is the same; situate near the River Nymphæ. Our conjecture is fully confirmed by the fact, that Oebus is the same as Oebus, where that Cattle-Oebus, which is by Comentiolus, is by Tocephyllus.

CHAP. XVI.

Concerning the Murder of Hormisdas.

W Hilst these Actions were performed in this manner, the Persians Murdered Hormisdas, who was the unjustest of all Kings, not only because he had oppressed his Subjects with exactions of Money, but also for [his insisting on them] various sorts of deaths.

CHAP. XVII.

Concerning the Flight of Chosroes Junior to* <sup>115</sup> * Or, The

* Then, in his room they Constitute his Son Chofroes their King, against whom Varamus undertakes an Expedition together with those Forces he had about him. Chofroes marches out to meet him accompanied with an Army not very numerous, and flies, because he perceived his own Forces were engaged in a treacherous design against himself. And at length he arrives at Circofum, having first called upon the God of the Christians, (as he himself affirmed,) that his Horse might go to that place, whither he should be brought by * him. Being come to this together, together with his Wives, two Children newly born, and some Persian Nobles who voluntarily followed him; from thence he dispatches away an Embassy to the Emperor Mauricius. Mauricius, as in other affairs, so in this also consulted for the best; and being convinced, by making his measures even from this instance of the inconstancy and mutability of this life, and of the sudden Turns ebbings and flowings of Humane affairs; readily adds of Chofroes's humble address, and instead of an Exile [entertains him as] his Guest, and in place of a Fugitive makes him his Son; having Mauricius's Empire, not the seventh, as Baronius relates. For the years of Mauricius's Empire proceed almost in an equal pace with the years of the Indiction, as do likewise the years of Justinus Junior's Empire. Wherefore, whereas on the year of Christ 592 it was the tenth Indiction, as Baronius himself attests, it must then also necessarily have been the tenth year of the same Mauricius's Empire. The next year, the tenth of the Alexandrian Indiction, places the Inauguration of Chofroes, and his flight to the Roman, one year before this account. For thus he writes; In the ninth Indiction, on the ninth year of Mauricius's Empire, on the seventh year after the Conquest of the same Mauricius Thiberius τὸν πρῶτον ἐνέστυξεν, &c. On this year Chofroes Emperor of the Persians came to the Romans, having laid a Rebellion raised against him by Baram [or, Varamu] his kinsman; and by the assistance of the Romans he was restored to his own Kingdom. But Johannes Biciariensis in his Chronicle, relates this to have been done a year sooner. For there are his words at the Eighth year of the Emperor Mauricius, where he has closed his Chronicle. A vigesimo ergo Constantini Imperatoris anno, &c. From the twentieth year therefore of the Emperor Constantine, as which time the Arian Heresy took its beginning, until the eighth year of Mauricius Emperor of the Romans, there are one hundred fifty six years. In those years of the Romans, where the omnipotent God (the venom of poisonous Heresie being destroyed), has restored Peace to his Church, the Emperor of the Persians embraced the Faith of Christ, and made [it, or, confirmed] a Peace with the Emperor Mauricius. Where, that it to be taken notice of, which Biciariensis says, viz. that the King of Persia, having thrown off the worship of Idols, came over to the Faith of Christ. Indeed Theophylactus attests the same, book 4. chap. 10. and book 5. chap. 2. Valef.

Therphylactus (book 5. chap. 3.) says Chofroes was only termed Son by the Emperor Mauricius. But Theopanes in his Chronicle, pag. 24. affirm express words, that Chofroes's Son so adopted by Mauricius was βασιλεὺς καὶ υἱὸς τοῦ βασιλέως, ὡς τὸν ἀνδρὸν καὶ υἱὸν τοῦ βασιλέως καὶ υἱὸν τοῦ βασιλέως, &c. On this year the Emperor Mauricius having adopted Chofroes the Emperor of the Persians, &c. Valef.

βασιλεὺς ἔσθωεν τὴ βασιλείᾳ προσόν, &c. On this year the Emperor Mauricius having adopted Chosroes the Emperor of the Persians, &c.
I'alef.

given him a Reception [whereat he was presented] with Imperial Gifts. By which [presents] not only the Emperour himself declared his own kindness to Chosroes, to whom he sent them in a manner befitting an Emperour; but the Emperess also did the same towards Chosroes's Wives, and the Emperour's Children to those of Chosroes.

CHAP. XVIII.

How the Emperour sent Gregorius and Domitianus to meet Chosroes.

Moreover, he sent all his Imperial Guards, and the whole Roman Army together with their Commander in Chief, who were to follow Chosroes even whither he would. And, to show him greater honour, [he sent to him] Domitianus Bishop of Melitina his own kinsman, a person Prudent and Sagacious, most completely accomplish'd both for Action and Discourse, and every way fit for the management of affairs of the greatest consequence. He sent likewise Gregorius, who in all things struck Chosroes with amazement, by his discourses, with his presents, and with the advices he gave him, seasonable and accommodate to his affairs.

CHAP. XIX.

That Chosroes recovered the Empire of the Persians, by that assistance given him by the Romans.

Further, when Chosroes was come as far as Hierapolis, which is the Metropolis of the [Province] Euphratensis, he went back again, in regard Mauricius also look'd upon that as expedient, who contributed more to the [advantage of the] Suppliant, than to his own glory. Moreover, he pleased Chosroes with a vast sum of money, a thing never recorded [to have been done] before. And when he had raised an Army of Persians, the whole charge whereof he paid out of his own Treasury, he sends Chosroes with a double Army, one of Romans, another of Persians, out of the confines of the Roman Empire; Martyropolis having before that been Surrendered to *him, together with Sittas. Which person was *Stoned in the Martyropolis, and afterwards crucified. Darius also was surrendered [to the Romans], the Persians having been drawn out thence. After this, when Varamus had been vanquished in a single Engagement by the Romans only, and had ingloriously fled away alone, Chosroes was brought back to his own Palace.

CHAP. XX.

* Or, that the holy Mother Golanduch * lived in those Times.

IN those times also lived the Martyr Golanduch, and was conversant amongst us. Which woman, after many conflicts, was crowned with Martyrdom, (the Persian Magi being her Tormentours,) and became a Worker of great Miracles. * Stephanus the Former, Bishop of Hierapolis, hath written her Life.

CHAP. XXI.

Concerning those Sacred Presents, which Chosroes sent to the Holy Martyr Sergius.

Moreover, Chosroes being repossess of his own Kingdom, sends to Gregorius a Cross, adorned with much Gold and precious Stones, in honour of the Victorious Martyr Sergius. Which [Cross] Theodora Wife to Justinian had Dedicated: but * Chosroes had made plunder of it, together with other Sacred Treasures and Gifts, as has † already been related by me. Further, the same Chosroes sent another Cross of Gold, whereon he set this Inscription in Greek Letters. I Chosroes King of Kings, Son of Hormisdas, [sent] this Cross, at such time as by the Diabolical Force and Malice of the most unlucky Varamus and the Horsemen with him, We betook Our Self to the Empire of the Romans: and in regard the Wretched Zadespram came with an Army to Nisibis, in a treacherous manner to Solicite the Nisibene Horse to † Revolt from and oppose Us; We also sent [a Body of] Horse with a Commander to [the Town] Charachas. And because we had heard, that the Venerable and Illustrious Sergius was a Giver of those things requested from him; in the first year of Our Reign, on the seventh day of the month January, We made a request by the Genius of the said Saint, [promising] that if Our Horsemen should kill Zadespram, or could take him alive, We would send a Cross of Gold set with Gems to his * Church, in honour of his * Or, Venerable Name. And on the ninth of the month February, they brought Us the head of Zadespram. Having therefore obtained our desire; that we might put every thing out of doubt, we have sent to the house of the Venerable Saint Sergius, this Cross made by Us in honour of his Venerable Name, together with that Cross sent to his house by Justinian Emperour of the Romans, which in the Times of War between the two Empires, was brought thither by Chosroes King of Kings Son of Cavades, our † Father, and was found amongst † Our Treasures. Gregorius having with the consent of the Emperour Mauricius received these [Crosses,] with great pomp Dedicated them to, and deposited them in, the Sacred house of the Martyr. Not long after, the said Chosroes sent other persons also to the same Sacred Church, and on a Bason made of Gold, ordered this Inscription to be set in the Greek Tongue. I Chosroes King of Kings, the Son of Hormisdas, [have ordered] this inscription to be set upon this Bason, not that it might be seen by men, nor that by my words the Greatest of Your Venerable Name might be made known; but, on account of the truth of what is inscribed, and by reason of those many Favours and Benefits which I have received from You. For 'tis my happiness, that my Name is extant on Your Sacred Vessels. When I was at a place [called] Beramaïs, I requested of You (Holy Man!) that You would come to my assistance, and that Sira might conceive. And in regard Sira is a

Y Y 3 Christian;

* To Mauricius.
† Theophylactus, book 4, chap. 15, says, that Sittas was burnt to death by the Command of Comenolus the Magister Militie. Valef.

* Or, Venerable Name. And on the ninth of the month February, they brought Us the head of Zadespram. Having therefore obtained our desire; that we might put every thing out of doubt, we have sent to the house of the Venerable Saint Sergius, this Cross made by Us in honour of his Venerable Name, together with that Cross sent to his house by Justinian Emperour of the Romans, which in the Times of War between the two Empires, was brought thither by Chosroes King of Kings Son of Cavades, our † Father, and was found amongst † Our Treasures. Gregorius having with the consent of the Emperour Mauricius received these [Crosses,] with great pomp Dedicated them to, and deposited them in, the Sacred house of the Martyr. Not long after, the said Chosroes sent other persons also to the same Sacred Church, and on a Bason made of Gold, ordered this Inscription to be set in the Greek Tongue. I Chosroes King of Kings, the Son of Hormisdas, [have ordered] this inscription to be set upon this Bason, not that it might be seen by men, nor that by my words the Greatest of Your Venerable Name might be made known; but, on account of the truth of what is inscribed, and by reason of those many Favours and Benefits which I have received from You. For 'tis my happiness, that my Name is extant on Your Sacred Vessels. When I was at a place [called] Beramaïs, I requested of You (Holy Man!) that You would come to my assistance, and that Sira might conceive. And in regard Sira is a

|| Or.
Pagan.

Christian, and I a Gentile. Our Law allows Us not to have a Christian Wife. On account therefore of my Benevolence towards You, I disregarded this Law, and have had a kindness for this Woman above my other Wives, and do Love her every day more and more. Wherefore, I have taken a resolution, at present to desire of Your Goodness, (Holy Man!) that She might conceive. I have requested therefore, and solemnly vowed, that if Sira shall conceive, I will send the Cross worn by her to Your Venerable house. And on this account, I and Sira have this design, that we will retain this Cross in Memory of Your Name, Holy Asan! And we have reserved instead thereof (in regard its value exceeds not Four thousand four hundred <sup>Milliarefium</sup> Staters,) to transmit Five thousand Staters. And from such time as I conceived this Request within

Σ πατή-
ρας μιλια-
ριον.

There were three sorts of Stater's, (1) Stater Atticus; its value in our Coin was Fifteen Shillings, (2) Stater aureus Macedonius; its value in our money is Eighteen Shillings four pence, (3) Stater Daricus, which its probable is the money here meant, it was valued at Fifteen Shillings, our money. See more in Mr. Bremood's Ponderibus & Pectus veterum Nummorum, chap. 3. pag. 22.
* Εὐαγγ. In Nicephorus 'tis εὐαγγ. but in Theopylactius the reading is εὐαγγ. which reading I do rather approve of. Valef.
* Τὸ πῶν ὁμοῦ. In Theopylactius and Nicephorus, 'tis read in one word, πῶν ὁμοῦ. So also I found it written in the Tellerian Manuscript. Valef.

in relation to this matter, had I not given credit to thy words, (because thou art an holy person, and a Granter of requests,) that [Sira] should not in future be sensible of the Custom of Women. From hence I understood the *Virtue of the Vision, and the truth of what was predicted by thee. I have therefore forthwith transmitted the Cross it self, and its value, to your Venerable house, with order, that of its price one Basin and one Cup be made, to be used at the holy Mysteries: moreover, that a Cross be made, which is to be fixed upon the † Sacred Table, and a Censer, all of Gold: † Or, Pretious, and Earthen, an Hunnic Veil adorned with Gold. And, [our order is,] that the remaining Milliarefians of the price [shall belong to] thine holy house; that by thy Genius (Holy Man!) thou wouldest give assistance in all things to me and Sira, but especially in relation to this Request; and, that what hath hapned to us from thine intercession, by the mercy of thy Goodness may arrive at perfection, agreeable to the will of Me and Sira. To the end they may place our hope in thy power, and in future believe in Thee. These are the expressions [contained] in the Sacred Presents [transmitted] by Chofroes, which disagree in nothing from Balaam's Prophecy; the compassionate God having wisely disposed [all things in such a manner,] that the tongues of Gentiles should [some times] utter salu- tary words.

* Or.
Power.

† Or, Pretious, and Earthen, an Hunnic Veil adorned with Gold. And, [our order is,] that the remaining Milliarefians of the price [shall belong to] thine holy house; that by thy Genius (Holy Man!) thou wouldest give assistance in all things to me and Sira, but especially in relation to this Request; and, that what hath hapned to us from thine intercession, by the mercy of thy Goodness may arrive at perfection, agreeable to the will of Me and Sira. To the end they may place our hope in thy power, and in future believe in Thee. These are the expressions [contained] in the Sacred Presents [transmitted] by Chofroes, which disagree in nothing from Balaam's Prophecy; the compassionate God having wisely disposed [all things in such a manner,] that the tongues of Gentiles should [some times] utter salu- tary words.

Nicephorus's Translation, has retained the Greek word, thus: & Am- phiternum Hunnicum. And by adding a Scholion, has explained this term thus: Judicio meo carceres, five cancelli sunt, &c. In my judg- ment, they are the Bars or Rails, either surrounding the more Sacred Table of the Altar, or keeping the people from it; in each part where there is a door, and a passage leading to it, of Hunnic Work. But, by the favour of that Learned man, he has not bit the signification of this word. The Greeks termed Veils or Curtains which hung before doors, ἀμπίδευς. So Chrysostome in his 84th Homily on St. Matthew, speaking concerning Zacharias, who entertained our Lord at a Banquet, εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν αὐτοῦ ἀνέβη ὁ ἁγίος, πῶς αὐτὸν εὐφραν- θῆναι. & ὁ ἁγίος πῶς καὶ ἡμεῖς ἀμπίδευς αὐτοῦ ἐκείνου. &c. [Consider.] when Christ was about to enter into his house, how he adorned it: for he ran not to his neighbours, to borrow their Curtains and Chairs, &c. So, in the Churches of the Christians, there were Curtains before the doors, as Epiphanius attests in an Epistle which Saint Jerome has done into Latine. And, that we may come nearer to the business, at the very Altar there were Cur- tains, wherewith the doors of the Altar or Cloire were covered. And when the Priest was about to celebrate the Eucharist, those Curtains were wont to be drawn, that the people might behold the Mysteries a far off. This is attested by St. Chrysostome, in his 134th Homily on the Epistle to the Ephesians, in these words: ὅταν δὲ ὁ ἱερεὺς ἐκπορεύετο εἰς τὴν θύραν αὐτοῦ πρὸς τὸν λαόν, ὅταν αὖτις ἀνέβη πρὸς τὸν λαόν, ὅταν ἴδης ἀνελθόντα πρὸς ἀμπίδευς, &c. &c. so also here, when the sacrifice is offered, and Christ is sacrificed, when you shall hear [these words] Let us all pray together, when you see the Curtains drawn, then think that heaven is opened from above, &c. Where you see, that the word ἀμπίδευς is taken for the Curtains which were placed at the doors of the Altar. There is also mention of this Veil or Curtains, in an old paper of the Donation of the Constantinian Church, which was first published by Johannes Saresbur. Et pro aere vela Transfectoria Alba auroclava 2, vela blatta auroclava paragaudata 2, &c. and afterwards, vela linea paragaudata persica clavauro collemetina prasina 2, vela linea paragaudata persica clavauro leucorodina duo. And again afterwards. Item ante Regni Basilicæ vela linea plamata majora viginti numero erant. Item vela linea pura erant, ante consistorium velum lineum purum quatuor. In prono velum lineum purum unum; & intra Basilicam, pro porticu velum linea rosulata sex. Et ante secretarium vel curricula vela lineasulata persica fenestra habentia ardua 2. Which place I have translated entire, for this reason, that the studious Reader may understand, how manifold the use of Curtains was heretofore in the Church; and that we might know, what was the Hunnic veil or Curtains in this place of Eusegius. For, as this paper of Donatus informs us, that the Persian Curtains were heretofore highly valued, so, the Hunnic Curtains were also chiefly commended. Further, the Persian Curtains are mentioned by Aristophanes's Scholiast at Remas: ὁ ἀριστοφάνης τοῦ ἀντιόχου τοῦ ὑπομνήτου βίβλος, ὁ βασιλεὺς. For these Curtains were termed Chuddege, because they were hung before doors, as I have said. Gulistan Bibliothecarius in the life of Stephanus Decius has this passage: Consult in eadem Basilica Apostolorum corinam lineam unam, veloribrya serica eria in circuitu altaris. Whence it appears, that Chuddege and ἀμπίδευς signifie the same thing. Valef.

CHAP. XXI.

Concerning Naamanes the Saracen.

AT the same time, Naamanes also, the Chief of a Tribe of those Saracens that were Enemies, a Pagan so wicked and abominable, that with his own hand he sacrificed men to his Demons, came to Holy Baptism; and having melted down a [Statue of] Venus, which was nothing else but a real Mass of Gold, he distributed it amongst the poor, and brought over all those persons about him to [the worship of] God. But Gregory, after Chofroes's Crosses had been presented, by the Emperor's order went a Circuit to the Solitudes of those termed The Limits, wherein Severus's Tenets * were highly prevalent; [in which places] he set forth the Ecclesiastick Dogmata, and brought over vast Numbers to the Church of God many Castles, Villages, Monasteries, and whole Tribes.

these words wanting, κατὰ τὴν τοῦ ἐκκλησιαστικοῦ πρὸς τὸν λαόν, ὅταν αὖτις ἀνέβη πρὸς τὸν λαόν, ὅταν ἴδης ἀνελθόντα πρὸς ἀμπίδευς, &c. [in which place] he set forth the Ecclesiastick Dogmata, or, Opinions, which we have inferred from Robert Steben's Edition. Valefius has exprest them in his Latine Version, and so have all the other Translators.

Concerning the Death of Saint Symeon Junior the Stylite.

BUT in the interim, Saint Symeones fell sick of a distemper whereof he died; and, upon my giving Gregorius notice thereof, he made all the haile he could to him, to pay him his last Salutes. But Gregorius obtained not what he desired. Further, this Symeones for Virtue far excelled all persons of his own time; having from his tender years lead an

'Ais ʒi naŋ bəfərus dərən di-nəsəŋ. Nīcephorus has explained this place incomparably well, by inferring one word, thus: ʒi ʒi naŋ bəfərus ʒi naŋ bəfərus bəfərus ʒi naŋ bəfərus ʒi naŋ bəfərus. That is, as Langus re-renders it peribetrisano primos dentes in fulmine statione mutasse,
 'in indeed reported, that he changed his first teeth in his Station on his Pillar. In the excellent Flavienne and Tollerian Manuscripts, 'tis written naŋ, not də, where the word was is used instead of was, there. Valef.
 * Keelz ʒi, behaving himself like a child.

the Beast who † forgot his natural ferity, and brought him to his own Monastery. Which when Symeones's Instructor, (a person who kept his Station upon a Pillar) beheld, he asked the Boy what that was. Symeones made answer, that it was an Akurus, which they usually term a Cat. From hence [his Instructor] conjectured how eminent a person Symeones would prove [in the Study of] Virtue, and therefore carried him up into a Pillar. In which Pillar, and in another that stood upon the very top of the Mountain, he spent Sixty eight years, being vouchsafed all manner of Grace; both as to the casting out of Devils, as to the curing every disease and all manner of languishing distempers, and in relation to the foregoing things future as if they had been present. He forthd Gregorius, that he should not see him die; but [said,] that he was ignorant of what would happen after his own death. And when I my self was troubled with various thoughts at the loss of my children, and doubted within my own mind, why the same [troubles] befall not the Pagans who had many children; although I had now opened my mind to any person whatever, yet he wrote to me, to abstain from such thoughts as those. <sup>b</sup> In regard they

1 Or,
Distracted
etc.

<sup>b</sup> Ὡς ἐκ ἀνάγκης τῶν στοιχείων.
The Rules of Grammar require, that we should write ἀνάγκης
τῶν. For ἐκ στοιχείων τῶν precedes. Kalef

* Or, One of those who wrote under me.

† Or, fixed.

minent danger; [the same Symeon] put his hand upon her husband's right hand, and ordered him to lay it upon the breasts of his wife: which when he had done, immediately the milk sprang out as 'twere from a fountain, in such a manner that it wetted the garment of the woman. Further, a child having been left upon the Road in the dead of the night, through the forgetfulness of those who travelled with him, a Lyon laid it on his back, and brought it to [Symeon's] Monastery, and by Symeon's order, those who ministered to him went out, and brought in the child, which had been preserved by the Lyon. The same person performed many other things * highly memorable, which require an eloquent tongue, much time, and a peculiar Trearise; [all which actions of his] are celebrated by the tongues of men. For, persons of almost all Nations of the Earth, not only Romans, but Barbarians, came frequently to him, and obtained their requests of him. Certain branches of a shrub which grew on that mountain, * were made use of by him in stead of all sorts of meat and drink.

Concerning the Death of Gregorius Bishop of Antioch, and the Restauration of Anathasius.

NOT long after <sup>2</sup> dyed Gregorius also, after <sup>2</sup> Baronius per, wherewith he was much troubled, and <sup>2</sup> dead place had drank a potion [made of the herb] <sup>2</sup> the death of Grego- terius <sup>2</sup> Baronius med <sup>2</sup> Hermodactylus, which was administered to him by a Physician. He ended his life, at <sup>2</sup> Baronius such time as Gregorius was Bishop of the <sup>2</sup> Baronius Antioch <sup>2</sup> Baronius Refraura- Elder Rome, who had succeeded Pelagius, <sup>2</sup> Baronius tion of A-

Sinaita on the year of Christ 594. But Baronius doubts at the same place, whether it ought not to be placed on the year following; especially in regard Gregorius Magnus, in his Register of the Letters of the thirteenth Indiction, congratulating Anastafius, because he had been reforested to the See of Antioch. But the Autograph of Isidore in the Chronicle, (who lived almost in the same times with Gregorian Chronicle), places Gregorius's death in the tenth year of the Empire of Marcellinus, on the tenth Indiction; his words are these: Ind. l. x. Tercio Tercio Anathasius, &c.; In the tenth Indiction; on this year Anastafius Patriarch of Antioch returned to Antioch; after the death of Gregorius who had been Patriarch, who had also before succeeded the same Anastafius. Where you may note that Anastafius is called Patriarch even before his Restoration; because, having been deposed illegally and by force, he had always retained the title of Patriarch. Tis certain Pope Gregory, in the three Letters he wrote to him at the beginning of his Episcopate, does always acknowledge Anastafius to be a Patriarch. But, he is never found to have accounted Gregorius (who had illegally taken possession of Anastafius's Chair whilst he was yet alive,) amongst the number of Patriarchs. Vale!

Hermodactylus was a plant unknown to the Ancients. 'Tis certain, neither Aspidogale, nor Galen have made any mention of it. But, the Arabians under Serapion, confounded it with Colicicum and Aspidogale. Whom our Apollonius have followed, and in their Schools substitute Colicicum instead of Hermodactylus. But Andreas Mattiæus (in his comments on the fourth book of Dioscorides,) hath long since taken notice of this mistake; and after him others, who have written concerning plants. When Mattiæus published the Former Edition of his Comments, he himself did not then fully know what Hermodactylus was. But afterwards, when he had procured that plant from the illustrious personage Augerius Bubequius, who had brought it him at his return from an Embassy at Constantinople he gave us the Type or Citty of that plant at pag. 1109 of his Latter Edition. The Roots of this plant represent the likeness of fingers, with the addition of nails also. Whence the plant had its name. For Hermodactylus signifies the finger of Mercury. Further, the root here was heretofore given to those that were troubled with the Gout in the joints or fingers, at such time as the humours issued out of it, of itself, and by a decoction of it, it has a purgative quality, as Paulus Aegineta relates in his seventh book. But now, says Hieronymus, Hermodactylus is given to those who are troubled with the Gout in the feet, not at that time when the humours issue forth, but rather when the disease is grown strong and come to its height. For, when Modern Physicians in the approach or augmentation of the disease, they corrected the practice of the Ancient Physicians in this particular; as the most famous and most Learned Tollomæus de Fontaine Doctor of Physick and Regius Professor in the University of Paris informed me, a person to whom I profess my self highly obliged, for his singular kindness towards me, and for his care and diligence in curing my distemper.

Find

and whilst Johannes [presided over the Church of Alexandria, and Erelogius over that of Constantinople, (persons whom I have mentioned before,) and during Anastafius's presidency over the Antiochian Church, who had been restored to his own Chair after three and twenty years. Johannes; [was then Bishop] of Jerusalem; who died soon after, and as yet no body has undertaken the Government of that Church. And here shall my History be closed, namely, on the twelfth year of Mauricius Tiberius's Government of the Roman Empire; the following [affairs of the Church] being left to be collected and written by such as are desirous [of employing themselves that way.] If any thing be either omitted, or not accurately set forth by us; let no person ascribe it to us as a fault; but let him consider with himself, that we have Collected into one Body * a dispersed and scattered History, and have made it our business [to consult] the advantage of men, in favour of whom we have † undertaken so many and such vast Labours. Another Volume has likewise been composed by us, which contains Relations, Letters, Decrees, Orations, Disputations, and some other things. The foresaid Relations contained in this Volume were all written in the Name of by these words, but that Anastafius had been restored to his own See after Gregorius's death. Valef.

* Anastafius had been deposed on the year of Christ 570, as I have observed above, in my notes on book 3. chap. 5. From this year to the tenth of Mauricius's Empire, (whereon he was restored to his See, as the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle informs us,) that is to the year of Christ 592, there are three and twenty years. Valef.

† From these words some one might perhaps conjecture that which Baronius has also supposed, that Gregorius Bishop of Antioch dyed on the twelfth year of the Emperor Mauricius. For why should Evagrius say, that he had closed his History on the twelfth year of Mauricius's Empire, unless he had related some thing before, which had been done on the twelfth year of the same Mauricius? Notwithstanding, after a more diligent inspection into the thing, Evagrius seems not in my judgement, to have designed to mean that by these words. For Evagrius says, that Gregorius Bishop of Antioch had ended his life, at such time as Gregorius Governed the Roman, and Eulogius the Alexandrian Church; and whilst Johannes presided over the Church at Jerusalem. Which Johannes having ended his life not long after, Evagrius saith no body was as yet put into his place. Evagrius therefore closed not his History with the death of Gregorius, in regard he relates, that after Gregorius's death, Johannes Bishop of Jerusalem dyed; and that after his death no person was yet put into his See, at that time when he wrote these things. Wherefore Evagrius by these words means only this, that he wrote these things on the twelfth year of Mauricius's Empire. Valef.

Gregorius Bishop of Antioch. By reason whereof we have obtained two dignities; [the one] from Tiberius Constantinus, who invested us with the [Dignity] of Quaestorius, [the other] from Mauricius Tiberius who sent us the Codicills of a Præfecture, on account of that [Oration] we had composed, at such time as the Rending (having wiped away the reproach of the Empire,) of him brought into the light [his Son] Theodosius, who gave a beginning of all manner of felicity, both to [Mauricius] himself, and to the State.

of the Præfecture was conferred upon our Evagrius by Tiberius. But Evagrius does not say, that he had the dignity of Quaestorius given him but only the Præfecture. Now, there is a great difference between Quaestor and Præfectus. For he is Quaestor, who bears the Office of Quaestor. But, Quaestorius is he who has already borne that Office. In regard therefore Evagrius says, that he had the honour Ex-Præfecture given him, he means that the Codicills Ex-Præfecture were conferred on him by the Emperor; although in the same manner, wherein (as he adds immediately,) the Codicills Ex-Præfectus were bestowed on him by the Emperor Mauricius. Further, such persons as by their deserts had procured these Codicills, enjoyed all those privileges, which belonged to the Honorati who had borne those dignities, to wit, of the Præfecture and of the Præfecture. But, in my opinion the reading at this place ought to be, in nomine (the term in nomine being understood,) the [dignity] of Quaestorius. Valef.

* Evagrius saith ὡς ἔστιν ἡμεῖς. Translators understood not this place. For Musculus renders it thus; unde ista composuimus, cum ille imperii ignominiam ablatus, Theodosium in lucem produxit, whence we composed these things, when he, about to take away the ignominy of the Empire, brought Theodosius into the light. Christopherson translates it in this manner: Quo regnante eas Relationes composuimus; idque eo ipso tempore quo Theodosium in lucem edidit, durante Regni Regis composuimus quo Theodosius; and that at that very time wherein he brought to light Theodosius. Christopherson was of opinion, that the reading here ought to be, ἐν τῷ. But this emendation is not to be endured. For Evagrius had not composed that Work of Relations during the Reign of Mauricius, but whilst Tiberius Constantinus was Emperor, as he himself affirms a little above. Therefore, I had rather retain the common reading here, by understanding the word ὡς ἔστιν Relation, or ὡς ἔστιν Discourse. For when the Emperor Mauricius's Son Theodosius was born, Evagrius wrote an Oration to the Emperor Mauricius, wherein he congratulated with him on account of the Birth of his Son; and foretold the highest felicity both to Mauricius and the Roman State, because Mauricius had abolished the old Reproach of the Roman Empire, and had at length begotten a Male-child. For, none of the Roman Emperors, who had Reigned in the Eastern parts even from the times of Theodosius Junior, had begotten Male-children. Evagrius therefore says, that on account of this Oration, he had been rewarded by Mauricius with the Codicills of a most ample Præfecture. Valef.

† The most noble Theodosius was born in purple on the third year of Mauricius's Empire on the twenty sixth of the month September, and therefore on the fourth Indiction, which had begun from the Calends of the September of this year. The same Theodosius was afterwards Crowned Augustus by his Father Mauricius, in the eighth Indiction, on the twenty sixth of the month March, when he was four years and an half old, as Theophanes relates in his Chronicon, pag. 225. Valef.

Six Books of Ecclesiastical History of Evagrius Scholasticus Epiphaniensis and [one] of the Ex-Præfects.

THE END.

THE

THE
L I F E
OF CONSTANTINE,
IN FOUR BOOKS,

Written in GREEK, by Eusebius Pamphilus Bishop of Cesarea in Palestine; done into ENGLISH from that Edition set forth by Valesius, and Printed at PARIS in the Year 1659.

Together with

VALESIUS'S Annotations on the said LIFE, which are made ENGLISH, and set at their proper places in the Margin.

Here is also annext the Emperour CONSTANTINE'S ORATION to the CONVENTION of the SAINTS, and EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS'S SPEECH Concerning the PRAISES of CONSTANTINE, Spoken at his TRICENNALIA.

---

The Second Edition.

---

---

L O N D O N,
Printed for A. and J. Churchill, in the Year 1709.

V A L E S I U S ' s   A d v e r t i s e m e n t   t o   t h e   R E A D E R .

IN My Annotations on Eusebius's Ecclesiastick History, I have remarked, that the Titles or Contents of the Chapters, which are prefixt before each Book, were compos'd by Eusebius himself. And this, in my judgment, I have proved by most evident Arguments. But, in these Books concerning the Life of Constantine, the matter is otherwise. For the Contents of these Books were not made by Eusebius himself, but by some other more modern Author. Now, I make this conjecture from hence, both because the Contents of these Chapters, are for the most part uncouth, insipid, and barbarous; and also in regard they always speak of Eusebius in the third Person; whereas, in the Contents of the Chapters of his Ecclesiastick History, Eusebius always names himself in the first person. Besides, the distinctions of the Chapters are too thick, and occur too often; and one Letter and Constitution of the Emperor, is divided, and torn asunder as 'twere, into many Chapters. Which thing is wont often to beget a loathing and nauseousness in the Reader. I forbear mentioning the barbarous words and terms, which occur frequently in these Contents. For, in them you diverse times meet with μαλιστα, ναισιν, πορευομεν, and δυοισιν. All which considerations make me of this opinion, that I should believe any one else, rather than Eusebius, to have been the Author of these Contents. Nevertheless, whoever the person was, he was ancient, and lived not at any great distance from the Age of Our Eusebius. And this is chiefly Collected from the Contents of the Fourth Book; wherein you may read some passages, which could not have been known, but by a Writer Contemporary with those times, of which sort is that concerning Marianus the Tribune, and Notary, in the Contents of Chapter 44. Book 4. the name of which Notary we might at this day have been ignorant of, had not that Author of the Contents, and after him Sozomen, given us information thereof. I have sometimes conjectured, that Acacius, (he, who succeeded Our Eusebius in the Chair of the Church of Cæsarea, in regard he publish'd these Books of his Master after his Death,) Compos'd these Contents. But, this is but a meer conjecture, which any one that will, may follow. Lastly, the Reader is to be Advertised, that in all our Manuscript Copies, the Titles of these Chapters are written without the * Numeral Notes. And in The Old Sheets belonging to the King's Library, they occur prefixt before each Book. But in the Fuketian Manuscript, they are not only set before each Book; but are also added to every Chapter, in the Body of each 30th, &c. Book.

* That is, without setting forth what Chapter it is, viz. the 20th, 30th, &c. Book.

THE
FIRST BOOK
OF
EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS
CONCERNING
THE LIFE
OF THE
BLESSED EMPEROR
CONSTANTINE<sup>b</sup>.

<sup>a</sup> Εὐς τὸν βίον τοῦ μαρτυροῦ καὶ αὐτοῦ. So Grecians are wont to inscribe their Books written concerning any one's Life: Philostrophus gave his Books concerning the Life of Apolonius Tyanens this Title, οὐλοστροφὺς εἰς τὸν ἀπολόνιον τὸν τυανῶνα βίον λέγει ἢ Philostrophus his eight Books concerning the Life of Apolonius Tyanens. So also Marcus Antoninus entitled the Books concerning his own Life, ἐπὶ εἰς αὐτὸν βίος ἑαυτοῦ ἑαυτοῦ, twelve Books of [Remarks] upon himself. 'Tis further to be noted, that although these Books have this Title, concerning the Life of the Emperor Constantine, yet all things are not contained therein, which were performed by that Emperor, but those matters only are described, which relate to true piety, and the Glory of the Christian Religion. Whereof Eusebius gives an Express advertisement in the beginning of this book, chap. 11. Valef.

<sup>b</sup> At this place Robert Stephens has added these words λέγει πάντα, five Books; what Copies he followed, I know not. For these words occur not, either in the King's Copy, or in the Old Sheets. Neither are these words to be found in the Fuketian Manuscript. 'Tis certain, this Work concerning the Life of the Emperor Constantine consists only of four Books; which is also attested by Photinus. But, because Eusebius had added three small Pieces, to wit, the Emperor Constantine's Oration to the Convention of the Saints, the description of the Church at Jerusalem together with the Sacred Presents their Dedicated by Constantine, and a Panegyrick spoken at Constantine's Tricennalia; hence it came to pass, that this Appendix was by some taken for a Fifth Book. Indeed the Index of the Chapters which is prefixed before Constantine's Oration to the Saints, in the Fuketian Manuscript has this Title, καὶ αὐτὰ τὰ πρὸς αὐτὸν λέγει, the Chapters of the Fifth Book. But in the King's Copy, the Indices of the Chapters are omitted, and this Title is written at the side, though in a more modern hand, ἀπὸ τοῦ ἑαυτοῦ βίου the beginning of the Fifth Book. Valef.

The Preface.

Concerning the Death of Constantine.

AL. L. Mankind have not long since celebrated the recurring periods of our great Emperor's compleated * Vicennalia and Tricennalia, with Festivities and publick Banquets. We our selves also, <sup>a</sup> by a Panegyrick spoken in his Vicennalia, have lately venerated the same Glorious Conqueror envi-

tion spoken by Eusebius in Constantine's Vicennalia is not now extant. We can only assure this of it, that it was spoken in the Nicene Synod, in the presence of the Emperor Constantine, as Eusebius attests in the following words: but he tells us this very thing much more plainly in book 3. chap. 11. Valef.

roned with a Synod of God's Sacred Ministers. Moreover, <sup>b</sup> we have platted him Crowns of Tricennalian Orations, wherewith we lately encircled his Sacred Head within his own Imperial Palace. Τριανον τριανον τριανον Εὐρεως ἑαυτοῦ, we have platted him Tricennalian Crowns of Orations. He means the Tricennalian Oration concerning the praises of Constantine, which Eusebius had annexed at the close of his Books concerning the Life of Constantine, as he himself attests book 4. chap. 45. Nevertheless, in the Fuketian Manuscript this Oration is prefixed before Eusebius's Books of the Life of the Emperor Constantine. Which is very right indeed, if we respect the time wherein this Oration was spoken; but 'tis Contrary to the opinion of the Writer himself, who ordered that Oration to be placed at the close of these Books. Valef.

Α α α α

But

* Διὰ τὸν
ἀπὸ τοῦ
πρὸς αὐτὸν
βίου, Second and Third Decade of years. 'Twas usual with Emperors to celebrate solemn Feasts and Pa-lisses for joy they were arrived at the 10th, 20th, 30th, year of their Reign; the Feasts for their centh year were termed Decennalia; those for their 20th, Vicennalia; and them for their 30th, Tricennalia.

<sup>a</sup> Εὐρεως ἑαυτοῦ, with Vicennalian Hymns. This Ora-

ved in their minds an hope of no other thing that was good. But God, God [I say] the Common Saviour of all things, who hath treasured up with himself greater Goods than Man can have a conception of, for the Lovers of Piety, gives as a foregoing pledge even in this life, the First fruits of future Rewards, and in a manner represents and confirms immortal hopes to mortal eyes. The ancient Oracles of the Prophets, which are committed to writing, do plainly foretell these things. The Lives of persons dear to God, who heretofore have shined with all manner of Virtues, whose [Lives] are as yet celebrated by posterity, do give attestation hereto. The same is clearly evinced to be true by the Testimony of this our present Age, wherein Constantine, the only person of all those who ever yet Governed the Roman Empire, having been made the friend of God the supreme King, is proposed to all Men as a powerful and illustrious instance of a Religious life.

That God honoured Constantine's

LAstly, God himself, whom Constantine worshipped, confirmed this with effectual suf-

<sup>a</sup> Ἀὐτῇ
 δεξιᾷ
 ὡς ἑστῆς.
 I read αὐ.
 πρὸ δεξιᾷ
 ὡς ἑστῆς.
 And a little after,
 instead of διὰ δεξα-
 λῶν, it
 must be written, εἰς
 διὰ δεξα-
 λῶν, for
 . Valef.

That he Reigned upwards of Thirty years, and lived above Sixty.

HE honoured the Time of his Reign with three completed periods of Ten Years, * something more; but he circumfcrib'd the whole Life he lead amongst Men, with a space of time double as much. Further, because † He would propose him as the † God. portraiture of his own Monarchical power, † He made him the Conquerour of the whole Tyrannick Brood, and the Destroyer of the * Impious Giants: who, [instigated] by a desperation and madness of mind, took up Arms of Impiety against God himself the supreme King. But having made their appearance * even during a shorter time than is required to speak, they were extinguished. But God, who is one and the sole God, when he had fortified his Servant, one opposed to many, with divine Armour †, and by his means had cleared the World of the multitude of impious Persons, constituted him the Teacher of his own Worship to all Nations: who in the * hearing of all Men attested with a loud voice, that he acknowledged the True God, but abominated the Error of false Deities.

months. Further, at the beginning of this period, the reading must be, χρόνον αὐτοῦ βασιλείας, the time of his Reign; not as the common reading is, χρόνον. Vale!

is Nonny aim'd'eige. Write nonny aim'd'eige, He made him the Conquerour; as I found it mended in the Margin of the Moræus Copy, which reading Christophor has followed. The same reading occurs in the old Sheets, in the Savilian, and in the Fukesian Manuscripts, Vale.

"Ὅσοι εἰσὶν." Christopherson renders it prope dixerim, I had almost said; as if it had been written εἰς εἰρήνην. I doubt not that Eusebius meant another thing. For, being desirous to show how short a time the Tyrants flourished, he says they were visible a shorter time than is required to speak. 'Tis the same which Græcians term ἀσπίδωρον, in the twinkling of an eye; a sort of Hyperbole familiar with Græcians. Valef.

a ἡσυχία πᾶσι. The one of these words is redundant, and therefore we have left it out in our Version. The former of them seems to me to be a Scholion! in the Fukesian Manuscript, the latter is wanting. A little after, instead of ὁ δὲ αὐτὸς ἐστὶν, &c. the reading must be ὁ αὐτὸς, &c. by his means, &c. as 'tis in the King's Sheets, and in the Savilian and Fukerian Manuscripts. Further, in the Fukerian Manuscript 'tis ἐστὶν ἐστὶν. Vale!

*This motto deprecis, in the virtues of all. It must be made diversis, in the bearing, &c. which Christophorus perceived not.
In the old Sheets 'tis over written ἀναδύς in the same hand. Also,
Instead of μαρτυροῦσθαι, I write μαρτυροῦσθαι; as 'tis in the Foketian Manuscript. Valc.*

Wherefore, * 'tis certainly incumbent, † The King's and Puke-son, to us, rather than on any other person, to give a full Narrative of all the good things we have heard, to those whose minds, by an example of good works, are de-raised to a Love and desire of God. Now, † those Authors (who have put in to writing the lives of Men in no wise grave and sober, and [have Recorded] Affairs wholly unuseful for the improvement of manners, either out of favour or hatred to some persons, or else to make a show of their own Learning;) † with a magnifick furniture of words have; otherwise than was fittine w<sup>o</sup>ld, the

ting, enlarged the Relations of most reproachful Villainies, and thereby have rendered themselves the Teachers of vile Actions, and such as deserved to be buried in perpetual oblivion and darkness, to those who by Gods favour and impulse have had no hand in mischief. But, our Style, though it is weak and altogether unfit * for the greatness and significance of what we are to set forth, seems nevertheless to be polished and illustrated even by the bare

* Or, For the greatness of the Emphasis of what, &c.

† Εὐσεβία. The other reading, which I found in the old Sheets pleases me better, namely εὐσεβία, Relation. And so to the reading is in the Eusebian and Savilian Manuscripts. Valef.

* Or, Reading.

α βασιλικὴ διαγνώμη. In the old Sheets 'twas interlined εὐσεβία, Seratagem, which I like not. For Eusebius does here oppose Constantine's βασιλικὴ διαγνώμη, Imperial Action, to his works that were pious and acceptable to God. And he says, that he does designedly omit his Imperial Actions: which he divides into two sorts, namely, his warlike ones, and those of peace. But, he proposes to himself to set forth only those Actions of his, which bear a relation to Religion. Further, in the Kings Sheets, after those words, and whatever Triumphs he leads, there are added in the Margin, ἡ δὲ καὶ ἐκείνη ἀποδοῦναι τὴν τὸν καὶ τοὺς ἐκείνων, ὅτις ἐστὶν ἡ βασιλικὴ διαγνώμη, &c. Moreover, the constitutions made by him, in the times of peace, for the regulation of the publick, and condempne, &c. which words seem to me to be of good note. Valef.

† Εὐμενείας. The passage which occurs at Ecclesiasticus 41. 28. Judge none blessed before his death: for a man shall be known in his children. Valef.

* Relation of good Actions. Nor, is the commemoration of Works acceptable to God, unuseful, but it affords a very advantageous Lesson to those who shall have a mind rightly fitted and prepared. [Not to mention] therefore very many of this Thrice blessed person's Imperial Actions, his Battles and Military Engagements, his deeds of Valour, Victories, and Triumphs [raised] against his Enemies, and what ever Triumphs he Lead; moreover, the Constitutions made by him, conducive to the utility of every person; the Laws also he composed for

† Or, Of the Government of his Subjects. In fine, many other of his Labours and Imperial Constitutions, which are kept in memory by all persons; [all these particulars, I say] I think fit to omit; in regard the Scope and Design of the Work under my hand admonishes me to declare and write those matters only which bear a reference to a Pious and Blessed course of life. Further, whereas even these particulars are almost infinite, out of those matters which have come to my knowledge I will choose such passages only as are most suitable and seasonable, and worthiest of being consigned to the Memory of Posterity, and will give a Narrative of them with all possible brevity. In regard the time it self doth henceforward allow us this Liberty, that we may extol this Thrice-blessed Emperor with all manner of Commendatory Expressions. For, a power of doing this was not permitted before now, because it has been advised, that we should not pronounce any Person blessed before his Death, by reason of the uncertain Turns and Changes of Life. Wherefore, I call God to be my Assistant, and his Celestial Word to cooperate with, and inspire me: and, [taking my beginning] from this Emperor's tender Years, I will enter upon my Relation in this manner.

CHAP. XII.

That Constantine, like Moses, was educated in the House of Tyrants.

A Ncient History relates, that a Cruel Brood of Tyrants did heretofore oppress the People of the Hebrews: but, that God, shewing himself propitious to the oppressed, made provision, that the Prophet Moses, who at that time was but an Infant, should be educated in the very Houses and Bosoms of the Tyrants, and should be instructed in all the wisdom amongst them. But afterwards, when in process of time he arrived at Man's Estate, and Divine Justice, the usual Defender of the injured, had taken a resolution to prosecute the Oppressors: then this Prophet of God departed out of the Tyrants Houses, and exhibited himself a Minister of the Divine Will. He † abominated, as well in reality as words, the Tyrants by whom he had been educated: but those, who in very deed were his own Brethren and Relatives, he declared to be his Friends and Familiars. After this, God constituted him the Leader of that whole Nation, and freed the Hebrews indeed from that Servitude [they were oppressed with] by their Enemies; but by his means was revenged on that Tyrannick Brood, by inflicting on them punishments sent from Heaven. This Ancient Story [I say,] which hath been delivered to many Persons under the notion of a Fable, has filled the ears of all Mortals. But now, the same God, who is also our God, hath granted us a power of viewing with our own eyes such Miracles as far surpass all Fables; which manner of Sight is accounted by those who of late have beheld it, to be truer than all sorts of Report or Hear-say. For the Tyrants in our Age, resolving upon waging a War against the Supreme God, have forely oppressed his Church. But Constantine, a Person that not long after became the Tyrant-slayer, whilst he was a Child, youthful, and beautified with the Juvenile Down upon his Chin, was in the midst of them, like that Servant of God [Moses,] and made his Residence within the very Houses of the Tyrants. Nevertheless, though very young, he communicated not with the impious in the same Morals and way of living. For, at that very Age, a good disposition [improved] by the Divine Spirit, incited him to a Life that was pious and highly acceptable to God. Moreover, a studious Emulation of his Father added strength thereto, and invited the Son to an imitation of Virtues and good Actions. For, he had for his Father Constantius, (whose Memory 'tis fit we should at this opportunity give a Resurrection to,) the Noblest of the Emperours in our Age. Concerning whom 'tis necessary to relate some passages briefly, which bear a reference to the commendation of his Son.

that εὐσεβία has the same import with εὐμενείας, even then, as εὐσεβία, from that very time. And so Musculus renders it. Valef. † εὐσεβία. Doubtless it must be written, εὐσεβία, which has the same import with εὐσεβία, concerning whom. And so the reading is in the Kings Sheets and in the Savilian Manuscripts. In the Eusebian Manuscripts 'tis εὐσεβία, which is no ill reading. Valef.

CHAP. XIII.

Concerning his Father Constantius, who refused to persecute the Christians, in such manner as Dioclesianus, Maximianus and Maxentius did.

* WHilst the Roman Empire was Governed by Four Augusti, † He was the only person who embraced a course of Life different from his Colleagues, and entered into a friendship with the supreme God. For they, by a Siege as 'twere, ruined the Churches of God, and demolished them to the ground, and utterly destroyed the Oratories to their very foundations. But he kept his hands undefiled and clean from their nefarious impiety, nor would he in any wise render himself like to them. They defiled the Provinces Subject to them with the intestine Murders of men and women who were worshippers of God. He preserved his own mind from being polluted with * such detestable wickedness. They, by a confusion of the mischiefs of a † detestable Idolatry, in the first place enslaved themselves, and then all their Subjects, in the frauds and errors of most impious Dæmons. He being the Author and Preserver

* Or, To of a most profound Peace * within the Limits of his own Empire, permitted his Subjects to prosecute their Worship and Service to God without any the least trouble or molestation. [Lastly,] they imposed the heaviest sorts of exactions upon all men, and thereby made Life comfortable to them, and far more unpleasant than [any sort of] Death. But Constantius was the only person, who rendered his Government inoffensive, calm, and easy to his Subjects, and gave them an assistance from himself in nothing inferior to a paternal care and sollicitude. Further, because innumerable other Virtues of this person are celebrated amongst all men, I will only commemorate one or two of his brave Actions, from which a conjecture may be made of those that are left unmentioned, and so pass to the proposed scope and design of my Writing.

degenere in bonos; cuius pater inter Ceteros Imperatores persecutionem non exercuit: Et hoc sceleris immunis est Gallia. Valef.

* Constantius quædæ. The term ægyptiſtiſis is wanting, or some other such like word. Nor is the conjecture of that Learned man to be omitted, which I found written at the margin of the Moræus Copy; to wit that in his judgment the reading ought to be, διὰ τὰς τῶν ἀδελφικῶν ἐκείνων φωνῶν. But Turnebus at the margin of his Copy hath mended it ἐκείνων φωνῶν, as hath likewise Sir Henry Savile. In the Kings Sheets, over the word φωνῶν 'tis mended ᾠδῶν; which emendation I prefer before the rest. I write thus therefore, ἐκείνων φωνῶν ᾠδῶν ἐκείνων, &c.; and have inserted it accordingly. In the Eusebian Manuscripts the reading is ἐκείνων φωνῶν. Valef.

CHAP. XIV.

How Constantius Father [to Constantine] being reproach'd with poverty by Dioclesian, filled his Treasuries, and afterwards restored the money to [the owners thereof] who had brought it in.

WHen a great Report was spread abroad concerning this Emperour, that he was mild and calm, that he was a most excellent personage, that he was a superlative lover of God, and that, by reason of his transcendent clemency and indulgence towards his Subjects, he had hoarded up no money in his Treasuries: that

* Emperour who then filled the highest Station in the Empire, sent to him, and blamed his negligence in managing the publick affairs; and he reproach'd him with poverty, alledging this as an argument in confirmation of what he said, that he was posselt of nothing laid up in his Treasuries. But Constantius entreated those persons who came to him from the Emperour, to stay some little time with him: then he call'd together those men that were posselt of the greatest quantity of riches, who lived within all those Provinces under his Empire, and signified to them, that he wanted money, and that this was a fit opportunity wherein every one of them ought voluntarily to give a demonstration of their kindness and benevolence towards their Emperour. When they heard that, * as if they had long since made this their desire, that an occasion might be offered them of shewing him their readiness of affection, [† 'tis said,] that with all imaginable haste and diligence they filled his Treasuries with Gold, Silver, and other Riches; contending earnestly amongst themselves, that in giving they might out-vie one another: and this they performed with countenances full of joy and pleasantness. When this was done, Constantius gave order, that those persons sent from the † Senior Augustus should be Eye-witnesses of his Treasuries. Then he commanded them [at their return] to give attestation to what they had seen; [and added,] that at present he had drawn together this Treasure and taken it into his own custody; but, that it had long before been kept for him by the owners of the money, deposited as 'twere with such † Guards as are usually appointed to have the custody of Treasure. The Messengers were surprized with the strangeness of this thing: but Report says, that the most Benign Emperour, after their departure, sent for the owners of the money; and having highly commended them for their obedience and good affection towards him, ordered them to take back all their money, and return home. This is one Act of the forementioned Emperour's, which has rendered this place righter, in this manner: Hic auditis, nisi de illa sparsa voce jamdudum susceperunt ut id eveniret, quò se probare possent, &c. Further, after the word ægyptiſtiſis, readinists of affection, the verb quod, it's said, must be inserted. Valef.

* Παρ' αὐτῶν Κασιχίως. I read ἐκ τῶν μυστῶν Κασιχίως, as I found it mended in the Copies of Moræus, Turnebus, Sir Henry Savile, and Fukerius. Further, I have rendered μυστῶν Κασιχίως the Senior Augustus. For so Dioclesian is called in the Old Panegyricks and in Inscriptions. Valef.

* Τὴν μαρτυρίαν ἀποστῆναι. In the Kings Sheets these words are added in the margin; ἀποστῆναι διακρινέντες τὴν πῆλιν αὐτῶν κατὰ μυστῶν. ἐκείνων τῶν λόγων, τὴν μὲν ἀπὸ τῶν καὶ δ' ἔξ ἀλλήλων πλοῦσις ἢ ἀποδοξαζομένη. Which words some Learned men hath added by conjecture, as 'tis sufficiently apparent. I think there is only one word wanting here, παρῆσαν, to give. I word it thus therefore, εἰς τὴν ἐκείνων κατὰ μυστῶν τὴν μαρτυρίαν ἀποστῆναι. Then be commanded, &c. Which sort of explication is usual with Eusebius. Valef.

* Οἱ δὲ δαμασκίαις ἀπεδοξαζομένη. At the margin of Moræus's Copy 'tis mended thus, οἱ δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν. But this emendation is needless. For, amongst the Ancients, money was deposited in Temples, on account of securing it, and there kept by Guards or Watches of Souldiers, as Juvenal's Old Scholiast remarks and Lupinus in his book de Magnitudine Romanæ. To those Souldiers therefore Eusebius alludes. By the term ἀποστῆναι, the Palatini may also be meant here, who guarded the Sacred Treasury. In the Kings Sheets, 'tis over written in the same hand, ὡς πῆλιν, by Εὐσεβίου, which displeases not. In the Eusebian Manuscripts 'tis οἱ δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν. Valef.

which

which gives a demonstration of his Humanity and good Nature. This other Action of his [which follows,] contains an evident Testi-* Τὸς πολλοῖς many of * his piety towards God.

ἀσείας Doubtless the reading must be σείας, piety, as I found it intended in the margin of Turnebus's Copy. Vale!

CHAP. XV.

Concerning the Persecution [raised] by the other [Emperours.]

By the Command of the Emperours, the Governours of Provinces in all places persecuted the worshippers of God. And such as were the first of all the pious Martyrs, came out of the very Imperial Palaces themselves, underwent Conflicts in defence of their Religion, and with all imaginable alacrity endured Fire, Sword, the Depths of the Sea, and all sorts of death whatever. In so much that, within a very short space of time, the Imperial Palaces in all places were emptied of God's Worshippers. From whence chiefly it came to pass, that the Authors of this wickedness remained deprived of the divine inspection and assistance. For whilst they persecuted the Worshippers of God, by the same means they banished those supplications usually put up for themselves.

<sup>a</sup> Ἐὰν παν-
ταχὲς ὡς
σὺλῃται.
The Adverb παν-ταχὲς not without reason troubled both the Transla-

rooms, as may be gathered from their Renditions. But they ought to be considered, that Palatium, a Palace, is taken in a twofold sense. For, sometimes it imports the Court of a Prince. In which sense there were at that time only Four Palaces, to wit answerable to the number of the Emperours. But sometimes every House wherein an Emperor dwells is termed a Palace. And in this sense there were very many Palaces in the Roman Empire. For there was fenced a City which had not a Palace. Such Palaces, or Imperial Houses, as these, were under the dispose of certain Officers, who were termed Cura Palationum; concerning whom there is mention in the Notitia Imperii Romani. Ægæstius therefore means these Palaces. I am of opinion that the Publick or Royal Villa are likewise meant, which the Cæsarini look'd alter. Vale!

CHAP. XVI.

How Constantius Father [to Constantine,] pretending himself a worshipper of Idols, turned out those who were willing to offer Sacrifice: but retained within his own Palace such as chose to profess themselves Christians.

Or, <sup>a</sup> Only <sup>b</sup> Constantius entred upon a *Prudent and Pious Course. And the thing he performed was wonderful to be heard, but much more admirable as to its performance.
For, having given all the <sup>c</sup> Palatines that belonged to his Court, even as far as the Judges that were invested with the supremest powers,

Κίρκη's Shells, the term 'Ευσκήες, Plouis, is elegantly added in the margin, thus: σκία της ευσκείας ύπερσώης λογιζομένη. Vale!

Phileas γὰρ καὶ τὸν βασιλικόν. I read γὰρ αὐτῷ, as tis in the Frigenet, and in Moreus's Copy. That it is all the Palatines who before Office under him, and also to the Judges themselves who were placed in power. Power is a term properly attributed to the Greater Judges, of which sort were the Præfices Prætorio. So Eusebius expresses himself hereafter; and Socrates, book 2. chap. 16; where he speaks concerning Priippus Præficus Prætorio. Moreover, in the Cyprian Epistle, Magistrum Officium, Magistrum Officialium, to the proudest, the Lysias thus, Προφύλαξ ταυ, &c. Your power, &c. See what has been remarked above at book 3. chap. 1. of Euseb. Eccles. History note (α.) Euseb.

a free Liberty of Choice; he proposed this Condition to them, that if they would Sacrifice to Demons, they might stay at Court with him, and enjoy their usual Places and Honours; but if they would not do that, they should be excluded from access to him, thrust out, and removed from his knowledge and familiarity. After [His Courtiers] therefore had been hereupon divided into two parties, and some had betaken themselves to this, others to that side, and the Sentiment and purpose of every one of them was laid open: then this admirable Prince discovered his own design, which hitherto he had concealed, and condemned their timidity and Self-love: and to these he gave a kind Reception, on account of their Conscience devoted to God: but then he pronounced those, in regard they were betrayers of God, to be unworthy of their Prince's favour. <sup>c</sup> For how <sup>d</sup> In the [said he] will it be possible they should pre-<sup>e</sup> King's Co-serve a fidelity towards their Emperor, who <sup>f</sup> at the side of have been detected of perfidiousness towards these of God? Wherefore he made an Establishment by <sup>g</sup> words, is a Law, that such persons should be removed <sup>h</sup> from such a far from the Imperial Houses. But he declar-<sup>i</sup> mark ared openly, that those men who by the Testi-<sup>j</sup> this, apmony of Truth it self were manifested <sup>k</sup> we have taken noto be <sup>l</sup> acceptable to God, would <sup>m</sup> Or, tice of render themselves like-minded to-<sup>n</sup> words of, such a wards their Emperor, and therefore he made <sup>o</sup> mark a-them the Protectors of his Body, and the Guards <sup>p</sup> this sume of his Empire: and affirmed, that such persons <sup>q</sup> where be-as these ought to be made use of and accounted <sup>r</sup> fore: but <sup>s</sup> as the chiefest and nearest of friends, and most <sup>t</sup> that Letter intimate Relatives; and that they were far <sup>u</sup> set before more highly to be esteemed than hoards of the <sup>v</sup> the, it not most valuable Riches and Treasures.

closed on all sides. Whence I am rather induced to believe, that this mark is ϕ and γ, and that it signifies ἐπεὶ οὖν, that is, attend, consider. For this mark is added at places which have something of difficulty. For instance, the newness of this expression, πῶς ἴδωμαι quidēas, may put the Reader to a stand here, unless he knows that these words, ἴδωμαι ἐγώ, are to be understood, Uolo.

<sup>d</sup> Ἐν πρώτοις αἰ. In the King's Copy the reading is ἐν πρώτοις πρῶτα, &c. amongst the chiefest and nearest, &c. Those words γένους αἰών, ought to be made use of, are a redundancy of expression frequent with Eusebius: for so he has express'd himself in his book of History, as I well remember. Valef.

CHAP. XVII.

Concerning the same [Constantius's] Love and affection towards Christ.

What manner of person the Father of <sup>a</sup> We have Constantine is recorded to have been, <sup>b</sup> division we have in short manifested. Now, what a Con- of a new clusion of Life befall him, chapter who had demonstreated him- here, from the Authority of the self such a person towards Kings Manuscript; whereto a-God, and how great a differ- grees the Fukusan Copy, and ference was shewn between the old Sheets. Valef.

him and his Colleagues in the Empire, by that God whom he honoured, any one will easily discern, who with attention shall apply his mind to consider † the thing it self. For, after he had for † Or, The a long-time given illustrious and approved in- Nature of stances of his Royal Vertue, by [avowing] affairs.
 * one only Supreme God, and by condemning † Mis-* their Impiety who pay a wor- 1000 Sols 5 ship to more Gods than one, 1000 Sols 5 and had on all sides fortified 1000 Sols 5 † Or, The Polytheism of the Atheists.

* Or, The Polytheism of the Atheists. ἡ ἀποθεωσις τῶν ἀθεῶν
his ἡ ἀποθεωσις τῶν ἀθεῶν

his own house with the prayers of holy men; he completed the remainder of his Life without any thing of Trouble or disquietude: being made Master of that Felicity, which, as 'tis said, consists in this, neither to be molested by others, nor to give others trouble. After this manner therefore [he rendered] the whole time of his Reign even, undisturbed, and pacate; and consecrated his whole Family, his wife namely, and children, and all his servants, to one God the Supreme King. In so much that, that Company which converted together within the walls of his Palace, differed in nothing from a Church of God. Amongst whom were Ministers of God also, who performed uninterrupted Acts of worship to the Deity, in behalf of the Emperor's safety; when as commonly amongst the rest, not so much as the bare name of those sort of men that were Religious, was permitted to be mentioned.

But, that reading which I have produced out of the Kings Sheets, is better. For the term ἁγῶν is elegantly opposed to that which follows immediately, to wit, καταρτίζω, condemning. In the Fukeian Manuscript 'tis written ἁγῶν. Valef.

*Tis ὡς διατρέχει Sir Henry Savil has noted at the margin of his Copy, that perhaps the Verb ἔτι is said to be added. But, that emendation is far better, which I found written in the Kings Sheets, at the margin; it is this, ὡς αὐτὸς ἔτι διατρέχει τὸν ὡς διατρέχει βίον, which reading we have express'd in our Version. The reading in the Fukeian Manuscript is, ὡς αὐτὸς ἔτι διατρέχει τὸν ὡς διατρέχει βίον. Valef.

* He alludes to that saying of Epicurus concerning God, τὸ μακρόν, ἔτι πρὸς αὐτὸν ἔχει αὐτὸν, ἔτι αὐτὸν παύσει; as Nemesius relates it, chap. 44; Cicero, in his first book de Natura Deorum; and Lælius, pag. 795. Valef.

*Tis ὡς τὸν ὡς. In the Kings Sheets, the last word is undermarked with points, and ἁγῶν is written over, which I like better. Further, in the same Sheets, before these words, there are added in the margin, ἡ ταῦτα ὡς μὲν τὸν ὡς συνέλεξε, and these [Acts of worship] were performed with him only. They that will, may follow this conjecture of the Learned Antiquary. To me these words seem not necessary. Valef.

CHAP. XVIII.

That after the Resignation of Dioclesian and Maximian, Constantius was the first Augustus, and was adorned with a Numerous Issue.

Further, in recompence of these things, a reward from God attended him not long after; in so much that he obtained the first and chiefest place of the * Empire. For those † Augusti who were His Seniors, by what means I know not, divested themselves of their Imperial Dignity: which sudden Change befel them on the first year after the * demolition of the Churches; from whenceforward, only Constantius was declared the first and † Chiefest Augustus. Who at first was adorned with the Diadem of the Cæsars [together

* Or, Imperial.
† Vir. Dioclesian, and Maximian.
* Or, Siege.
This place is highly † Or, A remarkable durable. ble. For, from it is deduced with the Diadem of the Cæsars [together may be made, that the Persecution began on Dioclesian's eighth, and Maximian's seventh Consulate; and not on the foregoing year, as Bezaus will have it. Concerning which matter I have spent many words in my notes on Euseb. Eccles. History; see book 8, chap. 2, note (c). For, whereas Eusebius affirms, that the Emperours Dioclesian and Maximian divested themselves of their purple on the year after the Persecution was begun; and whereas 'tis manifest, that they did that on the year of Christ 304; what I have said does necessarily follow, to wit, that Dioclesian's Persecution was begun on the year of Christ 303. Valef.

with * Galerius,] and had obtained precedence: * See Eubut after [he had given] an Egregious † Spe. sebus; Ec: cimen of his own worth in that dignity of Cæ. ecclesiastical History far, he was invested with the highest honour amongst the Romans, and was styled the First book 9. Augustus of those. Four afterwards proclaimed, note (i;) Moreover, he was the only person that excelled and the all the other Emperours in a numerous issue, Excepta of that mknown Au- being surrouded with a great Quire of Chil- chur pub- dren, as well Males as Females. Lastly, after he had attained to a mature old Age, and, being lifted by ready to pay * the Common debt. † Or, The close of. of Nature, was at the point of making his departure out of his life: then did God again demonstrate common Marcel- Nature- linnus pag. 471. himself to him the performer of wonderful Works, and by his providence took † Proof, or, care, that Constantine the eldest of his Sons b Sir Henry should be present with him at his Death, in Savil has in order to his taking possession of the Em- noted at pire, the margin of his Cop, that these four were, Galerius Maximianus, Severus, and Maximianus, but the fourth Maximianus. As to the three former, I assent to Sir Henry Savil. But, I do affirm, that the fourth was not Maximianus, but Constantius himself. For Maximianus seized not the Empire, till after Constantius's death. Valef.

CHAP. XIX.

Concerning his Son Constantine, who when a young man, came into Palestine together with Dioclesian.

For he convers'd with the Emperours [who were his Father's] Colleagues; and made his Residence amongst them, agreeable to that ancient Prophet of the Lord Moses, as we have already said. * And having newly past over his years of childhood, and arrived at those of his youth, he was vouchsafed the highest honour and esteem amongst the foresaid Emperours. At which Age of his we Our Selves saw him, when he past through the Province of Palestine, in Company with the Senior Augustus. At whose right hand he stood, and appeared a most excellent and glorious person to those who were desirous of seeing him, and such a one as even then gave indications of an Imperial height of mind. For as to the beautiful shape of his body, and his tallness of Stature, there was no other person that might be compared to him. Moreover, he so far excelled his equals in strength and courage, that he was a terror to them. But he was far more illustrious and eminent for the Vertues of his mind, than for his bodily endowments and accomplishments. And in the first place he beautified his mind with modesty; after that, with Polite Literature; and as well an innate prudence, as a wisdom infused from above, adorned him in a most transcendent manner. * ἡν δὲ αὖτε τὸ παῖδος. I think the reading should be, ἡν δὲ αὖτε τὸν παῖδος, &c; which we have express'd in our Version. Indeed, in Moræus's Copy the particle δὲ is written at the margin. Turnebus, at the margin of his Copy, had mended it, ἡν δὲ αὖτε παῖδος. In the Fukeian Manuscript the reading is, ἡν δὲ αὖτε τὸν παῖδος. Valef.

read ἐκπύμων, adorned, as Eusebius does usually speak. And so 'tis mended in the old Sheets, at the margin. In the Fukeian Manuscript 'tis written thus, ἐκπύμων. Valef.

CHAP. XX.

The departure of Constantine to his Father, because of Dioclesian's treacherous designs [against him.]

Further, when the then Emperours perceived, that the Young man was Courageous, and Great, and *endewed with an height and vigour of mind, they were wounded with *fear and envy. They watch'd therefore in expectation of a fit opportunity, where-an Affair, agreeable to their desire, they might involve him in ignominy and disgrace. Which the young man being sensible of, (for the treacherous there are designs which had been once and twice framed against him, by the consent and appointment of God were discovered;) He opened a way to his own safety by flying; and herein likewise he \ Or, Pre-* furthered the great Prophet Moses.
Further, God gave him his assistance in all things, and by his Divine providence disposed affairs in such a manner as

Emperor<sup>1</sup> nor, that he should be present with his Father, Diocletian<sup>2</sup> in order to his succeeding him [in the Em-perial and Gale-pire.]
 died not only to disgrace Constantine, but to destroy him utterly.
 See the Excerpta de Gestis Constantini, which are published at the end of Anni-Maximiliani, and what we have remarked there. I was indeed of opinion formerly, that those Greek words which are written at the margin of the Geneva Edition, were not taken out of any Manuscript Copy, but were made from Christophorini's Latine Version. But after I had procured the Fuketian Manuscript I evidently perceived, that those readings were taken out of Manuscript Copies. 'Tis certain, the Fuketian Manuscript has this place written in this manner: οτι ουκ εστιν εν αλλοις ομιλιαις κτλ
ουκ εστιν εν αλλοις αυτοις ευαγγελιστοις ευαγγελιστοις, ουκ εστιν εν αλλοις αυτοις ευαγγελιστοις, ουκ εστιν εν αλλοις αυτοις ευαγγελιστοις
 So I found it written also in the Copies of Turnebus and Sir Henry Saunders. But this reading, though confirmed by the authority of Manuscript Copies, nevertheless seems not genuine to me; both for that reason I have produced above, and on account also of the inelegancy of the words. Valf.

τῆ τοῦ πατρὸς διαθήκῃ. I had rather write διαθήκη, Will, or, Testament. For Constantius made his Will at that very time when his Son Constantine came to him, as Nicephorus relates book 7-chap. 18. A little before the reading should be παρῆναι, present, not συνῆναι. Vale.

CHAPTER XXI.

The Death of Constantius, who left his Son Constantine Emperour.

\ Or, Engines of Treachery.*

When therefore he had avoided these all * Treacherous contrivances, he made imagineable halt to his Father, into whose presence he came, after a long space of time.
At that instant of his arrival, his Father was at the very point of dying. When therefore Constantius beheld his Son - present with him, whom he did not in the least expect, he leapt
from his Bed, and cast his arms about him;
and affirming that the only Grief which troubled him now ready to conclude his life, to wit, the absence of his Son, was wholly removed out of his mind, he put up a prayer of thanks to God; and said, that now he accounted Death to be better for him than Immortality. Further, when he had disposed of his affairs in a manner agreeable to his own mind, and <sup>a</sup> had taken leave of his Sons and Daugh- <sup>a</sup> Trist. 6

ters, who like a Quire surrounded him on every <sup>a</sup> dues 10 side: He ended his life in his Palace, lying <sup>a</sup> dues 11 on his Royal Bed, after he had surrendered <sup>a</sup> our due the <sup>a</sup> Administration of his Empire, <sup>a</sup> dues 12 agreeable to the Law of Nature, <sup>a</sup> Or, his Christ.
into the hands of <sup>b</sup> his eldest <sup>a</sup> allments
Son. <sup>a</sup> phorion
<sup>a</sup> of the Em-
<sup>a</sup> rendred
<sup>a</sup> pire. <sup>a</sup> this place

orum & filiarum se statim, placing himself in the midst of his sons and Daughters. Porphyrius has translated it in this manner, Simul Liberis et commentariis distribuitur. Hereafter, And also distributed between his children, as in a Commentary, or Book of Notes.
Neither of these translations has hit the sense of this word. Eusebius uses the same term in book 3, chap. 21; at which place we will at large declare what surtae does mean, as also the import of surtae and ἀντι-σην. Sir Henry Savile has expounded this word excellently well at the margin of his Copy, thus, Valdecanus, taking leave, or, bidding farewell. And so Abraham expresses himself in the Life of St. Antonius, about the end, ἐν τῷ ἐξελθόντι ἐκ τοῦ ὄρους ἐν τῷ ἀντισηνῶντι, having taken leave of those Monks in the mountain with him. Vale.
<sup>b</sup> τῷ τῷ ἡμῶν ἀποχρῆσιν. I write τῷ τῷ ἡμῶν, &c. So Eusebius has express himself above, at chapter 18, (speaking concerning Theodoret and Maximian, &c.) ἵ μὲν γὰρ τῷ Χριστῷ ἀποχρῆσιν Valif.

CHAPTER XXII.

How * after the Death of Constantius, the Army † saluted Constantine Augustus. * Or, When Constantine had been carried out to Burial. † Or, Styled.

N Or did the State continue deprived of an Emperour. But Constantine was adorned with his Fathers Purple; and proceeding forth of his Father's * House, gave all men a demonstration, that, by a resurrection as 'twere, the Father continued as yet to Reign in him his Son. Then he lead out his Father's Funeral, accompanied with the Friends of his Father *, some of whom went before, others followed; and with all the splendour imaginable celebrated the Obsequies of that Pious Prince. All persons honoured the Thrice-blessed Emperour with Acclamations and Praises, and agreed in an unanimous consent, that the succession of the Son in the Empire was a Resurrection of the dead Father. And forthwith, even at the first word, they * Saluted the young Prince Emperour and Augustus, with fortunate Acclamations. Which expressions uttered in praise of the Son, were an ornament indeed to the dead Emperour; but they loudly proclaimed the Son Blessed, who was declared the Successour to so great a Father. Moreover, all the Provinces subject to his Empire, were filled with gladness and a joy that was inexpressible, because they had not, during the smallest moment of time, been deprived of the assistance of an Imperial † Providence and inspection. Thus in the Emperour Constantinus, God gave a demonstration to all persons of our Age, that such as this is the conclusion of a Pious and Religious life and conversation.

phorson found them in their Copies, nevertheless) seem to me very little necessary. Yet they occur in the Fuketian Manuscript.
Valef.

CHAP. XXIII.

A brief Rehearsal of the Death of the Tyrants.

\ Or, Conditions of
life*
BUT what the * Exits of those other persons were, who by an open War as 'twere made attacks against the Churches of God, I judge in no wise fit to infer into this present Narrative, nor to defile the Memories of the Good by † annexing a mention of the mischievous. Indeed, the ‖ matters themselves are sufficient to repress and keep within the bounds of duty those persons, who by their own eyes and ears have received an account of that [whole Scene of Calamities] which befel each of them.

† Or, a composition of the contrary.
‖ Or, Experience of the work.

CHAP. XXIV.

That Constantine obtained the Empire by the will of God.

\ Or, By
himself.*
IN this manner, the supream God himself, who is the Governour of the whole World * by his own arbitrement designed and constituted Constantine, begotten of such a Father, Prince and Emperor: in so much that, whereas the rest [of the Emperors] obtained this honour by the approbation and votes of others, he was the only person, of whose * promotion no Mortal might boast.

\ Hecce mors, ac-cessio. It ought as I think, to be made necessary, that is, promotion; or ac-cessio, advancement. And thus Turnebus hath mended it at the margin of his Copy, as I afterwards found. Valef.*

CHAP. XXV.

The Victories of Constantine over the Barbarians and Britanni.

\ Or, For his Father's al-
lertment.*
\ Empe-
rion vñm.*
*So Eusebi-
us is wont
to term the Provinces
of the Romans, as might easily be proved from many places. Eusebius says
therefore,
that Constantine
as soon as his Empire
was settled,
before his Eyes the other parts of the World;
took a progress round all those Provinces that had been under the Empire of his Father.*
WHEN therefore he was firmly settled in the Empire, in the first place he began to make provision * for those parts of the Empire which had been transferred to him from his Father, and with much humanity and tenderness * visited all those Provinces that had heretofore been under his Father's Administration. And, having reduced all those barbarous Nations, (whose habitations were about the River Rhine and the Western Ocean, who had taken the boldness to raise Commotions,) to an obedience to his own Government; from being intractable, he brought them over to a mild and more civilized Temper. But he was satisfied in repressing others, whom like Savage Beasts he frighted from the confines of his Empire; to wit, those whose minds he perceived were incurable, and despair'd of bringing them to a peaceable and quiet course of Life. When * these things had been performed according to his own mind, he set himself, before his Eyes the other parts of the World; took a progress round all those Provinces that had been under the Empire of his Father. Which Christopherson understood not. Valef.

\ Ταύτην xpi λέγειν θέλει. At this place xpi λέγειν seems to have the same import with xpi πρὸς, according to his own mind. Which Porfessus perceived also. But Christopherson has rendered this place, and the whole chapter, very unhappily. Valef.*

\ Or, For
his Father's al-
lertment.*
\ Empe-
rion vñm.*
*So Eusebi-
us is wont
to term the Provinces
of the Romans, as might easily be proved from many places. Eusebius says
therefore,
that Con-
stantine
as soon as his Empire
was settled,
before his Eyes the other parts of the World;
took a progress
round all those Provinces that had been under the Empire of
his Father.*

then he made a * Voyage over to the British Nations, situate within the Ocean it self. Whom when he had subdued, he look'd towards other parts of the World, that he might apply remedies to those [Nations] who wanted his Assistance.

have written any thing. Therefore, the memory of this matter we owe to Eusebius only; who at this place does not obscurely intimate the time also; to wit, a little before Constantine undertook his Expedition against Maximianus. Wherefore, this Voyage of Constantine's into Britain hapned on Maximianus's eighth Consulate, in the year of Christ 311, as Sogonius has rightly remarked in his Second Book de Occidentali Imperio. But Sr. Henry Savil thought Eusebius was mistaken here: For this is his remark at this place; Eusebius ignorasse videtur. &c. Eusebius seems to have been ignorant, that the Father of Constantine dyed at York in Britain. Valef.

\ Concei-ning this Voyage of Constantine into Britain,
none of the Ancients*

CHAP. XXVI.

How he took a Resolution of freeing Rome [from the Tyranny] of Maxentius.

AFTER this he took into his Consideration the whole * World, as 'twere some vast Body; and perceiving that the Head of the element of whole Earth, the † Chief City of the Roman world, Empire, was oppressed with a Tyrannick ser. † Or, Invitute; in the first place he gave place to * them to free it, who had obtained the other * He portions of the Roman Empire; in regard they means were his Seniors in time. Now when none of them could give it assistance; but those who had resolved upon making tryal, * had perished by an ignominious death; he profess his Life would be uncomfortable, if he should neglect the Imperial City when so sorely afflicted, and therefore made preparations to suppress the Tyranny.

time, that is, Senior Emperors. For although Maximianus was scarce declared Augustus as yet, nevertheless, because he had been made Caesar some years before Constantine, therefore he may be accounted amongst the Emperors that were Seniors to Constantine. Valef.

\ Αὐγὺςτος ὀνομαζόμενος. A twofold sense may be brought of these words. For you may either render them with Porfessus and Christopherson, sedum rei eventum nulli sunt, had procured a shameful event of the affair; or else, as I have translated them, curpi exitu perierunt, had perished by an ignominious death. The former has relation to Galerius Maximianus. The latter interpretation is to be understood of Severus Caesar: who being sent by Galerius with an Army against Maxentius, when he would have made preparations to lay Siege to Rome, he was deserted by his own Forces, (whom Maxentius had brought off to his own side by the hope of rewards,) and fled to Ravenna: in which City he was besieged by Maxentius, and being soon imposed upon by the fraud and perjuries of Maximianus Herculius, and carried to Rome in the habit of a Captive he was quickly after killed; as 'tis related in the Gestā Constantini. See the following chapter, where Eusebius relates this matter more at large. Valef.*

CHAP. XXVII.

That [Constantine] weighing in his mind the deaths of those who had worshipped Idols, chose rather the [profession of] Christianity.

BUT having well considered with himself, that he wanted some better assistance than his Military Forces, because of the evil Arts and Magick Impostures studiously followed by the Tyrant; he sought for a God to be his Assistant; and accounted his furniture of Arms

B b b and

† Or, In and Military Companies † as secondary helps on the second ly; but [persuaded himself,] that the assistance of a Deity was invincible and inextinguishable.

* Or, This * these thoughts arose in his mind: that of thought. those many who had arrived at the Empire

ὁ ἑστὸς became <sup>b</sup> a cheap and easy sacrifice of death. Having, I say, muffled up all these thoughts within his own mind, and considered them well, he judged * O, Folly, it the highest pitch of † madness to trifle about [the worship of †] those Gods which are nothing, and, after so clear a conviction, still to run on in blind error: but his Sentiment was, that he ought only to worship the God of his Father.
 thus; Tuquam superuacuae mortis accessio factus est, was made as twere the superfluous accession of death. Or, Porcius, before him, had rendered it facti accessionem, the accession, or, purchase of Fate. But I understand not, why Severus should be filled the wantage of death, when he only of all his Army perished. I had therefore rather render παύσιον, οὐκ ἐπιβόητον, a cheap and easy Sacrifice. For vile persons are rightly termed δωδεῖς παύσιον. Also tribus ever happens without Labour and amiss spore as twere, is rightly termed παύσιον. So the death of Severus Caesar may rightly be filled παύσιον, in regard he was taken, and slain so easily, as if he had had no Soldiers about him. And perhaps it should be written παύσιον ἐξ ὅτου παύσιον.
 Indeed, Gelasius Cyzrenius's words (book 1. chap. 3.) are these;
κλῆς ἔξ τῶ τῆς κερῆς τῶ ὅπου νῦν αὐτοῦ βασιλεως οὐλα, παύσιον τῆς μάχης πρὸς τὸ κρον συγχρησίζω; where the Translator has rendered it the Accession of the War, which I like not. I had rather translate it in Gelasius thus, his velut belli praeludis ad bellum spium usus, having used these p. ludes of war as twere in order to the war is self. So also Eusebius expresses himself hereafter at book 2.
 chap. 52. Further, at this place there is a figure which Grecians term ὁσιν σπένδω. For the overthrow of Severus Caesar preceded that ignominious flight of Galerius. Valef.

CHAP. XXVIII.

*That whilst he was praying to God, He shewed him a Vision; to wit, a Cross of Light in the * Heavens, (it being then mid-day,) and * Or, an Inscription thereon, which admonished him. that by That he should Conquer.*

HE called upon this God therefore in his prayers, entreating and beseeching him, that who ever he was, he would manifest himself to him, and reach out his right hand [to his assistance] in his present affairs. Whilst the Emperor was putting up these Prayers and earnest Supplications, a most wonderful sign sent from God appeared. Which [sign,] had any other person given a Relation of it, would not easily have been * received as true. But since the † Victorious Emperor himself told it to us who write this History, a long while after, namely at such time as we were vouchsafed his knowledge and converse; and confirmed his Relation with an || oath; who will hereafter doubt of giving credit to his Narrative? Especially, when the succeeding * Times gave an evident attestation to this Relation. † About the Meridian hours of the Sun when the day was declining, he said he saw with his own Eyes the Trophy of the Cross in the † Heavens, placed over the Sun, made up of Light, and an Inscription annexed to it containing these words, BY THIS CONQUER. And, that at the sight thereof, an amazement seized both him and all his Military Forces, which followed him as he was making a Journey some whither, and were spectators of the Miracle.

b Ἀπὸ μεσημβρίας ἡλίου ὥρας ὥδε τῆς ἡμέρας ἀπολήσκει. Nicephorus (book 7, chap. 29.) has expounded this place thus: ἀπὸ μεσημβρίας ἡλίου σημαίνει τὴν ἡμέραν ἑσπέρην, τὴν ἡλίου ὥραν ἀνατολῆς. For being about noon on the march thither his Army about him, the Sun verging towards the West, &c. So also Porphyrius has rendered Eusebius's words: Sub meridieum (lays he) inclinatio jam die, about noon, the day now declining. But perhaps the whole clause is to be continued in one breath, and the words of Eusebius to be construed in this manner, τῆς ἡμέρας ἀπολήσκει ἀπὸ μεσημβρίας ὥρας, when the day was now verging towards noon. Which interpretation is favoured by Zonaras, who giving an account of this Vision in the Gesta of Constantine, says it appeared ὡς ἡμέρας, at mid-day. Indeed, in the King's and Fiskeian Manuscripts, there is no Comma after the word ὥρας, but only after the word ἀπολήσκει a Comma is set. And yet in Socrates (book 1, chap. 2) who wrote out these words of Eusebius, after the word ὥρας, is set a Comma. Therefore Christopherson at both places renders it thus ciriter meridieum, die jam in pomeridianum tempus aliquantulum inclinante, about noon, the day now declining somewhat towards the afternoon. Which to me seems foolish. For ἀπολήσκει ἡμέρας cannot be said, but when the day declines towards the Evening, that is, after the ninth hour of the day, as Nicephorus rightly took it. But how can that agree with the preceding words ἀπὸ τῆς μεσημβρίας, &c? For is the same as if you should say, about noon towards the evening. Some one will perhaps say, that by these last words ἀπολήσκει ἡμέρας Eusebius would mean, that that Vision was shewn to Constantine a little after noon. For the Sun going from the Meridian Point, afterwards by degrees verges into the West. But if Eusebius thought so, what need was there of so many words? For he might have expressed himself with more brevity, thus μεσσηνίᾳ ἔπειτα ἡμέρας, i.e. being now mid-day. Besides, Eusebius has said it in the plural number, ἀπὸ τῆς μεσημβρίας ὥρας, that it might appear that he meant not the sixth hour, but that whole space of hours which is ascribed to noon, to wit from the fifth hour to the ninth. Wherefore, I am induced to be of this opinion, that that Vision was prelofted to Constantine about the ninth hour of the day, whilst he was making a journey in company with his Army. And this is plainly confirmed by the following words. For Eusebius adds that Constantine being amazed after the Vision, whilst he was making many things within his own mind, might come on. Whence it appears, that that Vision appeared to Constantine and his Soldiers not long before night. In the Eleventh Book of the Historia Miscellanea where this passage of Eusebius is produced, this rendition of it occurs, circa meridiem, declinante jam sole, about noon, the Sun now declining. Valef.

CHAP. XXIX.

That God's Christ appeared to him in his sleep, and ordered him to make use of a Standard made in the form of a Cross, in his Wars.

Moreover, he began to doubt with himself, as he said, what the meaning of this Apparition should be. But whilst he was revolving it in his mind, and very intent in his thoughts upon it, on a sudden night came on. At which time [as he said,] the Christ of God appeared to him when asleep, with that sign which had been shown him in the Heavens; and ordered him to get a Standard made in imitation of that he had seen in the Heaven which he should use as a salutary defence in his Engagements with his Enemies.

CHAP XXX.

The making of that Standard framed in the fashion of a Cross.

As soon as it was day he arose, and declared the whole secret to his friends. Then he called together the Workers in Gold and precious Stones, in the midst of whom he himself sat, and by discourse gave them a description of that * Standard, and ordered them to express its likeness in Gold and precious Stones. Which [Standard] we our selves also * hapned sometime to have a sight of.

* Or, Sign.
* Ὁρθεύσαι ποτὶ παραλαβὴν. The verb ὠρθεύειν is to be added, which I found written at the margin of Moreau's Copy. In the King's Sheets this place is supplied at the margin in this manner; αὐτὸς βασιλεὺς, οὗ καὶ τὸ ἱερὸν χειρομίδιον, ἡβλῶντος, the Emperor himself, God having bestowed that also, vouchsafed [us a sight of it.] And so Sr Henry Savil and Christopherfon read. In the Fukeian Manuscript this place is written thus, ὁ δὲ καὶ ἡμεῖς ὀρθολογίαι ποτὶ σωθῆναι παραλαβὴν αὐτοῦ βασιλεὺς, &c. as above. But, the one of these expressions is superfluous. For either the verb ὠρθεύειν must be expunged; or else those words αὐτοῦ βασιλεὺς, &c. must be left out. Unless you will read as Sr Henry Savil did, αὐτὸς δὲ βασιλεὺς, &c. For the Emperor himself, God having bestowed that also, vouchsafed us a sight of it. Valef.

CHAP. XXXI.

A description of the Standard made in fashion of a Cross, which the Romans do now term The Labarum.

It was made in this form. A very long Spear overlaid with Gold, * had a piece like a Sail-yard laid overthwart it, framed in fashion of a Cross. Above, on the very top of the * Κίρας ἑξαρ-

zen. Len-gus, Porte-fion of a Cross. Above, on the very top of the Christopherfon have rendered it Cornu, a Horn; whereas they ought to have translated it antennam, i. e. a cross piece like that whereon a Sail is fixed, or, the Sail-yard. Valef.

Spear, was fixt a Crown, made up of precious Stones and Gold. In this Crown was the Symbol of the Salutary Appellation, to wit, two Letters representing the name of Christ, [which they] denoted by the first Characters, the letter Rho being cut thorow in its middle part. Which two letters the Emperor was wont to wear in his Helmet, though [he embraced that usage] in the times which succeeded these matters. Further, from the Cross-piece fixed athwart the Spear, was hung a kind of a * Flag, to wit, a * Or, purple cloth, covered with a variety of precious Sail. Stones joyned one with another, which dazzled mens eyes with the Rays of their Light; and being interwoven with much Gold, presented those that viewed it with an inexpressible kind of Beauty. This Flag, hung at the Cross-piece, * had a length exactly equal to its breadth. But, the upright Staff of the Spear, * from its lowest part was extended to a very great length, and in its upper part, under mended it the Trophy of the Cross, at the very top of the * Flag embroidered with a variety of colours, it bore a Golden Picture of the Pious Emperor, as far as his breast, and [a representation] likewise of his children. This salutary Standard the Emperor always made use of as a defence against the opposed Forces of all Enemies whatever; and he gave order, that other Standards made like to this should be carried at the head of all his Armies.

after, the same Copy and Turnebus read παρὰ τῆς, not παρὰ τοῦ. Valef.
* Σύνθεσις ὡς καὶ τὸ ἱερὸν. By these words Eusebius shews, that that Flag or Sail was square. For an equal measure of length and breadth, does necessarily make a square figure. Indeed, in the old Copy of Constantine and the following Princes, this Flag is to be seen in that figure I have mentioned. Christopherfon therefore has rendered this place ill, in this manner. Istud igitur velamen ad cornu affixum, longitudo sine latitudine crucis mensuram penitus exaequavit. Valef.
* The meaning is, that that Spear from its base to the Antenna, or Cross-piece fixed athwart it, was far longer, than from the Antenna, to its very top. And this also may be discerned in the Copy. This place may likewise have another meaning, viz. that that Spear was of a very great length from its bottom to the top. Valef.
* Τὸ διαγέγραπτον ὡς ἐν τῷ δεξιῷ. It must be written τὸ διαγέγραπτον, that is Painted or Embroidered with a variety of Colours. For, that purple Flag which hung at the Antenna, was adorned with Gold and various sorts of Stones. But, I can't imagine what Christopherfon meant who has rendered these words of Eusebius in this manner, ad texture discurrunt fimbriae: unless he read διατέχνητο: instead of διαγέγραπτο. Valef.

CHAP. XXXII.

That Constantine becoming a Catechumen, read the Sacred Scriptures.

BUT these things [were done] a little afterwards. But being then amazed at that wonderful Vision, after he had taken a resolution of worshipping * no other God but him whom he had seen, he sent for * those persons that were skilled in the Mysteries of His Doctrine; and enquired of them what that God was, and * what the Vision of that Sign meant.

or ἄλλα θεῶν, no other. Sr Henry Savil at the margin of his Copy hath mended it ἰδὲ θεῶν διδόν: the Fukeian Manuscript has it ἰδὲ θεῶν διδόν.
* Τὸ τὸν αὐτὸν λόγον μύσας. At this place Eusebius seems to have made use of μύσας instead of μυστηριώδεις. For there is no doubt but he means the Bishops: because a little after he adds these words, καὶ ἰδὲ τὸν αὐτὸν λόγον μυστήριον αὐτῶν πνευματικῶν, &c. and having made those Prelates of God his Assistants, &c. Valef.
* Or, What was the meaning of that Sign of the Vision which appeared.

C H A P. XXXVI.

Maxentius's Magick Arts against Constantine; and the scarcity of Provisions at Rome.

AT length, as the Complement of his Impieties, the Tyrant proceeded to [execute] the delusions of Magick Arts; sometimes ripping up Women great with Child; otherwhiles searching into the Bowels of new-born Infants: He also † killed Lyons, and performed some other Horrid Rites, to call forth the Demons, and repel the approaching War. For he hoped, that by these performances, he should obtain Victory. Whilst he Tyrannized therefore in this manner at Rome, 'tis impossible to relate what mischievous facts he perpetrated, and [how miserably] he enslaved his Subjects: In so much that, they were reduced to such extreme penury and want of necessary sustenance, * as (Tis recorded by those of our times,) never happened at Rome, nor any where else.

† Or, Sacrificed.

* Or, As those of our age do record never to have happened at Rome, or any where else.

C H A P. XXXVII.

The overthrow of Maxentius's Armies in Italy.

BUT Constantine, moved with compassion at all these [calamities of the Romans,] furnished himself with all manner of Military provisions against the Tyranny. And when he had procured the supreme God to be his Patron, and invoked His [Son] Christ to be his Saviour and Assistant; and had set up the Victorious Trophy, to wit, the salutary Standard, before his Soldiers and Guards, he began his march with his whole Army, that by his intervention he might restore to the Romans the Liberties they had received from their Ancestors. Now Maxentius, confiding more in his Magick * Impostures, than in the Love and Affection of his Subjects, durst not so much as stir out of the City Gates; but with a multitude of Soldiers, and with innumerable Bodies of Men laid in Ambushes, had fortified every place, Region, and City, which were under the pressures of his Tyranny. But the Emperor [Constantine] depended upon Divine assistance, and having attacked the Tyrant's first, second, and third Body, and with ease routed them all at the very first charge, he opened himself a passage into the greatest part of the Country of Italy.

* Or, Drivens.

C H A P. XXXVIII.

Maxentius's Death on the Bridge of the River Tiber.

AND he had now made his approaches very near to Rome it self. But least he should be constrained to assault all the Romans for the Tyrant's sake only, God himself drew the Tyrant, (as it were with Cords) a great way out of the Gates: and effectually confirmed the truth of those Miracles (Recorded in the everlasting Monuments of the Sacred Scriptures, which though they are accounted fabulous by many Persons, and are not credited, are nevertheless believed by the Faithful,) he had wrote in times past against the wicked, to all in general. Believers as well as Infidels, who with their own eyes saw this Miracle were about to relate: For, as heretofore in the days of Moses and the old religious Nation of the Jews, God cast the Chariots of Pharaoh and his Army into the Sea, and drowned his Chosen Captains in the Red-Sea: after the same manner Maxentius with the Soldiers and Guards that were about him, were cast into the deep like a stone; at such time as, having been put to flight by that Divine power which gave assistance to Constantine's Arms, he would have past the River that was in the way before him. Over which he having laid a Bridge of Boats well fastened together, had thereby framed an Engine of destruction against himself, being in hopes that the [Emperour] beloved by God might have been caught in this snare: but the God whom he worshipped was present with, and gave him his assistance. But the wretched Maxentius, deprived of his aid, framed these secret machines against himself. On which account these words may be pertinently spoken of him; wherefore, * He bath graven and <sup>Psalm 7.</sup> 16, 17. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 3. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 4. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 5. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 6. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 7. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 8. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 9. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 10. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 11. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 12. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 13. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 14. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 15. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 16. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 17. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 18. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 19. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 20. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 21. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 22. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 23. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 24. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 25. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 26. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 27. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 28. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 29. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 30. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 31. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 32. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 33. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 34. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 35. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 36. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 37. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 38. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 39. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 40. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 41. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 42. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 43. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 44. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 45. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 46. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 47. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 48. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 49. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 50. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 51. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 52. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 53. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 54. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 55. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 56. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 57. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 58. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 59. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 60. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 61. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 62. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 63. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 64. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 65. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 66. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 67. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 68. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 69. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 70. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 71. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 72. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 73. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 74. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 75. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 76. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 77. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 78. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 79. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 80. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 81. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 82. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 83. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 84. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 85. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 86. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 87. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 88. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 89. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 90. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 91. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 92. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 93. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 94. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 95. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 96. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 97. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 98. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 99. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 100. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 101. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 102. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 103. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 104. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 105. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 106. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 107. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 108. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 109. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 110. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 111. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 112. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 113. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 114. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 115. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 116. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 117. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 118. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 119. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 120. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 121. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 122. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 123. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 124. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 125. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 126. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 127. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 128. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 129. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 130. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 131. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 132. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 133. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 134. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 135. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 136. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 137. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 138. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 139. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 140. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 141. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 142. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 143. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 144. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 145. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 146. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 147. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 148. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 149. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 150. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 151. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 152. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 153. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 154. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 155. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 156. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 157. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 158. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 159. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 160. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 161. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 162. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 163. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 164. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 165. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 166. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 167. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 168. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 169. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 170. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 171. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 172. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 173. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 174. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 175. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 176. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 177. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 178. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 179. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 180. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 181. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 182. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 183. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 184. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 185. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 186. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 187. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 188. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 189. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 190. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 191. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 192. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 193. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 194. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 195. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 196. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 197. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 198. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 199. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 200. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 201. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 202. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 203. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 204. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 205. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 206. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 207. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 208. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 209. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 210. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 211. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 212. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 213. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 214. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 215. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 216. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 217. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 218. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 219. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 220. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 221. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 222. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 223. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 224. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 225. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 226. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 227. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 228. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 229. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 230. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 231. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 232. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 233. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 234. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 235. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 236. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 237. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 238. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 239. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 240. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 241. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 242. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 243. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 244. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 245. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 246. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 247. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 248. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 249. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 250. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 251. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 252. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 253. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 254. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 255. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 256. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 257. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 258. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 259. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 260. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 261. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 262. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 263. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 264. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 265. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 266. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 267. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 268. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 269. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 270. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 271. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 272. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 273. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 274. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 275. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 276. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 277. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 278. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 279. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 280. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 281. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 282. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 283. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 284. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 285. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 286. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 287. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 288. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 289. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 290. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 291. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 292. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 293. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 294. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 295. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 296. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 297. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 298. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 299. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 300. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 301. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 302. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 303. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 304. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 305. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 306. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 307. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 308. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 309. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 310. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 311. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 312. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 313. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 314. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 315. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 316. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 317. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 318. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 319. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 320. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 321. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 322. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 323. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 324. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 325. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 326. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 327. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 328. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 329. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 330. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 331. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 332. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 333. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 334. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 335. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 336. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 337. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 338. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 339. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 340. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 341. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 342. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 343. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 344. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 345. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 346. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 347. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 348. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 349. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 350. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 351. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 352. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 353. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 354. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 355. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 356. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 357. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 358. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 359. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 360. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 361. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 362. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 363. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 364. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 365. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 366. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 367. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 368. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 369. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 370. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 371. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 372. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 373. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 374. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 375. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 376. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 377. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 378. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 379. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 380. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 381. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 382. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 383. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 384. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 385. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 386. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 387. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 388. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 389. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 390. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 391. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 392. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 393. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 394. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 395. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 396. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 397. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 398. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 399. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 400. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 401. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 402. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 403. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 404. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 405. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 406. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 407. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 408. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 409. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 410. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 411. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 412. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 413. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 414. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 415. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 416. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 417. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 418. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 419. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 420. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 421. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 422. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 423. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 424. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 425. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 426. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 427. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 428. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 429. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 430. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 431. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 432. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 433. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 434. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 435. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 436. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 437. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 438. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 439. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 440. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 441. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 442. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 443. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 444. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 445. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 446. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 447. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 448. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 449. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 450. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 451. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 452. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 453. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 454. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 455. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 456. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 457. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 458. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 459. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 460. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 461. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 462. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 463. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 464. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 465. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 466. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 467. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 468. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 469. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 470. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 471. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 472. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 473. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 474. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 475. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 476. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 477. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 478. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 479. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 480. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 481. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 482. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 483. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 484. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 485. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 486. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 487. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 488. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 489. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 490. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 491. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 492. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 493. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 494. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 495. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 496. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 497. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 498. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 499. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 500. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 501. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 502. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 503. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 504. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 505. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 506. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 507. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 508. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 509. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 510. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 511. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 512. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 513. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 514. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 515. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 516. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 517. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 518. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 519. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 520. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 521. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 522. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 523. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 524. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 525. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 526. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 527. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 528. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 529. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 530. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 531. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 532. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 533. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 534. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 535. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 536. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 537. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 538. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 539. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 540. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 541. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 542. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 543. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 544. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 545. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 546. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 547. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 548. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 549. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 550. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 551. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 552. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 553. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 554. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 555. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 556. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 557. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 558. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 559. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 560. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 561. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 562. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 563. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 564. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 565. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 566. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 567. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 568. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 569. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 570. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 571. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 572. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 573. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 574. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 575. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 576. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 577. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 578. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 579. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 580. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 581. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 582. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 583. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 584. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 585. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 586. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 587. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 588. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 589. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 590. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 591. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 592. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 593. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 594. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 595. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 596. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 597. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 598. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 599. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 600. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 601. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 602. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 603. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 604. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 605. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 606. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 607. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 608. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 609. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 610. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 611. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 612. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 613. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 614. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 615. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 616. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 617. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 618. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 619. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 620. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 621. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 622. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 623. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 624. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 625. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 626. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 627. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 628. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 629. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 630. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 631. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 632. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 633. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 634. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 635. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 636. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 637. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 638. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 639. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 640. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 641. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 642. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 643. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 644. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 645. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 646. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 647. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 648. <sup>Psalm 124.</sup> 649.

CHAPTER XXIX

Constantine's Entry into Rome.

After Constantine, who at that time imitated that Great servant of God Moses, had in reality sung these and other such like Hymns as these, in praise of God the Governour of all things, and the Authour of Victory, he made his entry into the Imperial City in Triumph. And immediately all Persons, as well those of the Senatorian as them of the Equeſtrian Order in that City, being freed from the confinement of a Prison as 'twere, together with the whole Roman Populace, received him with a joy in their * Countenances that proceeded from their very Souls, with acclamations and a gladness insatiable. And the Men, together with the Women, Children, and infinite numbers of Servants, stiled him a Redeemer, a Saviour, and a Benefactor, with Voices that could not be silenced. But he, posselt of a Piety towards God naturally implanted in him, was neither swelled with pride at these Shouts, nor elevated at these commendations. But being sensible of that assistance which God had given him, he forthwith rendered a Thanksgiving to the Authour of his Victory.

CHAP. XL.

Concerning the Statue of Constantine which held a Cross; and concerning its Inscription.

AND with a Loud Voice and by Inſcriptions
He made known to all Men the Salutary Standard by erecting this Great Trophy a-gainſt his Enemies in the miſt of the Imperial City, and plainly Engraving this Salutary Standard, which is the preſervative of the Roman Government and of the Empire of the whole World, with indelible Characters. He iſſued out therefore an immediate order, that an high Spear made in the form of a Croſs, ſhould be placed under the hand of his own likenefs expreſt in a Statue ſet up in the moſt publick and frequented place of the City Rome, and that this very inſcription in the Latine Tongue ſhould be cut upon it: [thus Engliſhed;]

ment is to be preferred. Further, at these words I began a new chapter, following the Authority of the King's and Fuketan Manuscripts; to which agree the old Sheets. Vale!

<sup>b</sup> Διαρρίψας ὅ. The reading is truer in the Panegyric, διαρρίψας τὴν, and by plainly Engraving, &c. A little after this, the Foketian and Savilian Manuscripts add a word in this manner, συλακτεῖται ἀπὸ τῆς Force, which he hath demonstrated to be the preterative, &c. Vol. 2.

BY THIS SALUTARY SIGN
 || Or, True WHICH IS THE || COGNIZANCE
 OF TRUE VALOUR, I HAVE DELIVERED AND FREED YOUR CITY FROM THE SLAVISH YOAK OF THE TYRANT. AND HAVE SET AT LIBERTY THE SENATE AND PEOPLE OF ROME AND RESTORED THEM TO THEIR ANCIENT SPLENDOUR AND DIGNITY.

CHAP. XLII.

The rejoycings over the Provinces, and Constantine's Acts of Grace.

THE Pious Emperour having in this manner adorned himself with the Confession of the Victorious Croſs, with all imaginable freedom of Speech made known the Son of God to the Romans. And all Persons inhabiting the City, as well the Senate as the People, in regard they had been eased of a bitter and Tyrannick Government, seemed in their own judgments to enjoy purer Rays of light, and to * enter upon * Or, Par. a certain new life as 'twere. All those Nations also which are bounded with the Western Ocean, freed from those mischiefs wherewith they had been before oppressed, celebrated Festivals with the greatest cheerfulness, and continued to applaud [Constantine, and give him the Titles of] Virtour, Pious, and The Common Benefactor. And with one voice and one mouth, all Persons acknowledged he was a Common Good: * bestowed on Men by God's favour * Or, and benignity. Moreover, the Emperour's Shown to Letters were fix'd up in all places, which al- * Or, Edict lowed an enjoyment of their own Estates: to was. those who had had their Goods taken from them, and recalled to their own Houses such as had undergone an unjust Exile. And those Persons were freed from Bonds, all manner of danger, and fear, who by a Tyrannick Cruelty had lain under these sufferings.

CHAP. XLII.

The Honours conferred on the Bishops, and the Building of the Churches.

Moreover, the Emperour personally invited God's Ministers to himself, and vouchsafed them the highest <sup>a</sup> Veneration and Honour; to whom he gave a kind and courteous Reception; as well by deeds as words, in regard they were Persons consecrated to his God. There were admitted therefore to his own Table, Men who as to their outward <sup>b</sup> Garb indeed and Dreß seemed despicable; <sup>c</sup> but they were not accounted such by him: For he was not for viewing the outside of a Man, which is visible to the eyes, <sup>d</sup> but was pleased to look upon God himself.

<sup>a</sup> Respect
<sup>b</sup> outward
<sup>c</sup> dress
<sup>d</sup> I think it must be made, respecting to his generation and honour.
Turnebis in the margin of his Copy had mended it, ἡσυχίας καὶ ταπεινότητος, &c. and so 'tis written in the Fukien Manuscripts. In the King's Sheets the adverb eis is blotted out, and in its place ἐναντι ἐκείνου is written above. Vale!

ἡ Τῆς οὐραίας Θεογονίας ἐκείνης. At this place οὐραία signifies not the condemnation and form, as Christophorjon thought, but the Garb and Drefs. Wherefore I have exprest both in my Rendition; which I afterwards found had been done by Portefius also. The Garb and Dreß of Prelates was at that time very mean, as Amm. Marcellinus tells us in his 27th Book, where he speaks concerning Damasus and Ursinus. Gregory Nazianzen also, in the Funeral Oration he wrote concerning the praises of Basiliius, says that he, whilst he was Bishop of Caesarea, was clad in a mean Cloak, which he terms παῖον. Vatell.

* Τὸν Στάδ δὲ ἀντιθέλει βέλκεν. In the King's Sheers this place is supplied in the Margin, in this manner, τὸν δὲ ἐν ἑαυτῷ μακάριον ἀντιθέλει βέλκεν Στάδ, but was pleased to behold God honoured in each person. But the reading is shorter in the Rukian and Savil. Manuscripts thus, τὸν δὲ Στάδ ἀντιθέλει βέλκεν αὐτόν, but was pleased, or, thought good to look upon God himself. Valef.

And these Persons he carried a long with him, which way so ever he made a journey; being fully perswaded, that that God whom they worshipped, would for this very reason be propitious to him. Moreover, he gave very * large and plentiful † Benefactions to the Churches of God out of his own Treasury; partly enlarging the Oratories, and raising them to an height; and partly adorning the august † Sacraments of the Churches with many consecrated Gifts.

Or, Chapels, or, Vestries of the Church.

C H A P. XLIII.

Concerning Constantine's Beneficence towards the Poor.

HE likewise made various distributions of Money to the indigent. Besides, he shewed himself humane and beneficent even to Extraneous Persons who made their addresses to him. And to those Wretches and Subjects, who begd in the Forum, he [gave] not only Money, and necessary food; but provided them decent garments also to cover their Bodies. But, on those, who had heretofore

* Or, Life. lived well, and by a change of * Fortune had afterwards fallen into great Calamities, he bestowed larger and more plentiful allowances. And with a mind truly Royal, conferred on such Persons as these, magnificent Benefactions; to some of whom he gave possessions of Lands; and honoured others of them with various dignities. He took a care, nothing inferior to that of a Father, of those fallen into the calamities of † Orphanry: and relieved the destitute and forlorn condition of Widows; by cherishing them with his own patronage and protection. Moreover, he match'd young Virgins made Orphans by the loss of their Parents, to rich Men and such as were known to himself. And this he did, when he had before-hand bestowed on the Virgins * marrying, whatever it was fitting they should bring to such Persons as took them to Wife. [In fine,] * as the Sun, when it rises upon the earth, does liberally impart the Rays of its Light to all Men: in the very same manner Constantine, going out of his Imperial Palace early in the Morning, † and rising as 'twere together with that celestial Luminary, imparted the Rays of Light of his own * Beneficence to all those who approach'd his presence. Nor did ever any Person come near to him, who gained not something of good: neither were they ever frustrated of their good hope, who had expected to receive assistance from him.

* That is, Christophoros renders it ill, married; for, not those that are married, but them who are marrying bring a Portion to their Husbands. The same Christophoros has committed the like mistake, in turning the word τὸν νεκρὸν dead, as we have noted at Euseb. Eccl. Hist. Book 10. Chap. 8. Note (c.) Valef.

† Ὁμοῦ ἐκ τοῦ αὐτοῦ τῆς γὰρ ἀγαθῆς χάριτος; which words Valesius renders thus, ex eum celestis solis fulgore quodammodo exoritur, and rising in a manner with a celestial beam of the Sun.

‡ In the King's Ἀναγίστη, at the side of these words, this mark is set, εἰ, which mark seems to me to denote, ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀλλοῦ seu τῆς, an elegant expression, or, place. Valef.

* καλοῦμαι. Euseb. Hist. uses this term to signify benignity or beneficence. So he has also used this word in the tenth book of his Hist. Valef.

C H A P. XLIV.

How he was present at the Synods of Bishops.

SUCH was his behaviour towards all Persons in general. But his care of the Church of God was signal and eminent: [For] when some Persons in several Provinces differed one with another; like some Common Bishop constituted by God, he convened Synods of God's Ministers: Nor disdain'd he to be present and sit with them in the midst of their Congress; but made himself an Associate in reference to the matters inquired into, and ministr'd to all Persons those things which have relation to the peace of God. Further, he sat in the midst of them, as one amongst many; and would send off his Protektors, his Armed Men, and all the Guards of his Body; but he was covered with the fear of God, and surrounded with the dearest affection of his * Faithful friends. And when he perceived any Persons inclinable to acquiesce in an opinion that was sounder and better, and disposed to a quiet and agreeing temper of Mind; he approved highly of such Men, and shewed himself extraordinarily pleased at the unanimous consent of all. But he had an aversion for those that were opinionative and not to be perswaded.

towards the Emperor, as the Translators thought: but he styles the Christianus for For Constantine, in regard he was a most Religious Emperor, when ever he was present at the Councils of Bishops, went to send off all his Guards, and took with him only those of his Courtiers, who had been instructed in the mysteries of the Christian Faith. Valef.

C H A P. XLV.

In what manner he bore with the * Mad-men. * That is, The Donatists.

MOREOVER, he patiently bore with some Persons who were exasperated * against him; commanding such Men in expressions that were sedate and mild, to behave themselves with prudence and modesty, and not to raise Seditions. Some of these People, revering his admonitions, desisted [from being obstinate and perverse.] But he let alone others of them, who were incurable in reference to their being brought to a soundness of mind, and committed against them to God; having at no time designed any thing of severity against any one of them. Hence reading it it happened, (as 'tis probable,) that * those who had raised a Sedition in the Region of the Africans, proceeded to such an height of wickedness, that they attempted some audacious facts; * the Devil (as 'tis likely,) envying that plenty of the present blessings, and inciting I found those Men to absurd practices, that he might widen the mind of the Emperor against them. (so in Morru's Comment.)

¶ In the old Sheets likewise 'tis mended in the same hand. Valef.

¶ He means the Donatists, of whose boldness and insolence many passages occur in Opeanus and Augustinus. Concerning the beginning and progress of which Schism throughout Africa, we have made many remarks not taken notice of by others, and have designedly placed them at the close of these notes. Valef. See Valesius's notes on Eusebius pag. 289, &c.

¶ In the King's Sheets, this place is thus supplied in the Margin, τὸν ἰσχυρὸν καὶ τὸν δολοφονῆσαν; some wicked devil (as 'tis likely) which is more elegant. Valef.

But he reapt no advantage by his envy; In regard the Emperor accounted what was done to be <sup>a</sup> ridiculous, and affirmed that he acknowledged it the incitation of the Devil. For [the said] that those were not the actions of [such] Persons, but of such as were either altogether Mad-Men, or stimulated, by the wickedest of Devils: which sort of People ought to be pitied, rather than punished. [For it would not be done by such an height of justice to be incited] <sup>a</sup> against the fury of Mad-Men, as 'tis a transcendency of Humanity to compassionate their conduct.

<sup>a</sup> Eusebius makes use of too soft a term. For those things which were then done by such an height of justice to be incited <sup>a</sup> against the fury of Mad-Men, as 'tis a transcendency of Humanity to compassionate their conduct. <sup>a</sup> Eusebius makes use of too soft a term. For those things which were then done by such an height of justice to be incited <sup>a</sup> against the fury of Mad-Men, as 'tis a transcendency of Humanity to compassionate their conduct.

<sup>a</sup> Eusebius makes use of too soft a term. For those things which were then done by such an height of justice to be incited <sup>a</sup> against the fury of Mad-Men, as 'tis a transcendency of Humanity to compassionate their conduct. <sup>a</sup> Eusebius makes use of too soft a term. For those things which were then done by such an height of justice to be incited <sup>a</sup> against the fury of Mad-Men, as 'tis a transcendency of Humanity to compassionate their conduct.

C H A P. XLVI.

His Victories over the Barbarians.

<sup>a</sup> Eusebius makes use of too soft a term. For those things which were then done by such an height of justice to be incited <sup>a</sup> against the fury of Mad-Men, as 'tis a transcendency of Humanity to compassionate their conduct. <sup>a</sup> Eusebius makes use of too soft a term. For those things which were then done by such an height of justice to be incited <sup>a</sup> against the fury of Mad-Men, as 'tis a transcendency of Humanity to compassionate their conduct.

<sup>a</sup> Eusebius makes use of too soft a term. For those things which were then done by such an height of justice to be incited <sup>a</sup> against the fury of Mad-Men, as 'tis a transcendency of Humanity to compassionate their conduct. <sup>a</sup> Eusebius makes use of too soft a term. For those things which were then done by such an height of justice to be incited <sup>a</sup> against the fury of Mad-Men, as 'tis a transcendency of Humanity to compassionate their conduct.

C H A P. XLVII.

The Death of Maximin and others, whose Plots Constantine discovered, God making them known to him.

<sup>a</sup> Eusebius makes use of too soft a term. For those things which were then done by such an height of justice to be incited <sup>a</sup> against the fury of Mad-Men, as 'tis a transcendency of Humanity to compassionate their conduct. <sup>a</sup> Eusebius makes use of too soft a term. For those things which were then done by such an height of justice to be incited <sup>a</sup> against the fury of Mad-Men, as 'tis a transcendency of Humanity to compassionate their conduct.

Constantine; and, being discovered, ended his culpa. For life by a most ignominious death. And <sup>a</sup> this he had obtained the first Person, whose Pictures, Statues, and what ever other Monuments are usually erected in honour of the Emperours, were defaced and thrown down in all parts of the World, in regard he was an impious and wicked bad friend wretch. After this Man, other Persons also related to him, who were contriving secret Plots against Constantine, were detected: God being himself in a most miraculous manner being the discoverer of all their designs to his Servant, ended his life with his own presence, the Divine Likeness appearing to him in a most wonderful manner, and suggesting to him all manner of foreknowledge words, in relation to future affairs. Indeed, the Miracles [shown him] by Divine Grace, are inexplicable; nor is it possible for a Narrative to comprehend, what great blessings God himself vouchsafed to afford his Servant. With which he was surrounded, and spent the residue of his life in Repose and Safety; highly pleased at the benevolence and good affection of his Subjects, rejoicing because he saw all those under his Government leading peaceable Maximian and cheerful lives; but above all, extraordinarily delighted with the splendour and flourishing condition of God's Churches.

<sup>a</sup> Eusebius makes use of too soft a term. For those things which were then done by such an height of justice to be incited <sup>a</sup> against the fury of Mad-Men, as 'tis a transcendency of Humanity to compassionate their conduct. <sup>a</sup> Eusebius makes use of too soft a term. For those things which were then done by such an height of justice to be incited <sup>a</sup> against the fury of Mad-Men, as 'tis a transcendency of Humanity to compassionate their conduct.

C H A P. XLVIII.

The Celebration of Constantine's Decennalia.

<sup>a</sup> Eusebius makes use of too soft a term. For those things which were then done by such an height of justice to be incited <sup>a</sup> against the fury of Mad-Men, as 'tis a transcendency of Humanity to compassionate their conduct. <sup>a</sup> Eusebius makes use of too soft a term. For those things which were then done by such an height of justice to be incited <sup>a</sup> against the fury of Mad-Men, as 'tis a transcendency of Humanity to compassionate their conduct.

CHAP. XLIX.

In what manner Licinius afflicted the East.

* At these words a chapter is begun in the Fukerian Manuscript, and in the old Sheets. Valef.

FOR, a certain Savage Beast, he was told, had better both the Church of God there, and the rest of the Provincials also; the most impure Devil, enraged with emulation as 'twere, striving to do the quite contrary to those things performed by the pious Emperour. In so much that, the Roman Empire, divided into two parts, seemed to all men to be like the night and the day. For, a darkness involved the Inhabitants of the East: but a most bright day enlightened those who dwelt in the * Western parts. Whose enjoyment of those innumerable Blessings procured them by God, was an intolerable spectacle to the Envy of the Devil that hater of good: nor did the Tyrant, who oppressed the other part of the world, think that fit to be born with. Who seeing the affairs of his Empire succeeding prosperously, and being vouchsafed an affinity by marriage to so great an Emperour as Constantine was, relinquished the imitation of that pious Prince, and strove to embrace the instructions and wicked Morals of the Impious. And he made it his business, rather to follow their advices, whose calamitous end he had been an eye-witness of, than to continue in a friendship and amity with him that was his Better.

* This place must be made up from chapter 8 book 10. of his Eccl'es. History; whence also the following chapter is to be mended. Valef.

CHAP. L.

In what manner Licinius attempted to frame Treacheries against Constantine.

* Or, Traitor.

HE raises therefore an * irreconcilable War against his Benefactor; without calling to mind the Laws of friendship; not considering his Oaths, his affinity, or the Leagues [that were between them.] For, the most Benigne [Constantine,] that he might give him the forest evidence of his sincere Benevolence and affection, made him partaker of his own paternal Lineage, and of that Imperial blood he drew from his Ancestours, by matching his Sister to him; and permitted him to enjoy the Collegue-ship of the whole Roman Empire. But Licinius's thoughts were contrary hereto, being taken up in contriving Machinations and ill-designs against his Better; inventing various sorts of * Treacheries successively, that with mischiefs he might reward his Benefactor. And at the beginning he pretended friendship, and performed all things with deceit and fraud; hoping that his audacious designs might be kept concealed. But God discovered those Treacheries of his, hatch'd in darkness, to his Servant [Constantine,] Whereupon Licinius, because detected in his first attempts, betook himself to second frauds; sometimes pretending friendship; at others, procuring himself belief [by the Religion] of Oaths and Leagues: then on a sudden he would violate what he had agreed to; and again, would crave pardon by an Embassy; after which he would render himself infamous by Lyes. But at length he proclaimed open War; and, infligated by a desperate madness of mind, took a resolution in future to bear Arms against God himself, of whom he well knew the Emperour [Constantine] was a Worshipper.

* Or, Menaces.

CHAP. LI.

Licinius's Treacheries against the Bishops, and his prohibitions of Synods.

AND in the first place, with great closeness and subtlety he made strict inquiry into those Ministers of God that lived under his Dominions, who had never committed any Crime against his Government; by hunting out Various Calumnies against them. And when he could not furnish himself with any the least offence of theirs, nor had [any pretext] wherewith he might blame these men; he issued forth a Law, whereby he commanded, that the Bishops should in no wise * confer one with another in any place whatever, nor should it be Lawful for any one of them to go into the Church of his neighbour; nor to convene Synods, nor Councils; or to consult about matters that were useful and advantageous. Now, this gave him an occasion of vexing and disquieting us. For, if those of our Religion transgress that Law of his, they were obliged to undergo punishment; but, if they paid an obedience to this his Order, of necessity they must enervate the Laws of the Church. For, 'tis impossible that the more momentous † Controversies should by any other means be composed and rectified, than by Synods. And of confidence thus this [Tyrant] highly odious to God, because he studied in all things to contradict the pious Emperour, issued out such Orders as these [in reference to us Christians,] For Constantine called together God's Priests, in a honour to those consecrated persons, and for the promoting of mutual Peace and Concord. But Licinius, attempting to abrogate whatever was well constituted, endeavoured to disturb the harmonious agreement [of the Churches.]

¶ Disspate, or, tear in sunder.

And this reading I found in Morav's Copy also. But I had rather write, αρε τῶ ὁῦ ἱερουργῶν τῶν, in honour to those consecrated persons. For Eusebius gives reasons, why the Emperour Constantine would ever and anon convene Synods of Bishops. The first reason, says he, was, that he might give honour to Gods Priests when assembled together. Secondly, that he might establish Peace and Concord amongst them. 'Tis certain, Eusebius does usually term The Priests ἱερουργῶν, as it frequently occurs in these books. But if, with Turnebus, we would rather read αρε τῶν ἱερουργῶν, then it must be made τῶν τῶν, that the discourse may agree with what follows; and ἱερουργῶν must be taken for Religion in self; which is more uncouth. For I had rather express it thus, τῶν τῶν ἱερουργῶν, in honour to the sacred Law. Valef.

CHAP. LII.

The Banishments and Proscriptions of the Christians.

AND because Constantine, who was God's friend, vouchsafed the servants of God admission into his Imperial Palaces; the Enemy of God Licinius, whose Sentiments were quite contrary hereto, * drove all God's Worshipers, who lived under his Dominions, from his Imperial Palaces; and sent into Banishment those persons in his Court that were faithfullest and best-affected to him. And such persons as for their former brave actions had received from him honour and dignities, them he ordered to serve others, and to perform servile Offices. And when he had seized upon the Goods of every one of them, as if they had been some unhop'd-for Gain; at last he threatened [to punish] those with death, who refused to themselves the salutary name [of Christians.] * Further, whereas he himself posset a mind that was incontinent and lustful, and committed infinite Adulteries, and the most infamous Acts of obscenity; c it was his Sentiment that no man could be chaste and continent; * and thus, from his own distemper he past an ill judgement upon the Nature of mankind in general.

* Or, He Himself making use of himself as the Brand and Reproach of Nature.

the eighth year of Constantine's Empire. For there were two Civil Wars between Constantine and Licinius. The first War, wherein Licinius was vanquished at Cibalir in Pannonia, hapned on the year of Christ 314. The reasons of which War are Recorded by no other Writer, that I know of, but the Author of the Excepcæ de Gefis Constantini; see pag. 473. But the latter War was that, wherein Licinius was routed near Hadrinople, and at length compelled to a furender of himself on the year of Christ 324. Eusebius has made no mention of the former War; for this reason perhaps, because Licinius as yet had not raised Persecution against the Christians. For Licinius undertook to persecute the Christians long after that first War, to wit on the fourteenth year of Constantine's Empire, as 'tis Recorded in Scribler's and Mitrov's Edition of Eusebius's Constitution, that is on the year of Christ 338. The same year occurs in Georgius's Chronica. But Baronius relates, that Licinius raised Persecution against the Christians on the year of Christ 316. But in Baronius's Annals, the History of both the Wars against Licinius is very much confused, and must be amended, partly from Idatius's Epist. and partly from the Gesta Constantini heretofore published by me. 'Tis certain, Sozomen (book 1. chap. 7.) attests in express words, that Licinius undertook to persecute the Christians after the Cibalensis War. Valef.

From these words a new Chapter ought to have been begun. For these words belong to Licinius's second Law. Further, the expression ἐκκλησίαν, which occurs in the Contents of Chap. 53, seems to be faulty, and put instead of ἐκκλησίαν, in the Church. And yet its place, that both in the King's Manuscript, and in the old Sheets, the reading is constantly, ἐκκλησίαν συναξίδος. Although in the old Sheets it is mended in the same hand, ἐκκλησίαν καὶ συναξίδος. But in the Fulgentian Manuscript it is excellently written thus, ἐκκλησίαν ἀνδρῶν καὶ καὶ συναξίδος, Would not meet in the Churches together with the men. Vale!

Or, He despaired of finding the Ornament of Chastity amongst men. Falsus thinks it should be written and pointed thus, ὁ τῶ ἀνδρῶν ἀπὸ τοῦ κόσμου; He despaired of the nature of men, making use of an ill argument.

CHAP. LIII.

[Licinius's] Edict, that Women should not meet in the Churches together with the Men.

Wherefore, he made a second Law, wherein he gave Command, that the men should not be present at prayers [in the Church] of God together with the women: nor should womankind frequent the Venerable Schools of Virtue: Lastly, that the Bishops should not deliver the Divine Precepts of Religion to women; but, that women should be made choice of, to be the Teachers of women. But whereas these things seemed Ridiculous to all persons, he invented another device for the subversion of the Churches. For, he ordered that the solemn Assemblies of the people should be held without the Gates, in the open fields; affirming, that the fresh air without the Gates was far more commodious for crowds, than the Oratories situate within the City.

CHAP. LIV.

That he Cashiered from the Militia those who refused to Sacrifice; and forbid, that such as were shut up in Prisons should have any nourishment given them.

BUT when he perceived they would not obey him even in this, in future [he went to work] bare-fac'd [as we say,] and gave order, that the Civil Milice should be removed from their attendance upon the Præsidial Office, unless they were willing to sacrifice to Demons. * See note (b) The Offices therefore of Magistrates throughout every Province, were emptied of pious and religious persons. And he himself, who made this Law, was deprived of the prayers of holy men, which he had bereaved himself of. What need we, besides these things, make mention, in what manner he gave order, that no person should show compassion to those afflicted in Prisons, by ministering food to them; nor, that any one should take commiseration of such as perished with Famine in their Bonds: (that is, that not so much as one good man should exist;) nor, that those who by nature it self are drawn to a compassion of their neighbours, should do any thing of good? Indeed, this was clearly the most impudent and unjust of Laws, and far out-did the utmost ferity of Nature. To which Law there was a penalty also annext, that they who shewed compassion should suffer the same Inflictions with those to whom they shewed it; and that such as performed Offices of Humanity, should be liable to punishment.

Esse is placed a Commua. Τάξεις or τάξις are Offices of Magistrats. For each Magistrat had his Office or Attendants. This Office was a certain Body of Officials or Soldiers, who attended on the Judge, it may be seen in the Notitia of the Roman Empire. These Offices the Greeks termed τάξεις, as I have long since remarked at the 26th book of Amm. Marcellinus, pag. 318 of my notes. The Old Glosses therefore are right, in explaining τάξεις apparii & officium, apparii. So Joann. Crisostome in his first Homily on the Epistle to the Corinthians; οἱ δὲ τὸν τὰ τάξεις, ὅτι αὐτοὶ ὀφείλουσι τὰν ποταμὸν ἑστῆναι, &c. Don't you see children, how when at play they make a company of Apparours or Attendants, and Officials, &c. Valis.

c. Τὸν ἐκτὸς παραφρασεύει. Johannes Morinus, a Learned person who has rendered these Books into French, thought that by ἐξ ἐκτός here, the Gentiles or Heathens were meant; as if Eusebius had said,
What need we make mention of the Heathens. See chap. 43. note (b).
 But Christopherson renders ἐκ ἐκτός præterea, besides; as if it
 'twere the same with τὸν ἐκτὸς, in which manner Eusebius expresses himself at chap. 43. Vales. Valesius renders it in the same manner with Christopherson.

CHAP. LV.

Concerning Licinius's Improbity and Avarice.

Such were Licinius's Constitutions. But, what need we reckon up his Innovations concerning Marriages? Or his new Laws in relation

Or, Remains
ing.

† The punishment allotted
him was
as we are told, to starve in the midst
of plenty.

† The punishment
allotted
him was
as we are told, to starve in
the midst
of plenty.

to chap. 8. in this manner; τὸ πᾶσι τοῖς διωκομένοις ἀποφυγεῖν, declining from the way of sober reason. In the Fulk. Turneb. and Savil.
Copies, the reading is τὸ πᾶσι τοῖς ἀποφυγεῖν. Valef.

† He means Galerius Maximianus, who was the first Author and Ringleader of the Christians Persecution, as Eusebius relates in book 8.
of his Ecclesiastical History. Cedrenus writes, that on the eighteenth year of Dioclesian, Maximianus had raised a Persecution against the Christians.
by the persecution of one Theoctetus an Impostour. Who having forged Acts of Pilate thrust with impiety against Christ, Galerius made an establishment by an Edict, that Masters should give them to their Scholars to be learned by heart. But any one may perceive, that Ce-drenus is out here, who attributes that to Galerius Maximianus, which was performed long after by Maximianus. This is an usual mistake amongst the Greeks, to confound Maximianus with Maximinus. Valef.

CHAP. LVII.

That Maximianus having been afflicted with a Fistulous Ulcer that bred worms, wrote [a Law] in favour of the Christians.

For; whereas he had begun a Siege of the Churches, and was the first that had desil'd his own soul with the blood of just and religious persons; a punishment sent from God seized him: which, having made its beginning in his very flesh, proceeded even to his soul. For on a sudden an impostume arose upon him about the middle of the privy parts of his Body; after that a Fistula in ano; and both these diseases spread incurably, and did eat into his inmost bowels.
From them bred an unspeakable multitude of worms, and a most noysom stench proceeded. Or, therefrom. For, the whole mass of flesh upon his body, by reason of that abundance of food
he devoured, was grown to an immense fatness:
which being then petrified, became (as said) an intolerable and most horrid spectacle to those that approach'd him. Whilst therefore he was struggling under these many and great afflictions, at length, though late, he began to be sensible of the Villanies he had audaciously committed against the Church. After which, having made his confession to God, he stops the Persecution against the Christians; and by Laws and Imperial Edicts orders that their Churches should with all expedition be built: and commanded that the Christians themselves should perform their usual Solemnities, and make Supplications [to God] for him.

CHAP. LVI.

That at length he undertook the raising a Persecution [against the Christians.]

IN fine, he proceeded to that height of madness, that he armed himself against the Churches; and sets upon the Bishops, whom he accounted to be his chiefest Adversaries;
and look'd upon them as Enemies, who were friends to the Pious and Great Emperour. On which account he sharpened his fury most especially against them, having forsaken the way of sober and right reason. Nor did he take into consideration the memory of them, who had Persecuted the Christians before him, nor of those, whose Destroyer and Punisher he himself had been appointed, because of the height of those impieties at which they had arrived. Neither [did he reflect upon] what he had been an eyewitness of; then, when with his own eyes he beheld the chief Author of [our] mischiefs, whosoever he was, smitten with a scourge sent from Heaven.

CHAP. LVIII.

That Maximinus being a Persecutor of the Christians, fled away in a servile habit and hid himself.

Such was the punishment, which the Beginner of the Persecution underwent. But this [Licinius,] concerning whom we now speak, who had been an eye-witness of these things,
and by experience had had an accurate knowledge thereof; nevertheless, on a sudden forgot all; neither did he call to mind the punishment inflicted on the Former, nor the revenging judgment [divine justice executed] on the Latter. Who, because he strove with the greatest earnestness imaginable, to out-do the Former in a Combat of mischiefs as 'twere, gloried in his invention of new punishments against us. For he was not satisfied with Fire, Sword, and the fastnings with Nails; nor with the wild-beast and depth of the Sea. But besides all these, he himself contrived a certain new sort of punishment, and by a Law gave order, that those members, whereby we perceive the light, should be destroyed. Immediately therefore, vast numbers, not only of men, but of children and women also, having had the Sights of their right eyes, and the junctures of their feet rendered useless, partly by Iron, and partly by † Cauteries, were thrust into the Mines, there to be afflicted with daily Labour. On which account, the just judgment

* Οὗτοι τῶν ἐν τῷ δ' ἑστίῃ πυρρῇ δ' αὖν. The Proposition must be expunged. Further, this person termed the Latter is Maximinus Tyrant of the East. Valef.

* Περὶ
αὐτῶν.

ment of God not long after seized this person also; at such time as, putting his trust in Demons, whom he thought to be Gods, and confiding in innumerable Myriads of Armed men, he began an Engagement. For, being at that time deprived of the divine † assistance, he devoted himself of the Imperial Habit, which in no wise became him; and having in a cowardly and most unmanly manner shrowded himself in the common crowd, * purchased his own safety by flight: after this, he absconded in the Fields and Country Villages [cloathed] in a servile habit, and supposed he might have kept himself concealed. But he could not thus avoid

† Or, Hope.

* Or, Invented,

† Or, Of universal providence.

the great Eye † of Providence which inspects all things. For when he hoped his life was now in safety, being struck with God's fiery dart, he fell prostrate on the ground; and his whole body was in such a manner consumed by a blow given him from Heaven, that the entire

* Or, Figure.

* shew of its Pristine beauty vanished; and only his parch'd bones, turned into a perfect Skeleton, like some Ghost, were left remaining to him.

CHAP. LIX.

That Maximine, blinded by [the acuteness of] his Disease, * issued out a Law in favour of the Christians. * Or, Wrote.

Further, when this Disease, wherewith God had afflicted him, was arrived at a greater degree of acuteness and vehemency, * his eyes leap'd out; and falling from their proper place, left him blind: thus, by a most just sentence he underwent the same punishments, which he had been the first Inventor of against God's Martyrs. Breathing nevertheless still after these so calamitous miseries, at length, though late, he also made an open confession to the God of the Christians, and declared his own oppositions of the Deity. He likewise composed a Retraction, in such manner as the former person had done, and by Laws and Edicts in writing confess his own error in reference to those whom he thought to be Gods; attesting, that by experience it self he had found, the Christians God to be the only true God. Notwithstanding Licinius knew all this, not by the information he received from others, but from the very facts themselves, yet wrapping up his mind within some thick darkness as 'twere, he † resolved upon a performance of the very same things they had done.

* See Euseb. Eccles. Hist. book 9. chap. 10. note (a.)

† Or, Advised to, or, elided with those very Actions, or, persons.

THE SECOND BOOK
OF
EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS
CONCERNING
THE LIFE
OF THE
BLESSED EMPEROR CONSTANTINE.

CHAP. I.

Licinius's Clandestine Persecution, and his Murder of the Bishops at Amasia [a City] of Pontus.

IN this manner the fore mentioned [Licinius] plunged himself into the Pit of the * impious. And, imitating their example to his own destruction, whose ruins by reason of their Impiety he had beheld with his own Eyes, he re-kindled the Persecution against the Christians, like some raging fire long since extinguished; and blew up the flame of Impiety to a greater fierceness than his predecessors had done. Moreover, (like some outrageous Wild-beast, or crooked Serpent rolled together about himself,) breathing forth Rage and Hostile Menaces against God, he durst not as yet commence an open War against the Churches of God within his own Dominions, because of his Fear of Constantine: but concealing the venom of his Malice, he contrived secret Plots, and those in some particular Places only, against the Bishops; and † by Calumnies framed by his Governours of Provinces, destroyed the eminentest and most approved amongst them. And the manner of murdering them was new, such as never was known before. * Indeed, the Facts perpetrated at Amasia [a City] of Pontus, far exceeded the most superlative Cruelty.

pages occur almost word for word. Further, 'tis strange that Eusebius should have made no mention, either in his Ecclesiastical History, or in these books, of Basilus Bishop of the Amaseni: which Prelate nevertheless, as all the Greek Writers do agree, was slain by Licinius's order. But Philostorgius, in the first book of his Ecclesiastical History, writes in express words, that Basilus Bishop of Amasia in Pontus, was present at the Nicene Council. Further, the Nicene Council, as 'tis manifest amongst all Men, was convened the year after Licinius's deposition. Besides, Athanasius in his first Oration against the Arians, (where he makes mention of the eminent Bishops who were either present with him at the Nicene Council, or had approved of his opinion;) together with others, names Basilus Bishop of Pontus. Nor does he style him Martyr, although he there terms Hosius Confessor. The Acts also of Basilus, which are extant in Metaphrastes, seem to me foolish and fabulous. And most of the passages which occur at the beginning of them, are word for word taken out of Eusebius. But, that little Story concerning the Virgin Glaphyra was, in my judgment framed by some idle People. Valer.

CHAP. II.

The Demolishments of the Churches; and Butcheries of the Bishops;

WHERE some of the Churches, after that former * Demolishment of them, were * Or, thrown down to the Ground from their vast Height; others were shut up by the Governours in their several districts, least any one of those Persons who usually frequented them, should meet there, or least they * might render a * Amos Andronicus, in the Fok. Manuscript, and in St. Henry's Scivil's Copy, 'tis written Andronicus in book 10. chap. 8. of his Ecclesiastical History 'tis Andronicus. Valer. C & c a due worship to God. For that Person who issued out these orders, was of opinion, that Prayers were not made there for him, being induced to entertain such thoughts as these from a consciousness of his own impieties. But he had perswaded himself, that all we did was in behalf of Constantine; and to render God propitious [to him.] Now, those [Presidents] who were his flatterers and soothed him up, being fully perswaded they should do what would be grateful to the impious [Tyrant;] subjected the eminentest Prelates of the Churches to capital punishments. Therefore, harmless and innocent Persons were haled away, and without any the least cause punished as if they had been Murderers. But some of them underwent a new sort of death, having their bodies cut with a sword (as Butchers do meat) into a great many pieces: and after this barbarous spectacle far more horrid than any Tragical representation, they were thrown into the depths of the Sea to be made food for Fishes. After this therefore, Persons that were worshippers of God began to fly again, in such manner as they had done a little before. And the Fields and Solitudes were again become the Receptacles of God's Servants. When the Tyrant had succeeded thus prosperously in these his attempts, he afterwards entertained thoughts of raising a general Persecution against the Christians. And he had undoubtedly been master of his desire, nor could there have been any obstacle which might in future have hindered him from effecting it, had not [God] the defender of his own [servants,] (that he might prevent what would have ensued,) caused his Servant Constantine to appear like some great Light in darkness and in a most obscure Night, and led him by the hand as 'twere into these parts.

* Or, By the tree, Chrysostom in each Province. * Andronicus in the Andronicus he made of 500, from book 10. chap. 8. of his Ecclesiastical History where these pas-

CHAP. III.

In what manner Constantine was moved in behalf of the Christians, when [Licinius] made preparations to persecute them.

* WHO perceiving, that the † complaint he had received of the forefaid proceedings was not any longer to be endured, musters up a soberness and prudence of mind; and having mix'd an austerity of disposition with his own innate clemency, hastened to the assistance of the oppressed; judging, that that ought to be accounted a pious and holy Action, when by the taking off of one Person, the greatest part of mankind is preserved. For [thus he thought with himself,] if he should self, without any dilatoriness resolved to stretch forth a salutary right hand to those who had fallen into the bitterest of calamities. He made therefore a * vast provision of Military Forces; and his whole Army, as well Troops of Horse as Companies of Foot, were drawn together. † Or, The But before them all were carried † the Insignia, or Mark of his good hope in God lybte, &c.

CHAP. IV.

That Constantine made provision for the War with Prayers; but Licinius, with Divinations and Prophecies.

AND well knowing, that, if ever before, he now stood in need of Prayers, he carried God's * Prelates along with him: it being his * Or. Sentiment, that these Persons * like some good Priests, Guards of his Soul, ought to be always present and conversant with him. Whereupon, when he that Headed the Tyranny was informed, that Constantine obtained Victories over his Enemies by no other means than by God's assistance; and, that the forefaid Persons were always present and conversant with him; also, that the Symbol of the Salutary passion went before himself and his whole Army: he judged of these things to be deservedly ridiculous; and at the same time mock'd Constantine, and reviled him with opprobrious expressions. <sup>b</sup> But he himself got the Diviners and Soothsayers of the Egyptians about him, the Sorcerers and Impostors, the Sacrificers and Prophets of such as he look'd upon as Gods. And when he had with sacrifices appeased those * whom he thought to be Gods, he enquired of them, what manner of end he was like to have of the War. They made him some answer with one consent, that * without controul, verſie he would be the Conquerour of his Enemies, and should get the better in the War; the Oracles every where promising him this in long time. Further, after the Verb ἐπεὶ αὐτὸς must be placed a point, from the King's and Eusebian Manuscripts; which Christophorus perceived not. But, in the Eusebian, Turneb. and Savil. Copies, 'tis truer written ἐπεὶ αὐτὸς, he carried along with him. A little after, in the Eusebian Manuscript the reading is, πρὸς αὐτὸν καὶ ἐχθρὸν νίκας καὶ αὐτὸν, ἢ τὸ δὴν συμπεπληρωθῇ. <sup>c</sup> mei zede, was informed, that Constantine, &c. which is truer in my judgment, Valef. The reading in Robert Stephens is, πρὸς αὐτὸν καὶ ἐχθρὸν νίκας καὶ αὐτὸν ἢ τὸ δὴν, &c.

<sup>b</sup> Αὐτοῦ † διωκτῶν. It must be αὐτοῦ δὲ, But he himself. Although our Manuscript Copies have no alteration here; save that instead of διωκτῶν, in the Eusebian Manuscript 'tis διωκτῶν; but in the old flores, διωκτῶν. Valef.

<sup>c</sup> Οὗ δὲν δέλο δὲδ. It must, I think, be, ἢ δὲ δὲ, or rather in one word, ἢ δὲ δὲ δὲ, whom he thought, &c. Valef.

<sup>d</sup> Αὐτοῦ δὲν. In the King's Manuscript 'tis αὐτοῦ δὲν. I write αὐτοῦ, that is, without contravention. In the Eusebian, Savil. and Turneb. Copies 'tis αὐτοῦ δὲν, without contradiction. Valef.

<sup>e</sup> It must, as it seems, be written, καὶ πάλιν κρατῆσαι πρὸς αὐτὸν συμμάχους αὐτῶν γὰρ καὶ αὐτοῦ τὴν ἐκείνῃ καλλιστομένην ἢ αὐτὸν καὶ αὐτοῦ συμμάχους. So this whole place is to be restored. In the Eusebian Manuscript 'tis thus written, καὶ πάλιν κρατῆσαι συμμάχους αὐτῶν καὶ αὐτοῦ τὴν καλλιστομένην ἢ αὐτοῦ καὶ αὐτοῦ γὰρ αὐτοῦ καὶ αὐτοῦ: which is the best reading, and we have therefore followed it in our Version. Valef.

* Constantine.
† Or.
Account.

|| Or, De.
seu.

<sup>a</sup> Προβ. In book 10. chap. 9. whence this passage is transcribed, instead of πρὸς αὐτὸν, the reading is αὐτὸν, clemency only; which seems truer. I had also rather write αὐτὸν γὰρ αὐτὸν; unless the Discreet case may be taken for the Ablative put absolute. Valef.

against his Subjects: nor could there be any hopes of Safety in future remaining to those persons who had been afflicted by him. The Emperour having considered these things with him-and elegant Verses. Moreover, <sup>1</sup> the Interpreters of Dreams predicted, that success was portended to him by the flying of Birds; and the <sup>2</sup> Auspices affirmed the like was signified by the motion of Entrails. Elevated therefore by the fallacious promises of these Persons with great confidence he proceeded forth <sup>3</sup> to the Camp, and made preparations for an Engagement.

αἰσθησις. ὁ δὲ Ζήντας, are wanting in the King's Manuscript, and are added in the margin in a very modern hand. If I may have leave to conjecture, I think it should be written thus, ἑνεργημάτων αἰσθησις Ζήντας ὁ γινώσκων, &c. The Interpreters of Dreams and Aruspices [or, Sacrificers] I assumed the like was, &c. Turnebus in his Coppy had mended it νεωτεροῦντες τὰς Ἀνγύρας. In the Falconer and Savil Copies 'tis written ἑνεργημάτων αἰσθησις, &c. Moreover the Interpreters of Dreams predit<sup>r</sup>, &c. Vale!

ἡ τοῦ πατριάρχου. In the Fukezian Manuscript this place is written thus: σὺν πᾶσι τοῖς ἀρχιερεῖς τῆς πατριαρχίας ἐν τῇ πύλῃ τοῦ στρατοῦ. He proceeded forth with great confidence; pitching his Camp as well as it was possible. [While reading and punctuation duplicates not; τῆς πατριαρχίας πρυτανείης signifies castrametari, to pitch a Camp, or lodge an Army. Valef.]

CHAP. V.

What Licinius spake concerning the Idols and concerning Christ, whilst he was sacrificing in a Grove.

<sup>a</sup> Or, The War. BUT when he was about beginning <sup>a</sup> a fight, he called together the choicest of his Protectors: that were about Him, and those of his Friends for whom he had an higher value, into a certain place which by them was accounted sacred. It was a well-watered and shady Grove; but in it were erected various Statues, carved out of stone, of those whom he thought to be Gods. To whom after he had <sup>a</sup> lighted Tapers, and offered the usual Sacrifices; <sup>b</sup> 'Tis reported, that he made this Speech [to those that stood by him].

light Ta-
pers before the Statues of their Gods, as may be observed from the 22 book of Amm-Marcellinus, pag. 226. of Valesius's Edition.

Friends and Fellow Soldiers! These whom we Honour, whose Adoration hath been banded down to us from our Remoteſt Anceſtors, are our Country Gods. But he who leads the Army oppoſed againſt us, having violated the Uſages and Inſtitutions of his Fore-fathers, has made choice of their impious Opinion who believe no God; and hath croneſomely embraced a certain ſtrange God [procured] from I know not whence: And with his moſt filthy ſign ̄ disgraces his own Army. In whom having put his confidence, He comes forth and takes up Arms not ſo much againſt us, as againſt thoſe very Gods whom he bath

* On, Time, abused. This present * day therefore will evidently shew, which of Us two have erred in Opinion, and will give a Judgment concerning those Gods who are worshipped by us, and of them [honoured] by the other side. For, either it will declare us Conquerors, and so most justly demonstrate our Gods to be the Saviours and true Assistants. Or else, if this one God of Constantine's who comes from I know not whence, shall get the better of our Gods, which are many, and but much at a present do exceed in number; no body in rather takes up Arms against those very Gods, &c. Which reading is true, if I mistake not. Vale.

ὁ καὶ πῶς τῷ πλήθει παρομοιάσαν. Chrysostomus omitted the word πῶς at present; in which term lies the whole force of the sentence. For Lactantius shews, that his Gods exceed in number at present; but in a short time will be superior in force and power. Johanneus Porfessus, otherwise a silly Translator, has not omitted the rendition of this word. For he translates it thus, Numero quidem adde potiores, ac res excedit in numero. A little before, I read ἐς τὸν θεόν, this one God; as Turnebus has mended it at the margin of his copy, Valef.

future will be in doubt, which God he ought to worship; but will betake himself to the more powerful God, and attribute to him the Rewards of Victory. And, if this strange God, who is <sup>now</sup> a Ridicule to us, shall appear to be the Victor, it will beboze us also to acknowledge and adore him, and to bid a long farewell to those, to whom we fight Tapers in vain. But, if our Gods shall get the better, which no person can entertain a doubt of; after the Victory obtained in this Place, we will proceed to bring a War upon those impious contemners of the Gods.

These are the words Licinius spake a little yesterday before the Engagement, to those Persons who for the day stood round him. Which very Speech of his before The was not long after imparted to us who have the impious been called to this History, by those who have Licinius decides been Ear-witnesses of his very Expressions. Constantine's After therefore he had made this Speech, he com- our's God, because he was a manded his Forces to begin the Fight.

new God. For amongst the Gods, some were accounted patrii, Gods of the Country, others peregrini, strange Gods. The dii patrii were commended for the ancientness of their worship. But the peregrini were new Gods, in regard they were lately procured or chosen. Cicero's words in his 2d book De Legibus, are these: Novas vero deos, & in his celestibus nocturnum prærogationibus, sic Aristophanes facit fingens potius veteris comædiæ vocat, ut apud eum Sabazius & alii quidam dii peregrini iudicatis ad civitate ejiciantur; But the new Gods, and the teachings all night long in the worship of them have in such a manner been disquieted by Aristophanes the pleasantest Poet of Old Comedy, that Sabazius and some other Gods having by him been judged strange, are ejected out of the City. The passage of Aristophanes, which Cicero means, was extant in his Comædia Lemniis, as Suidas informs in αὐτῷ τῷ Ἰσημῶν Παύλῳ. There was indeed at Athens a vast multitude of new and strange Gods, whom they termed ἑσπερὸν or ἑσπερίους ἄνθρωποι. Aristophanes the Poet had put together their Names and Series in his Comædibus, as Hesychius attests in ζῳτῷ ἑσπερίῳ. Menander Rhetor or rather Alexander in methodo generis demonstrativi pag. 162. observes; that some Gods were termed ancienter, others more modern, αἱ δὲ ἑσπερίαι ἄνθρωποι, οἱ δὲ παλαιότεροι ἄνθρωποι λέγονται τῶν θῶν. But Porellius and Christophorus who has followed him, have rendered this place ill; their mistake arose from hence, because they perceived not, that the Adverb ἑσπερίαι sometimes signify the same with super, largely, as I have noted at book 4. of the Eccelesiastical History chap. 8. note (d.) These remarks I had made here formerly, having followed the Geneva Edition, and afterwards I understood, that in Robert Stephen's Edition and in the Manuscript Copies the reading was, οἱ γὰρ παλαιότεροι, who is now a Ridicule to us. Which reading the Translators have followed, and therefore are in no wise to be blamed. Valeat.

τῶν ταυρίων καλεσθῆναι τῶν γενομένων, to us who have been called to this History; in Moræus at the margin it is mended ταυρίων ἡμῶν ἱστορίᾳ; in which manner Eusebius expresses himself at chap. 8.
 A little before, in the same Copy of Moræus it is well mended καλεσθῆναι τῶν ἐμῶν and to bid a long farewell to Isidorus [In Robert Stephens it is mended γενομένων, &c.]. In the Fukstein Manuscript
 I found it written, ἡμῶν δὲ τῶν ταυρίων καλεσθῆναι τῶν γενομένων, to us who have been called to this History; which reading is right. Vale!

CHAPTER VI.

The Apparitions seen in the Cities under Licinius's Government, of Constantine's Soldiers pursuing the Forces of Licinius.

While these things were doing, a most wonderful Apparition (’tis said) was seen in the Cities subject to the Tyrant. For they thought they saw various Companies of Constantine’s Soldiers, passing at noon day thorough the Cities, as if they had obtained the Victory. And these things were seen, when in reality no Body appeared; but the Divine and Superior power, by that Vision shown to the Eyes of Men, foretold that which was ready to happen. Further, after the Armies had made ready to engage, he that had broken the League of Friendship, began the Fight first. Then Constantine having called upon God the Supreme Saviour, and given this Signal to the Army about him; got the better in the <sup>a</sup> first Engagement. Not long after, he was Superior in a <sup>b</sup> second Fight, and obtained a far greater Victory; in regard the Salutary Trophy was carried before his Army.

<sup>a</sup> The first Battle between Constantine and Licinius was in Pannonia, at Cibale; which Zosimus describes excellently well in his Second Book, as also the Author of the Excerpta de Gestis Constantini, pag. 473. This fight happened when Volusianus the second time and Anianus were Consul; on the eighth of the Ides of October, as is recorded in Idarian's Fasti. To whom agrees Sigonius in his third Book de Occidentali Imperio. In Eusebius's Chronicle the Cibalenus Battel is ill placed on the seventh year of Constantine, in regard that Action happened on the eighth Year of his Empire. Yea, if you compute the matter exactly, it was now the ninth year of Constantine's Empire. For, his ninth year began on the eighth of the Calends of August, Volusianus the second time and Anianus being Consul. Aurelius Victor writes thus concerning the Wars between Licinius and Constantine. *Ita potestas orbis Romani duobus quæsitæ. Qui quavis per Flavii Sotorum nuptiam Licinio comexi inter se erant, ob diversos mores tantum auxilium tricenarium congruere quærebant, &c. Tunc the power of the Roman world was gotten by two. Who though by Flavii's Sister married to Licinius they had been joined together, yet because of their different dispositions, for three years space they could ill agree, &c. Which passage does manifestly confirm Idarian's Fasti: Otherwise from the opinion of the Eusebian Chronicle it ought to be said, Bientium, for two years space. A passage in Eutropius's Tenth Book must also be corrected, which is commonly Printed thus. Ac primo cum in Pannonia, Secundo ingenti apparatu bellum apud Cibalas instrumentum, repetitum oppressit. &c. Doubtless, the word Secundo must be expunged, which was added by some unskilful Transcriber. For, first, Constantine's first Battel against Licinius was at Cibale, as we have shewn above. Then, it would be ridiculous to say, that the first Battel was in Pannonia, the Second at Cibale; in regard Cibale is a City of Pannonia. Moreover, Pannius who rendered Eutropius into Greek, acknowledges not that word Secundo, as appears from his Rendition. Yet Osius (as also the Author of the Historia Miscella.) hath followed the vulgar reading in Eutropius. For his words are these; Constantinus Licinium Sotoris sue varum in Pannonia primum vicit, deinde apud Cibalas oppressit. Valef.*

<sup>b</sup> This second Fight of Constantine against Licinius, hapned in Thracia as Zosimus informs us. But Zosimus mentions not the very place: but the Author of the Excerpta de Gestis Constantini pag. 474. says; 'was fought in the Campus Martius': which place is equally unknown to us. Further, this Battel hapned on the same year with that at Cibale, as is concluded from the Relation of Zosimus, and of that unknown Author. Which may also be demonstrated by this argument. After this Battel a Peace being made up between Constantine and Licinius, on the year following Constantine and Licinius were made Consul; and in the West that year is inscribed, Constantine the fourth and Licinius the fourth time Consul; but in the Eastern parts Licinius's name is set first, in this manner, Licinius Augustus the fourth and Constantine the fourth time being Coss: as it occurs in the Excerpta de Gestis Constantini. Valef.

CHAP. VII.

That in the Battels, where ever the Standard, made in the form of Cross, was, there a Victory was obtained.

I Ndeed, where ever that [Standard] appeared, happened a Rout of the Enemies, and a pursuit [was made] by those who had gotten the better. Which when the Emperor perceived, in what ever place he saw any party of his Army prest hard upon, thither he ordered the Salutary Trophy to be carried, as some most efficacious * Amulet to procure a Victory. After the doing whereof, a Victory followed immediately; in regard Strength and Courage was by a Divine Act of Providence infused into those who fought.

CHAP. VIII.

That Fifty Persons were made choice of, to carry the Cross.

W Herefore, out of the Protectors that were about him, he made choice of such Persons as excelled for strength of Body, courage of Mind, and exemplariness of Piety; on whom he imposed only this of Duty, that they should take an assiduous care of this Standard. <sup>a</sup> These Persons were in number no less than Fifty: on whom nothing else was incumbent, but to surround, defend, and guard the Standard; which each of them by turns carried on his Shoulders. These things the Emperor himself related to us who compose this History, whilst he was in Peace and Repose, a long time after [the Transaction] of these Affairs; and to his Relation he added a matter highly worthy to be recorded.

same with those who in the Theodosian Code are termed the Protectors Laborum, that is, ὡς λασίγοι. For the Greeks termed it λασίγοι, because it was an assistance to the Labouring Companies, as Sequent attests. Valef.

CHAP. IX.

That one of the Cross-bearers who fled, was killed, but he that by Faith stood his Ground, was preserved.

F OR he said that a dismal Noise and sudden Disturbance having one time put the Army into a Confédération during the very heat of an Engagement, he who bore the Standard on his Shoulders, was in an agony by reason of his Fear; whereupon he deliver'd the Standard to another, to the end he might make his escape out of the Fight. That other Person had no sooner taken it, <sup>a</sup> but he who slept away, <sup>b</sup> 'O' d' being got without the protection of the Standard, was stuck into the Belly by a Dart cast at him, and was deprived of his Life. Thus this Man underwent the Punishment of his cowardice and infidelity, and lay dead upon the very Spot. But the Salutary Trophy became the preservative of his Life who bore it. In so much that, though Darts were frequently cast at him who bore the Standard, yet he was preserved <sup>c</sup> unhurt: but the Spear of the [Salutary] Trophy received the Darts. And this was a thing which far surpassed every Miracle, [to see] in what manner the Enemies Darts fell upon the smallest circumference of the Spear, whereon they were fixt and stuck fast; but the Standard-bearer was preserved from Death: yea, none of those employed in this Office did ever receive a wound. This is not our Relation, but the Emperor's own, who amongst other Matters declared this also to us. Who, when by the Power of God he had obtained the former Victories, afterwards marched forward, and moved his Army in a Military order.

* Or, Remedy, or help.

CHAP. X.

Various Fights, and the Victories of Constantine.

BUT the Van<sup>a</sup> of the adverse party, not able to stand his first Attack, cast away their Arms with both their hands, and fell prostrate at the Emperor's feet. He saved them all, being one that was highly pleased with the preservation of Men. But others of them, who continued in Arms, prepared themselves for an Engagement. To whom when the Emperor had proposed overtures, and had treated them with expressions of kindness and friendship; perceiving they were not to be persuaded, he sent his Army against them. They turned their backs immediately, and betook themselves to flight. And some of them, taken in the pursuit, were slain by the Law of Arms: || Or, War. but others ran one against another, and so were cut off by their own swords.

I think it must be written, οὐκ ἔστιν ἀποδείκνυσθαι, that is, blatantissimi verbis eos compellit, treating them with kind and friendly words. Further, what Eusebius relates in this chapter, seems to belong to the first Battle in the field of Cybale, whereof I have spoken before. And this is confirmed by what follows.

CHAP. XI.

Licinius's Flight, and Inchantments.

AFTER this, when their Prince saw himself deprived of an assistance<sup>a</sup> from his servants, and that the vast numbers as well of Soldiers as Auxiliaries which he had gotten together, were vanished; and was experimentally convinced that the hope he had placed in those whom he thought to be Gods, was vain; he forthwith betook himself to a most inglorious flight. And in this manner he made his escape, and secured himself from danger; because the most pious Emperor ordered his own Men not to make a close pursuit after him, to the end by flying he might obtain safety. For 'twas his hope, that Licinius, made sensible of the unhappy posture of his own affairs, might at length desist from his mad boldness, and would change his opinion for thoughts that were sound and better. These were Constantine's thoughts, suggested to him from that transcendancy of Humanity, wherewith he was endow'd; and he took a resolution patiently to bear injuries, and to give Him pardon who deserved it not. But so far was Licinius from abstaining from his pristine improbity; that he heap'd mischiefs upon mischiefs, and attempted more nefarious and audacious Facts. Moreover, he betook himself again to the evil Arts and practises of Conjurers, and was more insolently emboldened. But, that saying might have truly been applied to him, which was spoken of that old Tyrant, to wit, God had hardened his heart.

<sup>a</sup> Or, In like manner.

CHAP. XII.

In what manner Constantine, praying in a Tabernacle, obtained the Victory.

Licinius having therefore involved himself in such [impieties] as these, was thrust headlong into the pit of destruction. But the Emperor, when he saw there was a necessity of a second Battle, diligently applied himself to [the worship of] his Saviour. And pitch'd a Tabernacle of the Cross without [his Camp]; and at a good distance from it: where he lived chastly and purely, and poured forth his Prayers to God; agreeable to the practise of that old Prophet of God; concerning whom the divine Oracles give this attestation, that

\ He pitch'd the Tabernacle without the Camp.* Exod. 32: 7. Some few Persons, of whose Faith, Piety and Benevolence he had the most assured proofs, were continually present with him. And this he was always wont to do, as often as he was about to begin a fight. For he was slow; because he would be secure: and 'twas his constant usage to act all things by the advice of God. Further, when with great earnestness he made Supplications to his God, he was always, vouchsafed the Divine presence. After which, moved as 'twere by a more Divine inspiration, he was wont to leap out of the Tabernacle, and would forthwith give order for the immediate march of his Army; and that without delay, yea even in that very hour, they should draw their Swords. His Men would fall on pell-mell, and cut down all before them without any distinction of age; till such time as (having gotten a Victory within a very short space,) they had crested Victorious Trophies against their Enemies.

<sup>a</sup> Eusebius writes in book 1. chap. 8. \ Or, Made use of a chaff and pure diet.*

<sup>a</sup> Eusebius writes in book 1. chap. 8. \ Or, Made use of a chaff and pure diet.*

Copy 'tis to be seen. I write to you within a very short moment of an hour; so I found it mended in Marcian's Copy, and in the Fiskeian Manuscript. A little before, instead of 'tis to be seen, I read 'tis to be seen, till such time as; in which manner Eusebius does usually express himself. Valef.

CHAP. XIII.

His Humanity towards the Soldiers that were taken Prisoners.

IN this manner was the Emperor long before wont, both to behave himself, and to order his Army, before they engaged in a Battle: for he always preferred God before his own Life; and studied to perform all things by his advices; and used all imaginable caution to prevent the slaughter of many Men. On which account, he consulted the safety of the Enemies no less, than that of his own Soldiers. Wherefore, he admonished his own Men, when they had been Victors in a Battle, to shew compassion to the vanquished: and, that being Men themselves, they ought not to forget the same Nature which they were of. But if at any time he perceived, that the minds of his Soldiers were greedy of slaughter, he repressed them by a Largess of Gold; giving order, that whoever took one of the Enemy alive, * should have a certain weight of Gold bestowed on him. And this inticement for the preservation of Mens lives, was found out by the Emperours prudence. In-somuch that, very many even of the Barbarians themselves were saved, the Emperour's Gold being the Ransom of their Lives.

* Or, Should be honoured with, &c.

CHAP. XIV.

Again concerning his Prayers in the Tabernacle.

These, and infinite other such like actions as these, the Emperour was wont at other times frequently to perform. But at that present, before he joynd Battle, he retired alone into the Tabernacle, where, as his usage was, he was earnest in Prayers to God; abstaining from all manner of diversion, and delicious food; and * macerating himself with fastings, and † bodily austerities. And in this manner he appeased God with Supplications and Prayers, that he might have him for his benign and propitious Assistant, and might perform those things which God had suggested to his mind. Moreover, ‡ his care in behalf of the Republick was watchful and diligent; and he poured forth Prayers, not more for the safety of his own Forces, than for that of his Enemies.

* Or, Afflicting
† Or, Penitential of body.

‡ Constantine's

CHAP. XV.

Licinius's * dissembled Friendship, and his Worship of Idols.

BUT because Licinius (who had fled a little before,) practised dissimulation, and entreated, that an amicable League might be again renewed; [the Emperour] supposing a Peace would be of use [to the Government,] and advantageous to Mankind in general, vouchsafed to grant him even this, upon certain * Terms and Conditions. Licinius speciously pretended a ready compliance with the Terms offered him, and with Oaths confirmed his * adherence thereto. But he secretly got together another † Army of Men, and resolved to renew the War, and begin a Fight. He also called in the Barbarians to be his Auxiliaries; and went up and down in quest of other Gods, because he had been deceived by the former. He did not in the least remember, what he himself had said a little before, in his Speech concerning the Gods. Nor would he acknowledge that God who had been Constantine's Defender: but in a most Ridiculous manner began to enquire out for himself, more and those newer Gods.

* The conditions of Peace were these, that Licinius should continue possessor of the East, Asia, Thrace, Pontus, Macedonia, Macedonia, Pannonia, Moesia, and Dacia should be added to the Dominions of Constantine: this Information we have from Eusebius, Sozomenus, and the Author of the Excerpta de Gestis Constantini. Valel.

* Or, Faith.
† Or, Provision of Forces.

CHAP. XVI.

In what manner Licinius Commanded his Soldiers, not to make an Attack against the [Standard of the] Cross.

AFTER this, knowing for certain, that there was a certain divine and secret power in the Salutary Trophy, by which power (he understood) Constantine's Army obtained Victory; he warned his Soldiers, that they should by no means engage against it, nor by chance or * rashly cast their eyes upon it. For, that Standard (he said,) was of a force incredible, and an Enemy and Adversary to him in particular; wherefore they were to use great Caution, not to begin a Fight against it. Having given out these Orders, he prepared for an Engagement with * Him, who by reason of his † innate Clemency made delays, and deferred that Ruine which hung over him. The † Licinians, placing their confidence in a Multitude of Gods, marched forth with vast numbers of Forces, carrying before them, as their Army, defence, Images of dead Persons, and inanimate Statues. But Constantine, surrounded with the * Armour of Piety, against the multitude of * his Enemies opposed the Salutary and Vivifying Standard of the Cross, as some affrightning spectacle and potent preservative against mischief. And at first he † made an Alt; in † which interim he forbore the use of his Arms, Step'd that he might not begin the Fight first; which thing he did, on account of the League he had made.

* Accusations. In the Kings Sheets the reading is ἀντιπαρθεῖς, inconsiderately; in which manner 'tis mended in Turnebus's Copy at the Margin. And to the Reading is in the Eusebian Manuscript. Valel.

* Confantine. † Or, Humility. † Or, Licinius. * Or, Coat of Mail. † Or, Step'd.

CHAP. XVII.

Constantine's Victory.

BUT when he saw the Enemy persisting in an obstinacy of mind, and perceived that they drew their Swords; moved with indignation, * with one Shout and in a moment he Routed all the Forces of the Enemy, and obtained a Victory at the same time, both over his Enemies, and over the Demons.

‡ forth, with one Shout and in a moment. And so 'tis in the Eusebian and Savil. Copies. Further, this signal Victory of Constantine's happened in Crispus's and Constantine's third Consulate, on the fifth of the Nones of July, near Hadrianople, as 'tis recorded in Idatius's Fasti. But Baronius places this Hadrianopolitan Battle on the year of Christ 318, whereon Licinius was the fifth time, and Crispus were Consuls. Whole opinion we overthrow by these arguments and Testimonies of the best Writers. The first is Idatius, who in his Fasti writes thus; Crispo III. & Constantino III. Coss. &c. Crispus and Constantine being Consuls the third time, the Hadrianopolitan Battle (happened) on the fifth of the Nones of July, and the Chalcedonensis Battle on the fourteenth of the Calends of October. The same words occur in the Alexandrian Chronicle; but they are erroneously ascribed to the year following, when Paulinus and Julianus were Consuls. With Idatius agrees Aretinus Victor, who writes thus concerning the Fight between Constantine and Licinius: Quo sand variis praeiis pulsus, &c. Who having indeed been beaten in many Battles; in regard it would have seemed dangerous wholly to crush him; on account of Affinity; the Children of them both being received into a Colleague ship, and elected to the Empire of Cæsar; Crispus and Constantine begotten by Flavius Licinius by Licinius. Which [Colleague ship] was scarce lasting, nor proved it happy to those who were assumed into it, being published in that same month on a day defiled with an Eclipse of the Sun. Therefore * Deit. vi. I think it should be both vi. and xvi.

Ccc 4 throughout throughout each Province, what was useful and of advantage to them; and assigned to the Churches of God those things that were congruous and convenient. And first of all, * they recalled home those Persons, who, because they would not sacrifice to Idols, had been banished by the Governors of Provinces, and compelled to remove out of their own Country. Then, they freed from publick Functions, those who for the same reason had been * adjudged to the Curie: and ordered, that such as had been deprived of their Goods, should have them restored to them again. Besides, they who during the time of Persecution, [having been strengthened] by God, had given a signal proof of their fortitude and constancy of mind; and were either condemned to the Mines, there to be tortured with daily Labour; or adjudged to a Deportation into the Islands; or had been forced to a slavery in the Publick Works; these Persons, freed on a sudden from all these disquietudes and troubles, enjoyed their Liberty. Further, such as, by reason of their egregious recluseness in retaining their Religion, had been deprived of the honour of the Militia, were recalled from this ignominy by the Emperor's Munificence: who gave them a free Liberty of choice, either of recovering their proper Offices, and of flourishing in their Pristine dignities; or, if they were in love with a quiet and retired Life, of continuing in future exempt from the troubles of all publick Functions. Lastly, whatever Persons in order to their being reproach'd and disgrac'd, had been condemned to a slavery in the * Gymecia, them [the Emperor] set at Liberty as well as the rest.

* The Laws.

* The Basiliensis isacris Christophorus understood not this place; but Porcellus has rendered it not unhappily, in this manner: Quidem de causa translati erant ad Curias, who for the same reason had been removed to the Curie. Valf.

The Curie were the Offices of Corporations, the bearing whereof was generally very chargeable and burthenfome; the Persons who bore these Offices were termed Curiales.

* Δικαστήριον ἔργων. Christophorus renders this place ill, thus, ad publica imperii opera obseunda vi compelli, by force compelled to undergo the publick Works of the Empire. Eusebius terms the Mines, publick Bath-houses, Work-houses wherein they Work, and Gymecia; δυστάσια ἔργα: to which works who ever had been condemned by a sentence of the Judge, lost their Liberty. For this was termed a servitude of punishment. Now, 'twas usual to condemn the Christians to such works as these, because of their confession of Christ's name. And, as to the Mines, the matter is notorious. But, of a condemnation to the publick Bath-houses, we have an instance in the Acts of the Passion of Pope Marcellus. Valf.

* Ἐπιθυμία. Two words seem to have grown into one, which are, thus to be disjoined, ἐπ' ἑκστάς. A little after, where the reading is, τὰς δίκας ἀνακαλέσθαι, of recovering their Houses; I think it must be, τὰς δίκας τὰς ἑαυτοῦ ἀνακαλέσθαι, of recovering their proper Offices. For they had not been deprived of their Houses, but of their Employments in the Militia. Valf.

* Γυμνασία δ' ἔργων. Concerning the Gymecia there is frequent mention, as well in both the Codes, as in the Notitia of the Roman Empire. See Brissinius's Lexicon. Further, Persons condemned to the Gymecia, were clothed in a short Coat made of Linen, which was a servitude. We learn this from the Passion of Romanus the Martyr, which is published by Mombritius, and occurs in the Museo-acensian Copy. Eadem vero die Maximianus jussit, &c. But on the same day Maximianus commanded, that the Christians who were in the Palace should be ungirt. Maximianus therefore took notice to himself of many passing by, whilst they were losing their Girdles: and he saw litius of Blessed Memory; and being in a rage, called him to him, and strip'd him of the garments whereunto he was clothed, and clothed him in a Linen short coat, and put him into the Gymecium to the Wool-Workers, in order to his reproach. Further, the Fuketian Manuscript has this place written thus, ἐπ' ἔργα καὶ ἐν τῇ αὐτῇ ἀκατέστῳ καὶ ἐν τῇ αὐτῇ ἀκατέστῳ καὶ ἐν τῇ αὐτῇ ἀκατέστῳ, which is the true reading no doubt, and we have followed it in our Version. Valf. The Gymecium or Gymnasium (ὁ γυμνασιον in his Work de Verbo. Significat book 7. fol. 254, Edit. Paris. 1596.) signifies the Weaving-House appointed for making the Garments of the Emperor. The Emperours had Slaves of both Sexes employed in their Gymecia. They had likewise Weaving-Houses for Linen Garments, termed λινεα Linophaia, which we find mentioned in Chap. 34. of this Second Book.

C H A P. XXI.

How [he made Laws] concerning the Martyrs, and concerning the Estates of the Churches.

AND these were the Establishments which the Emperor made in written Laws, concerning such Persons as had undergone those sufferings. But in relation to their goods, a most full and ample provision was made by a Law of the Emperor's. For he commanded, that the Goods and Estates of God's holy Martyrs, who had ended their lives in their Confession, should be enjoyed by their nearest Relatives. But, if no Relation of theirs could be found, then the Churches were to have their Estates. And, the [Imperial] Letter of Indulgence ordered, that the Goods which had been heretofore transferred to others, out of the Treasury, either by a Sale, or by donation; and which remained still in the Treasury, should be returned back to their Owners. Such were the favours which the Emperor's benignity conferred upon the Church of God, by his Laws transmitted into all the Provinces.

C H A P. XXII.

In what manner he refreshed and cherish'd the People also.

BUT, his Imperial Munificence bestowed * Διαιτα more, and far greater Favours than these, τὰς δίκας It upon the People that were strangers to our Re- δυστάσι miltion, and upon all the Pro- But, &c. and from these words the twenty second chapter is to be begun, as 'tis in the Fuketian Manuscript and the Old Steen. Valf. Ὅσα τὰ πάλαι. I mend it, ὅσα τὰ πάλαι, who having before this: which Christophorus saw not. I write also, ὅσα τὰ πάλαι τὰ ἐν Σατρίῳ, received an account of what, &c. Valf. they themselves might at length enjoy the like: beholding these things with their own eyes, * doubted not of terming themselves blessed * Οἱ, now; and confess, that some new Miracle, and though such a one as no Age under the Rays of the good to Sun had ever beheld before, so great and glorious an Emperour [namely,] had † ἀπαύτω Οἱ, Sti- neared to mankind. And these were their ned upon sentiments.

C H A P. XXIII.

That he publickly Proclaimed God the Author of Good; and concerning the Copies of his Laws.

BUT, when the Emperor, by the power of God his Saviour, had reduced all places under a Subjection to himself, he himself made known to all Men that God who had bestowed these Blessings upon him: and attested, that He treasured

СН АР.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Concerning the Confessors who have been employed in the Militia.

* Or, Ap. proved in. Further, to those who have heretofore been adorned with Military dignities, and have lost them upon this cruel and unjust pretence, to wit, because professing the knowledge of God, they preferred that before the dignity they were possessed of; it shall be free to choose, whether they will embrace the Military Employes, and continue in the same figure they were in; or live in freedom with an honourable discharge. For it will be fit and agreeable to reason, that he who hath demonstrated such a greatness of mind and Constancy in undergoing torments inflicted on him, should, upon his according to his own choice, enjoy either Repose, or Honour.
† Or, Dangers.

Περὶ τούτων. In the Medicean Copy the reading is, ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἡμῶν, ὅτι καὶ βέλαντι, they accounted that more valuable than the dignity they had; let it be according to their will.

Ἐλευθερίαν δὲ. From the Medicean Copy it must be written ἐλευθερίαν ἀπὸν πόλεως, lead a free Leisure. Which reading Sozomen confirms book 1. chap. 8. where he has epitomized this Law of Constantine. In the Eusebian Manuscript I found it written, ἐλευθερίαν ἀπὸν πόλεως, live in freedom honourably. But the Medicean Copy has it written, ἡμῶν ἐλευθερίαν ἀπὸν πόλεως, lead an honourable free Leisure. Valef.

CHAP. XXXIV.

The setting at Liberty those free persons in the Gymnæce, or them delivered over to Slavery.

* Καὶ μὴν. Also, whatever persons, by force deprived of their Nobility, have from the Judges received some such like sentence as this, that being thrust into the Gymnæce or Linyphia, they have endured Cruel and miserable Labour, or were accounted Servants of the Treasury, their Pristine splendour of Birth being of no advantage to them: Let such men (rejoicing both at the honours they formerly enjoyed, and at the privilege of their Liberty,) recover their usual dignities, and in future live in all manner of gladness. And let him (who has changed his Liberty for Slavery, by an unjust and inhumane madness of thought a corrupt word, I presently smelt out the true and genuine reading of this place.) I write therefore αἰὲν καὶ ἀβύσσου, an unusual and miserable Labour. For, such servilities in the Gymnæce and Weaving Houses were unusual to free men. The same Copy has πόνον, not πόλεως. Valef.

Ὅσοις αὐτῆς ἡμετέρας. The reading in the Medicean Copy is truer, thus, ὅσοις αὐτῆς, &c. being of no advantage to them. And a little after, from the same Copy I write καὶ αἰὲν ἀβύσσου, rejoicing — at, &c. Valef.

* Καὶ δὲ δούλους τῆς ἐλευθερίας. The Medicean Copy adds a word, in this manner, καὶ δὲ δούλους τῆς ἐλευθερίας, &c. which is truer, if I mistake not. For the Emperor distinguishes two sorts of men: some of which, being nobly born, were enslaved to the Gymnæce, or made servants of the Fiscal farms, which was a nobler servitude: others of them, whose extraction was meaner, were sold to private men. In the Eusebian Manuscript the reading is, καὶ δὲ δούλους τῆς ἐλευθερίας ἀλλὰ καὶ δούλους. Valef.

the * Seller, and hath often lamented his usual servile offices, perceiving himself on a sudden as 'twere made a servant from being a free man. In the Medicean Copy his former freedom according to this our command, and restore himself to his Parents, and then undergo those Labours that befit a Freeman; having cast out of his memory those misbecoming servilities, which he had before laboured under.

had, deplored a free man of his Liberty, on account of his condition of the true God. In the Kings Sheets I found it written πόνον; the Eusebian Copy has it πόνον. Valef.

* Αὐτοῦ δὲ τῆς ἐλευθερίας. In the Medicean Copy the reading is truer, thus, αὐτοῦ δὲ τῆς ἐλευθερίας. Valef.

* Ὅτι τῶν ἐλευθερίων. In the Medicean Copy it is more elegantly expressed, ὅτι τῶν ἐλευθερίων, and a little before, ἐλευθερίαν τῶν πόλεως, having cast out of his memory. And the same is the reading in the Kings Sheets and Eusebian Copy. Further, from these words it is sufficiently apparent, that what I have said is true, viz. that in this latter place Constantine speaks of the viler and meaner sort of people, who had been sold by the sentence of the Judge. For, concerning the former sort who were eminent for the splendour of their Birth, Constantine says that they may now recover their Pristine dignity. But he sends away these latter to the Services and Labours usually undergone by Freeman. Valef.

CHAP. XXXV.

Concerning the succession in inheriting the Goods of Martyrs and Confessors, and of such persons as had been banished, and of them whose Goods had been brought into the Treasury.

BUT, we must not omit mentioning those Estates, whereof several persons have been deprived upon various pretences. Wherefore, if any persons, from the undergoing the excruciating and divine Combat of Martyrdom with a fearlessness and confidence of mind, have been deprived of their Goods; or, if any men, made Confessors, have procured themselves the hope of Eternal Goods; also, whatever persons (forced to remove out of their Country, because betraying their Faith they would not yield to the Persecutors;) have in like manner been deprived of their Goods: Lastly, if any persons, though not condemned by a Capital sentence, have αὐτῆς ἀπὸν πόλεως; which we have rendered accordingly. Neither do these words of αἰὲν occur in the King's Sheets. Further, I found the beginning of this period variously written in the old Copies. For in the Medicean Manuscript 'tis read thus, παρὰ τὸν ἡμῶν τὸν πόλεως, &c. In the King's Sheets, παρὰ τὸν ἡμῶν τὸν πόλεως, &c. Turnebus in his Copy had inserted it, παρὰ τὸν. In the Eusebian Copy I found it written, παρὰ τὸν ἡμῶν τὸν πόλεως, &c. The King's Copy has also παρὰ τὸν. Wherefore, I doubt not but this is the true reading, and do wonder why Robert Stephens changed it. Valef.

* Καὶ ὁμοῦ καὶ τῶν ἐλευθερίων. In the Medicean Copy the reading is, ὁμοῦ καὶ τῶν ἐλευθερίων, or, if any men; which, I doubt not, is truer. For, whereas he had before spoken of the Martyrs, he now speaks of the Confessors. A little after, from the same Copy, write thus, καὶ τῶν ἐλευθερίων ὅτι καὶ τῶν ἐλευθερίων τῶν πόλεως, &c. (Forced —, because by continuing the Faith they would not yield to the Persecutors;) have — been deprived of their Goods; &c. Valef.

Christophorus omitted this Clause, because it seemed nothing else but a superfluous repetition of what went before. But, in regard these words occur in the Medicean Copy also, they are not rashly to be expunged. For, after the Emperor had spoken concerning the Martyrs, concerning the Confessors, and concerning the Exiles, who for fear of a Capital sentence pronounced against them, had left their Country, he now treats of those, who though they had not been condemned by a Capital sentence, had nevertheless been despoiled of their Goods. For these were not in the number of Martyrs, or Confessors; in regard they had not been brought to a Tryal. Nor, had they been Exiles; but staying in their own Country, had by force been deprived of their possessions. 'Tis certain, in this Title or Contents of this Chapter, four sorts of persons are reckoned up. But Christophorus omitted the fourth sort. Nevertheless, in the following chapter, the Emperor recounts three sorts of persons only, these last being wholly omitted. Valef.

nevertheless

Henry Savil have mended it. And so 'tis written in the Fuketian Manuscript. A little after, the reading in the Medicean Copy is, ὡς ἐν τῶν προειρημένων τινεῖς, that, if any of the foresaid Persons Value.

That those who possess such Places, and Gardens, and Houses, shall restore them; but without the * Mean-profits.

Further, that no <sup>a</sup> ambiguity may appear in t<sup>r</sup> Or, this our Precept, <sup>a</sup> but that every one may <sup>Make.</sup> with readings understand what the Law is; let <sup>And E.</sup> all Persons know, that if they are possess<sup>r</sup>, either of <sup>From t<sup>r</sup></sup> a Ground, or of an House, or of a Garden, or of Medicane any thing else of the forementioned Persons Estates, Copy make it will be good and advantageous to themselves, both <sup>And E.</sup> to confest it, and to restore it with all imaginable <sup>From t<sup>r</sup></sup> celerity. <sup>And</sup> And although it may be most mani- <sup>And</sup> festly apparent, that some Persons have received great <sup>And</sup> Profit from those [Estates,] by an unjust Posses- <sup>And</sup> sion; and yet we judge a <sup>And</sup> demand of those Fruits to <sup>And</sup> be in no wise just.

|| Or, Exaction.

Copy the reading is, ἐν ᾧ καὶ τὸ μέγιστον παύειν ἐπὶ αὐτῶν τῶν, And al- though, &c. And a little after the same Copy has it, ἐξαρτωντο μὲν, καὶ γινέσθαι τῶν αὐτῶν ἔχοντων, have received——profits—— yet we judge a demand, &c. incomparably well, as I think. For this is the second member of the period. The last member of the period is ὁμοῦ καὶ αὐτῶν &c; Nevertheless, &c; which in the common Editions is ill divided, and removed to the following Chapter. Valef.

In what manner Supplicatory Libels ought to be presented in reference to these Persons.

N Evertbeſt, let ſuch Men of themſelves ingenuouſly acknowledge what profits they have gathered, and whence, and let them ſupplicate for a Pardon of their Offence to be granted them from Us; both, that their former Avarice may be cured by ſuch an emendation; and alſo, that they may be diſcreetly rewarded by the Supreme God, receiving this Satisfaction in place of ſupernatural Repentance as there, may be rendered propitiouſ [and remit] their Offences. But, theſe things they have been conſidered Owners of ſuch Eſtates, (if ſuch Men either deſerve, or can have this Title given them,) alledging this in defence of them may ſolve, may peradventure ſay, that it was impoſſible they ſhould abſtain [from thoſe things] then, when a manifold Spectacle of all manner of Miſchiefs was let before their Eyes: when Men were cruel-cured. Valef. Kaß. 80

Symposium. In the Medicean Copy this place is written far otherwise, in this manner : αἰσὺς ἀνδρῶν ἐπὶ τῷ ὄρει. ἀποφάναι συμποσίωμον· ἀμειβὰς ἐκρημάζοντο. διμύσαντες δ' ἅν' ἑαυτὸν ἀναγὰν. διέλογον ἀκοῖ-ψου τοῦ ὄρους, &c.; and we have rendered it accordingly. Which readings, as every one sees, is far truer. For those words καλὴ βίη ὑγινον are altogether superfluous. A little after, in the same Copy the reading is, εἰ δὲ τοῖς ταῖσδε διαγελοῦσι λόγους μὲν, &c.: But, if any Man do insist upon such discourses as these, &c. So 'tis all in the Fekesian Manuscript. Valef.

D d d

That the Church is to be Heir to those who have no Relations; and that the Legacies given by them shall remain firm.

BUT, if none of the Kindred be left, who, agreeable to reason, may be Heir to any of the forementioned Persons, to wit, of the Martyrs, or of the Confessors, or of those who have removed out of their Country on such an Occasion as this; we decree, that the Church in every of those places shall always succeed in the Inheritance.

<sup>a</sup> Nor will this in any wife be * uncaſe to the ſunſent, if they ſhall happen to have † Her their Heir, on whoſe account they have undergone all imagi-

* Our Israel
From the Medicinal Cops make

It is in chap. 35. Also, καὶ τῶν μετείκων μὲν σοι, τῶν, &c.

* Or, Drily * ejected; incompassionately destroyed; careven away. Iestly cast forth; when Proscriptions of innocent † Or, Per- Persons were frequent; the † fury of Persecutors factions insatiable; and sales of Goods [every where viinsatiable. fible.] But, if any Men do insist upon such discours- courses as these, and do persist in their insatiable own, ad- purposes and intentions; they shall be sensible, that monitions. such a practise will not be suffered with an im-Icorrupted. punity to themselves; especially, in regard on this this place account chiefly we give our Help and Ministry by the help of the supreme God. † Whatever things there-diseases Co fore a destructive necessity hath heretofore forced pr, in which || to be received, 'tis now dangerous to
|| to be received, 'tis now dangerous to written, receive. keep. And besides, 'tis necessary to les-sent Lusts not to be satiated, partly by con- siderations, and partly by Examples.

* Or, ὅτι ἡ ἐκκλησία. The Medicæan Copy has it, ὅτι ἡ ἐκκλησία, Rec. So that, what things a destructive, &c. and a little after, corruptible ἐκκλησία, it will now be dangerous, &c. Which I rather approve of. For this period is to be joyned with the foregoing one.
Presently, where the reading is ἀλλὰ τὸ ἴδιον, 'tis righter in the Medicæan Copy, where the last particle is wanting. Valef.

C H A P. XXXIX.

That the Exchequer shall restore to the Churches, Grounds, and Gardens, and Houses.

* Ὅτι ἡ ἐκκλησία. NOR shall the Exchequer, if it be possib<sup>l</sup> of any of those things forementioned, be permitted firmly to retain them. But, as 'twere not daring to utter any thing of Obloquie against the partic<sup>l</sup> sacred Churches, those things which for a long time is it hath unjustly detained, them it shall at length justly wanting; restore to the Churches. All things therefore what-and a little after, the ever, which * may rightly appear to appertain to same Copy the Churches; whether they be Houses [enjoyed the reading as] a Possession; or certain Fields and Gardens; is, ὅτι ἡ ἐκκλησία or whatever else they be, (no right belonging notwithstanding, to the Dominion being diminished, but all things continuing firm and entire;) We order to be restored.

as 'tis in the Eusebian Copy. Which the Medicæan Manuscripts confirm, wherein the reading is ἐκκλησία. In the same Copy, after the word Churches, is added ἀλλὰ, that is, some words are wanting.
Valef.

* Ὅτι ἡ ἐκκλησία. The reading in the Medicæan Copy is truer, thus, ὅτι ἡ ἐκκλησία, may rightly appear. Valef.

* Εἰς τὰς ἐκκλησίας. The emendation of this place is due to the Medicæan Copy, where we found it plainly written εἰς τὰς ἐκκλησίας, to the dominion; excellently well. For the Emperors will it, that all Places and Farms, which had been taken away from the Christians, should truly and sincerely be restored to them together with their rights. In such a manner that, if service was owing to any Farm or Field, to wit, a drove way, passage, or high way, it should be restored to the Christians with the same right in no part diminished. Therefore, if any one had mortgaged a Farm taken from a Christian, or had let it out by Lease to be planted and improved, or by a sale of it had encumbered it with any burthen or service; all these things are by Constantine's Edict relincd. A little after, where the reading is ἀνδρῶν ἐκκλησίας, from the same Copy we have incnded it thus, ἀνδρῶν ἐκκλησίας, to be restored Yet, the Euse-bian, Turnebian, and Savilian Copies have ἐκκλησίας to be yielded up;
which is no ill reading. Valef.

C H A P. XL.

The * Martyria and Cæmeteries † are ordesed to be yielded up to the Churches.

* Places, where the Reliques of any Martyr are.

† In the Greek 'tis οὕτως.

* Καὶ τοὺς ἐκκλησίας. Moreover, who doubts but those Places, which have been honoured with the Bodies of saints' Copies
* it intended, καὶ τοὺς ἐκκλησίας; which pleases me better. Valef.

the Martyrs, and are the Monuments of their glorious departure, do belong to the Churches? Yea rather, who would not even command that? In as much as, there can be no Gift more valuable, nor can there be any other Labour pleasanter, and which has in it more of advantage, than that, these by the impulse of the divine Spirit, a diligent words in care be taken about these matters; to the end that the Greek, those Places, which with wicked pretexts have been in the Me-taken away by unjust and most flagitious Men, Man-being justly yielded up, may be restored again to scrip fol-[God's] sacred Churches. low these,
ἐκκλησίας

Yea, can there be any other; which words are wanting in the ordinary Editions. Valef.

* ὅτι ἡ ἐκκλησία. In the Medicæan Copy 'tis ὅτι ἡ ἐκκλησία, τὸν ἐκ τῶν ἐκκλησίας ἐκκλησίας, will, a diligent care be taken about such matters as these. Also in the Euseb. Turneb. and Savil. Copies the reading is ὅτι ἡ ἐκκλησία. Valef. In Robert Stephens, 'tis ἐκκλησία, to take a diligent, &c.

* Μὴ ἐκκλησίας. In the Medicæan Copy 'tis ἐκκλησίας, must wicked. Valef.

C H A P. XLI.

That such as have bought things belonging to the Church, or have received them as a gift, must restore them.

* Ὅτι ἡ ἐκκλησία. BUT, because it appertains to an entire and absolute * Providence, that they should not be past over in silence, who * Or, Proeither by a right of Emption have vision. I began bought any thing of the Exchequer, or by a Title I also put of donation have possib<sup>l</sup> themselves of any thing the Title as granted to them, having * in vain * extended before it, their insatiable desires to such Goods: Let all such which was Persons known, that although they have attempted the Em-to alienate Our Clemency from themselves, by rea-<sup>l</sup> Edu-son of their most notorious audaciousness in making and in the such purchases; nevertheless, that our Benignity shall of Robert not be wanting to them, so far as 'tis possible and Stephens becoming. But let it suffice thus far to have treated par-concerning these matters. Which defect we made up from the Eusebian Manuscript and the King's Sheet.

Valef.

* ὅτι ἡ ἐκκλησία. The Medicæan Copy opened to us the true writing of this place; wherein the reading is ὅτι ἡ ἐκκλησία. I write, ὅτι ἡ ἐκκλησία, either by a right of Emption. Indeed, to style this Emption just, is contrary to the mind of Constantine, who terms these purchases unjust and nefarious presumptions. Valef.

* Μὴ ἐκκλησίας. I had conjectured long since, that the particle ἐκ was to be expunged; which conjecture of ours the Medicæan Copy does plainly confirm. The Emperor speaks concerning those Men, who had petitioned that these places might be given them by the Emperors. Which Christophorus perceived not. Presently in the same Copy the reading is ἐκκλησίας ἐκ ἐκκλησίας, &c. a truer than in the ordinary Editions, ἐκ ἐκκλησίας. In the Euseb. and Turneb.
Copies 'tis ἐκ ἐκκλησίας ἐκκλησίας, which is the worst reading of all. Valef.

* ἐκκλησίας. In the Eusebian Copy 'tis ἐκκλησίας. Valef.

C H A P. XLII.

An Earnest Exhortation to worship God.

* Ὅτι ἡ ἐκκλησία. Further, whereas it hath been made apparent by most evident and most perspicuous in the demonstrations; partly by the power and might of Medicæan Copy tu

* ὅτι ἡ ἐκκλησία. If I mistake not, the reading in the Medicæan Copy is truer, thus, ὅτι ἡ ἐκκλησία, ἐκ ἐκκλησίας, &c. and we have pointed and rendered it accordingly. It should, I think, also be ἐκ ἐκκλησίας ἐκ ἐκκλησίας, of the omnipotent God. Valef.

*The Omnipotent God, and partly by the Exhortations and Assistances which He desires should frequently be given by Me; that that calamitous grief and disquietude, which had heretofore seized the whole Complex of humane Affairs, hath now been banished from all places under the Sun: all persons of you in general, and each Person in particular, by most accurate * inspection do perceive, what and how great that * Power, what that Grace is, which hath wholly extinguished and destroyed the Seed (as I may so say) of the * most flagitious and wickedest Men; but hath recalled the gladness of the Good, and abundantly diffused it throughout all Regions: and which hath permitted all imaginable Liberty those who to all Persons, that they should again both pay a meet worship to the divine Law it self with the highest Veneration, and also in a befitting manner reverence those who have consecrated themselves to the service of that Law. Who having risen up out of * a most profound darkness as *twere, and received a clear knowledge of * Affairs, will in future exhibit a due observance, and a pious and agreeable honour to this Law. Let it be published in our Eastern Parts.

* Or, Moreover, what and how great that * Power, what that Grace is, which hath wholly extinguished and destroyed the Seed (as I may so say) of the * most flagitious and wickedest Men; but hath recalled the gladness of the Good, and abundantly diffused it throughout all Regions: and which hath permitted all imaginable Liberty those who to all Persons, that they should again both pay a meet worship to the divine Law it self with the highest Veneration, and also in a befitting manner reverence those who have consecrated themselves to the service of that Law. Who having risen up out of * a most profound darkness as *twere, and received a clear knowledge of * Affairs, will in future exhibit a due observance, and a pious and agreeable honour to this Law. Let it be published in our Eastern Parts.

Further, whereas it hath, &c. There is nothing clearer than this reading, nothing more certain. Instead of καὶ ὑπὲρ μου, by me, or from me. For Constantine means his own Ministry or service, which he lent God in the offering of these things. Concerning which matter he does, not without reason, boast in the beginning of this Edict. Valef.

* ἡ τῶν θεῶν. In the Medicæan Copy the Article is wanting; and after these words, are added these, ἡ τῶν θεῶν, what that Grace is, which words cannot be wanting without a great detriment to the whole Sentence. For, the term θεῶν imports that which he has above termed ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, the power of God: but θεῶν signifies to: Benefit conferred upon Men by the Assistance and Ministry of Constantine. Valef.

* ἡ τῶν ἀνδρῶν. In the Medicæan Manuscript, 'tis ἡ τῶν ἀνδρῶν καὶ τῶν γυναικῶν, of the most flagitious and wickedest. Further, it must be made ἡ; as 'tis in the King's Copy in the Eusebian Manuscript, and in the Old Sheets. Valef.

* ἡ τῶν ἀνδρῶν. In the Medicæan Copy the reading is ἡ τῶν ἀνδρῶν καὶ τῶν γυναικῶν. Valef.

* ἡ τῶν ἀνδρῶν. The Medicæan Manuscript has it ἡ τῶν ἀνδρῶν of Affairs. I found the same reading in the King's Copy, in the Old Sheets, and in the Eusebian Copy. Away therefore with Robert Stephens's Emendation. Valef. In Stephens 'tis ἡ τῶν ἀνδρῶν of Letters.

* In the Medicæan Copy the close of this Edict runs thus; ἀναγγεῖλαι τῇ τῶν ἀνδρῶν καὶ τῶν γυναικῶν καὶ τῶν ἀνδρῶν καὶ τῶν γυναικῶν καὶ τῶν ἀνδρῶν καὶ τῶν γυναικῶν. I.e. Will in future exhibit a due observance, and a pious and agreeable honour to this Law. Let it be published in Our Eastern Parts. And this is the Subscription, which (as Eusebius attests, Chap. 23.) was put to this Edict in Constantine's own hand. For the Emperors were wont, in their own hand to add to the Edicts they sent out, proferamus, let it be published; and to give that in Command to the Prefect of Prætoria, as it appears from the Novels of Valentianus and Majorianus. Indeed, even this one word proferamus, is a sufficient indication.

Indeed, even this one word proferamus, is a sufficient indication that this Subscription was added in Constantine's own hand. For 'tis the Emperor himself that speaks, and who calls the Eastern Parts his own. For so the Emperors were wont to express themselves, then especially, when they spoke of any Province lately reduced under their Government. So Constantine in his Letter to Elaphius, and in that to Probianus Proconsul of Africa, says Africanam Nostram Our Africa; and in the first Law Cod. Theod. de Veteran., and Nicomediam nostram, and in the Nicomediam. So in the only Law Cod. Theod. de i. qui sanguinolentus, &c. Imperator Constantinus Itali suis, Emperor Constantine to his Italians. Lastly, Constantius Caesar in his Letter to Eumenius, which Letter Eumenius records in his Oration pro Eusebio; Macedoniam Galli nostris, &c. Our Galli are in service, &c. Further, this Edict of Constantine occurs, in the Medicæan Copy, after the Books of Ecclesiastick History, with this Title, ἀναγγεῖλαι τῇ τῶν ἀνδρῶν καὶ τῶν γυναικῶν καὶ τῶν ἀνδρῶν καὶ τῶν γυναικῶν καὶ τῶν ἀνδρῶν καὶ τῶν γυναικῶν. That is, a Copy of the Constitution of the Emperor dear to God, which, (after he had deposed the Tyrants,) he wrote in the Greek Tongue, and transmitted to the Province under him. Valef.

CHAP. XLIII.

That those things which Constantine had established by Laws, were by him really accomplished and performed.

These were the Constitutions contained in the Emperors first Edict sent to us. Immediately therefore the Orders contained in this Law were effectually put into Execution: and all things that the Writer of this History was a Palestini- an. Which I was therefore willing to remark; because Dionysius Gotsfredus thought, that Eusebius Cæsariensis was not the Author of this Work: which nevertheless 'tis easy to refute, both by innumerable testimonies of ancient Writers, and also from very many passages of this Work; especially from chap. 45. and 46. of this Book. Now, the aforesaid Law of Constantine was issued out to the Palestini-ans in particular, for this reason, Because the persecution had raged most sorely there, and there had been many Confessors and Martyrs in that Province. Notice likewise is to be taken of what Eusebius says, viz. that this first Sanction or Edict of Constantine hath been brought to them. For that Edict concerning the Peace and Liberty of the Christians, which Constantine had sent into the East after his conquest of Maxentius, was by Maximine's fraud suppressed, as Eusebius tells us in the beginning of his ninth Book. Valef.

CHAP. XLIV.

That he preferred Christians to the Government of Provinces; but if [any of the Governors] were Pagans, he forbid them to Sacrifice.

After this, the Emperor * put his hand seriously to the work. And in the first place, most of those he sent as Governors of the Nations distributed throughout the Provinces, were Persons dedicated to the salutary Faith. But, if any of them seemed addicted to Gentilism, it was forbidden them to Sacrifice. The same Law was imposed also * upon those, who in dignity preceded the Presidents, as likewise on them that had obtained the highest pitch of Honour and the Power of the Prætorian Prefecture. For either, if they were Christians, he gave them permission, that they should perform what * as correspondent to their Appellation: or else, if they were otherwise affected, he ordered them not to worship Idols.

For these dignities were far more eminent than those of the Presidents, as every one knows. But Christophorus, according to his usual mistake, translates ἀρχισυνταγματάρχης Prefecti; than which nothing is more absurd. Valef.

CHAP. XLV.

Concerning the Laws forbidding Sacrifices, and ordering the Churches to be built.

SOON after, * two Laws were issued out at once and the same time. The one whereof forbade the detestable Sacrifices to Idols, here- renders it, due Leges in eandem sententiam promulgabantur, two Laws were promulgated to the same effect, or meaning: wherein he seems to have followed Porphyrius, who had rendered it thus; Due postea Leges emissa non ita dissimili argumenta. Two Laws were afterwards issued out of a Subject not unlike. But I thought ἃ τὰ αὐτὰ to be the same with simul, uno eodemque tempore, together; as one, and the same time. For so Eusebius does usually express himself. Valef.

red these words right, although he has not hit the sense-

Constantine's Edi&ct to the Provinces, concerning the Errour of Polytheism. The Preface, concerning Vertue and Vice.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS
MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS,
to the † Provincials of the East.

ALl things what ever that are contained in the most Authentick Laws of Nature, do give all Men sufficient notices of a divine providence over and || Inspection into the administration of all matters. Nor is there any doubt to those, whose minds: are by the right way of knowledge directed to that end, but an accurate comprehension of a sound mind and of the very sight it self, * by one and the same impulse of true Vertue, may lead to the knowledge of God. Wherefore, no considerate Person can ever be disturbed, when he perceives most Men following * Courses of Life contrary the one to the other. For, the Beauty of Vertue would be * unusefull and lie concealed, unless impropriety should on the other hand * set forth a perverse and depraved way of living. Therefore, a Crown is proposed to Vertue; but the Most high God presides in the Judgment [and punishment of Impropriety.] But, I will attempt, with all possible perspicuity, to discourse to you all, concerning those * Hopes I have of things future.

ends to the same end, to wit, the knowledge of truth. The needs to the truth of things sensible; and the understanding to of Intelligibles from the truth it self of things sensible; and degrees it ascends to the knowledge of the supreme God. Also ἀποφύλαξις ἀληθείας may be termed the force and virtue of Yet, the following words do assure us, that this place multi-concerning Moral Vertue. Valef. Valgins renders those Greek at the beginning of this note thus, vera virtutis eadem virtute inclinatam naturā, the nature of true Vertue verging and to the same end.

©, foolishly or absurd. I read ἀνὴν©- μνησφυ, as 'tis in Manassero, and in Moreus's, and Gruter's Corpore. A
 I write, διὰ τῶ ἀπὸ ἀπὸ τῶν ἐκείνων, Therefore a to referre to Verine. But these words are very obscure and which I have been at length to Constantine himself, in reg. I have a person that is attributed to the Greek, but was more expelling himself; and partly to English. I have also who of obscure Latine words made the Greek more obscure.
 unknown Manassero the reading is ἀνὴν©, and διὰ τῶν ©. excellently well. Vale.

Concerning the Pious Father of Constantine; and concerning Dioclesian and Maximian
the Persecutors.

I Always look<sup>d</sup> upon the former Emperors<sup>s</sup>, by reason of the Ferity of their dispositions, as Persons<sup>s</sup> * extraneous and foreign. My Father was the only Man, who took in hand works of Lexity <sup>* Ambidexterity</sup> and Manufact; and with an admirable Piety imberred: invoked God the Father in all his Adings. But the rest [of the Emperors,] not found as to their Intellectualls, made immanity, rather than mildness, their Buiness; and this they nourish'd † in a wonderful manner, subverting the true doctrine † Or, Providence during their own times. Further, the fury of their improbity was kindled to such a degree, that Civil Wars were raised by them, against all as well Divine as Humane affairs, when in the † He terms the greatest repose and tranquility imaginable. † Persecu.

the Christians, Civil Wars. For there is nothing like a Civil War, than when the Christians were put to flight and murdered in all Cities, not by an incursion of Enemies and Barbarians, but of their own Fellow-Citizen. Vale.

That by reason of Apollo's Oracle, who could not give forth Responses because of The just Men, a Persecution was raised.

IT was reported, that at that time Apollo gave forbath an Oracle out of a certain Den and dark Cavern, not by humane voice; whereby he declared, that The just Men upon Earth were an hindrance to him, that he could not speak the truth:
and, that on this account † false Oracles were given out from the Tripods: and, that for this reason * his mournful prophetes suffered her long made false bar to bang down neglected; and the Art of Divination being banish'd, lamented that great Evil amongst Men. But Let us see, what manner of conclusion these things were brought to.

† Or, The Oracles of the Tri-pods were made false
by the Tirosages naming. It must be written,

περσιν (or, if you will, ἑσπερί) κρηπίς; which reading we have followed in our Version. Porphyrio also, and Morinus understood these words concerning the Pythia or Priestess of Apollo. But, in the excellent Fukerian Manuscript, this whole place is written thus, πρὸ τοῦ ἑσπερίου καὶ περσιν ἀδελφὴν παύσασθαι. ἃ μακρίως τ' ἐλπίσιν ἐμνήσθη, &c. For this reason be [Apollo] suffered his mournful laments hair or long down neglected be, [whereas] agrees Sir Henry Savile's Cop. Preface, in the same Copias the reading is τὴν ἐλπίσιν τῶν κατὰ τὴν ἐλπίσιν, in what manner of end these things terminated: Val.

That Constantine, when he was a youth, heard that the just Men were the Christians, from him that had written the [Edicts] concerning the Persecution.

I Now † appeal to Thee, Most high God! [Thou knowest,] that being then * very young I † Or, Call heard, how He, who at that time held the chief upon <sup>a Kousis</sup>
209. In the Greek Title of this chapter, 'tis truer written, 'tis a youth, For Constanine was not then a Child, when, as an Hostage, he resided at Dioclesian's Court. For, he was delivered by his Father, Constantius to Dioclesian, on the year of Christ 291; after Constantius had been made Caesar by Dioclesian. At which time Constanine was about 15 years old. For he died on the year of Christ 337, in the 62<sup>d</sup> of his age. Vale.

* Or, Deceived in mind by error.

<sup>b</sup> Βροχθίους ἰσθλῆ. In the Fork and Savil's Manuscript the fore he wrote Edicts of Blood * with bloody points reading it of Swords (as I may say;) and ordered his judges to a stretch that subtilty implanted in them by nature, to an invention of Acuter punishments in the King's Copy. Valef.

* Μισοφθῆν ἀνακρίει. He alludes to the point of an instrument to write with. Constantine expresses himself with much of Eloquence, in saying, that those Laws concerning the Persecution of the Christians, were written with the bloody points of Swords. So some of the Ancients tell us, that Draco's Laws were written with Blood, not with Ink. Valef.

* Ἐδίστην τοῦ ἀποδοῦναι. I had rather say constricere to stretch; which is an usual expression with Eusebius. Valef.

CHAP. LII.

How many sorts of Tortures and Punishments were made use of against the Christians.

T<sup>H</sup>en you might, [I say] you might have beheld, with how great a freedom [and * Or, That Licence] the * venerable worshippers of God <sup>a</sup>gravity of daily underwent the severest of Contumelies, [east-<sup>b</sup>piety] by a continuedness of Cruelty. For, that modesty, which even none of the Enemies ever affected with any injury, <sup>a</sup> was made the easie <sup>a</sup>Παύσιμος <sup>a</sup>σφοδρῶς and pastime of the contumely of their own selves So enraged Fellow-Citizens. What fire, what man-<sup>b</sup>ner of Torments, what sort of Tortures was not made use of upon every body, and without distinction [applied] <sup>b</sup> to persons of all ages what-<sup>c</sup>ever? Doubtless, at that time the Earth wept; <sup>c</sup>Εὐσεβίου speaking of Severus the Heavens, within whose circumference all <sup>c</sup>Καὶ τὰ οὐρανόθεν things are contained, being defiled with Blood, <sup>c</sup>ἡ δὲ γῆ itself was clouded by the sorrow and horror of <sup>c</sup>ἡ δὲ γῆ became a that prodigy.

cheap and easie sacrifice of death; where see what we have noted concerning that expression. For the Translators perceived nothing here. Valef. In the Greek Text of Valesius's Edition, the term μαρτύριοι is left out; but it occurs in Robert Stephens.

<sup>b</sup> Καὶ ἡλικία πᾶσι. In the Eusebian Copy the reading is ἡλικία πᾶσι. A little after, in the same Copy, and in the King's Sheets it is written, ἡλικία πᾶσι καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις. <sup>c</sup>Εὐσεβίου speaking of Severus the Heavens, within whose circumference all things are contained, being defiled with Blood, the very [light of the] day it self was clouded by the sorrow and horror of the prodigy.

CHAP. LIII.

What reception was given to the Christians by the Barbarians.

B<sup>UT</sup> why [do I mention] these things? On account hereof the Barbarians do now boast, they gave reception to the Men of our Country * Kept, or, Preserved. that fled at that time, and * treated the Captives with all imaginable tenderness and humanity. † Or, The rites of their Sanctuary. For, they allowed them not only safety, but permitted them to retain † their religious worship with security. Therefore the Romans do now bear this perpetual Brand of Infamy, which the Christians, at that time driven out of the Roman World, and flying to the Barbarians, fixed upon them.

CHAP. LIV.

What manner of Revenge overtook them, who, on account of the Oracle, raised a Persecution.

B<sup>UT</sup>, what need I in many words rehearse those Lamentations, and that common mourning of the whole World? Those Authors of so horrid an impiety, perished afterwards by a most ignominious end, and were thrust down into the pits of Acheron, to an eternal punishment. For, having been * involved in intestine Wars, they left no * Or, Mix Remains, either of their Name, or Stock. Which together, doubtless had never happened to them, had not that impious prophecy of the Oracles of Apollo had a false and depraved force.

CHAP. LV.

Constantine's Glorification of God, and his confession in reference to the sign of the Cross, and his Prayer for the Churches and People.

N<sup>OW</sup>, I beseech Thee, * Most suprem God! * Or, Be mild and propitious to Thy Easterns; Greatly Be [merciful] to all thy Provincials, worn out by a lasting Calamity: by me Thy servant, † administer a Remedy. And these things I, † Or, ask of Thee not without Cause, O Thou Lord of Reach all, Holy God! For, by Thy Guidance and Assistance, I have undertaken and perfected Salutary Affairs. Every where carrying before Me Thy Sign, I have lead on my Victorious Army. And as often as the publick necessity requires, following those very Ensigns of thy † Virtue, I, † Or, march out against the Enemy. For these reasons Power: I have dedicated my mind to Thee, purely tempered with love and fear. For I love Thy Name with a sincerity: but I have an awful fear for Thy Power, which Thou hast demonstrated by many indications, and hast thereby rendered my faith firmer. I hasten therefore, to put my shoulders, my own shoulders [I say to the Work], that I may re-edifice thy Most holy * House; which <sup>a</sup>He means those detestable and most impious [wretches] have <sup>a</sup>the Caesars' Church which is ruined by * a wicked overbrow.

* Or, By a wickedness of demolition.

terms the House of Truth. In the sacred Scriptures 'tis called The Pillar and Ground of Truth. A little after, from the Eusebian and Savil Manuscripts, and from the King's Sheets; write, ἡ ἐκκλησία σου, &c. which those detestable, &c. Valef.

CHAP. LVI.

How he prays that all Persons may be Christians; but forces no body.

I Desire, that thy People may live in Repose, and without Tumult or disturbance, for the common advantage of the World and all Mortals. May Aday those involved in the Error [of Gentilism] with gladness partake of an enjoyment of the same Peace and Quiet with the Believers. For, this Reparation of mutual society * will be of great efficacy in leading Men to the true way. Let no Person molest another. * Let every one do that which his Soul desireth. Yet, it behooves those whose Sentiments are true, to be firmly persuaded, that they only shall live holily and purely, whom Thou callest [to this,] that they should acquiesce in Thy holy Laws. But, let those who withdraw themselves, have their Temples of Lyes, since they desire them. We retain the most splendid House of Thy Truth, || which Thou hast given us according to Nature. We wish this likewise to them, namely, that by a common consent and agreement, they also may reap a delight of deed at a mind.

And we have rendered it accordingly. Valef.
* Εὐσεβίου ὁ λόγος ἀποδοῦναι, ὅτι οὐκ ἐπὶ τῷ νόμῳ. The meaning is, Let every one follow what religion he has a mind to. By which words Constantine leaves His Subject an entire Liberty of worshipping the Deity according as every one shall have a mind. For, the most Religious Prince earnestly desired indeed, that all Mortals should come to the Faith of Christ: but he never compelled any one to that. He wistd that the Heathens were freed from their Frittle Error: notwithstanding, he prohibited not the Ceremonies and sacrifices of the Temples, as he himself attests hereafter, at chap. 60. Valef.
|| Οὐ μὴ κτ' ἄλλῃ Νίκῃ. Valesius renders it, quam assequimur nisi donatis, which thou givest us when born. I understand neither the European, nor Valesius's meaning.

C H A P. LVII.

He gives Glory to God, who by his Son has enlightened those that were in Error.

NOR is our Religion new, or of a late date; but, from such time as we believe this beautiful Fabrick of the World to have stood firmly put together, Thou hast instituted this [Religion] with a due observance of Thy Deity. Further, Mankind seduced by various Errors, hath stumbled. But, least this Evil should increase and grow stronger, Thou by Thy Son hast raised up a pure Light, and hast put all Men in mind * of the worship of Thy Deity.

* Or, Concerning Thy Self History, and in his book de Evangelicâ Demonstratione.

C H A P. LVIII.

Another Glorification of God, from his * Government of the World.

THY Works give confirmation to these things. Thy Power makes us innocent and faithful. The Sun and Moon have their stated and prescribed † Road; nor are the Stars moved round the † Axis of the whole World in an irregular manner. The Vicissitudes of Times recur by a certain Law. * Or, Sea. By Thy word the firm * site of the Earth hath been established. And the wind makes its motion * according to a set time. Also, the current and carriage of the Waters † proceeds from the motion of a restless Flux. The Sea is contained within fixt and immovable Bounds:

† Or, Way. I read κτ' ἐπὶ τῇ θάλασσῃ, according to a set time; in Constantinian Manuscripts. And so the reading is in the Eusebian and Sossinian Manuscripts. Valef.
* Or, Sea. By Thy word the firm * site of the Earth hath been established. And the wind makes its motion * according to a set time. Also, the current and carriage of the Waters † proceeds from the motion of a restless Flux. The Sea is contained within fixt and immovable Bounds:

And what ever is diffused throrow the Earth and Ocean, every such thing is strained for certain admirable and † great Uses. Which unless it were † Or, Use in this manner governed according to the Arbitrary Will, doubtless so great a diversity, and † so manifold a division of power, would have brought destruction upon the whole World and humane affairs. * For they who have waged War against one another, would doubtless have fought that is, with a greater vehemency against mankind. Which questionless they do, although they are not seen with the Eyes.

Stars, and Elements, concerning which he hath spoken above. For all these, unless they were governed by the Beck and Power of one God, would likewise be Gods. Hence therefore imports a power subject to no dominion; which we commonly term an Impendancy, which is proper to God only. Valef.

* He means the Gods of the Heathens, as I have said above: to wit, the Sun, Moon, and the rest of the Elements of the World, which Antiquity worshipped for Gods. Presently from the Eusebian Copy write ὁ ἀποδοῦναι ἑαυτοῦ ὡς ὡς as the reading also is in the King's Sheets. Valef.

C H A P. LIX.

He praises God, in regard he always teaches good things.

WE give Thee many thanks, Thou Lord * Or, of all, Greatest God! For, by how much Studies, the more Humane Nature is known from different † Or, The * Endeavours; by so much the more the † Discipline † Or, Precepts of the Divine Religion are confirmed in those, confirmed, whose Sentiments are right, and * who are studious &c. of true Vertue. But, whoever hinders himself from † Or, being cured, † let not him impute that to another. For the Medicine, which † is of strength sufficient to effect the Cure, † Or, Pre- is publicly proposed to all Men. Only † Or, Pre- [this must be taken care of,] that the Cure. No one should violate that Religion, which the Saviour's Co- things themselves do manifest to be pure and in † Or, reading is maculate. Let all us Men therefore make use † Or, of the † atonement of that Good in common com. &c. who ferred on us, that is, the blessing of Peace; to wit, are sin- by separating our Consciences from every thing that is contrary to it.

* Ἀλλ' ὅτι οὐκ ἐν ἀλλοτρίῳ. That is, whosoever suffers not himself to be cured, or freed from the disease of Idolatry; let him impute it to himself, in regard the Medicine is ready. Christopheron has rendered this place ill, thus, alteri qui sanari vult, non vult veritas, let him not blame another, who has a mind to be cured. I say nothing concerning Porsefus, who wanders from the true sense almost every where. But Musculus has rendered these words not unhappily. Valef.
|| Or, The common Inheritance of that good given us: Valesius renders it, The fellowship.

C H A P. LX.

An Exhortation at the close of the Edict, that no Person should give trouble or disturbance to another.

BUT, let no Person do harm to another, by that which he hath persuaded himself of, * and de- * Or, declared. What one Man hath understood and known, † Or, with that let him assist his Neighbour, if it may be, in the But, if it be impossible, let him omit it. For 'tis one King's Copy written in the same hand, ἀναδιδόναι received. Both readings may be born with. Valef.

thing, voluntarily to undertake the Combat for immortality; another, to be forc'd to it by punishment. These things I have said; & these things I have discoursed of more at large than the scope of Our Manuscripte required, because I would not conceal <sup>b</sup> the true Faith. Especially, in regard some Persons (as I <sup>b</sup> do assert, that the Rites of the Temples the Truth, and the Power of Darkness are wholly abolished. That is, Which I had indeed perswaded all Men to, had the true not the violent <sup>a</sup> Insolency of nefarious Error been immeasurably fix'd on the minds of some Persons, same as to the hurt and damage of the <sup>c</sup> Emendation of the should Mankind.

<sup>d</sup> τὸν ἀληθινὸν καὶ πιστὸν τὴν Τύχην τῆς Πίστης. He expresses himself so again, hereafter. Valef.

<sup>e</sup> These words are taken out of St. Paul's Epist. to the Colos. chap. 1. v. 13. Further, as he here terms Gentilism the power of darkness, so lower (at chap. 67.) he calls Christianity the power and efficacy of Light. Valef.

<sup>f</sup> Ἐμμενέω. This term does properly signify Conspiracy and Rebellion: which is most appositely said concerning the worship of Idols For Idolatry is a defection from the true God. Valef.

<sup>g</sup> Τὸ κατὰ τὴν ἀνάστασιν, of the common Resurrection. It must, as I think, be ἀποδείξις, Emendation or Correction. For the common word seems to have been fetch'd out of the foregoing line. Further, at the end of this Edict, this subscription was doubtless placed (concerning which I have spoken at large above,) ἐπεὶ δὴ τὸ ἐν τοῖς ἡγεῖται ἀποδείξις αἰσέται, Let it be published in Our Eastern parts. For this subscription is properly agreeable to this Edict, in regard it was sent to the Provincials of the East. Valef.

CHAP. LXI.

* Or, How from the City Alexandria * Contraverses were raised on account of Arius.

These things the Emperour, like a most loud-speaking Preacher of God, by his own Letter † proclaimed to all the Provincials; || diverting his Subjects from Diabolical Error; and exhorting them to the exercise of true Piety. But whilst he was exceedingly joyful on account hereof, news was brought him, concerning a disturbance of no small consequence, which had seized the Churches. At the hearing whereof he was extremely troubled, and began earnestly to consider of a Cure. [The Original of the disturbance] was this. The People of God were in a flourishing condition, and * pleased themselves with the exercises of good Actions. There was no fear without, which might give disturbance: in regard, by the grace and favour of God, a splendid and most profound Peace fortified the Church on all sides. But Envy framed treacherous designs against our Blessings. [At first] it crept in privately; but [afterward] it danced in the very midst of the Conventions of the Saints. At length it raised Contention between the Bishops, and <sup>a</sup> cast in discord and wranglings amongst them, under a pretence of the Divine † Dogmata. From thence, as 'twere from some small spark, a great fire was kindled. Which began from the

Alexandrian Church, as 'twere from an || Eminence; and afterwards over-ran all Egypt, and Libya, and

Further Thebais. Moreover, it ruined the rest of the Provinces and Cities: in so much that, of the Provinces and Cities: in so much that, you might have seen not only the Prelates For so Eusebius does usually speak in many places. Valef.

of the Churches fighting one with another with words; but the People also rent into factions; some inclining to this party; others, to that. <sup>b</sup> Further, the spectacle of the things performed proceeded to such an height of absurdity, that even in the very Theatres of the Infidels, the venerableness of the Divine Doctrine <sup>c</sup> was traduced by a most ignominious and reproachful derision.

* Or, Underwent a most, &c.

like better. This whole place therefore is thus to be written; οἱ ἡγεῖται ἀποδείξις αἰσέται, &c. and we have rendered it accordingly. In the Fuckerian Copy the reading is οἱ τοῦτοῦ. Valef.

CHAP. LXII.

Concerning Arius and the Melitians.

These Persons therefore at Alexandria in a childish manner strove about the Sublimest [Points.] But <sup>a</sup> others all over Egypt and the <sup>b</sup> Upper Thebais were in the interim at difference on account of a controverſie which had been [started before: so that, the Churches were in all places rent in sunder. And whereas the Body [of the Church] was distempered as 'twere with these [discafes,] all Libya likewise fell sick; and the other parts of the Provinces without were seized with the same distemper. For they of Alexandria sent Legates to the Bishops in each Province; and these, divided into either side, partook of the like Sedition and disturbance.

CHAP. LXIII.

How Constantine sent a Legate with a Letter in order to a Composure.

Upon hearing hereof the Emperour was highly perplex'd in mind; and looking upon this thing to be his own calamitous Concern, he forthwith dispatches away one of the worshippers of God whom he had about him, (a <sup>a</sup> Person whom he well knew to have been approved for his <sup>a</sup> modesty of Faith, and in the late times to have been ennobled with confessions in defence of Piety;) to Alexandria, to make Peace between those that were at difference there. And by him he sends a most useful and necessary Letter to the Occasioners of that Contention. Which Letter, in regard it contains an illustrious Specimen of his Care in reference to the People of God, is fit to be inserted into this our Discourse concerning him. The Contents of it are these.

He means Arius, as Gelasius relates book 2. and after him Photius in his Bibliotheca, cap. 127. and Nicephorus. And before all these, Sozomen. Valef.

CHAP. LXIV.

Constantine's Letter to Alexander the Bishop, and Arius the Presbyter.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS
MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS,
To Alexander and Arias.

* Or, make God
our witness.
† Minister, or, Charge.
WE call God to witness, who, as 'tis meet, is himself the Assistance of Our attempts, and the Saviour of all men; that upon a twofold account we were moved to take in hand the management of those affairs which We have in reality performed.

CHAP. LXV.

That he was continually Sollicitous about Peace.

* Opinion of all Nations concerning the Deity, in one Constitution and Form as 'twere: Secondly, We were desirous of restoring to an healthfulness the Body of the whole World, afflicted as 'twere with some terrible disemper. Which [two things] having proposed to Our Self as Our aim, we inspected the one with the secret eye of Thought; but we attempted to effect the other by the power of a Military force: well knowing, that if (as 'twas Our desire) We could establish an universal agreement amongst the Worshipers of God, the consequence would be, that the Administration of the publick Affairs would certainly obtain a true, unaltered change agreeable to the pious minds of all men. Presently, I write αὐτοῖς μὴν ἔχουσιν ὡς πρὶν ἑνῶσαι, from the Fukeitian and Savilian Copies: or rather, αὐτοῖς μὴν, &c. Valef.

CHAP. LXVI.

In what manner he put a stop to the Controversies raised in Africk.

* Madnesse
of Africa
Some persons, who with a rash levity had dared to rent the Religion of the people into various Sects; We being desirous to put a stop to this Disemper, could find no other remedy sufficient to effect its Cure, than (after we had destroyed Ἰερουσαλὴμ, &c. A little after, where the reading is ἡ δὲ δὴν, the particle ἡ is to be expunged. He means The Donatists, who after the Roman Synod and that of Orleans, after Constantine's own determination, were as yet tumultuous in Africa. Valef.

the Common Enemy of the world, who had opposed his own impious Opinion and Command against your sacred Synods; ) that we should send some of You as Assistants in order to the making up an agreement between those who were at variance one with another.

had opposed his own impious opinion, &c. For Licinius had prohibited the Synods of the Christian Prelates, as Eusebius attests in book 1. chap. 5. . . But Christophorus by a great mistake thought, that by the Common Enemy of the world here was meant The Devil. The meaning of this place therefore is this. We had thought, says Constantine, after our conquest of Licinius, of sending some of you Eastern Bishops into Africa, to make up a Peace there between the Donatists and Catholics. For, when the Bishops of Italy and of the Gallia's could not effect that, we hoped it would at length be done by your help. But, as we perceive, you your selves do now stand in need of Peace-makers. Valef.

* Ἀποδείκναι us. I write ἀποδείκναι, from Gruter's and Moreau's Copy; whereto agree the Fukeitian and Savilian Manuscripts and the Kings Sheets. Valef.

CHAP. LXVII.

That the Beginnings of Religion were from the East.

FOR, whereas the power of [the true] Light, and the Law of the Sacred Religion, being by the Beneficence of God given forth out of the Bosoms (as I may so say) of the East, hath at the same time illuminated the whole world with its Sacred Light; we upon a very good account believing ἡμεῖς you would prove the Authors as 'twere and Promoters of the Salvation of [all] Nations, have attempted to find you out, as well by a propensity of our mind, as the sight of our eyes. Immediately * Or, Effecting therefore after our great Victory and among our most certain Triumph over our Enemies, we had resolved before all things to enquire into that again, which we judged to be the chiefest and most momentous of all.

COPY. Nor is the reading otherwise in the Fukeitian and Savilian Manuscripts. Further, Constantine does expressly reckon the Egyptians amongst the people of the East, which was not perceived by Christophorus. Indeed, Egypt was then accounted amongst the Provinces of the East, from the times of Maximine, who having been constituted Caesar in the East, had had Egypt under him. Hence 'tis, that Ann. Marcellinus (in his fourteenth book, where he reckons up the Provinces of the East,) attests, that Egypt and Mesopotamia were of their number. The place occurs at pag. 19 of our Edition. Moreover, the Comes of the East had Egypt and Mesopotamia under his dispose in the times of Constantine and Constantius, as this old Inscription informs us: M. MAECIO MEMMIO FURIO BALBUTIO CÆCILIANO PLACIDO. C. V. COMITI ORIENTIS ÆGYPTI ET MESOPOTAMIÆ CONSULI ORDINARIO, &c. Further, under the Latter Emperours, although the Egyptian Diocese was severed from the Orientale, yet 'twas always under the Prefectus Prætoris in the East, as 'tis manifest from the Notitia of the Empire. A little after, I think it should be written, ἔτι μὲν ἡγεμονία have lasted to find you out. Valef. * Ἄνευ γὰρ τῆς μελέτης us. 'Tis the same with what he had said in the foregoing chapter, τὸν καὶ τὸν τῶν ἀρχαίων ἐξ ὧν ἔγεννη, ἅψα, after we had destroyed the Common Enemy of the world. Constantine means the Hadrianopolitane Battle, and that at Chalcedon. The former of which happened on the fifth of the Nones of July: the latter on the fourteenth of the Calends of October, in the year of Christ 324. About the end of which year this Letter seems to have been dated: Valef.

* Τέλει αὐτῶν εἰδόμενοι. I think the reading should be εἴτε ἐπὶ perhaps also αὐτοῖς; that is, we had resolved again to enquire into and determine that dissention of the Donatists. In the excellent Fukeitian Copy the reading is τὴν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, &c. and so 'tis intended in Turnebus's and Moreau's Copy at the margin. Some words are doubtless wanting here. But the meaning of the place is wholly the same with what I have said. Further, the reading of all Copies being compared together, the place seems to be restored thus, τὴν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, &c. we resolved upon enquiring what that first thing was, which, &c. Valef.

CHAPTER LXVIII.

That being troubled by reason of the Disturbance, he advises to an Agreement.

BUT (O the most Beautiful and Divine Providence!) what a deadly wound hath been given to Our Ears, or rather to <sup>a</sup> our very heart, when 'twas told us, that the dissentions raised amongst you were far more fierce than those which have been <sup>b</sup> left remaining in Africk? In so much that, your parts, from which we hop'd a remedy might have been produced for others, do now stand in need of a greater Cure. Indeed, when we seriously considered of the Origin and cause of these [differences,] the Occasion appeared to us very trivial, and such as in no wise deserved so fierce a Contest. Wherefore, being induced to a necessity of [penning] this Letter, and writing to Your <sup>c</sup> Unanimous Sagacity, having also called upon Divine Providence to be Our Assistant in this affair, we do upon a good account interpose

For to the Fukerian and Savlian Cognis,
and the Kings
Sheets,
do plainly
give it us
written. In Valef. In Robertus
phens the reading is regisus aleucus
a deadly blow,

Our Self as the * Arbitrer of your mutual dissention, and as an † Administrator of Peace. For, if We Our Self (God giving us his assistance, although there were a greater occasion of discord, yet ‡ by infilling reason into the Pious minds of our Hearers, could be able without much difficulty § to recal each person. to more wholesome Counsils; why may not we the same person (in regard the occasion is small and very trivial, which binds the agreement of the whole Body,) promise Our Self an easier and far more expeditious || accommodation of this matter?

|| Or, E. more expedite || accommodation of this
mendation. matter?

Τὸν δὲ ἐπὶ κατηγόρησαν. Chriſtophorſon ſaw nothing here, nor perceived that this word ἐπὶ was to be referred to the Schiſm of the Donatiſts; whereof Conſtantine had ſpoken above. The Emperour ſays therefore, that this Schiſm was for the moſt part appeaſed, and that only ſome ſmall Remains of it were left in Africa. Valeſ.

It is true that ἀφ' ὁμοῦ signifies unanimously. Chrysostomus designedly omitted the term ἀφ' ὁμοῦ unanimous, because he thought that Alexander and Arius could not be termed unanimous; in regard they disagreed one with another about matters of so great consequence. But Constantine does nevertheless term them unanimous, regard be thought well of them both, and believed that they disagreed in words, rather than in reality and in mind. But the term ἀφ' ὁμοῦ seems but little agreeable to Prelates. The Emperors do use this term indeed in their Letters to Governors of Provinces. But when they speak to Prelates, they do more frequently use Sanctity, Gravity, or Prudence. The Old Glosses of ἀφ' ὁμοῦ Solertius, Exerpetius, Sagacis or Prudence. Exemplum, Valc.

Εἰς τὸ γεννητὸν ἔκτος ἡμετέρας. The word ἔκτος seems to be used in the Neuter Gender. For 'tis referred to the Article ἔκτος, whereto by an an ἔτος answers. In the Kings and Fukerian Copy therefore, after the Verb γεννησθαι, a distinction is rightly placed. For the fense is not entire. But Christophorus, contrary to his own usage, of one priod has made two. Vale!

CHAP. LXIX.

Whence the Controverſie between Alexander and Arius aroſe; and, that ſuch matters ought not to be enquired into.

WE understand therefore, that the Ground of the present Controversie arose from hence. For whereas You, Alexander, enquired

2 ἡ δὲ σὺν. of your Presbyters, 2 what every particular per-78 ἑαυτοῦ The word ἑαυτοῦ is without doubt to be added from Gelasius
Cyricen book 2 chap 4. But Nicephorus (book 8. chap. 13) has ἑαυτοῦ thought. By and by, where the reading is ἑαυτοῦ, the Fuketan and Saitan Copies have it written ἑαυτοῦ, which is truer. Valef.

sons [Sentiment was] concerning a certain passage of those things written in the Law, or rather asked about a part of fruitless Controversie: and whereas You, Arius, inconsiderately vented that; which you ought either not to have conceived at first, or if you had had the such conceptions, it had been your duty, to doing have let them been buried in silence: * between a diffension has been raised between you, a communion is denied, and the most holy people, rent into two Factions, are separated from the harmonious unity of the whole Body. Wherefore let both of you, mutually * pardoning each other, and accept of what your Fellow-Servant doth reasonably advise you to. But what is that? It was fitting, neither to have asked such questions at first, nor if proposed, to have made any return pearls thereto. For such Questions, which no Law does the necessarily order or prescribe, but are proposed by the contentiousness of an unprofitable vacancy from business (although they may be made idly, exercise and employ our Natural parts about, yet) we ought to confine within our Breasts, and not inconsiderately divulge them in public assemblies, nor unwisely commit them to the Ears of the Vulgar. For, what person amongst a thousand is sufficiently qualified, either accurately to comprehend the full efficacy and nature of things so sublime and performed, or to explicate them according to their worth and dignity? Or, should any man look upon this to be an easy all our performance, how small a part of the Vulgar will be induce to be fully persuaded hereof? Or, what man can without danger of falling into gross errors, insist upon the accurate discussions, in of such nice Controversies? In questions there-fore of this nature, Loquacity must be bridled, and restrained, lest either through the frailty of our Nature, we being not able to explicate what we propose, or through the slower understanding of the Auditors, (being unable accurately to apprehend those matters discoursed of;) least we should be reduced to a necessity either of Blasphemy, or Scijism.

Convention is denied to some. Christopherson translated it in this manner, Conventus qui in Ecclesia fieri solet, impeditur, the assembly which is wont to be made in the Church, is hindered. They took quibus therefore here for Synaxis, in which sense 'tis used not infrequently. So again in this chapter, sic quatuor quibusdam locis, divulge them in or among public assemblies. Farther, Epiphani. Scholasticus renders it myſteria continentur, the myſteries are contained. Valeſ.

† Τὴν ἀντίφωνον ἐκείνου. Socrates and Gelasius Cyzicenus and Nicephorus have ἄνθρωπον, that is, affording me your ears and mind. But the common reading, which we have followed, is truer. For ὁ Constantine expresses himself below in the next chapter. Epiphanius renders it voluntatem præbens. Valcf.

* Ἡ δὲ τῶν ἄνθων. In the King's, Fuk. and Savil. Copies the reading is, ἡ τῶν τῶν, &c. In Nicephorus 'tis ἡ τῶν ἑκ τῶν, &c. truer than in the common Editions. By and by, from the Fuketian and Savil. Copies I have mended it, ἡ τῶν ἄνθων ἀνεκδοτῶν ἐξ ἀνθων, or through the flower understanding of the Auditors, &c. Valef.

s. Ε & αυτο τις. In the King's, and Fuk Copy the reading is αυτο without the Preposition; which reading may be born with if you refer the word αυτο to those which follow it καταδικαζομενους αυτου, either of Blasphemy, or Schiſm. The one of these αυτο says he, will beget an occasion either of Blasphemy, or Schiſm. But Socrates and Gelasius and Nicephorus have it written here αυτου & αυτου. Indeed, this place is very difficult and obscure by reason of the ill Syntax. Therefore in the King's Copy at the side of this line I set this mark o that is, geniuv, accend. Vale.

CHAP. LXX.

An Exhortation to an agreement.

Wherefore, let an unwary Question, and an inconsiderate Answer in both of You mutually pardon each other. For this contest hath not been raised among you upon an occasion of any principal or chief Commandment of our Law: nor have you introduced any new Herefie concerning the worship of God. But both of You hold one and the same Opinion; so that, You may easily close with each other in a consent of Communion.

Laetus and Musculus render it Communiois testram, Mark or token of communion; Christophorus, communiois consensum, consent of communion. I had rather render it Signum a sign. For, as in the mysteries of the Heathens some Signs or Symbols were delivered to the persons initiated, whereby the Symyiste companions of the same discipline might know one another: so the Christians had a sign of Communion, that is, The Eucharist, or Baptism. Indeed, Epiphanius Scholasticus renders it communiois signum, a sign of Communion. Valef. Valefius has translated it a society of Communiois.

CHAP. LXXI.

That a pertinacious Contention ought not to have been raised concerning this matter, on account of some light and frivolous Expressions.

For whilst you thus pertinaciously contend about trifles and matters of no importance, 'tis not decent that so numerous a multitude of God's people should be under your Care and Government, because of your dissention with one another: nor is it only misbecoming, but 'tis likewise judged to be altogether unlawful. Now, that we may advertise your prudence by a smaller instance, We will tell you: you know even the Philosophers themselves, how that they are all united in [the profession of] one Sect, whereas nevertheless, they frequently disagree in some part of their Assertions: but although they dissent in the very Perfection of science, yet because of the agreement and union of their Sect, they close again in a mutual consent. Now, if it be so [amongst them], how will it not be much more reasonable, that You, who are the Admirers of the most High God, should in like manner be unanimous in the profession of the same Religion? But, Let us with more accuracy and a greater attention, inspect and examine what we have now said; whether it be reasonable, that because of the trivial, vain, and pertinacious Contentions between you about words, Brethren should be set in array as twice against Brethren; and that the Venerable Assembly should upon your account, who contend one with another about things so slight and in no wise necessary, be rent in sunder by an impious variance. These things are poor and mean, and do besit a childish ignorance, rather than agree with the understanding of Priests and prudent men. Let us of our own accord depart from the Temptations of the Devil. Our Great God hath reached forth a Light common to all. By the assistance of whose Providence, give us leave who are his Servants, successfully to finish this our Endeavour; that by our Exhortation, diligence, and earnest admonitions, we may reduce you to a Communion of Convention. For in regard, as we have said already, your faith is one and the same, and your Sentiment of our Religion is one, and whereas the commandment of the Law doth in each part of it inclose all in general in one consent and purpose of mind: Let not this thing, which has raised a small contention between you, (in as much as it appertaineth not to the sum of Or, The all Religion in general,) by any the whole means make any Separation and Faction amongst you. And these things we speak, not to necessitate you to be all of one opinion concerning this foolish idle Question, of what soever it be. For the pretious value of the Convention may be preserved entire amongst you, and one and the same communion may be retained, although there be interchangeably amongst you a great diversity of Sentiments in things of the least moment. For, we do not all the same in all things; nor is there in us one disposition or opinion. Therefore concerning the Divine providence, let there be amongst you one faith, one understanding, and one consent in reference to God. But, as for those slender and trivial questions, which with so much niceness you dispute of and make researches the Deity into amongst your selves, although therein you do not agree in the same opinion, yet 'tis fit you should confine them to your own thoughts; and keep them within the secret repositories of your minds. Let therefore that eximious [privilege] of a common friendship, and the belief of the Truth, Or, Faith, and the honour of God, and a religious observance in reference to [His] Law, remain amongst you firm and immovable. Return ye to a mutual friendship and charity: restate to the whole Body of the people their own embraces. And be you your selves (having purified your own souls as there,) acquainted again with each other, and renew your familiarity with each other.

That is, this our endeavour and purpose, of establishing concord in the Church, and of reducing all men to the worship of one God. Concerning which endeavour and design, Constantine hath spoken at the beginning of this Letter, and does boast of it every where. Valef.

For the Law enjoys us nothing else but love; namely, that we should love God with the entire affection of our hearts, and our neighbour as our selves. In these two consists the whole Law, as our Lord says in the Gospel. Christophorus understood not this passage; he renders it thus; unumque Legi ac discipline institutum, &c. and one Decree of the Law and discipline, which binds the whole body of the Church with its parts, in one agreeing concord and purpose of minds. Porreftus translates it truer, thus; Præceptumque Legi in id omnibus partibus includitur, ut in unam animam universum concludatur, et the commandment of the Law in all its parts earnestly endeavours as this, that it may include the whole Body in one mind. Perhaps also it should be written tris, tris autem partes in both its parts. For there are two parts of this commandment, the one has a reference to God, the other to our neighbour. Valef.

And be you your selves (having purified your own souls as there,) acquainted again with each other, and renew your familiarity with each other. That is, having put away the darkness of hatred, wherewith the enmities of your mind was clouded and obscured. For it follows, adhaerere discipulis, that is, be acquainted one with another again, embrace, salute. In which words Constantine seems to allude to the usage of the Christians of his own time: amongst whom in their sacred Conventions, whilst the people approach'd to the participation of the Mysteries, the Deacon often cried out discipulus adhaere, take acquaintance one of another; to wit, least any prophane person or Jew might creep to the sacred Table, as Chrysostome informs in his first Oration against the Jews, pag. 440 of the First Tome. The same word Marcion used when

The last word is wanting in Gelasius Ciceronius, nor does it seem very necessary. This certain, Epiphanius has omitted it in his Version. Valef.

Translators understood not what the import of this was here; some of them have rendered it Opinion, or firm consent in one opinion; others, a profession of discipline. But, there is not one opinion amongst Philosophers, as 'tis sufficiently manifest. Therefore I had rather render it Sect. For all Philosophers have some Sect to which they are addicted; some have the Sect of the Stoicks; others, that of the Peripateticks. Now, in every Sect there are sometimes controversies concerning some questions between Philosophers of the same Sect. Yet the same persons, on account of the society of their Sect, do easily agree one with another. This is the meaning of Constantine's words at I think. Valef.

That we. We must read God; that you; from Gelasius, Nicophorus, and Epiphanius. And a little after, to divide between you, from the same Authors; to whom agree the Fugesian and S. vian Copies, and the Kings Street. Valef.

one with another about things so slight and in no wise necessary, be rent in sunder by an

Or, Faith, and the honour of God, and a religious observance in reference to [His] Law, remain amongst you firm and immovable. Return ye to a mutual friendship and charity: restate to the whole Body of the people their own embraces. And be you your selves (having purified your own souls as there,) acquainted again with each other, and renew your familiarity with each other.

That is, having put away the darkness of hatred, wherewith the enmities of your mind was clouded and obscured. For it follows, adhaerere discipulis, that is, be acquainted one with another again, embrace, salute. In which words Constantine seems to allude to the usage of the Christians of his own time: amongst whom in their sacred Conventions, whilst the people approach'd to the participation of the Mysteries, the Deacon often cried out discipulus adhaere, take acquaintance one of another; to wit, least any prophane person or Jew might creep to the sacred Table, as Chrysostome informs in his first Oration against the Jews, pag. 440 of the First Tome. The same word Marcion used when

THE
THIRD BOOK
OF
EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS
CONCERNING
THE LIFE
OF THE
BLESSED EMPEROR
CONSTANTINE.

CHAP. I.

A Comparison of Constantine's Piety with the Improbability of the Persecutors.

IN this manner the Devil, the hater of Good, envying the Felicity of the Church, raised up Storms and intestine Disturbances in it. during a time of Peace and Joy.

In the interim, the Emperor dear-to-God neglected not the performance of what became him<sup>b</sup> but doing all things contrary to what had been audaciously perpetrated a little before by Tyrannick Cruelty, [by that means] he was made Superior to every of his Enemies and opposers. In the first Place therefore, They, alienated from [his Worship] who truly is God, by various all Men to adore those who were not Gods: but He, evincing them as well by words as in reality in no wise to be Gods, exhorted all Persons to an acknowledgment of Him who is the only God. Besides, they derided God's Christ with blasphemous Expressions: But he<sup>e</sup> assumed to himself as his prerogative, that very thing, a*quælo, be assumed.* But if you had rather take the verb esedælo in its common signification, that may also be born with. For Constantine ordered it to be engraven on the Base of his Statue, which he erected at Rome after the Victory gotten over Maxentius, that by the Virtues of this Standard Rome had been set at Liberty by him. Vale!

gainst which those impious Wretches with the greatest Virulency * belch'd forth their Blasphemy * Or, Apmies; and gloried in the Trophy of [Salu-plied.

ary] Passion. They persecuted the Worshippers of Christ, and drove them from their Houses and Habitations. He recalled them all [from Exile,] and restored them to their own Dwellings. They surrounded them with ignominies; he made them honourable and happy in the opinion of all men. They seized upon the Goods of God's Worshippers, and with the greatest injustice made sale of them: He not only restor'd their Goods to them, but likewise enrich them abundantly with very many Gifts and Benefactions.

They by written Constitutions<sup>a</sup> publish'd Calumnies against the Prelates [of Churches:] on the contrary, he rais'd and advanced those Men to Honour [bestowed] by Himself, and by Edicts and Laws made them more renowned than they had been before. They demolished the Oratories to the very Foundations, and from their vast height pulled them down to the Ground: He by a Law ordained, that those Oratories which were standing should be raised higher, and that new ones should be magnificently erected, [the ἡ βασιλεὺς ἡ ἐν τῷ ἐνδιάκονῳ. In the interim, παρὰ τὴν βασιλίσσαν.

Free charged

 In Henry Savil's Copy the reading is ὁ δὲ βασιλεὺς. In the Old Savil's both readings are retained, in this manner, ὁ δὲ βασιλεὺς καὶ βασιλίσσα. Valef.
 ἡ βασιλίσσα παρὰ τὴν βασιλίσσαν. In Maur's Copy 'tis mentioned in the margin, παρὰ δὲ παρὰ τὴν βασιλίσσαν. But deing, &c. as 'tis also in the Fak. and Savil. Copies. A little before instead of τὰς αὐτὰς ἀποστολικὰς, of what belonged to him; z
 τὰς αὐτὰς Copies and the King's Sheets have it: τὰς αὐτὰς ἀποστολικὰς, of what became him. Valef.

with blasphemous Expressions: But he assumed to himself as his preservative, that very thing, ascribed as his preservative. It seems to be used instead of emphatic.

<sup>d</sup> Ταῦς καὶ τῶν, &c. The Rule of Syntax requires that we should read τῶν καὶ τῶν, &c. A little after it must be written τῷ πατρὶ αὐτῷ κυρίῳ, to honour [bestowed] by himself; as the reading is in the Fuketian and Savil. Copist. Valef.

of Priests made up of a variety of beautiful Flowers.

CHAP. VII.

Concerning the Oecumenical Synod, at which were present Bishops out of all Provinces.

* *Tadnag-Hiva, the firstfruits,
or top.* * THE most eminent therefore amongst God's Ministers of all those Churches which fill'd all Europe, Africk, and Asia, were conve-

<sup>a</sup> Fit' oin εὐαγγέλιον. I read εἰς τὸ οἶον, &c. and one sacred, &c. from Gelasius Cyzicenus, Nicephorus, and Socrates. Valf.

estinians likewise and moreover Egyptians, Thebans, Libyans; also those that came out of Mesopotamia. There was likewise present at this Synod a Persian Bishop; nor was the Scybian absent from this Quire. Pontus also, Galatia, and Pampbylia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Phrygia afforded their most select Divines. Moreover, [there appeared here] Tibratians and Macedonians, Achadians and Epirots, and such as dwell far beyond these were

* Or, The nevertheless present. From * Spain likewise in Spaniards self, that most celebrated Person [Hofius] was themselves, etc. amongst the many others, who fate in this one, amongst the many others, who late in this Synod. The Prelate of the Imperial City was absent indeed, by reason of his Age; but his Presbyters were there, who filled his Place.

Constantine was the only Emperor of all the Princes since the Foundation of the World, who, after he had platted such a Crown as this with the Bond of Peace, dedicated it to Christ his Saviour, as a Divine Present and grateful Acknowledgement for the Victories he had obtained over his Enemies and Adversaries; having constituted this [Synod convened] in our days, to be a lively Representation of that A-postolick Oujire.

saunus Or. theod. x. filii, book 5. chap. 6. in these words; Eusebius autem Pamphil. &c. But Eusebius Pamphilus, in his third Book of the Life of the Emperor Constantine, writes that the Prelate of Constantinople was absent from the Synod, but he expresses his name: in whole stead Jome Pictetius appears. But 'tis manifest from the Acts of the Synod, that at that time Macarius was Bishop of Constantinople, &c. So also Epiphanius Sebasteus tells us in Book 2. of his Tripartite History. But this Explication is not to be born with. For Constantinople was not as yet dedicated, nor grac'd with the name of the Imperial City, when the Synod was convened in the City Nicea. Therefore these words of Eusebius are necessarily to be understood concerning the Bishop of Rome. Which Sozomen confirms, book 1. chap. 16. (into which Writer the name of Julius has corruptly crept, instead of Sylvestre;) and Theodoret book 1. chap. 7. Valer.

<sup>d</sup> Máron ἐξ diwō. The same also is the reading in Socrates. But I had rather make it μῶν as 'tis in Gelasius and Nicephorus. And so Epiphanius, Scholasticus read in Socrates. But whereas 'tis follows, that ought not to trouble any one. For Eusebius, hereafter at chap. 26. puts μῶν & together. Valf.

CHAP. VIII.

That, like as [ 'tis said ] in the Acts of the Apostles, they met together out of various Nations.

* See Acts 2. 5. FOR 'tis * said, that in the Apostles times, there were gathered together devout men out of every nation under heaven. Amongst whom were Partians, Medes, and Elamites, and the Inhabitants of Mesopotamia, Judea and Cappadocia, of Pontus, and Asia, of Phrygia and Pamphylia, of Egypt and the parts of Libya adjacent to Cyrene: strangers also of Rome, Jews and Proselytes, Cretians, and Arabians. This only was wanting amongst them, they who met were not all the Ministers of God. But in this present Quire, there was a multitude of Bishops, which exceeded the Number of <sup>a</sup> two hundred and fifty. But the number of the Presbyters and Deacons who followed them, <sup>b</sup> of the Acolyths, and of the many other Persons, was not to be comprehended.

reading is trecentisio tres hundred. The Ancients are not agreed quoted the about the number of the Bishops who were present at the Nicene Synod. Eusebius at this place tells us they were two hundred and fifty. But Eusebius Bishop of Antioch (in his Homily concerning those words which occur in the Proverbs of Solomon, Dominus creavit me.) says they were about 270; but this, that he had Report, and which is confirmed by the consent of all the more modern Authors, is, that 318 Bishops fate in that Synod. So a- not mongst the Ancients Athanasius in his Epistle to the African Bishops, Hieronymus in his Chronicon, and Refrinus. Athanasius in his Letter concerning the Decrees of the Nicene Synod, says, that the Bishops who met at Nicaea, were three hundred more or less. Vale!

<sup>b</sup> ἀπολύνειν δὲ πλείων ὅταν δ' ἐτίγων. It must be written, ἀπολύνειν τε πλείων ὅταν ἐτίγων, from Socrates book 1. chap. 8. and from Gelasius and Nicephorus in the Fukerian and Savilian Copies the reading is ἀπολύνειν τε πλείων; and after the word πλείων, a middle distinction is set in all our Manuscript Copies. Vale!

CHAP. IX.

Concerning the Virtue and Age of the two hundred and fifty Bishops.

Moreover,] of these Ministers of God, * At these some were eminent for their words be-* Wisdom and Eloquence; others, gan a new * Or, Dis- chapter, for their Integrity of Life and patient hiving folsuffrance of Hardships; * others, lowed the were adorned with Modesty and a courteous authority Behaviour. Some of them were highly respected of the by reason of their great Age; others were em- Kings and inent for their youthful Vigour, both of Body and Frickian Mind. Some were newly initiated into Cōy:
to the † Order of the Ministry. To whetters all which Persons the Emperor agrees the commanded a plentiful Provision of Food Old Sluts.
should be Vale.
every day allowed. † Or, † Of A Courtse. Amari

αὐτοῖς. Several fenses may be given of this Privilege. First ἡμεῖς οὐκ ἐσμὲν ἱερεῖς may be taken for modesty and a courteous behaviour; suffering ἡμεῖς to be made use of instead of ἱερεῖς. Or, ἡμεῖς οὐκ ἐσμὲν may be meant concerning them, who were not the eminentest Persons amongst the Bishops for learning and sanctity of Life; but did not cost much behind them. So the Ancients termed those Medios Principes as daces, middle Princes or Commanders, who were neither the best, nor the worst, but were in a middle place between both. Lastly, ἡμεῖς οὐκ ἐσμὲν may be said of them, who deserved to be praised on both accounts to wit, for their Learning and Sanctity. So Socumen has expounded this place of Eusebius, in his first book, chap. 17. in these words: οὐ μὲν οὖν οὐδὲν ἄλλο τι καλοῦν, &c. except in Understanding and Eloquence, and were Eminent both for their Knowledge in the sacred Scriptures, and for other Learning also: others were famous for their Integrity and Virtue of Life: others were well approved on both accounts. Those whom Eusebius terms οὐκ ἐσμὲν τοῖς κατὰ σοφίαν, are by Socumen styled καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς ἐνδοκίμου, well approved of on both accounts. Epiphanius Scolasticus, in the second book of his Theological History, chapter 1. renders this place of Eusebius thus: οὐκ ἐσμὲν οὐδὲν ἄλλο τι καλοῦν, αἱ σπουδαὶ ῥήματα ἱερὰ, αἱ συνέσεις τῆς οὐρανίας χάριτος & patientiæ: οὐκ ἐσμὲν οὐδὲν ἄλλο τι καλοῦν, modo bene virtutibus orabantur: but the Ministers of God, who were adorned with the discourse of Wisdom, others glorified with the exercise of Life and Patientie; but otherwise were in a middle manner adorned with the Virtues of these. Videl.

CHAP.

made by Eusebius but by Eustathius Bishop of Antioch. Baronius has followed Theodoret's Opinion; whom any one, from his writings, will easily find to have been of a mind full of anger and hatred against our Eusebius. But The Antiquor of the Tripartite History, (book 2. chap. 5. where he writes out Theodoret's words,) says that after Eustathius Bishop of Antioch, Eusebius Bishop of Caesarea made a speech likewise concerning the praises of the Emperor. Which nevertheless occurs not oow in the Greek Copies of Theodoret; so that it most fairly follows, either that Epiphanius Scholasticus had procured more perfect Copies of Theodoret, or else that he added this of his own head, as 'tis sometimes his usage. Of this nature is that which we have noted above concerning the Bishop of the Imperial City, whom Sozomenus relates not to have been present at the Nicene Synod, where Epiphanius Scholasticus by a notorious mistake has added the name of Alexander, when as he ought rather to have said Meletianus. But to return to our business, there are those who write, that that honour was conferred neither on Eustathius, nor Eusebius, but on Alexander Bishop of Alexandria, that in the name of the Council he should make a speech to the Emperor. Nicetas in his Theophrastus Orthodoxa fides, book 5. chap. 7. affirms this in these words: Eusebius de Viris Constantini Libro 3. se primum verba in Synodo fecisse testatur, &c. Eusebius in his third book concerning the Life of Constantine the first, that he made the first speech in the Synod. But if we believe Theodoret, Eustathius was the first, &c. But as Theodoret Masterless writes, that honour was freely conferred on Alexander the Patriarch of Alexandria. But in such a diversity of Writers I should more willingly close with that Opinion, which affirms that the first Course of speaking was by the Synod conferred on Eusebius. First of all, because without controversy Eusebius was the Learnedest and most eloquent Person amongst them. Secondly, he himself does plainly attest this, at the beginning of this work, in these words: ἀπὸ τῆς ἑξῆς ἀρχῆς. ὡς καὶ ἡμεῖς αὐτοὶ, ὡς ἡ Πατριεὶς ἐλάλει ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, ὡς ἡ ἐκκλησία ἐλάλει ἐν τῇ Πατριεὶ, ὡς ἡ ἐκκλησία ἐλάλει ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, ὡς ἡ ἐκκλησία ἐλάλει ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ. See the Preface to the first Book, note (2.) Valef.

† The thanks and praise for † Him. After he had taken the Emperor's his Seat aloft, Silence was made, all Persons having fix'd their eyes on the Emperor. When he had look'd upon them all with joyful eyes and a pleasing countenance, afterwards He made a recollection of his own mind within himself, and with a calm and mild voice uttered these words.

CHAP. XII.

Constantine's [Speech] to the Synod concerning Peace.

* Or, Eud. THE * Sum of my Prayers (Dearest Friends!) was this, that I might enjoy the sight of your Convention. Which having now obtained, I render my thanks to [God] the supremum King; because, besides his innumerable other [Benefits.] He hath granted Me a sight of this, which is the chiefest of all Goods: I mean, that I might behold all You Convened together, and † find one and the same unanimous Sentiment amongst you all. Let no envious Enemy therefore in future

† Or, ἀφ' ὧν ἡμεῖς ἀγαπῶμεν. I was of opinion that nothing remained to me. And a little after with Barthelemy and Gruterus I read ἐν τῇ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ. See. But when — I had received information of your, &c. Valef.

† Or, ἀφ' ὧν ἡμεῖς ἀγαπῶμεν. I was of opinion that nothing remained to me. And a little after with Barthelemy and Gruterus I read ἐν τῇ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ. See. But when — I had received information of your, &c. Valef.

nothing remained to Me, but to give God thanks, and to rejoice with those whom he by our means had set at Liberty. But when (contrary to all expectation) I had received information of your disagreement, I look'd upon that † thing as in no wife to be neglected: but wishing that by our assistance a remedy might be applied to this (mischievous) also, without any delay I called you all together. And I am highly pleased with the sight of this Your Convention. But shall then judge that I have managed this affair according to my Prayers, when I shall behold all of You † conjoined in your minds, and one amicable agreement in common concluded on amongst you all, together which it becomes You, who are Persons consecrated to God, to preach to others. Delay not then, therefore, Dearest Friends, ye Ministers of God, Christian and good Servants of the Common Lord and Saviour of us all! But beginning even from hence amongst you, dissolve every knot of controversy by request by the Laws of Peace. For by this means You will perform both what is most acceptable to the supremum God; and will likewise bestow a transcendent favour on Me Your Fellow-Servant.

Preceding, to Preach. For in this sense Eusebius is meant to use this word, as 'tis apparent from innumerable passages in his Ecclesiastical History; for instance, book 4. chap. 15. In the Eusebian and Savil. Copies the reading is bad, thus, ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ. Valef.

* Eusebius in his prayer. In the Eusebian Copy, this whole place is written far otherwise, thus, ὡς καὶ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ ἀγαπῶμεν ἀλλήλους, ὡς καὶ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ ἀγαπῶμεν ἀλλήλους, ὡς καὶ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ ἀγαπῶμεν ἀλλήλους, ὡς καὶ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ ἀγαπῶμεν ἀλλήλους. See. And so Sir Henry Savil and Christopherson found it in their Copies. Valef.

† Eusebius. I read with Christopherson ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ. to dissolve. But the common reading may stand, provided after the words Saviour of us all, a Colon be placed, as Sir Henry Savil hath noted at the margin of his Copy: and so 'tis pointed in the Kings Copy. Valef.

CHAP. XIII.

That he reduced those Bishops who were at difference, to an agreement.

HAVING spoken these words in the Latine Tongue, which were done into Greek by some other Person, he gave those who presided in the Synod, leave to speak. But then, some of them began to accuse their Neighbours; others answered their accusations, and on the contrary made complaints. Many things therefore being in this manner propoed on both sides, and a great controversy raised even at the first beginning [of the debate,] the Emperor heard them all very patiently, and with an intent mind received their proposed Questions; by turns assisting the Assertions of both parties, by degrees he reduced them, who pertinaciously opposed each other, to a more sedate temper of mind. And by his gracious Speeches to each Person, and his making use of the Greek tongue, (for he was not unskilled in that Language,) he rendered himself most extraordinarily pleasing and delightful; inducing some to be of his opinion by the force of his arguments; wooing others by entreaties; praising With those who spoke well; and exciting all to an agreement: till at length he had made them all of the same mind and opinion, in relation to all matters concerning which they had before differed.

* Τὸς τοὺς γὰρ ἀρετῶν. In Sozomenus, Gelasius, and Nicephorus, the reading is ὡς καὶ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ ἀγαπῶμεν ἀλλήλους. But in the Kings Copy it is ὡς καὶ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ ἀγαπῶμεν ἀλλήλους. Valef.

CHAP. XIV.

* Or, *Ex. The Concordant * Determination of the Synod concerning the Faith, and concerning Easter.*

SO that, there was not only an universal Agreement about the [Articles of] Faith, but one and the same time also was generally acknowledged for the Celebration of the salutary Feast [of Easter.] Moreover, * the Determinations ratified by a Common Consent, were engrossed, and confirmed by the Subscription of every person. Which things having in this manner been performed, the Emperor affirmed that he had obtained this second Victory against the Enemy of the Church, and celebrated a Triumphant Feast in honour of God.

were confirmed by the Subscriptions of every one of the Bishops. They who besides these three, think that the Acts of the Nicene Synod were put into writing, are very much mistaken. For Eusebius says in express words, that nothing was committed to writing, except those matters which had been Decreed by the common consent of the Council; and he affirms, that those things were confirmed by the Subscriptions of all. Indeed Baronius in the year of Christ, 325 chap. 62. says that the Acts were written by the Nicene Synod, and has added, that this is expressly recorded by Athanasius in his Book de Synodis. But Baronius was imposed upon by the Latin Version, which runs thus; Tout. i. pag. 873. quod si ad banc rem usus Synodi defideratur, superius ad ea patrum, namque in hac pace negligens fuisse quæ Nicæa convenimus, sed ita accurate scripturum, &c. But if the use of the Synod be wanting to this matter, the Acts of the Fathers are to be had. For those convened at Nicæa were not negligent even in this matter. but wrote so accurately, &c. But in the Greek Text there is no mention of Acts; for thus it runs, ἡ δὲ τῶν μετέωρων, that is, the Writings of the Fathers are to be had; to wit, the Creed, the Canons, and the Synodick Letter. There is another passage of Athanasius, in his Epistle de Decretis Nicænæ Synodi, pag. 2. where it may be manifestly gathered, that there were no Acts written. For he says, ἵνα ἡ ἀποδοτικὴ ἐκείνη ἀλλοτρίῃ ἐκείνη ἡ ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν Synodo, &c. In as much as your love desires to know those things which were done in the Synod, I have made no delay, but have forthwith signified to you whatever was done there, &c. Now, if the Acts had been taken in writing by the Notaries, Athanasius had done enough, had he transmitted those Acts to his Friend. Vale.

CHAP. XV.

That Constantine entertained the Bishops at a Feast, it being His Vicennalia.

<sup>a</sup> These words muffled in interpreted language for the twentieth year of Confucius.

pre-arranged yet completely, may scarce begun. For the twentieth year of his Reign begun on the eight of the Calends of August, when Constantius and Maximian were Confuls, which was the 125th year of Our Lord's Nativity. But the Nicene Council was celebrated on the twentieth of the month May, in the same persons Consulate, as Socrates writes in the thirteenth chapter of his first book, or rather on the 13th of the Calends of July, on the 19 day of the month Disius, which by the Romans is termed June, as it occurs in the Acts of the Chalcedonian Council, in the Alexandrian Chronicle, and in the Collectio Cresconiana, which I think to be true. For if we suppose the Nicene Council to have been convened on the 20th day of May, too narrow a space of time will be left for the transacting of those affairs which Constantine performed after his Conquest of Licinius. Licinius was vanquished in the last Battle at Chalcedon, on the year of Christ 324, on the 15th of the Calends of October, as 'tis recorded in Idacius's Regula, and in the Alexandrian Chronicle. On the day following Licinius, who had broken himself to Nicomedia, surrendered himself to Constantine

the Vatican. After this Constantine, made his Entry into Nicomedia; i whilst he was at residence in that City and basked in the sunbeams of progress into the Eastern parts, he received the news concerning the diffidence of the Alexandrian Church and all Egypt, on account of the Opinion of Arius and the disturbances of the Melitanian. He himself writes in his Letter to Alexander and Arius. And in the first place he kept Hofius with his Letters to Alexandria, who by his authority might compose the Tumults there. But after Hofius had staid some time at Alexandria, he returned to Constantinople without having effected any thing. All which business could not any wise have been done within less time than three Months. Further, when Constantine saw the mischief increase daily, he resolved upon convening a General Council of Bishops, that thereby he might restore Peace to the Church. In order thereto he dispatch'd away the Venerables (Counsellors) and Agencies in Regibus (Messengers of the Emperor) throughout all the Provinces, who might call together the Bishops to Nicaea of Bithynia. Let us suppose therefore, that the Venerables had brought the Emperors word, that the Bishops in the month March were so far from credible that the Bishops could come unto Bithynia from the most distant Countries as well of the East as West, before the month July especially, in regard they were conveyed thither by Land, not by Sea, as Eusebius tells us chap. 6. The Greeks do usually term the Seventh Sunday after Easter, that namely, which immediately precedes Whitsunday, μεσσηνίον τῶν ἀγίων πνευμάτων the Sunday of the holy Fathers, or τὸν ἁγίων πατέρων ἡμέραν & τὴν τοῦ δόξατος καὶ τοῦ κλάδος of the 318 holy Divines which were at Nicaea; as we are informed from The Typick of the Monastery of Saint Saba. Valef.

Further, what was then performed, surpasses the bounds of any Narrative. For the Protectors and Soldiers, with the naked points of their Swords; on all sides guarded the Porticus of the Palace; in the thorow the midst of whom the Men of God with out fear passed, and went into the inmost Rooms of the Palace. Then some of them * lay down together with the Emperor; others reposed themselves on Stribadia [or, Beds to eat on] placed * on both sides. One would have thought, that a representation of Christ's Kingdom was adumbrated, and that the thing it self was a dream, but nothing more.

are the Hajlari, or the Protectors who carried Spears. Thomastius in his Oration to the Emperor Zosian, writes that he went an αρχαγγελοῦ (a Spear Carrier) against the Persian, that is a Protector Domesticus, as we understand from Amm. Marcellinus. The δρακῆται were the Scutarii, Shield Bearers; to wit, Soldiers who were under the Command of the Master of Militum praefectus, or Master of the Milice who lived at Court or in the presence of the Prince. Valef.

Of ἡ δὲ σὺν ἀνακλιμένη. It must be made σὺν together with the Emperor, as Cyril(rhōstos) seems to have read; and 'tis plainly written in the Fukagian Copy. Theodore confirms our Emendation (book 1. chap. 11:) in these words, which do wonderfully explain this passage of Eusebius; *πολλὰ δὲ σὺν αὐτῷ εὐφραντοὶς κλητοῖς, καὶ πῶτον εὐφραντο ὁσωνοὶ τοὺς τοὺς αὐτῶν ἐμαρτυροῦντες λαοὺς, καὶ δὲ ἑῶνς θιζαὺς ἐς τὴν ἀλλήν, and having ordered many Stridada to be made ready, he feasted them all in one and the same place; the more honourable of them he took to his own Table, but disubained the rest upon other Stridada. A better Scollion could not have been placed at Eusebius's words. Those which Eusebius had termed κλινὰς, (for 'to 'tis to be read from the King's and the Fukagian Copy;) Theodore calls σίδας; that is Stridada or Accubita. Nicephorus's Translator renders it toros, which is ill done. Nor has Theodore's Translator done better in translating it Sedes, Seats. Sandas interprets σίδας, κακαστῶς, a Bed lying on the ground, as Accubita. The ἑῶνς 'Givernal's scholastic at the fifth Strida are these; apud veteres Accubita or Stridada were used in the ἑῶνς Strida Dyscumbentes manducabant, among the ancients there was no use of the Accubita, but they lay down upon little Beds, and eat. Valg.*

On both sides the Emperor's intention it must be written ἐξ ἑκαστοῦ on both sides. The which I emendation nothing is more than Εὐσεβίου says that the Sisakida were placed on both sides of the Imperial Chair, wherein the Bishops might lie down; but, that the Emperor's Sisakidum was in the midst, wherein he lay down together with the more honourable Bishops. After the same manner in the Nicene Synod, the Seats wherein the Bishops fate were placed on both sides: but the Emperor himself fate in the midst on a golden Chair, between the two rows of the fitting Prelates. The Tribunal of the nineteen Accabira at Constantinople was some such like thing, made in imitation of his Constantinian Caes. as I think. Valef. See Evagr. book 5, cha. 13. note (A.).

CHAP. XVI.

The Gifts bestowed on the Bishops, and the Letters written to all.

After the Feast had in a most splendid manner been kept, the Emperor received them all, and out of his own Magnificence added this also, that he honoured every one of them according to his desert and dignity, with presents from himself. He likewise gave an account of this Synod, even to those who were not present at it, by his own Letter: which I will insert into this very Narrative concerning him [and will publish it fix'd] as 'twere upon some Pillar. The Contents thereof are these.

CHAP. XVII.

Constantine's [Letter] to the Churches, concerning the Synod [convened] at Nicæa.

CONSTANTINUS AUGUSTUS
To the Churches.

Having sufficiently experienced, by the flourishing posture of the State, how great the benignity of the Divine Power has been towards us; I judged it my chiefest concern and aim [to Labour] for the Preservation of our Faith, a sincere Love, and one universally acknowledged Religion towards Almighty God, amongst the most Blessed * Congregations of the Catholic Church. But in regard this thing could not be firmly and steadfastly constituted, unless all, or at least the greatest part of the Bishops were convened in one Place, and every particular that concerns the most Holy Religion were discussed: on this account, when as many of the Clergy, as could possibly be got together, were assembled, and I my Self also, as one of You, was present with them, (For I will not deny, what I account my greatest Glory, that I am Your Fellow-Servant,) all matters were sufficiently discussed so far, till such time as an opinion acceptable to God the Inspector of all things, was brought to light, * in order to an universal agreement and union: so that no place might be left for dissention or controversy in relation to the Faith.

* Multitudes, or people.

* ἡμεῖς ἱ. Confess of unity.
In Theodoret and Nicephorus the reading is truer, thus, οὕτως τῆς, &c. in order to, &c. Vale.

CHAP. XVIII.

The same persons [words] concerning the Agreement about the Feast of Easter, and against the Jews.

Where also, after a disquisition made concerning the most Holy Day of Easter, * it was by a general opinion thought good to be * ἡμεῖς ἱ. These words of Constantine, Athanasius seems to have had a respect to, when (in his Book de Synodis Arimini & Seleuce, pag. 873.) he observes that the Fathers of the Nicene Synod spoke one way in their exposition of the Faith, another in their defining the day of Easter. For in this business they made use of the word ἡμέρη is pleased, or it was thought good. But in their Exposition of the Faith they did not in any wise by placuit, is pleased, but ita credit sancta & Universalis Ecclesia, the holy and universal Church believes thus. * This certain, the word ἡμέρη which Athanasius mentions, is not found in the Synodick Letter, but in this Letter only of Constantine, which any one might conjecture, was not without reason taken for the Synodick Letter. Vale.

Decreed, that [that Festival] ought to be celebrated by all Persons in all Places on one and the same day. For what can be more comely, what more grave and decent for us, than that this Festival, from which we have received the hopes of Immortality, should be unerringly kept by all Men, in one and the same order, and in a manner apparently agreeable? And in the first Place, it seemed [to all] to be a thing unworthy and misbecoming, that in the Celebration of that most Holy Solemnity we should follow the usage of the Jews. Who being Persons that have defiled their own hands with a most detestable Sin, are deservedly impure and blind as to their Minds. For, their usage being rejected, we may by a truer Order, which we have observed from the first day of the Passion until this present time, propagate the * Rite of this observance to future Ages. Let nothing therefore be common to us with that most hostile multitude of the Jews. For we have received another way from Our Saviour. There is proposed to us a * Lawful and decent course to [Our] most sacred Religion. Let us therefore (Dearest Brethren! with one accord constantly persist in this and withdraw our Selves from that most impure [Society and] their consciousness. For 'tis really most absurd, that they should boast, that we are not sufficient of Our Selves, without their instruction, to observe these things. But, of what are they able to pass a right judgment, who after the Murder of the Lord, and that parricide, having been struck with madness, are led, not by the conduct of Reason, but by an ungovernable * impetus, whithersoever * Or, Viti-their innate rage shall drive them? Hence therefore it is, that even in this particular they discern not the Truth: in so much that, wandering at the greatest Distance * from a decent and agreeable Amendment * they celebrate Easter twice within one and the same Year.

What reason have we to follow these Men, since Socrates, Gelasius and Nicephorus, have διὰ τὴν ἀσυνέτην, &c. which I like not. For 'tis rightly said παράλογον τὴν ἀντιρροπούμενην.

Whereas the Paschal Noemenia (or New-moon) of the Jews began from the fifth day of the month March, and was ended on the third of April, hence it sometimes happened, that their Pascha began before the Æquinox. So they kept a twofold Pascha in the same year, (if you understand the Solar, or Julian Pascha,) to wit, from the Vernal Æquinox of this year to the Vernal Æquinox of the year following.

Ambrosius says the same in his Epistle to the Bishops of Æmilia, where he writes, that the Jews sometimes celebrated the Pascha on the twelfth month, that is, according to the Lunar or Oriental. For the Jews never ceased the passover on that month which amongst them was accounted the twelfth, but on the fourteenth day of the first month. Further this repetition or doubling of their passover, which Constantine objects against the Jews, seems to me not at all momentous. For the Jews might have retorted against the Christians, namely that they celebrated Easter twice in the same year, if we understand the year current. For let us suppose, that this year Easter was celebrated on the tenth of the Calends of May; on the year following it must necessarily be kept sooner. And so there will occur two Easter amongst the Christians within the space of one year current. Which nevertheless will not happen, if you count the year from the Æquinoxial Caido to the Vernal Æquinox of the other year. See Epiphanius in Heret. Audian, and Per. av. Animad. p. 294. To whom add Ægidius Bucerius de Paschali Judeorum Cycle, cap. 3. Vale.

* ἡμεῖς ἱ. In Theodoret and Nicephorus the reading is τὴν & ἡμεῖς, what reason therefore, &c. so 'tis also, in Socrates and Gelasius.

* ἡμεῖς ἱ. In Theodoret and Nicephorus the reading is τὴν & ἡμεῖς, what reason therefore, &c. so 'tis also, in Socrates and Gelasius.

* ἡμεῖς ἱ. In Theodoret and Nicephorus the reading is τὴν & ἡμεῖς, what reason therefore, &c. so 'tis also, in Socrates and Gelasius.

* ἡμεῖς ἱ. In Theodoret and Nicephorus the reading is τὴν & ἡμεῖς, what reason therefore, &c. so 'tis also, in Socrates and Gelasius.

Jesus. From whom the following words must be amended in this manner, τὸν δὲ δεικνύει ἀγνοῖαν, your prudence. And a little after, ἐν παντί δὲ οὐκ ἔστιν, in no likeness. Although in those writers I have mentioned, the reading is ἐν παντί δὲ οὐκ ἔστιν in the likeness of any thing. In the Eusebian Copy 'tis ἐν παντί δὲ οὐκ ἔστιν upon no pretence. Further, the Author of the Apostolick Constitutions, (book 5. chap. 16.) seems to allude to these words. Which any one will confess, who compares that place with these words of Constantine. Valef.

who, 'tis acknowledged, are distempered with a most grievous error? For we shall never endure the keeping of two Easters in one and the same year. But, although what I have said were not sufficient, nevertheless it behooveth your prudence, to make it your greatest care, and the constant matter of your Prayers, that the purity of your souls should not in any thing seem to have communion with the usages of most wicked men. Besides, this also is to be considered, that 'tis a most detestable thing, that there should any disagreement be found in a matter of so great concern, and in such a solemnity of Religion. For Our Saviour left us but one Festival day of our Liberty, that is the day of His most Holy Passion; and 'twas his will, that His Catholick Church should be one. The members of which Church (although for the most part they are dispersed into many and various places, nevertheless) are cherished by one spirit, that is by the Divine Will. Let the prudence of Your Sanctity consider, how grievous and indecent a thing it is, that on the self-same days some should keep strict Fasts, and others celebrate Festivals; and that after the days of Easter, some should be conversant in the days of Feasting and a relaxation [of their minds;] and the others devote themselves to set Fasts. Wherefore, 'tis the Will of Divine Providence, that this thing should be redressed by a convenient emendation, and be reduced to one and the same form, as I suppose you can at one are all sensible.

He means the head [or beginning] of Feasting and a relaxation [of their minds;] and the Fall, others devote themselves to set Fasts. Wherefore, 'tis the Will of Divine Providence, that this thing should be redressed by a convenient emendation, and be reduced to one and the same form, as I suppose you can at one are all sensible.

by the other Christians, at another. Indeed, the following words concerning the days after Easter, do inform us that these words are to be understood concerning the head of the Fall. Otherwise it would be a superfluous Repetition. But if any one had rather understand these words concerning the end of the Lent fast, I shall not gainsay him. See Chrysostom in his Homily against those who fasted the first day of Easter, pag. 714. Valef.

CHAP. XIX.

An Exhortation, that they would rather follow the greatest part of the world.

Since therefore it was expedient to make such an amendment in this matter, as that we might have nothing in common with the * usage of those Parricides and Murderers of Our Lord, and since this is the most decent and becoming Order, which all the Churches of the Western, Southern, and Northern parts of the world, and also some of the Eastern parts, do observe: * on this account all persons have at present judged it good and expedient, (and I my self have promised that it would please your prudence,) that that which with one and a concordant mind is observed in the City of Rome, and over all Italy, Africa, Egypt, Spain, the Gallia, the Britannia, the Libya, throughout all Achaia, the Asia, the Pontick Dioceses, and Cilicia; Your prudence also would most willingly embrace and receive.

* In the Greek 'tis ἐν τῇ πόλει, in the City.

* Ὁ δὲ πᾶς ὁ κόσμος, the whole world.

* Ὁ δὲ πᾶς ὁ κόσμος, the whole world.

* Ὁ δὲ πᾶς ὁ κόσμος, the whole world.

* Ὁ δὲ πᾶς ὁ κόσμος, the whole world.

* Ὁ δὲ πᾶς ὁ κόσμος, the whole world.

Which [wisdom of yours] will consider, that not only the number of the Churches in the fore-mentioned places is far the greater; but that 'tis most just and equal, that all men should in common desire that, which 'strict reason seems to require, and should have no communion with the * perjury of the Jews. But that I may speak more summarily and briefly, it has pleased the judgment of all in common, that the most holy Feast of Easter should be celebrated on one and the same day. For 'tis most decent; that there should be any difference in so great a sanctity: and 'tis better to follow that Opinion, wherein there is no mixture of strange error and impiety.

* ἡ ἀσέβεια, that is, disigen supputatio, an exact reckoning; whence 'tis termed Computus Paschalis. ἀσέβεια 'tis taken in another sense, in the Synodick Letter of the Nicene Council, where it treats concerning the cause of Meletius. For 'tis there taken for the rigour of the Law, and 'tis applied to equity or a dispensation. Valef.

* ἡ ἀσέβεια, that is, disigen supputatio, an exact reckoning; whence 'tis termed Computus Paschalis. ἀσέβεια 'tis taken in another sense, in the Synodick Letter of the Nicene Council, where it treats concerning the cause of Meletius. For 'tis there taken for the rigour of the Law, and 'tis applied to equity or a dispensation. Valef.

* ἡ ἀσέβεια, that is, disigen supputatio, an exact reckoning; whence 'tis termed Computus Paschalis. ἀσέβεια 'tis taken in another sense, in the Synodick Letter of the Nicene Council, where it treats concerning the cause of Meletius. For 'tis there taken for the rigour of the Law, and 'tis applied to equity or a dispensation. Valef.

CHAP. XX.

An Exhortation, that [all] should * give * Or, Be their assent to the Decrees of the Synod. Or, Be persuaded by those things

Since therefore these things are thus, do you with written by all willingness receive this † Gift of God, and the Synod; this truly divine Commandment. * For whatever is Grace, transacted [and determined] in the holy Assent. * This ob- of Bishops, That has a reference to the divine opinion of will. Wherefore, when you shall have intimated con- fession to all our beloved Brethren those matters which con- cern have been transacted, * you ought to embrace and the author- establish the forementioned rule and observation rity of the of the most holy day: that when I shall come into determina- the presence of * Your Love (which I have long tions of since been desirous of,) I may celebrate the holy Synods, in Festival with you, on one and the same day, and notice of may rejoice with you, for all things, beholding the There is Cruelty of the Devil totally removed by the Di- another vine power, and by * our * endeavours; * Or, place like whilstst your Faith, Peace, and Concord Attions. This is, in a Letter to the same Confession- You, Dearest Brethren!

* Ὁ δὲ πᾶς ὁ κόσμος, the whole world.

* Ὁ δὲ πᾶς ὁ κόσμος, the whole world.

* Ὁ δὲ πᾶς ὁ κόσμος, the whole world.

* Ὁ δὲ πᾶς ὁ κόσμος, the whole world.

* Ὁ δὲ πᾶς ὁ κόσμος, the whole world.

* Ὁ δὲ πᾶς ὁ κόσμος, the whole world.

laffus, and Nicephorus. 'Tis certain, Constantine in his Letters is wont to boast, that the Divine Majesty by his Labour had destroyed the Tyrants who persecuted the Church, and had freed the whole world from the superstitious worship of Dæmons. Valef.

* Ταῦτες
πιστὰ πάλαι
ἐν ἀνταμισιν γε-γράφ. Cleti.
σφοδρον

* A Copy of his very Letter was by the Emperour transmitted into every Province; whereby, as in a glass, he gives those that read it, the clearest view of his own mind, and of his piety towards God.

stood not this place, as 'tis apparent from his Version. For he renders it thus; Edictum, quod idem pndus babeat & auctoritate cum bde Epistola, Imperator in singulis suis Provinciis: An Edict, which had the same weight and authority with this Letter, the Emperour sent into each Province. But Engelhus mentions no Edict, but only a Letter sent to the Bishops. Christophorus thought that ypov signified an Edict, which was a great mistake. For ιστορικωτα ypov his emendatio is nothing else but a Transcript of a Letter; which Gracian do likewise term lex or ιστοριον; and we in the vulgar Idiom call it Copiam, a Copy. Engelhus says therefore, that Confirmatio sent a Copy of his Letter into all the Provinces, or, (which is the same thing,) that he sent this Letter written from the same Copy to all the Provinces. Further, the Reader is to be advertized, that the Title of this chapter was put in wrong place, in regard it belongs to the conclusion of the foregoing Letter, as any one may see. This Title therefore must be placed above, before these words, Simce therefore these things, &c. as 'tis in the Euxetian Copy. And there we have let it. Vale.

CHAPTER XXI.

[His] advice to the Bishops now ready to go away, * that they would preserve Unity.

* Or,
C no:
ing C
cord.

$$\sum_{i=1}^n \lambda_i \mathbf{e}_i$$

Travel tours deals
not th

expression.
on. I Port of render there

thus,
compos
verba
cit ad
discip

Further, when the Synod was about to be dissolved, <sup>a</sup> He made a Valedictory Speech to the Bishops. For on a set day he called them all together. And when they were met, he advised them that they should use their utmost diligence to preserve Peace one with another, and to avoid pernicious Contentions; that they should not be envious, if any Bishop amongst them appeared eminent and approved for wisdom and eloquence: but, should account the virtue of every one to be a common good: that those who were the more eminent, ought † Raise, or, advance, not to † exalt themselves above them who were meaner : For that it was God's property to give a judgment concerning every one's true virtue and worth. That it was rather behoveable, that [the tins manner. Sermones apud Episcopos de rebus ordine dispensandis instituit.

 But συντακτικὸν πρῶτον ἀνάγει imports no more than, Valedixit, he bid farewell, or took his leave of. Monander, or rather Alexander Rhetor, (in the chapter ἠὲλ ἀναίης pag. 624.) writes, that συντακτικὸν ἀναίης was by the Sophists termed an Oration, wherein the Schoolastics (when the course of their studies was completed), departing from Athen, set about to return into their own Country, attended their grief in reference to their going away: or when any one going from home, reflected upon a journey to distant. The same Auctor in his chap. or ἀπὸ συντακτικῶν ἀνμ. gives us the method of such Orations:
 οὐτὶς πρῶτον, εἰδὼς ὅτι ἀναίησιν ἐπὶ τῷ ζῶντι, he that bids farewell, pretends himself grieved on account of his departure.
 Moreover, throughout the whole chapter he every where uses συντακ-τικῶς, for lo valedixit, so bid farewell. And he says, that this sort of Oration was first invented by Homer, in whom Ulysses bids farewell to the Phæacians. But Naxius, comes who translated Monander Rhetor into Latin, renders συντακτικὸν ἀνμ. adumbratam Oratorem, an adumbrated Speech, and translates those words I have cited, οὐρανῶ-σιν. &c. adspiciens, &c. adspiciens, &c. Than which nothing can be more foolish. But with G. Georgius συντακτικῶς is valdebre so bid farewell. Hilarius, συντακτικῶς, ἀποχαισῶν, so Eusebius uses it in the end of this chapter, and in the First Book chap. 21. where he speaks concerning the death of Constantinus Cæsar. There is an Oration of this sort extant, made by Gregory Nazianzen in the convention of the 150 Bishops; which Oration has this Title, συντακτικὸν ἀ-λλμ., which is the same with συντακτικῶς. For in this Oration *G.
 Georgius* bids farewell to the Constantinopolitane Church. Suidas therefore is right in saying συντακτικῶς συντακτικῶς. But, as to what the Græc Suidas adds, that Origen was called συντακτικῶς, is that he is much out: for Origen was termed συντακτικῶς, as Epiphanius attests not συντακτικῶς. Paris.

more eminent ] should yield and condescend to the Weaker, with an indulgence and Lenity; especially, in regard <sup>to</sup> was very difficult to find any thing every way perfect. Wherefore, that it behoved them to grant one another pardon for small offences, and to forgive and remit whatever<sup>c</sup> has been committed through humane frailty; <sup>b</sup> having always an high regard to, and honour for mutual Concord; least whilst they raise Seditions and Factions one amongst another, an occasion of division might be given to those, who are ready to blaspheme the Divine Law. <sup>c</sup> Of which persons we must take the greatest care, and ought to do all things, in regard they <sup>a</sup> might easily be faved, if those things performed amongst us could seem to them desirable and worthy of imitation. <sup>d</sup> And, that they [ought] not to doubt, that the advantage [arising] from discourses does not profit all men. For some rejoyce, that conveniences are <sup>e</sup> allowed them as <sup>f</sup> were in order to their maintenance: others

fect in many places, as we have already noted diverse times. Now, this place may not unfrequently be made good thus; ὅς ἐστιν ὁ ἀληθὺς Θεὸς, ὃς μέλει τῶν ἡμῶν Θεός, ὃς ἐν ᾧ πάντες οὐκ ἀποβήσονται, ὃς ἐν ᾧ πάντες οὐκ ἀποβήσονται, ὃς ἐν ᾧ πάντες οὐκ ἀποβήσονται, of which persons we must take the greatest care, and ought to do all things, in regard, &c. For these words are spoken concerning the Pagans; of whom Constantine had made mention just before, when he said οἱ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἄνθρωποι, οἱ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἄνθρωποι, οἱ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἄνθρωποι, to those, who are ready to blaspheme the Divine Law. Constantine says therefore to the Bishops, that their chiefest care ought to be, lest by their dissentions the Pagans should be provoked to contemn and deride the Christian Religion. For, that it behoves us, to take the greatest care imaginable of them, and to do all things, whereby they might be recalled to the true faith and salvation. But, that they might easily be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth, if our matters might seem blessed and admirable to them. Wherefore, that every one of them ought to be allured to our side by various ways and arts. Then he makes use of an instance of Phylitians, who that they may restore health to the sick, devise all things which they believe may be of advantage to them. These words, 'tis certain, the Translators understood not, in whose Versions the Reader will find all things contrary. To this place is to be referred a passage of Eusebius in chap. 38. of this book, where he says that the Emperour Constantine gave a great quantity of Gold to the Churches for the maintenance of the poor, in regard he was desirous, that all men should be invited, even this way also, to embrace the doctrine of the saving faith; according to the example of the Apostle, who in his Epistle to the Philippians says these words, whether in pretence, or in truth, Christ is Preached. Further, in the Eusebian and Savilian Copies, and Turnebus's Book, the whole place is written thus; ὅς ἐστιν ὁ ἀληθὺς Θεὸς, ὃς ἐν ᾧ πάντες οὐκ ἀποβήσονται, ὃς ἐν ᾧ πάντες οὐκ ἀποβήσονται, ὃς ἐν ᾧ πάντες οὐκ ἀποβήσονται. Which questionless is the true reading. This only I would have amended, that instead of ὅς ἐστιν ὁ ἀληθὺς Θεός, it should be written ὅς ἐστιν ὁ ἀληθὺς Θεός, and afterwards, instead of ὅς ἐστιν ὁ ἀληθὺς Θεός the reading he ὅς ἐστιν ὁ ἀληθὺς Θεός. Paley.

<sup>a</sup> Σολῖμνος Σωμολωνος. At this place σολιμνος signifies to partake of the doctrine of the salutary Faith; in which sense sol is taken by St. Paul, where he says, that God would have all men to be saved, and come to the knowledge of the Truth. This verb is in this sense proper to the Christian Religion. In which signification nevertheless, the Philosophers of the latter age used it, as I remember I have read in the Commentaries of Proclus on Timæus. Vale!

ε Μὴ ἀποψεύσῃ. It is rather to be written μὴ εἰ ἀποψεύσῃ, by understanding δὲ which was made use of a little before; and we have rendered it accordingly. But the Fulcran Copy has opened to us the true reading, wherein 'tis thus worded, μὴ ψεύσῃ δὲ ἵππας ἀπὸ αὐτοῦ, &c. But I suppose you are not ignorant, that, &c. And so Turnebus had mended it at the margin of his Book, from a Manuscript Copy. Vale.

† Εμεγεσις. A new and unusual word; instead whereof I ought, as I think, to be διχογνωσιμῶς, allowed. The meaning of this passage is the same with that we have let in our Version. For Confession says, that the Pagani are wont to be converted to our Religion on various accounts and occasions. That some are drawn by the hope of food, namely because of the Alms of the Christiani. Others, by the hope of Patronage; to wit, on account of the authority of the Bishops, who could do much with the Emperour and Grændees at Court. Πελαγία signifies Patronage, Protection, or Favour, as I have noted at Amn. Marcionit. which term John Chrysostom makes frequent use of. In the excellent Fukesian Copy the word εμεγεσιμῶς is wanting, and this whole place is thus worded; οἱ μὲν δὲ οὗτοι ὡς ὅτι τῶν Χριστιανῶν οἱ ἕτεροι ἐπὶ ἐλπίδι τῆς ἐλεημοσύνης ἐκείνων ἐκτρέφονται. For some rejoice at seeing on accounts of food: others are wont to run under those who are possessed of power, have patronage. Yale.

are wont to nie to Patronage. Some love those from whom they have had a kind reception : and others being honoured with Gifts, are thereby induced to enter into a friendship. But their number is small who are true Lovers of discourses, and † 'tis a rare thing to find a friend of Truth. For which reason they ought all to fit and conform themselves [to all men,] and (like a Physician) administer to each person those things which are profitable for salvation; to the end that the saving Doctrine may be honoured by all men. These were the admonitions [given them by the Emperour] in the first place. But in the close he added, that with all diligence and earnestness they would put up their prayers to God in behalf of him. Having in this manner taken leave of them, he permitted them all to return into their own Countries. They therefore went home with all the cheerfulness imaginable; and in future one Opinion, which had been agreed on in the Emperours presence, prevailed amongst all men;

in regard those who for a long time had been disunited, closed again in one Body as before.

τὸ λόγος
 αὐτῆς.
 The Fu-
 rian Capy and Si-Henry Sa-
 vil's have it written λόγος αὐτῆς ἐγ-γρά-φης, Lr. of the di-
 ctwfrs.
 And in the same manner 'tis mended in the margin of Turner's
 Book.
 But the common reading (expressed in our Versions) is please me
 best, τὸ
 τautology
 Kings Sh-
 as 'tis in the λόγος πρὸς conform τῆς.

my reason of those words which immediately follow, to the end a might be avoided. A little after, the Finkertian Copy and the others have it written ὅς ἐστι μόνον, in one Body; not ἐπ' ἐν the common Editions. In the same Copy I found it written τὸν ἀπολύτως αἰὶ, For which reason they ought to sit and themselves to all men; not as 'tis commonly Printed, ἅνθρωπος
Valer.

CHAP. XXII.

In what manner he sent to some, and wrote to others; and [concerning] the distributions of money.

THE Emperor therefore, rejoicing at this * great success, by his Letters imparted most plentiful and pleasing fruit to those who had not been present at the Synod. Moreover, he ordered liberal distributions of money to be made amongst all the people, as well those in the Countries as them in the Cities; in this manner honouring the publick Festivals [celebrated] on account of the twentieth year of his Empire.

CHAP. XXIII.

*How he wrote to the Egyptians, and exhorted them * to Peace.*

BUT when other persons were at Peace one with another, amongst the Egyptians only the mutual contention was fierce and implacable: in so much that they did again disturb the Emperor; nevertheless they excited him not to anger. For he †reated them with all the honour imaginable, as if they had been Fathers, or rather Prophets of God; and called them to him a second time; and did again with great patience mediate between them; and honoured them with Gifts again, and declared to them his determination by a Letter: wherein he confirmed and established the Decrees of the Synod; and bestowed them that they would be studious to preserve Concord, that they should not distract nor tear in sunder the Church; but that they should take into their consideration the memory of the judgment of God. And these things the Emperour suggested to them by † a peculiar Letter.

CHAP. XXIV.

*That he frequently wrote * Pious Letters to the * Or,
Bishops and People. Piously*

Moreover, he wrote infinite other things of the same sort with these, and penn'd a vast number of Letters; † sometimes to the Bi-<sup>Or,</sup>shops, wherein he commanded those things <sup>Partly</sup> which were of advantage to the Churches of God; at others, he address'd himself by Letters even to the ||populacy themselves, [in which ||<sup>Or,</sup> Letters] this thrice blessed person filed the people of the Church, Brethren and his own Fellow-servants. But we will at another time get leisure * to make a Collection of these [Letters & Sanctions] in a peculiar Volume, to the end the || Series of this our History may not be interrupted at present. || <sup>Or,</sup> Body, <sup>as Indeed, English words were</sup> be here promiser; and in a peculiar volume comprized all the Letters and Sentences of the Emperour Constantine, which bore a reference to the Catholic Faith. This I am informed of from the Medicean Copy; wherein, at the close of his Ecclesiastical Constantine's Letter to the Palestinianus is written out, which Eusebius had recorded in the foregoing book, and after the foreaid Letter these words occur: καὶ τὰς μὲν ἐν ἐλπίδι καὶ ἐξέτασι, οὐκ ἐν ἀκαταστάσει καὶ οὐκ ἐν τῇ τῶν ἀδελφῶν συνουσίᾳ, τὴν Θεολογίαν ἡμῶν ἐν πνευματικῇ βασιλείᾳ ἐπέστηλται, ἀπ' ἐκείνης ἀρχῆς οὐκ ἔστιν ἀνακατασκευάσει; that is, Let these things therefore be preserved by me. But come on now; let us from another band (for, beginning) gather the Laws, and all the Letters of our Pious and most mild Emperour [written] in defence of the true Religion. Vale.

CHAP. XXV.

That he ordered a Church to be built at Jerusalem, in the holy place of our Saviour's Resurrection.

These matters having been in this manner performed, this pious [Emperor] effected another vault work highly memorable, in the Province of the Palestinsians. But what was that? He look'd upon it as his duty, to render that most blessed place of the Salutory Resurrection, which is at Jerusalem, illustrious and venerable in the sight of all men. He gave orders therefore, that an Oratory should forthwith be erected there; which he was induc'd to do, not without God's appointment; but had his mind incited thereto by our Saviour himself.

made  $\mu\eta\eta$ .
 $\mu\eta\eta$   $\epsilon\gamma\epsilon\gamma\epsilon$ , on account of its memorableness. It may also be worded thus,  $\epsilon\iota\varsigma \mu\eta\eta\mu\alpha$ . Turnebus at the margin of his Copy hath made it $\alpha\epsilon\gamma\iota\omega$  instead of  $\mu\epsilon\gamma\iota\omega$ . Valef.

CHAPTER

CHAP. XXVI.

That the Impious had covered our Lord's Sepulchre with Rubbish and Idols.

FOR impious men, or rather the whole Tribe of Dæmons by the assistance of such men, had heretofore made it their business, wholly to involve that admirable monument of Immortality in darkness and oblivion. [The Monument I say] to which an Angel, shining with light, descended from heaven, and rolled away the stone from their minds who were really stony, and who supposed that the living [Christ] as yet lay amongst the dead: [which Angel] brought glad tidings to the women, and removed the stone

* I supposed the word their was to be referred to the women which came early to the Sepulchre of our Lord. But Christophorus referred it to those stony and incredulous persons, concerning whom Eusebius hath spoken a little before; which I approve not of Valef.

b Eusebius modiv. I would rather read ἐν τῷ ὄρει modiv, that is, from what place soever they could get it. Valef.

* Or, Cover'd

they * filled that whole place. And after this they raised it to an height, and paved it with stone; under which great heap of earth they hid the divine Cave which was below. Then, as if nothing else remained to [be done by] them, upon this [heap of] earth they prepare a truly horrid Sepulchre of Souls; erecting a dark Cavern of dead Idols, in honour of that Lascivious Dæmon [whom they term]

Venus: in which place they * offered abominable oblations upon impure and execrable Altars. For by this means only, and not otherwise, they thought to bring to effect what they had attempted, if by these execrable abominations they could cover the salutary Cave. For the Wretches were not able to understand, that it was altogether unlikely, that he who had been Crowned with a Victory over death, should leave this attempt of theirs concealed: * in the like manner as 'tis impossible, that the Sun shining above the earth, and performing his * usual course in the Heavens, should escape the knowledge of all mankind. For the power of our Saviour (which shines with a light far more resplendent than where upon the Sun, and which does not illustrate Bodies impure Altars. But the term ἐν τῷ ὄρει does sufficiently shew, that Eusebius speaks not here concerning Victims or Beasts killed in Sacrifices, but concerning Libations; to wit, Wine, Milk, and the like, which the Heathen offered to their Gods. Besides, 'tis wholly absurd, that Victims should be killed upon the Altars. For Sacrifices were killed by, not upon the Altars. This is a known Verbe of Orsd;

Rode caper vitæm. Tamen hinc clem flabit ad aras, &c. Valef.

a Ὁὐδὲ τῶν εὐσεβίων τῶν ἀγίωνων λαβόν. This place is imperfect, of which sort very many occur in these Books of Eusebius. It may, as I think, not unfailly be made good in this manner; ὡς δὲ τῶν εὐσεβίων τῶν ἀγίωνων πᾶν ἀνέστη λαβόν. &c. in the like manner as 'tis impossible, &c. Indeed, Eusebius's following words do most plainly confirm this our emendation. But Christophorus has confounded all things here, as 'tis apparent from his P. r. sion. Valef.

[as the Sun does,] but the souls of men,) had now filled the whole world with its own Rules of Light. Nevertheless, the Machinations of these impious and profane men against the Truth, had continued for a long space of time. Nor was there any person to be found, either of the Presidents, or * Duces, or of the Emperours themselves, who * Military could be fit to destroy this so audacious an impiety; save only this one [Prince,] the Friend to the supream God. Who, inspired with the divine Spirit, and not enduring that that forementioned place, which by the Enemies frauds had been hid under all manner of impure & filth, should be delivered up to oblivion and ignorance; nor thinking it fit to yield to their malice, who had been the occasioners hereof: having called upon that God who was his Assistant, gives order that it should be cleaned. It being his Sentiment, that that part especially of the Ground, which had been defiled by the Enemy, ought by his means to enjoy the Divine Magnificence. As soon therefore as this Order was issued out from the Emperour, those engines of fraud were thrown down from their vast height to the very ground; and the Buildings erected to lead men into error, were ruined and demolish'd, together with the very Statues themselves and the Dæmons.

CHAP. XXVII.

In what manner Constantine gave order, that the Materials wherewith the Idol-Temple had been built, and the Rubbish should be removed and thrown at a great distance.

NOR did the Emperour's earnestness and diligence stop here. But he issued forth another Order, that the Materials of the Buildings demolished, which consisted of Stone and Timber, should be removed, and thrown at a vast distance without the confines of that Region. Which Order of his likewise was forthwith put in execution. Nor was he satisfied in proceeding thus far only. But, incited again by a divine warmth and zeal, he commanded, that they should dig up the very ground it self of that place, to a vast depth, and carry away the earth which was thrown out a far off, in regard it had been defiled with the Gore of Sacrifices * Or, offered to * Devils. Dæmon

CHAP. XXVIII.

*The discovery * of the most Holy Sepulchre.* * Or, Of the Holy Sepulchre

WITHOUT delay therefore this Command was likewise fulfilled. But after another ground * beneath the former, namely the place which was at the bottom, was discovered; then the August and most Holy || Monument of our Saviour's Resurrection, contrary to all expectation appeared. And then also that Cave, [which may truly be filed] the Holy of Holies, express a certain likeness to our Saviour's Resurrection: in regard, after its being * buried in darkness, it came forth into the light again, and gave a manifest History of those Miracles heretofore performed there, to be viewed with viewed by them who flock't together to that sight; [an History] that attested the Resurrection of our Saviour* by the things themselves, which found far more audibly and clearly than any voice.

*Ergo
etiam propter
quod
It
mult doubtless be made παρορτυγεις, which Christophorus perceived not. The meaning of the place is this, that that resurrection of the Lord's Sepulchre after so many ages, did really confirm the Resurrection of our Lord. In the Eusebian Copy the reading is παρορτυγεις, in which manner Tyrone had likewise mended it at the margin of his Book, from a Manuscript Copy. In the Kings Sheets 'tis παρορτυγεις. Sir Henry Savil had noted at the margin of his Book, that perhaps it should be παρορτυγεις. Valef.

CHAP. XXIX.

In what manner he wrote to the Presidents, and to Macarius the Bishop, concerning the Building [of a Church.]

These things having been thus performed, immediately the Emperour, by issuing forth pious Laws and constitutions, and by plentiful allowances for expences, orders a Church besitting God to be built about the Salutary Cave, with a magnificence that was rich and royal. For he had laid this design within himself long before, and with a divine alacrity had foreseen that which in future would be. [He gave command] therefore to the Governours of the Provinces in the East, that by allowing liberal and plentiful supplies, they should make that Work Stately, large, and Magnificent. But to the Bishop who at that time presided over the Church at Jerusalem, he sent this Letter, wherein by manifest expressions he has asserted* the Doctrine of the saving Faith, writing in this manner.

CHAP. XXX.

Constantine's [Letter] to Macarius, concerning the Building of the Martyrium of our Saviour.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS
MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS,
To Macarius.

*Μὴ δὲ
μὴ δὲ
μὴ δὲ
SO great is Our Saviour's Love and Favour, that a no Rhetorick seems sufficient to set forth a Declaration of the present Miracle. For, that the Monument of his most Holy Passion, long since hid underneath the earth, should lie concealed for so many periods of years, till such time as, by the slaughter of that common Enemy, it should gloriously appear to his servants now set at Liberty, [is a matter which] does really surmount all admiration. Valef.

*Constantine here terms Licinius the publick Enemy; after whose destruction, he says, the sacred Sepulchre of Our Lord, which before had been concealed, was brought to the light and sight of Men. Licinius was slain on the year of Christ 326, as 'tis recorded in Idatius's Fasti. And on that very year, when Helena was come to Jerusalem, the Sepulchre of Our Lord was found. By the name of Publick Enemy, the Devil might also be meant here, were not this contradicted by the following Words. For the Devil was not then finally vanquished and overcome, when the Sepulchre of the Lord was cleared from the filth and rubbish which covered it. Besides, divisions, that is, slaughter, is more appositely spoken of Licinius, than concerning the Devil. Valef.

For, if all those Persons who throughout the whole World are accounted wise, should be convened in one and the same Place, with a design to speak something agreeable to the worthiness of this Matter; they would not be able after their utmost Endeavour, to attain to [an explication of] the least part of it. For the authority of this Miracle doth as far transcend every Nature capable of Humane Reason, as things that are Celestial do exceed those which are Humane. Wherefore, this is always my chief and only aim, that as the authority of the truth doth daily demonstrate it self by new Miracles, so the minds of us all should with all modesty and unanimous alacrity, become more careful and diligent about [an observation of] the Holy Law. Which thing in regard I judge to be manifestly apparent to all Men, my desire is you should most effectually place it to be persuaded of this, that there is nothing which I have a greater care about and concern for, than that we should adorn that Sacred Place [which by Gods Command I have unburthened of that most detestable accession of the Idol, as 'twere of some ponderous and heavy weight; [which place] by Gods determination was made holy from the beginning, but was afterwards demonstrated to be more Holy, out of which he hath brought to light the Truth and Certainty of Our Saviour's Passion;] with Magnificent and Stately Structures.

*Εὐὴ τοῦτον πῶτον. I think it must be εὐὴ τοῦτον πῶτον, &c. and have rendered it accordingly. Valef.

*The term πίστις, faith, authority, or credit, is wanting here; which we have inserted from Socrates, Book I. Chap 9.

CHAP. XXXI.

That he would have this Church built so, as to exceed all the Churches in the World, for beauty of Walls, Columns, and Marbles.

Therefore, it does well become Your Prudence, so to dispose and make provision of all materials necessary for the Work, that not only the Church it self may in Stateliness excell all others in what Place soever, but also that the other parts of it may be made such, as that all the beautifullest Structures in whatever City may be outdone by this Fabrick. And as concerning the raising and exquisite Workmanship of the Walls, We would have you know, that the care thereof hath by Us been committed to Our Friend* Dracilianus Deputy to the most Famous the Prefecti Prætorio, and to the President of the Province. Δρακιλιανὸς τῷ πραιτωρίῳ καὶ τῷ πραιποσίτῳ τῆς ἐπαρχίας. This place must likewise be mended from Socrates, Theodoret, and Nicephorus, in this manner, τῷ τῶν λαμπροτάτων ἐκτελεστῶν καὶ τῷ πραιποσίτῳ τῆς ἐπαρχίας, Deputy to the most Famous the Prefecti Prætorio. There are indeed two Laws of Constantine extant in the Theodosian Code, the one in the Title de Uirgis, the other in that de Hæresibus, written to this Dracilianus. The former has this Inscription; Imp. Constantinus Aug. ad Dracilianum agentem vires Præfectorum Prætor. It was published at Cæsarea in Palestine on the fifteenth of the Calends of May, in the Consulate of Paulinus and Julianus. But the second is said to have been published on the Calends of September, at Genetivum, Constantinus Augustus the seventh time and Constantinus Cæsar being Coss. That is, on the year of Christ 326. On which year also Constantine wrote this Letter to Macarius Bishop of Jerusalem. Further, 'tis to be noted, that the Præfetti Prætorio are here termed Clarissimi, most famous. For they had not yet received the dignity of the Illustrissimi, [or, the title of most illustrious.] Moreover, in other of Constantine's Laws, the Præfetti Prætorio are styled clarissimi, as it occurs in these Books. But, as the Præfetti Prætorio had only the Title of Clarissimi in Constantine's age, so the Vicarii [Deputies] of the Prætorio Prefecture were titled only perfectissimi [most perfect] in the times of the same Constantine; as a Letter to Probianus Consul of Africa informs us. See Athanasius's Apologeticus to Constantine, pag. 194. Valef.

CHAP. XXXIV.

CHAP. XXXV.

e Atria (Courts) of C

CHAP. XXXVII.

CHAP. XXXVI.

ἑνελυμῶν παλαιόσους. The Ancients adorned walls with cut Crusts of Marble of a different colour; all have noted at book 28. of Ammonius Marcellinus, pag. 363. Such Crusts of Marble as these they termed παλαιοί. See Gregor. Nazianz. in Orat. 31: and in his Carmen Anacreonticum ad animum [juv.]. Velfi.

*Nēdy te. Some thing seems to be wanting here, or at least the words are transposed. Therefore I would have the place reformed thus: ἵνα οὖν ἐκκλησίαις τῶν τε ἁγίων ἀειψήσωμα, erecting a sa- cred, &c. But Christopher underlines their words so, as if Eusebius should say, that Helena built two Churches in the Mount of Olives :
 one on the top, the other in the Cave : which nevertheless I do not think to be true. For the Author of the Jerusalem-Itinerary tells us, Panegyric (chap. 9. towards the end.) speaking of that Martyrium which Constantine built at Jerusalem, expostiles himself in the same manner as he does here; ὡς, ὅταν ἐκκλησίαν πεποιμένην, τῶν τε ἁγίων τε σὺνθετο σμῆμα, &c. Where you see, that οὖν ἐκκλησίαις and ἁγίων are joined, and used concerning one and the same Church.
 And he terms the Baptistry, οὖν ἐκκλησίαν, because People came thither to pray; but the whole Sacred House (which being inclosed within one circuit, contains within it self the Altar, Porticus, Secretary, &c.)

Baptistry, and the Church it self;) he terms ruin. Which Eusebius does most plainly declare below; at chap. 50. of this book, where he speaks concerning the Dominican Atrium which Constantine built at Athosch. And thus the passage of Eusebius in the clap of his Panegyric, concerning Constantine's Tricennalia is to be explained; as likewise a passage in his tenth book, and another in chap. 35. of this book; where he joins together ruin and everlasting ruin. 'Tis something otherwise, in the fifth Law Cod. Theod. de his q. ad Eusebii confignat. For there ruin everlasting is called the Baptism or Oratory where the Altar is: But the Church is termed that whole Building within the circumference whereof are contained the Atrium, Porticus, Cells, Barbs, and lastly the Oratory it self. Val.

a Kub rai. a Moreover, here (as the true History attests) the suprem Savjour * in the very Cave informed his

The Author of the Itinerary. * Orato-
r. rus, compa-
um Hero-
mont.

solyma-
nina has these words;
Inde asse-
dit in mon-tem O'i-veti, ubi
dominus discipulis
docuit ante
passionem,
† O. The Ternce you fruit.

go up, to Mount Olivet,
where our Lord taught his Disciples before his Passion. Bede (in his bo. & c.
Lect. Sam.
c. 12. c. 17.)
has this passage; Tertia quoque ejusdem montis ad australem Bethaniam pa rem Ecclesia est. &c. There is a third Church also of the same Mount at the South part of Bethany, where the Lord before his Passion spoke to his Disciples concerning the day of Judgment. He means the place in Saint Matthews, chap. 24. This Sermon therefore Evangelium here terms supplicium ruin & secret Mysteries, because the Lord then spoke concerning secret things, viz. about the end of the World, concerning Christ's coming, and the last judgment. For even the Apostles came then to the Lord secretly, as St. Matthew says; in regard they were desirous to know Mysteries, and the Revelation of things future, as Jerome on Matthew writes. But that which Eusebius says (viz. that our Lord delivered these Mysteries to the Apostles in the Cave,) is not expressly recorded in the Gospel. Yet, the contrary seems possible to be made out from the Gospel. For 'tis related therein, that the City Jerusalem was in fight to the Disciples, when our Lord preach'd these things. They were not therefore in the Cave, but in an open place. Yet it may be answered, that that Cave, had several holes, of which forth there were many Caves in Palestine, as the Itinerary informs us. Indeed, whereas St. Matthew affirms, that the Disciples came to our Lord secretly, 'tis probable that that discourse in the Cave was made by Our Lord whilst he stayed there. Val.

e Tis in burn allego. The first word is to be expunged, as being superfluous. Eusebius seems to allude to the usage of the Gentiles, who performed their Mithræica Sacra [Sacrifices, in honour of the Sun] in a Cave, as Porphyry (in his book of Abstinentia.) Jerome, and others inform us. The Fabrian Manuscript confirms our conjecture, in which the word ruin is wanting. Val.

CHAP. XLIV.

Concerning Helena's greatness of Mind, and Benevolence.

* Or, Magnificence of Imperial power.
† Or, regis
band.

FOR whilst she was taking her progress round
the whole East with a * Royal Magnificence, she heap'd innumerable benefits and favours, both on Cities, and on every private Person also who approach'd her: and with a liberal † hand she distributed numerous [large] gifts amongst the Military Forces. But, on the poor, naked, and on such as were destitute of all help and comfort,

She bestowed very many Gifts: making distributions of Money to some; plentifully supplying others with clothes to cover their bodies. Other-some She set at Liberty from bonds, as also them afflicted with the slavery of the Mines: She likewise freed some that were oppress'd by the violence of Persons more powerful than themselves;
and again, re-called others from banishment.

CHAP. XLV.

In what manner Helena was religiously conversant in the Churches.

HAVING rendred her self eminent by such actions as these, [in the interim] she in * Or, she no wise neglected Her piety towards God. For * She was seen to come constantly into the Church of God; and beautified the sacred Houses with splendid ornaments; not contemning &c.
the † Churches even in the smallest Cities. You † Nat.
might therefore have beheld this admirable Woman, in a † modest and decent garb associating her self with the rest of the multitude, and demonstrating her Reverence towards God, by all † Or,
manner of pious actions. Græcorum,
memor,
frugal.

CHAP. XLVI.

How, being eighty years old, and having made her Will, she ended her Life.

BUT at length, when, after she had lived a sufficient space of time, she was called to a better allotment; having prolonged her life till about the eightieth year of her age, and being arrived at the very confines of death, she composed, ordained and declared her last Will and Testament, constituting her only Son (* Or, Em- Emperor, and Lord of the World.) Her heir, perour, ab- together with his Sons the Cæsars Her Grand- narch, and children; and distributing to each of Her Grand- Lord, &c.
children, those her own Goods, whatever she was posses'd of throughout the whole World.
Having in this manner made Her Will, afterwards she closed her Life, Her † Great Son being † Or, & present with her and standing by her, † Or, Great- imimaginable respect, and embracing her Hands. Or, Chr- Inasmuch that, to those whose Sentiments are good Or, Chr- and true, this thrice-blessed Woman in no wise Or, Chr- seemed to die, but in reality to * make a change * Or, Or,
of this earthly life, for one that was celestial. Or, Or,
* Her Soul therefore was new-framed into an Or, Or,
incorruptible and Angelick substance, and re- Or, Or,
ceived up to her Saviour. Or, Or,

fore was reformed, or, new-framed. These words seem to favour Origen's Doctrine. to which our Eusebius was too much addicted. For the Souls of the Blessed are not reformed into an Angelick substance.
I deem, Origen believed, that in the Resurrection, Bodies would be turned into Souls, and Souls would be changed into Angels, as Saint Jerome says some where. Val.

CH A P. XLVII.

In what manner Constantine deposited his Mother; and how he honoured her whilst she was living.

BUT the Body of this Blessed Woman was vouchsafed no trivial Honour. For it was conveyed into the Imperial City [accompanied] with a numerous train of the [Imperial] Guards; where it was deposited in a Royal Monument. In this manner the Emperor's Mother closed her Life; a Woman worthy of an indelible Memory, both in respect of her pious Actions, and also on account of that most eminent and admirable Son born of her. Whom 'tis fit we should stile Blessed, besides all other things, even for this also, his piety towards her who brought him forth; whom he rendred so Religious, (the having before not been a worshipper of God), that she seemed from her tender years to have been discipled by Him Himself who is the common Saviour of all: whom he honoured with Imperial Dignities in such a manner, that in all the Provinces, and by the very Companies of the Milice, he was stiled Augusta and Empress; and Golden Coins were stamp'd bearing her Image. Moreover, Constantine granted her a power over the Imperial Treasures, to make use of them according to her own arbitrement, and to dispose of them according to her own mind, in such manner as she thought good, and as every thing might seem well-pleasing to her. For even in * this respect also, her Son rendred her conspicuous and † admirable. Wherefore, amongst those things belonging to the illustration of his Memory, We have, without reason, included these also, which out of his transcendency of piety the Emperor performed in honour of his Mother; whereby he fulfilled the Divine Laws, which do injoin due [Offices] of honour towards Parents. These forementioned beautiful structures therefore, the Emperor in this manner erected in the Province of Palestine. Moreover, in all the other Provinces also, he built new Churches, and made them far more stately than those that had been yet dedi. before.

and therefore could not be called the Imperial City, wheras then it was only old Byzantium. Nevertheless Cedrenus has followed Socrates; who also adds this, that Helena died twelve years before Constantine. By this computation Helena must have died on the year of Christ 325, or 326. On which year nevertheless, she is said by Eusebius and Rufinus to have gone to Jerusalem. Besides, after the Death of Crispus Caesar and Fausta Augusta, Helena was for some time alive, as Zosimus attests, book 2. Further, Crispus was slain in the seventh Consulate of Constantinus Augustus which he bore with Constantinus Caesar, on the year of Christ 326. as 'tis recorded in Idarius's Fasti. The death of Helena therefore may rightly be assigned to the year of our Lord 327, as Septonius thinks, book 3. de Imperio Occidentali. Valef.

† ὡς αὐτὴν δοξαίει. It must be written αὐτῇ. For 'tis referred to τῇ κατὰ οὐσίων, as we have rendred it. And so I found it mended in Moraeus's Book, at the Margin. Nor is it otherwise written in the Euk- and Savil Copies, and in the Kings Sheets. Valef.

CH A P. XLVIII.

**Churches, In what manner he built: *Martyria at Constantinople, and abolished all manner of Idolatry.*

BUT when he had resolved upon raising that City to the highest honour which bore his own name, he beautified it with many Oratories, with vast Martyria, and with most stately Houses; part whereof were erected in the Suburbs, and part within the City it self. And by this means, he both honoured the Memories of the Martyrs, and likewise consecrated his own City to the God of the Martyrs. In fine, being * wholly inspired with the wisdom of God, he thought it requisite, in such a manner to purifie that City, which he determined to dignifie with the appellation of his own name, from all sorts of Idolatry; that the Images of those reputed to be Gods, should no where be worshipped in Temples therein; neither should Altars defiled with the † Blood of † Victims be visible in it; nor Sacrifices wholly consumed by fire; nor should the Festivals of Demons [be celebrated there;] nor any other of those usages [commonly practised] amongst superstitious Persons.

* ὅπως δὲ ἐκπαισθῇ. I had rather make it δαῶν, which is far more elegant. So indeed it occurs written in the Fuketian Copy, and in the Kings Sheets Valef.

† ἀδύποτον δαίμονων, with the gore of blood.

CH A P. XLIX.

*The Sign of the Cross in the Palace, and [the *Effigies of] Daniel in the † Conduits.*

YOU might therefore have seen in the Conduits situate in the middle of the Forum, the † Representations of the Good Shepherd, well known to those skill'd in the Divine Oracles; [the Effigies] of Daniel likewise, together with the Lyons, * cast in Brass, and shining with † plates of Gold. Further, so ardent a divine Love had †, possesst the mind of the Emperor, that in the stateliest Room of all those within the Imperial Palace, at the very middle of the Embowed Roof which was gilded with Gold, a large Table was display'd, in the midst whereof was fix'd the Sign of our Lord's passion, consisting of a variety of precious Stones, and wrought with a great quantity of Gold. And this [in my judgment] seemed to have been * set up by that pious Emperor, as the preservative of the Empire it self.

* Ἰμαγεῖς † Ὁρ, Fountain

* Ἐν γὰρ καὶ τῇ παλαιᾷ πύλῃ τῆς Φυκεῖας Copy 'tis written παλαιᾷ πύλῃ; and 'tis referred to τὴν δὲ δὴν, Daniel likewise.

* Ὁρ, Made. But the ordinary reading pleases me better, in regard it occurs both in the Kings Copy and in the Old Sheets. For παλαιᾷ is referred to the word οὐσίων, Representations. So that, it must be written, τὴν δὲ δὴν, [the Effigies] of Daniel likewise. Valef.

CH A P. L.

That He built Churches at Nicomedia also, and in other Cities.

WITH these [ornaments] therefore He beautified his own City. He likewise honoured the * chief [City] of Bithynia with the Monument of a most * stately and most magnificent Church; in which place also, † at his own charge, he erected the Trophies of Victory which he had gained over the Enemies and Opposers of God, in ho-* Ἡμεῖς Nicomedia, which was the head City of his own Bithynia. In which City Constantine in memory thereof of that Victory, Constantine built a Church at Nicomedia. See Septonius, book 2. chap 3. Valef.

now of his own Saviour. Moreover, he also grac'd the chiefest Cities of the rest of the Provinces, with most beautiful Oratories: <sup>b</sup> for instance, that City which was the Metropolis of the whole East, that took its name from Antiochus. In which [City,] as <sup>c</sup>twere in the head of all the Provinces of that Region, he dedicated [to God] a † Peerless Church, in respect both of its Largeness and Beauty. For he encompassed the whole Temple with a large circuit on the outside: <sup>e</sup> but within, he rais'd the Basilica to an immense height: it was built in an <sup>d</sup> eight-square figure; and surrounded on all sides with many Lodging Rooms, and <sup>e</sup> Exedrae, and with † apartments 'as well above as under [or, even with] the ground. Which Church [he beautified] with || a vast quantity of † Gold, and † adorned it with Brails and other Materials of great value.

† Or, Crowned it with the beauties of Brass, &c.

<sup>b</sup> Ὁ ἱερωτάτος
ἐν τῇ γῇ
ὅτι τῆς ἀνατολικῆς
μετέχοντος
λαοῦ. It must be written μετέχοντος
λαοῦ. Except you had read rather thus;
ἡ πόλις
ἐν ᾗ ὁ ἀνατολικὸς
λαὸς κοινῶς
μετέχοντος
λαοῦ;
which reading indeed displeases me
not.

In the Kings Copy 'tis written, ἡ πόλις ἐν τῇ γῇ, &c. Valf.
<sup>c</sup> Ἐπεὶ δὲ τὸν καθολικὸν δῖνον. In his Panegyrick, chap. 9. whence these words are transcribed, Eusebius has termed it ἀνάτολιν. I have rendered it Basilica the Cathedral or Church of itself; not the Sanctuary, as Christopherson translates it. Valf.

<sup>d</sup> Ἐν ὁκτάγωνον. Of the same figure was that Church, which Nonnus Father to Gregory Nazianzen built in the Town of Nazianzen, as Gregory himself attests in his Funeral Oratory concerning the praises of his own Father, pag. 313. These Temples were termed Octachora. This old Inscription occurs in Gruer's Taciturnus, pag. 1166.

Octachorum sanctos templum surrexit in usus.
Octagonum fons est numere dignus co.

Now, that 's a Tenylum Octachorum, which hath eight sides rising from the bottom to the very top. From the same reason Altars are termed trachora, in Paulinus's Epistle; that is, firm square access, being or embosomed with a triple terrace, as the Jane Paulinus explains himself, in his Narrate of Saint Felix. Codrus (as the 26th year of Constantine.) testifies that Church which had been built by Constantine at Antioch, Octagonum Domitiscum, the eight-cornered Church. Valf.

<sup>e</sup> Ἐξέδρας. In Eusebius's Panegyrick, at the chapter just now cited, the reading is true, thus, ἔξεδρας. For so Eusebius terms them, in his description of the Church at Tyre, which you have in the Tenth Book of his Ecclesiastical History. What an Exedra is, Valfridus Strabo tells us, in his book de Rebus Ecclesiasticis, chap. 6. Exedra est aedificia quadam separata modicum quidem a templo vel palatio: distat inde, quod extra heret. Græcè autem ἐκδορά vocatur; An exedra is a certain outward building, separated a little from the Temple, or Palace: thence so termed, because it sticks without. In Greek 'tis called ἐκδορά. Strabo is indeed mistaken, because he understood not, that Exedra was a Greek word: but he is not at all mistaken in the origin of that word. For, 'tis truly termed ἔξεδρας. Exedra, says The 26th Idios, from its being without the seat. For so more outward Houses were termed, which were usually built within the circuit of a Church, wherein 'twas lawful to sit, and take rest, as Eusebius tells us. Concerning these Exedrae, St. Asyrus speaks in his book de Gestis cum Emeritis Domitiani. Cæsar in Ecclesiæ majori, &c. At Cæsar, in the greater Church, when Decentius metropolitan Bishop of Caesarea, together with Asyrus, Augustinus, Possidius, Rufinus and the other Bishops had gone forth into the Exedra, &c. In the Concilium Nemesiense, Canon 6th, there is mention of an Exedra. Prolibendum crucian seculanum majorum instituta, ut in Ecclesiæ majoribus sepeliuntur, sed in arce ante portam, aut in Exedris Ecclesiæ; it is to be forbidden also, according to the orders of our Ancestors, that they should in no wise bury (or be buried) in the Church, but in the Artem, or Porticus, or in the Exedra of the Church. So the reading is in the Manuscript Copy belonging to the Bibliotheca Puteana. See Jerome on the 40th chapter of Ecclusiæ.—Further, the Egyptian and Savilian Copies have it written right here, ἔξεδρας τὰ. Valf.

<sup>f</sup> Τῶντοις τὴν ἐκδοράν γενομένην. See what we have noted at chap. 37. κατὰ γὰρ ἀνάγκην are those where we go up no stairs; to which are opposed ἀνὰ γὰρ or κατὰ γὰρ, that is, Chambers, or upper Rooms. Although by the term κατὰ γὰρ you may here understand Closets, Palais or Rooms under ground. Valf.

<sup>g</sup> For this reason that Church was termed Domitiscum Aureum, the Golden Church. For in the Chronicon, at the 22d year of Constantine; Antiochie Domitiscum quod vocant aureum, adificari captum; at Antioch the Domitiscum which they term Aureum, was begun to be built. It was consecrated in the Reign of Constantine, on the fifth year after Constantine's death. Valf.

CHAP. LI.

That He likewise gave order for the building of a Church in [the place called] Mamre.

These were the most eminent Structures, which the Emperor dedicated to God. But, having been informed, that that one and the same Saviour, who had lately made his appearance in the World, had heretofore exhibited the presence of His Divinity, to certain Men of Palæstine that were lovers of God, near that called the Oak of Mamre; He ordered an Oratory to be erected there also, to the God who had appeared. Therefore, the Emperor's Order was issued out to the Governours of Provinces, by the Letters transmitted to each of them, commanding them to bring to effect what they had been enjoined to perform. But to us who write this History, he sent an Exhortation full of Wisdom. A Copy whereof I judge fit to be inserted into this present work, to the end that the care and diligence of this most pious Emperor might be accurately known. Having blamed us therefore for those things, which, as he had been informed, were done in the forementioned place, he wrote word for word thus.

ters, because in those Letters Constantine seemed in a manner to preach. Such is Constantine's Speech to the Convention of the Saints, and almost all his Letters, which are recorded partly by Eusebius, and partly by others. For in all these, Constantine, although as yet but a Catechumen, plays the Doctor. Indeed, it can't be denied, but Constantine was a Man full of God, and was sent by God in order to the propagation of the Christian Faith; to which single Person, next to the Apostles, we owe very much. Yet in Ecclesiastical affairs, he took something more upon himself, than might befit a Prince that was a Laick; the Bishops permitting him all things, and rejoicing greatly with themselves, because they saw an Emperor a Christian. Valf.

Constantine's Letter to Eusebius concerning Mamre.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS
MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS;

To Macarius and the rest of the Bishops of Palæstine.

Even this very one thing was a most eminent favour of my most Holy Mother-in-law, Eu-doxia. In the rendition of this place all the Translators, Porphyrius, Mosellus and Christophorus, have been mistaken; they rendering it curam or solicitudinem, care and solicitude; as if the reading had been κατακρίνας. But Constantine speaks of his Mother-in-law, to wit, Eudoxia Syra, to whom Fausla the Wife of Constantine was Daughter. For κατακρίνας signifies in Greek a Mother-in-law, as the Old Glosses inform us, wherein 'tis thus read, κατὰ κρίνα, a Father-in-law, κατὰ κρίνα, a Mother-in-law. Indeed, the following words do plainly confirm our explication. For it follows, διὰ τοῦ αἵματος γυνεῶν ὑπαγεῖν, by her Letters to us she hath made known. He meant the Letters which his Mother-in-law Eudoxia had sent to him, Wherefore Christopherson's Emendation is to be rejected, who hath corrected it αἵματι υἱοῦ, to you. Moreover, these following words, ἡ κατεργασμένη διὰ τὸν αἵματι τὸν υἱὸν υἱοδόξου, &c. do sufficiently shew the very same thing. For who would say concerning care and solicitude, ἡ κατεργασμένη, the foresaid care and solicitude? That would have been altogether trifling and foolish. But in our Version all things are plain and clear. For ἡ κατεργασμένη is rendered our foresaid Mother-in-law; who by reason of her Piety and Religion could not hide so great an impiety, but by Letter declared it to her Son-in-law Constantine, that at length he might remedy this mischief. Eudoxia therefore was a Christian, as we learn from this place. Her Daughter Fausla also professed the Christian Faith, and together with her Husband Constantine was buried in the Church of The Apostles. Further, I must not omit what that without any delay, not only all the Idols, which can be found in the fore-mentioned place, shall be committed to the flames; but that the Altar also shall be totally demolished: and, that

h. Τιτωλεως αξιων. I read τιτωλεως αξιων ὁ. That is, it shall be capital for all those, &c. Wherefore, there is no need of Christopherson's emendation here, viz; τιτωλεως αξιων αυτων, he judge him worthy of punishment, who, &c. Nevertheless, there is another reading in the Fuk. Savil. and Turneb. Copies; which is better to follow here. A little after, from the Fuk. Copy make it ἡ δὲ ἡσδαπῃ, &c. Whose place moreover, &c. Valef. Though Valefius prefers the reading in the Fuk. Savil. and Turneb. Copies here; yet he has not shown us what it is.

end We may Order the person detected to undergo the extremest of punishments, as being a transgressor of the Law. For you are not ignorant, that the suprem Lord and God appeared first to Abraham in that place, and talk'd with him. Moreover, the observance of the holy Law took its first beginning there. There Our Saviour himself, together with the two Angels, first gave Abraham a full sight of his own presence. There God first of all appeared unto men. There he made Abraham a promise concerning his future seed; and immediately fulfilled that promise. There be foretold, that he should be the Father of many Nations. Which things being so, 'tis fit, as to me it seems; that by Your care this place should be preserved from all manner of pollution, and restored to its Pristine Sanctity; that so in future, no other thing be done in that place, save the performance of a befitting worship to the Almighty and Our Saviour and to God the suprem Lord. Which thing 'tis fit you should observe with a due care, if Your Gravity be desirous (of which I am confident) to accomplish my will, which is chiefly inclined to the worship of God. God preserve you, Beloved Brethren!

1. Προσχω Lord, Which thing 'tis fit you should observe
 2. ἔλθεις with a due care, if Your Gravity be desirous (of
 3. ἀντιβ. ὄν I which I am confident) to accomplish my will,
 4. ἔλθεις which is chiefly inclined to the worship of God.
 5. ἔλθεις God preserve you, Beloved Brethren!
 6. ἔλθεις fit, as
 7. Χριστοφόρος seems to have read. In the King's Sheers I found it
 8. written ἔλθεις, according as I had conjectured. Vale!

CHAP. LIV.

* Or, *The demolition of the Idol-Temples and * Images in all places.*

ALL these things the Emperour performed with all imaginable earneſtneſſe, to the Glory of [Chriſt's] ſalutary power. And in this manner he ceaſed not from giving honour to God his Saviour. But he endeavour'd all manner of ways to † confute the ſuperſtitious error of the Heathens. Therefore, the Porches of ſome Temples in the Cities were * laid open, they being, by the Emperour's order, deprived of their dooſs: the Roofs of others were ript, that wherewith they were covered being taken off. The venerable Brazen † Statues of other ſome, on account wherof the error of the Ancients had for a long time boaſted, were expoſed to

† Or,
Images.

a 'Fr. ἀπὸ publick view<sup>a</sup> in all the Forum's of the Emπερὶ τῆς σαιε. Sozomen (book 2. chap. 5, where he has in a manner transcribed this whole passage of Eusebius) words it thus, κατὰ τὰς ἀγορὰς, κατὰ τὰς ἐκκλησίας, κατὰ τὰς βασιλείας, in the Streets, and in the Cirque, and in the Palace. Valeb.

perour's City. In so much that, for a reproachful fight to the Spectatours, there lay exposed to view, in one place Apollo Pythius, in another Smintbius; and in the very Cirque it self The Delphick Tripods: and the

<sup>c</sup> The Emperor Theodosius also the Heliconian Muses in the Palace. In fine, the City which bore the Emperor's name, was filled in all places with Images, which being made of Brass with great art and curiosity, had heretofore been consecrated in every Province. To whom, under the notion of Gods, when men displeased with error had for many ages in-vain offered numerous Hecatombs and Holo- causts; at length, though late, they learn'd to be wifer; after the Emperour had begun to make use of these very Images as objects of sport in order to the laughter and recreation of the Beholders. But, on those Images made of Gold he was revenged another way.
For, whereas he perceived,
that the simple multitude,
like children, in vain stood in fear of those * Bugbears of error made of Gold and Silver; it was his Sentiment that they ought wholly to be destroyed; in regard they would be like some pieces of Stones cast before the feet of those who walk
in the dark; and because
a smooth and plain passage
through the Kings-high-way was in future to be opened to all men. <sup>d</sup> Having therefore considered these things with himself, he was of opinion, that he stood not in need either of military Forces or a numerous army, in order to his giving check to these things, but, that one or two of those persons well known to him, were sufficient to effect this business; whom by one nod he dispatch'd a-<sup>e</sup> Themiſtus (in his tion to Theodofius,) is that, the Statue of Au-were in the Curia of Ca-ple. The famous Autho-Oration to the Senate advects, ſays that the were placed on this au-in a double number; but were not now nine, but
Valef;

* ANNO MDLXXIII
rine ordered the burning of the Gods to be burnt Byzantium, that he mi-trified that City with the Spoils. But whatever were made of Gold
then he ordered to down, and coined into Sogomen relates, book
who explains this passage Jebius excellently well
ning this demolishing of Temples and destructi-Statues, our Eusebius rage in his second Serſurrectione. Valef.

<sup>f</sup> Μορμυρανοί, the upſa, as to affright the <sup>a</sup> After these words to all men," those which as far as [Moreover, elbyzantium, &c.] are in the Kings Copy, and in phent's Edition. But added by Gruter, Peter, Theophaſt, and others,

his Kings Panegyric, and nufcript Copies. They found them in the Fable and Sir Henry Savile us notice, that the fa-are extant in his Copy.

<sup>b</sup> Themistius (in his fifth Oration to Theodosius,) is a witness, that the Statues of the Miles were in the Curia Constantianæ. The same Author, in his Oration to the Senate ad Theodosium, says, that these Statues were placed on this and that side, in a double number; so that they were not now nine, but eighteen. Vales.

c "ΑΛΛΗ ΤΗ ΜΕΤΕΠΙΣΤΟ Constitution ordered the brazen Statues of the Gods to be brought to Byzantium, that he might bestiff that City with these sort of Spoils. But whatever Statues were made of Gold or Silver, them he ordered to be melted down, and coined into money, as Sozomen relates, book 4. chap. 8, who explains this passage of Eusebius excellently well. Concerning this demolishment of the Temples and destruction of the Statues, our Eusebius has a passage in his second Sermon de Resurrectione. Valde *Μορμολύχαια, things made up so, as to affright the beholders.

<sup>a</sup> After these words [opened to all men,] those which follow, as far as [Moreover, this admirable Emperour, &c.] are wanting in the King's Copy, and in Robert Stephens's Edition. But they are added by Gruicer, Porfessus, Christopherson, and others, from Eusebius's Panegyric, and from Manuscript Copies. Indeed, we found them in the Fuxianus Copy; and Sir Henry Savil hath given us notice, that the same words are extant in his Copy. Vale!

gyrick chap. 8. whence these words are taken, the reading is emaisim oogeyr, made a discovery of; which reading in my judgment is truer.
Valef.

ful, and † cast it into the fire, and melted it † Or, Tried it in down; so much of it as by them was thought to be to be of use and necessary, they reserved, and superfluous put it up safe. But what was superfluous and and in the wholly useless, that they left to the super- fire.
stititious for a lasting monument of disgrace. More.

* Moreover, this admirable Emperour performed another thing of this nature. For, at the same time that those Idols of the dead, made of precious matter, were spoiled in that manner we have declared, * He ordered the rest of the Images consisting of Brals to be brought together. Therefore, those Gods, celebrated in the doting Fables [of the Greeks,] having had ropes made of hair cast about them, were drag'd away in bound.

* Τὸ δὲ λοιπὸν μωρὸν, &c. Johannes Porteus renders it, ad alia perrexerit. He proceeded to others. Christophorus translates it, religio aggressus est statuas, He set upon the other Statues. In the same sense namely, with that Eusebius had laid above, ἀλλὰ καὶ περὶ τούτων, he was re-venge'd another way. Valef.

* Τὸ δὲ λοιπὸν μωρὸν, &c. Johannes Porteus renders it, ad alia perrexerit. He proceeded to others. Christophorus translates it, religio aggressus est statuas, He set upon the other Statues. In the same sense namely, with that Eusebius had laid above, ἀλλὰ καὶ περὶ τούτων, he was re-venge'd another way. Valef.

CHAP. LV.

The demolishment of the Idol-Temple at Aphaca in Phœnicie, and [the disannulling] those Acts of uncleanness [committed there.]

AFTER this the Emperour having as 'twere lighted a most bright Torch, look'd about with his Imperial eye, it peradventure he might any where find any Remains of Error as yet lying concealed. And as some most sharp-sighted Eagle, which has raised her self to Heaven on her wings, sees from above those things on the earth which are at the greatest distance: in the same manner he whilst he * was resident in the Imperial Palace of * his own most beautiful City, beheld as from a Watch-Tower a certain pernicious snare of souls lying conceal'd in the Province of the Phœnicians. It was a Grove and a Temple, [not placed] in the midst of a City, nor in the Forums, or Streets; of which fewest many [are visible] in Cities, most gloriously built for ornament sake: but this [Temple] was out of the way, far distant from the common Road and beaten path, consecrated to that filthy Daemon [termed] Venus, in part of the top of [Mount] Libanus which is at <sup>b</sup> Aphaca.

but the close of it; to wit, on account of the Beauty and Magnificence of the which Works, which Constantine had most gorgeously erected there. For he had spoiled all Cities, Towns, Places, and Temples, that he might beautify that City which bore his own name. Therefore Virgine has with good reason affirmed in his Chronicon, that Constantine had been dedicated by the nakedness of almost all cities.

* Concerning this Temple of Venus Aphacitis, Zosimus it to be consulted in his first book; and the Author of the Ermologicon in the word Αφάκη; and also Suidas in the word Χερσόβοτον, and Mr. Selden in Synagoga. 2. de Diis Syris. Further, in the Fuketian Manuscript in this thing there is τὸ ἱερόν τῆς Ἀφάκης, of [Mount] Libanus in Aphaca. But in the King's Stores 'tis ἐν ἀποκαταστάσει τῆς ἁγίας τῆς ἐν ἀφάκῃ, in part of the Top of Libanus which [Top] is in Aphaca.

This was a School of wickedness, [open] to all impure persons, and such as with all manner of * Intemperance had debauch'd their bodies. For certain effeminate men, who ought to be termed women rather than men, having renounc'd the † Gravity of their own Sex, appeased the Demons [by] suffering themselves to be made use of as women. Besides, unlawful * mixtures with infamous facts were committed in that Temple, * as in a place that was lawless and without a Governour. Nor was there any one that might inspect what was done in that place, in regard no person of gravity or modesty durst go thither. But the impieties committed there could not lie concealed from this great Emperour also. But when he Himself had look'd into them with the Eye of Imperial providence, he judged such a Temple as this to be unworthy of [being enlightened] with the Rays of the Sun.

Horrible. women, and adulteries, and other † obscene and

Wherefore, he orders it to be totally demolished, together with its Statues and consecrated Gifts. Immediately therefore, the * Engines of this impudent and libidinous error were dissipated by an Imperial Order; and a company of Soldiers gave their assistance in cleansing that place. And they who had hitherto been addicted to Lasciviousness, being fear'd by the Emperour's Menaces, in future learned Modesty: as likewise did those superstitious Heathens, that in their own opinion seemed very wise; who even themselves truly and experimentally underfooted their own vanity and folly.

CHAP. LVI.

The Demolishment of Æsculapius's Temple at Agæ.

FOR, whereas the [superstitious] error of those thought to be wise, was great and much talk'd of, in reference to that Dæmon of Cilicia; almost infinite numbers of men highly admiring him as a Saviour and a Physician; in regard he sometimes appeared * to those who slept in his Temple, at others, healed the diseases of them that were infirm in their bodies: (nevertheless, he was a manifest Destroyer of souls, a Seducer of Men from the true Saviour, one that drew off such as could easily be imposed upon, to the error of impiety: the Emperour * behaving himself according to his wonted manner, (for he had proposed the jealous God and true Saviour as the object of his adoration,) ordered this Temple also to be pulled down to the very ground. Presently therefore, at one nod of the Emperour's, [this Temple, which was] a wonder cryed up amongst the * noble Philosophers, lay flat on the ground, being ruin'd to sleep in a Temple.

This was an usage of the Heathens, to lodge all night in the Temple, expecting Dreams and Cures from their Gods. Of which thing innumerable instances occur in ancient Writers, but especially in Aristides, in his Orations Sacrae. The Latines termed it incubare. Plautus's words in his Curelata are these; Ido sit, quia hic Leno ægerius incubat in Æsculapii fano. Solinus, chap. 7. Epidauri deus est Æsculapii sacellum, cui incubantur, &c. See Saint Jerom on the 65th chap. of Isaiah, vers. 4. Valef.

* Εἰς τὴν δὲ ἀγῶνιν. Christophorus in referring these words to Æsculapius, whereas they are spoken of the Emperour Constantine, as I have express'd it in my Version. 'Tis certain, in the Fuketian and Turnebian Copies the reading is ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τῆς ἀγῶνιν, the Emperour behaving, &c. Valef.

* He means Apollonius Tyanæus, concerning whom Philostratus relates in his first book, that he was a long time resident in the Temple of Æsculapius at Agæ, as the Guest of that very God. Valef.

nered by a Company of Soldiers; and [together with the Temple] <sup>a</sup> He that lay lurking in it, who was not a Demon, nor a God, excellent but a Seducer of souls, one who for an exceeding long space of time had led men into error. Thus therefore he, who promised that he would free others from their illnesses and calamities, was not able to find out a remedy in order to his own preservation; no more than when he was struck with thunder (as we are told in the Fables). But the Actions of * Our Emperor, being such as were highly acceptable to God, were not in like manner fabulous; but by the manifest power of Our Saviour himself, this Temple that in that place was so utterly ruined [together with Copy pla- others,] that not the least footstep of the forces a full mer madness was left remaining there, point.

Then, it has the following passage worded in this manner; ὅτι ἡ ἐκδομὴ αὐτὴ ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ ἱερὲι τοῦ θεοῦ, καὶ οὐκ ἐν τῷ δαίμονι, ἀλλ' ἐν τῷ θεῷ. Because it was manifest from the facts, that no Demon lay lurking within it; nor a God; but a deceiver of souls, who for an exceeding long, &c. The four last words [ἐν τῷ θεῷ] which are wanting in the ordinary Editions, Turnebus had likewise added at the margin of his book, from a Manuscript Copy. Presently, where the reading in the common Editions is, ἐν τῷ θεῷ ἐκδομὴ ἀποδοξάσθη, &c. Thus therefore he, who promised that he would free others from their illnesses, &c. the Fukeian Copy has it thus written, ἐν τῷ θεῷ ἐκδομὴ ἀποδοξάσθη ἐν αὐτοῖς τοῖς ἀσθενέσιν, καὶ ἐν τοῖς κακοῖς τοῖς ἀνθρώποις, &c. For he who had promised that he would free others from their illnesses and calamity, himself found nothing for his own defence. Which reading seems to me fitter and better. In the Kings Sheets also I found it written ἐν τῷ θεῷ. Valef.

<sup>c</sup> ἐκδομὴ αὐτὴ. The last word is wanting in the Kings Copy, and may perhaps be understood. But the other Copies acknowledge it. In the close of this chapter, instead of ἀντιπρὸς τῷ θεῷ, the Fukeian Copy has ἀντιπρὸς τῷ θεῷ. Valef.

<sup>f</sup> The story is this, that Æsculapius, by the entreaty of Diana, restored to Life Hippolytus who had been torn in pieces by horses; whereat Jupiter being angry, killed him with Thunder.

CHAP. LVII.

How the Heathens having rejected their Idols, returned to the knowledge of God.

Whatever persons therefore had heretofore been addicted to the superstitious worship of Demons, when with their own eyes they saw their own error confuted, and actually beheld the Ruine of the Temples and Images in all places, some of them came over to the salutary Doctrine of Christ: but others, although they refused to do that, yet condemned the vanity of their forefathers, and laugh at and derided those which by them had heretofore been accounted Gods. And indeed, how could they forbear having such thoughts as these, when under an external beauty and splendour of the Images, they saw so much filth and impurity lic concealed within? For either the Bones of dead Bodies, and dry skulls * stola by the frauds of Conjurors, were within them: or else, nasty rags and clouts stuff with abominable filth; or lastly a bundle of hay and straw. Which after they beheld heaped together and saw within their senseless images, they blamed both their own and their fathers extreme folly of mind; especially when they perceived, that within those their * Adyta, and within the Images themselves, there was no Inhabitant, no Demon, no Utterer of Oracles, no God, no Prophet, as they had before perwaded themselves; no not so much as an impotent or obscure phantom, and therefore every dark Cavern, and every secret Recefs was readily opened to those sent by the Emperor: the Adyta also, and places before inaccessible, as likewise the inmost parts of the Temples, were trodden by the feet of the Soldiers. So that, hereby was discovered and exposed to publick view that blindness of mind, wherein all the Heathens had for so long a time been kept involved.

<sup>a</sup> τοῖς ὀστέων. Inhabitable filth; or lastly a bundle of hay and straw. Which after they beheld heaped together and saw within their senseless images, they blamed both their own and their fathers extreme folly of written ἐκδομὴ αὐτὴ. Which word Christophorus renders thus, calve prelati caporum delat calide obscure, skulls carefully covered by the frauds of Conjurors. Which translation I approve not of; and had rather render it subprece, stola, or else adornate & adorned comparat, enimvero and made ready for mischievous Fabls. For Bones and Skulls are the instruments of Conjurors, whereof they made use in order to their mischievous acts. Valef.

Χρηστωδὸς, ὁ δαίμων, ὁ θεὸς, ὁ ὑποφωτιστὴς τῶν προφητῶν: which I do indeed like better. Valef.

CHAP. LVIII.

That having demolished Venus's Temple at Heliopolis, He was the first who built a Church there.

AND these things may deservedly be recounted amongst the Emperor's famous Actions; as likewise those matters particularly constituted by him in several Provinces. Of which sort is that [which we have been performed by him] at Heliopolis a City of Phœnicie, in which City the Heathens who honoured obscene Lust with the appellation [of the Goddess Venus,] permitted their wives and daughters to commit whoredom with impunity. But now a new and modest Law is issued out from the Emperor, whereby 'tis cautioned, that no one of those usages heretofore common amongst them, shall in future be in any wise audaciously practised. And to these persons he again transmitted instructions in writing; for he * appointed by God for this reason chiefly, that he might instruct all men in the Laws of Temperance. Wherefore, he accounted it not a thing below himself, to Preach even to these persons by his own Letters, and to exhort them to hasten to the knowledge of God. And in that place Copy and he added works consonant to his words, erecting even amongst them a most spacious Church with the Edifices belonging thereto. In so much that, what had no where been considered, heard of by any preceding age whatever, whether better read ἀντιπρὸς τῷ θεῷ, in the first place. But, whereas the Turnebus, Savilian, and Fukeian Manuscripts do defend the writing of the Geneva Edition, I am of opinion, that it is to be retained. Valef.

<sup>c</sup> ὅσον ἐκτίθειον ἐκκλησίας ἢ μνησίων I doubt not but it should be written ὅσον ἐκτίθειον ἐκκλησίας, ἢ μνησίων. For so Eusebius is wont to express himself, as I have remarked above. And by ἐκτίθειον he means Basilicum, a Church; but by μνησίων he means the whole compass or inclosure of the Church, that is, the Porch, Arxum, Court, Porticus, Exedra, Baptisteries, and the other Edifices which are meant to be annexed to Churches. In the Fukeian Copy the reading is ὅσον ἐκτίθειον ἐκκλησίας μνησίων. Valef.

<sup>d</sup> As any one may, not without reason, wonder, why Eusebius should say it was a thing unheard of by all ages, that a City addicted to the superstitious worship of Demons, should receive a Church and a Bishop. For that had happened to other Cities also at that time. But perhaps Eusebius means, that this was a thing new and unheard-of, that

Church of God had been built in that City, wherein as yet there was no Christians, but all persons equally adored Idols. This Church therefore was built by Constantine at Heliopolis, in hope rather than for necessity; to wit, that he might invite all the Citizens to the profession of the Christian Religion. A little after, the reading in the Fædian Manuscript is Εἰς τὴν πόλιν, truer than in the ordinary Editions, were 'tis ἔξω. Vale.

was then first of all really compleated; and a City of Men addited to the superstitious worship of Dæmons, was vouchsafed a Church of God, and Presbyters and Deacons; and a Bishop consecrated to the supream God, presided over the inhabitants of that place. Moreover, the Emperour taking great care that many persons might come over to the faith of Christ, made large distributions there, in order to the relief of the poor: and in this wise he perswaded and invited men to the salutary Doctrine, in a manner uttering those very words spoken by Saint Paul: * whether in pretence, or in truth, Christ is preached.

CHAP. LIX.

Concerning the disturbance raised at Antioch on Eulathius's account.

BUT, whilst all persons passed their lives in the greatest joy imaginable on account of these [Blessings,] and the Church of God was all manner of ways exalted amongst all Nations every where; the envy [of the Devil,] who is always contriving Plots against the Good, began again to make an insurrection against this to great a prosperity of our affairs: supposing, that the Emperor, † exasperated at our disturbances and incencies, would in future have his affection towards us alienated. Having therefore kindled a great fire, he || filled the Churches of Antioch with Tragical Calamities: in so much that, there wanted but little of the whole anted but little of the whole City's being utterly subverted. * For the people of the Church were divided into two Factions; and the Commonalty of the City in an hostile manner were so highly enraged, against the Magistrates themselves, and themselves, that they were just upon the point of drawing their Swords, had not the providence of God, and the fear of the Emperor, repress the violence of their multitude. And here the clemency of the Emperor, like a Saviour and Physician of Souls, did again by discourse administer a Cure to those disaffected. For he discomfited a way thither one of those about him, whom he had had trial of, a person honoured with the dignity of a Comes, a Man eminently crafty and faithful; [by whom he spake] to those people in a most gracious manner. And by Letter after Letter he exhorted them to entertain thoughts of Peace; and taught them to practise such things as were agreeable to the divine Religion. And at length he prevailed with them; and executed them in those Letters he wrote to them, affirming that he himself had publicly heard <sup>c</sup> him who had been the occasioner of that Tumult. and <sup>e</sup> these Letters of his, which were filled with no ordinary Learning and Utility, I had inserted at this place, had they not set a Brand of infamy on the persons <sup>f</sup> guilty. Wherefore I will at present omit them, being resolved not to renew the memory of mischiefs: and will only annex those Letters to this Work, which he wrote to <sup>g</sup> express the joy and satisfaction of his own mind in reference to the Peace and agreement of others. In which Letters he entreats them that they would not in any wise challenge to themselves the Prelate of another place, by whose intervention they had made up a Peace amongst themselves; but that, agreeable to the Canon of the Church, they should rather choose him Bishop, whom <sup>h</sup> [our Lord] himself, the Common Saviour of all, should design [for that office.] He writes therefore, both to the People, and also to the Bishops, severally, these following [Letters.]

Antioch. This happened on the year of Christ 329, (as may apparently be gathered from Philostorgius's second Book, 3.) or on the year 330, as Theodoret seems to assert, book 2. chap. 31. For his writings, that Meletius was translated to the See of Antioch after Eusebius's Deposition, is manifest. 'Tis manifest that Meletius was translated to Antioch on the year of Christ 360. Wherefore, I can't assent to the most illudicrous Cardinal Baronius, who being always angry with our Eusebius, whilst he refuses to follow his account, hath condemned all things. For he says that this Tumult hapned at Antioch : whereas Socrates, Sozomen, and Theodoret do attest, that this Tumult had hapned at the deposition of this Eusebius. But Baronius proves by most evident arguments, as he himself supposes, that Eusebius was ejected out of the See of Antioch, not under the Reign of the Emperor Constantine, but in that of Constantinus. Let us see therefore, with what arguments he endeavours to make this out. In the first place he cites a passage out of Athanasius's Epistle ad solitarios, about the beginning. Fuit, says he, quidam Eusebius Episcopus Antiochie, &c. There was one Eulitius Bishop of Antioch, a person famous for confession, &c. whom the men of the Arian Opinion had deposed to Constantius by a forged calumny in such a manner, as if he had been contentious towards the Emperors Mother. But I affirm, that in this passage of Athanasius instead of Constantius, Constantine is to be written. Which emendation is confirmed by those words immediately added concerning the Emperor's Mother. For he means Helen, who about this time had come into the East. For these words can't in any wise be meant of Faulx, who had been put to death about twenty years before, if we follow Baronius's computation. But the passage of Saint Jerome, out of his book de Scripturis Ecclesiasticis, makes little for Baronius, in regard in the Old Editions, as also in that of Lions which I have, 'tis plainly written, sub Constantino Principe missus est in exilium, was sent into Exile under the Emperor Constantine. Wherefore, I had rather follow Eusebius here, than Baronius. Nor do I see, how so great fits could have been made at the Creation of Eusebius's, (of which fits there is mention in the Emperor Constantine's Letter,) that to appease them, a Comes was to be sent, and so many Letters written by the Emperor. Besides, Constantine says in his Letter, that he had publicly heard him who had been the Author of that wretched Sedition, to wit, Eusebius, whom he had ordered to come to Court, and he banished him into Thracia. And this Constantinus in his before-mentioned letter, accounts as the first exploit of the Arians, which thing is to be remarked. For this was done before the Synod of Tyre, which was convened against Athanasius, that is before the year of Christ 334. Athanasius therefore does get the right in beginning the History of the War which the Arians bore against the Catholic Church, from Eusebius's deposition, as from the first Exploit of the Arians : which having succeeded according to the wish, they thought that all other matters would in future be ready to ensue. Further, Baronius's Opinion is refuted as well from what we have laid above, as from this, because Flaccius (who after Paulinus and Enlilus succeeded Eusebius.) is mentioned amongst those Bishops present at the Synod at Tyre, by Athanasius in his Apology to the Emperor Constantius ; as Jacobus Gorbosius has well observed in his Dissertations on the second book of Philostorgius. Vale.

It must be ἐκινυμένῳ, as Christophorus seems to have read; and we have rendered it accordingly: Valete

* Deceat me of and keep the divine * Dogmata; so that, I † Or, Law. as to what relates to the Common † Faith, one sort of Persons are in nobling inferior to another.

* These words may be referred to the preceding period. And so after the verb ἀπομαρτυρεῖσθαι a full point is to be let, and the place read thus: So that some persons (as to what relates to the Common Faith), are in no wise inferior to others, if we should plainly speak the truth. Wherefore this is not to detain a man,
but to take him away by force, &c.
And thus this place is pointed in the Old Sheets. Valef.
* Or, Multitudes.

gives Occasion for an Accusation, and does raise the disturbance of no small tumult. For, even Lambs do shew the force and strength of their Teeth, as often as (the usual care and Concern of their Shepherd for them growing more remiss,) they perceive themselves deprived of their former guidance and looking to. Now, if these things be thus, and if we are not mistaken;
in the first place, Brethren, consider this. (For many, and those great advantages will offer themselves to you even at the very beginning.) First || Or, In. of all [I say consider this;] whether the || affection and love you have one towards another will not be sensible of some abatement of it self. Then [weigh this also,] that that person who

† From these words it may be gathered, that our Eusebius had come to Antioch together with the rest of the Bishops, who in a Synod had condemned Eusabius Bishop of Antioch: and that the Antiochians, after Eusebius's deposition, had a mind to keep him with them. This is what Constantine has said above, ἡ ἐκείνων, ἀλλ' ἀπολείπει μὴδ' αὖτε this is not a detestation, but rather the taking away of a Man by violence. Theodoret tells us the same, book i. chap. 21. Valef.

* Or, Provity.
† Or, τὸν ὁμοῦτον οὐκ ἐκείνων.
I think it must be written τὸν ὁμοῦτον, &c. For the verb ἀπο-λείπει, is to be understood in common. But if any one has a mind to defend the common reading, I shall not much resist him.
† Or, Unjust.

* καὶ τὴν
τὴν διαπο- * Knockνῶν οὐκ- ing, or,
κείνων, beating to-
and from gether.
the comparing of several persons together. It with good doubtless to be better read thus, τὴν τὴν διαπορῶν οὐκ ἐκείνων; that is, from the collision of many Men, sparks and flames are usually raised. The Eusebian Copy hath at length confirmed our conjecture to us; wherein I found it plainly written οὐκ ἐκείνων. Valef.

* Εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν ἀνέβησαν ἡμεῖς. Christophorus renders this place thus: Ex quo portu sordibus seditionis præterite cunctis, pacato mentis statu concordiam in eorum locum inducite: Out of which port having ejected the filth of your past Sedition, in place thereof do you bring in Concord with a calm temper of mind. But in this Version, there are many things which I can't approve of. For first, I am not pleas'd with his making οὐρανὸν ἀνέβησαν to mean the filth of Sedition. In my judgment Constantine seems to hint at that cause, on account whereof Eusebius had been deposed; to wit, the debauching of a certain woman; concerning which whoredome consult Theodoret, book i.

chap. 21. The same thing is likewise intimated by Constantine a little after this, where he says, αὐτὸν δὲ τὴν αὐτὴν οὐρανὸν ἀνέβησαν ἀφ' ἧς ἀνέβησαν. That is, For, whatever could any way defile the vessel, is drawn out by the Pump as 'twere. At which place nevertheless Christophorus does again render it the filth of Sedition. But, how filth can be a term properly used in reference to Sedition I can't indeed perceive. But no body can doubt, but it may be very properly spoken in reference to that incontinency wherewith Eusebius was charged. There is a Metaphor here, taken from Ports, which are wont to be cleaned, as often as they are stop't up with sand, mud, or such like filth. Now, those words Εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν ἀνέβησαν, one note:
May I so please God, says Constantine, as I Love you, and the port of your Love, after having cast out that filth you have brought in Concord with good Morals. Indeed, this meaning pleases me much better than the common reading. For now the Antiochians were quiet, and the Sedition was appeased, at such time as Constantine wrote this Letter;
as 'tis apparent from its beginning. Valef.

v Steering a prosperous course to the Light it self, † Διέλευwith Rudders of Iron, as one may say. Where-τὴν ἡγεῖται fore, † convey on Board your Ship the incorrupti-τὴν φεble Cargo. For whatever could anyway defile the ἀκαταμίαν Vessel, is drawn out by the Pump as 'twere. Steering a Now therefore, use your utmost endeavours, that course your enjoyment * of all these Blessings may be such, the Light as you may not a second time seem, either to have it self. I determined any thing at all, with an inconsiderate * think it and unprofitable desire, or from the beginning to must be have attempted what is disagreeable. God keep you, καὶ εὖ Beloved Brethren!

For 'tis a Metaphor taken from Navigation. In Sepacles, ἡ ἐκείνη πλοῦς is used to signify a happy Voyage by Sea; and a Ship which Sails with a prosperous gale of Wind, is by Grecians termed ἀναδεδειγμένη ναῦς.
Valef.

† Τὸν ἀποδύοντες ὁμοῦτον ἡμεῖς. This whole Letter is in many places faulty; but especially this clause does abound with mistakes.
For, what is the meaning of these words? I doubt not but it must be read thus, ἀποδύοντες ὁμοῦτον ἡμεῖς, convey on Board, &c. Constantine does here make use of a continued Metaphor taken from Navigation, and compares Christians to Merchants who make Voyages on account of Trade. Sail on, says he, with a prosperous Course to the eternal Light, having erected the Flag of the Cross in your Ships, and carry on Board your Vessel the incorruptible Goods. For now, whatever could have endangered the Ship, is Pump'd out. Thus by making a small, and in a manner no alteration, the meaning does now appear elegant and plain. Valef.

* Τὸ ἡμεῖς ἀνέβησαν. It must, I think, be written in one word, ἡμε-ῖς ἀνέβησαν; as Sir Henry Savil had mended it in his Copy. In the Euse-bian Copy the reading is ἡμεῖς ἀνέβησαν. The close of this Letter, is in my judgement thus to be reitored: ἡμεῖς ἀνέβησαν ὁμοῦτον ἡμεῖς ἀνέβησαν ὁμοῦτον ἡμεῖς ἀνέβησαν. Which reading I have followed in my Version. Constantine terms the desire which the Antiochians had manifested towards Eusebius, when they coveted him to be their Bishop, ἀνέβησαν ὁμοῦτον, an inconsiderate desire. The affection of the Antiochians towards Eusebius may also be meant; at whose deposition they were vext, and had raised a Sedition. In the Euseb. Sav. and Turneb. Copies, this place is written thus, ἡμε-ῖς ἀνέβησαν ὁμοῦτον ἡμεῖς ἀνέβησαν. But the reading is plainer which we found in the Old Sheets, ἡμεῖς ἀνέβησαν ὁμοῦτον ἡμεῖς ἀνέβησαν.
Valef.

C H A P. LXI.

Constantine's Letter to Eusebius, wherein he commends Him for His Refusal of [the See of] Antioch.

<sup>a</sup> This Title was written by
The Emperour's Letter <sup>a</sup> to Us, after our Refusal of the Bishoprick of Antioch.

Eusebius himself, as 'tis apparent. For He himself says concerning himself, meis huais, to us. Wherefore, there was no need of any other Title. Further, hence it may be plainly gathered, that these Books were written by Eusebius Bishop of Caesarea. Which, notwithstanding it may be proved by innumerable arguments and testimonies; yet I wonder at James Grotius, who has been so bold as to deny it. In the Fuketian Copy, which has the Contents or Titles prefixed before every Chapter, these words are wanting. But in the Kings Sheets they are written at the margin. Valf.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS
MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS,
To Eusebius.

I Have perused your Letter very often; and have found that you do most exactly observe the Rule of Ecclesiastick discipline. For, to persist in those Sentiments which appear both acceptable to God, and agreeable to Apostolick Tradition, is an eminent degree of Piety. You may account your self blessed even in this very thing, because by the testimony of, the whole World, as I may say, you have been judged worthy to be Bishop over the whole Church. For, whereas all persons desire you to be [Bishop] amongst them, without question they increase this your Felicity. But Your prudence (which hath resolved to observe the commands of God, and the Apostolick Canon, and that of the Church,) has acquitted it self incomparably well, in regard it hath refused the Bishoprick of the Church at Antioch; and hath endeavoured to continue in that See rather, the presidency over which by the will of God it had at first undertaken. Further, concerning this matter I have written a Letter to the People, and to those other Persons your Colleagues, who also themselves wrote to me in relation to the same affairs. Which <sup>b</sup> Baronius (at the year of our Lord 324, Number 145), expounds these words thus, Constantine, says he, terms the care of the Antiochian Church the Bishoprick of the whole Church; because Antioch was the Metropolis of all the East. But, with the favour of that great person be it spoken, there seems to be another sense of these words. For whereas all Cities were desirous of having Eusebius their Bishop, as Constantine attests a little after, Eusebius was by the consent of all worthy of the Episcopate of the whole World. Valf.

<sup>c</sup> Hyar tas te eslods. In the Fuketian Copy and that of Sir Henry Savil, the reading is eslods tas te eslods. I should choose to write tas te eslods, &c. which hath, &c. A little before, where the reading is eslods tas te eslods, the Fuketian and Savilian Copies add tas te eslods, in an eminent degree of piety. Valf.

<sup>d</sup> Or, Letters when Your Holiness shall have perused, it will easily understand, that, because Justice seemed to Resist them, I have written unto them by Prudence also to be present at their Council to the end this very thing may be constituted in the Church of Antioch. God keep you, Beloved Brother.

C H A P. LXII.

Constantine's Letter to the Synod, that Eusebius should not be drawn away from Caesarea.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS
MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS,
To Theodotus, Theodorus, Narcissus, <sup>a</sup> Theo- <sup>b</sup> odotus was Bishop of Laodicea in Syria;
Aetius, Alpheus, and to the rest of the Bishops which are at Antioch.

Narcissus was Bishop of Neonades in Cilicia; Aetius was Bishop of Lydda in Palestine: all Favourers of the arian Party. Who, when they were come to Antioch, together with Eusebius Bishop of Nicomedia, and Eusebius Caesariensis, deplored Eusebius, as Theodoret relates Eccles. Hist. book 1. chap. 21. But Aetius betook himself afterwards to the side of the Orthodox, as Philostorgius attests, book 3. chap. 12. and also Athanafius. Now, Alpheus Bishop of Apamea in Syria, and lastly Theodorus Prælate of Sidon in Phœnice are named amongst the Bishops who subscribed to the Nicene Synod. Concerning Theodorus, Athanafius speaks also, in his book de Synodis Arimini & Seleuciæ Valf.

I Have read the Letter written by Your Prudence, and do highly commend the wise resolution of Your Colleague Eusebius. And when I had perfectly understood all transactions, partly from Your Letter, and partly from that of the Most Perfect Acacius and Stratagem [the Comites], and had made a due inspection into the thing; I wrote to the People of Antioch, and besetting the Church. A Copy of which Letter I have ordered to be annexed hereto, to the end you also might know, what I, invited thereto by the way of Right, had ordered to be written to the People [of Antioch:] in as much as this was contained in Your Letter, that according to the suffrage of the People and the desire of Your Prudence, Eusebius the Most Holy Bishop of the Church of Caesarea might preside over the Antiochian Church, and undertake the care thereof. Indeed, Eusebius's Letter appeared highly obnoxious to the Ecclesiastick Canon: but his meekness was that Our Sentiment also should be named called unto Your Prudence. For, it has been related to me, that Euphronius a Presbyter, who is a Citizen of Caesarea in Cappadocia, and Georgius have made several marks in my Notes on the 15th Book of Anm. Marcellinus, pag. 59. He had been sent to Antioch by the Emperor Constantine, to appease the tumult there, as Eusebius has said above; see chap. 59. Valf.

<sup>c</sup> Pezarus was, I had rather write eslods. Valf.

<sup>d</sup> Pezarus was, the prudence of your desire. I would more willingly read eslods tas te eslods, the desire of your prudence. Further, from these words (which are ill understood by Christophorus) it appears, that the Bishops who had been convened at Antioch, had by their Letter requested of Constantine, that according to the desire of the Antiochian People, and themselves, Eusebius might be translated to the See of Antioch. Therefore those words, tas te eslods tas te eslods, tas te eslods tas te eslods, are taken out of the Letter of the Bishops convened at Antioch, which they sent to the Emperor Constantine. Valf.

<sup>e</sup> Tas te eslods tas te eslods. I am not displeased with the conjecture of Learned Men, who have mended it to tas te eslods tas te eslods, &c. Indeed Eusebius's, &c. The place might likewise have been restored thus, tas te eslods tas te eslods, &c. But the former reading is confirmed by the authority of the Fuketian and Savilian Copies. Only the positive Article d is to be expunged, which occurs not in the Fuketian Copy. Valf.

<sup>f</sup> Apixtas tas te eslods. In the Fuketian and Sir Henry Savil's Copy the reading of this place runs thus: apixtas tas te eslods tas te eslods. For it hapned that there have come to me Euphronius, &c. which reading Christophorus has followed. But the common reading is far better apixtas tas te eslods, that is, I have been given to understand, as Musculus renders it, or, it has been told me. Valf.

<sup>g</sup> Esylod tas te eslods. Understand tas te eslods, a Citizen; which word Christophorus perceived not to be to be repeated in common. Now, tas te eslods does not only signify a person born in some City, but rather such a one as has his residence in a City, and is enrolled amongst the Citizens, a better he may have been born there, or elsewhere. Valf.

[a Citi-

[a Citizen] of Arethusa, a Presbyter also whom Alexander preferred to this dignity in the City Alexandria.) are most approved Persons in reference to the Faith. It seemed good therefore, to give Your Prudence notice of Arimæus these Men, that having proposed them, and Seleucus; some others, whom You shall judge fit for the dignity of the Episcopate. You may determine such things as may be agreeable to the Tradition of the Apostles. For such matters as these having been well prepared and ordered, Your Prudence will be able so to direct this Election according to the Canon of the Church and Apostolick Tradition, as the Rule of Ecclesiastick discipline does require. God keep you, Beloved Brethren!

by Alexander Bishop of Alexandria; but was afterwards deposed by the same Alexander because of his impiety. In his Apologetick also against Constantius, pag. 728; he writes that the same Person was deposed by Alexander, which very thing is plainly confirmed by the Fathers of the Sardian Council in their Synodick Letter. The same Athanasius, in the same Book de Synodis pag. 886, attests that this George resided at Antioch. Further, from the Kings Sheets I have pointed this place thus; ἐν οὗτῳ τῷ γεωργίῳ τῷ ἀντιόχειῳ ἐν ἀλεξάνδρῃ κατακίετο, ὃν τὸν αὐτὸν ἀποκατέστη, whom Alexander, &c. and so Musculus points the place. Valef.

This place seems to me to be imperfect, which is in my judgment thus to be made good: καὶ ἐν τῇ αὐτῇ τῇ αὐτῇ τῇ αὐτῇ τῇ αὐτῇ, ὅπως ὁ γεωργίῳ τῷ τῷ ὁ ὁ ὁ, &c. which reading I have followed in my Version. By τῷ τῷ, whom Men here mean the foreaid Euphrasius and Georgius. Of whom Euphrasius was afterwards Bishop of Antioch, and immediate successor to Eustathius; as Socrates and Sozomen do relate, and also Theodorus Mopsuestenus in Nicetas's Thebaisius Orthodoxos fides. But this Georgius was, as I have said, afterwards Bishop of Laodicea. In the Fukeian C. p. the reading is τῷ τῷ γεωργίῳ. Further, 'tis to be noted, that Men who were Ariani, are here by Constantine commended for Persons that were Orthodox; either because as yet they concealed their Heresie, or else in regard the Arians had posset themselves of the Emperour's ear and mind. Valef.

Christophorus perceived nothing here. The term γεωργίῳ in elections imports thus much, I propose or publicly to produce the name of some Person, that it may be inquired whether he be worthy of that Office, the debate about which is in agitation. Which very thing Constantine in his Letter to the People of Antioch expresses by the verb ἀγίζω. The γεωργίῳ was followed by an Examination, then the Election, and last of all the Ordination or Consecration. See Socrates's Eccles. Hist. book 1. chap. 9. note (f.) Valef.

CHAP. LXIII.

In what manner He endeavoured to destroy Heresies.

SUCH were the admonitions [which the Emperour gave] to the [Prelates] of the Churches, [advising them to do all things] in order to the glory and commendation of the Divine Religion. But after he had made a riddance of all dissensions, and had reduced the Church of God to an agreement and Harmony of Doctrine; He past from thence, and was of opinion, that another sort of impious Persons were to be suppressed and destroyed, in regard they were the Poison of Mankind. There were a sort of pernicious Men, who under the specious disguise of Modesty and Gravity ruined the Cities. Whom our Savior somewhere terms false Prophets or ravenous Wolves, in these words: * Beware of false Prophets which come to you in sheeps clothing, but inwardly they are ravenous wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits. By the transmission of a precept therefore to the Presidents of Provinces, He put to flight the whole Tribe of these sort of Persons.

But besides this Law, the Emperour composed an enlivening. * Exhortation, directed to them by name; wherein he incited those Men to hasten their repentance: For [he told them] that the Church of God would be to them a Port of safety. But, hear in what manner He discoursed even to these Persons, in his Letter to them.

he Preaches.

CHAP. LXIV.

Constantine's Constitution against the Hereticks.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS
MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS;
To the Hereticks.

A Knowledge now by the benefit of this Law, (O ye Novatianists, Valentinians, Marcionists, Paulians; and you who are termed Catharygæ; in a word, all of you, who by your private Meetings, breed and * compass Heresies!) in how many Lies the vanity of your Opinions Perfect is wrapt up; and in what manner your Doctrine is compounded of certain pernicious Poisons: in so much that, by you the healthy are reduced to weakness, and the living to a perpetual death: Tell Contemners of Truth, ye Adversaries of Life, and ye Counsellors of destruction! All things amongst you are contrary to Truth; agreeable to filthy impieties; * suff with abjurdities and fictions: whereby you compose Lyes, afflict the Innocent, and deny Believers the light. And, sinning continually under a Mask of Divinity, you defile all things! Ye wound the innocent and pure consciences

[of Men] with blows that are mortal and deadly; and ye ravish even the day it self (I had almost said,) from the eyes of Men. But what necessity is there of recounting every particular? Especially, since neither the shortness of the time, nor the urgency of Our Affairs will suffer Us to speak concerning your * Crimes according as they deserve. For, your impieties are so large and immense, so filthy and full of all manner of outrageousness, that a whole day would not be sufficient for a description of them. And besides, 'tis fit we should remove our ears and turn away our eyes from things of this nature, least by a particular declaration of them, the pure and sincere * alacrity of Our Faith should be defiled. What reason is Activity, there then that We should any longer tolerate such Mischiefs? Especially since Our long forbearance is the cause, that even those who are found, become * infected with this pestilential distemper as were. Why therefore do we not immediately cut off the roots (as we may so term them) of such a mischief by a public animadversion?

In the Fuke, Savil, and Turneb. Copies, the reading is ὑποβιβάζω, delay. A little after, from the Fukeian Copy I write ἀποκαταστήσει, by a public animadversion. Valef. In Robert Stephens's (it is known that We should any longer tolerate such Mischiefs? Especially since Our long forbearance is the cause, that even those who are found, become infected with this pestilential distemper as were. Why therefore do we not immediately cut off the roots (as we may so term them) of such a mischief by a public animadversion?)

These therefore, returning in Troops from some Foreign Region as 'twere, recovered their own Country again, and acknowledged their Mother the Church. From which having strayed, after a long interval of time they made their return to * Her with a gladness and joy.

* The Church.

Thus the members of the whole Body were united one with another by one common Band, and grew together into one Frame. And the one and only Catholick Church of God, † fitly cohering with it self, darted forth its Rays of Light; no congregation either of Hereticks or Schismatics being left remaining in any part of the Earth. To the performance of which † singular and great Action, Our Emperour (the only Person car'd for and respected by God, amongst all those that had ever sway'd the Imperial Sceptre,) entitled Himself.

out, because it disturbs the sense; unless you take it to signify singular, or Eximius. Further Christophorus has translated this place otherwise. For thus he renders it; cujus præclari facinoris causam Imperator Deo acceptam plane r-tulit, the cause of which famous Action the Emperour plainly ascribed to God as acceptable to him. Nor does Musculus render it otherwise. But I have interpreted these words [τῆς αἰτίας τῆς ἐξουσίας], or rather, [ἐκ τῆς ἐξουσίας] concerning Constantine Himself; that is, The Emperour was the Author of this glorious action. Johannes Portesius also, the fifth Translator of these Books, renders this place in the same manner. For thus his Version runs; Id verò unicuique ab orbe condito factum, homini deus tutelæ præclaræ, cum acceptum etiam relatum est. Vale.

† Καὶ τὸ
τὸ δὲ μὲν
The word
johs must be blotted

The End of the Third Book.

pag. 406, this old Inscription occurs: E. L. EUGENIO V. C. EXPRÆFECTO PRÆT. CONSULI ORDINARIO DESIGNATO. MAGISTRO OFFICIORUM OMNIUM. COMITI DOMESTICO ORDINIS PRIMI, &c Concerning the same Comites Domestici, there is another Old Inscription extant in the House of the Barberini, worth the setting down here. M. NUMMIO. ALBINO. V. C. QUÆSTORI CANDIDATO. PRÆTORI. URB. COMITI DOMESTICO ORDINIS. PRIMÆ ET CONSULI. ORDINARIO. ITERUM NUMMIUS. SECUNDUS. EJUS. This Nummius Albinus was Consul the second time and Præfect of the City in the times of Gallienus, as 'tis manifest from the Fasti, and from the Old Book of Præfecti Urbis. Whence it may be concluded, that this dignity of the Comes of the first and second Order or Rank, was not first instituted by Constantine, as Cujacius thought in his Notes on Instituti-Valf's Code; but that it was in use long before Constantine's time.

CHAP. II. A Remission of the fourth part of the * Census.

BUT, with what earnestness he endeavoured, that all mankind in general might lead joyful and pleasant Lives, may be perceived even from this one instance, which being highly advantageous to the Life of men, and extended to all persons in general, is even at this very present highly celebrated in the mouths of all. Having abated a fourth part of those annual Tributes which were paid for Land, he bestowed it upon the Owners of the Grounds: so that, if you compute the sum of this annual abatement, it will appear, that every fourth year the Occupiers of the Fruits are free from the payment of Tribute. Which thing being || past into a Law, and confirmed for the time to come, not only to those of the present age, but to their children, and the successors of them, made the Emperour's Beneficence indelible and perpetual.

Tis my Sentiment that the words are transposed here; and that at this place we should read, τὸ τ' ἀγρῶν δικήσας, the Occupiers of the Grounds: and above, τῶν τ' ἀγρῶν δαπάνης, upon the Owners of the fruits. Turnebus at the margin of his Copy, instead of δικήσας Occupiers, has made it κλήσας, Possessors. Or at least it must (says he) be written, τ' ἡσπῶν δικήσας, the Occupiers of the places or Farms. Valf.

CHAP. III. The * Peraquation of those Census that were too heavy and burthensome.

BUT, whereas some persons found fault with those Surveys of Land, which had been made by the former Emperours, and complained that their own Grounds were too much oppressed; here also [the Emperour in obedience] to the Laws of justice, dispatch'd away Peraquatores, who might free the Complainers. These Bants from wrong.

The Latin term Peraquatores; of whom there is mention in the fourteenth Book of the Theodosian Code, in the Title de Constitutoribus, Peraquatoribus, & Inspectoribus. Most commonly Senatores were by the Prince sent to that Office; it was the business of these Officers, to make equal the Census in those Provinces which complained that they were oppressed with the Burthen of the Tributes. In Gruter, pag. 361, this Old Inscription occurs: L. RADIO VAL. PRUCULO V. C. PRÆTORI TUTELARI LEGATO PROPRIO P. ROV. NUMIDIÆ PERÆQUATORI CENSUS PROV. GALLICIÆ. There is also extant a ninth Oration of Gregory Nazianzen, ἐπὶ ἐξουπνίᾳ ἰουλιανῶν, to Julianus the Peraquator. Valf.

CHAP. IV. That on those who were overthrown in Pecuniary Causes, he himself bestowed money out of his own [Income.]

MOREOVER, as often as the Emperour had pronounced Sentence between two who were at Suit; to the end the party that had lost his cause, might not go away sadder than him in favour of whom Sentence had past; out of his own [Revenues] he bestowed on those who had been cast in their Suits, sometimes Farms, and sometimes Money: by which means he managed the matter so, as that the party worsted did no less rejoice than he who had carried the Cause; in regard [the person overthrown] had been vouchsafed to come into his presence. For he judged it altogether unfit, that any one who had stood before so great a Prince, should be diffident sad and sorrowful. By this means therefore, both parties that were at Law returned from Sentence with countenances full of joy and cheerfulness: and the Emperour's Greatness of mind was the admiration of all men.

μὲντοι τῶν ἀπαλαίτωσιν χάριον τὸ γενικισθῆναι, ἰσορροῦν, &c. to the end the party that had, &c. In the Fulgentian Copy the words τὸ γενικισθῆναι, then him in favour of whom Sentence had past, are wanting. But Turnebus and Sir Henry Savil place those words after the verb ἀπαλαίτωσιν, might not go away. The said Sir Henry Savil hath noted at the margin of his Copy, that perhaps it should be γαίης, and that the comma after the word ἀπαλαίτωσιν should be blotted out. Which when I had read, I was extremely glad, that my conjecture was confirmed by the judgment of this most Learned person. But, whereas Sir Henry Savil adds there, that Christophorus seems to have read thus, in this I can't assent to him. For Christophorus does read χάριον, and renders it Libenter, willingly. Further, Turnebus reads here mend it τὸ ἀσπῶν, which pleases me. Valf.

CHAP. V. The conquest of the Scythæ, who were subdued by the Standard of Our Saviour's [Cross]

WHAT need have I here of making mention by the by as 'twere, how he reduced the Barbarous Nations under the Empire of the Romans? In what manner he first brought doubt not under the Yoke, the Nations of the Scythæ and but Sarmatæ, who before had never learn'd to obey any one; and forc'd them even against their wills, to acknowledge the Romans their Lords. Then which emendation there is nothing more certain. In the Kings Sheets the reading is, τὸ τ' ἡμῶν. Sir Henry Savil at the margin of his Copy mends it, τὸ τ' ἡμῶν πάσας λέγει μὲν. In the Fulgentian and Turnebian Copies, the reading of this place is this, τὸ τ' ἡμῶν λέγει τὸ πάσας μὲν. Valf.

In the Scythæ, Sarmatæ (book 1. chap. 18.) and Sogomani (book 1. chap. 8.) terms them The Goths. Indeed Greck Writers do usually term them Scythæ, whom the Latins call Goths. So Licinius, Themistius, Eusepius, and many others. Further, the Goths were vanquished by the Roman Army in the Country of the Sarmatæ; on the twelfth of the Calends of May, in the Consulate of Pacatianus and Hilarianus, (as 'tis recorded in Idatius's Fasti), that is on the year of Christ 332. Valf.

rum flammam, the fire of sacrifices: Camerarius, incantationum igniculos, the fires of incantments; which is a truer Version. For, certain kinds of fires [were made use of] in the Mytheries of the Pa-pans, and a sort of light shined after darkness. Which thing the Pedets of Demons performed by magic Art, and I know not what impurities, to the end they might gain an Authority and Reverence to their sacred Rites. Apuleius's words in his 1st Book are these; Acceseconfusum Morres; & calcate, &c; I approach'd the confines of death and having trod the path of Proserpine, I went back, conveyed through the Elements. At midnight I saw the Sun glistering with bright Light &c. Concerning this Rite there is an elegant passage of Theophrastus, Siobenes, chap. 274; which deserves to be set down here: τὸ πρὸς τῷ πυρὶ οἶον οὐ πλατύνει μετὰ τὴν ἀπορροήν. Αὐτὸ δὲ καὶ παρὰ τὸν ῥήματι, ὅτι ἔστιν τὸ ἔργον τὸ πλατύνει καὶ πλεονάζει σπασσικόν.
Πλάσσει τὸ πρῶτον, καὶ ἀπερὶσταλόν, καὶ κομωμένον, καὶ διὰ σπῆρας ὑποπόλι πορεύει καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς ἐπὶ αὐτῷ τοῦ πλῆθους αὐτῷ τὸ δυνάμει πρὸς οὐκ ἐπὶ τὸν αὐτὸν, καὶ ἰσχυρὸν καὶ θυμὸν. ὅτι τὸ πρῶτον πρὸς τὴν μαστίαν ἀναπλήννεται, καὶ τότε καὶ αὐτὸς καὶ λευκότες ἐκτείνονται, οὐκ καὶ ῥοιεύει καὶ σπασσικὸς ἀκαταμάχτος ἐστί, καὶ οὐκ ἀπὸ τῆς αὐτῆς ἐκτείνονται: ἐν αὐτῷ δὲ πρὸς τὴν αὐτῆς καὶ μεμνημένον ἐκτείνονται καὶ ῥοιεύονται καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς αὐτῆς, ἐκτείνονται καὶ ῥοιεύονται, &c. This passage of Theophrastus is taken out of his Book concerning the Immortality of the Soul; wherein Theophrastus asserted that the soul was immortal, as we by several other arguments, as by this, that Cræcians do term ἀκα-ταμάχτος, as if it were πλεῖστον, that is, a Mystery. And, as these terms are exceeding like one to the other, so the things themselves are signified by these terms, have a wonderful similitude. For, as in Mytheries there are first incantment and reflex wandrings, and a cir-cuous circuit, and fearful passages through dark places, and most tedious journeys accompanied with weariness. Then, before an arrival at the end, all things are terrible; Horror, trembling, surpris, and amazement. But at last, a certain admirable Light occurs, and pleasing places and Meadows, where sacred voices are heard, and holy appearances seen, &c. To the same Rite belong these words of Origen, his 4th Book against Celsus; Ὁμοιωσὶς γὰρ τις ἐν τῷ βαρύνει πλεῖστον τὸ πρῶτον καὶ πρὸς τὴν αὐτῆς σπασσικόν. Valer.

* Or,
Parts.

$\frac{1}{2}$  Oz.
Drawn.
* Oz.
Wherein

† Or, Am
in this manner.

tions, to the lowest * Hell. For, the supreme God can in no wise endure, that those things which by His providence over men, and out of his own benignity [ towards them ] be has produced for common use, should be † perverted to any one's Lust. But, He requires of men a pure mind only, and an immaculate soul; * wherever, as in a Balance, he weighs the Allions of Virtue and Piety. For he is pleased with the works of Modesty and Lenity, loves the Meek, hates the Turbulent; loves Faith, punishes Infidelity: destroys all power joyned with arrogance, punishes the contempt of the proud. He utterly ruins those who are puffed up with insolency, but distributes agreeable Rewards amongst them that are humble and patient of injuries. † Hence 'tis, that he puts an high Value upon that Empire which is just; confirms it by his own assistance, and always keeps Imperial Prudence in a Calm of Peace.

CHAP. XI.

Against Tyrants and Persecutors; and concerning Valerian who was taken Prisoner.

<sup>a</sup> Γοῖς παρὰ τὰς πόλεις. The reading of this place is far otherwise in Theodore, namely in this manner; ἐπὶ ταῖς πόλιν καὶ διὰ τὴν ἑκκλησίαν.

I OR do I seem to my self to be mistaken (My Brother,) by my professing this one God to be the Author and Parent of all things. Whom many of those who have been possessors of the Empire here, induced thereto by weak Errors, have attempted to deny. But, all these [Emperours] have been destroyed by such a dreadful and avenging end, that since their times, all Mankind doth usually wish their Colonies may fall as a Curse and punishment on those, who shall study to imitate them. One of which persons I judge him to have been, (I him I mean) whom divine vengeance, like some thunder, drove out of our Regions, and conveyed into your Country; ) who by his own dissimulation and ignominy erected that Trophie so much boasted of amongst you.

* Or, Patients.

ἡμεῖς ἡμεῖς. Incomparably well, in my judgment. Nor had Constantine written otherwise. All the preceding Emperors, says he, who persecuted the Faith of Christ, have been crucified by such a lamentable end, that now all mankind are wont to imprecate or wish for the Calamities of these Princes as the sum total of punishment on them, who steadfastly to imitate them. What can be plainer and more elegant than this meaning of the words? Παράδεισος therefore does in this place signify punishment, in which sense that term is frequently used amongst Grecians, as Agellius has remarked. Further ἀναστροφὴς τοῦ σώματος is an elegant phrase to signify that which the Latines term imprecate, to wish for as a Curse. So ὑπερθεὸς is an usual expression with Grecians, as I have noted above. Epiphanius Scholasticus translates this passage thus; Sed illi omnes fuit comprehendi existis, et ut omne genus hominum pestes carentes, clades illorum per malefactorum exemplum propere videatur. But so destructive an end has we have them all, that all mankind who have lived since them, seem to prostrate their Ruine as the pattern of a Curse. Vale.

βίβλος ἐστὶν ἀπόστολος. In the History of Theodosius the reading is correct, that, viz. πρὸς ἀπὸς ἀποστολὴν παροφθαρμένην πρὸς πρὸς τοὺς ἀποστόλους, πρὸς by his own, &c. He means Valerian, who having been taken prisoner by the Perſians, ended his days amongst them in a dishonourable slavery, and by his own private disgrace ennobled the Triumph of the Porſians. That is, by his own ignominy he made the Victory of the Perſians over the Romans more signal and famous. This is the meaning of this place; which was not lost, either by Byzantines, or any of the other Translators. In the Faſketian and Turkish Copies it is ἀποστολὴν, which is no ill reading, Gale.

CHAP. XII.

That He saw the Fall of the Persecutors, and does now rejoice because of the Peace of the Christians.

INdeed, this thing has succeeded well, namely, that in Our age also the punishment of such persons have most evidently been demonstrated. For even I my self have been a Spectator [of their disastrous End,] who lately disquieted the people dedicated to God, by their most impious Edicts. Therefore, I give God great thanks, because by his signal Providence, all mankind who are observant of the divine Law, having Peace and Repose restored to them, are exceeding joyful and glad. From whence I do persuade my self, that all affairs are in an excellent and most safe posture, in regard God vouchsafes to gather all persons to himself, by their pure and approved Religion, and by their unanimous Sentiment in reference to the Deity.

CHAPTER XIII.

An Exhortation, that he should love the Christians, who live in his * Country.

HOW great a pleasure and delight was it to Me (I think you) when I heard, (what is my most earnest desire,) that even the richest and best places of Persia were so plentifully adorned with a multitude of these men, I mean Christians? For my whole discourse at present is concerning them. I wish therefore, both that your affairs may continue in a most flourishing posture, and in like manner that their affairs may be so too; that is, the affairs of both of you equally. For by this means you will have God the Supreme Lord and Father, merciful and propitious towards you. These persons therefore, because you are so great [a Prince,] I commit to Your Care: these very persons, in regard You are eminent for piety, I will deliver into your hands. Love these men in a manner besitting Your own benignity and good nature. For, by this Your Faith, You will do an immense kindness both to Your Self and Us.

b<sup>o</sup> On οὐ ἀναίτιον. In Theodoret and Nicephorus the reading is ἐν ὅτι οὐκ ἀναίτιον. In Synonodus' Edition it is ἐν ὅτι. Ḥ. Which words, Epiphanius, in his Scholasticus has altered into Latin thus: Te ergo optime gubernasti, si fueris sic fides illi, & habueris commune quod illi. Joachimus Camerarius who rendered Theodoret's History into Latin, translates it in this manner: Optimè igitur recedem, similitate que cum illis optimè agitur, quia communiter cum utrifque. And Langus's Version is in a manner the same. But this meaning does not satisfy me. Formerly I thought it was to be written thus, ἐν ὅτι ἀναίτιον, ἀναίτιον οὐ, erat as you to them, so they to you. Which reading I had followed in my Version. But having now examined the matter more attentively, I am of opinion that the reading of Theodoret and Nicephorus is to be retained, and thus I render this whole place. Opro igitur, ut & tunc vix quàm florentissime, & aliorum perinde sit florentissime; hoc est utrifque vestrum ex æquo: I wish therefore, &c. Thus the sense is most plain, and the following words will agree. Only it must be made ἀναίτιον for in the optative mood. This certain Majors reads ἀναίτιον. For he must be read thus: Cum igitur ad illud sit, ut & tunc vix quàm florentissime, & aliorum perinde sit florentissime, & tibi inquit, ut & tunc vix quàm florentissime, & illi inquit, ut & tunc vix quàm florentissime. In the Marginal Copy, the reading is ἐν ὅτι, without that word ἀναίτιον. Valef. Valefius (in his notes on Theodoret's History, book i. chap. 25.) tells us, that in Leo Allatus's Copy the reading of this place is, ἐν ὅτι ἀναίτιον. For even they are yours: which he concludes to be the truest reading of all.

CHAP. XIV.

How, by the earnestness of Constantine's Prayers, Peace was bestowed on the Christians.

ALL Nations in all parts of the world being (like some Ship,) in this manner steered and directed by one Commander, and willingly embracing the * Religion and Government of this Servant of God; and there being no person who might give any further disturbance to the Roman Empire; all men in future lead peaceable and undisturbed lives. But, because the Emperor judg'd the Prayers of Pious Persons to be highly useful and advantageous in order to the safety and preservation of the State, 'twas his Sentiment, that these were necessarily to be procured. Therefore, both he himself humbly implored God's Assistance, * and also commanded the Prelates of Churches to put up their prayers to God for him.

Τὸς δὲ ἐκκαλεῖται προσεύχεσθαι. Make it τίς τῶν, &c. unless you had rather read ἐκκαλεῖτο, as 'tis in the Euxerian, Savah and Turneb. Copies. Valef.

CHAP. XV.

That both on his Money, and in his Pictures, he ordered himself to be stamp'd and drawn in a praying posture.

BUT, how transcendent a liveness of a divine Faith was fixt in his Soul, may easily be conjectured from this very one thing; that on his Golden money he ordered his own Image to be stamp'd in such a manner, as that he might seem to look up to God with his Hands expanded, * in the posture of one praying. And this sort of money was current over the whole Roman World. But in the Imperial Palaces which were * in some Cities, his Pictures were plac'd on high at the very entrance of the Porch, wherein he was drawn standing upright, looking up to Heaven; * but his hands were expanded, in the fashion of one praying.

having extraordinarily sent, or made by God himself. So the Latines termed the Books of the sacred Scriptures, Deificos Libros, as it occurs in the Gesta Purgationis Cæciliani. Valef.

Κατά τὰς νόμους, near certain gates. In the Euxerian and Turnebian Copies, and in the King's Sheets, the reading is κατὰ νόμους, in some Cities; which is far the truer reading, as I Judge. For Eusebius says, that not all, but in the Palaces of some Cities, Constantine's Picture was thus drawn. Valef.

Τὰ χεῖρας δὲ ἐκτεταγμένους. Whoever was the Translator of this Book, he has rendered this place with little of attention, thus; Et præcantes formâ manibus sursum collatis, and lifting up his hands in the form of one praying; whereas he ought to have rendered it, manibus expansis, ut præcantes solent, with expanded hands as persons praying are wont to do. For the Christians were wont, when at prayers, to stretch forth their hands, that by this means they might represent the likeness of a Cross. Indeed, the Christians lifted up their hands, whilst they were praying. But this was not peculiar to the Christians in regard the Heathens did the same; as Virgil attests in these words,

—Et geminas tollens ad sidera palmas.

But that was peculiar to the Christians, to expand their hands in the form of a Cross. Tertulian's words in his Book de Oratone Chap. 11, are these: Nos vero non attolimus tantum, sed etiam expandimus, & dominicâ passionē modulamur; We do not only lift up [our hands,] but do spread them also, and we put our selves into a form agreeable to our Lord's Passion. He says the same in his Apologetick, chap. 30. Valef.

CHAP. XVI.

That He issued forth a Law, forbidding his own * Statues to be placed in Idol-Temples.

IN this manner therefore he represented himself praying, even in his Pictures drawn in Colours. But by * Law he forbid, that his own Statues should be dedicated in Idol-Temples: least they should be * polluted, even as far as the † outward Form only, with the error of prohibited Superstition.

παῖς μὲν τὸ προσωπεῖον, εὐχράς δὲ τὸς ἱδίας ἐν τοῖς ναοῖς ἐκταθῆναι; And first, he abolished the Combats of the Gladiators; then, he placed his own Statues in the Temples. But any one might with good reason conjecture, that this place of Socrates is corrupted. For, Socrates does there reckon up all things, which were invented by Constantine in order to the abolition of the Superstition of the Heathens. Amongst which he says, that Constantine placed his own Pictures and Statues in the Temples of the Gods. But by doing of this, the superstition of the Heathens was not extinguished, but rather increased, or changed. Wherefore that passage of Socrates must be rectified from Eusebius, in this manner; εὐχράς δὲ τὸς ἱδίας ἐν τοῖς ναοῖς ἀντιθέσθαι δευτέρας. But he forbade, that his own Statues should be dedicated in the Temples. Valef. Μοῦσος δὲ γέγραπ. The two last words must in my judgment be expunged; in regard they disturb the sense. For if you blot out them, the sense is plain. Valef.

CHAP. XVII.

His praying in the Palace, and his reading of the Divine Scriptures.

BUT whoever has a mind to give attention, will perceive far nobler Instances of his piety] than these; how he constituted * a Church of God as 'twere, within the Imperial Palace; and with diligence and cheerfulness lead the way himself, to those who assembled within that Church. Moreover, he took the Bible into his hands, and with an attentive mind meditated up- on those divinely-inspired Oracles. After which words: he recited the * usual prayers, together with * the whole assembly of his Courtiers.

Τὸ πλὴν that Sozomen (as he usually does,) borrowed this out of our Eusebius. But Eusebius does not say, that Constantine built a Church in the Palace. He says only this, that he constituted a kind of a Church in the Palace. See Eusebius's Panegyrick on Constantine's Tricennalia, chap. 9, where he does plainly confirm our Opinion. Valef. Ὁ τὸν ναὸν βασιλεὺς οἶκον παύσας, with which that filled the Imperial Palace, or, the Church. βασιλεὺς οἶκος is an ambiguous expression, which signifies a Church, and a Palace. And Eusebius seems designedly to have play'd with the ambiguity of this phrase, because Constantine's Palace was like a Church. And those whom at this place he calls οἶκος βασιλεὺς οἶκον παύσας, he has termed above in this chapter, τοὺς ἱδίας ἐκκαλεῖται προσεύχεσθαι. Valef.

CHAP. XVIII.

That by a Law He commanded Sunday and Friday to be honoured.

BUT He ordained, that a day should be esteemed, as convenient and fit for prayers; that day namely, which really is the Chief and First of the other days, and which is truly the Lord's, and the Salutory day. Moreover, he appointed

H h h pointed

of the Golden Images should be carried in Pomp, (as the usage had heretofore been;) but the Salutary Trophie only.

words in the Greek, the Fuk and Turneb. Copies add two words in this manner, τὰ τῆς χυρῆς, &c. And in the following line, after the word τὸ αὐτὸν, the same Copies and Sr. Hen. Savil's insert the verb ἠγάγετο. But the common reading, which we have followed, is far better. Valf.

C H A P. XXII.

* *His Fervency and Earnestness in Praying, and his * Religious Observation of the Festival of Easter.* * Or, Honour.

very happily mended the Title of this chapter, in this manner, σπουδὴν, his fervency and earnestness in praying. For in this chapter Eusebius treats concerning that fervency in praying wherewith Constantine was inflamed. The cause of the mistake arose from the usage of the Antiquarii [persons that wrote Books far:] who in their writing out the Titles of chapters, were wont to omit the first letter, that afterwards at their leisure they might point it with Permillio. In the King's Sheets the first letter of the Title is always left out. But in the Fuk Copy 'tis sometimes added, sometimes omitted. For instance the Title of this chapter, both in the Fukian Copy and in the King's Sheets, is thus worded, τὸ δὲ αἰσχυρῶς, the first letter being omitted; which the Fukian Manuscript, in the body of the Book, does make good in this manner, ἐπεὶ δὲ, &c. very ill, and without any sense, as it is apparent. Valf.

* Or, Myrtles. BUT He himself, in regard he was a partaker of the sacred * Rites, every day at stated hours shut himself up within the inmost Rooms of his Imperial Palace, where he convers'd alone with his only God; and falling upon his knees, made his request in humble Supplications, that he might obtain those things which he stood in need of. But on the days of the Salutary Festival, he rais'd the vigour of his Religious exercises and meditations, and with his utmost strength of body and mind * performed the Office of a Prelate or Pontiff. * And with a cheerfulness and diligence he himself lead on all persons to the celebration of the Feast. But he turned the sacred Vigil into the brightness of day, * pillars of wax which were of a vast height being lighted up all over the City, by those persons to whom this affair was given in charge.

He performed the divine Rites of things sacred. Myrculus translates it in this manner; Sacras ceremonias exprimebat, he dispatch'd the sacred Ceremonies. But neither of these two Persons perceived that this place was corrupted. I read therefore, ἡεργαυδίας ἔτελες, performed the Office, &c. For he compares Constantine to a Prelate or Pontiff; whence he subjoyns these words in the following chapter ἐταυτοῖς τοῖς ταῦτ' ἡεργαυδίας. In this manner therefore he himself performed the Office of a Priest to his own God; and in the chapter after that, adds, that, Constantine behaved himself as a Bishop; and in presence of the Bishops took that appellation upon himself. Valf.

* Or, the night. In the Fukian Copy the reading is αὐτὸς δὲ. I read αὐτὸς τὴν νύκτα τὴν ἐκκλησίαν ἔλαττον, And with a cheerfulness, &c. So above at chap. 17. his words are, σπουδὴν ἔλαττον τὴν νύκτα ἐκκλησίαν ἔλαττον, with diligence and cheerfulness himself led the way to those who assembled within that Church. Valf.

* King's Sheets. The Christians in the Vigil of the Feast of Easter lighted a vast company of wax Tapers. Which thing having been done by them, within the Church only; Constantine gave order that without the Church also Tapers should be every where lighted, in honour of so great a Festival. And whereas lights were usually kindled in the night, in great Cities, as I have remarked at the 14th Book of Ann. Marcellinus, pag 6. of my notes; Constantine would have far more, and larger Torches lighted up on that night, to the end he might induce the minds of the Heathens to a veneration of the Christian Religion. Further, those pillars of wax, which Eusebius makes mention of here, do excellently well denote the Paschal Taper which we are wont to light up in the Vigil of Easter: concerning which Taper Barlaamus Brissinius has written a particular Book. See Gregory Nazianzen in his 19th Oration. And in his second Oration de Pascha, chap. 676. he says, that then Lights were usually kindled both in private and publicly; in so much that, by reason of the multitude of Lights which all ages and degrees of men lighted up, that night was rendered transcendently bright. Gaudentius Braxiensis therefore does deservedly term that night, noctem splendidissimam, a most splendid night; as does likewise Zeno Veronenfis in his first Sermon ad Neophytos. Valf.

* Torches likewise were kindled, which enlightened all places; in so much that this Myrtick Vigil was rendred brighter than any the most glorious day. But as soon as the day light appeared; in imitation of our Saviour's Beneficence, * He reach'd out a bountiful hand to all Nations, Provinces, and People, and bestowed on all Persons the richest sort of Gifts.

an exposition of the foregoing words, κηρὶ ζωας, pillars of wax. But Christophorus distinguishes λαμπράς from these pillars of wax; whom we have also followed. Grecians do properly term those λαμπράς, which the Latines call Torches; as Pollux informs us Book 10 Chap. 26. In which place of Pollux the reading must be ἐκ ζωατέων, not ζωατέων, as 'tis commonly printed. Hence a Game amongst the Greeks was termed λαμπρὰνδρῶν, so called from these Torches. Grecians do likewise use λαμπρὰς to signify a Lamp, in which sense it occurs in the 25th Chap. of St. Matthew; in the same manner that φῶς is taken both for a Taper, and also for a Lamp. Valf.

* This passage of Eusebius is to be taken notice of in reference to the Easter-Alms, which Constantine was wont to bestow yearly, in memory of that Benefit which Christ on those days conferred upon mankind. The Ancient Christians were heretofore wont on the Festival of Easter to distribute money amongst the poor; which thing was carefully performed not only by Lay-persons, but by the Clergy also. Concerning which matter there is an eminent passage in Commodianus's Second Book of Instructious, Chap. 73.

C ognovit in Pascha, de felicefimo nostro,
L. alexius & illi qui possident sumpta diurna.
R. rogetur eis quod possidet, Vinum & Esca-
R. episcopi forent qui meminerint ista pro vobis.
I. modicus sumptu deficiis Christo donare.
C. id ipsi non facere, quando facere potestis
U. iustitiam Legis talibus? Vel semel in anno.
S. se ma eos urget blasphemus, sepe de Vobis.

Commodianus speaks to the Clergy, as 'tis apparent from the Title of the Poem, and from the first letters of every verse. And he advises them, that at least on Easter-day they should bestow an Alms upon the poor. He reproves them also, because, by reason of their living too high, they had nothing left which they might bestow on the poor. For that is the meaning of this verse;

Immodico sumptu deficiis Christo donare.

Concerning these very Paschal-Alms, Anastasijs (in the Life of Pope Hadrian) speaks in these words. Similique & in Balneo juxta eandem Ecclesiam sita, &c. As likewise in the Bath also, which is situated near the same Church, where Our Saviour, the poor of Christ, who were wont to meet yearly to receive Alms in the Paschal Festival and to bath; &c. Valf.

C H A P. XXIII.

How He prohibited the worship of Idols; but honoured the Feasts of the Martyrs.

IN this manner therefore He Himself performed the Office of a Priest to his own God. But to all persons who lived under the Roman Empire, as well to the Commonalty as the Milice, the doors of Idolatry were shut, * and every * sort of sacrifice was prohibited. A Law also words was transmitted to the Presidents of Provinces, mult be rendered fac- that they likewise should pay a veneration to the Lord's day. Which [Presidents] * by the For 'tis Emperor's Order did in like manner honour that the Sacrifices of the Heathens were not expressly and by name forbidden by Constantine the Great, as Libanius in express words informs us in his Oration Pro Templis. Indeed Constantine by issuing forth a Law prohibited private and domestic Sacrifices, as it appears from the Theodosian Code de Maleficio & Mathematicis, and from the first Law de Paganis. But he forbid not the publick and solemn Sacrifices, which had been instituted by their Antecessors. Eusebius repeats the same thing in chap. 25. Valf.

* Τὴν εὐχαρίαν βασιλικῶν. It must be made οὐ τῇ εὐχαρίαν βασιλικῶν; ἀρχαῖος being to be understood; and we have rendred it accordingly. In Robert Stephens's Edition a point is ill set after the word βασιλικῶν; whereas it should be placed after the verb γαίρειν, as 'tis in the King's Copy, and in the Sheets agreeably; whereto we have pointed it. Valf.

There is a Law of Constantine's extant in the close of the Theodosian Code, under the Title de Episcopali auctoritate, wherein the Empereur commands that the sentences pronounced by a Bishop, even in Causis Minorum, should obtain the force of a Law. The Translater therefore has done ill, at this place to render ſyn, Regulæ, Rules or Canons. For the diſcourſe here is not concerning the Eccleſiaſtick Rule, which was promulg'd in a Synod by the Biſhops; but concerning Sentences pronounc'd between Perſons at Law, as it ſtood theſe words of Euphrosin to otherwiſe. But, that which occaſions the difficulty is, what Euphrosin has ſaid in the following words, ſynæ τὰς ἐν αὐταῖς ἀποφαινεῖται, thoſe Decrees which were promulg'd in Synods. But, avoid<sup>ed</sup> is here uſed to ſignifie an Eccleſiaſtick Synon, to wit, of a Biſhop and his Prebys. Saxomen has the very ſame term, in his fiſt Book, chap. 9, where he ſpeaks concerning this Law of Conſtitution. Which Author's words I do ſo much the more willingly produce, as often as the Laws are treated of, becauſe he was a Perſon incomparably well ſkill'd in the Roman Laws, as 'tis evident from his Books. His words therefore in the foreſaid Book and Chapter are theſe. Τὸ δὲ ἐκ τῶν ἐκκλησιαστικῶν τῶν κατὰ τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τῶν δὲ ἐκ τῶν αὐτῶν, &c. Moreover, he permitted Litigants to appeal to the Judgment of the Biſhops; if they had a mind to avoid the Civil Magiſtrates. And, that their [the Biſhops] Sentence ſhould be firm and valid, and that force than the Sentence of the other Judges, as if it had been pronounc'd by the Emperor himſelf. And, that the Governours of Provinces, and their Officials, ſhould pay in Execution the Sentences pronounc'd [by the Biſhops]. And, that the Decrees of Synods ſhould be unalterable. But, if any one will have the Councils of Biſhops to be meant by the term αὐταῖς, then ſyn will ſignifie the Sentences pronounc'd in a Synod againſt miſchievous Priests and Hereticks; which Sentence the Emperours do confirm in the Second Law, in the ſame Title de Episcopalis auctoritate. Valeſ.

pronounc'd [by the Bishops] And, that the Decrees of Synods should be unalterable. But, if any one will have the Councils of Bishops to be meant by the term quoad, then they will signifie the Sentences pronounc'd in a Synod against mischievous Priests and Hereticks; which Sentences the Emperours do confirm in the Second Law, in the same Title de Episcopali auctoritate. Vale.

CHAP. XXVIII.

His Gifts [bestowed] on the Churches; and His Distributions of Money to Virgins, and to the Poor.

BUT on the Churches of God He conferred innumerable Gifts, in a manner that was extraordinary and transcendent; sometimes bestowing Lands; at others, * Annona, for the maintenance of poor Men, fatherless Children, and Widows. Lastly, He took all imaginable care, that even infinite numbers of Garments should be provided for the naked and such as wanted clothing. But above all others, He vouchsafed them the highest honour, who had wholly dedicated themselves to the divine Philosophy.

H h h 3

deed and Sec.

his hand: Although (said he,) you were possessor of all the Riches of this World, and of the whole Element of the Earth, yet you shall carry away nothing more than this space of ground which I have mark'd out, if even * that be allowed you. Notwithstanding this Blessed Prince said and did these things, yet he reclaimed no Person. But, 'twas manifestly evidenced by the very event of affairs, that the Emperours * Admonitions were rather like Divine Oracles, than bare words.

* Or, 'tis uncertain whether you shall be buried in the ground; in regard you may either be burnt, or drowned in the Sea, or devoured by wild Beasts. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is νύξας, not νύξας, as 'tis here. Vale!

CHAP. XXXI.

That he was laught at because of his too great Clemency.

* Or, Death. Further, whereas there was no fear of * any Capital punishment, which might restrain ill Men from wickedness; (the Emperour himself being wholly inclined to Clemency, and the Governours in each Province wholly neglecting the prosecution and punishment of Crimes;) this thing exposed the publick Administration of Affairs to no ordinary blame and reprehension: whether justly, or otherwise, every one may judge according as he shall think good. Let me be permitted to record the Truth.

CHAP. XXXII.

*Concerning Constantine's * Oration, which He wrote to The Convention of the Saints.*

* Or, Gave the writing of this, &c. † Or, Our tongue. Under the disposition of the Magister Officiorum. Magister Officiorum (as the Interpreter of Offices) were the Interpreters of various Nations and Languages, as the Notitia of the Roman Empire informs us. Constantine therefore made use of their assistance in translating his Orations and Letters out of Latine into Greek. Vale!

CHAP. XXXIII.

How He heard Eusebius's Panegyrick concerning the Sepulchre of our Saviour, in a standing posture.

BUT that, in my judgment, is in no wife to be silently overpast, which this admirable [Prince] did, even in Our own presence. For, when we had one time besought him, being confident of his singular piety towards God, that he would be an Auditor of a Speech of Ours concerning the Sepulchre of our Saviour; He gave us Audience with all imaginable willingness.

And a great company of Hearers standing round, * within the Imperial Palace it self, He himself stood also, and together with the rest gave Audience. But when We entreated him to rest himself upon his Imperial Throne which was placed hard by, he would by no means be persuaded to sit; But with an intent mind, weighed what was spoken, and by his own Testimony approved the truth of the * Theologicall Dogmata. But when much time had been spent, and Our Oration was continued to a great length; We were desirous to break off. But he would not suffer that; but entreated us to go on till we had ended our Discourse. And when we again Solicited Him to sit down, He on the contrary was urgent in His Refusal: sometimes affirming, That it was unfit to bearken to Discourses which treated concerning God, with ease and remissness; at other times saying, that this was useful and advantageous to Him. For it was [He told Eusebius's Oration] a thing consonant to Piety and Religion, to hear Discourses about Divine matters in a standing posture. After these things were finished, we returned home, and betook our selves to our usual Studies and exercises.

if the Emperour had heard the Speech standing in the Church; that would have been less strange, in regard the place it self requires reverence, and because in the Church the Emperour himself is one of the number of the Faithful. But, for the Emperour to stand in the Palace whilst a Bishop was speaking, that is a signal instance of Religion. See chap. 46. whence it may be manifestly gathered, that the Palace is meant here. Further, the Christians were heretofore wont in a standing posture to hear the Sermon of the Priest in the Church. For no body sat in the Church but the Presbyters, as Optatus informs us, Book 4. Quoniam peccatorem arguit, & Sedentem increpat Deus, Specialist ad vos dictum esse constat non ad populum, qui in Ecclesia non habet sedendi licentiam. Vale!

CHAP. XXXIV.

That He wrote to Eusebius concerning Easter, and about the Divine Books.

BUT He, always * Sollicitously consulting the good of God's Churches, wrote a Letter to us, about providing [some Copies] of the Divinely inspired Oracles: as also [another Letter] concerning the most Holy Feast of Easter. For, whereas we had dedicated a Book to Him, wherein the Mystick account of that Festival was explained; in what manner He rewarded and honoured us by His answer, any one may perceive, by perusing this Letter of His.

the Book de Ratione Computi paschalis, which Beda (in his Book de Ratione Temporum, Chap. 42.) asserts to have been made by Eusebius. Indeed, the Emperour Constantine, in his Letter to Eusebius, does attest, that that work of Eusebius's, which is here mentioned, was a Laborious work, and that it contained the whole account, Original, and perfection of the Paschal Feast. Concerning this Book of Eusebius, Jerome in his piece de Scriptoribus Ecclesiasticis speaks thus. Hippolytus rationem pasche, temporumque Canonem scripsit, & sedecim annorum circulum reperit, & Eusebius qui super eodem pascha canonem decem & novem annorum circuli composuit, occasionem dedit. Which words of St. Jerome, Beda hath transcribed in his Book de Sex Aetatibus Mundi; and in his History, Book 5. Chap. 22. Vale!

CHAP. XXXV.

Constantine's [Letter] to Eusebius, wherein He commends his Oration concerning Easter.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS
MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS,
To Eusebius.

IT is indeed a mighty Attempt, and [a work] superior to all the power of Oratory, to declare the mysteries of Christ agreeably to their dignity, and in a due manner to unfold the Reason and Ground of Easter, and its Institution, and its advantageous and laborious consummation. For, 'tis impossible even to Men that are able to understand things Divine, to declare those matters according to their dignity. Nevertheless, I do highly admire your excellent Learning, and your Extraordinary diligence; and have my self most willingly perused your Book; also found, and, according to your desire, have given order, that it should be put into the hands of many Persons who sincerely adhere to the observance of the Divine Religion. Whereas therefore you understand, with how great a delight of mind we receive such Presents as these from Your Prudence, take care to please us in future with more frequent Discourses, whereunto you confess your self to have been by education accustomed. But (as the saying is,) we incite you who run, to your usual Studies. In as much as, this so great an opinion does sufficiently demonstrate, that you have not found an unworthy Translator of Your Writings, who can render Your Labours into a Latine: although 'tis impossible, that such a Person should express the dignity of Works that are so egregiously eminent. God keep You, Beloved Brother! such was his situation, Letter in reference to this matter. But, that which he wrote about providing [some Copies of the Scriptures] to be read in Churches, cannot be said runs thus.

concerning the original of a controversy. You would do better therefore to render μὴν, Institution, καὶ ἐκείνη imparte the consummation of the Paschal Feast, performe this duty, who by the Miracle of his own Resurrection, hath made a true Paschal for Christians. Valef.

After these words in the Greek, in the King's Copy, and in the Edition of Robert Stephens, these words follow, καὶ τὸ μακάριον ἔστι καλῶν ἔργων, &c. although 'tis impossible, that such, &c. But Scaliger, Bargeusius, and others have made up this place from I know not what Copies. The same supplement I likewise found in the Fukeian Copy, and in Moreus's Book, and indeed something more correct than it is in the Geneva Edition. For, in that the reading is, ὁς ἀντιγράφει σωτὴς ὑμῶν ἐστί. But it must be written ἀντιγράφει, or ἐντελέγει. Valef.

Ἡ περὶ τὴν μεμνημένην, This so great a confidence, or persuasion. He means his boldness, who by Constantine's order had translated Eusebius's Book concerning Easter: or rather, μεμνημένη is the opinion and judgement of the Emperour himself. The Translator understood it as meant concerning the boldness or confidence of Eusebius himself, which can in no wise be agreeable here. Doubtless, μεμνημένη cannot here be taken otherwise, than for the judgement and persuasion, as well of Constantine Himself, as of other Men, who highly extolled Eusebius's Treatise concerning Easter, which by Constantine's order had been rendered into Latine. This so great an opinion of all Men says he, does sufficiently shew, that you have met with no unworthy a Translator. Further, those words ὅς ἀντιγράφει σωτὴς ὑμῶν ἐστί construed two ways, either with the adjective ἀντιγράφει, or with the term μεμνημένη. Valef.

After these words, in Moreus's Copy there is an empty space left. Questionless the word μεμνημένη is wanting. The place therefore must be made good in this manner, τὸν εἰς τὸν βιβλίον σου καὶ ὅς ποτε μεταφράσειν ἡ γὰρ σου, who can render, &c. or rather, εἰς τὸν βιβλίον, as Eusebius expresses himself above at chap. 32. Indeed, in the Fukeian Copy, the reading is, εἰς τὸν βιβλ. . . καὶ ὅς ποτε μεταφράσειν, &c. Valef.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Constantine's Letter to Eusebius, concerning the providing [some Copies] of the Divine Scriptures.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS
MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS,
To Eusebius.

IN That City which bears Our Name, by the assistance of God Our Saviour's Providence, a vast multitude of Men have joined themselves to the most Holy Church. Whereas therefore all things do there receive a very great increase, it seems highly requisite, that there should be more Churches erected in that City. Wherefore, do you most willingly receive that which I have determined to do. For, it seemed fit, to signify to Your Prudence, that you should order fifty Copies of the Divine Scriptures (the provision and use whereof you know to be chiefly necessary for the instruction of the Church) to be written on well-prepared Parchment, by artificial Transcribers of Books most skilful in the art of accurate and fair writing; which [Copies] must be very legible, and easily portable in order to their being used. Moreover, Letters are dispatch'd away from our Clemency to the Rationalist of the Diocesis, that he should take care for the providing of all things necessary in order to the finishing of the said Copies. This And, at this place therefore shall be the Work of your diligence, [to see] that the written Copies be forthwith provided. You likewise are also empowered by the Authority of this our Letter, to have the use of two publick Carriages, in case of the order to their Conveyance. For by this means, those which are transcribed fair, may most commodiously be conveyed even to Our Sight; to wit, one certain of the Deacons of your Church being employed in the number of performance hereof. Who, when he comes to Us, shall Province, be made sensible of Our Bounty. God preserve you, Dear Brother!

* Or, Humanity. Vicarius of the Pratorian Prefecture. For a Præfatus Prætor had several Dioceses under his own dispose; but the Vicarius had but one Diocese. Further, this word began to be used in this sense about Constantine's times, as we learn both from Constantine's Letters recorded above, and also from some Laws of the Theodosian Code. Valef.

CHAP. XXXVII.

In what manner the Copies were provided.

THese things the Emperour gave order for. Which Order of his was immediately followed by the completion of the work it self; we having sent him Terminions and Quaternions in Volumes magnificently adorned. Which very thing another answer of the Emperour's will attest. In which Letter (information having been given him, that the City Constantia in our Countie, quaterniones. For Parchment Copies were usually digested into Quaternions, that is, four Sheets were made up together, as Terminions are three Sheets made up together. And the Quaternions had sixteen pages the Terminions twelve. Further, in the last page of the Quaternions was set the number of the Quaternion, to wit, 1, 2, 3, and 4 on; as I have observed in the most ancient Copies, as well Greek as Latine. In my very old Copy of Gregorius Turonensis, which was written about the year 414, in the last page of the Quaternion I found this mark, q. 1. that is, the first Quaternion. Further, the Reader is to be advertized, that in these words of Eusebius there is an Enallage. For he hath said τὸ πρῶτον ἐν τῷ βιβλίῳ whereas it ought rather to have been worded thus, τὸ πρῶτον ἐν τῷ βιβλίῳ. Valef.

try, heretofore consisting of Men notoriously superstitious, had by an <sup>b</sup> impulse of piety receded from their Pristine error of Idolatry;) he signified, that he rejoiced, and highly approved of that Action.

<sup>b</sup> Οὐκ ἐν τῇ Εὐκλείῃ In the Eukleian Copy this place is read thus, ὁμοῦθεν ἀποβόλῃ, τὸς ἡμετέροις μεταβληταῖς ἐκδοῦναι σπάνος ἐξέστη. And so I guess it was written in Sir Henry Savil's Copy, because Sir Henry hath under-mark'd these three words, namely, ὁμοῦ ἀποβόλῃ and σπάνος, with lines. Valef.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

How the Mart-Town of the Gazæi, by reason of [its embracing] the Christian Religion, was made a City, and named Constantia.

FOR Constantia in the Province of Palestine having at this very time embraced the Salutary Religion, was vouchsafed a signal honour, both from God, and from the Emperour. For, it was both termed a City, which it had not been before; and likewise changed its name for a better appellation, to wit, that of the Emperour's most religious Sister.

CHAP. XXXIX.

That in Phœnice there was a City made [termed Constantina;] and in other Cities the Idols were destroyed, and Churches erected.

THE same thing was likewise done in many other places. For instance, in a City of the Province of Phœnice, which is called by the Emperour's name. The Inhabitants whereof having committed their innumerable Images to the flames, changed their worship of them, for the observation of the salutary Law. Moreover, in other Provinces, they came over in great companies, as well in the Country as in the Cities, to the saving knowledge [of God,] and destroyed their Images consisting of all sorts of matter (which before had been accounted sacred by them,) as if they were nothing: they also demolished their own Temples and places of worship, which were raised to a vast height, when no Person ordered them to do it. But they erected Churches from the very foundations, and made a change of their former opinion, or error rather. But, * to give a particular Narrative of all this pious Emperour's Actions, is not so much our business, as theirs who were vouchsafed a continual converse with him. After therefore we have in short <sup>b</sup> recorded in this work those matters which came to our knowledge, we will pass to the * later part of his Life.

* Or, Last time.

which I rather approve of. For it follows, τὴν τὴν διαβολὴν ἀπελθεῖν. But it would be better, were it thus written, τὰ καὶ ἀποδοῦναι. Valef.

<sup>b</sup> Πραξιόντες τὴν ὑπαρξίαν. The Translator renders this place thus: nos vero quoniam breviter que nobis nota fuerunt, literarum monumentis mandavimus; but because we have in short committed to writing those things which were known to us. But I render it thus; postquam ea que nobis nota sunt breviter exposuerimus, ad extremum quæ vitæ tempus Sermonem transferemus; after we have briefly declared those things which are known to us, we will turn our discourse to the last time of his Life. Which rendition is doubtless truer, and more agreeable to the words and meaning of Eusebius. For, if Eusebius had meant for the Translator thought he did, he would bare said, ὡς ἔγραψεν. Valef.

CHAP. XL.

That having created his three Sons Cæsars in the three ten years of his Reign, He celebrated the dedication of the Martyrium at Jerusalem.

THIRTY * Years of His Reign were now completed <sup>a</sup>. Wherein his three Sons had at different times been created Colleagues of the Empire. Constantine, who bore the same name with his Father, was the first that partook of that honour, about the tenth year of his Father's Empire. His second Son Constantius, grac'd with his Grandfather's name, was declared Cæsar about the time of the celebration of his Father's Vicennalia. His third Son Constans, who by his own name denotes Preference and Stability, Robert was promoted to this honour about the thirtieth year of his Father's Reign. Thus therefore when (* according to a likeness of the Trinity as 'twere,) he had gotten † three Sons beloved by God, and had honoured them with the Colleguehip of his Empire, <sup>b</sup> at each period of ten years of his Reign; he thought his Tricennalia to be a most opportune time, wherein he might give thanks to [God] the suprem King. And he himself judg'd it best and most agreeable, should He celebrate the dedication <sup>c</sup> of that Martyrium, which with all imaginable diligence and magnificence he had caused to be of the same erected at Jerusalem.

Βασιλεὺς, was the occasion that this whole line was omitted by the over-hasty Antiquarius [Transcriber of Books.] In the Eukleian Copy, the reading is, διαβολὴν ἡ ἀποδοῦναι ὑποδοῦναι, excellently well. Thus by the addition of one small word, this place is perfected. But Sir Henry Savil supplied this place by adding three words, as did also Scaliger and Christopherson αὐτὸς ὁ τῆς διαβολῆς, &c. Valef.

<sup>b</sup> Ἐπὶ τῇ τριτῇ διαβολῇ ἡ τριτὴ διαβολή. The Translator has rendered it ill, decimo quoque anno, (even) tenth year. For Constantine did not create his Sons Cæsars, every tenth year of his Empire. For he made Crispus and Constantinus, Cæsars, in the Consulate of Gallienus and Bassus, on the Calends of March, which was the eleventh year of his Empire. But Constantinus was created Cæsar, in the third Consulate of Crispus and Constantinus, on the sixth of the Ides of November, that is, on the nineteenth year of Constantine's Empire. Lastly, Constans was proclaimed Cæsar by his Father, in the Consulate of Dalmatius and Zenophilus, on the eighth of the Calends of January, when Constantine was entered into the twenty eighth year of his Empire, as it appears from Idacius's Fasti. Wherefore Eusebius's words will be better rendered thus, singulis decennis, in each of his ten years. But neither will what Eusebius hath said, be true, even this way. For Crispus and Constantinus junior were not created Cæsars in Constantine's first ten years, but about his first ten years. Therefore, these words want a favourable interpretation. Which Baronius was in the least perceiving, has recorded Crispus to have been made Cæsar in the year of Christ 315, which is a Prochronism of two years. Valef.

<sup>c</sup> Εὐχαριστήριον αὐτῶν. I doubt not but it should be written Εὐχαριστήριον; which I wonder was not perceived by others. In the Eukleian Copy 'tis written, Εὐχαριστήριον αὐτῶν ὁ Εὐχαριστήριον; which reading I like not. Valef.

CHAP. XLI.

That in this interim He ordered a Synod to be convened at Tyre, because of some controversies [started] in Egypt.

BUT the envious Devil, that Enemy to all good, * like some dark cloud opposed against the most splendid Rays of the Sun, at tempted to disturb the brightness of this Celestial light, or, as 'twere; as I found it mended at the margin of Moræus's Copy and a little alter, the reading must be ὡς ἔμελλεν. Valef.

brity;

* Or, quire of God.
b He means Alexander Bishop of the City Thessalonica, who was present at the Synod at Tyre, as Athanasius witnesseth. By the Bishops of Pannonia and Moesia. Eusebius means Orfacius and Valens leading Men of the African faction, who were sent from the Synod of Tyre into Egypt, that they might there enquire concerning the Crimes wherewith Athanasius had been charged, as Athanasius relates in his Apologétique. Valef.
* He means Theogenius Bishop of Nicas, and Theodorus Bishop of Perinthus, which was otherwise termed Heraclea; which Prelates were present at the same Synod, as Athanasius and Theodoret do inform us. Besides Theogenius, two other Bishops out of Bithynia were present at the Synod of Tyre; namely Eusebius of Nicomedia, and Marius of Chalcidone. Valef.
* Athanasius relates in his Apologétique pag. 788. speaking concerning this Synod, does attest, that Constantine sent the Palatine Soldiers, who were to obey the commands of the Bishops. His words are these, ὅτι καὶ οὐκ ὀλίγοι ἀποστόλοις, καὶ ἐρατοῦσι δορυφόροις διδόναι τὴν αὐτὴν ἐπιμέλειαν. Valef.
* That is, Two approved Men sent from the Imperial Palace.
* This was Marianus the Tribun and Notary, as Cicero said in the Contents of this Chapter, and in Sozomen. He bore the same dignity as Constantine, as Athanasius attests in his Book de Synodis Ariminis of Seleucia. Valef.
* Πρόεδρος ἢ δὲ ἀρχὴ. It must be written πρόεδρος τῶν ἀρχόντων. There is the same error in the foregoing Chapter; where the reading is ἀρχόντες ἢ ἀρχὴν. instead of ἀρχόντες τῶν; in which manner 'tis written at both places in the Fulgerian Copy. Valef.

perial Letter, moved the Synod, that without any delay they would forthwith hasten their journey to Jerusalem. All of them therefore left the Province of the Phoenicians, and by [the assistance of the] Cursus Publicus went whither they had received orders to go. At which time that whole place was filled with a numerous <sup>a</sup> divine assembly, the eminent Bishops out of every Province having met together at Jerusalem. For the <sup>b</sup> Macedonians had sent the [Bishop] of the Metropolis amongst them: and the Pannonii and Moesii [had directed thither] the choicest flower of God's youth in their Country. There was likewise present the Ornament of the Perthian Bishops, an holy Person and one that was incomparably well vers'd in the divine Oracles.

* The Bithynians also and Thracians * by their own presence adorned the Convention. Nor were the most eminent [of the Bishops] amongst the Cilicians absent. Those of Cappadocia likewise who excelled for Learning and Eloquence, shined in the midst of this Congress. Moreover, all Syria and Mesopotamia, Phoenice and Arabia, together with Palestine it self; Egypt also and Libya, and those who inhabit the Country of Thebais, all [met] together, and filled up that great Quire of God. Who were followed by an innumerable company of People out of all the Provinces. There was present together with all these Persons, an <sup>a</sup> Imperial Attendance; and from the Imperial Palace it self, approved Men were sent, who, with Expences furnished by the Emperour, might illustrate the Festivity.

CHAP. XLIV.

Concerning their Reception by Marianus the Notary, and concerning the Money distributed amongst the Poor, and the sacred Gifts of the Church.

BUT, over <sup>a</sup> all these there was appointed as chief, a <sup>b</sup> Person highly acceptable and useful to the Emperour; one that was eminent for his Faith, Religion, and Skill in the Sacred Scriptures. Who having been famous for his confessions in defence of Piety during the times of the Tyrants, was deservedly entrusted with the ordering of these matters. This Person therefore with all imaginable sincerity paid obedience to the Emperours Commands, and honoured the Synod with a most Courteous Reception, entertaining them with splendid Feasts and Banquets. But, amongst the indigent and naked, <sup>b</sup> and amongst infinite multitudes of Poor of both Sexes, who stood in great need of food and other necessities, he distributed vast quantities of Money, and a great number of Garments. Lastly, he variously adorned the whole Church with magnificent and royal sacred Gifts.

CHAP. XLV.

Various Discourses of the Bishops, in the Sacred Assemblies; as also of Eusebius himself the Author of this Work.

S But the Service performed by this Person. But the Ministers of God adorned the Festival, partly with their Prayers, and partly by their Discourses. <sup>a</sup> For some of them with Praises celebrated the <sup>b</sup> Benignity of the Religious Emperour towards the Universal Saviour, and in their Orations set forth the Magnificence of the Martyr words, Others * entertained their hearers with the Oleologic discourses upon the divine Dogmata, fitted to the present solemnity, as with some splendid banquet of rational food. Others † interpreted the Lessons of the divine Volumes, and disclosed the Mystic meanings. But such as were unable to arrive at these things, appeased the Deity with unbloody Sacrifices and mystick Immolations, humbly offering up their Prayers to God, for the common Peace, for the Church of God, for the Emperour himself who was the Occasioner of such great Blessings, and for his pious Children. At which place we our selves also, who were vouchsafed || Blessings much above our deserts, honoured the || Or solemnity with various discourses uttered in publick; sometimes making descriptions in writing of the stateliness and magnificence of the Royal Fabric; at others, || explaining the meanings of the prophetick Visions, in a manner befitting the present <sup>a</sup> Symbols and Figures. Thus was the Feast of Dedication celebrated, with the greatest joy imaginable, <sup>a</sup> on the very Tricennalia of the Emperour.

* Or Deologic discourses upon the divine Dogmata, fitted to the present solemnity, as with some splendid banquet of rational food. Others † interpreted the Lessons of the divine Volumes, and disclosed the Mystic meanings. But such as were unable to arrive at these things, appeased the Deity with unbloody Sacrifices and mystick Immolations, humbly offering up their Prayers to God, for the common Peace, for the Church of God, for the Emperour himself who was the Occasioner of such great Blessings, and for his pious Children. At which place we our selves also, who were vouchsafed || Blessings much above our deserts, honoured the || Or solemnity with various discourses uttered in publick; sometimes making descriptions in writing of the stateliness and magnificence of the Royal Fabric; at others, || explaining the meanings of the prophetick Visions, in a manner befitting the present <sup>a</sup> Symbols and Figures. Thus was the Feast of Dedication celebrated, with the greatest joy imaginable, <sup>a</sup> on the very Tricennalia of the Emperour.

† Or Deologic discourses upon the divine Dogmata, fitted to the present solemnity, as with some splendid banquet of rational food. Others † interpreted the Lessons of the divine Volumes, and disclosed the Mystic meanings. But such as were unable to arrive at these things, appeased the Deity with unbloody Sacrifices and mystick Immolations, humbly offering up their Prayers to God, for the common Peace, for the Church of God, for the Emperour himself who was the Occasioner of such great Blessings, and for his pious Children. At which place we our selves also, who were vouchsafed || Blessings much above our deserts, honoured the || Or solemnity with various discourses uttered in publick; sometimes making descriptions in writing of the stateliness and magnificence of the Royal Fabric; at others, || explaining the meanings of the prophetick Visions, in a manner befitting the present <sup>a</sup> Symbols and Figures. Thus was the Feast of Dedication celebrated, with the greatest joy imaginable, <sup>a</sup> on the very Tricennalia of the Emperour.

* Or Deologic discourses upon the divine Dogmata, fitted to the present solemnity, as with some splendid banquet of rational food. Others † interpreted the Lessons of the divine Volumes, and disclosed the Mystic meanings. But such as were unable to arrive at these things, appeased the Deity with unbloody Sacrifices and mystick Immolations, humbly offering up their Prayers to God, for the common Peace, for the Church of God, for the Emperour himself who was the Occasioner of such great Blessings, and for his pious Children. At which place we our selves also, who were vouchsafed || Blessings much above our deserts, honoured the || Or solemnity with various discourses uttered in publick; sometimes making descriptions in writing of the stateliness and magnificence of the Royal Fabric; at others, || explaining the meanings of the prophetick Visions, in a manner befitting the present <sup>a</sup> Symbols and Figures. Thus was the Feast of Dedication celebrated, with the greatest joy imaginable, <sup>a</sup> on the very Tricennalia of the Emperour.

the year of Christ 335, on the Idea of September, Constantinus and Albinus being Consuls, in Constantine's Tricennalia. At which time Constantine was in the thirtieth year of his Empire. Tetrazwisthes, does properly signify Tricennalia, that is, a festivity of sports which were performed on account of the thirtieth year of an Emperor's Reign. The Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle, in the Consulate of Con- stantinus and Albinus, has these words: Τετραν ην ο αὐτοῦ ἥδον τρια- κοστῆτης, which in Idatius's Fasti occur rendered into Laune, in this manner: His Coff. Tricennalia edidit Constantinus Augustus die 8. Cal. Augusti, in the Consulate of these Persons. Constantinus Augustus published his Tricennalia, on the eighth of the Calends of August. Yet sometimes τρεκατοστήτης, and Tricennalia are taken for the thirtieth year. So Jerome relates, that Dalmatius was created Cæsar in Constantine's Tricennalia, that is, on the thirtieth year of his Empire. But whereas I have said, that the Dedication Feast of the Jerusalem Church was celebrated on the Idea of September, of this matter I have Nicephorus my Author, in his eighth book, chap. 10. Indeed, in Saint Saba's Typicon, and in the Greek Menology, on the thirteenth day of September are placed τρεκατοστήτης τῆς ὁδοῦ τοῦ ἀνδρόδωρου. So also Sopronius in his Oration de Exaltatione Sanctæ Crucis; and this Festivity was observed every year, for the space of eight days. From these Authors the Alexandrian Chronicle must be corrected, wherein there is a mistake, as well in the day as the Consulate, in which these things were done. Valf.

CHAP. XLVI.

That He afterwards recited his Description of our Saviour's Martyrium, and his Oration upon Constantine's Tricennalia, before the Emperor himself.

BUT, what the Form of our Saviour's Church is, what the fashion is of the Salutory Cave, * how great the Beauty and Elegancy of the Structure, and [Lastly] how * many the Donaria, made partly of Gold and Silver, and partly of pretious Stones; we have, as well as we could, comprized in a peculiar Treatise, and have dedicated it to the Emperor Himself. Which Book we shall make a seasonable publication of * at the close of this present Work: whereto we will annex that Oration concerning his Tricennalia, which, having not long after made a journey to Constantinople, we recited in the Emperours own hearing. This was the * second time that we celebrated the praises of God the supream King, within the Imperial Palace. Which [Oration] the Emperor, who was beloved by God, being an auditor of, seemed like one transported with joy. And this himself manifested after the Speech was done, in regard he entertained those Bishops that were present at a Banquet, and bestowed on them all imaginable honour.

<sup>a</sup> Amongst the other Donaria [Sacred Gifts] which Constantine gave to the Jerusalem Church, there was a Sacerdotal Pall woven with threads of Gold, which the Bishop made use of in his performing the solemn Prayers, as Theodoret relates, Ecclesiæ Hist. book 2, chap. 27. Valf.

<sup>b</sup> Mem. τὸν ἄριστον τῆς πόλεως, after this present Subject. That is, at the close of this work. The Translator rendered it ill; quod etiam cum videtur & alioquin opere edemus. But our Rendition is confirmed by Eusebius himself in chap. 32. of this Book. Valf.

<sup>c</sup> For Eusebius had before made a Speech in the Palace, as he himself attests above, at chap. 33: where fee what we have noted. Valf.

CHAP. XLVII.

That the Synod at Nicæa happened on Constantine's Vicennalia; but the Dedication [of the Church] at Jerusalem [was performed] on His Tricennalia.

THIS Second Synod, the greatest that we have known, the Emperor convened at Jerusalem, after that first Synod, which he had affembled * at the most eminent City of Bithynia. <sup>a</sup> That was a triumphal [Synod,] which in the Chronicon Vicennalia of [Constantine's] Empire paid its Decade. <sup>b</sup> Vows for the Victory obtained over his Enemies and Adversaries, in that very City which had its name from Victory. But this [Synod] which regarded the period of his third Decade; when the thing I have Emperor Dedicated to God the Giver of all followed in Good, * the Martyrium, as 'twere some Sacred my Veneration; nor do I doubt but Eusebius wrote Monument of our Saviour.

<sup>c</sup> Further, in this place there is an ambiguity. For the words may be construed thus; ταῦτα δὲ ἄρχοντες ὡς ἐν ἱερῷ οὐκ ἔστιν ἡ τῶν ἀποστόλων ἐκκλησία, &c. This Second Synod, which we know to be the greatest after that First [Synod] which he had assembled at the most eminent City of Bithynia, the Emperor convened at Jerusalem. Which sense Christopherson has followed. Valf.

<sup>d</sup> Εὐχὴ τῆς νίκης. I embrace the emendation of Learned Men, which I found written in Morus's Copy also; viz. ἐὐχὴ ἐν τῇ νίκῃ. Nevertheless, I would willingly add another word also, in this manner, εὐχὴ νικησίου ἐν τῇ νίκῃ, &c. and have rendered it accordingly. Further, the term εὐχὴ must be rendered oasis, oases. For Eusebius alludes to the usage of the Romans, who in such Solemnities made Vows for the safety and felicity of the Prince, as 'tis apparent from Plinius's Epistle to Trajan. Moreover, in old Coins we read such Vows as these thus expressed, VOTIS XX. M. L. TIS XXX. But in other Coins 'tis thus, S. P. Q. R. S. P. C. X. X. That is, So His Decennalia, So His Vicennalia. In the Fukerian Copy 'tis plainly written εὐχὴ ἐν τῇ νίκῃ. Valf.

<sup>e</sup> Τὸ κασιόριον. In the Letter of the Bishops of the Jerusalem Synod, (who by Constantine's Order met in order to the Dedication of this Church, which Letter Anastasi records in his Apologick, pag. 80.) 'tis termed κασιόριον κασιόριον, the Salutory Martyrium. Jerome also in his Chronicon terms it the Martyrium; as does likewise Sozomen, book 2, chap. 15. Marcus in the Life of Porphyrius Bishop of Gaza, and Eucherius in his Book de Sicu urbis Hierosolymitane. See Our Letter de Anastasi, &c. wherein we have at large proved against Jacobus Gregerius and Jacobus Sirmondus, that there was only one Church erected by Constantine, which was termed the Martyrium and Anastasi. Which Letter we thought good to make a second publication of, at the close of our Notes, pag. 304, &c. Valf.

CHAP. XLVIII.

That Constantine was displeased with One, who praised Him too highly.

AFter the performance of all these things; <sup>a</sup> When the Emperor's God-like Virtue was cry'd up in the Discourses of all Men, one far as the of the Ministers of God was so bold, as to pronounce Him blessed to His very face: in regard he had both been vouchsafed the supream Empire over the whole Roman World in this Life present; and also, in that to come, should reign together with the Son of God. But he, much displeased at the hearing of this Expression, advised the Man, that he should not presume to utter such words; but, rather that by Prayer he would make his humble request to God, that as well in the Life present, as in that to come, * He might appear worthy of being reckoned amongst the servants of Jesus Christ. <sup>b</sup> Valf.

CHAP.

CHAP. XLIX.

The Marriage of Constantius Cæsar, His Son.

When the Thirtieth year of His Empire was ended, He celebrated the Marriage of his second Son, * having long before performed the same thing for his elder Son. Banquets therefore and Feasts were made; the Emperor Himself led His Son the Bridegroom, and in a most splendid manner, entertained and feasted the whole company, the Men apart by themselves, and the Women in separate places by themselves. * Rich Gifts were likewise bestowed, both on the People, and on the Cities.

CHAP. L.

The Embassy and Presents [sent from] the Indians.

At the same time arrived Embassadors from those Indians who dwell at the rising Sun, and brought with them Presents. Which were various sorts of pretious Stones of an exquisite Lustre, and wild Beasts of a Nature different from those known amongst us. All which they presented to the Emperour, [thereby] declaring that his Empire reach'd * to the Indian Ocean it self; and that the * Roycelets, of the Indians Country honoured him with Pictures, and Statues erected to Him, and profest their acknowledgment of Him to be the Emperour and King. * Indeed, at the beginning of his Empire, the Britains [who dwell] at the setting Sun, were the first that submitted themselves to his Government: but now the Indians whose habitation is at the rising Sun, [did the same.]

* Further, Metrodorus the Philosopher seems to have been the chiefest Person of this Indian Embassy; who from the King of the Indians brought to Constantine very many Gems and Pearls: and pretended that he had brought many more, had not the Persian King taken them from him in his passage thorough Persia. By which lye Constantine being prevailed upon, whilst with too much eagerness he pursued what had been taken from Metrodorus, raises the Persian War, as 'tis recorded by Cedrenus and Amm. Marcellinus. But Cedrenus relates that in a place wholly foreign and disagreeable, namely in Constantine's twenty first year; whereas he ought to have placed it on the thirty first year of Constantine. For in this year the Peace between the Romans and Persians was broken. Valef.

* Αρκεσίου μὲν τῆς βασιλείας. In the Puketian C'py τῆς ἀρχιεπισκοπῆς δὲ τῆς, &c. But in the Old Sheets the reading is, ἀρχιεπισκοπῆς, which I like better. Valef.

CHAP. LI.

That Constantine having parted His Empire betwixt His three Sons, instructed them in the Art of Governing, * and Offices of Piety.

When therefore he had reduced both the Limits of the whole World under His own power, He divided his whole Empire, distributing some paternal inheritance as 'twere to his dearest Relatives, amongst His three Sons. To the Elder, He gave his Grand-fathers allotment: to the Second, the Empire of the East: to the Third, that Portion which lay in the midst between these two. But being desirous to procure a good inheritance for his Children, and such as might be salutary to their Souls, he scattered the seeds of Piety in their minds: partly by * cultivating them himself with divine Precepts; and partly by appointing them Tutors, who were Persons of approved Piety. He likewise set over them Teachers of Secular Learning, such Persons namely as were arrived at the height of Literature. Others instructed them in the knowledge of the Military Art. Others were their Instructors in politics, and matters Civil. And [lastly,] * others rendered them knowing and expert in the Laws. Moreover, to each of His Sons was allotted an Imperial * Attendance, [namely] † Scutarii; Hæstati; Protectors; Legions also, and Military Companies; and Officers that commanded them, [to wit,] Centurions, Tribunes, and † Duces: of whose skill in warlike affairs, as likewise of their good affection towards them his Sons, the Father had had experience.

CHAP. LII.

How, when they were arrived at Man's estate, He taught them Piety.

Further, during their being Cæsars as yet very young, they had (as 'twas requisite,) Ministers and Councillours present with them, who administered the publick affairs. * But when, afterwards, they grew up to be Men, their Fathers instruction only, was sufficient for them. Who sometimes incited 'em, when present with him, by private instructions to an imitation of himself; and taught them to become exact followers of his own piety: at other times, when they were absent, by his Letters he suggested to them Imperial Precepts. The first and chiefest whereof was this, that they should value the knowledge and worship of God the suprem King, above all riches whatever, and before the Empire it self. But at length he gave them power, of themselves to do what might be of advantage to the publick: and before all things gave them this in charge, that they should take a particular care of God's Church, and commanded them openly to own themselves to be Christians. And in this manner he instructed his Sons. But they, incited not so much by Precept as by their own alacrity of mind, exceeded the admonitions of their Father; in regard they had their minds always intent upon Piety towards God, and in the very Palace it self exactly performed and observed the Rites of the Church, together with all their Domesticks. For this was the work of the Fathers Care, to assign no Domesticks to his Sons, but such as were * worshippers of God. * The Commanders also of the First Companies, and they to whom the Care of the State was entrusted, πρυτανες. So in the foregoing chapter Eusebius makes use of the word πρυτανι to signify Military Companies; and in many other places. So Sozomen book 1. chap. 8. τῶν ἐκείνων ἢ τῶν βασιλικῶν τῶν μαται,

CHAP. LV.

How Constantine wrote Orations to the very last day of his Life.

<sup>1</sup> Suppose amongst others, Ab. latus to be meant; who after Constantine's death, in regard 'twas believed that he attempted a Rebellion, was slain by the order of Constantius, as Eusebius does at large relate in the Life of the Son of the Emperor. <sup>2</sup> Eusebius has made use of the term epitaph, where see what we have noted. You might also read epitaph, as 'tis written at the margin of the Geneva Edition. The Translator persisting in his mistake, renders it here also, Congressus cum amicis habere, to hold meetings with his friends; whereas he ought to have translated it, conciones habere, to make Speeches, as 'tis plainly confirmed by the words following. Victor in his Epitome says the same likewise concerning Constantine: Commodissimus tamen rebus multis fuit: Calumnias sedare legibus severissimis: nutrire artes bonas, precipue Junda Litterarum: legere ipse, scribere, meditari. Where meditari has the same import with μετασκέψασθαι, that is, declaimare, to declaim. Valf.

<sup>3</sup> Μακρὸν δὲ γὰρ νῆας. Doubtless it must be written καταΐκας, having continued; as others have already remarked. Valf.

<sup>4</sup> Τὸν δὲ δυνάστωρ. I had rather write τὸν δυνάστωρ. So Eusebius does usually term the Emperors, and especially the Philosophers, who thought themselves wiser than others. In the Enketian Copy the reading is δυναστωρ. But the third syllable has a line drawn under it. Valf.

CHAP. LVI.

How, making an Expedition against the Persians, He took the Bishops along with him, and [provided] a * Tent made in form of a Church.

* Or, Tabernacle.

THIS also is worthy to be recorded, that about the forementioned time, upon his hearing of the motion of those Barbarians [who dwell] at the East, having said, that as yet there remained to him this Victory [to be obtained] over them, he resolved upon an Expedition against the Persians. Which when he had determined to undertake, he summoned together his Military Forces; and likewise conferred with the Bishops that were about him, concerning the design of his Expedition; it being his chiefest care, that some Persons should always be present with him, who were of use in order to the worship of God. They affirmed, that they would most willingly follow him, nor would in any wife leave him; but with their incessant Prayers to God would engage and fight together with him. At which news he was highly pleased, and desirous to them a way whereby they might go. <sup>1</sup> Then he prepared a Tabernacle most <sup>2</sup> richly furnished, made in the form of a Church, for the use of this War; wherein he resolved, in company with the Bishops, to pour forth his Prayers to God the Giver of Victory.

in the Geneva Edition, unto the beginning of the 8th Chapter, (which passage we have inclosed within this mark [ ]), were wanting both in the King's Copy, and in Robert Stephens's Edition; and they have been added by Learned Men, from conjecture, as I think. For the Chapters which follow are too short, and contain nothing more than the very Titles of the Chapters; which is a thing altogether disagreeable to Eusebius's design. Wherefore 'tis credible, that Learned Men inserted these words from the Titles of the Chapters, which occur perfixt before the fourth Book. Further, in the Geneva Edition, these words δυνὸς δὲ, which occur after the verb δυστάσας, must be expunged. For the imperfection begins before these words δυνὸς δὲ, δὲ νῆας, &c. We have taken notice of a like mistake above. Our conjecture concerning this Supplement is plainly confirmed by the Enketian Copy, which (though it faithfully shews the other Supplements which are publish'd by the Geneva-men, as we have noted in their places; yet) has not the Supplement of this place. Nor is this Fragment written in Turmusius's Copy, although all the rest occur written at the margin of his Book. Valf.

<sup>3</sup> Socrates (book i. chap. 18.) relates the very same thing, in these words: πῶς δὲ ὁ βασιλεὺς ἐπὶ τὴν χριστιανικὴν μὲν δὲ, &c. Moreover, Isardus was the Emperor's Love for the Christian Religion, that being about to engage in a War with the Persians. He provided a Tabernacle made of Linden, painted with divers colours, much resembling a Church, even as Moses did in the wilderness; and this he would have carried about with him, that so in the most desert Regions he might have an Oratory ready. Which words of Socrates I have the more willingly produced, because I know that Socrates is wont most commonly to make use of the very words of Eusebius, in those passages which he borrows out of Eusebius. Therefore, these words of Socrates may supply the place of Eusebius's words. For I can very hardly be induced to believe, that those words which occur in this imperfection, are Eusebius's. Further, before this, in the Licinian War namely, Constantine had a Tabernacle of the Cross fixt without the Camp, into which he retired to fast and pray, as Eusebius attests Book 2. But in his preparation for the Parthian War, Constantine did this further, that he built a Tabernacle in form of a Church. Socrates relates, that from this practice of Constantine it was afterwards derived, that each Cohort in the Roman Army had its Tabernacle furnished like a Chappel, and peculiar Priests and Deacons, who might there perform Divine worship. Valf.

CHAP. LVII.

That having received the Embassy of the Persians, He watch'd all night, together with others, on the Feast of Baister.

IN the interim the Persians, informed of the Emperours preparation for a War, and being extremely fearful of coming to an Engagement with him, <sup>1</sup> by an Embassy entreated him to make a Peace. <sup>2</sup> Festus writes the same thing in his Brutarium. Constantinus reversus dominus, &c. Corā laureis supra in the Empire, at the latter end of his Life prepared an Expedition against the Persians. For the Nations in the whole World being subdued; and he being rendered more glorious by a fresh Victory obtained over the Goths, went down against the Persians with many Troops. At whose approach the Kingdoms of Babylon trembled so much, that an humble Embassy from the Persians met him, and promised they would do what they were commanded. Nevertheless, they deserved not to be pardoned for the continual Eruptions which they had attempted throughout the East, under Constantius Cæsar. But Socrates says only this: ἀλλ' ὁ σέβας τῶν ἀποστόλων, &c. But this War went on no farther at that time: For it was immediately extinguished by the fear which the Emperor had put the Persians into. Valef.

Wherefore, this most peaceable Emperour, gave the Embassie of the Persians a kind reception, and readily entred into a League with them. The great Festival of Easter was now at hand: wherein the Emperour paid his Vows to God, and together with others watch'd all Night long.

Who here observe the Barbarism, not of Eusebius, but of him who has made up this Chapter. For it ought to have been said, αὐτὸς ταύτας ἐκτίθεικε. Nor is it likely, that Constantine, who had drawn together all the Forces of the Roman Empire against the Persians, should have made a Peace with them. 'Tis certain, the contrary is affirmed by Rufus Festus, whose words we have produced above; as also by Eutropius, and Aurelius Victor. But Socrates intimates, that a Peace, or at least a Truce, was made with the Persian. Valef.

CHAP. LVIII.

Concerning the Building of that termed the Martyrium of the Apostles, at Constantinople.

AFTER this He began to build a Martyrium in that City which bore his own name, in the memory of the Apostles. And when he had raised the Church to an unexpressible height, he made it Splendid and Glorious by a variety of all manner of Stones, covering it with Crusts of Marble from the Foundation to the very Roof. He laid the inner-Roof all over with Lacunaria of very small work, and gilded it throughout with Gold. Above, instead of Tyles, Bricks was laid, which afforded the whole Structure a secure defence against showers. Which [covering] being likewise over-spread with Gold, shined gloriously: in so much that, it dazzled their Eyes who beheld it at a distance, [the Bricks] † reverberating the Rays of the Sun. But the whole Roof was encompassed round with chased Net-work, made of Bricks and Gold.

† Above, at book 2 chap 36. Eusebius terms the outward Roof of a Church, τὰ ἑξῆς ὀροῖα. Therefore do we suppose to be the Roof of the whole Church, or at least of the Altar. Such Roofs built in form of a Circle, we French-men do at this day term Domats. Further, concerning the magnificence of this Church of the Apostles. Grægor Nazianzenus, in his Poem de Infamio Anastasio, writes thus:

Ὡς οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν τῇ γῇ ἵκετον οὐρανὸν ἵκετον οὐρανὸν ἵκετον οὐρανὸν.

This is, And likewise the magnificent Temple of Christs Disciples, distinguished by four sides in form of a Cross. In this forso Churches were heretofore built, as Grægor hath remarked in his Books de Cruce, and Metast in the Life of St. Porphyry. Valef.

CHAP. LIX.

A further description of the same Martyrium.

IN This manner was the Church itself beautified, by the Emperour's extraordinary Care and Munificence. But about the Church there was a most Spacious Area, open to the pure Air. At the four sides whereof ran Porticus's [joyned one to another,] which inclosed the Area Situate in the midst, together with the Church itself. Moreover, † Basilicæ, Baths, Rooms to lodge and eat in, and many other apartaments built for their use who kept the place, were joined to the Porticus's, and were equal to them in length.

CHAP. LX.

That in this [Church] also, He built Himself a Sepulchre.

ALL These [Edifices] the Emperour dedicated [with this intent,] that He might consign to posterity the memory of Saviour's Apostles. But he had another design in his mind, when he built this Church: which [purpose of his] was at first concealed; but in the end it became known to all Men. For he had designed this place for himself after his death; foreseeing by a transcendent alacrity of Faith, that his own Body should after death be made a partaker of the Apostles appellation: time of his death.

* Τὸς τῶν ἀποστόλων προσέτισις κοινόν. Eusebius alludes to that appellation of ἰσοπέταλοι, that is, equal to an Apostle, which was given to Constantine after his death, as it occurs in the Menæis of the Greeks. Which appellation I can't tell why Scaliger (in his fifth Book de Emendatione Temporum,) should so much envy him, as to say that much was detracted from the praise and glory of the Apostles, because their name is given to Constantine. Doubtless, whomever shall accurately look into those things done by Constantine, in order to the propagation of the Faith of Christ, will acknowledge that name to have been deservedly given Him. If Thecla could deserve that appellation, which Woman Basilian Seleucus and others do term ἰσοπέταλοι, how much more justly will it be given to Constantine, by whom 'tis effected, that we are now all Christians? Further, Hieronymus makes use of the same words again, below at chap. 71. The Author of the Synodicon speaking concerning the Nicene Synod; ἰσοπέταλοι, ὡς καὶ ἡμεῖς βασιλεὺς ἀποστόλων, Constantine, the Apostle among the Christian Emperours. And so he is termed in the Office of the Greeks, at the 21st of May, as it occurs in the Typicon of St. Saba. Valef.

* To the end that even after death, He might be esteemed worthy of the Prayers which should be performed there in honour of the Apostles. Having therefore raised twelve † Capse there, as some Sacred Columns, in honour and memory of the choir of the Apostles, he placed his own Ark in the midst; on each side of which lay six Capse of the Apostles. And this, as I have said, he prudently considered of, [namely] where his Body might be decently deposited after he had ended his Life. Having in his mind ordered these matters * Ὡς ἐν τῷ μὲν πάλαι, ἐκείνῳ τῶν ἀποστόλων μακάριον ἐπὶ τῇ τῶν ἀποστόλων συνκλησίᾳ τοῦτον. In Robert Steephen's Edit. 'tis likewise worded and pointed in the same manner.

† Capse. In the Greek 'tis δέμας.

* But Chrysostome (Homil. 26 in 2 Epist. to the Corinthians, pg. 741.) says Constantine was buried in the Porch of the Church of the Apostles, as their Porter; and that matter he magnifies according to his usual way. These things therefore must be re-nounced, as that Constantine himself would have had his dead body buried in the midst of the Apostles: but, that Constantine, or some body else, placed it elsewhere. Indeed Zonaras writes, that Constantine deposited his Father's Corps in the Church of the Apostles, in a peculiar Porticus, which he had built for that very purpose. Valef.

† Ἀνάκτα, Ὀφεία.

place

of opinion therefore, that it must be read thus: ἡδύτατον, ἀνεκάνη τὸ τὸν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ἠρεσεν ἐν πνεύματι. For he alludes to that verse of the known Psalm, Create a clean heart in me, O God, and return a right spirit within me. Further, from this place of Eusebius we may gather, that Constantine was not sprinkled in his Bed, as the sick were wont to be; but received Baptism in the Church. For Eusebius says, τὴν ἡμέραν παρὰ τοὺς ἀποστόλους, &c. was by a Regeneration perfected in the Martyria of Christ. Soon after this, from the Eusebian Copy and the Old Sheets write quodis contemplatio, was filled with light. Valef.

and was renewed, and filled with the Divine Light. The joy of his mind was great, by reason of his transcendancy of Faith; but he was stricken with an amazement at the manifestation of the Divine Power. After all things had been duly performed, He was clothed with white and Royal Garments, which shined like the Light; and rested himself upon a most bright Bed; nor would he any more touch the purple.

That Neophytes [i.e. Persons newly baptized,] should be clothed in white garments, which they afterwards laid by, on the eighth day. Zeno Venousius in his sixth Sermon ad Neophytes. Primus eos qui in seculo educti non erant, non ardet sed agitur excepti: qui vestram nudicem vellent sui more candore vestire. St. Austin in Serm. 157. de Tempore. Pascualis Solemnitas bodierna festivitate concluditur. Et ideo hodie Neophytorum habitus commutatur: ita tamen, ut candor, qui de habitu procedit, semper in corde teneatur. Bede attests the same in his Book de Officiis. Septuagesima, says he, cecidit ad sabannam ante Celsas Pasche, quando hi qui in Vigilia pasche baptizantur, alba vestimenta deponunt. Which words occur also in the Roman Order. In an old Pontifical Book of the Church of Scmona, written out about six hundred years since, there is a solemn Prayer extant, which the Bishop made over the Neophytes, at such time as they laid aside their Albes; which I thought worth while to annex here.

Benedictio in Sabbato quando albas deponunt.

Deus qui calcatis inferni Legibus captivitatem nostram resoluisti carcerum compage dignatus est ad Libertatem premia revocare, ipse vobis præstet ita hanc vitam transigere, ut in illam perpetuam ipso dante possitis intrare, Amen. Tamen prout vobis fervorem Catholicæ fidei, ut sancti adventus illius sitis expectantes securi, Amen. Ut quicumque hic meruerint purgare unda Baptismi, ibi presentari valeant pio Iudice candidati, Amen.

Farther, the Neophytes celebrated those eight days after Baptism with all imaginable Religion: in so much that, during those days, which were also termed Octaves, they look'd upon it as impious, to touch the earth with their naked feet, as St. Austin writes in Epist. 119. ad Janarium. Also, during those days they were wont to go bare-headed, which was a sign of Liberty. St. Austin Serm. 4. in Dominica Octavarum pasche. Hodie Octavæ dicuntur infanscenti: re velanda sunt capita coram quo est iudicium Libertatis. Habes enim Liberamentum istis spirituali nativitate, &c. On the contrary, the Catechumens went in publick with their heads covered, in regard they were a Type of Adam expelled out of Paradise, as Justinus says Book 2. Cap. 16. Which I am of opinion is to be understood concerning the Catechumens only, who covered not only their heads, but their faces also, as Cyrill of Jerusalem informs us in his first Catechism. But this covering was taken off of them in Baptism, or at least on the eighth day after Baptism. For this is rather intimated by those words of St. Austin, quoted by us a little above. And the same is likewise confirmed by Decodens Bishop of Canterbury in his Lib. Penitentialis, in these words. In monachorum ordinatione Abbas debet missam canere, & tres Oraciones complere super Caput ejus: & septem dies velat caput ejus: septimo die absolvat velamen. Sicut in Baptismo Presbyter (septimo die velamen infanscenti tollit: ita & Abbas debet Monacho, qui secundum Baptismum est iuxta iudicium patrum; & omnia peccata dimittitur sicut in Baptismo. Valef.

CHAP. LXIII.

In what manner he praised God, after he had received Baptism.

After this he lifted up his voice, and poured forth to God a Prayer of thanksgiving. Which ended, he added these words. Now

I know my self to be truly blessed: a now 'tis evident that I am accounted worthy of an immortal life: now I have as assurance that I am made a partaker of Divine Light. Moreover, he termed them miserable, and said they were unhappy, who were deprived of such great * Blessings. And when the Tribunes and Chief Officers of the Military Forces came in, and with tears bewailed [their own misfortune,] that they themselves should be left desolate; and prayed for his longer Life: He answered them also, and said, that now at length he was vouchsafed true life, and that only He himself knew, what great Blessings he had been made a partaker of. Wherefore, that he hastned, and would by no delays defer going to his God: After this, he disposed of every thing according to his own mind. And to those Romans who inhabit the Imperial City, he bequeathed certain Annual Gifts. But he left the inheritance of the Empire, as 'twere some paternal Estate, to his own Children; ordering all things in such a manner, as he himself thought good.

CHAP. LXIV.

The death of Constantine on the Festival of Pentecost, about noon.

Further, all these things were transacted in that great Solemnity of the most venerable and most sacred Pentecost; which is honoured with seven Weeks, * but is sealed with * the number one. In which Festival happened, both the Ascend of the Common Saviour into the Heavens, and also the descent of the Holy Spirit upon Men, as the Divine Scriptures do attest. In this Solemnity therefore the Emperor, having obtained those things we have mentioned, on the last day of all, (which should any one term the Feast of Feasts, he would not be mistaken;) † about Noon, was taken up to his God: leaving to mortals that part of Himself which was related to them; but joining to his God that part of his Soul which was endued with understanding, and in the Love of God. This was the End of Constantine's Life. But, let us proceed to what follows.

but also for the seven Weeks which follow Easter. Thus 'tis every where used, as well by Greek as Latine Writers. St. Jerome in his Letter to Marcella: Non quæper totum annum exceptis Pentecoste jejunare non liceat. Hence, amongst the Greeks there is a Festival (termed ἡμερὴν ἡμερῶν), which is the twenty-fifth day from the Feast of Easter. Besides other writers, John Chrysostom makes mention of this Feast, in his Fifth Homily de Anima. Valef.

CHAP. LXV.

The Lamentations of the Milice, and Tribunes.

THE Protectors, and the whole Body of his Guards, rent their clothes forthwith, and casting themselves prostrate on the earth, beat their heads against the ground; uttering * Κοινωνοὶ φίλοι. The left word must be expunged, although it occurs in all our Copies. Presently, it must be written τῶν συμπαθῶν ἐταρῶν, from the Fukertian Copy. In the Kings Sheet the reading is ἀπικαλῶντο. Valer.

* Or, Genuine.

* mournful expressions [intermixt] with Sighs and Cries; calling upon him their Master, their Lord, their Emperor; nor [did they invoke him barely] as a Master, but, like most * obedient Children, [they accounted him] as a Father.

Moreover, the Tribunes and Centurions filed him a Saviour, a Preserver, a Benefactor. And the rest of the Army, as 'tis usual amongst flocks, with all imaginable decency and becoming Reverence, desired and wist for their Good Shepherd. The common People all ran up and down all over the City, and by Shrieks and Cries gave a manifest indication of their inward grief of mind. Others with dejected Countenances seemed like Persons astonished; and <sup>b</sup> each particular Man look'd upon this as his own Calamity, and bemoan'd himself, because the common Good of all Men was taken out of their life.

<sup>b</sup> ἕκαστος τὸν αὐτοῦ. It must doubtless be written, ἕκαστος τὸν αὐτοῦ.

Valer. Concerning the publick mourning of all Persons, at the Funeral of Constantine the Great, Aurelius Victor attests the same, in these words. Funus relatum in urbem sui nominis. Quod sane p. quibus Rom. agerentis cultis: quippe cuius armis, legibus, clementi imperio quasi novum in urbem Rom. arbitratum. His dead body was brought into the City that bore his own name. Which the People of Rome were sorely troubled at: in regard, by his Arms, Laws, and mild Government, they supposed the City Rome renewed as 'twere. I know indeed, that the words of Aurelius Victor may be understood concerning the Citizens of Rome, who took it ill, because Constantine's Body had been interred at Constantinople rather than at Rome. Nevertheless I am of opinion, that Victor thought otherwise; to wit, that all the Inhabitants of the Roman World were most sorely troubled at the death of Constantine. Which meaning is plainly confirmed by the following words: Quippe cuius armis, legibus, clementi imperio, quasi novum Orbem Romanum in bitaretur. For so 'tis to be read, and not urbem Romanam. Valer.

CHAP. LXVI.

That His Body was carried from Nicomedia to Constantinople, into the Palace.

AFTER this, the Milice took His Body [out of the Bed,] and laid it into a Coffin of Gold; which they covered * with Purple, and carried it to the City that bore his own name. And there they plac'd it * on high, <sup>b</sup> in the stateliest Room of the Imperial Palace. Then they light up Tapers round it, which being put into Candlesticks of Gold, rendred the Sight admirable to those that beheld it, and such a one as had never been seen on earth, by any Person that was ever under the Sun's Rayes, since the World was first made. For within, in the very middlemost Room of the Imperial Palace, the Emperours Corps lay on high in a Golden Coffin; and being adorned with Imperial Ornaments, the Purple namely and the Diadem, was encompassed by many Persons, who watch'd with, and guarded it night and day.

CHAP. LXVII.

That even after his Death, he was honoured by the Comites and the rest, in the same manner as when he was alive.

MOREOVER, the * Duces, Comites, and the * Generals, whose usage it had heretofore been to * adore the Emperor, made not the least alteration in their former Custom, but came in at set times, and on their knees saluted the Emperor when dead, and laid in his Coffin, as if he had been yet alive. After these Grandees, those of the Senate, * and all the Honorati, came in, and did the same. After whom, multitudes of all sorts of People, together with Women and Children, approach'd to the sight hereof. And these things were thus performed during a long space of time: the Milice having taken a Resolution, that the Corps should lie and be guarded in this manner, till such time as his * Or, Their Sons could come, who might honour their Father by * a personal attendance at his Funeral. Or, Their [In fine,] this most Blessed [Prince] was him the only Mortal who * Reigned after death; and all things were performed in the usual manner, as if he had been still alive: this being the sole Person, from the utmost memory of Man, on whom God conferred this. For, whereas he of all the Emperours had been the only one, who by actions of all sorts whatever had honoured God the supreme King, and His Christ; he alone, and that deservedly, had these honours allotted him: and the supreme God was pleased to vouchsafe him this, that even his dead Body should Reign amongst Men. Whereby God clearly shew'd them, whose minds are not * totally stupified, that the Empire of his Soul is endless and immortal. In this manner were these things performed.

* Τὸν βασιλέα σεβασμῶν. Concerning the manner of saluting the Roman Emperours, consult the Learned Dr. Hewlett's History, Second Part, pag. 51. This Adoration was little more than what is now a day used to Princes, namely, a kneeling to them, and bowing the head.

<sup>b</sup> Or, ἐν αἰῶνι. That is, the Honorati. So the Latines termed those who bore honour, as I have at large remarked at the 14th Book of Amm Marcellinus. Whereto add a passage of Gaudencius Bishop of Brisia, in his Letter to Benevolus. Nam scire honoratum nostræ urbis, ita etiam dominicæ plebis, domino annuente, dignissimum caput est. Valer.

* After Constantine's death, there was an Interregnum, not did any Augustus Reign in the Roman World. Which interregnum [i. e. a time when there was no Emperor,] continued not only till Constantine's Burial, but to the fifth of the Ides of September, as Idatius attests in his Fasts. So, for the space of three Months and an half, the Roman World was without the Empire of an Augustus. For during that whole time, which is between the eleventh of the Calends of June and the fifth of the Ides of September, his Sons were titled only Cæsars. * Tis certain, Constantian Junior, in his Letter to the Alexandrians, which bears date after his Father's death, in the Consulate of Felicianus and Tirianus, on the fifteenth of the Calends of July, bears the Title of Cæsar only. This Letter is extant in Athanasius, in his Second Apologic, near the end. Valer.

* Or, Turned into stone.

† Τὸν δ. ἁγίου, &c. i. Stephen's τὸν δ. ἁγίου, &c. and we have rendred it accordingly.

CHAP. LXVIII.

In what manner the Army resolved, that his Sons should be forthwith proclaimed Augusti.

IN the interim, the Tribunes dispatch'd away some choice men belonging to the Military Companies, who for their fidelity and good affection had heretofore been * acceptable to the Emperor; that they might make the Cæsars acquainted with what had been done. And these were the things which those men performed then. But the Armies in all places, as soon as they were acquainted with the Emperours death, incited thereto by Divine instinct as 'twere, with an unanimous consent resolved, as if their Great Emperour had been yet living, that they would acknowledge no other person as Emperour of the Romans, save only his Sons. And not long after, they determined to have them all henceforward, not stiled Cæsars, but Augusti; which [name] is the † Cognisance of supremacy of Empire. And these things were done by the Armies; who by Letters one to another, signified their own suffrages and Acclamations; and the unanimous consent of the Legions was in one and the same moment of time, made known to all persons wheresoever they dwelt.

CHAP. LXIX.

* Or, of The Mourning * at Rome for Constantine, and the Honour [done Him] by Pictures after his death.

BUT the Inhabitants of the Imperial City, as well the Senate as people of Rome, when they were acquainted with the Emperours death, look'd upon that to be most doleful news, and more calamitous than any misfortune whatsoever, and therefore set no Bounds to their mourning. The Baths therefore and Forums were shut up, and the publick Shows [omitted;] as likewise whatever other Pleasures, as Recreations of Life, are usually followed by those who spend their time in mirth and jollity. Such also, as had heretofore abounded with delights, walk'd the Streets with dejected Countenances. And all in general stiled [the Emperour] Blessed; a person dear to God, and one that was truly worthy of the Empire. Nor made they these Declarations in bare words only: but proceeding on to actual performances, they honoured him when dead, with dedications of Pictures, as if he had been still alive. For, having express'd a Representation of Heaven in Colours on a Table, they drew him making his Residence in an Ethereal Mansion, above the Celestial Arches. Moreover, they proclaimed his Sons the sole Emperours and Augusti, without the Collegueship of any other person; and with humble supplications made it their earnest Request, that they might have the * Body of their Emperour with them, and might deposit it within the Imperial City.

* The same is attested by Aurelius Victor, in those words of his, which we quoted above, at chap. 63. vide (L.) Valef.

CHAP. LXX.

That his Body was deposited at Constantinople, by his Son Constantius.

IN this manner, even these [Inhabitants of Rome] grac'd this Emperour, who was honoured by God. But the * Second of his Sons, a Constantius Cæsar, when he was come to the place where his Father's Corps lay, convey'd [it] to the City whom his [that bore his own name,] he himself going Father had before the Hearse. The Companies of the Milivour of the East, made God licence march'd before, Troop by Troop in a Milivour of the East, and behind followed an innumerable multitude of people. But the Hastating of his Father's Corps, when they were come to the Church of our Saviour's Apostles, they deposited the Coffin great haft there. And thus the new Emperour Constantius, honouring his Father, as well by his pre-journey, sence, as other befitting Offices, in a due manner performed * his Funeral obsequies.

* Or, The things of a becoming Sanctity.

the vehemency of his disease frustrated the Son's desire. For when he was arrived at Nicomedia, he found his Father dead; as Julian relates in his first Oration concerning the praises of Constantius, pag. 29. With Julian; the other Writers of History do likewise agree. Zonaras is the only Author who relates, that Constantius Cæsar, who was then at Antioch, arriv'd whilst his Father was yet living; and that he honoured him, when dead, with a most magnificent Funeral. Valef.

† Τὸ πρῶτον ἔκτα ἀνεστησε. The last word save one is added by the Learned, from conjecture as I think. Nevertheless, there seems to be something more wanting; and perhaps Eusebius wrote thus ἵνα ἐκεῖθεν ἀνεστησε τὸν πρῶτον to the City that bore his own name. Hence it appears, that Constantine's dead Body was kept at Nicomedia with all imaginable honour and reverence, till the coming of Constantius Cæsar. Who, after he was arriv'd at Nicomedia, convey'd his Fathers Corps to Constantinople. Wherefore the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle is mistaken, who relates, that Constantius came directly to Constantinople, and there celebrated his Father's Funeral. Valef.

CHAP. LXXI.

*The * performance of the solemn prayers in that * Synagoga; term'd the Martyrium of the Apostles, at the sacred Assembly. † Funeral of Constantine.*

BUT after he had withdrawn himself, together with the Military Companies; fold sense the Ministers of God, as likewise the Multi-<sup>given of</sup> tudes, and all the Congregation of the Faithful, came forth, and by prayers performed the Rites of the Divine Worship. At which time this Blessed [Prince,] lying on high * upon a lofty place, was celebrated with praise. Likewise, a vast number of people, together with those persons consecrated to God, not without tears and great lamentation, poured forth prayers to God for the Emperour's Soul, thereby performing a most grateful Office to this pious Prince. Further, herein also God demonstrated his singular Favour towards his Servant: because [after] his

* A two. Eusebius means, that Constantius Cæsar, when he had deposited his Father's Ark or Coffin in the Church, went presently out of the Church with the Soldiers; or else this is his meaning only, that Constantine having done that, withdrew out of the middle of the Church, that he might give place to the Priests. Which meaning is in my judgment true. For Constantius, although he had not as yet been baptiz'd, was nevertheless a Catechumen, as Sulpicius Severus tells us in the Second Book of his History. Valef.

* Εἰς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν ἤλθεν. See Gellius, l. 13. Cap. 10.

his death<sup>b</sup> he bequeathed the Empire to his own dear Sons, who were his Successors; and because, <sup>c</sup> agreeable to his own most earnest desire, the Tabernacle of his thrice-blessed Soul was vouchsafed a place with the Monument of the Apostles; to the end namely, that it might be honoured in the same degree with the name of the Apostles; and that it might be joyed with God's People in the Church; and might be vouchsafed the Divine Rites, and Mystick Service; and might enjoy a Communion of the Holy Prayers: <sup>d</sup> but, that He himself, possessing the Empire [even] After death, managing the whole Government by a Return to Life as 'twere, <sup>e</sup> Victor Maximus Augustus, might in his own name still <sup>f</sup> Rule the Roman Empire.

ported] is restored to life again out of those very ashes; and raising her self by her wings, appears the same in kind that she was before. But in the same manner with his Saviour rather; who, like wheat sown, from one Grain diffusing himself into many, by the blessing of God hath brought forth an Ear of Corn, and hath filled the whole world with his fruits. In a like manner hereto, this thrice-blessed [Prince], by the Succession of his Children, from being one, has been made <sup>g</sup> many: in so much that, throughout all Provinces, Statues are raised in honour of Him, together with his Sons; and the usual name of Constantine * obtains even after his death.

<sup>h</sup> Πολύπλοκος Sir Henry Savil at the margin of his Copy remarks, that the

* Is in use, or is embraced.

reading should be παραστάς; to whom I agree: yet I had rather read παραστάς. Valef.

concerning Constantine himself, who, even dead, delivered the Empire to his Sons. And this is confirmed by the following words. Valef.

<sup>i</sup> Καὶ τὰ σπουδαῖα αὐτοῦ. It must, I think, be written, <sup>j</sup> καὶ τὰ σπουδαῖα αὐτοῦ. Constantine had wish'd, that after his Death, he might not, like other Princes, be consecrated, and reckoned amongst the Dead; but, that being buried with the Apostles, he might be a partaker of the Prayers, which are wont to be offered to God by the Faithful in honour of them; as Eusebius has said above, at chap. 60. Whence it appears, that here it must be written <sup>k</sup> καὶ, not as it is in Moræus's Book, and at the margin of the Geneva Edition, διὰ τὰ σπουδαῖα αὐτοῦ, throw his own self, &c. Nor will this place be perfect, even this way, unless these words be added, ἢ ἐν τῇ αἰσῇ αὐτοῦ ἐν τῇ τῇ. &c. Which Eusebius confirms in the foregoing 60th chapter. The point must also be blotted out, which is set a little after, as well in the Kings Copy, as in the Common Editions; and it must be read in one breath, thus, οὐ τὴν τὴν ἀποστολὴν ἀνατίθω, καὶ τὴν τὴν τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἀποστολὴν ἀνατίθω, &c. Than which there is nothing more certain; which makes me admire, that Translators saw not this. In the Eusebian Copy, the reading of this place runs thus; ἢ διὰ τὰ σπουδαῖα αὐτοῦ, τὴν οὐ τὴν τὴν ἀποστολὴν ἀνατίθω, ἢ καὶ αὐτὸν, αἱ ἐξ αὐτοῦ οὐ τὴν τὴν, &c. Nor is it otherwise in the Books of Turnebus and Sir Henry Savil: save only that Sir Henry has it τὴν οὐ τὴν τὴν ἀποστολὴν ἀνατίθω. &c. But in the Kings Sheet I found this place written thus; καὶ τὴν τὴν ἀποστολὴν ἀνατίθω, οὐ τὴν τὴν ἀποστολὴν ἀνατίθω, &c. Which reading comes nearer to our Emendation. Further, those words, αἱ ἐξ αὐτοῦ οὐ τὴν τὴν, are spoken in a Parenthesis; and this is intimated by that punctuation in the Eusebian Copy, which I have shewn above. Valef.

<sup>l</sup> Αὐτὸν δὲ τὴν βασιλείαν, &c. I write, αὐτὸν δὲ τὴν βασιλείαν, καὶ τὴν ἀποστολὴν ἀνατίθω, &c.; which reading the following words do confirm. And so I found it plainly written in the Eusebian Copy. Valef.

<sup>m</sup> Such was the Inscription, usually prefix before the Laws and Letters of Constantine, as Eusebius does every where attest. Victor Constantinus Maximus Augustus. He took the Pronomen [Fore-name] of Victor, after his Victory obtained over the Tyrants. His Sons also, by an hereditary right as 'twere, retained that name, as their Letters inform us. Further, from this place it appears, that after the death of Constantinus Maximus, for about three months space, that is during the whole time of the Interregnum, all Laws and Edicts were inscribed with the Name of Constantine, as if he had been living, in regard there was no other Augustus in the Roman world, as I have observed above. This place may also be meant concerning the Sons of Constantine the Great, who made use of the same Title and Name; and in whom their Father seemed to be revived. Which sense is confirmed by what follows. Valef.

<sup>n</sup> Ἡμεῖς καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι. I write, ἡμεῖς, that it may answer the verb κατατίθετε, which occurs several lines above. Further, in the Kings Copy, at the margin of Constantine, αἱ ἀποστολὴν ἀνατίθω, οὐ τὴν τὴν ἀποστολὴν ἀνατίθω, &c. The same Writer does in this work often sprinkle him with praises and good wishes. In the Eusebian Copy the reading is καὶ τὴν. Valef.

CHAP. LXXIII.

In what manner they Stamp'd Constantine on Coyns, ascending up into Heaven as 'twere.

Moreover, * Coyns were Stamp'd bearing <sup>o</sup> Representation of this Blessed [Prince] * with His Head covered: But, on the † Reverse [the] was represented fitting] like a Charioteer, in a Chariot drawn by four Horses, and taken up [into Heaven] by a || hand stretch'd out to him from above.

|| Right hand. n. The last word is, in my judgment, to be blotted out; which in all probability crept out of the margin into the Text. For Constantine had been written in the margin, which might explain the following word ἀνατίθω. But, that which occurs in the margin of the Geneva Edition, namely Constantine, is in my judgment most egregiously foolish. For the propriety of the Greek Tongue admits not of that expression. Besides, in most Coyns Constantine appears with an Helmet on his Head. Valef.

CHAP. LXXIV.

That whereas God had been honoured by Him, He was on the other hand deservedly honoured by God.

These [Miracles] the suprem God laid before our very eyes, in [the person of] Constantine, who was the only [Prince] of all the preceding Emperors, that had openly profest himself a <sup>p</sup> Christian; whereby God, <sup>q</sup> manifestly declared, <sup>r</sup> How great a difference there is between Him and the Idols. Valef.

<sup>s</sup> It must be made χρῆσται. It is also to be written, μὲν τὴν πόλιν τὴν αἰσῇ αὐτοῦ, &c. or at least those words are to be understood. Further, Eusebius excepts none of the Roman Emperors, whilst he says, that Constantine was the first of them all, who was plainly and openly a Christian. Which doubtless is most true. For although the Emperor Philipus is by some reported to have been a Christian; yet he did not openly profess the Christian Religion, as Constantine did. Orosius (Book 7.) writes in a different sense concerning Constantine, in this manner; Primus Imperatorum Christianus, &c. the first Christian of the Emperors, except Philipus, who in my judgment was made a Christian during a very few years, for this reason only, that the thousandth year of Rome might be dedicated to Christ, rather than to Idols. Valef.

<sup>t</sup> O μὲν οὖν ἢ ἀπὸ αὐτοῦ, &c. that is, How great a difference there was between him, or, how great a difference he made. Valef.

he

CHAP. LXXII.

Concerning the Bird [termed] the Phoenix.

NOT like that Egyptian Bird, which being the only one of her kind, is said to die upon [an heap of] Spices, at her death making her self a sacrifice: and presently [as 'tis re-

he made, between those who thought good to worship him and his Christ, and them that had embraced a contrary [opinion.] Who having brought a War upon God's Church, thereby rendred him their Enemy and * Opposer. And indeed, the disastrous and unfortunate close of every of their Lives, has produced a most convincing Argument of the greatness of the divine hatred towards them: in the same manner that the death of Constantine has rendred the pledges of God's favour in reference to him, manifest and apparent to all men.

CHAP. LXXV.

That Constantine was more pious than [any of] the foregoing Roman Emperours.

WHO being the Sole Emperour of the Romans, that had honoured God

the Supream King with a Transcendency of piety; and the only one that had freely and boldly * published the Doctrine of Christ to all men; and the only person (as I may say, that had raised his Church to such a degree of Honour and Glory, as no one had ever done before; and the only person that had totally destroyed the Errour of Poly-<sup>† Or, Had</sup>theism, and confuted all the Rites and Modes of [such a] Superstition: is the only person also, that was vouchsafed such [honours,] both in this Life, and after death, as no one, either amongst the Gracians or Barbarians, is reported ever to have obtained; Nor can there be any one mentioned, amongst the ancient Romans themselves, from the Remotest Times to this present Age; who may be compared with this [our Prince.]

THE

28 SE 60

But, to whom shall I make my supplication, that he may declare to me the occasion of my Calamity, and may vouchsafe me a deliverance from it? Let us suppose, that an answer has been given us by Oracles and Prophecies: "but, that these things are not in their power, but belong to another God. What is the Compassion then? Of what sort is the providence of God towards Man? Unless perhaps, some one of them, inclinable to be kinder, being more forcibly moved, shall give assistance against another, who is not in the least kindly disposed towards Men. Moreover, Anger, and Discord, and Railing; and in fine, a confusion of all things would follow from hence; whilst not one of them would perform his own part; but, through covetousness not satisfied with his own affairs, would invade those that belong to others. What therefore will be the consequence hereof? Questionless, this discordant cord amongst the Celestial powers, would ruin all things under Heaven, and things on earth; the Order and Vicissitude of Seasons and times would vanish, as likewise the delight and life of those fruits produced at the several seasons of the year; the day would be destroyed, and the Rest of the night which follows the day. But enough concerning these matters. Let us now return to those reasons which can in no wise be redesse;] and who charge them with Adulteries, and Acts of Incontinency? We do confidently assert this also, that the very Honours and * Acts of worship, attributed to them by Men, are mixed with uncleanness and Lust. Now therefore, some skillful Person, and a Statuary, having conceived in his mind the Form [of his future work,] frames it by the Rules of Art, and soon after, a forgetfulness falling [upon him,] as 'twere, he flatters his own work, and worships it in place of an immortal God: whereas notwithstanding, he himself, the Father and Framer of that Statue, must confess himself to be mortal. Moreover, they themselves do shew the Sepulchres and * Arks of those Immortals, and honour the dead with Divine Honours: being wholly ignorant, that that which is truly Blessed and Immortal, stands not in need of Honour from Mortals. For, that which can be discerned by the mind only, and comprehended by the understanding, requires neither a Form whereby it may be known, nor admits of a figure, as its image or Resemblance. But, all these things are done in favour of the dead. For, they were really Men, whilst they lived, * and were endued with Bodies.

* Or, The Error in reference to Idols.
* Or, Birth.

examined all things with more of attention, at length I found out the true meaning of this place. This therefore is what Constantine says. If there be many Gods; when I shall fall into calamity, to which of them shall I address my self, that he may acquit me with the cause of my Misery, and free me from it. Let us suppose (says he,) that for instance, Apollo has answered me, that 'tis not in his power to deliver me, but, that that belongs to another God. What is more plain than this? It must therefore be written, Δὲ καὶ τῶν ἄλλων θεῶν, οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν αὐτοῖς ἡ σωτηρία. But belong to another God. Many such Oracles as these are extant in the Histories of the Greeks; where Apollo answers those who Consult him, that they must appease Bacchus, or Saturn, if they have a mind to be delivered from their Calamity. Valef.

CHAP. IV.

* Or, The Error in reference to Idols. Concerning * their Error who worship Idols.

Whatever had a Beginning, must necessarily have an End also. Now, a temporal Beginning, is termed a * Generation. But, the things produced by a Generation, are all Corruptible. Besides, Time defaces their Form and Beauty. How then can they, who [have their Original] from a corruptible Generation, be immortal? Now, such an Opinion as this hath been divulged amongst unthinking People, namely, that Marriages are usually made amongst the Gods, and Children begotten. But, if they who are begotten, be immortal; a d if [our Gods] are always begotten, * their Kind must necessarily be exceedingly numerous: after which Accession made, * what Heaven, what manner of Earth must it be, that can be capable of containing such a growing swarm of Gods? But what can any one say in reference to those Men, who join the Brethren-Gods in a society * of Marriage [with the Sister-Gods]

* Andρον τὸ θεῖον. In the Fugkerian C.P., after the first word, there is an Empty space, capable of one word. I write therefore, ἀνδρῶν θεῶν ἄνθρωποι. τῶν τῶν θεῶν, ever kind, &c. Valef. * Τις ὁ θεῶν. It must be, ὡς ἔστιν, as I found it mend it the margin of M. A. C. Copy. In the Fugkerian Copy the reading is ὡς ἔστιν without the Conjunction Valef.

reference to those Men, who join the Brethren-Gods in a society * of Marriage [with the Sister-Gods]

CHAP. V.

That Christ the Son of God framed all things, and has appointed to every thing the term of its Existence.

BUT, why do I defile my tongue with impure expressions, when I am about to praise the true God? I am resolved in the first place to * wash away that bitter poison as 'twere, with * Or, me that is pure. Now, this pure potion is Purgatory, drawn out of that * ever-flowing Fountain of Vertues, of that God who is extolled by Us. Poured. Indeed, I account it my proper Business, to praise Christ [both] by [an holiness of] Life, and a thanksgiving also, which is due to him from us, for those his many and signal benefits. I assert therefore, that 'tis he who hath settled the Beginnings of this Universe, and who hath * Created Men, and * who hath established * Or, these things by a certain Law and Order. And immediately, when * they were newly * That is, brought forth, be removed then * in our first Parents. rendered to a certain blessed and flourishing Parents.

* Καὶ τῶν λόγων νομοθετήσας. The three former words have been added by Learned Men from M. S. Copies. Nevertheless, they occur not, either in the Kings Copy, or in the Old Sheets. But I have [a point after the word νομοθετήσας. From the authority of the Kings, and Fugkerian Copy, and from the Old Sheets. Which Christophorus having not perceived, he joined this with the following period. Now, the meaning of this place, is this. I affirm, says he, what as well Men, as the other things which are in the World, are his workmanship, who hath constituted all these things in order; that is, the workmanship of the Supreme God. It must therefore be written, ἐπεὶ δὴ ἔκτισεν αὐτὸν ὁ θεός, &c. as 'tis in Sir Henry Savile's Books, and as Christophorus seems to have read. Then I read, τὴν καὶ τὰ αὐτὰ λόγους νομοθετήσας, and who hath established, &c. than which exclamation there is nothing more certain. In the Fugkerian Copy the reading is καὶ τὰ λόγους τὰ αὐτὰ νομοθετήσας. Therefore, λόγους νομοθετήσας is the same opinion with λόγους διατάξας, an expression which he makes use of hereafter. Valef.

* Here Constantine seems to place that Paradise, wherein God

How can these be said to proceed from Fortune or Chance, and not from justice rather, which

* Or, Even is the property of the that which is agreeable occurs, on account of mens living in this, or that manner.

ner. = Τὸν παῖον. Make it παῖον, with the accent in the last syllable, as I found it set at the margin of Moravian's Copy. I read also, χὶ τὸ κατ' ἀξίαν ἀπαρτῶ, from the Manuscript. 'Tis certain, the Fuketian Copy gives us this reading; διὰ τοῦτον παῖον ἐστὶ ἀρπαγέντων βίον χὶ τὸ κατ' ἀξίαν ἀπαρτῶ. Valcl. In Robert Stephens 'tis, τὸ κατ' ἀξίαν ἐπαρτῶ.

* Or. Good inclinations.

boldness; and an arrogance which raises it self higher than is becoming a Creature. The proofs of all which matters, although they are very pernicious, and do lie before our eyes; are yet then more apparently manifest words, as often as, making a descent into Our
I found a Selfe, and as there contrasting Our minds, blank in its weigh with Our Selves the Cause of them, the Fable, capable of one word. It must, I think, be made up thus, by means of it, &c; and we have rendred it accordingly.
Fable.

<sup>b</sup> Tetragramma pto. viciosa. The shaft word must be blotted out; in regard its not to be found, either in the King's Copy or in the Slovecz, or Stephens's Edition. The place was rather to have been mended in this manner: Quoniam nonnulli non quodvisque calumniant: That is; Although be certain, and evidenced by many instances, that Famulus, Papillence, and such sort of Calumniators, are sent from Heaven in order to the punishing of men wickedness; yet, that does much more manifestly appear, as often as those Calumniators happen to be sent home to Our selves, and unnumbered the Causes of those wrongs. Nevertheless, the reading in the Fukerian Copy is, nonnulli viciosa. Psalm.

It must, I think, be ποῦλος, or, if you had rather, πυλαιόνης. In the Tuketian Copy the reading is, δοῦλος ἀν. . . συναφελοῦς. And in the end of the period, λαζήδουσα; excellently well. It must therefore be written, δοῦλος ἀν ἡμῶς συναφελοῦς, as often as, recollecting our selves. Vale!

Therefore, 'tis my affection, that we ought to \* Or, Molested lives that are \* soler and calm, not raising Our  $\dagger$  thoughts above the condition of Our Nature; but taking this into Our serious consideration, that God the Inspector of all Our Actions is continually present with Us. Moreover, let us another way examine, whether this affection be true, namely, that the dispose of all \* Or, Mind.

k'Ek nūnēs nū tē dēkēnāt sūpēr. I had rather read, super, vīstēr, or sūvēr, has had a dependence upon, &c. Further, in the Fuketan and Turner Copies, the reading of this place runs thus, as ē ē mēnē &c. ... dītūnēs ē tē nōēs, &c. Patē.
affairs <sup>2</sup> does depend upon Fortune and Chance. Whe- refore, therefore, the Celestial Bodies, and the Stars, the Earth and the Sea, the Fire and the Winds, the Water and the Air, and

* Or, Respectfully, the Pleasitude of times, and the seasonable Returns of Summer and Winter; wherby [I say] it ought to be believed, that all these have happened <sup>without reason and fortuitously</sup>, rather than were created. 'Tis certain, some persons, wholly void of understanding, do affirm, that men have found out many of these for their own use and advantage. And truly, whereas Nature does plentifully supply us with † Cr. PAR, all manner of riches; we may grant, that, in takes of reference to things which are terrene and cor-ruptible, this Opinion † wants not something of all.

reason. But, are then things immortal and immutable, the Inventions of men also? For, of these, and of all other things of this nature, (which are removed from our senses, and can be comprehended by the mind only;,) not man,<sup>1</sup> but a Creature made of matter, but the intelligible ὁ οὐκ ἐστὶν ἀνθρώπου and Eternal Essence of God is the Framer. Besides, the Course and Order of that Constitution, is the work of providence also; [namely,] that the day is bright, being enlightened by the Sun; that the night succeeds the setting of the Sun; and, that, when it has succeeded it, it is not left

Write, ὅτι ἐν ἑνὶ τῷ αὐτῷ
πρὸς τὸν μαρ., &c; But Chrysophor<sup>on</sup> read, ὅτι ἐν ἑνὶ τῷ αὐτῷ ἀνθρώπου, not the life of man, which consists of matter; but which reader I condemn not, but the former Emendation pleases me best. — Nevertheless, the Fuguetan Copy does plainly to Value Chrysophor<sup>on</sup>'s Version.

wholly <sup>m</sup> void [ of Light, ]      m Mid ἀνεργον αὐτῆς. Understand νε φως, of light.
by reason of the Quare of the the Stars. But, what shall we say concerning the Moon;
which, when at the greatest distance from the Sun, being in a direct opposition to him, is at the Full; but, is lessened

* as often as 'tis in a Conjunction with the Sun: do not these things manifestly declare the † knowledge of God, and his sagacious wisdom? Far-* Or, By reason of its Convergence with him at a nearer distance.
 † ἄγαν νοήσιον - Oυ, God's conception of mind; Valefius renders it intelligentiam.

ther, "the useful and seasonable warmth of the Solar Rayes, whereby the Fruits are brought to maturity;" the Blazes of the winds, which are of great use in making the year fruitful and healthy; the refrigerment of flowers, and the admirable Harmony of all these ac-

according to which they are all managed in a due and well-ordered manner: [lastly,] that perpetual Order of the Planets, which at fit and stated times make their Returns to the same * point; is not the Command of God hereby manifested, and likewise the perfect and entire dutifullness of the Stars, which pay an Obedience to the Divine Law? Moreover, the Tops of Mountains, and the hollow depths of

Valleys, ° and the smooth
 Levels, ° of far-spreading Fields; do these seem to exist without the providence of God? The prospect whereof is not only ° grateful, but the use also is delightful and pleasant. The

and † Breaks of the Waters and the Earth, (which are of use partly for tillage, <sup>a</sup> and partly for a Kad <sup>the</sup> conveyance of those things we stand in need of ἀνάγκης from foreign Regions;) do they not most clear-<sup>ly</sup> <sup>ly</sup> demonstrate the accurate and exact care of ΧΡΕΙΑ <sup>careful</sup> God? For, the Mountains contain water within <sup>ερείσαν</sup> their Bowels; whilst when the Plain has received, <sup>λαβὴν</sup> and || by the moisture thereof has sufficiently re-<sup>ceived</sup>

ἡμεῖς ἢ ἐν τῇ μακρῇ ζωῇ καὶ ἰσχυρῇ τοῦ ἀποστόλου ἐκμετανοῦμεν, &c.; & than which, nothing is more certain. In the Fickesian and Turneb. Copies 'tis, ἐν τῇ ἀποστολῇ γράφει ἐκμετανοῦμεν. Further, I have rendered μαρτυρίας, discordia, following the authority of Ambr. Marcellinus, who somewhere expresses himself so. Christophorus has likewise rendered it well,
divortia Terrarum, the divorcements of the Earth. — Val-f.

|| Or, this sufficiently moistened the ground in order to a refreshment.

fred'g

fresh'd the Ground; it pours forth the residue of it into the Sea: and the Sea transmits it to the Ocean. And, dare we yet affirm, that all these things come to pass fortuitously, and by accident? Whereas notwithstanding, we are in no wise able to declare, with what Shape or Form Chance is endued: a thing which has no subsistence, either in the understanding, or sense; but is only the empty sound of a name || without the thing, which makes a noise about our Ears.

|| Or, without a subsistence.

CHAP. VII.

That, * in things which we can't understand, we ought to glorify the Creator's Wisdom; nor must we suppose Chance, or any thing else [save God,] to be the cause [of them.]

FOR Chance, 'tis most certain, is a Term [invented] by Men, whose thoughts are rash and inconsiderate; and who cannot understand the cause it self: but, by reason of their weakness of apprehension, suppose that all these things, whereof they are unable to give a reason, have been framed and ordered without any thing of reason. There are indeed some things endued with an admirable nature, the certain and evident knowledge of the Truth whereof, lies deep: of which sort is the Nature of warm Waters. For no Person can readily assign the reason of so great a Fire. And 'tis strange, that [that fire,] though encompassed round with cold Water, nevertheless, should not lose its Native Heat. And these things are found to be very rare, and few in number throughout the whole World; for this reason, as I persuade my self, that Men might easily know the power of [Divine] providence; which has ordered two most contrary Natures, Heat namely and Cold, to spring from one and the same Root. Indeed, the things are many, and almost innumerable, which God hath bestowed on Men, in order to their Comfort and Delight; but, the Fruit of the Olive-tree and of the Vine, are chiefly [to be accounted such.] Of which two * this has a power of recreating and exhilarating the mind. But the other is fit not only for delight: but of use in order to the curing of Bodies. The perpetual and everlasting course of Rivers deserves likewise the highest Admiration; which, by their flowing Night and Day, give a Representation of an eternal and never-ceasing Life. Also, the continual vicissitude of Night and Day, is in the same manner admirable.

CHAP. VIII.

That God does plentifully supply Men with those things that are useful; but, with such as are for delight, [He furnishes them] in an indifferent manner only; bestowing both sorts, so as may be agreeable to their profit and advantage.

* AL These words have been spoken by * Or, Let Us, in confirmation of this Truth, that all these things have been done without reason, or with word; be, out understanding: but, that Reason it self, and &c.

also * Providence, are [the Works] of God. Who has likewise † produced the several kinds of Gold, Silver, Brass, and of the other Metals, in a manner and measure that is fit and agreeable. For with those things, the use whereof was like to be manifold and various, [Men] are by his order plentifully furnished: but, such things as are of use * for the delight of the World, and for Luxury only, [them] be bath † bestowed, both liberally, and also sparingly; [observing a Mean] between a parcimony and for the delight of the World, and for plenty only. The word ἀπορίαν is corrupted; in the place whereof I would rather put ἀσύναν, Luxury. Yet, the ordinary reading may be borne with. Valef. the nature of Gold, &c.

the same plenty of those things which were made for ornament, had been granted; the Searchers after Metals, by reason of their over-much avarice, would have despised those [Metals] that are of use for Husbandry, and Building, as well of Houses, as Ships; Iron namely, and Brass; and would have neglected the gathering of them together: but would have made it their whole business, to provide such things as serve for delight, and a vain and fruitless superfluity of Riches. Wherefore, there is (they say) more of Difficulty and Labour, in finding Gold and Silver, than in finding all other Metals whatever: for this reason namely, that the soreness of the Labour may be opposed to the vehemency of the Desire. How many other works of Divine Providence may besides be reckoned up; whereby, in all those things which it has plentifully conferred on us, it does plainly incite the Life of Men to Modesty and the other Virtues, and draws [them] off from unreasonable and importunate desires? To find out the reason of all which things, is a greater Work than can be performed by Man. For, how can the understanding of a corruptible and infirm Creature, arrive at the Accuracy of Truth? How can it apprehend the pure and sincere Will of God from the Beginning.

written in the Fugesian Copy, after I had long before conjectured, that it was so to be written. Moreover, I point the whole place thus: πῶς δὲ ἀντὶ τῆς ἀσύναντος ἀνθρώπου ἐπιταῖς ἡ, &c. Πῶς δὲ τῶ ἐξ ἀρχῆς, &c. Valef.

C H A P. IX.

Concerning the Philosophers, who, because they desired to know all things, erred as to their Opinions; * and some of them were exposed to dangers. Also concerning the Opinions of Plato.

<sup>a</sup> In the very Title of the chapter

there is a fault. For what can these words mean. ὅτι ἀποδίδωμι ἐντοὶς περὶ τῶν φιλοσόφων ὁμοιωμάτων. But I think the place must be made good in this manner; ὅτι ἀπὸ τῶν φιλοσόφων ὁμοιωμάτων. Also, concerning the Opinions of Plato; and so 'tis plainly written in the Eusebian Copy. But, both in the Eusebian Copy, and also in the Kings Sheets, this chapter is begun from these words, πολλὰ δ' ἄλλα τῆς δόξης ἀποδείξας, ὅταν πολλὰ ἄλλα ἔργα, &c. Valcf.

Wherefore, we ought to attempt those things that are possible, and which exceed not the capacity of Our Nature. For, pass, that their Sentiments are contrary, and that they oppose one anothers Opinions: and that [they do] when they would pretend to be wise. From whence [have been occasioned] Commotions of the People, and severe Sentences of Princes [against them;] whilst they think, that the usages of their Ancestors are subverted by them. And their own Ruin has very frequently been the Consequence hereof. For Socrates, proud of his Knowledge in disputing;

<sup>b</sup> Τὸν ἐν τοῖς διαλέξεσι γινώσκοντες. In the Enk, and Turneb. Copies 'tis truer written, γινώσκοντες. But in the Kings Sheets that word is omitted. I had rather write also, τὸν ἐν τοῖς ἀντιγράφοις τῶν ἐν τοῖς, &c. and have rendered it accordingly. Valcf.

<sup>c</sup> Ἀποδείξας. In the Sacred Scriptures this verb is used in such a sense as to signify, to exercise his Wit; as Jacobus Talamus has long since observed. Valcf. See Psal. 119. 15. where this word occurs.

* Or, Hide.

<sup>a</sup> καὶ τὸν ἡλικιωτέρων ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐν τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ ἐν τῷ πνεύματι. when he would undertake to render reasons that were weaker, more strong; and would frequently make Sport in contradicting; was killed by the Envy of those of his own Tribe, and of his fellow-Citizens. Moreover Pythagoras, who pre- requires, that these attend highly to the Exercise of Temperance words and Silence, was taken in a Lye. For, he should be clared to the Italians, that * those things long added, & before predicted by the Prophets, which he had heard whilst he was a Traveller in Ægypt, were given; and revealed by God to him as 'were in particular, the strongest, more weak. This was the device of Protegoras, who promised young Men, that he would make that reason which was stronger, more weak; and on the contrary, that which was weaker, more strong; ὅτι καὶ τῶν ἑλλήνων ἡλικιωτέρων ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐν τῷ πνεύματι. Against the Sophists who promised these things, Socrates disputed continually, that he might convince them that they knew nothing; and he pursued them with their own Weapons, that is, Arguments of Logic. Valcf.

<sup>c</sup> Πλάτωνος τῶν. It must be made πλάτωνος from the Eusebian Copy. — What Constantine says (namely, that Pythagoras, after he was come into Ægypt, and had heard what the Prophets had heretofore predicted; divulged those things afterwards all over Italy, as if God had revealed them to him;) seems to me scarce probable. Indeed, that Pythagoras came into Ægypt, and there received from the Priests, the Mystick Rites and Ceremonies of their Religion; this, I say, is attested by Porphyrius in his Life, and by many others. Moreover, we are told by Aristobolus, Clemens, &c. Eusebius, that Pythagoras had many things out of the Books of Moses. But, that he had learned the Prophecies of the Jews in Ægypt, and had afterwards divulged them amongst the Italians; is a thing affirmed by none of the Ancients, that I know of. And perhaps this place is to be understood, not concerning the Prophecies of the Jews, but those of the Egyptians. For there were Prophets amongst the Egyptians, as I have observed in my notes on Eusebius's Ecclesiastical History. See book 4 chap. 8. note (c.) Which thing perhaps led Constantine into a mistake. Who having read, that Pythagoras had learned many Secrets from the Prophets of the Egyptians, that is their Priests; understood that as meant concerning the Prophets of the Hebrews. Valcf.

Lastly Plato, the mildest and sweetest tempered Person of them all, and the first Man that drew off Mens Minds from the Senses, to things intelligible, and such as always continue in the same State; accustoming Men to look upwards, and instructing them to raise their Eyes to things sublime; in the first place taught, that God was above every * Essence, wherein he did well, To Him he subjoyned a Second; and in number distinguished the two

Essences, although the Perfection of them Both be one; and notwithstanding the Essence of the Second God, * proceeds from the First. For, He † Or, His is the Framer and Governor of the Universe, and therefore transcends [all things.] But He who is the Second from Him, ministering to His Commands, † ascribes the Constitution of * Or, Re- mits the all things to Him, as to the Cause. Therefore, Cause of according to the most accurate way of Philo- sophizing, there will be but One who takes the fullness of Care of all things, and consults their Good; all things God The * Logos namely, who has beautified * Or, Him all things. Which Logos Himself being truly Word. God, is also the Son of God. For, what other Name shall any one impose upon Him, besides the appellation of a Son, who at the same time shall not commit a Sin of the deepest Dye? For, He who is the Father of all, is deservedly esteemed the Father of His own Word also. Thus far Plato's Sentiments were right. But, in those things which follow, He is found to have wandered far from the Truth; whilst he both introduces a multitude of Gods, and also ascribes different Forms to each of them. Which was the occasion of a greater mistake amongst unthinking Men: who do not consider the Providence of the most High God; but pay a veneration to Images framed by themselves, made according to the likeness of Men, and some other Creatures. And thus it hapned, that that excellent * Wit, and that Learning worthy of the highest Commendation, being mix'd with some such errors as these, had in its left of Purity and Perfection. The same Person seems to Me, to reprove Himself, and to correct that discourse; whilst he attests in express Words, that the Rational Soul is the Spirit of God. For, † He divides all things into two sorts, intelligible namely and sensible: [the Former sort is simple and uncompounded;] the Later consists of a Frame of Body.

And, that is apprehended by the understanding; but this is perceived by Opinion with Sense. Therefore, that which partakes of the Divine Spirit, in regard 'tis unmix'd and immaterial, is also eternal, and has for its Allotment an endless Life. But, that which is sensible, because 'tis dissolved the same way whereby it was at first framed, has no Portion in an endless Life. But, the Doctrine which * be delivers * Plato in the following words, is highly admirable; that those who have lived well, the Souls namely of holy

* He means Plato himself, whose excellent Wit, all the Ancients, yea the Christians also, were admirers of. Valcf.

<sup>b</sup> Διόνυσος δὲ μέγας. Christophorus seems to have read Διόνυσος. The Place in Plato, which Constantine means, occurs in his Timæus pag. 23. Valcf.

* be delivers * Plato in the following words, is highly admirable; that those who have lived well, the Souls namely of holy body and good Men, after their departure out of the Body, are consecrated in the most beautiful [Mansions] of Heaven. [Which Assertion of his does not only deserve Admiration,] <sup>1</sup> but is also highly useful. For, what person giving credit to him, and expecting such a Felicity, will not order his Life in the best manner, will not exercise Righteousness and Temperance, and will not have an Aversion for Wickedness? Agreeably to these Words also, he has subjoined, that the Souls of wicked Men are tossed up and down in the Streams of Acheron and Pyriphlegon, floating <sup>2</sup> like the Remains of a Shipwreck'd vessel.

<sup>1</sup> Ἄλλοι δὲ ἐκ τῶν βαρύνων, which assertion, Sec. Christophorus, Scaliger, Bonargius, and Gruter put in these words, as 'tis remark'd at the margin of that Edition. I likewise found the same emendation in Moræus's Book, in Tinebuli's Sir, Henry Scul's, and in the Fukestian Copy; in which Copies also 'tis βαρύνων.

<sup>2</sup> Ναυαγίων ἑσθλῶν. I have rendered it, Navis fraëte reliquias, the Remains of a Shipwreck'd Vessel; that is, The Tackle or Furniture of the Ship. For after a Shipwreck, these provisions and utensils of the Vessel, are tossed up and down in the Sea. But Christophorus renders it, Meret, the Wares or Goods of the Merchant; a rendition that can in no wise be agreeable here. For when a Vessel is lost at Sea, most commonly the Goods sink to the bottom. Valef.

CHAP. X.

<sup>1</sup> Concerning those Men, who do not only reject the Dogmata of the Sacred Scriptures, but them of the Philosophers, also: and, that we either ought to give the Poets credit in all things, or in nothing.

<sup>1</sup> Πῶς οὖν καὶ πόρῃ τῶν ποιητῶν. It must be καὶ πόρῃ, not only, as the Learned man, at the margin of Moræus's Book, had conjectured it should be. And thus Christophorus read; nor is it otherwise written in the Fukestian Copy. Valef.

NEVERTHELESS, there are some Men so depraved as to their Minds, that, when they read these very discourses, neither care, nor are abashed with any thing of Fear: but, as if they heard some forged Stories and Fables, they condemn and laugh [at them.] They highly extol a Variety and Fluency of Expression; but abominate the Solidness and Severity of the drivage the Fates of the same [Gods] also. And affirm, that some of them are by nature cruel and austere; that others of them are strangers to all Care over Men; and, that some of them are morose. Moreover, they bring in [the Gods] lamenting the slaughter of their own Sons; as if they were unable to give relief, not only to Strangers, but to them also whom they love most entirely. They also feign them hyable to the same Passions and Troubles with Men whilst they sing their Wars and Wounds, their Joys and Mourning. And they seem worthy of credit, when they affirm these things. For, whereas they attempt Poetry, incited thereto by some Divine Motion; 'tis fit we should believe, and be persuaded by them, in reference to those things which they utter,

<sup>2</sup> Dogmata. <sup>3</sup> But, yet the same Men give credit to the Fables of the Poets; and fill all Greece and the Barbarous Regions with vain and <sup>4</sup> false Stories. For the Poets affirm, that some Men, Sons of the Gods, do judge Souls after death; and they constitute them the Inferiors and Triers of those departed, and celebrate their Sentences, and Judiciary proceedings. But these very Poets commemorate the Fights of the Dæmons, and <sup>5</sup> Rights of War amongst them. They

† when moved by a Divine Spirit. They likewise relate the Calamities of the Gods and Dæmons. Indeed, their Calamities are <sup>1</sup> wholly agreeable with Truth. But some body will say, that 'tis lawful for Poets to lye. For this [ 'tis asserted ] is the Property of Poetry, to recreate the Minds of the Hearers: but, [that is said] to be Truth, when what is spoken, is in it self no otherwise, than so as 'tis delivered. Let this be the property of Poetry, sometimes to conceal and withdraw the Truth. But, they who lye, never lye in vain and for nothing. For they do this, on account either of Gain and Profit; or else, being (as 'tis likely) conscious to themselves of some ill practice, they hide [the Truth,] out of a fear of that danger which the Laws threaten them with. <sup>2</sup> But doubtless, it might (in my judgement) be possible for them, when relating nothing save the Truth concerning the Divine Nature, neither to lye, nor act impiously.

and have rendered it accordingly.

CHAP. XI.

Concerning our Lord's Coming in the Flesh what it was; and for what reasons it has happen'd.

IF therefore there be any Person unworthy of [an acquaintance with] the best way of <sup>1</sup> living, <sup>2</sup> and be conscious to himself, that he <sup>3</sup> hath lived wickedly and in a disordered manner; may be repent and look towards the Deity, having first clear'd the eye of his Mind, and being made a Stranger to his former most vicious courses. Nevertheless, he ought to rest satisfied, if, even in his declining Age he may <sup>4</sup> attain wisdom himself; But no Learning [that has proceeded] from <sup>5</sup> Men, was ever any assistance to Us. But, whatever things are commendable in Mens Lives and Morals, amongst those that have understanding think of.

Further, from the beginning of this period, that is, from these words <sup>6</sup> ἐν τῇ ἐκτῇ ἀρχῇ, the eleventh chapter begins, both in the Sheets, and in the Fukestian Copy. And in this Manuscript, wherein the Contents are prefixt before each Chapter, this is the Inscription of this Chapter; <sup>7</sup> καὶ τῆς αὐτῆς ἀρχῆς τῶν κειμένων, ἡ ἐν δὲ τῇ ἐκτῇ ἀρχῇ, καὶ τῆς αὐτῆς ἀρχῆς τῶν κειμένων, &c. Concerning our Lord's coming in the Flesh, what [it was] and for what reason it has happen'd. And concerning those who knew not this mystery; &c. But in the Kings Sheets, and in Robert Stephens's Edition, which Christophorus has followed, this chapter is divided into two, and concerning those who knew, &c. is the title of a new chapter. Valef.

<sup>1</sup> τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐκταύσαν. Doubtless it must be ἐκταύσαν, or ἐκταύσαν, may attain; which I wonder neither Christophorus, nor Scaliger, nor others perceived; who have rendered it τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐκταύσαν. But 'tis not Greek to say ἐκταύσαν τὴν ἀρχὴν, but ἐκταύσαν τὴν ἀρχὴν. Yet in the Fukestian Copy the reading is τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐκταύσαν. Valef.

9 and Preservation, the Effect. In the same manner as the Father is the cause of the Son, and the Son, the Effect. Now, that Christ Himself existed before all things, we have already proved sufficiently. But in what manner He came down to Men, and [why descended into] the World? The Intent and purpose of His coming, as the Prophets have predicted, proceeded from His care over the Universe.

* The ancient Divines, those especially amongst the Greeks, affirmed, that our person in the Trinity, God the Father mainly, was the Cause; but, that the other Two, to wit the Son and Holy Spirit, were the Causata, i. e. the Effects. In Antiphonius in question Second, Chap. 11. and 12. οὐκ ἔστιν ἡ αἰτία αὐτῶν ἀλλὰ διὰ τοῦτο, But the Son is not the Cause, but the Causatum. So also Johannes Damascenus in his first Book de Imaginibus, not far from the beginning. Imago, says he, Dei invisibilis est ipse Filius &c. The Image of the invisible God is the Son Himself, who bears the Father in Himself, and is in all things the same with Him, save in this one, that He is from Him, as from the Cause. For the Father is the Cause, from which the Son proceeds. Also Gregory Nazianzen, Chap. 29, which is de Dignitate, does in express words affirm, that the Father is the Cause of the Son, and the Holy Spirit. But, amongst the Latines, Martinus Capellanus has expressed himself in the same manner, in his first Book against Arius. — Valde.

Yet I would rather read ἡς καὶ τοῦ, that is, of the Lord's Advent.
Valef.

For 'tis requisite, that the Framer should take care of His own Works. But, when he was about to <sup>as</sup> assume a terrene Body, and to stay <sup>at</sup> Ours, upon Earth for some time, (necessity requiring preach to this;) He deified for Himself a new way of a worldly being born. For the Conception [was] without a Marriage; and the <sup>of</sup> Child-birth of a <sup>pure</sup> Virginity; and a <sup>of</sup> Virgin the Mother of <sup>of</sup> Birth. God; and a Temporal Beginning of an Eternal Nature; and a <sup>of</sup> Perception of an <sup>of</sup> Intel-<sup>of</sup> Sense.

lignible Essence; and a matter of an incorporeal Brightness. All things therefore, which then were seen, were agreeable hereto. "A bright Dove, [such a one as heretofore] flew out of Noah's Ark, descended into the * unspotted * Marriage, which is pur-ver than all Chastity, and

Apocryphal Books, wherein 'twas related, that the Holy Ghost, under the shape of a Dove, descended into the Bosom of Mary, according as the Angel had foretold to her. And perhaps; these things were related in this manner, in the Gospel of the Hebrews. But Christophoros supposes that Dove to be meant here, which Noah heretofore sent out of the Ark : and that that Dove was a figure of the Holy Spirit, which was afterwards to come upon the Virgin Mary. But I would rather read here dispositus sicut erat in sinu eius the verb disposuit or arrangavit &c. A Bright Dove, &c. Thus the sense is plain and elegant. Vale.

† Typhaceo. After this word, as plac'd in the Greek Text, I have set a point, from the authority of the King's Copy: which Christophorus having not perceived, corrupted the meaning of this whole passage by adding some words. For thus he read; ὑψηλῶς, ἀνωθεν καὶ ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ὁπλίζω ὑμᾶς. Nevertheless, the Fugatese Copy does plainly confirm this reading and punctuation of Christophorus; save that it has, ὁ ὢν ὁπλίζω. As it is also in Turnebus's Book. Vale!

* Or, modestly served by the * Sovereign and most prudent Nations and People? Who being posselt of all manner of Power, and always continuing firm to his own purpose, has not made the least abatement of his innate Clemency. Be gone therefore, Ye impious! (For that is permitted to You, in as much as no punishment is now inflicted on Your wickedness.) Be gone, I say, to your slaughters of Victims, and to Your Banquets, Festivals, and Drunken Debates, of Religion, you make pleasures and intemperances your Business. You pretend indeed to perform Sacrifices; but in reality you serve your own Lusts. For you know nothing of Good, not so much as the first Command of the Great God; who has both prescribed Laws to mankind, and also given it in charge to his Son, that he should form and govern the Lives and Morals of Men: to the end that they who shall lead their Lives well and soberly, may, according to the Judgement of His Son, have a second Life allotted them, which will be blessed and 10 He means the Decree of God concerning the assuaging manhood, or concerning the Incarnation, by which the life of Men was repaired. 'Tis apparent therefore, that the Chapters are well digested by us; unless any one should have a mind, to say, that the Chapter reach to these words; which I should willingly yield to. Kalef.

and He is wholly a Stranger to all Mixture and Copulation. But, it ought to be considered, that Generation is twofold; the one from † Conception, which is known to all Men; the other, from an Eternal Cause. The manner of which [Generation,] by the favour of Divine Providence that Person sees even amongst Men.

* Ὁς ἀγαπᾷ πᾶσι ἐν ἑαυτῷ.
Robert Stephens, in those various Readings which he has marked at the close of his Epistolæ, does not, in the former Copies this place is read thus; Ὁς ἀγαπᾷ πᾶσι ἐν ἑαυτῷ, who is dear to him, that is, to God. Which doubtless is the true writing. For Constantine says, that the manner of a Natural Generation is know to all; but, that very few know the way of the Divine Generation; those namely whom God shall have a peculiar affection for. In the same manner, the reading is φιλῶν. But, in the Sloane's writing, Ὁς ἀγαπᾷ πᾶσι, is ἐκείνῳ πᾶσι, of Sauli, and Turner, Copies give the true reading, Υἱὸς.

P. THE ἀρτὴν αὐτῶν τῆς σω- Preservation ] of things πλάς. The Geneva-men did ill, in admitting the two last words into the Text from the conjecture of Scaliger, as 'tis noted at the margin. But 'tis plain enough, that more excellent than Contingency it self. The [wonderful] Wisdom of God from his very Cradle: and Jordan, [the River] which afforded Him Water for Baptism, receiving Him with a Reverence.

* Or, A Gion * joyed with greatable. A Doctrine also, wonderful things, † Καὶ ἐν τῷ ἀνδραγαθίῳ ταύτῃ, ἀντιπαρὶς τῷ βασιλείῳ; which Vasefus renders thus; Mira denique celeritas in bonum precibus audiendus, Lastly, a wonderful swiftness in hearing mens prayers.

* Ταῖς πολιτικῆς ἀρεταῖς. Philosophers make two sort of Virtues; the one πραγματικῆς, practical; which Constantine does here term πολιτικῆς, Civil; and the other θεωρητικῆς, contemplative, which lead our minds to the contemplation of God. Whence, some of Pythagoras's disciples were termed πολιτικοί, others θεωρητικοί, as the Old Author concerning the Life of Pythagoras, in Plotinus's Bibliotheca chap. 259. informs us. Farther in the Fukesian Copy the reading of this place runs thus; ἀδελφοὶ τοῦ κόσμου, ἡ τῆς πολιτικῆς λειτουργίας ἀρετὴ διδόνου ἐκκαθαίρων, ἀλλὰ τὰς αἰετὶ τὸν νοῦν ἡμεῖς ἀρετῆς ἀναστὰς οὗ τοῦ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ, &c. The same also is the reading in the Books of Turnebus and Sir Henry Savil. But I agree with Sir Henry, who, after he had written this reading at the margin of his own Book, blotted it out again, having added this note; Lexito vulgata retinere posset, paucis immutatis; the common reading may be retained, a small alteration being made. Valef.

† Ἀντὶ τῆς ταύτης, instead of foundations. Doubtless it is to be written, ὑπερβολῆς, Blindness. Presently, from the Kings Copy I have mended it, ἀντὶ τῆς ταύτης, instead of a faintness and weakness of body. And so it is in Sir Henry Savil's Copy. A little before, I had rather write, τὸ γὰρ τῆς ἐξουσιαστικῆς, &c. instead of τὸ γὰρ τῆς, &c. Valef. In Robert Siropien's, instead of περίστασις, the reading is περίστασις.

amongst Men, that hath ever praised Thee according to Thy worth? For Thou art said to have created things of nothing;

* and to have given them light; and with Order and Measure to have beautified

† Or, Dis- t confused heap of the Elements. But this is the eminentest Gift of Thy Clemency; that Thou hast rendered

Men, endued with a good Disposition, and Admirers of a Divine and given, &c. Blessed Life; and hast taken order, that, * ha-

In the Kings Sheet, and in Sir Henry Savil's Book, the reading is οὐδὲ γὰρ; &c. But the Fukesian Copy, has it, οὐ γὰρ. Valef.

* Καταλείπει δ'. Christophorus does here understand the verb παύειν in common. Which though I condemn not, yet it does not seem to collate. In the Fukesian Copy, this place is thus read, ἀποκαταστήσει δὲ τὸν κόσμον ἐν τῇ ἀρετῇ, &c. without those words τὸν κόσμον παύειν ἀποκαταστήσει. Valef.

ving been made Merchants of those things which are truly good, they should impart their own wisdom and happiness to many others; and that they themselves should reap the immortal fruit of Virtue; being freed from Intemperance, but made partakers of Clemency; having mercy before their Eyes, but hoping for the * Promises of Faith; Lastly, * embracing Modesty and all manner of Virtue, [instead of injustice,] which the former

Life of Men had cast upon their Morals, [that it might be cut off] from him who makes provision for all things. For no other person could be found, who might be a fit Physician for the curing such great Evils, and that injustice, which had prevailed in that Age. Providence therefore coming even to the Earth it self, easily composed and beautified all things, which by wickedness and intemperance had been disordered. Nor [did Christ perform] this secretly and in a concealed manner. For he knew, that there were some Men, who with prudence and understanding would * contemplate his own

Power; but, that others, in regard as to their Nature they were like irrational creatures, would * Or, * rely upon their Sense to own senses rather.

* Wherefore, that no person, whether good or ill, might be in doubt; [be performed it] openly, and hath exposed this Blessedness and admirable Cure to publick view: restoring again to Life, those that were dead; and commanding, that such as had been deprived of their senses, should again recover their former soundness of sense. But that he rendered the Sea solid, and in the midst of a Storm ordered a Calm to arise; and in fine, that (after he had performed wonderful works, and from an incredulity had brought Men over to a most strong Faith;)

He† ascended up away to, &c. into Heaven;

whose work was this, save God's, and [a performance] of a most transcendent power?

Nor did that time, which was nearest to his Passion, want those Signs that were highly admirable; when the darkness of night obscured the brightness of day, and * totally eclipsed the Sun.

For, a terror had seized all the People every where, [who believed] that the end of all things;

* I was now come, and that a Chaos, such a one as was had been before the Composure of the World, would again now prevail. Moreover, the Cause of so great a calamity was inquired into, and what horrid immensity that might be, which had been committed by Men against the Deity. * Till such time as, according to a pleasing greatness of mind, God had by pectation. After this word in the Greek, something seems to be wanting. Nor can it be made sense, unless you add these words, ἀντὶ τῆς ἀρετῆς, &c. Which writing I have followed in my Version.

* Or, Ex-

who might be a fit Physician for the curing such great Evils, and that injustice, which had prevailed in that Age. Providence therefore coming even to the Earth it self, easily composed and beautified all things, which by wickedness and intemperance had been disordered. Nor [did Christ perform] this secretly and in a concealed manner. For he knew, that there were some Men, who with prudence and understanding would * contemplate his own

Power; but, that others, in regard as to their Nature they were like irrational creatures, would * Or, * rely upon their Sense to own senses rather.

* Wherefore, that no person, whether good or ill, might be in doubt; [be performed it] openly, and hath exposed this Blessedness and admirable Cure to publick view: restoring again to Life, those that were dead; and commanding, that such as had been deprived of their senses, should again recover their former soundness of sense. But that he rendered the Sea solid, and in the midst of a Storm ordered a Calm to arise; and in fine, that (after he had performed wonderful works, and from an incredulity had brought Men over to a most strong Faith;)

He† ascended up away to, &c. into Heaven;

whose work was this, save God's, and [a performance] of a most transcendent power?

Nor did that time, which was nearest to his Passion, want those Signs that were highly admirable; when the darkness of night obscured the brightness of day, and * totally eclipsed the Sun.

For, a terror had seized all the People every where, [who believed] that the end of all things;

* I was now come, and that a Chaos, such a one as was had been before the Composure of the World, would again now prevail. Moreover, the Cause of so great a calamity was inquired into, and what horrid immensity that might be, which had been committed by Men against the Deity. * Till such time as, according to a pleasing greatness of mind, God had by

with

with contempt look'd upon the contumely of the Impious, and had restored all things, and beautified the whole Heaven with the usual * course of the Stars. The Face therefore of the World, which * in a manner had been wholly covered with Mourning and Sadness, was again restored to its † Native beauty.

† Or, Own.

* Or, Dawne.
† Or, Own.
The Learned, who make it αἰῶν; in regard αἰῶν may also be used adverbially, instead of ἐν αἰῶνι. Yet in the Fuk and Turneb. Copier, 'tis αἰῶνι. Valf.

CHAP. XII.

Concerning those who knew not this Mystery; and, that their ignorance is voluntary; and, what great blessings await those who know it, and especially them who have died in Confession.

* From these words the God was able to have made the will of Men better? and more tractable and mild. [I demand] therefore, what better method, what more effectual attempt in order to the amendment of ill Men, than God's own speaking to them? Has not He, when present and rendered visible to all, taught them modestly and sobriety of Life? If therefore the Command of a God who was present, but grieved nothing; how could [the admonition] of one absent and unheard, be of force? What therefore was the Obstacle of that most Blessed Doctrine? The perverse, untractable, and fierce stubbornness of Men. For, when with an angry and displeased Mind we receive those things which are well and fitly enjoined, the * acuteness of our understanding is dull'd as *twere, and clouded.

* Or, Sobriety of mind is payed and de-fac'd.
† Or, Own.
I have rather write, ἐν αἰῶνι. See Defenses. For Constantine brings two reasons, why the Heathens embraced not the preaching of Christ. Valf.

* Or, Own.
† Or, Own.
I have rather write, ἐν αἰῶνι. See Defenses. For Constantine brings two reasons, why the Heathens embraced not the preaching of Christ. Valf.

* Or, Own.
† Or, Own.
I have rather write, ἐν αἰῶνι. See Defenses. For Constantine brings two reasons, why the Heathens embraced not the preaching of Christ. Valf.

* Or, Own.
† Or, Own.
I have rather write, ἐν αἰῶνι. See Defenses. For Constantine brings two reasons, why the Heathens embraced not the preaching of Christ. Valf.

their companions; and that the observance of God's Command might thus continue true and firm. For, from such an observance, and from a pure Faith, and a sincere Devotion towards God, springs a scarleness and contempt of Death. [Such a mind as this] therefore, gives a resistance to the Storms and Tumults of the World, * being fortified in order to Martyrdom, by an inexhaustible strength of Divine Virtue. And when with a magnanimity it has conquered the greatest Terrors, it is vouchsafed a Crown from Him, † to whom with courage and constancy it hath born witness. Nevertheless, it does not boast in respect thereof. For it knows I suppose, that even this is the Gift of God, that it has both endured Tortures, and hath also cheerfully fulfilled the Divine Commands.

Farther such a Life as this is followed by an immortal Memory, and an Eternal Glory; and that most deservedly. For, both the Life of a Martyr is found to be full of a Religious observance of the Divine Commands; and * his Death full of magnanimity and * Gallantry. Wherefore, Hymns, Psalms, Canticles, and Praises are after this manner sung to God the Inspector of all things; and must be such a * Sacrifice of thanksgiving as this is performed in memory of these Persons: [a Sa-crifice] not polluted with Blood, and void of all manner of Violence. Neither is the Odour of Frankincense required, nor a kindling of the Funeral-pile: but a pure Light only, as much as may be sufficient for the enlightening them who pray to God. Sober Feasts and Banquets are likewise celebrated by many, made for the relief and refreshment of the indigent, and to help them who have been deprived [of their Estates and Country.] Which [Banquets] should any one think to be burthensome and inconvenient, his Sentiment would be repugnant to the Divine and most Blessed † Discipline.

* Or, Own.
† Or, Own.
I have rather write, ἐν αἰῶνι. See Defenses. For Constantine brings two reasons, why the Heathens embraced not the preaching of Christ. Valf.

* Or, Own.
† Or, Own.
I have rather write, ἐν αἰῶνι. See Defenses. For Constantine brings two reasons, why the Heathens embraced not the preaching of Christ. Valf.

* Or, Own.
† Or, Own.
I have rather write, ἐν αἰῶνι. See Defenses. For Constantine brings two reasons, why the Heathens embraced not the preaching of Christ. Valf.

* Or, Own.
† Or, Own.
I have rather write, ἐν αἰῶνι. See Defenses. For Constantine brings two reasons, why the Heathens embraced not the preaching of Christ. Valf.

abolished, as St. Austin attests, Epist. 64. In the Fukerian Copy, the reading is απογοιζομεν ἢ πᾶσι, ὡς αὐτοῖς, &c. not πᾶσι, as 'tis in the ordinary Editions. Valef.

C H A P. XIII.

That a difference of the Parts of the Creation is necessary; and that a propensity to Good and Evil, springs from the will of Men: and therefore, that the Judgment [of God] is necessary, and agreeable to Reason.

BUT now, some Persons do boldly and inconsiderately presume, to find fault with God even in this matter. What was his meaning [say they,] that he has not framed the nature of things, one and the same; but has commanded, that even most things should be produced different, and therefore should be endued with a nature and disposition that are contrary? Whence springs a diversity of the Morals and Wills of us Men. It had peradventure been better, both as to what respects the Commands of God, and as to an accurate * Contemplation of Him, and in reference to a confirmation <sup>b</sup> of the Faith of every particular person, that all Men had been endued with one and the same Disposition. But [we answer,] 'tis altogether ridiculous to desire, that all Men should be of one and the same humour and disposition: [and 'tis absurd] not to consider and remark this, that the constitution of the whole World is not the same, with that of those things which are in the World: or this, that Natural things are not of the same substance with those that are Moral: Or Lastly this, that the Affections of the Body are not the same with those of the Mind. <sup>a</sup> For, [the rational Soul does far excel] this whole World; and is in much more blessed than Creatures that are earthly and lyable to Corruption, by how much it is nobler and more divine: neither is mankind void of the divine goodness. Nevertheless, all Men are not promiscuously and without any good of difference [partakers of the Divine Goodness:] but those only, who have search'd into the Divine Nature, and who have propos'd to themselves this, as their chief purpose of Life and primary Study, the knowledge namely of things Divine.

* Knowledge, or, Comprehension.

<sup>b</sup> Καὶ τὸν ἕκαστον ἄνθρωπον. It must, I suppose, be τὸν καθ' ἕνα ἄνθρωπον, of the faith of every particular person. Valef.

* Οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλο τὸ ἕκαστον διὰ τῆς φύσεως. I had rather make it, οὐκ ἔστιν ἡ τὸ ἕκαστον διαφορά, αὐτῶν ἢ τῆς κοινότητος; which we have express'd in our Version. Valef.

<sup>a</sup> Τὸν μὲν δὲ οὐρανὸν ἡσυχία. After these, there are many words wanting, as 'tis apparent from the Contents of the Chapter. We chose to get out any sense from a corrupt and imperfect place, rather than with Christophoros to expunge the whole passage. St. Henry Savil, in his Copy, has also expunged this whole period, as far as these words, τὸν δὲ θεὸν ἀποδοκίματον, &c. Neither is Markland, &c. Indeed in the Fukerian Copy that whole period is wanting. Valef.

C H A P. XIV.

That a created Nature is at a vast distance from an Essence which is uncreated: and, that Man * approaches nearest to God, by a virtuous Life.

Or, is made a neighbour to it; that is, to an uncreated essence, by a life according to Virtue.

MOREOVER, to compare things that are made, with them which be eternal, is unquestionably the highest degree of madness. For these have neither beginning, nor end. But those, in regard they are brought forth and begotten; and because they have received a beginning both of their existing, and of their living for some set time; must consequently of necessity have an end also. But, how can those things which are * begotten, be any ways compared with him, who hath commanded them to be begotten? For, if these things were equal to him, the Command whereby he ordered them to be produced, would in no wise fit and be agreeable to him. But, neither can things celestial be compared with him; in the same manner that the sensible world [is not to be compared] with the Intelligible; nor Images, with the Originals. <sup>a</sup> But, is not the confusing and mixing of all things, a thing wholly ridiculous? in regard the dignity of the Divine Nature would be * clouded, <sup>a</sup> by a * Or, comparing of it with Men, or with Beasts. And, is not a desire of power, which might strive to equal the power of God, is not [I say such a desire] to be esteemed as peculiar to Mad-men and such as abhor a sober, modest, and virtuous course of Life? For if with earnestness we strive to attain divine felicity, we ought to lead our lives according to the Command of God. For by this means, when we shall have lived in Conformity to that Law appointed by God; being made superior to all Fate, we shall take up our Residence in immortal and eternal Mansions. For, this is the only strength in Man, which is like to the divine power, [namely] a sincere and unfeigned worship paid to God; and a Conversion to him; and a Contemplation and knowledge of those things which are acceptable to the Deity: not to be enclined towards the Earth; but as far as we are able, to raise our minds to things sublime and celestial. For by such an endeavour

<sup>a</sup> Ἡ δὲ οὐρανὸν ἡσυχία. Markland seems to have read οὐρανὸν, which I am extraordinarily pleased with; For he renders it; Quomodo autem omnium comparatio non ridicula est, &c. But, how is not the comparing of all things ridiculous, &c. Certainly, 'tis either thus to be read, or to be understood thus. For Constantine terms that equaling of all things, a confusion. Valef.

<sup>a</sup> Ἐὶ μὲν γὰρ θεὸς οὐρανὸν. Without doubt it must be οὐρανὸν. For thus Constantine argues. Even things Celestial, says he, cannot be compared with God. Much less things Terrestrial, and Brute. This is the meaning of this place. But the Manuscript Copies of Christophoros, St. Henry Savil, Gruter, and Mr. Fokri, word this place thus; Ἐὰν γὰρ θεὸς οὐρανὸν, in regard the dignity of, &c. Which reading seems to me better, and more elegant. Valef.

For by such an endeavour

† To triumph endeavour as this a Victory is procured for † Or, In place of many † Or, Both as to dignity, and in a diversity of
 power.
 as this a Victory is procured for † of equal value with many Blessings. The cause therefore of the dissimilitude of things, † which is plac'd in a distance both of dignity and power, has this reason. Wherein they who are wise, do willingly acquiesce, and are eminently thankful. But the ingrateful, and the foolish, receive a punishment † befitting their Arrogance.

Chapter of the Revelations; where God says: Vincens dabo Coronam, &c. To him that overcometh I will give a Crown, &c. Indeed, the life of a Christian Man is wont to be compared to Champions, as it frequently occurs in St. Paul's Epistles. But the word quæ is redundant, after the usual manner of Græcians, as 'tis well known to those skill'd in the Greek Tongue. Vale.

The evangelium. In the Kings Copy 'tis τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, as Robert Stephens has also remarked in his Various Readings. I read therefore, τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, befitting, or agreeable to; with Christophorus, Scaliger, Gruicer, and others: or τὸ ἱερὸν εὐαγγέλιον, which comes nearer to the inoffensiveness of the written reading. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis, τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, Παλσι.

CHAP. XV.

What Precepts Our Saviour delivered, and what Miracles He wrought; and how beneficial He hath been to those who own a subjection to Him.

Farther, the Son of God exhorts all Men to Vertue, and constitutes himself a Teacher to such as are prudent, [instructing them]

<sup>a</sup> Τὰς τὰς ἐπιταγὰς τοῦ Σωτῆρος. <sup>a</sup> in the Father's commands.
 τῶν, in the Saviour's Commands. Unless we forget our selves,
 I should I think, be made, <sup>b</sup> ὅτι <sup>b</sup> being wretchedly ignorant, τὸς σωτῆρας τοῦ Θεοῦ, in the Preserver of the sake of our ad-of Salvation, as it is noted in the vantage, that is, on account margin of the text, ὅτι τὸς σωτῆρας of Mens blessings, He tra-
 You may as well write, ὅτι τὸς σωτῆρας <sup>c</sup>avelled up and down on τῶν, &c. in the Father's Com- Earth; and having called mands. For the mistake seems together to himself the best to have arisen from a contracted Man of <sup>d</sup> those times, be way of writing. In the Kings, delivered them a most use-and Eusebian Copy, and in the ful Doctrine, the prefer-Sheets, at this place 'tis thus <sup>e</sup> written. <sup>e</sup> ὅτι τὸς σωτῆρας τοῦ Θεοῦ.

* Or. Adversus Nativitatem. Ecce Confessorium has rendered this place that: *Ecce illi qui quidem propter hominum vero adjuvamento fuerunt, longè optime adjuvatores ad se, and had called to himself,
 by far the best of those Men,
 who at that time were an affiniance to the life of Men. But, who ever exalteth himself in this manner, nonne seipsum propter deum Men of the most useful?*
 Wherefore, I doubt not, but this place is thus to be mended and improved. Et quoniam deus beatus non solum propter homines transiit mundum, and having call'd together unto, &c. as we have rendered it. In the Epistle and Tornebeau Poem, the reading is non transiit. Peace.

Ω δαλκίζων νῦν. In Thucydus's, and Muretus's Book, 'tis printed δαλκίζων κ' ἐξαπατῶν. See de sūmme et dēvōte, &c. But the Fukgeian Copy has it truer written, ὁ δαλκίζων κ' ἐξαπατᾷ. Valef.

At 1 Tim<sup>2</sup> 2:15, ἡ γεννησιμὴ ψευδος, which reading is confirmed by the Kings and Feketer Copy, and by the Sheets. But in Moreau's Book I found it mended ἡ γεννησιμὴ and I don't understand why the Geneva men admitted this emendation into the Text. This γεννησιμὴ ψευδος has the same import with ψευρο-γενεσιμ. St. Paul calls it ψευρε ad substantiam, to think falsely, or, ψεβριτυ. Vale.

mand, that with a Courage and Patience of Mind, we should bear all manner of injury, and every sort of contempt: teaching us, that the Visitation of his Father is of this sort: so that, they who could magnanimously endure accidents, might always obtain the Victory. For he affirmed, that this is the most superlative degree of strength, [namely] a constancy of Mind ymned with Philosophy; which is nothing else but a knowledge of what is True and Good, accustoming those who get riches fairly and justly, to impart what they possess, by a kind and liberal distribution to the poorer sort. But he mholy, forbids mastership, and bearing sway over others; openly declaring, that as he came to give assistance to the humble, so he would desist from favouring those, who should disrespect the humble. Having therefore made Trial of the Faith of those People subject to him, by such and so powerful an Experiment, he rendered them not only Consumers of the terriblest and most formidable things, but most genuine disciples also of an hope and confidence in himself. Moreover, he once sharply rebuked, and by his words repress one of his Companions, who had * been over much heated with anger. That [ Disciple ] had * with a drawn sword made an assault upon some body; exposing his own life, that he might assist our Saviour. But [his Lord] commanded him to be quiet,

 and to put up his Sword;
 reproaching the Adam Generals, & ἄρχοντες τῶν ἀνθρώπων,
 I read ἔμφρον, as 'tis in Mo-raeus's Book; wherein 'tis allowed that ἄρχοντες, not ill in the Fugitian Copy 'tis likewise ἔμφρον, τὴν ἀντιπαρτίαν, and we have rendered it accordingly:
 Vale.

because he had despised of a defence and refuge in Him Himself. And he enacted a Law in express words, that <sup>b</sup> whoever should begin an assault upon another with the hands of Violence, or should attempt to injure him who had begun, or [whoever in general] should make use of the sword, should perish by a violent Death. This is most undoubtedly the Celestial wisdom, to choose to be injured, rather than to injure; and, as often as necessity shall require, to be in a readiness to undergo, rather than do evil. For, whereas the mischief of being injurious is very great; not he, who suffers the wrong, ἡ μάχης τῆς ἐν τῷ ὄντι ἀδελφικῆς μαχίης. In Moran's Book the Learned Man hath fed these words at the margin, ἐπαινεσθῆναι

<sup>b</sup> Πάντα τὸν ἀδικῶν χερσὶν κτανέσθαι. This place it thus is to be restored from the Pinkettian and Turkish Copies, τοῦ ἀδικῶντος, μέγα τὸν ἀδικῶντα, &c. As to the following clause, ὁ ἀδικῶν τὸν κληρονομήσαντα ἀδικῶντα, I had rather write thus, ἀδικῶν τὸν ἀδικῶντα, or should attempt to resist him, &c. Yale.

* Or, Is encompassed with.

* 'tis in the power of him who pays an obedience to God, neither to do, nor suffer an injury; provided he places his confidence in the protection of God's arm.

who is present with, and gives him Assistance; to the end no one of His Subjects may receive any [harm]. But, how should he [endeavour] to assist himself,

<sup>1</sup> Ἀυτὸς ἐαυτῷ βοηθεῖν. Scattered, Gruter, and others have mended it, βοηθεῖν δὲ βοηθῶν, which emendation I likewise found written in Moræus's Book. It might also be written, βοηθεῖν βοηθῶν, the two last words being left out; which, as every one sees, are not very necessary here. But the Fukeian Manuscript agrees with those Books of Scaliger and Gruter. Valef.

<sup>2</sup> Μὴ δὲ σὺ. I doubt not but it should be written, ὅπως γὰρ καὶ σὺ τῷ περὶ τοῦ θ. Where ὅπως is made use of instead of εἰ, or ὡς, or ὡς. But the Translator who rendered this Oration of Constantine into Greek, had but little skill in the Greek tongue, and was careless enough, as 'tis apparent from many places. Constantine gives a reason here, why the worshippers of the Supreme God would never revenge themselves, nor resist force by force. For, should they do that, faith he, they must fight with their adversary, but they would be uncertain of the Victory. But, if they shall in no wise defend themselves, then they have a most certain Victory; for God fights for this place. This is the meaning of this place, which I admire at it, neither Chrysostom nor Augustine understood. Valef.

<sup>3</sup> Μὴ δὲ σὺ. By the mill of the mill of the mill. It might be made εἰς, Sc. by the mill. Sc. as I found it in Moræus's Book. And a little after I read περὶ τοῦ θ. as 'tis in the same Book. For Augustine is understood. In the Fukeian Copy and Old Suerz, the reading is περὶ τοῦ θ. Valef.

<sup>4</sup> Ὅτι καὶ ἐν τῇ ἀρχαίᾳ. I would rather write μέγας in the Non-Inter-Cale. For that seems to me far more elegant. Presently, the reading most doubtless be, ὅτι καὶ ἐν τῇ ἀρχαίᾳ, Sc. For the verb ἀρχαίᾳ is understood, which is used a little before. In the Fukeian Copy, and in the Suerz, 'tis reading it, ἀρχαίᾳ ἐν τῇ ἀρχαίᾳ, ὅτι καὶ ἐν τῇ ἀρχαίᾳ, Sc. when any trial of Calumnies falls out, Sc. Valef.

<sup>5</sup> Μὴ περὶ τῆς. In the Fukeian Manuscript 'tis ἐν τῇ ἀρχαίᾳ, Valef.

<sup>6</sup> ὅτι ἀνθρώπων. At the margin of the same Copy 'tis mended, ὅτι ἀνθρώπων ἐξ ὧν, ὅτι ἀνθρώπων ἐξ ὧν, Sc. Which reading Chrysostom has followed. And so 'tis written in the Fukeian Manuscript. Valef.

<sup>7</sup> ὅτι ἀνθρώπων. I read ὅτι ἀνθρώπων, ὅτι ἀνθρώπων ἐξ ὧν, Sc. where ὅτι is taken adverbially, for ὅτι. Valef.

For, by this means a Fight between two would ensue, and a doubtful and uncertain Victory. But, no Man of understanding prefers dubious matters, before those that are fixt and certain. But, how will he make any scruple about God's presence and assistance, who has had experience of so many perils, and has always been easily delivered from dangers, by the sole will and pleasure of God; who has walk'd thorough the Set, which by our Saviour's command was paved, and afforded a solid and firm way to the People that pass'd over it. For this, as I suppose, is the most evident and * Ground-firm * Basis of faith, this is the Foundation of Confidence; when we behold these admirable and incredible things performed and perfected by the command of the provident God. Hence likewise it happens, that when any one falls into the trial of Calumnies, he does not repent himself of his Faith and retains his hope in God firm and unshaken. Which habit being once firmly fixt in the mind, God takes up his Habitation in the inmost thought.

And whereas he is invincible; that mind also, which in its inmost thought possesses him that is thus invincible, can never be vanquish'd by those dangers that surround it.

* Besides, we have learn'd this very thing from God's own Victory; who, whilst he was making provision for the good of all Men, when reproach'd and insulted over by the impious and unjust, received no damage from his Passion, but obtained a most Glorious Victory over Wickedness, and was encircled with an immortal Crown: having brought to effect the design and purpose of his own Providence and Love, towards the Just; but, trampled upon the Cruelty of the unjust and Impious.

C H A P. XVI.

That the Coming of Christ is foretold by the Prophets; and, that He was appointed for the destruction of Idols, and idolatrous Cities.

Moreover, his Passion was long since foretold by the Prophets; and his Corporal Nativity foretold. The very time likewise of his Incarnation was predicted, wherein the Shoots springing from injustice and intemperance, which are hurtful to just Actions and Morals, might be destroyed; and wherein the whole World might be made partaker of Prudence and Modesty; that Law namely, which our Saviour has promulg'd, prevailing upon the Minds of almost all Men; the worship of the Deity being confirm'd and establish'd; and Superstition wholly abolished. On account of which [Superstition,] not only slaughterers of irrational Creatures, but Sacrifices of humane Bodies also, and detestable pollutions of Altars were exercised: for according to the Assyrian and Egyptian Laws, in-* Or, just, nocent Men were Sacrificed to Brazen or Earthen Statues. Images. Wherefore, the Fruit they say, be agreeable to such a Religion. Memphis [says he] and Babylon shall be made desolate; and both of them, with the Gods of their Countries, shall be left uninhabited. Nor do I relate these things from report and hear-say; but I my self was present and saw them; and was made an Eye-witness of the miserable and calamitous fortune of those Cities. * Memphis lies desolate, that Pride, Can and Glory of the then most powerful Pharaoh, saimne

he himself had been a spectator of the ruin and destruction of those two Cities, Memphis namely and Babylon, which had heretofore been most potent. We must therefore make enquiry, at what time Constantine might go to those places. Whilst he was but a youth he went into Egypt; at such time as he had a Military Employ in the Count of Dioclesian, by whom he was kept as an hostage. For Dioclesian waged a War many years in Egypt, against Achilleus who had rebelled in Egypt, as Eutropius relates. Out of Egypt, Constantine went afterwards, in company with Dioclesian, into Syria, and pass'd through the Province of Palestine, where he was first seen by Eusebius, as he himself attests. Now Dioclesian had made a journey into Syria, that with his own Forces he might assist Galerius Cæsar, who waged a War with the Persians. And he made a long stay in Syria, in order to his making a Peace with the Persians, as we are informed from the History of Pictus Particus. At that time therefore Constantine might take View of the Rubbish and Remains of the City Babylon. Valef.

I am of opinion, that the place is corrupted merely by the misplacing of the words. For the sense is most apparent, if you relate the words in this manner: καὶ οὐκ ἐπὶ τῇ πόλει, ἀλλ' ἐν τῇ ἀρχαίᾳ, ὅτι ἀνθρώπων ἐξ ὧν, ὅτι ἀνθρώπων ἐξ ὧν, Sc. What is more plain than this word? The import of ἀνθρώπων here, is glory or magnificence, that boasting, wherein namely Pharaoh put himself up. Away therefore with the conjecture of Chrysostom, Gruter, and others. And this was heretofore our conjecture concerning the reading of this place. But after we had gotten the Fukeian Copy, we found out the true and genuine reading. For in that Manuscript, this passage occurs worded thus: ἐν τῇ πόλει, ὅτι ἀνθρώπων ἐξ ὧν, ὅτι ἀνθρώπων ἐξ ὧν, ὅτι ἀνθρώπων ἐξ ὧν, ὅτι ἀνθρώπων ἐξ ὧν, Sc. And thus 'tis plainly read in Turneb's and Gruter's Book; save only, that that punctuation we have made use of, is peculiar to the Fukeian Copy only; wherein, after the word καὶ, a point is set. The Translator therefore of this Oration has used καὶ, in the Non-Inter-Cale, whereas he ought to have laid καὶ. Moreover, ἀνθρώπων is put instead of ἀνθρώπων. This then is the import of this reading; and was made an Eye-witness of Memphis the miserable and most unfortunate of Cities. But besides, according to the Divine Command, has laid waste the Country of the then most powerful Pharaoh, Sc. Farther, according to this reading, Constantine affirms, that Memphis only was seen by him; which I do indeed look upon to be true. For he could never see Babylon, in

СНАР

C H A P. XIX.

That this Prophecy concerning Our Saviour, was not forged by any of the Christians; but was written by Sibylla Erythraea, whose Books Cicero rendered into Latine Verse, before the coming of Christ. And, that Virgil makes mention of this Sibyl, as also of a Virgin delivered of a Child: but He fang of this Mytery, * obscurely; out of a fear of those then in power.

* Or, In Riddles.

<sup>a</sup> In the Fuketan Copy, and Sheets, yet ) disbelieve [this prediction.] For they suspect, that some body of our Religion, not unskilled in the Art of Poetry, made these Verses, and put a false Title to them, and affirmed them to be the Predictions of the Sibyl; in regard they contain Sentences that are of great use to the Life of man, whereby both the immoderate use of pleasures is restrained, and a way also is opened to a sober and temperate Life.

<sup>b</sup> But, the Truth it self is apparent and exposed to the view of all men; in as much as the diligence of * those who profess our Religion, hath made so accurate a Collection of the Series of Times, that no body can now suspect, that that Poem was composed after the Coming and Condemnation of Christ; [nor can it be now supposed,] that the common Report is false, namely, that these Verses were long before by way of Prophecy uttered by the Sibyl. For,

<sup>c</sup> Cicero, after he had read this Poem, translated it into Latine, and inserted it into his own Works. This Cicero was taken off by Antony, whilst he was in power. Again, Antony was vanquished by Augustus, who reigned six and fifty years. His successor was Tiberius: in which time the presence of our Saviour shined upon the World, and the Mystery of the Most Holy Religion began to flourish, and a new Progeny and Succession of people was <sup>d</sup> Begun, † established. Concerning which, 'tis my Sentiment, that the Prince of the Latine Poets speaks, in these words.

<sup>e</sup> The passage in Cicero, which Consero means, is extant in his second Book de Divinatione, where he makes mention of some Verses of the Sibyl, and of an Acrostick. But, that Acrostick spoken of by Cicero, can no way be proved to be the very same with this which Constantine produces here. Yet, the contrary may be gathered from Cicero's words. For, in that Acrostick mentioned by Cicero, the Romans were warned, that they should choose themselves a King, if they would be safe; as Cicero does there attack. Therefore, the first Letters of these Verses shewed, as 'tis probable, the name of Julius Cæsar. But in this Acrostick produced by Constantine, there is no such thing extant. Wherefore 'tis not to be doubted, but Cicero meant an Acrostick different from this, though Sebastianus Cassiodorus thought otherwise, as did likewise several other persons. Besides, what Constantine adds is false; namely, that Cicero rendered this Greek Acrostick concerning Christ, into Latine, and inserted it into his own Books. Valef.

<sup>f</sup> Near the Sibyl's Temple. Here also we must acknowledge the unskilfulness of the Transliterator, who has made use of sipus instead of Idus. For sipus & Idus is no good expression; but it should be Idus & Idus. Valef.

<sup>g</sup> Now from high Heaven springs a new progeny. In the Fuketan Copy, and in the Sheets, I found it written via plaudis. Valef.

And again, in another place of His Bucolics. ΕΒΑΛΕΝ ΤΗΝΑ. 'Tis apparent that it must be made ΕΒΑΛΕΝ, place. And so 'tis in the Fuketan Copy. Further, neither the Fuketan Manuscript, nor the Old Sheets, begin a new chapter here. Valef.

Sicilian Muses, Sing we one Note higher.

What is plainer than this? For He adds,

Last times are come, Cumæa's Prophecy.

Meaning namely Sibylla Cumæa. Nor is he content herewith; but has proceeded farther; as if necessity it self required His Testimony. What says He therefore?

And Time's great Order now again is born. The maid Returns, Saturnian Realms return.

Who therefore is that Virgin which returns? Is it not She, who was full of, and great with child by the Divine Spirit? And what binders, but She who is great with child by the Divine Spirit, should always be a maid, and continue a Virgin? [The wish'd-for King] * shall also return again, and by His coming shall comfort the world. For the Poet adds, words ὁ ἑστέρων βασιλεύς, the wish'd-for King; of whom mention is made in the last Verse * Ἦναι τερψίνων ᾠδῆν, ἄψιν ἑστέρων βασιλῆα.

Nevertheless, in Virgil's Verse there is no such expression as this. But Constantine, as it may be supposed, had altered Virgil's Verses a little; and had designedly expunged Saturn's name, that he might serve his own design. Valef.

<sup>b</sup> To th' infant, chaste Lucina, favouring be, Who ending iron ages, through all lands Shall golden plant: —

If any prints of our old Vice remain'd By Thee they're void, and Fear shall leave the land. in the Fuketan Copy, and in the Sheets. But Turnebus had noted at the margin of his Book, that perhaps it should be written maior. Valef.

<sup>c</sup> Καὶ σὺ καὶ τῶν. This verse is in my judgment to be restored thus;

* Ἀλλὰ τὸ σὺ καὶ τῶν καὶ ἑστέρων ἀλγῶν.

But the verse which precedes this, wants no mending. Yet, in the Fuketan Copy and Turnebus's Book, 'tis written thus,

Τὸ μὲν δὲ ἔρχομαι τὰ μὲν ἔλθωσι πάντα βέλτε. Valef.

Which words we perceive to be spoken plainly, and also obscurely by way of Allegory. For, τὸ μὲν δὲ "to those who make deeper Researches into the Causes, force and meaning of the Verses, [to them I read this say] they give a clear prospect of Christ's Divinity. But, least any one of the Grandees in the Imperial City, might take occasion to accuse the Poet, because he had written [what was] ἔλεος and repugnant to the Laws of his own Country, and a little abridg'd overbrow'd the Opinions concerning the Gods, which had in former times been delivered by their Ancestors; [on this account] he designedly obscures the truth. For he knew, ἡμεῖς Divinity; these words seem necessary to be added ἡμεῖς τὸ μὲν δὲ. In the Fuketan Copy, 'tis written, τὸ μὲν δὲ ἡμεῖς τὸ μὲν δὲ; and so 'tis in Sir Henry Savile's Book. Valef.

<sup>d</sup> Ὀντως τὸ μὲν δὲ. I write, Ὀντως τὸ μὲν δὲ, &c. But, least any one, &c; which is an amendment wholly necessary, and 'tis strange to me, that neither Scaliger, nor any of the other Correctors saw it. For whereas these words, τὸ μὲν δὲ ἡμεῖς τὸ μὲν δὲ, &c. went before; of necessity it must follow here, Ὀντως τὸ μὲν δὲ; &c; that the sense may be complete. For Constantine says that Virgil spoke both plainly, and obscurely. And, that he had obscurely intimated the Divinity and Advent of our Saviour; but, had spoken plainly and openly after the manner of the Heathens, and had named Altars and Temples. The Fuketan Copy confirms our conjecture; wherein 'tis written exactly so, as I had long before guess'd it should be. Valef.

suppose,

of the Greek Translatour, who renders this Verse of Virgil thus, ἀειδὲν τ' ὀψέσθαι δάμνην ὃ καὶ τίμω ἀνέμω. For so this Verse is worded in the excellent Fuketian Copy, and exactly according to Constantine's mind. Farther, as to this whole Eloge of Virgil's, the Christians always affirmed, that it was translated out of the Sibylline Vests, and ought to be understood concerning Christ's Birth: Nor can these words be spoken of any body else, but of Christ.

Hoc duce, si qua maxent sceleris vestigia nostri, Irrita perpetua solvent formidine terras.

Thus, besides Constantine, St. Austin understood these words, in his Epistle to Volusianus, and in his 115 Epistle. In his Epistle to Volusianus, he gives this interpretation of the Affrian Amomum, namely that thereby is meant the Opinion of Pherecydes the Affrian, who was the first that asserted the Immortality of the Soul. But this interpretation of St. Austin can't be born with, in regard Pherecydes was not an Affrian; but, a Syrian, that is, of the Island Syros. Wherefore, Constantine's explanation is to be preferred, who says, that by the name Amomum the Faithful or the Christians are meant; because they are ἀμωμοί, that is without fault. But, that 'tis therefore termed Affrianum, because from the Affrians sprang the first beginning of Faith. For Abraham an Affrian, was the first who believed in God; whence he had the Name of the Father of Believers. Valf.

* Or, Our And whereas he says, that * Amomum shall grow every where; ' he gives the multitude of the Christians that appellation. Which [multitude] like a vast number of branches flourishing with most fragrant flowers, springs from one and the same root. Most Learnedly spoken, O Maro, Thou wisest of Poets! And all the following words are likewise agreeable hereto.

Savil's conjecture, who at the margin of his Book has noted, that perhaps it should be ἀμωμοί. Valf.

As soon as Thou the Hero's praise shalt know
And read Thy Father's Acts,
And unto Virtue's knowledge can'st attain :

By the praises of the Heroes, he means the Works of just Men: and he terms the Constitution of the World and its accurate composure which is to last for ever, the Virtues or Acts of the Father. Perhaps also [he means thereby] the Laws, which the Church, beloved by God, does make use of;

* Or, Following.
† Or, Enlargement. Men (who stand in some middle rank between the Good and Bad,) " to things more sublime, is worthy of admiration also; when, as notwithstanding, [such a life] admits not the Possession of any sudden alteration.

added, which by mistake was omitted in Robert Stephens's Edition; and thus, ἐπὶ τὸ ἀμωμον. For so 'tis written in the Kings Sheers, and in Turnebus's, and Morus's Book. But I am better pleased with that reading, which is propoled from the Books of Scaliger and Bongarsius; which I likewise found in the Fuketian Copy; viz. ἐπὶ τὸ ἀμωμον. For, ἀμωμον is a Verb proper to the Platonick Philosophy, out of which several passages in many places of this Oration are taken. Hence comes the Sensu Anagogico, the Mythick Sense, which occurs frequently in Proclus; and that saying of Plinius, extolled by Synesius, δὲ ἀνέμω τὸ ἐν ἡμῶν θεῶν αἰετὶς τὸ ὡς ἐπὶ θεῶν. Valf.

The Fields shall mellow wax with golden grain.

That is, the Fruit of the Divine Law shall be produced for the use [of men.]

The blushing grape shall hang on Thorns, unset;

Which things were not at all visible in the wicked and depraved life [of men.]

And th' hardned Oaks with dewy honey sweat.

[In which words] he describes the folly and hardned temper of mind, of the Men who then lived. And perhaps he likewise shews, that those who on God's account have been exercised with Labour, shall receive some sweet fruit of their own patient sufferance.

In the Fuketian Copy the reading is, τὸν αἰετὶς τοῦ θεοῦ πόνον ἀποσώζω. I write therefore, τὸν αἰετὶς τοῦ θεοῦ πόνον ἀποσώζω, these who on God's, &c. which emendation is most undoubtedly certain. Constantine explains that Verse of Virgil's;

Es dura quereus sudabant roscida mella.

He says therefore, that by this Verse is meant those who undergo most sore labours for God's cause, or on God's account, shall receive most sweet fruit of their Labours. Valf.

Some steps of ancient fraud shall yet be found:
Thetis to tempt with Ships, and to surround
Cities with Walls, bids Earth in furrows tear.
A second Typhis, a new Argo bear
Choice Heroes: and another War, imply
Again a Great Achilles sent to Troy.

Incomparably well, Thou wisest of Poets! For * Exord. Thou hast * advanced * Poetick Licence as far as, or, as it was becoming. For, it was not Thy design to use to utter Oracles, in regard Thou wert not a * Propheet. I suppose likewise, that the present danger was an hindrance, which danger hung over * their heads, who would go about to confute those like Pite Rites instituted by their Ancestors. As marvellously therefore, and as safely as 'twas possible, He has represented the Truth to those who are able to understand it, whilst he lays the blame upon Towers centiam, and War, which at this very present are really better than visible in the Life of Men; and describes our Christ's Saviour going to the Trojan War. Now, by Troy [He means] the whole World. * For [Christ] who transaged a War against the opposed Forces of wickedness; His Mission into the World being occasioned, sioned partly from the good will and pleasure of his own providence, and partly from the Order of the Supreme Father. But, what says the Poet rendered it after these words?

For Greecian that ἑσέων, which the Latines call Poeticam Licentiam, Poetick Licence; as I remember, it frequently occurs in Themistius. Further, the Old Sheers begin a new Chapter here, from these words, ὅς δ' ἀσφατὸς πόνον. Incomparably well, Thou wisest of Poets! Which in my judgment is better. Here therefore the sweetest chapter is to be placed. Valf.

* Ἐπὶ τὸ ἀμωμον ἀνέμω τὸ ἐν ἡμῶν θεῶν αἰετὶς τὸ ὡς ἐπὶ θεῶν. In the Fuketian Copy and Turnebus's Book, this place is written thus; ἐπὶ τὸ ἀμωμον πόνον τοῦ θεοῦ ἀνέμω τὸ ἐν ἡμῶν θεῶν αἰετὶς τὸ ὡς ἐπὶ θεῶν. But Sir Henry Savil had mended it in his Copy, ἐπὶ τὸ ἀμωμον καὶ τὸ ἀνέμω τὸ ἐν ἡμῶν θεῶν αἰετὶς τὸ ὡς ἐπὶ θεῶν. Valf.

Here when full years shall make Thee perfect Man,

That is, when, after Thou art arrived at Man's Estate, Thou shalt have pluck'd up by the roots those Mischiefs, which infect the Life of Men; and shalt have adorned the whole World with Peace, * Ὁδὺς σου ἀνέμω.

Nor navigable pines shall traffick Ware;
But each part of the World shall all things bear.

be written, ὅς δ' ἐπὶ τὸν πόνον, &c. In the third verse from hence, I read αὐτὸν δ' ἀμωμον: for γὰρ is understood. Valf.

* Nor earth feel harrows, nor the vine the hook; * After this verse, there is one of Virgil's Verses left out, in this quotation of Constantine's, this namely; Robustus quoque jam curvis iuga solvet Arator; that is, Nor shall his Steers the branny Tiller yoke. Besides this, some other verses are left out hereafter, in this quotation.

Nor

Nor wool with various colours shall deceive.
But in the meadows Rams * shall scarlet have;
And changing, sometimes golden fleeces wear.
And feeding Lambs shall native purple bear.—
Attempt great honours, for the time draws near,
Dear Race of God's, great Stock of Jupiter!
Behold! The world shakes on its ponderous axle,
See, Earth, and Heavens immanent, and th' Ocean's (traſts;

How all things at th' approaching Age rejoice!
Oh that my ' Life would laſt fo long, and voyce,
As would ſuffice Thy Actions to rehearſe:
Not Orpheus then ſhould vanquiſh me in Verſe,
Nor Linus, though their Parents preſent be;—
Should Pan ſtrive with me, by Arædis's doom,
Although a God, Pan ſhould be overcome.

A little after, I would rather read ἔγε σὺ μνηστὴρ Διὸς ἐλάττω, in the Imperative. For 'tis a rendition of this Verſe of Virgil's Aſſiæ conſpectu micantem powder mundum. Valeſ.
I ἔγω γὰρ ἔγχετο ἔγω. In Moræus's Book, the Learned man hath mended it, ἔγω γὰρ ἔγχετο. But, neither is the Verſe made good this way. Wherefore, I ſhould rather read ἔγω γὰρ. For theſe words are ſpoke in the Operative Mode. In the following Verſe write words from Moræus's Book. This Amendment admits of no doubt. But, concerning the former we muſt think further. For that place may, I think, be reſtored with leſs trouble, if you alter the puſtation only, in this manner,

Ἰνδὸς μνηστὴρ τὸν Διὸς ἀντιπρὸς ἄλσιν κῆρ ἔστιν ὡς γινέσθαι, ἔγω γὰρ ἔγχετο ἔγω.
ἔστιν ὡς γινέσθαι ἔγω γὰρ ἔγχετο, &c.

Nothing more certain. * ἔγω is put for ἔγω. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is, ἔγω γὰρ ἔγχετο ἔγω ἔγω ἔγω, &c. without the Verſe ἔγω. Further, the Reader is to be acquainted, that all theſe Verſes of Virgil, as well in the Fuketian Copy, as in the Sheets, are not written from the head; but the firſt words only of every Verſe are ſevered (ome little ſpace from the preceding. Which is therefore done, becauſe theſe Verſes are not recited without intermiſſion, but with frequent interlocations of Conſtantine's. Valeſ.

* Or, *Behold, ſays he, the Joy of the * tottering World, and of all the Elements.*

CHAP. XXI.

That 'tis impoſſible for theſe things to be ſpoke concerning a meer Man: and, that unbelievers, by reaſon of their ignorance of the divine Worſhip, know not even whence they have their being.

Some one of their number, whoſe Sentiments have leſs of Prudence in them, will perhaps ſuppoſe, that theſe things are ſpoke concerning the Birth of a Man. * But, what reaſon can there be aſſigned, that upon the Birth of a Son of Man, the Earth ſhould be unſown and unplowed; and, that the Vine ſhould not need the edge of the Plow, nor any other care or cultivation? How can theſe things be thought to be ſpoke concerning the Off-ſpring of a Man?

For Nature is the Handmaid of the Divine Will, and does not execute humane Commands. Beſides, the Joy of [all] the Elements denotes the Advent of God, not the Birth of any Man. And this, namely the Poets praying that the term of his Life might be prolonged, is a certain Evidence of Divine Invocation. For,

'tis our uſage to aſk life and ſafety of God, not of Men. Thus therefore Sibylla Erythraea [ſpeaks] to God. Why, O Lord, ſays She, doſt Thou lay upon Me a neceſſity of Propheſying; and not rather keep Me raiſed on high from the Earth, until the day of Thy Moſt Bleſſed Coming? But Maro adds theſe Verſes alſo, to thoſe we have quoted above.

* Begin Sweet Child, with ſmiles Thy Mother * Ἀρχὴ
(know) ἡδονῶν
Who ten long Months did with thy burthen go.
Sweet Child begin: * cheer'd by no parents look, To's Board no God, & Her Bed no Goddeſs took.

I publiſhed this Verſe in this manner, from conjecture as I ſuppoſe. For in the King's Sheets and the Fuketian Copy, it is written thus, ἄρχῃ μνηστὴρ ἐστὶν αὐτῇ, &c. From which words it was moſt eaſie to reſtore the true reading of this place. Thus therefore I mend it:
Ἀρχῇ μνηστὴρ ἐστὶν αὐτῇ τὸν κρητὶς καλὸν
ἡδονῶν.

That which emendation, there is nothing more certain. Valeſ.
* ἄρχῃ μνηστὴρ ἐστὶν αὐτῇ. Neither Conſtantine, nor the Greek Translator apprehended the true meaning of Virgil's words. For, he underſtood them in this manner: as if Virgil had ſaid that the Parents had not ſmiled on the child; nor, had a God taken him to his Table, nor a Goddeſs to her Bed. Conſtantine ſuppoſed, that that verſe of Virgil.

Incipe, parve puer, cui non riſere parentes, &c. was to be read in one breath, without any diſtinction or ſtop: whereas nevertheless, after the word puer, a point is to be ſet: a thing which even Boys know. Chriſtophorus, becauſe he perceived not this, interpolated Conſtantine's following words, by adding a Negative, againſt the mind of the Author, and contrary to the Authority of all Copies. Farther in the Fuketian Copy the reading is ἡμεῖς αὐτοὺς ἔχοντες; which is truer, if I miſtake not. Indeed, in the Sheets it is ἡμεῖς αὐτοὺς. Valeſ.

For how ſhould his Parents have ſmiled on him?

* For God, who is His Father, is a Power void of * Ὁ ἀπὸ
Quality. And He Himſelf wants all figure, but ἡ ἀσύνθετος.
[exiſts] in the Circumſcription of others; * ἡ ἀσύνθετος.
is endued with an humane Body. Who like- ἡ ἀσύνθετος.
ment to any ἡ ἀσύνθετος.
wiſe is ignorant, that * the Spirit of God is ought to be * unconcern'd in a Marriage Bed? ἡ ἀσύνθετος.

For, what deſire, what * Appetite can ἡ ἀσύνθετος.
there be] in the affection of the chief- ἡ ἀσύνθετος.
eſt Good, whereof all other things are ἡ ἀσύνθετος.
deſirous? What can be wholly com- ἡ ἀσύνθετος.
pact to Wiſdom and Pleaſure? * But, it may be ἡ ἀσύνθετος.
permitted them to ſpeak theſe things, who [ſeign] ἡ ἀσύνθετος.
to themſelves * a certain humane Generation ἡ ἀσύνθετος.
Chriſt: * and who make it not their buſineſs, to ἡ ἀσύνθετος.
cleanſe their mind from every ill ſact and word. Valeſ.

* ἡ ἀσύνθετος. By the Holy Spirit Conſtantine ſeems to mean the Divinity; or the Divine Nature, as we have already remarked in the foregoing chapter. For he explains thoſe words tranſlated out of Virgil, ἡ ἀσύνθετος, which are ſpoke of Chriſt, not concerning the Holy Spirit. Therefore, at this place I choſe to render it the Spirit of God, rather than the Holy Spirit, as Poreſius and Chriſtophorus have done. Valeſ.

* From theſe words it appears, that that miſtake, which we have taken notice of above, was not committed by Conſtantine himſelf, but by the Greek Translator, who miſunderſtood Virgil's laſt Verſe. For Conſtantine himſelf took thoſe Verſes of Virgil in their true ſenſe, as 'tis viſible from hence. For, when he had quoted Virgil's words; (which run thus;

Cui non riſere Parentes,

Nec Deus hunc Menſis, Dea nec digna cubili eſt.) preſently, finding fault with the Verſe as 'twere, he adds theſe words. Now, ſays he, could his Parents ſmile on him, in regard His Father is God, who wants both a body, and figure aſſe. Beſides, how can a Bed and a Table be any way agreeable to God, who, 'tis manifeſt, is wholly void of a Marriage-bed, nor is he affected with the pleaſures of meats. Then he adds theſe words, (whence what I have ſaid, plainly appears, namely that Conſtantine underſtood Virgil's Verſes excellently well;) Verdum illis qui humanam quandam Generationem exponunt, concedamus ut ita loquantur; But, let us permit ſome, who ſeem to ſet forth a certain humane Generation, to ſpeak thus. In which words he excludes Virgil, in regard he was ignorant of Chriſt's Divine Generation. But in the Greek translation, wherein Virgil's Verſes are expounded ill, this period has no coherence with the foregoing words. Valeſ.

* Ὁ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀσύνθετος. I embrace the conjecture of Learned Men, which I likewiſe found noted in Sir Henry Savil's Book; Ὁ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀσύνθετος, &c. and who make it not, &c. Valeſ.

I here

I here appeal to Thee, O Piety! I implore Thy Assistance in reference to those things which are spoken: Thou, who art [nothing else but] the Law of Chastity [and Holiness] the most defensible of all Goods; the School-mistress of a most Holy Hope; the most certain and unfeigned Promise of immortality! Thee I adore, O Piety, and Clemency! To Thee we owe eternal Thanks, for the benefit of thy Cure, which we stood in need of! But, the Generality of Men, void of Thy Assistance, by reason of their innate hatred towards Thee, have an Aversion for God also. Nor do they understand, that the very Cause, as well of their Life and Being, as of all other Persons who are impious, depends upon that Service and Worship, [which is paid] to the Deity. For the whole World, and whatever is contained therein, is His Possession.

gion; but <sup>1</sup> is basely corrupted by an ill punctuation. I read therefore; ἡδύων
τα εἰς αὐτὸν οὐκ ἐκτεταμένῃ, ἐλπίσιν ἐν ἐσθλαῖς οὐκ ἐκτεταταῖς, ἀδυνατοῖς ὑπὸ πονηρῶν ἀνέλεσθαι the most desirable of all Goods, &c. Nothing certainer than this reading, nothing more elegant. Conflantius terms Religion the School-mistress of a most Holy Hope, in regard She teaches us to hope for things Celestial, and to place all our hope in God, not in earthly and frail Goods. In the Fukerian Copy the reading is, ἐλπίσιν οὐκ ἐκτεταταῖς, ἀδυνατοῖς ὑπὸ πονηρῶν ἀνέλεσθαι. There is punctuation in the Sheets. Valet.

the same punctuation in the Sheets. Value.
 Of ia ia ia, we stood in need of. It must questionless be written, oi ia ia, whereby they were healed. For 'tis elegantly said oi ia ia, That is, healed by Thy Remedies.
Value.

<sup>1</sup> Ἐκεῖνε κτήμα. I had rather write, ἐκεῖνε κτήμα, His Work or, his instrument. Valef.

CHAP. XXII.

The Emperor's Thanksgiving, wherein He ascribes His Victories, and all His other Blessings, to Christ; also a Reproof of Maximinus the Tyrant of those times, who by the severity of his Persecution had increased the Glory of the Christian Religion.

INdeed, I my self do ascribe mine own Felicity, and all that I am possess of, to Piety, as to the Cause thereof. Whereto the Event of * Τῶν κατ' εὐχὰς ἀπάντων.

Any one might with good reason guess, that it ought to be written, πάντων κατ' εὐχὰς ἀπαντώντων, But whereas the sense is plain without this Emendation, I think no alteration is to be made here. Vale!

Μεγαλάνης. So the Greeks are wont to call Rome, as may be made appear by innumerable instances. Thus Tatianus terms it, in his Oration adversus Græcos, where he speaks concerning the worship of Jupiter Latiaris; and also Porphyry, in his Book de abstinentiâ. Moreover Eusebius, in his Tricennal Oration concerning Constantine's praises, terms Rome thus, as we shall see there. Psalm.

look upon these things as unfit to be mentioned now; by Me especially, who am directing My Discourse to Thee, [O Piety!] and who do ε Πῶς αὖ ἀφραῖς. I had rather write, ὅπως αὖ ἀφραῖς &c.

* Or, Cast and good.

Nevertheless, I will say something, which shall neither appear foul nor indecent. A fierce and implacable War, abounding with [instances of] Madness and Cruelty, was by the Tyrants [waged,] both against Thee, O Piety!

and again! all Thy moſt Holy Churches. Nor, were there ſome Perſons wanting in the City Rome, who rejoyced in ſuch great and publick Miſchiefs. A Field was likewiſe pitch'd in order to an Engagement. But Thou cameſt forth, and diſvoluntarily deliver up Thyſelf, being ſupported by a Faith in God. <sup>a</sup> Then the Cruelty of the impious, having, like ſome furious fire, without intermiſſion preyed upon all things which it met with, procured for Thee an admirable, and ever-to-be-celebrated Glory. For, on this account [it was,] that a Generation [of Thee] ſeiz'd the very Spectator themſelves. Thou might'ſt indeed have ſeen the Execu-tioniers and Tormentors, wearied out with torturing the <sup>a</sup> Bodies of the Pious, and jorely perplext at the La-mors and Trouble they met with: but the Bonds [you might have beheld] broken;

 and the Engines of Torture loosed; and the fires which were brought, extinguished but, [on the contrary,] the Consistency and Boldness [of the Pious] not in the least weakened or abated.
 What advantage therefore hath Thou made, by attempting these things, O Thou weakdest of Men? What was the occasion of this thy outrageous Fury; Thou wilt per adventure say, that [thou performest these things in honour to the Gods. What Gods were those? Or what Notion conceivest thou in thy mind, that is worthy of the Divine Nature? Diddst Thou suppose the Gods to be angry in the same manner with Thee? If therefore they were such, it was expedient to wonder at their Resolution, rather than obey their impudent Commands, whereby they * ordered * just Men to be unjustly slain.

erved before, that many ill corrections are found in that Copy. Valer.
 b Τα νυν ευσεβεισ μαρτυροι. After these words Chrysostomus, Se- liger, and others add in eisδν, you might have seen : as I also found it in Moran's Book, and in the Fulgentian Copy. But there is no need of adding these words here, in regard the term Seu is the whereto all these words, ought to be referred. Nevertheless, I do acknowledge, that the discourse would be far more periphrastic, if you should add these words. Valer.

<sup>i</sup> He speaks to one of the persecutors; Maximianus namely, as in the Title of this Chapter. For he persecuted the Christians with more of Cruelty, and Malice, than the others. Vale!

<sup>d</sup> Καὶ μέντοι τῆς ἀποστολῆς.
Before these words there is an Affix placed in Robert Stephen's Edition, whereby 'tis shown, that some words are wanting here in the Manuscript
Copies. But the Geneva- Edition has taken out those Affixes which had been diligently noted by Robert Stephens, especially in the end of this book.
Further some words are wanting here, which I made good thus, οὐκ ἔστι μέντοι τὰς ἀποστολῆς σε βιβλίου; But against this,
&c. For, he speaks to the Corinthian Religion. Kalef

• He means the field, where in the Martyrs underwent their last-punishment. For, it was the usage, as amongst the Quacians, as Romans, that Criminals should have punishments inflicted on them, without the Gates; as I have at large remarked in my notes on Amm. Marcellinus. Whence it was, that Offenders led to punishment, were said ad campum duci, to be led to the field. So Saint Anselm in his first Book against the Epistle of Parmenianus, chap. 8. Vulgi.

† Ἐπιθυμῶν ἐκείνῳ ἑμπεδοκλήῃ. It must be, overlaid ἑμπεδοκλήῃ, &c. That is, and drift voluntarily deliver up thyself, being supported, &c. Constantine alludes to the courage of the Martyrs, who voluntarily offered themselves to the Judge, and ran to death on their own way without compulsion. Indeed, ἐπιθυμῶν is not said, but concerning Him, who does any thing voluntarily; as for instance, concerning Christ, who of his own accord delivered Himself for the Salvation of Mankind. Christophorus therefore has rendered this place ill, thus, εὐψυχῶν ἀποφασίῃ, thou hast offered thyself against the adversaries. Our conjecture is confirmed by the Εὐαγγέλιον Ἁγίου, wherein it is written, Ἐκείνῳ ὁσὺν ὁσὺν ἑμπεδοκλήῃ, &c.

§ 2. On the Justice of the sentence, the cruelty of unrepentant sinners.—In mine own judgment I have happily found out the emendation of this place. For, whereas before these words, the term there occurs, the two last Letters of this word being repeated; I have restored the place thus: § 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100. 101. 102. 103. 104. 105. 106. 107. 108. 109. 110. 111. 112. 113. 114. 115. 116. 117. 118. 119. 120. 121. 122. 123. 124. 125. 126. 127. 128. 129. 130. 131. 132. 133. 134. 135. 136. 137. 138. 139. 140. 141. 142. 143. 144. 145. 146. 147. 148. 149. 150. 151. 152. 153. 154. 155. 156. 157. 158. 159. 160. 161. 162. 163. 164. 165. 166. 167. 168. 169. 170. 171. 172. 173. 174. 175. 176. 177. 178. 179. 180. 181. 182. 183. 184. 185. 186. 187. 188. 189. 190. 191. 192. 193. 194. 195. 196. 197. 198. 199. 200. 201. 202. 203. 204. 205. 206. 207. 208. 209. 210. 211. 212. 213. 214. 215. 216. 217. 218. 219. 220. 221. 222. 223. 224. 225. 226. 227. 228. 229. 230. 231. 232. 233. 234. 235. 236. 237. 238. 239. 240. 241. 242. 243. 244. 245. 246. 247. 248. 249. 250. 251. 252. 253. 254. 255. 256. 257. 258. 259. 260. 261. 262. 263. 264. 265. 266. 267. 268. 269. 270. 271. 272. 273. 274. 275. 276. 277. 278. 279. 280. 281. 282. 283. 284. 285. 286. 287. 288. 289. 290. 291. 292. 293. 294. 295. 296. 297. 298. 299. 300. 301. 302. 303. 304. 305. 306. 307. 308. 309. 310. 311. 312. 313. 314. 315. 316. 317. 318. 319. 320. 321. 322. 323. 324. 325. 326. 327. 328. 329. 330. 331. 332. 333. 334. 335. 336. 337. 338. 339. 340. 341. 342. 343. 344. 345. 346. 347. 348. 349. 350. 351. 352. 353. 354. 355. 356. 357. 358. 359. 360. 361. 362. 363. 364. 365. 366. 367. 368. 369. 370. 371. 372. 373. 374. 375. 376. 377. 378. 379. 380. 381. 382. 383. 384. 385. 386. 387. 388. 389. 390. 391. 392. 393. 394. 395. 396. 397. 398. 399. 400. 401. 402. 403. 404. 405. 406. 407. 408. 409. 410. 411. 412. 413. 414. 415. 416. 417. 418. 419. 420. 421. 422. 423. 424. 425. 426. 427. 428. 429. 430. 431. 432. 433. 434. 435. 436. 437. 438. 439. 440. 441. 442. 443. 444. 445. 446. 447. 448. 449. 450. 451. 452. 453. 454. 455. 456. 457. 458. 459. 460. 461. 462. 463. 464. 465. 466. 467. 468. 469. 470. 471. 472. 473. 474. 475. 476. 477. 478. 479. 480. 481. 482. 483. 484. 485. 486. 487. 488. 489. 490. 491. 492. 493. 494. 495. 496. 497. 498. 499. 500. 501. 502. 503. 504. 505. 506. 507. 508. 509. 510. 511. 512. 513. 514. 515. 516. 517. 518. 519. 520. 521. 522. 523. 524. 525. 526. 527. 528. 529. 530. 531. 532. 533. 534. 535. 536. 537. 538. 539. 540. 541. 542. 543. 544. 545. 546. 547. 548. 549. 550. 551. 552. 553. 554. 555. 556. 557. 558. 559. 560. 561. 562. 563. 564. 565. 566. 567. 568. 569. 570. 571. 572. 573. 574. 575. 576. 577. 578. 579. 580. 581. 582. 583. 584. 585. 586. 587. 588. 589. 590. 591. 592. 593. 594. 595. 596. 597. 598. 599. 600. 601. 602. 603. 604. 605. 606. 607. 608. 609. 610. 611. 612. 613. 614. 615. 616. 617. 618. 619. 620. 621. 622. 623. 624. 625. 626. 627. 628. 629. 630. 631. 632. 633. 634. 635. 636. 637. 638. 639. 640. 641. 642. 643. 644. 645. 646. 647. 648. 649. 650. 651. 652. 653. 654. 655. 656. 657. 658. 659. 660. 661. 662. 663. 664. 665. 666. 667. 668. 669. 670. 671. 672. 673. 674. 675. 676. 677. 678. 679. 680. 681. 682. 683. 684. 685. 686. 687. 688. 689. 690. 691. 692. 693. 694. 695. 696. 697. 698. 699. 700. 701. 702. 703. 704. 705. 706. 707. 708. 709. 710. 711. 712. 713. 714. 715. 716. 717. 718. 719. 720. 721. 722. 723. 724. 725. 726. 727. 728. 729. 730. 731. 732. 733. 734. 735. 736. 737. 738. 739. 740. 741. 742. 743. 744. 745. 746. 747. 748. 749. 750. 751. 752. 753. 754. 755. 756. 757. 758. 759. 760. 761. 762. 763. 764. 765. 766. 767. 768. 769. 770. 771. 772. 773. 774. 775. 776. 777. 778. 779. 780. 781. 782. 783. 784. 785. 786. 787. 788. 789. 790. 791. 792. 793. 794. 795. 796. 797. 798. 799. 800. 801. 802. 803. 804. 805. 806. 807. 808. 809. 810. 811. 812. 813. 814. 815. 816. 817. 818. 819. 820. 821. 822. 823. 824

After these words Chrysostomus, Steu might have seen; as I also found in the Fuketian Copy. But there is no Steu in regard the term Steu before, it is to be referred. Nevertheless, I do think it would be far more perspicuous, if Steu were used.

Steu is a verb; Maximianus namely, as Steu for he persecuted the Christians with the others. Valef.

In the reading, I think, ought to be Steu in the word Steu. Valef.

Rur.

But, Thou wilt perhaps affirm, [that these things were done by Thee,] on account of the institutions and establishments of Thy Ancestours, and by reason of the Opinion of Men. I pardon Thee. For those institutions are exactly like to the Actions done by Thee, and [flow from] one and the same [Fountain of] ignorance. Thou thoughtest perhaps, that thee was some excellent power and virtue in Images made in the shape of a Man, by Workmen and Artificers. Wherefore, Thou paidst a worship to them; making it Thy whole business, that they should not at any time be polluted with filth; those Great and Eminent Gods, forsooth! standing in need of humane Care.

1. Flavus need of humane Care. The last word must be blotted out, in adding which, Christophorus, Scalliger, and Grueter did ill. I found the same term added likewise, in the Engelstein and Morcan Copies. But it is not at all necessary; only, alter the verb perhibere, or polluere with scire, a Semecum must be placed. And thus Portius understood this place; who has indeed rendered these words more happily than Christophorus, in this manner. Omnia illa Cura sunt, Omne studium sordidum opprobrum. Ita Magni primarique Dii humanis specie sustinebant; sicut diligentiam requirebant. And to Mosellum alio. Valf.

CHAP. XXIII.

Concerning the Polity of the Christians: and, that the Deity rejoices in those who lead Vertuous lives: and, that we ought to expect a Judgment, and a Retribution.

Compare Our Religion with Your [Rites.] Is there not amongst Us a genuine Concord, and a lasting Humanity and Goodness of Nature? Is there not amongst Us such a Reprehension for a fault, as may produce amendment, not ruin? <sup>a</sup> And a cure, which [may bring forth] Safety, not Cruelty? Is there not amongst Us, a <sup>b</sup> sincere Faith also, in the first place towards God; and then, towards the Natural Community of Men? Do not We exercise a Compassion towards those, against whom Fortune has waged a War? Is there not an honest, plain and sincere life, and such as does not cover wickedness with [the mask of] any subtil fraud; and a knowledge of him that is truly God, and of his Monarchy? This is true Piety; this is a Religion that is sincere, and wholly uncorrupt. This is the most prudent course of life; and they who have embraced it, tend directly to an eternal life, making their passage through some splendid High way as were. For no person, who enters upon such a course of life, and who purifies his mind from [all pollution of] his Body, does wholly die: but he must be said to perform the Office appointed him by God, rather than to die. For he who has confessed God, <sup>c</sup> does not grieve place, either to Contumelie, or Rage.

It appears from the following words, that instead of misg, faith, it should be ḥesed or agape, Love. For Love is in the first place towards God, then towards our Neighbour. But Faith is not but in the one and only God. Therefore misg can't in any wife be agreeable here. Believers, in regard he treats at this place concerning Repentation; on that account Charity or Love is a fitting term. For a kind rebuke begets Charity. But, 'tis better to read here, ḥe misg alidnek me, as I have did already. And fo Miscellus read, as it appears from his Version. Faith.

<sup>c</sup>Ὁν πῖνον ἀνέστησαν ὄφιοι. What the import of this term ὄφιοι is, we have observed in the foregoing Books of Constantine's Life: (See Book 1. Chap. 27. note (b.) and Book 2. Chap. 52. note (a.)) For Trasilous have in no wise hit the meaning, of this term; which nevertheless, was easie to have been done here. Chrysostom renders it thus. Quia deum ingenue confiteor, non consumeliam, non iracundia sponte succumbam. From which words, there is no body but would extract this sense, that he who confesses God, is not angry, is not Consumeliam. But, the meaning of the Greek words is far different; namely, that he who confesses the Name of Christ before the Judge, does not yield to the Reproach and fury of the persecutors. Vals.

But, courageously enduring necessity, has the Trial of his sufferance as his <sup>a</sup> Viaticum, in order to his procuring himself the Divine Clemency. <sup>a</sup> Nor is it to be doubted, but the Deity gives a kind reception to * Men endowed with Vertue. For it would be most absurd, that as well * Persons in great power, as Men of an inferior Rank, should show themselves grateful to those, and should compensate their favours, by whom they are either revered, or have kindnesses shown them: but, that he who is above all, and who is the Ruler over all, and is the Chiefest good it self, should be negligent in making a Retribution. <sup>a</sup> Who does account us thoroughout all Our Lives, and is present with us, as often as we do any good. And forthwith commends and rewards Our Fortitude and * Obedience: but defers the complement and perfection [of that Reward till another ended time.] For, the whole Account of Our lives shall then be cast up. And if all things be found well and right, the Reward of an Eternal life shall follow: but, a condign punishment shall be inflicted on the wicked.

shall be inflicted on the wicked. Marcellinus expresses, Book 29. pag. 392. Cæsar Dictator aiebat, mirum esse frustumznum senectus, recordantem crudelitatis. Where he what I have long since remarked, at pag. 389. of my notes. I have rendered it Pitaticum, Voyage-Provision, or, all things necessary for a journey. Petrus Musculus rendered it untidily, in this manner: tolerantem experientiam compendii vice habet ad consequendum Dei Benevolentiam. He has his Suffrance, in place of an advantage, in order to his obtaining Gods favour. Valsef.

Ὁὐδὲ β' ἀμφέβηλον. In Moræus's Book, the Learned Man had set these words at the margin; ἀμφέβηλον ἐκ τῆς ποσειδῆας; that is, a passage of Plato's taken out of his Common Wealth, B. 10. Indeed, in that Book, Plato disputes concerning those Rewards, which are given, by God to just Men, both in this life, and after death. But the argument whereby Constantine proves that, occurs not in Plato; at least I don't know that it does. Vale!

[illegible]

For, 'tis referred to τὸν ὃ ὑπερ πάντας, He who is above all, that is the Supreme God. Whom though he has termed τὸ ἀγαθὸν αὐτὸν, the Good it self; yet, ἐς in the Masculine Gender, ought to follow. Valef.

to Κυβερνησις. ἡγεμονία renders it Propensum Voluntatem, ready will. Ἀδελφότης translates it Benevolentiam, Benevolence. I chose to render it obedientiam, obedience. For, this is the import of the Verb εὐδοκῆσαι, morem gerere, obsequi Voluntati Divine, to follow, to obey the Divine Will. Ἐυδοκῆσαι therefore, to render it exactly, is alacrescentia, a willingness to please. In which sense 'tis taken in Saint Luke, in that Anthem of the Angels, after our Lord's Birth; οὐδὲν ἄλλοις εὐδοκῆσαι. This term occurs frequently, in both Testaments, as others have already observed. In the Fukettian Copy, 'tis, εὐδοκῆσαι. ἡγεμονία.

CHAP. XXIV.

Concerning Decius, Valerianus, and Aurelianus, who ended their lives<sup>a</sup> miserably, because of their Persecution of the Church.

<sup>a</sup> In the very Title of the chapter there is a fault, but such a one as may easily be mended. For, instead of ἀδίκως, it must be written ἀδίκῃ, miserably; as 'tis in the Fulgentian Copy, and the Kings Sheets. Valef.

I Ask Thee now, Decius! who heretofore didst insult over the Labours of the Just; who basest the Church; and didst inflict punishments on those who had lived holily: what dost Thou now do, after this life? With what, and how afflictive Miseries art Thou now prest? Indeed, that interval of time, which was between Thy Life and Death, has sufficiently demonstrated<sup>a</sup> Thine Infelicity: when, having been overthrown with Thy whole army in the Scythick Fields, Thou didst expose the Roman Empire, so highly celebrated in all places, to the contempt and scorn of the † Goths. Thou also, Valerian! After Thou hadst declared the same Bloodiness and Cruelty towards God's Servants, hast made a manifest discovery of God's Holy and Just Judgment; being taken Prisoner by the Enemy, and carried up and down in Bonds, drest in thy purple, and thine other Imperial Attire; but as length, by the order of Sapor King of the But in the Persians, Thy skin was pull'd off, and preserved in Sheets 'tis, from corruption by salt, whereby Thou wert made an Eternal Trophy of Thine own Calamity. Valef.

And Thou Aurelian! The chief promoter of all impieties, by how manifest a Stroke of Divine Vengeance, 'tis his† raging with bloody Thru rancor nest thorow Thracia, wert Thou slain in the midst of the High-way, and filldest the Tracks of the publick Road with Thine impious Blood?

The Geneva mss did ill in inserting the particle εἰ, from the Books of Scaliger, Bongarsius, and Gruet; as they tell us, that particle I likewise found added in Moræus's Copy. But, whereas that conjunction does disturb the sense, and occurs not, either in the King's Sheets, or in Stephen's Edition; I am of opinion, that 'tis to be removed. Yet the Fulgentian Copy retaineth it. Valef.

CHAP. XXV.

Concerning Dioclesian, who with infamy resigned the Empire; and, by reason of his persecuting the Church, was stricken with Thunder.

BUT Dioclesian, after that Bloody Cruelty of his Persecution, being condemned by a sentence which be pronounc'd against himself; as be- cause of the harm be received by the loss of his wits, clelian re- was punished by being shut up in one despicable House.

<sup>a</sup> For what reason Dioclesian was punished by being shut up in one despicable House. Some tell us, that Dioclesian (in regard he was a Curious Searcher into things future, when he had found by the Answers of the Soothsayers, that most fore Calamities hung over the Roman State;) voluntarily relinquish'd the Empire. This is attested by Aurelius Victor. Others write, that Dioclesian being grown old, when he perceived himself to be less fit for the management of the Government, both by reason of his age, and on account of his unhealthiness; took this Resolution. Thus Eusebius, a most faithful, and most elegant Writer. The same is recorded by that unquenchable Author, in the Panegyrick which he spoke to Maximianus Hercules and Constantine. Sed tamen, says he, necquæquam fuit fuerit, cum principem quem annis egeremus, et valens desisteret, receperit eam. It variis quo ad hoc factis, integre folsuque vires. &c. There are those who write, that Dioclesian, when he saw the Christians could not be overcome by him; by reason of grief and impatience, resigned the Empire; as we may read in Zonaras. But Constantine does affirm in express words here, the Dioclesian voluntarily removed himself from the Empire, on account of the loss of his wits. And who is he, that dars contradict Constantine's Testimony, in regard he had lived in Dioclesian's Court; nor could any of these affairs be unknown to him. Eusebius relates the same also, in the Eighth Book of his History. But, there are many things, which may make us doubt concerning this matter. For first, although Dioclesian survived his Resignation of the Empire a long while, yet he never gave any indication of a distracted mind. Even that very one saying of his, (which was his answer to Herculus and Galerius, inviting him to re-assume the Empire,) how much of wisdom is there in it? Utinam Salomæ posses visere olera nostris manibus sacra, I wish you could come to see the Father's farm with our hands at Salomæ. Therefore, in that Retirement he was always honoured by all the Emperours of that time, who paid a dutiful observance to him, as to a Father. Hear Eumenius in the Panegyrick which he spoke to Constantine. Atenim divinum illum virum, &c. But, that Divine Person, who was the first that was sponsor of and resigned the Empire, repents not of his own Resolution and Deed. Happy and truly Blessed Man, to whom now a private Person, your discontents, who are so great Princes, do pay an honour! Would Dioclesian have been so highly honoured by four Emperours that were Augusti, had his Intellectuals been depraved? Or, would Eumenius have termed him a Divine Person, on this account especially, because he was the first that had resigned the Empire, if that had been done by him, by reason of his madness and dotage? Lastly, Dioclesian had taken a Resolution of resigning the Empire, long before the Persecution; then namely, when he triumphed over the Persians and other Barbarous Nations, at Rome. For there, in the Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, he required an Oath of his Colleague Herculus, that they should both resign the Empire on one and the same day. This Eumenius informs us of, in the Panegyrick now cited. Hunc ergo illum qui, &c. This Man therefore was ashamed to imitate this Person, who had been made a Brother (in the Empire) by him; it repented this Man, that the other had sworn in the Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus. Now, Dioclesian triumphed at Rome, with his Colleague Herculus, on the eighteenth year of his Empire, as Jerome relates in the Chronicon; that is, on the year before the Persecution was raised against the Christians. 'Tis certain, the Author of the Panegyrick spoken to Maximianus and Constantine does attest, that that Resolution was taken by Dioclesian, and communicated to Herculus, long before his Resignation: his words are these. Tale est Imp. quod omnibus nobis incasso gemitu mentis in sacra Poliusis: non quidem in Regni negligentia, aut Laboris fuga, aut desidia cupiditate ductus, sed consilio, ut res esset, inter vos pacis constantia, &c. Which things being so, how can that which Constantine says, it stand good, that Dioclesian ran mad after the Persecution of the Christians, and for that reason voluntarily removed himself from the Empire? Indeed, I might be easily induced to believe, that Dioclesian was seized with a sickness, after the Persecution was begun, and was for some time distracted; especially, in regard to Constantine and Eusebius do constantly attest that. For this usually happens to sick People, and specially to melancholick Persons; of which fort Dioclesian was, as may be guessed from his Copy. But, I deny, that for this reason he resigned the Empire. Further, in the Fulgentian and Turneb's Copies, the reading of this whole place runs thus. Εὐαὐτὸς καὶ ἀποστρέφεται, & ἀπὸ τῆς ἐκ τῆς περὶ τὸν βασιλεὺς ἡμῶν διαπραγμάτευσιν ἀποστρέφεται, ὡς δὲ τὸ πρῶτον ἐκ τῆς χειρὸς τοῦ βασιλέως τῆς ἐκείνου. Βίαι, ἡ δὲ τῆς αὐτοῦ αὐτοῦ τῶν αὐτῶν ἀποστρέφεται, &c. Valef.

What was the advantage therefore which he got, by his raising a War against our God? This, I think; that he might finish the remaining part of his Life, in a continual fear of being Thunder-struck. The City Nicomedia does attest this: nor, are they silent, who saw the thing with their own eyes; of which number I my self am one. The Palace was destroyed, and Dioclesian's own Room; Thunder, and a fire. Or, of Heaven ruining and devouring it. House.

He treated the Palace of Nicomedia which was consumed by an accidental fire, a little after the Persecution against the Christians was raised by Dioclesian. And the Emperours then first, fellows, and the rest of the Heathens, blamed the Christians as the Authors of this fire, and therefore raged against them with severe punishments: as our Eusebius relates in the English Book of his Ecclesiastical History, Chap. 6. about the close of the Chapter. But Constantine himself was present, when those things were done at Nicomedia. And Dioclesian, although by his clap of Thunder, seems till his death to have continued in Constantine, always fearing he should be struck with Thunder. 'Tis certain, this Narrative of Constantine's seems to intimate this. From hence it appears, how egregiously mistaken Christopherson is, in translating the Title of this Chapter. For he thought, that Dioclesian's Palace had been burnt, after his resignation of the Empire: whereas, nevertheless that happened whilst Dioclesian as yet held the Empire, and made his Residence in the Palace of Nicomedia. Valf.

Indeed, the event of those things had been predicted by prudent Persons. For they were not silent, nor did they conceal their lamentation of affairs, which were managed with so much of indignity: but with freedom spake their minds openly and in publick, and discoursed one with another [in this manner.] What outrageous fury is this? How extravagant is this arrogance of power, that Men should dare to wage a War against God; and should resolve to insult over and reproach the most holy and most righteous Religion; and [should not scruple] to Plot and Contrive the Ruine of so numerous a multitude, and of such just Men, when there is not the least fault in them?

Ο Ζηλωτής διδοικαίαν. The last word is wanting in the Fuketian Copy. Valf.

That care which the Army bore towards their own Citizens! The Breasts of their own Countrymen were wounded by those, who had never seen the backs of their Enemies in a fight. But at length, Divine Providence insisted on them the punishment of such impious facts; and yet, without damage to the Empire. 'Tis certain, the slaughters committed were so numerous, that had they been made [in Battels] against the Barbarians, they might have been sufficient to procure us a perpetual Peace. Valf.

Ο Τόπος γὰρ ἐξήντιστο ἐργαζοί. This period is removed out of its place. For, it ought to have been placed immediately after the word ἀποκαταστάσεως in this manner: περὶ τὴν ἀποκαταστάσεως τοῦτο γὰρ ἐξήντιστο ἐργαζοί, ὅπου αἱ ἐπὶ βαρβάρων ἐξήντιστο, ἡ δὲ αὐτῶν ἐκείνων ἐκείνων τοῦτο γὰρ ἐργαζοί. That is, who had never seen the backs of their Enemies in a Fight. 'Tis certain, the slaughters committed were so numerous, that had they been made [in Battels] against the Barbarians, they might have been sufficient to procure us a perpetual Peace. But at length, Divine Providence insisted on them the punishment of such impious facts; and yet, without damage to the Empire. For, that whole Army of the forementioned Emperor, &c. What can be clearer than these words, what more plain? Questionless, he must be very obstinate, who shall deny, that these words are thus to be restored. Valf.

Οὐρα αἱ ἐπὶ βαρβάρων ἐξήντιστο. There may be a double meaning on this place. For, either it may be rendered thus, as Porreus has turned it. Sandæ cædis et sanguinis tanta viis suis, ne si barbarorum esset, ad cadus sempiternum sufficeret. Indeed, so great was the abundance of slaughter and blood, that had it been of the Barbarians, it might have sufficed for a perpetual League. Or, else, with Christopherson, it may be translated in this manner. Too placide factis iuxta cades, quot si in barbaros factæ fuissent, factis viis ad æternam pacem constituendam videri possent. So many slaughters were committed, that had as many been made against the Barbarians, they might have seemed enough to have established an Eternal Peace. And this latter sense pleases me best. Lucan's opinion is wholly the same, in the beginning of his Pharsalia, when he says;

Hec quæ civiles hauserunt sanguine dextra!

Yet, instead of ætas, it would be better written, æra. For it follows, icardis id. Valf.

For, that whole Army of the forementioned Emperor, when afterwards it came under the Command of a worthless Person, who by force had seized upon the Empire of the Romans, (a Divine Providence having at length set at us, as 'tis Liberty that great City;) was totally ruined in apparent many and those * Bloody Battels. Moreover, the Cries to God of those that were oppressed; and who ardently desired their Native freedom; the Praises also and Thanksgivings paid to God, after a deliverance from those Mischiefs, when my should Liberty and contrasts with Justice were restored to them; do not these things all manner of ways declare the Providence of God, and his Paternal Love towards Men?

cult to guests. After the Resignation of Dioclesian, Galerius Maximianus received his Forces; part whereof he delivered to Severus Caesar, for the defence of Italy. Some little time after, when Maxentius had seized the Empire of Rome, Galerius sent Severus with his Forces against him. But Maxentius having corrupted Severus's Army by fraud, and with promises, brought them over to his own side. After this, when Galerius had made an Expedition against Maxentius with a greater number of Forces, he also was defeated by a like Revolt of his Soldiers. Thus Dioclesian's Forces came under the Command and Power of Maxentius. Valf.

ἀποκαταστάσεως τὸν τὸν μὴδαν πάλιν. In the Fuketian Copy, and in Turnebus's Book, this place is read thus, ἀποκαταστάσεως τὸν τὸν μὴδαν πάλιν ἐκ τὴν ἐργαζοί. Valf.

Ἰδὲ γὰρ ἐπὶ. It must be ἰδὲ γὰρ αἱ αὐτῶν τὸν τὸν ἐκ τὴν ἐργαζοί &c. and we have rendered it accordingly. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis ἰδὲ γὰρ ἐπὶ αὐτῶν. Valf.

Καὶ τὸν αὐτὸν ἀποκαταστάσεως. Constantine does glory because, having restored the Tyranny of Maxentius, he had restored to the Romans Liberty and Contracts with justice. For, after the slaughter of the Tyrant, whatever things had been done, either by Him or his Judges, were null'd. Therefore, if any one had been preferred to a dignity by him, he was reduced to his former condition, and was forc'd to bring in the Codices [or, Patene] of the dignity he had obtained, to the Lawful Prince. The Sentences also, and Decrees, which the Judges had made in those times, were taken away out of the Publick Scrinia and Offices of Record. Lastly, that whole time of the Tyranny was accounted for nothing, in the same manner as if it had never been. Wherefore, neither wait of advantage for the prescription of a long time. Compacts also and Bargains, and Contracts of what sort soever, which had been made between private Persons during that space of time, were in like manner null'd, and that even with the strictest authority and power. But Lawful Princes; after they had gotten the Victory over Tyrants, and had rescind'd all their Acts; were wont to confirm Bargains, Sales, Donations, Manumissions, and such like Acts of private Persons, by granting an indulgence of a publick constitution: least, if all these should be made null, the quiet and security of private Persons might be disturbed. Heretofore we have information, from the Emperours Laws in the Theodosian Code, B. 15. De usurpandis his que sub Tyrannic gestis sunt. Whence we understand, why Constantine says, that he had restored Contracts to the Romans. In the Fuketian Copy, the reading is ἐνυπόλοιπον, not ἐνυπόλοιπον. To this usage Rufinus seems to allude, in the end of his ninth Book, when he says, Edictis namque frequentibus per omnem locum promissis, non solum tyrannicas adversus Christianos depulatas leges, iuxta civile reddiderat, &c. Valf.

CHAP. XXVI.

That God is the Cause of the Emperor's Piety; and that we ought to seek prosperous Events from God, and to impute them to Him; but must ascribe faults to our own sloth and negligence.

But, when they commend my Labour and Service, which took its rise from the Inspiration of God; do they not plainly avouch, that God is the Author of my Valorous Actions? * Nothing more certain. For, 'tis God's property to do whatever is best: but, 'tis the property of Men, to pay an obedience to God. Farther, this is, I suppose, the best and most excellent Ministry; when a Man, before his taking an affair in hand, makes such provision, that all things be done with the greatest safety. Indeed, all Men know, that the most Holy Ministry of these very hands, is owing to God, together with a pure and most sincere Faith; and, that whatever has been performed for the advantage of Men, by Prayers and Supplications joined with Labour of the hands, hath been happily effected: in regard, so much of utility has redounded to all Persons, both privately and publicly, as each Man could have desired, not only for himself, but for his dearest Relatives.

Christophorus's Version, who renders it, Manuum ad celos sublatarum cultum, the worship of hands lift up to Heaven. I doubt not, but ἀεψία here has the same import with Ministerium, Ministry. For Constantine says, that Men ought to give the Ministry or Service of their own hands to God; and that, with a pure and sincere Faith. He has made use of διακονίαν and ὑποταγήν above, in the same sense. Truly, I can't perceive, how ἔγχεις can be taken in such a sense, as to signify hands lift up to Heaven, or, Prayers. Besides, the following words do most apparently refute Christophorus's Version. For Constantine adds, ἡ εὐχὴ καὶ ἡ προσευχή, &c. and, that whatever has been performed for the advantage of Men, by Prayers and Supplications joined with Labour of the hands, hath been happily effected. For, after Constantine hath said, that Men ought to give the Service of their hands to God, he adds, that not only the hands are to be lent to God, but Prayers also and Supplications are to be used, that the affairs which we have undertaken to perform, may succeed happily. This is what Græcians are wont to say in a common proverb, ἐν ἀμφοῖν ἡ ἔργα καὶ αἱ εὐχὴ; whereby they shewed, that together with prayer the hand was to be put to the work. Farther, when Constantine says, οὗτος ὁ τῶν χειρῶν ἀσπασμός, he speaks concerning himself, in the same manner that Aeneas does in Virgil.

— Si Pergama dextra
Defendi possent, dextra hæc defensa fuissent. Valef.

* Ἦδε γαυρόνους ἀσπασμός. It must be written in one word, ασπασμόνους; which I admire Scaliger and the rest did not perceive. So 'tis certain, the reading is in the Fukeian Copy. Valef.

They have likewise seen Fights, and have been Spectators of a Battle, when Divine Providence bestowed Victory on the People: and they have beheld God favouring and assisting our Prayers. For righteous Prayer is a thing invincible; and no Man ever mist of his design, who besought God holily. For, there is no pretence left for a Repulse; save only where Faith is wavering. For God is always favourably present, and gives a gracious Reception to the probity of Men. Wherefore, sometimes to slip and stumble, is a thing common to Men; but God is in, no wise the Author of blameful Lapses and Mistakes. All Persons therefore, whatever, who are followers of Piety, ought to give thanks to the universal saviour, both for our safety and their own safety, and for the flourishing posture of the publick affairs: and with holy Prayers, and continual Supplications, to render Christ propitious to us, that he would preserve and perpetuate his own Favours. For he is the invincible Assistant and Defender of the Just: He is the best Judge; the Prince of immortality; the Lord of Eternal life.

that there is something of a fault here. And perhaps the reading should be, τὴν εὐχὴν τῶν ἐκείνων ἐπὶ τῇ βασιλείᾳ, bestowed Victory on my Army. Valef.

* Προεξιόντος χόρου. At this place χόρου is made use of to signify pretentum, a pretence or colour; which term in Constantine's Latin Oration being not understood by the Translator, he rendered it in this manner: but, would have done better, had he made use of the word excusans. Christophorus therefore, and Porteus have done ill, in rendering it mundum, the World. Valef.

* Ἀντὶ τῶν ἀσπασμάτων. Errors, or mistakes; as I found it mended in Moreau's Book. And this the Geneva-men have already put us in mind of, from the Books of Scaliger and Bongarsius; whereto agrees the Fukeian Copy. Valef.

* Τὴν ἑαυτῶν ἀσπασμόνους. I am not of the same mind with Scaliger, Bongarsius, and Gruter, who mend this place thus, τὴν ἑαυτῶν ἀσπασμόνους, for our own safety. I had rather read, τὴν ἑαυτῶν ἀσπασμόνους which reading I have followed in my Version. In the Fukeian Copy 'tis written, τὴν τῶν ἑαυτῶν ἀσπασμόνους. But in the Sheets 'tis, τὴν τῶν ἑαυτῶν ἀσπασμόνους. Valef.

Eusebius Pamphilus's
ORATION
IN PRAISE OF THE EMPEROUR
CONSTANTINE, SPOKEN AT HIS Tricennalia.

The <sup>a</sup> Prologue [to the Oration] in Praise of Constantine.

<sup>a</sup> It was heretofore the usage of the Sophists, before their Oration to make a kind of a Flourish as 'twere, in a short Preface; after the manner of Harpers, who before the Song, sing some thing for Tryal sake. This Preface was commonly termed mesæweia. So in Themistius's fifteenth Oration, and in Libanius's Declarations, it often occurs. Hence, mesæweia is by Theodoret taken to signify a Prologue. Valc.

I Come not hither with a Composure of Fables, nor with an Elegancy of Expressions framed to captivate the Ears; that by the Voice of Syrens as 'twere, I might charm [my Hearers:]; nor, that in Golden Cups, namely the beautiful flowers of words beset'd with the most exquisite art of Rhetorick, I might present the delicate potions of pleasure, to persons in Love with those things. But rather, paying an Obedience to [the Precepts of] the Wise, I persuade all men, to spurn and avoid the publick Roads; and entreat them, that they would not herd with The Many.

* Or,
Nemur,
* Or, Dance, * Hop-som,
or, Subtitled.

I am come therefore, that I might begin amongst You a * New Song of the Emperour's Praises. And although numerous persons have attempted to tread the same path with me, yet I will decline the Foot-steps of men, and will go in an untrodden way, into which 'tis impious to enter with unshod feet. Indeed, they who affect Vulgar Discourses, and Expressions worn with the || Witticisms of Lads, and who Court a pleasing and popular Muse; may dash mens Ears with humane Narratives; whilst they submit the Arbitrage [of all things] to pleasure. But such as be initiated in the Mysteries of Universal Wisdom it self, (in regard they are Masters of the knowledge of things Divine and Humane;) accounting the choice of what is better, to be the highest felicity; [such I say] esteem and prefer the God-lov'd Vertues of our Emperour, and his Pious Actions, before his humane accomplishments and Deeds, leaving those His Secondary Excellencies, to be celebrated by inferior persons. For whereas the Emperour's mind is endued with a knowledge of matters Divine and Humane; and whereas those have a reference to God; but these to Men: Let them, * whosoever namely are fit for the performance of this

<sup>b</sup> Ἐπαξόμυϑ: Write ἡ
παξόμυϑ: from the Fuketian Copy. Vallef.

Ἦσαν ἀνδραγαθὸν ἀλκιῶνα.
It must be made πάντα ἀνδραγαθὸν
παντα, the parts, or footprints of men.
For 'tis a noted half-verse of Homer's concerning Bellerophon, which Cicero renders in the very words I have made use of in my Version; namely, Hominum Ve- lignitatis. 'Tis certain, in the Fakelian Copy 'tis plainly written, πάντα ἀνδραγαθὸν ἀλκιῶνα.
Father, Eusebius has defignedly befrisked this Prologue, with many pieces of verses taken out of the Poets, as with flowers; that by this kind of Elegance he might and Om̃ 3 om̃s 3 om̃s 3 om̃s 3. I doubt not but Eusebius wrote, Om̃s 3 om̃s 3 om̃s 3 om̃s 3, whoever namely are fit, &c. The Verbs are, must be understood. But Christopherson the Translator of this Oration, in regard he perceived not these things, has confounded the whole meaning of this place, in his Version. In the Fukettian Copy, these words om̃ 3 are wanting; excellently well. Valef.

Office, suggest things Human to such as stand without the Sacred Rails. For, even these things are both illustrious and transcendent, and of great use to mankind. Yea, all the perfections visible in our Emperor, are eximious; nevertheless, they are far outdone by His Diviner Excellencies. But, let those persons, who are within the Holy Sanctuaries, and who have entered into the Adyta and inebriate Recesses [of the Church;] (after they have shut the doors against profane and impious Ears,) unfold the secret Mysteries of the Emperor, to those men only who are initiated therein. Farther, when they have cleansed their * ΠΑΝ ὅτι ἀποκάλυψε. So also the reading is in the Fukeian Copy; yet I had rather read, πᾶν ὅτι, nevertheless. Valef.

Ears in the Fountains of Piety, and mounted their understanding upon the sublime wing of the mind it self, let them lead a dance about [God Himself] the supreme King, silently learning the Divine [Mysteries.] And let the Oracles, not those which are the products of Divination, or rather of rage and madness; but them that are uttered by the illumination and inspiration of the Divine [Spirit,] * be our Instruſters in the Sacred Rites: [let them give us information] of words useful concerning the Kingdom it self; and concerning the Supreme King; and concerning that Divine Guard which surrounds the Universal Governour: as also, concerning that Copy of Royal Power which is amongst us, drawn from that Original of the Celestial Kingdom; and concerning that other false one, which does counterfeit the Impress thereof: and lastly, concerning those things which do accompany * each sort of Empire. Having therefore learned the Divine Mysteries Royal, Presently, from these [Oracles,] as from some Hierophantæ, we will thus begin our Divine Discourses.

ing in the Fukeian Copy is ἐπαγοίαις, not ἐμπνοίαις. Doublets it is to be written, τῶν πνεύτων, in the Sacred Rites, or Mysteries, which emendation is confirmed by these words which follow presently, οἱ δὲ τὰς διδασκαλίας πνεύτως ἱεροφαντεύμενοι. Having therefore learned the Divine, &c. For Eusebius says, that the Sacred Books, wherein are contained the Divine Oracles, are our Teachers of the Sacred Mysteries, and are as 'twere some Hierophantæ. Valef.

* ἱεροφαντεύμενοι. It has the same import with what he has said above, namely πνεύτως, learning the Divine Mysteries. For ἱεροφαντεύειν signifies the same with πνεύτως. Wherefore ἱεροφαντεύμενοι will import the same with πνεύτως. The Chief-Priests of the Eleusinian Sacra were, at Athens, termed Hierophantæ, who delivered and consigned the Rites of Ceres. Whom, persons initiated did so highly Revere, that they would never call them by their own names. Eusebius tells us this, in His Life of Maximian the Philosopher, in these words: τῶν ἱεροφάντων κατ' ἐκείνου τὸ χρεῖον, ὅτι: ὅν τινα, ἢ καὶ τίνας λέγειν, &c.; But, what his name was, who at that time was Hierophantæ, it is unlawful for me to declare: for, he had initiated me who write these things; and had enrolled me amongst the Eumolpidae. Lucian (or whoever else is the author of it) attests the same in Lexiphanes; where one Megalonymus an Athenian says, that when he had gone out one day to visit the Magistrate, he found the Daduchus [Torch-bearer,] and Hierophantæ, and some other Ministers of the Sacred Rites, who bade one Dintias before the Magistrate, accusing the man because he had called them by their own names; whereas it was unlawful to call them by their own names, after they had been consecrated: ἡλλήματα ἐμύρομεν, ἢν ἀδελφεὶς ἐμὸς. ὃ πῶτον ἐμὸν εἶδος, ἢν ἐμὲ ἱερὸν ἀποδείκνυμι, ἀνέγνωκεν τὴν αἰσὶν, ὃ ἐκείνους ἐμύροσε. Although Lucian says more than Eusebius. For Eusebius has told us, that it was unlawful only for those who had been consecrated at Eleusina, to call that Hierophantæ by his proper name, from whom they had received initiation. But Lucian affirms, that that was forbidden to all persons in general. Hence 'tis, that amongst Libanius's Epistles, some occur with this Title, τῷ ἱεροφάντῃ, to the Hierophantæ. And in the Fifth Book of Symmachus's Epistles, the first three are inscribed, Τῷ εὐμολπίδῃ Hierophantæ. For, in regard both those persons had been initiated at Athens, they look'd upon it as a thing unlawful, to call the Hierophantæ by his own name. Valef.

* Οὐκ ἔστιν ἱεροφάντης. The Geneva-Printers had left out a word, which we have supplied from the Fukeian Manuscript thus, εἰς τὸν ὅριον ἱεροφάντης, we will begin our Divine Discourses, or Mysteries. Valef.

EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS'S [ORATION IN PRAISE OF] THE EMPEROR CONSTANTINE, SPOKEN AT HIS TRICENNALIA.

CHAP. I.

THIS is the Great Emperor's Solemn Festival; wherein We who are the Servants of the Emperor, inspired with the Instructions of Sacred Discourses, do rejoice. He who gives beginning to, and Rules this Our Festival, is the Great Emperor Himself. Him I term The Great Emperor, who is truly Great. Him I mean, (nor will the Emperor, who is here present, be offended thereat, but will rather, together with Us, highly approve of this Our Discourse concerning the Divinity;) * who is beyond the Universe; the Supreme over all; the Highest; the most Immense. The Thrones of whose Empire, are the Celestial Arches; and the Earth, the Footstool of His Feet. Nor can any one perfectly comprehend Him in His mind. For, the Glorious Light which surrounds Him, by the unspeakable Splendor of its Rays, drives off all persons, and binds them from beholding written, His Divinity. || Him the Celestial Hosts do en-any one, &c. Nevertheless, something seems to be wanting here in the Fukeian Copy, the reading is, ἐν τῷ τῷ πνεύματι νοήσαι τὸν θεόν, &c. which it is right. Valef.

* Τὸν ἱεροφάντην. These words are wanting in the Fukeian Copy. Valef.

|| Or, About him the Celestial Hosts make their Rounds. compass:

the Off-springs of Intellectual Light, do pronounce Him their Parent and their God.

* Or, Which were before all Time. Those Ages * unlimited by Time, which were before this Heaven and this World; and besides, infinite other Ages, before all constitution of things visible, do acknowledge one sole and supream Master and Lord. Lastly, He Himself, who is in all, before all, and after all, His only-begotten Son and preëxisting Word; the Great High-Priest of the Great God; ancienter than all Time and all Ages; * devoted and consecrated to the worship of His Father, is the First and Only Person who makes Supplication to Him for the Salvation of all men. Who enjoys a preëminence in the Government of the world; * but possesses an equal share of things, and Glory with His Father, in His Father's Kingdom. For, He is that Light which transcends all things; which dances about the Father, and which by its intervention Separates that Nature which is without a Beginning and without a the Word Generation, from the substance of things begotten. Which Light also, screaming from above, in which from the Deity which wants both beginning and end, * diffuses it self without, and illustrates the Region above heaven, and all things that are within heaven, with the Rays of Wisdom, which are far more Glorious than the splendour of the Sun. This is he, who is the Left. Its Leader of the whole World; the Word of God may also who goes before all, and through all, and is in all things, as well Visible as Invisible. By whom concerning and through whom, Our Emperor dear to God, who, although He in imitation of the Deity, directs and manages was begot- the Film of Government over all things upon the ten before Earth. all ages, is nevertheless continually begotten by the Father. And this is what is said in the Psalms; Thou art My Son, this day have I begotten Thee, &c. Thus the Word is before all things, and after all things, and in all things, not by a succession of time, but by reason of an eternal Generation. For, he is the Origin and End of all things;

who begins and terminates all things which are or which can be. Nevertheless, Eusebius's words may be understood otherwise, if they be construed with the verb ἀποκαταστασθαι. So, the meaning will be this; The Word does appear God the Father before all persons and after all persons. But the former exposition is true. For in this manner Dionysius Alexandrianus in his Epistle to Hieronymus, speaks concerning the Son of God; ὅτι τὸν θεὸν οὐκ ὁρᾷ καὶ οὐκ ὁρᾷ

He who was before all, is in all, and above all. Which passage is quoted in the Seventh Book of the Ecclesiastical History, Chap. 10. Nonianus likewise, in his Book de Trinitate, Chap. 14. says Christ is before all things, and after all things; before all things, as God; but after all things, as Man. Vale.

* τὸν θεὸν οὐκ ὁρᾷ καὶ οὐκ ὁρᾷ. The Translator has rendered it indignatus patrem participes, partaker of His Father's dignity;

whereas it ought to have been rendered, devotus ac dicatus patri participes, devoted, &c. 'Tis an explication like that inscription, which is commonly extant on the Base of Statues which they had dedicated to the Emperours, DEVOTUS NUMINI MAJESTATI.

QUE EJUS. But, their words smell rank of Arrianism. For whoever asserts, that God the Word is devoted to the worship of God the Father, * doubts that person speaks too meanly of the Word, and seems not only not to equal the Word to God the Father, but rather to make Him subject to the Father. Of the same Stamp is that expression which Eusebius adds; that the Word makes supplication to the Father for the Salvation of all men. Which, if it be meant concerning God the Word, as He is the Word, can so wise be born with. But, if it be understood concerning Christ, that is, concerning the Word after He had assumed the humane Nature, it is most true. The same opi-

on is extant in his Second Book against Marcellus Chap. 7. where Eusebius says, that the Son doth worship, adore, and glorify God the Father.

Further, a little before, the reading in the Eusebian Manuscript is, ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ θεοῦ, ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ πατρὸς τοῦ θεοῦ. Vale.

* ὅτι τὸν θεὸν οὐκ ὁρᾷ καὶ οὐκ ὁρᾷ, but, possesses an equal share, &c. I doubt not but Eusebius wrote, ἀδελφεὸς ὡς τὸν θεόν, &c. But, reads the second place in His Father's Kingdom: which explication the publisher being not able to endure, they thought it was to be changed into ἵνα, that to the Son might be made equal to the Father. But, that Eusebius wrote as I have said, is apparent, first from the very Series of his Oration. For, at this place Eusebius distinguishes the Government and Regiment of the Universe, from the Kingdom of God the Father. And in the Government of the Universe, he does indeed say, that the Son holds the principal place: but, that he has the Second place in the Kingdom of His Father: οὐκ ἔστιν ἡμεῖς τὸν θεόν ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ ὡς τὸν θεόν, καταστάς ἀδελφεὸς τοῦ θεοῦ. You see, that τὸν θεόν ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ, that is, the Kingdom of the Universe, is opposed to the Kingdom of God the Father. To οὐκ ἔστιν ἡμεῖς τὸν θεόν ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ ought also to be opposed. Secondly, τὸν θεόν ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ is not Greek. Lastly, Eusebius, in his Book of Demonstr. Evang. does always term the Son, the Second Cause: And, in Book 3. Chap 4. Demonstr. Evang. he says τὸν ἀδελφόν, ἡμεῖς. Vale.

AND That Only-begotten Word of God, CHAP.

Reigns together with his Father, to infinite and endless ages. But this Our Emperour, * always dear to him, being supplied with some Imperial Emanations from above, and fortified with the Surname of a Divine appellation, governs upon earth during many and long periods of years. Further, that Universal * Preserver * Or, Saviour, dear to Him, &c. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. This place is, in my judgment, thus to be restored; ἀρχαῖος ὡς ἀδελφόν ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ πατρὸς τοῦ θεοῦ, &c.

continues to Reign together with His Father, from ages which want a beginning, to infinite and endless ages. But, Our Emperour, dear to Him, &c.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. This is not clearly enough made out, what this Surname of a Divine appellation should be, wherewith Constantine was honoured and signalized. Does Eusebius mean the name of Παῖς, which was given to Constantine, as we have remark'd above? Or rather, the surname of Μαξιμῖος, which is proper to God? The very Name Constantine may also be meant, the import wherof is, He that is. Now the Sacred Scriptures do inform us, that this is the proper Name of God. Lastly, we may here understand the surname of Christianus, Chris- tianus; an appellation which Constantine loved most entirely. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

* Ὁ ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν. I read with the Translator, ἀρχαῖος ὡς τὸν θεόν, for His Kingdom. Vale.

Command and management whereof He is entrusted, should be preferred together with the People on Board. And He is the only Person of all those that ever yet governed the Empire of the Romans, who having now been honoured

* Or, Three periods of Decades.

by God the Supreme King, with * thirty years Reign, celebrates this Festival, not to terrene Spirits, as the usage of the Ancients was, nor to the Apparitions of Dæmons which seduce the unskilful multitude, nor yet to the frauds and * Ἄνερος ἀδελφῶν. The word ἀνερός is corrupted; in place whereof, what term should be substituted, I don't know. Unless the word ἀδελφῶν will please. For he praises Constantine, because he would not admit the Ethnic Orations to his Decennialia. Valef.

† Or, Imperial Horses.

feign'd Narratives of impious Men: but, says his thanks to that God, by whom he has been honoured, being truly sensible of those Blessings which He has conferred on him. Not polluting his † Palace with blood and gore, agreeable to the Rites of the Ancients; nor appearing terrene Dæmons with smoke and fire, and with sacrifices of Brasts wholly consumed by fire on the Altars; but consecrating a most grateful and acceptable sacrifice to the Supreme King Himself. His own Imperial Soul namely, and His Mind which is most worthy of God. For this is the only Sacrifice wherewith God is well pleased: which Our Emperour has learnt to offer, with the purified thoughts of his mind, without either fire or blood: giving confirmation to his piety by those unerring Sentiments and Opinions treasured up in his mind; setting forth the praises of God in lofty and magnifick Orations, and by Imperial Actions emulating the Clemency of the Deity: and wholly devoting himself to God, and, like some great Gift, making a present of himself to Him, the First-fruits of the World, with the Administration whereof he hath been entrusted. This greatest Sacrifice therefore, the Emperour in a due manner Offers, * before all other. But he Sacrifices like a Good Shepherd, not † Ζυλὸν φιλαρμονίας ἀνακρίων. These words ought to be expung'd; which are not set in their due place here, but must be put in lower, in this manner: ἑδωκεν αὐτῷ δίσκον τῶ τῆς ἐστὶν ἡγε- λος and worship of God.

Offering glorious Hecatombs of Firsling-Lambs:

but rather, bringing over the minds of those rational stocks, which are fed by Him, to the knowledge and worship of God.

τῶν ὡς μαλασσέσθαι πρὸς τὴν τῶν θεῶν, πρὸς τὴν βασιλικῆς τῶν καὶ κρείστων. ἑδωκεν φιλαρμονίας ἀνακρίων. αὐτῷ, ὃ ὡς δῖον, &c. giving confirmation to his piety, &c. There is nothing more certain than this Emendation; nor did the Translator read otherwise, as 'tis apparent from his Version. Wherefore this seems to be a mistake of the Printer. This our Emendation was long afterwards confirmed to us by the Fukeian Copy; wherein 'twas exactly written as I had conjectured; say only, that 'tis there worded, ὅς τε ἀνακρίων, and wholly devoting himself, &c. Valef.

* Πρὶς τῶν ἀπάντων. It must be made αὐτῶν τῶν ἀπάντων, or πρὶν, before all other, or, first. Valef.

CHAP. III. BUT God, highly pleased with such a Sacrifice as this, and with delight accepting this Gift offered to Him; praises the * Hierophanta of this venerable and eximious Sacrifice, and makes an addition of † many periods of years † to his Reign; augmenting his favours towards him, in a manner correspondent and proportionate to those Acts of Piety, wherein He is worshipped by the Emperour. And He has permitted him to celebrate all these Festivals with the highest prosperity of the Monarchy; at each period of the Decennialian Felicity, advancing one of his Sons

* See the Prolegomena to this Oration, note (h.)

† Or,

Large.

* Καὶ ἀδελφῶν. These words, as far as ἀδελφῶν, are wanting in the Fukeian Copy, and in the most ancient Palatine Copy, as the Geneva-men have told us. Valef. Valefius takes no notice of this clause, either in the Greek Text of his Edition, or in his Version. In Constantinus's Translation of this Oration (for I have not the Geneva-Edition by me.) it is worded thus; Et velis plura floresci virentique temporum incrementa donata.

For, in the first Decennium of his Empire, he † proclaimed his eldest Son, who bears the same name with his Father, a Partner of the Imperial * Realm: after that, his second Son, who was the next to him in age, at his second Decade: and in like manner his third, at his third Decade, which we now celebrate. † And, whereas his fourth period [of ten years] is now current; in regard the spaces of times do more and more extend themselves, he encreases the Empire by an enquiry into the Copious † Collegaship of his Stock, and by Creations of Cæsars; filling the Oracles of the Divine

* Or, Hecatombs.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

† Or, So.

Propets, which they long since proclaimed in that Constantine manner: And the Saints of the most High shall take the Kingdom. Thus therefore, God Himself the Supreme King confers upon the most Pious Emperour, * an Increase both of years and Children, and renders his Government of the Nations upon Earth, fresh and flourishing, as if it had been but now begun. Constantine's Em-Pire. For Constantine Junior was created Cæsar by his Father, in the Consulate of Gallicanus and Bassus, on the Calends of March, in the year of Christ 317. This was the eleventh year of Constantine's Reign, Wherefore, Constantine Junior was not created Cæsar within the first Decennium, but within the second rather. This place of Eusebius must therefore be favourably interpreted, and ὅτι τῶν πρώτων δεκάδων, must be taken for ἀπὸ τῶν, &c. about, &c. Valef.

* Ἡδὲ ὃ τῆς πεντήκοντα ἀναμνηστικῆς πεντήκοντα. The Emperour Constantine published his Tricennialia in the Consulate of Constantius and Albinus, on the eighth of the Calends of August, which day began the thirtieth year of his Empire. From this day therefore; in the foresaid Persons Consulate, on the year of Christ 335, began the fourth Decennialian period of Constantine's Empire, according to the computation of Eusebius: whereas nevertheless, it ought rather to begin from the following year, namely, his thirty first year. But these things are not wont to be so exactly call up, by Orators. Valef.

* He means Dalmatius and Hannibalianus; the former of whom was declared Cæsar, the other King, by Constantine, in the thirtieth year of his Empire, on the fifteenth of the Calends of October, as it occurs in Iulian's Fasti. Saint Jerome (in the Chronicon) tells us, that Dalmatius was made Cæsar, in Constantine's Tricennialia. Where he has made use of the term Tricennialia, instead of the thirtieth year of his Empire: whereas nevertheless, Tricennialia is properly the first day of his thirtieth year. For the Roman Emperours celebrated their Quinquennialia, Decennialia, and Tricennialia, on the first day of the fifth, tenth, and twentieth year of their Empire. For these words signify nothing else, but the Natiuitas [Birth-day] of the Empire, which was celebrated with the greatest Pomp and Felicity, every recurring fifth and tenth year. Now, this Felicity lasted one or two days, in which time the Ludi Circenses and Theatralæ were exhibited. Therefore, whereas Dalmatius was not created Cæsar on the eighth of the Calends of August, which day began the thirtieth year of Constantine's Empire; Saint Jerome has expressed himself improperly, who has told us, that the Cæsar was created in Constantine's Tricennialia. Our Eusebius does here more truly place that, after his Tricennialia, the fourth Decennialian period of Constantine's Empire now beginning. For, after the celebration of the Tricennialia, they began a new period; as if the thirtieth year, which was but just begun, had been now finished. And, as Lamyers are wont to say, that in dignities, a begun-year is accounted for a complete one: so also they were wont to do, in the Quinquennialia, Decennialia, and the other Festivals of this sort. Thus, the place in Amm. Marcellinus's fourteenth Book it to be understood; where he speaks concerning Constantius's Tricennialia in these words. Arclet hincem annos Constantius, post Theatralæ Ludos atque Circenses ambitiosè editos apparuit die 6. idus Octobris, qui Imperij eius annum tricesimum terminabat, &c. For Amm. Marcellinus has undoubtedly made use of the thirtieth year completed, instead of the thirtieth year begun, on account of that very reason which I have mentioned. Valef.

* Περὶ τῶν ὁρίων. In the Fukeian Copy 'tis ὁρίων ἀποφασίζον. And, a little after, ἔτι δὲ τῶν ὁρίων, &c. This place, which Eusebius cites out of the Divine Prophets, occurs in the seventh Chapter of Daniel. Valef.

And

* That is, And * he himself solemnizes this Festival [in honour] to Him, having made Him the Conqueror over all his Enemies and Adversaries; and exhibiting Him as the Pattern of true Piety, to all Persons upon the Earth. But our Emperor, like the Light of the Sun, illustrates Men, whose habitations are in places most remote from one another, with the glorious † Presence of His Caesars, as † were by some Rays transmitted from himself to the greatest distance. And on † Us who inhabit the East, He hath bestowed a † Shoot truly worthy of himself: another of his Sons [he hath assigned] to another portion of Men: and again, another [He has placed] elsewhere; like so many Lamps and Lights, which derive their Brightness from that Light diffused from Himself. Farther, having joined together for himself, the Four most valiant Caesars, like so many young Horses, * and fixed them under one Set of Harness belonging to the † Imperial Chariot, and fitted them with the Reins of Divine Concord and Unity; He Himself sits above, like the Charioteer, and puts them on; and drives over the whole World, wherever the Sun makes his Visits; and is personally present in all places, and inspects all affairs. Lastly, being adorned with a representation of the Celestial Empire, having His eyes fixed upon Heaven, He directs and manages the affairs of two, nor three, nor yet many. For, to, assert a multitude of Gods, is plainly to affirm, that there is no God at all. One King: and * his Word and Imperial Law, One: which [Law] is not declared by words and syllables; nor is it written in Paper, or cut upon Pillars, that it should be consumed by length of time: but it is the living and self-subsisting

ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ, ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ. In the English Copy, the Comma is wanting, excellently well. For the Son of God is the Word and Law of God the Father, as Eusebius says a little afterwards. Valf.

* ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ. Valesius renders it, Dei sermo, word of God.

† The ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ, ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ. He means Constantius Caesar. For he had at first been sent by his Father, to Govern the Gallia. But afterwards he was removed into the East; as Julian informs us in his first Oration de Laudibus Constantii, and Libanias in his Basilica. Valf.

* Or, To one Yoke of the Imperial Chariot; so Valesius.

* The Translator saw nothing here; he has rendered this place, thus, Perro imperii quadrarium differens imperium, quasi quatuor equis, id est, his, et tribus filiis Caesaribus permissis imperiis. But Eusebius does expressly name four Caesars, whom he compareth to four Horses, who being coupled together in one Yoke, drew the Imperial Chariot; over which Constantine presided, as Charioteer. Now, the four Caesars were, Constantine Junior, Constantius, and Constant, Sons of the Emperor Constantine; and Dalmatius the Son of Dalmatius; concerning whom we have spoken above. Valf.

Mortals, in a conformity to that Original Draught; and is encouraged and strengthened by a resemblance of the Monarchy of God. For, this the [sole] King over all, hath bestowed on the

† The δὲ αὐτῷ, ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ. This place tortured me a long while. But at length I have found out the most undoubted Emendation of it. I write therefore; ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ, ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ, ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ, ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ. That is; For, thus the [sole] King over all, &c. Eusebius repeats the same hereafter, in chap. 4, where he reckons up the Favours, which Mankind hath received from God the Word. Βασιλεὺς τῷ πᾶσι τῷ κόσμῳ ἀποκαταστήσας, ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ, ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ, ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ, ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ. But the Translator, instead of ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ, seems at this place to have read ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ. For thus he renders it. Ipsi enim imperii formam Lex, quae rex omnium est, humanis precibus tribuit. Valf.

† Νόμος τῷ αὐτῷ. These words are spoken concerning the supreme King and God; who really is the Law and Rule of Royal Power. The reading at this place might likewise be ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ, that is to the meaning may be this, that God only is possessor of the Royal Power, in regard be alone rules over all, and holds the Monarchy. Therefore, in the foregoing period, it must, I think, be written in this manner, ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ, ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ, ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ, ὁ ὅς τῳ αὐτῷ. Nor do I think, that Eusebius wrote otherwise. For the sentence is most plain and elegant, if we read thus. And this period will excellently well cohere with the foregoing one. Valf.

† Nature of Men only, † of all those Creatures which are on Earth, [that it should express a likeness of his Divine Monarchy.] For, He is the Law of Imperial power, whereby 'tis Decreed, that all should be subject to the Empire of One. Moreover, Monarchy does far excel all other Constitutions, and Forms of Government whatever. For Polyarchy, which is opposed to it, being a sort of Regiment wherein many Govern with an equality of power and honour, ought rather to be termed Anarchy and Confusion. On which account, there is one God, no also, derived from a Divine Emanation. For, He only is wise, who is also the Sole God: He only is essentially Good: He only is strong and powerful. And He is the Parent of Justice: the Father of Reason and Wisdom; the Fountain of Light and Life; the Dispenser of Truth and Vertue; and lastly, the Author of Empire it self, and of all Dominion and Power.

BUT, Whence has Man the knowledge of CHAP. IV. these matters? Who hath declared these things in the hearing of Mortals? Whence has a Carnal tongue the Liberty, of uttering those matters, which are foreign both to sight and body? Who ever saw the invisible King, and discovered these Excellences in Him? 'Tis true, the Elements, which are joined in an Affinity with Bodies, and the things made up of those Elements, are perceived by the * senses of the Body. But, no Person hath boasted, that with the eyes of the Body He hath ever had a sight of that invisible Kingdom, by which all things are Governed: nor, has mortal Nature ever beheld the Beauty of Wisdom. Who hath seen the Face of Justice, with † eyes of Flesh? Whence † Or, Ter was the Notion of Legal Government and Royal sense of Dominion itself.

† Μήτις ἀποδοῦν ἀρετή. The term ἀρετή must be expunged, or else the word ἀρετή: for one of those words is superfluous. Yet I had rather blot out the latter. For so Eusebius expresses himself hereafter, in chap. 11. Valf.

* Or, Sense

Dominion suggested to men? From whence could Imperial Power [be known] to man; who is made up of flesh and blood? Who hath declared to those on earth, the invisible * Form, which can't be express'd by any figure; and the incorporeal † Essence which wants all external Li- nements? Questionless, there was one Interpreter of these things, the Word of God who pier- ceth thorow all things. Who is the Father and Maker of that rational and intellectual substance which appears to be in men: who being the Only Person that is united to the Divinity of the Fa- ther, watereth his own Sons with his Fathers Effluxes. Hence have all men, Greeks and likewise Barbarians, those natural and self-learn'd Reasonings: hence those Notions of Reason and Wisdom: hence the Seeds of prudence and Inventions of Arts: hence the knowledge of Vertue * and the grateful name of Wis- dom, and the Venerable Love of Philosophick Learning. Hence the knowledge of all that is Good and Commenda- ble: hence the Representation of God Himself formed in the mind, and a Course of Life fitly answering the divine Worship. Hence is man furnished with a Royal Power, and with an invincible Empire over all things that are in the Earth. But, after The Logos, who is the Parent of Rational Creatures, had impress'd upon the mind of Man a Character agreeable to the Image and like- ness of God, and had made Man a Royal Crea- ture; (having conferred this on him only, of all those Creatures which are on Earth, namely that he should have a knowledge, both of Go- verning, and of being Governed; and also, that even from this Life he should * begin to meditate upon, and to fore-learn that promised Hope of the Celestial Kingdom; for the sake of which Kingdom, He Himself came, and, as a Father of His children, disdained not personally to enter into a Converse with Mortals: ) He Himself, cultivating His own Seeds, and renew- ing His heavenly Supplies and Favours, declared to all men, that they should partake of the Celestial Kingdom. And he invit- ed them, and exhort- ed them, that they should be ready for their journey upwards, and should furnish themselves with a Gar- ment besitting their calling. And by an unspeak- able power he fill'd the whole world, which is en- lightened by the Sun's Rayes, with his Preaching; by a likeness of the earthly King- dom, expressing the Kingdom of Heaven. To which he incites and encourages the whole Body of mankind to ha- sten, having shew'd all men this Confidence and good Hope:

OF Whiche hope, Our Emperor most dear CHAP. V. to God, is even in this life made a par- taker; in regard he is adorned by God with innate Vertues, and has received into his mind the Celestial Effluxes derived from that Foun- tain. For he is rational from that Universal Reason: wise, from a communication of that Di- vine Wisdom: good, from a participation of that Goodness. And he is just, by being a partaker of that Justice: and temperate, from that * O- lar, or, riginal of Temperance; and strong, by having Pattern, that Supreme Strength im- parted to him. * He there- fore may most truly be stiled Emperor, who hath fashioned his mind with Royal Vertues, to a likeness of the Celestial Empire. But, that person who is a stranger to these, and who has renounc'd the King of this Universe; neither hath acknow- ledged the Celestial Parent of Souls; nor cloathed himself in a Garb besitting an Emperor; but hath * fill'd his mind with deformity and filthiness; * Or, Hath and instead of Imperial Clemency, hath gotten bound up the Rage of a Savage Beast; instead of an in- his mind genious disposition, the incurable poison of im- in, &c. probity; in place of Prudence, Folly; instead of † O, The Reason and Wisdom, † a want of Reason and Irrational- consideration, the soules of all Vices: from lix.

which, as from a bitter Root, most pernicious Sprouts do spring, namely, a sottish and intemperate Life; A- varice; Murders; Fightings against God; Impieties: he [I say] who is addic'd to all these Vices, though he may seem sometime to Go- vern by Tyrannick Violence, yet cannot deviously and in reality be stiled an Empe- ror. For, how should he represent a likeness of the Monarchical power [of Hea- ven,] who bears a thousand false and adulterate Resem- blances of Demons, impress- on his mind? How should he be a Prince and Lord over all, who hath procur'd for himself so infinite a number of Cruel and hard Masters? A servant to filty pleasure; a servant to an excessive madnes for women; a servant to money gotten by injustice; a servant of anger and rage; a servant of fear and dread; a servant of bloody Demons; and [lastly] a slave to soul-de- stroying Spirits. Therefore, (Truth it self fa- vouring us with its assent and Testimony,) this Emperor, dear to the Supreme God, is the sole Person that can truly be stiled an Emperor: who only is free; or rather, who really is Lord, Who is above the desire of money, and superior to the Love of women: a Vanquisher of plea- sures, even of them which Nature does allow of. Who is not overcome by anger and rage, but has those passions perfectly within his own power. He is really Emperor, and bears a Title answerable to his practise: being truly a

Root, most pernicious Sprouts do spring, namely, a sottish and intemperate Life; A- varice; Murders; Fightings against God; Impieties: he [I say] who is addic'd to all these Vices, though he may seem sometime to Go- vern by Tyrannick Violence, yet cannot deviously and in reality be stiled an Empe- ror. For, how should he represent a likeness of the Monarchical power [of Hea- ven,] who bears a thousand false and adulterate Resem- blances of Demons, impress- on his mind? How should he be a Prince and Lord over all, who hath procur'd for himself so infinite a number of Cruel and hard Masters? A servant to filty pleasure; a servant to an excessive madnes for women; a servant to money gotten by injustice; a servant of anger and rage; a servant of fear and dread; a servant of bloody Demons; and [lastly] a slave to soul-de- stroying Spirits. Therefore, (Truth it self fa- vouring us with its assent and Testimony,) this Emperor, dear to the Supreme God, is the sole Person that can truly be stiled an Emperor: who only is free; or rather, who really is Lord, Who is above the desire of money, and superior to the Love of women: a Vanquisher of plea- sures, even of them which Nature does allow of. Who is not overcome by anger and rage, but has those passions perfectly within his own power. He is really Emperor, and bears a Title answerable to his practise: being truly a

Root, most pernicious Sprouts do spring, namely, a sottish and intemperate Life; A- varice; Murders; Fightings against God; Impieties: he [I say] who is addic'd to all these Vices, though he may seem sometime to Go- Vern by Tyrannick Violence, yet cannot deviously and in reality be stiled an Empe- ror. For, how should he represent a likeness of the Monarchical power [of Hea- ven,] who bears a thousand false and adulterate Resem- blances of Demons, impress- on his mind? How should he be a Prince and Lord over all, who hath procur'd for himself so infinite a number of Cruel and hard Masters? A servant to filty pleasure; a servant to an excessive madnes for women; a servant to money gotten by injustice; a servant of anger and rage; a servant of fear and dread; a servant of bloody Demons; and [lastly] a slave to soul-de- stroying Spirits. Therefore, (Truth it self fa- vouring us with its assent and Testimony,) this Emperor, dear to the Supreme God, is the sole Person that can truly be stiled an Emperor: who only is free; or rather, who really is Lord, Who is above the desire of money, and superior to the Love of women: a Vanquisher of plea- sures, even of them which Nature does allow of. Who is not overcome by anger and rage, but has those passions perfectly within his own power. He is really Emperor, and bears a Title answerable to his practise: being truly a

Root, most pernicious Sprouts do spring, namely, a sottish and intemperate Life; A- varice; Murders; Fightings against God; Impieties: he [I say] who is addic'd to all these Vices, though he may seem sometime to Go- Vern by Tyrannick Violence, yet cannot deviously and in reality be stiled an Empe- ror. For, how should he represent a likeness of the Monarchical power [of Hea- ven,] who bears a thousand false and adulterate Resem- blances of Demons, impress- on his mind? How should he be a Prince and Lord over all, who hath procur'd for himself so infinite a number of Cruel and hard Masters? A servant to filty pleasure; a servant to an excessive madnes for women; a servant to money gotten by injustice; a servant of anger and rage; a servant of fear and dread; a servant of bloody Demons; and [lastly] a slave to soul-de- stroying Spirits. Therefore, (Truth it self fa- vouring us with its assent and Testimony,) this Emperor, dear to the Supreme God, is the sole Person that can truly be stiled an Emperor: who only is free; or rather, who really is Lord, Who is above the desire of money, and superior to the Love of women: a Vanquisher of plea- sures, even of them which Nature does allow of. Who is not overcome by anger and rage, but has those passions perfectly within his own power. He is really Emperor, and bears a Title answerable to his practise: being truly a

Root, most pernicious Sprouts do spring, namely, a sottish and intemperate Life; A- varice; Murders; Fightings against God; Impieties: he [I say] who is addic'd to all these Vices, though he may seem sometime to Go- Vern by Tyrannick Violence, yet cannot deviously and in reality be stiled an Empe- ror. For, how should he represent a likeness of the Monarchical power [of Hea- ven,] who bears a thousand false and adulterate Resem- blances of Demons, impress- on his mind? How should he be a Prince and Lord over all, who hath procur'd for himself so infinite a number of Cruel and hard Masters? A servant to filty pleasure; a servant to an excessive madnes for women; a servant to money gotten by injustice; a servant of anger and rage; a servant of fear and dread; a servant of bloody Demons; and [lastly] a slave to soul-de- stroying Spirits. Therefore, (Truth it self fa- vouring us with its assent and Testimony,) this Emperor, dear to the Supreme God, is the sole Person that can truly be stiled an Emperor: who only is free; or rather, who really is Lord, Who is above the desire of money, and superior to the Love of women: a Vanquisher of plea- sures, even of them which Nature does allow of. Who is not overcome by anger and rage, but has those passions perfectly within his own power. He is really Emperor, and bears a Title answerable to his practise: being truly a

The two last words are wanting in the Fukejian Copy. Valef. Nihilis enim. He alludes to Constantine's pronomen [Fore- name, J. For Constantine had taken to himself the Pronomen of Victor, as I have noted at The Books concerning Constantine's Life. Valef Victor;

* Or, Forms.

† Or, Sub- stance.

|| Out- flowing.

† Καταλι- λει, Con- prehensi- onis.

* Σοφία το φίλον νόμον, ἡ σοφία εὐαγγελίου παλαιῶν ἡμεῶν; which words Valef renders thus, Et nomen Philosophia, & Vene- randus amor Sapientie, and the name of Philosophy, and the Vene- rable Love of Wisdom.

* Περισυλῶν το ἡ ἀρετῶν καὶ τῶν, I think, he written περισυλῶν. For so Eu- sebius expresses himself in chap. 6. where he speaks thus concerning God the Father; ἡ ἀρετῶν καὶ τῶν ἀρετῶν ἀναμνηστικῶν, ἀρετῶν καὶ τῶν ἀρετῶν ἀναμνηστικῶν, ἀρετῶν καὶ τῶν ἀρετῶν ἀναμνηστικῶν. The sentence is in both places the same. For, in the one place he speaks concerning the Celestial Kingdom; in the other, concerning Life eternal: and says, that some assys, proofs, and fore-exercises of each, are granted to men in this life, by the Divine Word. Wherefore I doubt not but Eusebius wrote in this manner; περισυλῶν το ἡ ἀρετῶν καὶ τῶν ἀρετῶν ἀναμνηστικῶν, ἀρετῶν καὶ τῶν ἀρετῶν ἀναμνηστικῶν. And thus the sense is most perspi- cuous. But the word ἀρετῶν, which went before, must be un- derstood. A long while after I had written this Note, having at length procur'd the Fukejian Cop- py, I found my conjecture confir- med by its authority, at least in part. For in that Manuscript the reading is, περισυλῶν το ἡ ἀρετῶν ἀναμνηστικῶν, ἡ ἀρετῶν ἀναμνηστικῶν, and so it is clear; inconspicu- ously well. Valef.

* Το δ' αὖτε λέγειν. I had rather write, το δ' αὖτε. Fur- ther, this whole page of Eusebius's is put together very unfitly, by reason of the too great number of Verbs, which occur in the Im- perfect Tense. Whence 'tis, that his Discourse becomes tickle and unpleasant. Valef.

and made up of prosperous and happy Circles of Years. And having now compleated three Cycles of ten Years, he permits the whole Body of man-* Flavescens se pascit. Any one may see, that it should be written thus, Flavescens pascit or se pascit. For Flavescit says, that these Feasts of the Triquetralia were celebrated, not only by a numerous concourse of the People, but also by the common joy of the whole World. For some Feasts are publick, others private. Some are peculiar to Cities, others to a whole Province. Some are Feasts of the whole Roman World; as the Calends of January, the Birth day of the Emperor, their Quinquagesima, and the like. Indeed, in the Fiskezian Copy I found it written as I had conjectured. Fals.

* Or, Blessings.

[illegible]

† Or, that time which is termed its present, to be comprehended by † Or, one; much less those that are distant. Time future, or Time past. For this latter is not, in regard
 'tis already gone. And the Time future is not yet come.

“ ὁ Μένειν τοῦ παρόντος. The Translator renders it, medium futurum Tempus autem praeteritum; much like Time future, or Time past. Wherein 'tis apparent, that he read μένειν τοῦ παρόντος, excellently well. In the Fulcran Copy 'tis, ὡς τοῦ παρόντος. Vulf. [ [that part of it] termed it Time present, flyeth away whilst we think or speak yea sooner. Nor is it at all possible, that it should be apprehended as Time present for we must of necessity either except things future or contemplate things past. For [The present] slips away, and flies as quick as Thyrist. Thus therefore ento be subjected to the thoughts and accounts of Aton; but disdain to serve them. Nevertheless it refuses nor, to acknowledge " God its own King and Lord; and it carries Him fitting over its Back, priding it self in all those " Gayeties [which it hath received] from Him. But God should be, Σὺ δ' αὐτὸς Θεοῦ; in which manner also the Translators read; and we have rendered it accordingly. Eusebius alludes to a passage of *Saint Paul the Apostle, who calls God Θεοῦ τοῦ ἀληθοῦ, our King of Ages. Valef.*

<sup>a</sup> Tals יָמֵי אֲדָמָה וְחֻמָּה. He means the days, months, and years; and the vicissitudes of seasons, &c. wherewith God had adorned Ævum. Palest.

sitting above, and driving it on, has not bound it fast with a Golden Chain, according to the fiction of the Poet; but, embracing and holding in it with the cords of an unspicable Wisdom,
as 'twere with some Reins, with all imaginable Harmony he has constituted in it, Months and Times, Seasons, and Years, and the interchangeable distances of Nights and Days; and has circumscribed it with various Limits and Measures. For, Evum, of its own nature, is <sup>i</sup> direct or straight, and * reaches to an infinity; and has taken the name of Evum, <sup>k</sup> as 'twere <sup>l</sup> so [that is, always existing;] and is it self like its own parts; or rather, being void both of parts and distance, doth increase, being prolonged into ∞ residue only. But God hath divided it by middle || Segments, and like a right line stretch'd into Longitude, hath severed it by points, and hath included in it a vast multitude.

<sup>i</sup> Transitive &c. I read doubtingly Vasef.
* Is extended, or prolonged.
<sup>k</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>l</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>m</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>n</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>o</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>p</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>q</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>r</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>s</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>t</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>u</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>v</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>w</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>x</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>y</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>z</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>a</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>b</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>c</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>d</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>e</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>f</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>g</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>h</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>i</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>j</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>k</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>l</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>m</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>n</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>o</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>p</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>q</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>r</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>s</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>t</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>u</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>v</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>w</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>x</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>y</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>z</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>a</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>b</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>c</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>d</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>e</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>f</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>g</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>h</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>i</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>j</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>k</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>l</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>m</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>n</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>o</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>p</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>q</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>r</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>s</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>t</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>u</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>v</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>w</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>x</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>y</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>z</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>a</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>b</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>c</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>d</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>e</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>f</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>g</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>h</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>i</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>j</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>k</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>l</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>m</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>n</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>o</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>p</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>q</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>r</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>s</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>t</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>u</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>v</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>w</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>x</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>y</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>z</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>a</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>b</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>c</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>d</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>e</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>f</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>g</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>h</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>i</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>j</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>k</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>l</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>m</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>n</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>o</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>p</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>q</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>r</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>s</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>t</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>u</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>v</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>w</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>x</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>y</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>z</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>a</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>b</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>c</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>d</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>e</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>f</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>g</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>h</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>i</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>j</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>k</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>l</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>m</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>n</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>o</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>p</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>q</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>r</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>s</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>t</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>u</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>v</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>w</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>x</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>y</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>z</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>a</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>b</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>c</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>d</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>e</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>f</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>g</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>h</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>i</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>j</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>k</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>l</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>m</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>n</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>o</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>p</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>q</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>r</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>s</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>t</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>u</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>v</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>w</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>x</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>y</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>z</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>a</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>b</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>c</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>d</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>e</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>f</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>g</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>h</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>i</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>j</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>k</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>l</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>m</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>n</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>o</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>p</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>q</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>r</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>s</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>t</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>u</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>v</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>w</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>x</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>y</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>z</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>a</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>b</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>c</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>d</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>e</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>f</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>g</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>h</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>i</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>j</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>k</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>l</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>m</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>n</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>o</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>p</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>q</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>r</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>s</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>t</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>u</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>v</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>w</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>x</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>y</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>z</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>a</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>b</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>c</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>d</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>e</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>f</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>g</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>h</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>i</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>j</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>k</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>l</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>m</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>n</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>o</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>p</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>q</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>r</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>s</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>t</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>u</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>v</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>w</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>x</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>y</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>z</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>a</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>b</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>c</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>d</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>e</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>f</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>g</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>h</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>i</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>j</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>k</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>l</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>m</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>n</sup> As might
be said.
<sup>o</sup> As

[illegible]

And, whereas it was one, and exactly like an Unite; He bath bound it with a Variety of numbers; and from its being without Form, bath made in it * manifold and various Forms.* Or, A
 For first of all, He framed in it matter void of any Form;
 Form, as some substance fit to receive all Forms.
 In the second Place, He created Quality in matter, by the power of the number Two; making that beautiful, which before was void of all comeliness. Afterwards, by [the help of] the number Three, he framed a Body, <sup>1</sup> compounded of Matter and Form, consisting of three Dimensions, namely, Latitude, Longitude, and Profundity. Then, from the number Two doubled, he derived † the Quaternation of the Water; Air; Fire; which Elements, Earth;
 produced as some Elements, which are
 † Or, The
 † See before 25 June 1710. It should, I think, be written, 25
 June 25 June 1710, &c. &c. comes. In the Foketian copy the word Latin is wanting; excellently well. Va's.

N n n everlasting number

*Xoριστῶν; everlasting Fountains, in order to the * supply of this Universe. Farther, the number Four begets the number Ten. For, One; Two; Three; Four; make up the number Ten. The number Three † multiplied by the number Ten, bath ‖ produced the space of a Month. And a Month by twelve Circuits or Turns, finishes the Course of the Sun. Hence the Circles of Tears, and the changes of Seasons, have delineated and express'd Ævum, which before was void both of Form and Shape, as 'twere in a variety of Paint [made up] of many Flowers; in order to the ease and delight of those, who therein * run over the Course of Life. For, as those Persons (who in hope of winning Prizes, perform the Courses in a Race,) have the distances set out to them, by Stadia or determinate quantities of Ground: and as they too travel long Journeys, find the † Limited, publick Road † best as 'twere, with some Man-of, &c. sions and Stages; least any Person, by having his Expectation drawn out to an immense length, should be quite tired, and abate of his Alacrity and vigour of Mind: after the very same manner also, God the Supreme Emperor, having confined the whole Mass of Time within the Lines of Wisdom, leads and manages it; and like a Chariteer, governs it variously, according as it seems good to Himself. The same Moderator of the Universe, having bedeck'd Ævum, which before was void of Figure, with beautiful Colours and fresh Flowers, has adorned the Day with Brightness and the Rays of the Sun: but, over the Night he hath spread a ‖ darker Colour, and has made the Lights of the Stars to glister therein, like some Bits or Spangles of Gold. And having light up the bright Rays of the Day-Star, and the various Splendor of the Moon, and the most resplendent Companies of the Stars; he has Crowned the whole Heaven, is 'twere some large Embroidered * Vesture, with the manifold Beauties of Colours. Also when he had extended the Air from a vast height to a great depth, and by its help had * cooled the length and breadth of the whole World; he commanded it

|| Or, Blacker.
* Veil, or Hood.
m Poyz'd.
me This whole page is, in my judgement, to be read in poyz'd the Earth in the middle like the Center, be this manner; in that its green-coloured Mantle. And after he had made This the Residence, Nurse, and Mother of all Creatures that are therein; and by its help or power had cooled, &c. In which manner the Translator read. And so I found it written in the Pak. Copy. Valef.

He seems to mean the Aerial Demons, concerning whom he hath spoken above, in the beginning of this Oration. Further, we may understand here as well the Good Demons, as the bad. For the good are Spirits also, whom we term Angels, pass throw the Air; as 'twere some Embassadors and Interpreters, carrying our desires to God, and bringing to us answers, and favours from God. Of which, even the ancient Philosophers were not ignorant. But, The Translator thought, that at this place Eusebius spake of Fishes. Concerning the Aerial Demons, St. Austin (Epist. 49.) speaks thus. Quanto perniciosior est Sacrificatio Demonum, &c. How much more destructive is it to Sacrifice to Demons, than is, to an all Spiritual Creature, which dwells in the nearest and dark Heaven, as in its Aerial Prison, is predestinated to Eternal Punishment. — Valef.

* Kαὶ οὕτως ὁμοίαν ἔχει τὸν οὐρανόν. I write ὁμοίαν τὸν οὐρανόν. He speaks legacily, in saying that the Earth is clothed with the Ocean, as with a green Mantle. So David, Psalm 104. 6. Thou coverest it with the Deep as with a Garment: namely the Earth, as Theodoret explains it, and St. Jerome on Hagai Chap. 1. Farther those words [ὁμοίαν τὸν οὐρανόν] ἐστὶν αὐτῷ must be blotted out, as being superfluous, and wholly disagreeable to this place; wherefore we have omitted them in our Version. They are a piece of a Verse of Homer's out of his 2nd and 3rd Iiad. In the Fuckerian Copy the reading is, οὐρανὸν τὸν οὐρανόν. ἐστὶν αὐτῷ τὸν οὐρανόν καὶ τὸν οὐρανόν καὶ τὸν οὐρανόν. Valef.

|| Or, Blacker.
* Veil, or Hood.
m Poyz'd.
me This whole page is, in my judgement, to be read in poyz'd the Earth in the middle like the Center, be this manner; in that its green-coloured Mantle. And after he had made This the Residence, Nurse, and Mother of all Creatures that are therein; and by its help or power had cooled, &c. In which manner the Translator read. And so I found it written in the Pak. Copy. Valef.

He seems to mean the Aerial Demons, concerning whom he hath spoken above, in the beginning of this Oration. Further, we may understand here as well the Good Demons, as the bad. For the good

are Spirits also, whom we term Angels, pass throw the Air; as 'twere some Embassadors and Interpreters, carrying our desires to God, and bringing to us answers, and favours from God. Of which, even the ancient Philosophers were not ignorant. But, The Translator thought, that at this place Eusebius spake of Fishes. Concerning the Aerial Demons, St. Austin (Epist. 49.) speaks thus. Quanto perniciosior est Sacrificatio Demonum, &c. How much more destructive is it to Sacrifice to Demons, than is, to an all Spiritual Creature, which dwells in the nearest and dark Heaven, as in its Aerial Prison, is predestinated to Eternal Punishment. — Valef.

* Kαὶ οὕτως ὁμοίαν ἔχει τὸν οὐρανόν. I write ὁμοίαν τὸν οὐρανόν. He speaks legacily, in saying that the Earth is clothed with the Ocean, as with a green Mantle. So David, Psalm 104. 6. Thou coverest it with the Deep as with a Garment: namely the Earth, as Theodoret explains it, and St. Jerome on Hagai Chap. 1. Farther those words [ὁμοίαν τὸν οὐρανόν] ἐστὶν αὐτῷ must be blotted out, as being superfluous, and wholly disagreeable to this place; wherefore we have omitted them in our Version. They are a piece of a Verse of Homer's out of his 2nd and 3rd Iiad. In the Fuckerian Copy the reading is, οὐρανὸν τὸν οὐρανόν. ἐστὶν αὐτῷ τὸν οὐρανόν καὶ τὸν οὐρανόν καὶ τὸν οὐρανόν. Valef.

|| Or, Blacker.
* Veil, or Hood.
m Poyz'd.
me This whole page is, in my judgement, to be read in poyz'd the Earth in the middle like the Center, be this manner; in that its green-coloured Mantle. And after he had made This the Residence, Nurse, and Mother of all Creatures that are therein; and by its help or power had cooled, &c. In which manner the Translator read. And so I found it written in the Pak. Copy. Valef.

He seems to mean the Aerial Demons, concerning whom he hath spoken above, in the beginning of this Oration. Further, we may understand here as well the Good Demons, as the bad. For the good

are Spirits also, whom we term Angels, pass throw the Air; as 'twere some Embassadors and Interpreters, carrying our desires to God, and bringing to us answers, and favours from God. Of which, even the ancient Philosophers were not ignorant. But, The Translator thought, that at this place Eusebius spake of Fishes. Concerning the Aerial Demons, St. Austin (Epist. 49.) speaks thus. Quanto perniciosior est Sacrificatio Demonum, &c. How much more destructive is it to Sacrifice to Demons, than is, to an all Spiritual Creature, which dwells in the nearest and dark Heaven, as in its Aerial Prison, is predestinated to Eternal Punishment. — Valef.

* Kαὶ οὕτως ὁμοίαν ἔχει τὸν οὐρανόν. I write ὁμοίαν τὸν οὐρανόν. He speaks legacily, in saying that the Earth is clothed with the Ocean, as with a green Mantle. So David, Psalm 104. 6. Thou coverest it with the Deep as with a Garment: namely the Earth, as Theodoret explains it, and St. Jerome on Hagai Chap. 1. Farther those words [ὁμοίαν τὸν οὐρανόν] ἐστὶν αὐτῷ must be blotted out, as being superfluous, and wholly disagreeable to this place; wherefore we have omitted them in our Version. They are a piece of a Verse of Homer's out of his 2nd and 3rd Iiad. In the Fuckerian Copy the reading is, οὐρανὸν τὸν οὐρανόν. ἐστὶν αὐτῷ τὸν οὐρανόν καὶ τὸν οὐρανόν καὶ τὸν οὐρανόν. Valef.

|| Or, Blacker.
* Veil, or Hood.
m Poyz'd.
me This whole page is, in my judgement, to be read in poyz'd the Earth in the middle like the Center, be this manner; in that its green-coloured Mantle. And after he had made This the Residence, Nurse, and Mother of all Creatures that are therein; and by its help or power had cooled, &c. In which manner the Translator read. And so I found it written in the Pak. Copy. Valef.

and had moistened it partly with Showers, and partly with Waters issuing from Springs; He commanded it to flourish and grow green with all sorts of Plants and beautiful Flowers, in order to the delight and Pleasure of Humane Life. And having therein formed a most excellent and bonorable Creature, dear to the Divinity it self, according to His own Image; namely * Man, endued with a mind and knowledge, and the Office of Reason and Wisdom; on him He conferred the Government and Empire over all the other Creatures, which creep upon the Earth and have their Sustainance from it. For, of all the Creatures that are on the Earth, Man was the dearest to God; and like an Indulgent Father He permitted, that all sorts of irrational Creatures should pay their Service and Obedience to Him. [Twice] Man, for whose sake He made the Sea navigable, and Crowned the Earth with all manner of Plants. On him He bestowed knowing and intellectual Faculties and Powers, in order to his being rendered capable of all manner of Learning and Sciences. Into his Hands He hath delivered, as well those Creatures which swim in the Depths, as the Fowls which fly in the Air. To him He hath laid open the knowledge and contemplation of things Celestial; and hath discovered [to him] the Courses of the Sun, and changes of the Moon, and the Circuits of the Planets and fixed Stars. [Lastly,] 'twas Man alone, of all the Creatures that are on the Earth, to whom He gave order, that he should acknowledge the Celestial Father, and with Hymns should laud and praise the Supreme Emperor of intire Ævum. Besides all these things, that Great Framer of the World, hath begit immutable Ævum with four changes of the Year; the Winter-season He has bounded with the Spring: * but the Spring, which is the beginning of the Seasons of the Year He has weighed as 'twere in an equal Balance. Then, when He had Crowned Universal Ævum with the manifold Fruits of the Spring, * He delivered it to the parching heat of the Summer. After this, having allowed a cessation from Labour as 'twere, He hath refresh'd it with the interval of Autumn. Lastly, when he has wash'd * it (being as 'twere some Royal Steed,) in the moist Fountains of Winter Showers, and has rendered it Slick and Gay by the Waters which flow from † above, and has sufficiently famed it with the continual waterings of the Rain; He again places it at the fore-gates of the Spring. When therefore the Supreme Emperor, had in this manner bound fast His own Ævum, within the Circle of the whole Year, by such Reins of Divine Wisdom as these; He delivered it to be managed by a Greater Governor, namely, His own only-begotten Word; to whom, as being terms the common Preserver of all things, He has committed the Reins of this Universe. But He, or, not than the Father Himself, but means Him to be greater than all others. And perhaps any body would guess, that Eusebius had written, καὶ οὕτως, by a Left. Valef.

* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.
* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.

* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.
* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.

* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.
* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.

* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.
* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.

* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.
* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.

* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.
* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.

* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.
* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.

* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.
* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.

* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.
* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.

* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.
* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.

* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.
* Or, Re-tional Man.
† Or, Re-tional Man.

having received an Inheritance as 'twere, from a most excellent Father; and having bound together all things, which are contained as well in the inner, as more outward Compass of Heaven, in one harmonious consent; proceeds straight forward: and with all imaginable equity makes provision of those things that are of use to his rational Flocks on earth. And having appointed a certain fixed space of living to Mortals, He has given all Men leave, that even in this Life they should be exercised in the * preludes of a better and an eternal Life. For He hath taught, that after the Term of this present Age, there is a Divine and happy Life; trespass'd up and reserved for them, who in the hopes of Celestial Enjoyments, have undergone the Combat of this Life. And, that there shall be a Translation and Removal of those, who have spent their Lives soberly, modestly, and piously, from hence to a better Allotment: but, for them, who shall have been detected of Impieties in this Life, [He has given notice,] that there is an agreeable Place provided. After this, (as 'tis wont to be in the Distributions of Prizes and Rewards in the Games,) having with a loud voice pronounced various Crowns [to be due] to the Victors, He Crowne making and constituting all things; but it self receiving an increase from none. Nearly related hereto is the Ternarie, which in like manner can neither be cut in sunder, nor divided; and is the first of Numbers that are made up of Even and Odd. For the even number Two, having an Unite added to it, hath produced the Ternarie, which is the first of odd Numbers. Moreover the Ternarie first shew'd [Men] Justice, by teaching them Equality? for it has a Beginning, Middle, and End, all Equal. And these things give a Representation of the Mystic, most Holy, and Royal Trinity: which though it consists in a nature that is void of Beginning and * Generation, yet contains in it * Of Self the Seeds, and Reasons, and Causes of the Birth: Substance of all things which have Generation. And the Power of the Ternarie may deservedly be thought the Beginning of all things. But the number Ten, which contains the End or Term of all numbers, Stops and Bounds all things [proceeding] as far as it self: and 'tis with good reason styled full, and every way perfect: in regard it comprehends all the Species, and all the Measures, of all Numbers, † Ratio's, Concord, and Harmonies. 'Tis certain, † Unites being by Composition increased, are terminat * Eusebio megal. In the Fuxerian Copy 'tis written, Eusebio; and after the verb megal a middle distinction is placed. Valef.

* Or, Preface.

* Amos is 'twere. I doubt not but Eusebius wrote Amos is 'twere; He crowneb different, &c. which writing the following words do manifestly confirm. In the Fuxerian Copy 'tis written, Amos is 'twere. Valef.

* Μοιραζον δ' τετρακιστιον. The first word is wanting in the Fuxerian Copy; and the want of it is no fault, if I mistake not. But then, it is also another fault here. Wherefore this whole place is, in my opinion, to be corrected; Εισαγον δ' ον μυριας Εξον διακοσιον ενσην τεταλιν Εξ ακαθαρτων μυριασιν. διακοσιον τετρακιστιον. τεταλιν δ' δεκακιστιον. He permits to be celebrated, &c. Than which a amendment there is nothing more certain. For the Festivity of the Tricennalia, concerning which Eusebius treats, consists of perfect numbers; to wit, Tens trebled, and Threes ten times repeated. Eusebius's following words, concerning The Denary, or Number Ten, do plainly confirm our Emendation. Valef.

from above, to stay or continue. For, whereas all Multitude is lessened and increased, according to the diminution or addition of Numbers; an Unite alone has stability and firmness, as its allotment; being separated from all Multitude, and from those Numbers produc'd from it self. And therefore it bears a lively Resemblance of that Indivisible † Essence, which is separated from all others; by the power and participation whereof, the nature of all things doth subsist. For, an Unite is the Framer of every Number; in as much as every Multitude does consist of a composition and addition of Unites. Nor is it possible, without an Unite, to have a conception in our thoughts of the substance of Numbers. But, an Unite, it self, subsists without a Multitude; being separated at the greatest distance from, and far better than all Numbers;

Decade, allotted to them, as their mother, * and fix'd Boundary; as 'twere in the Cirque they run round this * Meta. Then, * Goat, or having performed the Limit: a second Circuit, and again a third, and a fourth, and so on as far as Ten; of ten Tens they make up the Hundredth Number. After this they return to the first † Carceres. From † Place of setting out, whence they begin again, and proceed on to Ten; and having run round the Hundredth Number Ten times, going back again, they perform long Courses round the same Meta; returning by a Circuit from themselves into themselves. For, of the number Ten, an Unite is the tenth part; and ten Unites make up one Denarie. But, a Denarie or Decade is the Limit, the * Meta, and the fix'd and stated Boundary of Unites: the Meta of the infinity of Numbers; but * the End, that is, the perfection of Unites. Moreover, the Ternarie joined together with the Denarie, and having performed the third period of ten Circuits, produces that most natural Number, the Number Thirty. For, that which in Unites is the Ternarie, the same in Denaries is the Tricenarie or Thirtieth Number. And this is the firm and certain Limit of that great Luminary, which is the second from the Sun. For the Course of the Moon, from one conjunction with the Sun to the next, compleats the Circle of a Month: after which, She again receives a Beginning of Birth as 'twere, and does again begin new Light, and new Days: being grac'd with thirty Unites; honoured with three Decades; and beautified

* Η εξαγων δεκαετηρ. It must, I think, be written, εξ μι-εξαγων, &c. and fix'd Boundary. So he calls the number Ten, because 'tis the Term and Meta of Numbers. But, by fetching an Elegant Metaphor from the Cirque, he says that Unites do run round the number Ten, as 'twere the Meta. Wherefore, Εξαγων δεκαετηρ was to have been translated rangam in Cirque, as 'twere in the Cirque. Hence 'tis, that a little after this, he names the Carceres also, where his words are, εν τη σπηλαιω διαταχεντος ακαθαρτων, they return or run back to the first Carceres Valef.

* Καταληξιν κτιστων. The words must, I think, be placed otherwise, and read thus, καταληξιν: Εξου κτιστων, the Meta, and the fix'd and stated Boundary. 'Tis the fame with what he says hereafter, Εξου του, the firm and certain Limit. In the Fuxerian Copy the reading is, Εξου η καταληξιν. Valef.

* Or, The Limit and the End of Unites.

† Or,

† Or, The Limit and the End of Unites.

Nan 2

as words, sifted with ten Ternaries. With the very same Doubtless [Graces] is the Empire of Our Victor Augustus, and Lord of the whole world, * adorned, by the Bestower of all things that are good; and enters upon a beginning of new blessings: having hitherto accomplished the Tricennalian Festivities only; but now from hence forward entering upon longer intervals of Times; and * e-

* Or, Pro-mising. of future Blessings, in the Celestial Kingdom. Where not one only Sun, but troops of innumerable Lights dance about the Supreme Emperor as every one of which * is far more Glorious than the Sun itself; and do shine and glister, with the splendour of those Rays shot from the Eternal Fountain [of Light]. Where [there is] a life of the * mind, in

* Or, Soul. the incorruptible Bonities of Goods: where [there is] a life, void of all grief and trouble: where [there is] an enjoyment of temperate and most holy pleasure: Time without Time; a long and endless Ævum, enlarged to Spaces bounded by no Term: not any more [distinguished] by the intervals of days and months; nor measured by the Circles of Years; and the periods of seasons and Times: but sufficient for one life continued to an immensity. Which is not enlightened by the Sun, nor illustrated by the multitude of the Stars, or * Splendour of the Moon: but has that Luminary in itself, God the Word, the only-begotten Son of the Supreme Emperor. On which account, the Divine Discourses of Mystical Theology, do declare Him to be that Sun of Righteousness, and a Light which far transcends all Lights. We do firmly believe, that the very same person does illustrate those most blessed Powers, with the Rays of Justice, and the beams of Wisdom: and, that He does take the Souls of men, adorned with true Piety, not into the Circumference of Heaven, but into His own Bosom: and, that He does really confirm and fulfil His own promises. But the eye of Mortals hath not seen, nor hath any ear heard; neither can a mind clothed with flesh, be able to discern and look into those things, which are prepared for them who have been adorned with Piety: as likewise for You also, Most Religious Emperor! To whom alone, of all persons that ever were, God Himself the Supreme Emperor of this Universe, has granted this, that You should cleanse and reform the Life of men. To whom also He hath shown His own Salutary Sign; by the power whereof having conquered Death, He * celebrated a Triumph over His Enemies. Which Trophy of Victory, and Amulet of Demons, when You had opposed a-

* His-ces
Dei-ces Triumph

He had better have said, Yes, Lead, or celebrated. For 'tis not said, He celebrated a Triumph, but He was celebrated. Indeed, He was properly to be said concerning a Trophy. Valef.

gainst the Images of Error; You * gained the Victory over all impious Enemies and Barbarians, as also over the Demons themselves, who are another sort of Barbarians.

have read, ἀγρο νίκας and thought that these words were spoken concerning Christ. But, after I had look'd more narrowly into the thing, I perceived, that these words are spoken in the Second Person. For Eusebius speaks to the Emperor himself. 'Tis certain, those words ἐπὶ πέντων ἀδελφῶν παλαιῶν τῶν ἐς Κύβητας, over all impious Enemies and Barbarians, do evince that this is spoken concerning the Emperor. Valef.

FOR, Whereas there are in us two * Sub-CHAP. stances conjoined, namely, Soul and Body; V.11. whereof the Latter is exposed to view, but the * Or, other remains invisible: against both these, Naturen two sorts of Enemies and Barbarians, the one covertly, the other openly, have set themselves in array. And, the one of them opposes Bodies against Bodies: but the other assaults Man's naked Soul it self, with all sorts of incorporeal Engines. Farther; those visible Bar-

* Nomades, in nothing different from Wild-beasts, make an attack upon the meek and gentle Flocks of Men; ruin and depopulate Countries; enslave Cities; [rush] out of the Desert, like fiercer and furious Wolves, and fall upon the Inhabitants of Cities; after which they destroy as many as they can. But the invisible Enemies, I mean the Soul-destroying Demons, who are far more fierce and cruel than all Barbarians; sieg about the Regions of this Air, and by the Engines of mischievous Polytheism, had reduced all mankind under their Power: in so much that, the true God was not by them any longer look'd upon as God; but they wandered up and down in manifold error, without any worship of the Deity. For, having procured for themselves Gods from I know not whence, who have not any Being or Existence in any place whatever; they wholly neglected and undervalued Him who is the only, and the true God, as if He were not. Hence it was, that the Generation of Bodies was by them reputed and worshipp'd as a God; as also, a contrary Deity hereto, to wit, the Destruction and Dissolution of Bodies. And the former of these Gods in regard He was the Author of Generation, was honoured with the Rites of Venus. But the Latter, because He abounded with Riches, and in Strength excelled Mankind, was named Pluto and * Orcus. * Or, For, whereas the Men of that Age, acknow-Death- ledged no other Life, save that which takes its beginning from Generation; therefore they asserted the Cause and Origin of that Life to be a God. And, whereas they believed Men not to exist any more after Death; they declared Death to be the Vanquisher of all, and a Great God. Then, concluding, that on account of that dissolution by Death, they were in no wise accountable hereafter for what was performed here; they resolved upon living such a Life, as in effect was no Life; perpetrating such Facts, as deserved to be punished with ten Thousand Deaths. For, they had not their Minds taken up, with the thoughts of God; they expected not * Νουαδὸς νίκας. The Translator has done ill in rendering it, Passions, Sieges. I would rather retain the Greek word, or else render it Vagabonds, Wanderers. For so the Latins termed those Barbarians, who fitting on their Horses, or in Wagons, were carried this way and that way, without any House or settled habitation. Such persons as these, because, in order to their getting food, they would range about to find places abounding with pasture; were termed nomades. A little after, in the Eusebian Copy the reading is, λυμφοβωτοὶ τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς, destroying as many as they can. Valef.

* Or, Sub- not the Tribunals of the Divine judgment; nor call'd to remembrance the * Nature of their own Souls: but acknowledging a subjection to one Cruel Patron, Deas; and finally persuading themselves, that the destruction of bodies effected by it, was the dissolution [and annihilation] of the whole man; they declared Death to be a great and a rich God; and for that reason gave him the name of Pluto or Dis. Death therefore was to them a God; and not be alone; but what-ever else they accounted valuable in comparison of Death; namely those things which were conducive, in order to the rendering their Lives pleasant and delectate. For, the pleasure of the Body was by them accounted a God; norriphment was a God; the growth of those things [that produce nutriment,] a God; the fruit of Trees, a God; Drunkenness and Luxury, a God; the desire of things, Carnal, a God; the Pleasure of those things, a God. Hence [came] the Mysteries of Ceres and Proserpina; hence the Ravishment of the Virgin [Proserpina] by Pluto, and Her, Restoration again. Hence Bacchus's Initiations and Ceremonies; and Hercules vanquished by drunkenness, as by a more powerful God. Hence the adulterous Rites of Cupid and Venus. Hence Jupiter himself engaged with a Lust after women, and in Love with Ganymede: hence the fictions of Lastivious Fables, concerning Gods addicted to pleasure, Wantonness, and Luxury. With such Καὶ τὸν ἐκ τούτου ὅτι πομῶν φρεσὶν. At my peril write ἐκ τούτῳ, by it; understand death. And so the reading is in the Fulkian Copy.

A little before, the Geneva-man had left out a word; which,
from the Fulkian Copy, I have supplied in this manner, ὅτι ἐκ ἀπορίας διότι. Valef.

† Or, Fists.

|| Or, Bodies.

* Or, God-opposing Error.

therefore, and so many Darts of * impious persecution as these, the cruel Barbarians, and prorust Enemies to the Supream King, could the Inhabitants of the Earth; and at length reduced the whole Body of mankind to a Subjection to themselves; in so much that, Monuments of impiety were erected by them, in all parts of the earth, and Temples and Shrines of false Divinity, built in every Corner. Moreover, * those persons then thought to be in power, were so miserably enslaved to Error, that they appeared their Gods, with the slaughters of their own Country-men and Relations; and sharpened their Swords against the defenders of Truth;
and [commenced] an implacable War, and lifted up impious bands, not against foreign and barbarous Enemies; but against their Domesticks and Friends, and against their Brethren, Kinsmen and dearest Relatives;
who by a purity of Life and Sobriety, and with purposes of true Piety, had resolved to pay a worship and observance to the Deity.

οἱ γὰρ τούτοις κερταῖν βο-μολοῦσιν. By these words Eusebius either means the Emperours themselves, who had persecuted the Christian Religion; or else all the Heathens. For these prevailed at that time, before the Christian Religion had obtained throughout the whole world. As therefore the Christian Religion was afterwards termed in κερταῖν βομολοῦσιν, and the Christians in κερταῖν βομολοῦσιν (as I have noted at the Books of Eusebius's Eccles. Hist.) so the Gentiles, as long as their superstitious flourish'd, are rightly termed of κερταῖν βομολοῦσιν. Yet below, at the beginning of the ninth Chapter, he has used τούτοις κερ-ταῖν to signify the Emperours.
Valef.

After this manner, these men, seized with a distraction of mind, sacrificed persons consecrated to the supream King, to their own Dæmons.
But They, in regard they were courageous Witnesses of true Piety, and had been accustomed to prefer a glorious death in defence of truth, before life it self, did not in the least value
so severe a Tyranny: but rather, as it became the Soldiers of God, being satisfied with the * Arms of Patience, they despised and laugh'd at every sort of Death; namely Fire, Sword, and the piercing of Nails; the wild Beasts; the depths of the Sea; the cutting off, and afterwards tearing of Limbs; digging out of Eyes; [*]

mutations of the whole Body; and lastly, Famine, the Mines, and Bonds. All which, by reason of that Love and ardency of Affection they bore to their own King, they accounted sweeter than all the Pleasures and Enjoyments [of this Life.]
The Minds likewise of the tenderer Sex were Valiant and Stout, endowed with a Courage nothing inferior to that of Men; some of whom underwent the very same Combats with Men, and obtained equal rewards of Valour. Others, when drag'd away to be sacrific'd, sooner resigned their Lives to Death, than their Bodies to Ravishment. And vast other numbers in the
of them, not enduring so much as to bear the Menaces of Ravishment, wherewith they were of his threatened by the Presidents of Provinces; with a valiant Mind endured all sorts of Tortures, and [the Execution of] every Capital Sentence. In this manner the Vanguard of the supream Emperour, with an undaunted Courage of Mind maintained the Fight, against their Army who paid a worship to many Gods. But the [Dæmons,] who are the adversaries of God, and Enemies to the Salvation of Men; demonstrating more of Cruelty than any of the most Savage Barbarian, rejoiced in such Libations of humane Blood. And their Assistants and Ministers, quaff'd to them such as these, filled with Blood unjustly shed; providing for them this dreadful and impious Ransom. Valef.

And to the ruin and destruction of humane kind. Affairs being in this posture, what ought to have been done by God, the King of these that were oppress'd? Ought He to be careless of the safety of his dearest [Dependents,] and to neglect his own Servants, when in this bloody manner assailed?
Doubtless, He can never be termed a prudent Pilot, who shall suffer his Vessel, together with the Men on Board, to be sunk, without contributing any thing of his own Assistance, in order to the Preservation of the Ships-company. Nor, can that person be stiled a wary and provident General, who shall render up his Allies to the Enemy, unreveng'd and undefended. Neither will a good Shepherd be unconcerned for, and a careless of a Sheep straying from the rest of his Flock: but will rather leave all the other,
which are safe and in good condition; and will most readily suffer any thing whatever, on account of preserving that Sheep which has strayed; being ready, should there be a necessity, to encounter even with fierce and ra-read ἀσέβη, impious, with the Translator; in the Fulkian

Copy, it is written, ἀσέβη Valef.
Ὁ δὲ τὸν κερταῖν βομολοῦσιν ἀντὶ τούτου. I should chonle to write, ὁ τὸν κερταῖν βομολοῦσιν ἀντὶ τούτου, &c; Doubtless, He can never, &c; So in the following period, I think it should be mended, ὁ τὸν κερταῖν βομολοῦσιν ἀντὶ τῶν ἀσέβων, &c; &c; nor can that person, &c; where it is put for ἀσέβων. Valef.

Ἐπίστω ἀσέβων. I know indeed, that a Commander who spares not his own Life, may be termed ἀσέβων. But, in regard this is a commendation befitting a Soldier, rather than a Commander; and because the term ἀσέβων is wont to be most commonly taken in an ill sense;
therefore, at this place I would more willingly read ἀσέβων, that is, a wary and provident
General. So Ann. Marcellinus, speaking concerning Corbulo the most fam'd Commander of the Romans, gives him this Elogy, Provinciarum fidus defensor & cautus, a faithful and wary Defender of the Provinces. Nevertheless, if any one had rather retain the common reading, I will not gain-say it. Valef.

Ἐπεὶ δὲ ἀσέβων. The amendment of this place was obvious. For who can see that it should be, ἀσέβων ἀντὶ τῶν ἀσέβων in which manner I found it written in the Fulkian Copy, and have rendered it accordingly. Valef.

ging Beasts. But, the supream Moderator's care was not employ'd about a Sheep that wants reason; but He was highly concern'd for his whole Army; for the sake of those, who on his account were assaulted. Of whose Combats, and conflicts in defence of Piety, when he had approv'd; and had honour'd them, who were now removed to him, nial Embassies; compelling them to own, and * submit themselves to their Betters; and from * Or, No

a Lawless and brutish life, reducing them to be igno-Civility and Humanity. But, as for that cruel and enraged Sort of invincible Demons, he does really and manifestly prove, that they were long since vanquished by God. For the Common Saviour of the Universe, had by an invincible Power routed those invincible Spirits. But this
Our Prince, the Supreme Emperor's Lieutenant-General as 'twere, has pursued the vanquished; spoiling † those who were long since dead and consumed; and plentifully distributing the Booty amongst the Souldiers of [ God ] the Victor.

ἰ Παρ' αὐτοῦ. I read παρ' αὐτοῦ, with himself; in which manner Eusebius is wont to express himself. A little after, the reading should be ἑξῆςται ἡγουσάμενοι, might also become Relaters: the Fuketian Copy confirms both these Emendations. Vale.

should both be spectators of his vengeance upon the impious, and might also become Relaters of those things which they had beheld with their own eyes. After this, when he had stretch'd forth his right hand, in order to his being avenged of his Adversaries; by his very Nod, on a sudden he destroyed them; having first punished them with stripes inflicted on them from Heaven; and compell'd them, even against their wills, with their own lips to recant their own horrid wickednesses. But these, who were meant and condemned, and by almost all persons look'd upon as forsaken and hopeless, he has raised from the ground, and highly exalted. And thus, the supreme Emperor [God,] effected his purpose from Heaven; when he had presented to us his own Servant, as some invincible Warrior (For our Emperor, by reason of his transcendency of Piety, rejoices in his being styled The Servant of God.) Whom God has made Conquerour over all sorts of Enemies whatever, having raised up him alone, against many. For they were numerous; and almost infinite as <sup>k</sup> be the friends of many Demons. <sup>l</sup> Tea and renders the passage thus: Reipfa coarguit reipfiffe; reipfiffe quod iam olim fuiffet ab ipfo Deo fupervatum, he really confuted and reprov'd it; in regard it had been long before vanquifhed by God Himfelf. But I have taken away the diftinction, and rendered it thus rebus ipfis convincens, jam pridem à Deo fuiffe fupervatum, He does really convince, forasmuch as it has been long ago vanquifhed by God, &c. The Reader may make choice of which rendition be pleafes. For there is but little difference. How Conftantine actually demonstrated, that the Demons were vanquifhed; Enfebio does preface his Deo, when he fays, that at their Temples were rited by Conftantine, and befet down on the Chriftian Altar.

<sup>a</sup> Tōs ιερωνυμίου Σωζοῦς. It muft be written, ιερων. Σωζ.
† Namely, the Demons; whose Temples Conftantine destroyed and melted down their Images.

FOR, Whereas he perceived, that the simple CHAP multitude, like children, in vain stood in VIII.
fear of those Bug-bears of Error, made of Gold and Silver; it was his Sentiment, that they ought wholly to be destroyed; in regard they would be like some pieces of Stones, cast before

the feet of those who walk
in the dark; * and because
a smooth and plain passage
thorow the Kings - high - way was in future to be open to all men. Having therefore diligently weighed these matters with himself, he was of opinion, that he stood not in need either of Military Forces or a numerous Army, in order to his giving Check to those things; but, that one, or two of those persons well known to him, were sufficient to effect this business: whom by one only Nod he dispatch'd away into every Province.
They, confiding in [the Emperour's] Piety,
[and in their own Religiousness towards God], made their way thorow the thickest crowds, and thorow infinite multitudes of people, and <sup>b</sup> fully discovered that ancient Error

[of Idolatry,] in all Cities, and throughout every Country. And in the first place, they commanded the Priests themselves, with much laughter and disgrace to bring forth their Gods, out of certain dark recesses. Then they divested [those Gods] of their outward dress, and exposed their inward deformity, which lay concealed under a painted shape, to the eyes of all men. Lastly, having scrap'd off that matter which seemed and in itself was to be useful, and * cast it into the fire, and fire.

as by them was thought to be of use and necessary, they reserved, and put xT as being the friends of many Nations. Teach xT rather, they were nothing: whence it is, xT This at present they are nothing. But this One Em-place is perow, [* is] of One, [and bear-corrupted; See Note the Image of That One Supreme in my Emperor. They, [induced thereto] judgment, by an impious mind, destroyed pious men by infant bloody Murders. But he, imitating his own restored of Saviour's example, and being only skilled in this the preservation namely of men; has sav'd alive

even the impious themselves, teaching them truth Peace and Religion. Then, in regard he is really Victor, he hath vanquished that twofold sort of Barbarians: civilizing the fierce and untractable Tribes of men, by prudent and ra-

For they were almost innumerable and many in regard they were the friends of many Demons and of themselves. I have expunged the word ἄνθρωποι, because it had crept in hither, from the upper line. And by εὐσεβίων ἀριθμώμενοι ἄνθρωποι, against whom God raised one single person, Constantine; Eusebious means Maxentius, Maximianus Herculeus, Maximinus, and Licinius; to whom Dioclesian and Galerius may be added. But, by εὐσεβίων πολλοί φίλοι, both of the Demons, and of themselves he means the Prefidents and Governours of Prouinces, and the Commanders of the Militie; who, that they might carry favour with the Emperours, molested the Christians in all places. It may also be written ἐπεὶ οὐδ' αὖτε ἐκείνων φίλοι, in another sense; that is, many as being defended of many Demons, and the friends of those Demons. Which sense seems truer. For, it answers to the words which follow, ὁ δὲ εὐσεβίου ὡς καὶ, &c. But, this One Emperor [is] of One. For Eusebius alludes to that passage in the Gospel; Τὴν αἰά σου πατέρα τὸν δεσπότη. Luke. 8. 44. In the Fakesian Copy, the reading of this place runs thus; ὁ π. ὃς ὅτι τοιοῦτο ποιεῖς οὐ δύνασαι εἶναι φίλος τοῦ σατανᾶ. For they were created, and made as being the friends of many Demons. Which saying is purer and truer. Valf.

Μόλιον δὲ σέθεν ἔγωγε, ὅπου ὡς σέθεν. Eusebius here seems to have imitated Dionysius Alexandrinus; who in his Paschal Letter concerning the Tyranny of Marcianus, expresseth himself in this manner, ὁ π. ὃς ἐν τοῖς κτλ μὴ ἔγωγε. Now is not, for he never was what passage occurs in the seventh Book of his Ecclesiastical History. Chate. 23. Valf.

ment of disgrace. Moreover, this admirable Emperour performed another thing like hereto. For, at the same time that those Idols of the Dead, made of pretious matter, were spoiled in that manner we have declared; he * ordered the rest of the Images, consisting of Brasts, to be brought together. Therefore, those Gods, [celebrated] in the dining tables [of the Greeks,] having had ropes made of hair cast about them, were drag'd away bound. After these things, this great Emperour, having as 'twere light up a most bright Torch, look'd about with his Imperial Eye, if peradventure he could any where find, any Remains of Error as yet lying concealed. And, as some most sharp-sighted Eagle, which has raised herself to Heaven on her wings, sees from above those things on the earth that are at the greatest distance: in the same manner he, whilst he † was resident in the Imperial Palace of his own most beautiful City, beheld as from a Watch-Tower, a certain pernicious figure of Souls, lying concealed in the Province of the Phœnicians. It was a Grove and a Temple, [not placed] in the midst of a City, nor in the Forums, or Streets; of which sort many are visible in Cities, most gloriously built for ornaments sake: but this [Temple] was out of the way, far distant from the common Road and beaten path, consecrated to that filthy Dæmon [termed] Venus, in part of the Top of [Mount] Libanus. This was a School of wickedness, [open] to all incontinent persons, and such as with all manner of dissoluteness, had decaub'd their own Bodies. For certain effeminate men, who ought to be termed women rather than men, having renounc'd the venerableness of their own Sex, affected the Dæmon by suffering themselves to be made use of as women. Besides, unlawful † Coitions with women, and Adulteries, and other heathen and infamous facts were committed in that Temple, as in a place that was lawless, and without a Governour. Nor was there any one that might inspect what was done in that place, in regard no person of gravity or modesty durst go thither. But, the impieties committed there, could not lie concealed from this Great Emperour also. But, when he himself had look'd into them with the eye of an Imperial providence, he judged such a Temple as this to be unworthy of being [enlightened with the Rays] of the Sun it self, Wherefore he orders it to be totally demolished, together with [its Statues and] Consecrated Gifts. Immediately therefore, the Engines of this impudent and Libidinous Error, were dissipated by an Imperial Order; and a Company of Soldiers gave their assistance in cleansing that place. And they who had hitherto been addicted to Lasciviousness, [being scar'd] by the Emperour's Menaces, in future learned modesty. When therefore the Emperour had in this manner a full'd off those Vizards of abominable wickedness, which were visible in the Temple of that Dæmon the seducer of the people; and had exposed them to the view of all persons; he Preached his own Saviour in the presence of all.

* Or, Set upon the other Images, made of Brast.

† Walk'd up and down in, or, near conversant in.

|| Or, Co-pulations of women.

|| Φεσμεται κατωθεν τοις οφθαλμοις σου. I can't approve of the Translatour's Version, who has rendered this place thus; Ad hunc modum videntur Imperator, cum spectata illa impietate; & nequitie qua hominum animi occurrat fuerant, palmam omnium oculis sublevari, &c. In this manner therefore the Emperour, both exposed to public view those Spectres of improbity and wickedness, whereby the minds of men had been blinded, &c. But I had rather render it thus; Cum flagitiorum larva, que in Demoniis illius populorum seductores temporis visibantur, decessisset, &c. When therefore the Emperour had in this manner pull'd off, &c. Φεσμεται κατωθεν (for to the Ascendation it is to be rettored), are the integumenta victorum, the masks of vices, wherewith the Heathens covered their own uncleanness. So above, Eusebius speaking of the Images of the Demons, lays, κατωθεν απονομιωδους τα φεσμα; &c. Then they discover'd [those Gods] of their outward dress, and exposed their inward deformity, which lay concealed under a painted shape, to the eyes of all men. Farther, this place is thus to be mended from the Fuckerian Copy, εως ες τα Της λαοκρατου φεσμα; κατωθεν. Valef.

Nor was there any one who could defend or assist the persons detected: no Dæmon; no God; no Utterer of Oracles; no Diviner. Nor were the minds of men any longer wrap'd up in thick and profound darkness: but being illustrated by the Rays of unerring Piety, they condemn'd the ignorance of their Ancestours; and pity'd their Blindness; and pronounc'd themselves happy, in regard they were free'd from the cruel slavery of Error. * Thus therefore in a moment, by the Will of the Great God, and the Emperour's Assistance and Ministry, all the kinds of E-tionicles enemies and Adversaries, as well the visible as must be invisible, were totally destroyed: and in future, † the Peace, the best Educatrix of Youth, encompass'd the habitation of all men. Nor were there any more Wars, because The Gods were not. Neither did their happen any Fights, either in the Presently, Countries or Cities, as there had been before, I read † when the worship of Demons flourish'd: nor † were there any more effusions of blood amongst the best Edmen, such as had usually happend, whilst the fury catrix [or Breeder] of Youth; without the particle ε. For Eusebius alludes to that Verse of Hesiod, in his Opera;

Ειληνη τ' αλσας κρησσειτο.

Valef.

NOW therefore 'tis seasonable, to oppose the new CHAP. Face of affairs to the old, and inspect the IX.

Change of matters made for the better, by comparing the worse with them; and to discern and perceive clearly, in what manner heretofore, Porches and Consecrated Plots of Ground; Groves and Temples, were * most elaborately founded and prepared for them; and how the Temples were * beautified * Or, with vast numbers Crown'd of Consecrated Gifts. As for the Tyrans and those in whose hands the supreme power then was, they had an high veneration for the Gods. The Nations also and people, in the fields and in all places, yea in their very Private dwellings, in their Store Houses namely and Bed-chambers, † honoured them with Statues, according to the Rites of their own Country. But, the fruit of their devotion, was not that mutual Peace, which we now behold with our eyes, but all these things directly contrary hereto; to wit Wars, Fights, seditions and Seditions; wherewith they were † sorely disquieted during the whole † worn our Course of their Lives, and filled their own Coun-tries with blood and intestine slaughters. More-very aid indeed promise the then Emperours; Pro-nor can the phecies and Oracles, and predictions of things future. τερμαξα-well joined with Σαλαμοις: Wherefore, I would more willingly read this whole place, in this manner, Εστιν τε ες δεικται κατ' αφεση ες παρτα πονοι, αμν τε κατ' αμν ες αμν αυτων ταμειοι ες ες Σαλαμοις αλφιαμοι εδωκεν εημω κατ' τα παρτα. The Nations also and peo-ple, &c. Valef.

But those very Gods * could not * foresee their own Ruine, and were altogether unable to forestall to their own selves. Which is a most convincing Argument, in order to the manifestation of their cheat and imposture. 'Tis certain, none of those, heretofore admired for their Oracles, ever foretold the Glorious Coming of the Common Saviour amongst men, or the new Preaching of that divine knowledge, which was first delivered by him. Neither Pythius himself, nor any other of the Great Daemons, was ever apprehensive of their own desolation: nor did he presage or prophesy, who should vanquish and destroy them. What Divine or Soothsayer hath foretold, that the worship of the Gods should be extinguished

† Νέω τι by the Coming of a Certain † New Person into the world; and, that the knowledge and worship of the suprem Mediator of all things, should be diffused amongst all men? Who hath foreseen this Holy and Religious Principality, and this Our Victor, and the Trophies which be has in all places of the earth erected against Ruine of the * High places? Which of the Hero's hath ever declared in express words, that the lifeless Statues should be melted, and from an useless Form be changed into necessary uses? Which of the Gods hath ever made any mention, concerning their own Statues which are melted down, and with disgrace and laughter

* Τῶν ὁ. Daemons, and the ψαῖον. This a term which occurs in sacred Scripture; see 1 Kings, chap. 12, and 13. The Images of Daemons were so termed, because they were commonly worshiped in high places. Valf.

† Εἰς ἀσπίδων τὰ κρηττόνιστον. Doubtless, the reading must be κρηττόνιστον, cut; which Christophorus perceived not. Valf.

Monuments consecrated to them, which were ruined by Men? What is become of them, who heretofore raised Wars, and who now behold their own vanquishers living in a most calm and secure Peace? Where are those who put their trust in them, as in Gods, and elevated their own minds by a vain and fruitless confidence:

* Οἱς τὴν δὲ πλάττω. As far as this place, there was a Chasme in the Puckerian Copy; which Manuscript gives us this reading of this place; οἱς δὲ τὴν δὲ πλάττω. I am of opinion, that the first word is to be blotted out. Valf.

manner? Where are those Troops of Gyants, fighting against God Himself? And the hissings of Dragons; Who have whet their Tongues, and have uttered impious Expressions against the suprem King? Those persons, profest Enemies to the suprem Emperor, confiding in a multitude of Gods, sell on with vast numbers of men in Arms; carrying before them as their † Νεκρῶν ἄδολα χαμόεσσαν. Write ἀδολῶν, as the reading is in his Life of Constantine, Book 2. Chap. 16; where this passage occurs. A little after, write, χαμόεσσαν ἀδολῶν ὑπὸ τῷ τῶν αἰσῶν; as tis in his Life of Constantine, and in his Puckerian Copy. Valf.

some affrighting spectacle, and potent Preserva

tive against mischiefs; obtained the Victory, both over his Enemies; and over the Daemons. After which, with a grateful mind, he rendered a Thanksgiving-prayer to [God] the Author of his Victory; and with a loud voice, and by the Monuments of Statues raised, he made known to all men the Triumphant Standard; erecting this Great Trophy against all his Enemies, in the midst of the Imperial City; and issuing out an Express Command to all men, that they should acknowledge this salutary Standard (which no Age can deface,) as the Preservative of the Roman Government, that is the Empire of the whole world. And herewith he acquainted all persons, but more especially the Militie. To whom [he gave this in charge,] that they ought not to * place * Or, ἔχειν their hopes in their Spears and Armour, nor in their hope the strength of their Bodies; but should acknowledge God to be the Giver of all Good, and particularly of Victory it self. Thus the Emperor himself (strange and almost incredible!) was his own Armie's Instructer in their devotions; and delivered to them pious † prayers, which were agreeable to the Divine Laws and Institutions; that they should lift up their hands on high, towards Heaven; but Constantine should || fix the eyes of their minds on the true, most highest object, namely on the Celestial King; and 4 Chap. 20. in their prayers should invoke him, as The Giver † Or, of Victory, The Saviour, The Preserver, and The Transmitter of the Empire. Moreover, that they should esteem of it, as a day, as convenient and fit for prayers; to wit, that day, which really is the Chief and * First of the year.

He terms the Lord's day, the first; not only because 'tis the first day of the week; but also, in regard it was the first day of the world. Whence it may deservedly be termed the first-day of the world. Further, the Lord's Day is not only termed the first day, but the eighth also. St. Austin's words (Book 1. Concerning the Lord's Sermon on the Mount, Chap. 11.) are these: Et octava Sententia quæ ad Caput reddit, &c. This eighth Sentence which returns to the Head, and declares the perfect man; perhaps signified by Circumcision also on the eighth day in the Old Testament; and by the Resurrection of the Lord after the Sabbath, which as 'tis the eighth, so 'tis also the first day. Before St. Austin, Hilarius had said the same, in his Prologue to his Comments on the Psalms; where discoursing concerning the seventh Number, his words are these: Quem tamen octiduo, quia et eadem prima quæ octava, &c. which nevertheles, the number eight (because the first day is the same with the eighth, being added in the last Sabbath according to the Evangelicall fulness, doth complete. See also his following words in that Prologue. Moreover, Theophilus Bishop of Alexandria, in his discourse when the day of the Theophania had fallen on a Sunday, speaks concerning the Lord's day in this manner: ἡ δὲ ἡμέρα ἡ τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος καὶ ἀποστόλων καὶ μαρτύρων ἡμέρα, &c. Both Custom, and also duty doth require us, so to honour every Sunday, and to observe that day as a Festival; in regard thereon our Lord Jesus Christ procured for us a Resurrection from the dead. Wherefore, in the sacred Scriptures, this day is both termed The first, as being the beginning of life to us; and also The eighth, in regard it surpasses the Sabbath of the Jews. These words of Theophilus are cited in the Typicon of St. Sabas, and by Basilian in his Collection of Canons. To whom add Isidorus, and Beda in the Book de Divinis Officiis, where they treat concerning Sunday. Stephanus Gibarus writes the same, in his 29th Chapter. To this custom it is perhaps to be reterred, that the Greeks most commonly reckon the days of the week, not to the Sunday which precedes, but to that which follows. For, after the Sunday of the Prædical Son, which is the ninth Sunday before Easter, those days which follow immediately, namely the second, third, and fourth Feria, and so on, were by the Greeks termed, ἡ πρώτη τῆς ἀποκαταστάσεως, ἡ δεύτερη, &c. until the following Sunday, which was termed Δομινικὰ τῆς ἀποκαταστάσεως, and this week was called ἡδομινικὰ τῆς ἀποκαταστάσεως. [See Meursius's Glossary, in the word ἀποκατάστασις.] But after the Δομινικὰ τῆς ἀποκαταστάσεως, the second Feria which followed next, was termed ἡ τῆς νεωκίας or νεωκίης, and so the other days of that whole week, unto the following Sunday, which was called by the same name, ἡ καὶ νεωκίης τῆς νεωκίας. The same may be observed in the other Sundays, until Easter-day. For after the Δομινικὰ τῆς νεωκίας, the second Feria was termed the second Feria of the Holy Fast; and the whole week was called so, until the following Sunday, which had the same name. Lastly, the ἡδομινικὰ ὑπερῶν [The Great week, or Passion-week] which we call the Holy Week, it reckoned to the following Sunday, namely Easter-day, as it appears appears from the Typicon of Saint Sabas, Chap. 31. Crillus also, in his Paschal Sermons, always begins the Week of Easter, which we now term The Holy Week, from the second Feria; and closes it with the following Sunday, namely Easter-Day. Nor does Theophilus do otherwise in his Paschal Epistles. Valef.

other days, and which is truly the Lord's, and the Salutary Day: and which has its name from Light, Life, Immortality, and from every thing that is good. Moreover, He himself, becoming his own Teacher of such good things, pays an adoration to his Saviour in the most private Apartments of his Imperial Palace; and sometimes by praying fulfils the Divine Laws; at others, by bearing the sacred Scriptures read, he cultivates and instructs his own mind. Farther, Persons consecrated to God, and who are adorned with holiness of Life and the other virtues, are his Servants and Ministers; and them he has appointed to be the Controllers of his whole House. Lastly, his Protectors and crusky Guards, armed with the weapons of good affection, do acknowledge the Emperour as their Instructor in a pious Life. verse 10.

But, what Eusebius says here, and in the Life of Constantine; namely, that Sunday was consecrated and set apart for Prayers and Ecclesiastick assemblies; this in my judgement, was instituted something later. For the first Christians, who had embraced the faith immediately after our Lord's Ascension, were every day, always applying themselves to Prayer, and all manner of Offices of Piety; as St. Luke writes in the Acts of the Apostles. But afterwards, when the Heathens betook themselves in great numbers to the faith of Christ, and the Faithful could not meet every day; it was appointed by the Apostles and their Successors, that at least on the Lord's Day, the Faithful should meet together in the Church. Concerning which there is an eminent passage in Justin the Martyr's Second Apology, about the close of it. Τὴν ἡμέραν ἀποκαταστήσαντες, &c. On the day termed Sunday, all Persons, as well those who dwell in the Country, as them in the City, meet together, &c. He has termed it Sunday, not the Lord's Day, because he spoke to the Roman Emperours, who were well acquainted with Sunday, but knew not the Lord's Day, which was an appellation proper to Christians. Justin repeats the same thing a little after, in the same Apology. Heretico likewise Pliny agrees in his Epistle to Trajan. Affirmatorem, says he, hanc fuisse summam vel culpae suae, vel erroris, &c. They affirmed, that this was the Total, either of their fault, or error, that on a stated day they were wont to meet together before it was light, and sing an Hymn to Christ, as to God. Where, by a stated day he means The Lord's Day. Therefore, from this place of Pliny it may be gathered, that the Christians who then lived in Bithynia, met together on the Lord's Day only. Otherwise, Pliny, would have said, that they were wont to meet on stated days, not on a stated day. Although this is not so much the Testimony of Pliny himself, as the Christians own, who confess that before Pliny, as he himself attests. Besides the Lord's Day, Epiphanius (in the Epilogue to his Books against Heresies) affirms that an Assembly on the fourth and sixth Feria; and Clemens (in his Constitutions) says, that a meeting together on the Sabbath Day, was instituted by the Apostles. But, as to what belongs to the Scarcions of the fourth and sixth Feria, we are informed from Tertullian in his Book of Jenninus, that they were merely arbitrary and at will not determined by any positive Law or Command. And although it was the Easterns usage to meet together on the Sabbath, yet 'tis manifest from Epiphanius, Socrates, and others, that in most Churches, Assemblies were not then held. There is an eminent passage of St. Jerome's, on the Epistle to the Galatians, Chap. 4. Et ne inordinata congregatio populi fidem minueret in Christo, &c. And lest a disordered Congregation of the People might lessen the faith in Christ, therefore some days are appointed, that we might all come together. Not that that day when we meet, is more solemn; but, that on whatever day there is an assembly, a greater joy may arise from the sight of one another. Valef.

And St. Basil likewise says, that the Lord's Day has its name from light, not because it was by the Heathens termed the day of the Sun, but because 'tis the day of the Lord, that namely wherein the Lord rose, and conferred on us Life and Light: and because on that day we received the Holy Spirit, the Enlightener of our minds. See Clement's Alexandrianus's Strom. Book 6. where speaking concerning the Sabbath, there occurs a most elegant passage, which for brevities sake I here omit. The Lord's Day therefore is the day of Light, both because on that day the Light was first created, and also in regard we on that day received the knowledge of the truth by the Holy Spirit, who fell upon the Faithful under the form of fire, and without division was divided, as Clement's words in the forementioned place. Valef.

And St. Basil likewise says, that the Lord's Day has its name from light, not because it was by the Heathens termed the day of the Sun, but because 'tis the day of the Lord, that namely wherein the Lord rose, and conferred on us Life and Light: and because on that day we received the Holy Spirit, the Enlightener of our minds. See Clement's Alexandrianus's Strom. Book 6. where speaking concerning the Sabbath, there occurs a most elegant passage, which for brevities sake I here omit. The Lord's Day therefore is the day of Light, both because on that day the Light was first created, and also in regard we on that day received the knowledge of the truth by the Holy Spirit, who fell upon the Faithful under the form of fire, and without division was divided, as Clement's words in the forementioned place. Valef.

But the Emperour himself pays an honour to this Victorious Banner, having experimentally found a Divine Efficacy inherent in it. For, by this [Standard] vast multitudes of the adverse Army have been put to flight; by it the Forces of invisible Demons have been subdued. By it, their insolence, who opposed God himself, was repress: by it, the tongues of slanderers and seditious Persons were silenced. By it the Barbarous Nations were vanquished. By it the frauds and mockery of Superstitious Error were exposed and detected. Lastly, to it (which is the sum and perfection of all Goods,) the Emperour paying a due debt as 'twere, has erected Triumphant Arches in all places of the Earth. And with a bountiful and Royal hand [bath founded] Temples and Churches, in honour of it: and has issued forth an Order to all Persons, that sacred Oratories should be built. In the very midst therefore of the Provinces and Cities, eximious Monuments of his Imperial magnificence were forthwith raised; and in a short time they shined gloriously in every Country, and manifestly confuted and exposed the impiety of Tyrannick Government. For those [Tyrants] having by a madness of mind been a little before hurried on to wage a War against God; like mad dogs, vented their rage against the lifeless Structures, in regard they were unable to effect any thing against God Himself: and when they had thrown down the Oratories from their vast height to the very ground, and had dug up their very Foundations; they made them look like a City taken by the Enemy. Such was the Tragedy of wickednesses acted by them: wherein they attempted, as 'twere to assault the Deity itself; but were soon made sensible of their own madness. For a short space of time had scarce intervened, when a Storm poured on them from Heaven, swept them away and in one moment rendered them invisible: in so much that, neither kindred, nor issue, nor any the least relique of their memory, was left remaining amongst Men; but, though they were numerous, yet in a minute, having first had stripes inflicted on them from Heaven, they all perished utterly, and became extinct. Such was the conclusion of these Mens outrageous Fury, whereby they had made an Insurrection against God. But this [Our Emperour,] who, armed with the Salutary Trophy, had alone fallen on the Enemies; (or rather, was not alone, for he who is the sole Emperour, was present with, and assisted him;) bath built new Oratories far better than those which a little before had been demolished; and bath made the latter much more magnificent, than the former were: one while adorning the City which bears his own name, with various Churches of God; at another time, honouring the chief [City] of Bithynia, with a most stately and most beautiful [Church.] He bath likewise grac'd the chiefs [Cities] of the other Provinces, with Ornaments of this nature. Moreover, when he had made choice of two eminent places in the East; the one in the Province of Palestine, because the Victorious Stream [of saving faith] has from thence, as from a Spring, diffused it self and overflowed

ἡ ἁγία πόλις ὁ ἁγίος ναός. The reading must be ἡ ἁγία πόλις; and we have rendered it accordingly. Indeed, in the Puckerian Copy, 'tis ἡ πόλις. Valef.

ἡ ἁγία πόλις ὁ ἁγίος ναός. It must be, ἡ ἁγία πόλις ὁ ἁγίος ναός. For ἡ ἁγία πόλις, Church, is understood; as 'tis apparent from His third Book concerning the Life of Constantine, Chap. 10. From whence it must be also here corrected, ἡ ἁγία πόλις, the chiefs [Cities] as the reading likewise is in the Puckerian Copy. Valef.

flowed all Nations;
"Korai of the whole East,"

In the third Book of his Life of Constantine, Chap. 50. instead of the verb korai, slaves is made use of. Indeed, this is a strange kind of an expression, ἐκ τῶν ὅλων ἀποικιστῶν from the whole colonies. And at first blush it may seem to be an Enallage, instead of ἐκ τῶν ὅλων ἀποικιστῶν from the whole colonies, which [City] the Surname of Antiochus does grace. Yet, if any one shall inspect the matter more narrowly, he will confess, that this was spoken by Eusebius, with a design to greatness the thing. For such was the largeness of the City Antioch, that it might seem rather to adorn its own Builder Antiochus, than to be adorned by his name. Valef.

crowned it with a variety of Ornaments. In this manner were these [Edifices] completed. But in the Province of the Palestinians, in that City heretofore the Royal Seat of the Hebrews, in the middle of the City, at the very Martyrium of our Saviour, [he has erected] a † Basilica of a vast height,

† See Life of Constant. Book 3. Chap. 43. note (c.)
That is, as the very place of Our Lord's Sepulchre. For to Eusebius is wont to call the Sepulchre of our Lord, as his appearance from his Life of Constant. Book 3. Chap. 33. Μαρτύριον does properly signify a place where the Reliques of Martyrs are deposited. The Latines have in like manner termed it Confessionem, Confession; which is the same with μαρτύριον. For μαρτυρία is in Latine called Confessio. Thus, in Anaglinis, we read the Confession of Saint Peter. Below, at Chap. 11, Eusebius calls it, τὸ τοῦ κυρίου ἀδελφίου μαρτύριον. Valef.

richly, and with all manner of magnificence. And he hath grac'd the Monument of the supreme Saviour, (which deserves an eternal Memory), and the Trophies that He raised against Death,

† Or, The οὐρανοῦ, salutary.
For, it is the voice of laws, τὸ τοῦ νόμου ὡς τῆς ὁδοῦ. Agony.
Which [Sign] gives the Emperor the reward of his piety, increases his whole Family and the time [of his Reign,] and confirms the extrall'd † the Combats and Victory of Our Saviour. All these [Caves] the Emperor has adorned magnificently, thereby declaring to all Persons the Salutary Sign [of the Cross,] and confirms the

at the very middle of the City, at the very Martyrium of our Saviour, [he has erected] a † Basilica of a vast height, and with all manner of magnificence. And he hath grac'd the Monument of the supreme Saviour, (which deserves an eternal Memory), and the Trophies that He raised against Death, with Ornaments that are inexpressible. And having selected three places in that Country, which are honoured with three Mystick Caves, He has beautified, each of them with magnificent Structures: to * that Cave wherein [Our Saviour] first made his Divine appearance, he hath assigned a besting honour: in the other, he has illustrated the memory of his last Assumption, in the Top of the Mount: but in that Cave, which is in the midst between the other two, he has extoll'd † the Combats and Victory of Our Saviour. All these [Caves] the Emperor has adorned magnificently, thereby declaring to all Persons the Salutary Sign [of the Cross,] and confirms the

the other in the Metropolis which graces the name of Antiochus: in this latter, as 'twere in the head of all the Provinces of that Tract, he hath consecrated [to God] a * most

Or, glorious and matchless Structure, in respect both of its Largeness and Beauty. For he hath encompassed the whole Temple, with a large circuit on the out side: but within, he hath raised the Basilica it self to an immense height, and has built it in an Eight-square figure, and has variously adorned it; and having surrounded it on all sides with many lodging Rooms and Exhedræ, has a † Basilica of a vast height, and with all manner of magnificence. And he hath grac'd the Monument of the supreme Saviour, (which deserves an eternal Memory), and the Trophies that He raised against Death, with Ornaments that are inexpressible. And having selected three places in that Country, which are honoured with three Mystick Caves, He has beautified, each of them with magnificent Structures: to * that Cave wherein [Our Saviour] first made his Divine appearance, he hath assigned a besting honour: in the other, he has illustrated the memory of his last Assumption, in the Top of the Mount: but in that Cave, which is in the midst between the other two, he has extoll'd † the Combats and Victory of Our Saviour. All these [Caves] the Emperor has adorned magnificently, thereby declaring to all Persons the Salutary Sign [of the Cross,] and confirms the richly, and with all manner of magnificence. And he hath grac'd the Monument of the supreme Saviour, (which deserves an eternal Memory), and the Trophies that He raised against Death, with Ornaments that are inexpressible. And having selected three places in that Country, which are honoured with three Mystick Caves, He has beautified, each of them with magnificent Structures: to * that Cave wherein [Our Saviour] first made his Divine appearance, he hath assigned a besting honour: in the other, he has illustrated the memory of his last Assumption, in the Top of the Mount: but in that Cave, which is in the midst between the other two, he has extoll'd † the Combats and Victory of Our Saviour. All these [Caves] the Emperor has adorned magnificently, thereby declaring to all Persons the Salutary Sign [of the Cross,] and confirms the extrall'd † the Combats and Victory of Our Saviour. All these [Caves] the Emperor has adorned magnificently, thereby declaring to all Persons the Salutary Sign [of the Cross,] and confirms the

† See Life of Constant. Book 3. Chap. 43. note (c.)

at the very middle of the City, at the very Martyrium of our Saviour, [he has erected] a † Basilica of a vast height, and with all manner of magnificence. And he hath grac'd the Monument of the supreme Saviour, (which deserves an eternal Memory), and the Trophies that He raised against Death, with Ornaments that are inexpressible. And having selected three places in that Country, which are honoured with three Mystick Caves, He has beautified, each of them with magnificent Structures: to * that Cave wherein [Our Saviour] first made his Divine appearance, he hath assigned a besting honour: in the other, he has illustrated the memory of his last Assumption, in the Top of the Mount: but in that Cave, which is in the midst between the other two, he has extoll'd † the Combats and Victory of Our Saviour. All these [Caves] the Emperor has adorned magnificently, thereby declaring to all Persons the Salutary Sign [of the Cross,] and confirms the Throne of his Empire by * many periods of years; * Or, Long, revering the Fruits and Rewards of Virtue, * Or, Rejoicing, for his most excellent Children, and for * his The reason own Kindred, and for their Defendants. And thus much this is a most convincing argument of the power he does, of that God, whom the Emperor does worship. After that he hath poiz'd the Scale of Justice with equal weights on both sides, and has assigned to Confession each Party a fit and proportionate Reward. For since the punishment due to impiety, immediately seized them, those who had assaulted and demolished the sacred Temples, Houses; and they were forthwith swept away, without any Stock or Kindred, without any House, added or Family. But this [Our Emperor,] who by Stock or Acts of Piety of all sorts, pays an Honour to his Kindred Lord; and who one while eructs Churches to all: on him; at another time, manifests and makes many of him known to his Subjects, by those Sacred Dalmatian Gifts which he hath dedicated to him in all and Han-parts of the World: is most certainly known to have him, and that most deservedly, the Father, who were server and Keeper of his Family, Empire, and Constancy. Race. In this manner have God's performances been made known, by the Divine power and the Son of his Brother. Valef.

Concerning which [Sign] the Discourse Chap. might be large, wherein they are well X.

acquainted, * who have been initiated in those Mysteries delivered to them by divine Persons. For, this * is that truly saving [Sign:] a thing wonderful indeed to be related; but, far more admirable to be conceived: in what manner, as soon as it appeared on earth, That alone hath obscured all those Fables, many ages since invented concerning the Gods; and hath delivered up Error, to darkness and oblivion; but hath discovered to all Persons that Intellectual Light (which had illustrated the minds of Men,) the one namely, and the true God. Therefore, all People, now changed to a better and more enlightened Condition, spit on the faces of their dead Idols; trample under foot the impious Rites of Dæmons, and deride that ancient Error handed down to them from their Ancestours. And on the other side, Men have every where founded Schools of sacred Literature, and are all trained up as 'twere in the Precepts of the saving Discipline: to the intent that, they may no longer dread * things Created, which are visible to the eyes of flesh; nor Creation, lift up their eyes to the Sun, Moon, and Stars, and stop in an admiration of those Bodies: but may confess him, who transcends all these, him who can't be perceived by sight, or any sense; to be the Creator of all things; and may learn to worship him alone. All which singular and extraordinary Blessings and Favours [conferred] on Men, had their rise from this Great and admirable Sign. By the power and virtue whereof, all those Ills which were before, now are not: and those [Goods] which before were not, are † every where resplendent, [deriving † Or, † Also, from] the Rays of Piety. Also, most of all Discourses, Precepts, and Exhortations to a sober and Pious Life, are Preach'd in the hearing of all Nations; yea, even the Emperor himself Preaches. And this is the greatest wonder, that so mighty an Emperor, does with so loud a Voice call out to the whole World, like some Interpreter

* Or, Μυστήριον Mystery.
The Translator renders it, in quibus sacramenta literarum professionis considerantur; which Version I don't approve of. Μυστήρια are the persons initiated, who were partakers of the Mysteries. But Μυστήρια are they who initiate other, and deliver the Mysteries to them. Valef.

* Or, Ψαλμοί Psalms.
The Translator renders it, in quibus sacramenta literarum professionis considerantur; which Version I don't approve of. Μυστήρια are the persons initiated, who were partakers of the Mysteries. But Μυστήρια are they who initiate other, and deliver the Mysteries to them. Valef.

* Or, Ψαλμοί Psalms.
The Translator renders it, in quibus sacramenta literarum professionis considerantur; which Version I don't approve of. Μυστήρια are the persons initiated, who were partakers of the Mysteries. But Μυστήρια are they who initiate other, and deliver the Mysteries to them. Valef.

to God the suprem King; and does invite all those Governed by Him, to the Knowledge of the true God. And that, in the midst of the Imperial Palace, the trifling and ridiculous Compositions of insipid Men [are not recited,] as the usage was heretofore; but the Priests and Ministers of God, persons conspicuous for their Piety, with * Royal Hymns and Praises do celebrate the Festival. That, the sole God, He who is the Emperour of the Universe, is declared and set forth to all; and that the Evangelical Word [who promisseth us all things which are good,] does unite Mankind in [God] the suprem King; shewing the glad tidings of His Celestial Father's being rendered propitious and benign to His Sons on Earth. That, Quires do Laud Him with all manner of triumphant Songs; and that the whole Body of Mankind doth join in The Chorus together with the Angelick Companies in Heaven: and, that rational Souls, using those Bodies wherewith they are clothed as some Mystical Instruments, [do Laud] Him with besitting Hymns, and shout forth Praises that are grateful to him. That they who are Inhabitants of the East, together with those who dwell in the West, are instructed in His Precepts, at one and the same moment of time: and, that those who have received the Southern and Northern Parts of the World as their Allotment, do sing † to the same melodious Tune: studiously following a pious Course of Life, by the very same Methods and Precepts: conspiring in the praises of one God, who is suprem: admitting of one Saviour, His only-begotten Son the Author of all Blessings: and [Lastly,] acknowledging one Moderator and Emperour on Earth, and His Sons belov'd by God. Which Emperour, like some skilful Pilot, sits on high above the Rudder, and holding the Helm in his Hand, Steers the Vessel in a straight Course; and by a prosperous gale of Wind, brings all those under his command, into a safe and calm Port. But God Himself, the suprem Emperour, stretches forth his right Hand to Him from above, and hitherto constitutes Him the Conqueror of all his Enemies and Opposers; increasing the Strength of His Empire by long periods of Years. But will hereafter make Him a Partaker of far more excellent Blessings, and will really fulfill his own Promises made to Him. Of which Promises the time present permits not a Re-benefit; but a departure out of this Life is to be expected: in as much as, 'tis not possible for things divine to be distinctly perceived and fully apprehended, by mortal Eyes and corporeal Ears, deliver to You * Secret and Mysterious Matters: not that we may teach You, who have been instructed by God: nor that we may disclose Secrets to You, to Whom God Himself, long before these our discourses, (not from Men, neither by any Man, but by the Common Saviour Himself, and by the Presence and Appearance of His own Divinity, which hath often shined upon You,) hath opened and revealed things Secret that were hidden: but, that we may bring wondrous Men to the Light; and may suggest to the Ignorant, the Reasons and Causes of Your Pious and Religious Works and Deeds. Indeed, those great Actions daily performed by Your Virtue, thorough the whole habitable World, in order to the promoting the Worship and Honour of God the suprem King; are celebrated in the mouths of all Mortals. But, the Monuments of Gratitude, which You have consecrated to Your Preserver and Saviour, in Our Country, (I mean in the Province of Palestine, and in that City, whence, as from a Fountain-head, the Salutary Word hath poured forth its refreshing Streams upon all Men;) and the Trophies of that Victory gained over Death, which You have erected in the Edifices of Oratories, and in the Dedications of Sacred Houses: [I say,] those lofty and most beautiful Works of an Imperial Magnificence, Structures truly Imperial, erected † about the Salutary Martyrium, a Monument that deserves an Immortal Memory; contain a Reason [for their having been built,] which is as not equally apparent and manifest to all Persons.

lified by Aldus, pag 613. but, which is ill done, 'tis confounded with Menander Rhetor's Book, which treats concerning the same Subject. Further, in the foregoing Chapter of Alexander, there is cited an Oration of the most famous Sophist Callicles, with this Title, πρὸς βασιλέα, written, if I mistake not, in praise of the Emperour Philip. Which I guess from hence, because Philip was an Arabian as well as Callimachus, and was of mean birth: which are the Qualifications of that Emperour, to whom Callimachus spoke this Oration, as Alexander attests. The time suits very well also; for Callimachus lived in the Reign of Gallienus, to whom Callimachus spoke this Oration, as Alexander attests. There is also extant a Βασιλικὸς λόγος of Libanius, written by him in honour of Constantinus and Constans, when he was at Nicomedia. Eusebius therefore alludes to these Orationes, and terms this Oration βασιλικὸν εἰσηγγελμα. So in the foregoing Chapter, he has made use of this expression, βασιλικὸς ὁμιλος πρὸς τὸν βασιλέα, in allusion to the same thing; which the Translator understood not. Moreover, this is to be remark'd, namely that this Oration is by Eusebius termed βασιλικὸν εἰσηγγελμα, that is, an Imperial Book, for 'tis indeed like a Book, than an Oration; because by its too great length it exceeds the measure of an Oration. Wherefore I can't persuade my self, that it was recited by Eusebius. Vale.

† Πρὸς τὸν βασιλέα. It must be, πρὸς τὸν οὐν βασιλέα, by your Virtue; and so the Translator read. Vale.

* Ἀπὸ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ μαρτύριου. It ought, I think, to be written, ἀπὸ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου μαρτύριου, about the Salutary Martyrium, as Eusebius has express'd himself in the ninth Chapter: where see what we have observed, at note (a.) It might also be, ἀπὸ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου μαρτύριου, about the Salutary Monument. For so it will be an elegant allusion, μαρτύριον εὐαγγελίου μαρτύριου, a Monument of an immortal Memory. And so Eusebius words it in the foregoing Chapter, μαρτύριον τῶν εὐαγγελίων ἀπὸ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου and the Monument—which deserves an eternal Memory. Nevertheless I have observed, that τοῦ εὐαγγελίου is by Eusebius simply and absolutely taken to signify the Salutary Sign of the Cross: σὺν τοῖς ἀποστόλοις τὸ εὐαγγέλιον by the Divine Virtue of the Salutary Sign, as it occurs in the very close of the ninth Chapter: where nevertheless, the Fuxerian Copy words it in this manner, εὐαγγέλιον μαρτύριον. Vale.

† Ὁ τὰς μάλα. I don't doubt but it should be written, ὁ τὰς μάλα ἀποδοῦναι ἑαυτὸν δίδωαι, contain a reason—which is not equally apparent and manifest to all Persons. Which Emendation is confirmed by the words of Eusebius that follow presently. All Persons, says he, are not acquainted with the reasons of those Works, which You have with great magnificence built near the Sepulchre of Our Lord. For the Christians do indeed love them, and ordain accounts do they admire You. But the Heathens deride such work as these. The reading therefore in the Fuxerian Copy is ill, thus, ὁ τὰς μάλα, &c. Vale.

Tide. The Greek Rhetorickian term Orationes concerning the praises of Emperours, βασιλικὸν εἰσηγγελμα; which the Latines are wont to call Panegyrics, Panegyrics. The method of these Orationes is delivered by Alexander Rhetor, in his Book πρὸς τὸν βασιλέα. The title of which Chapter ought to be πρὸς τὸν βασιλέα. This Book is extant among the Greek Rhetorickian pub-

CHAP. XI. BUT, Come on Victor Maximus Constantinus! * in this Imperial Book [written] concerning the Supream Emperour, let us now

'Tis certain, they who have been enlightened by the Celestial Power and Influence of the Divine Spirit, do know and understand [the true Cause of Your raising those Structures,] and on account thereof do deservedly admire You, and do stile that Your purpose of Mind, a blessed resolution, as proceeding from no other than a divine impulse. But, those who are unskilled in matters divine, in a most immoderate manner deride, and scoff at that work, by reason of their blindness of Mind: supposing it to be a mighty indecency, and a thing unfitting [the Majesty of] so great an Emperor, to employ His care about the Monuments and Sepulchres of Dead Bodies. For, would it not have been better (may some one of these persons say,) to observe and keep Our Ancestors Rites; and to appease the Hero's and Gods worship'd in each Province; and not to detest and abhor them on account of such Calamities as these? For, either they must

* Or, Desired. be * affected with Divine Honours, in the same manner with * this Person, by reason of that likeness there is in their miseries and infelicities: or else, if they are to be rejected, as being obnoxious to humane sufferings; 'tis just, that the very same sentence be pronounced against Him also. These words will peradventure be said by some one of those Persons, having first contrived His Brows, and in His own vain opinion thinking Himself wiser than others, and with much of gravity extolling his own Arrogance. To whom nevertheless, a pardon of his ignorance is vouchsafed, (and * Ομοίως τῷ θεῷ. He means Christ, as the Translator has well noted at the margin. These words are spoken by Eusebius, with an intent to personate the Heathen, who (when the Christian objected to them, the Adulteries, Quarrels, Slaughters, Death, and also Sepulchres of their Gods and Hero's) answered in this manner. If our Gods are to be rejected and despised on account of such humane Calamities as these, Your God is in like manner to be rejected also; whom you confess to have been condemned, to have been dead, and buried. Valef.

† Οὐ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ πάντα. I should choose to write, it is all ἀλλὰ καὶ πάντα μεταφυσικῶς, &c. For this seems to me more elegant. But the ordinary reading has the same sense; but 'tis not so expiellive, nor so elegant. Nevertheless, he expresses himself so hereafter in this chapter. A little after I read διδασκαλίας καὶ διδασκαλίας, Schools and places of Instruction; not διδασκαλίας, Doctrines. Valef.

the Divine Precepts: and like a most indulgent Saviour and Physician of Souls, persuades both Greeks and Barbarians; Wise and Simple; Poor and Rich; Servants and Masters; Governors and the Governed; the Impious; the Unjust; the Unlearned; the Unclean; the Blasphemous; to come, yes to hasten to a Divine Cure. With a loud Voice therefore proclaiming to all Persons Oblivion of their former Wickedness, thus He beretofore cried out, saying; * Come unto Me all that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. And again. I † am not come to call the Righteous, but Sinners to repentance. And He adds the reason, saying: [† For] they that be whole, need not a Physician, but they that are sick. And [in another place,] I desire not the death of a Sinner [so earnestly, as I desire] his Repentance. Hence it is, that only that Person who has been instructed in the knowledge of things Divine, (as soon as he shall have been acquainted with the reasons of that care and diligence employed about the fore-mentioned Works,) must of necessity acknowledge a far more excellent infinita than that which is merely humane, to have been in our Emperor, and must admire His Pious Disposition towards the worship of God; and must believe, that this Care and Sollicitude in reference to * the Monument of the Salutary Resurrection, was not merely exerted without Divine Appointment; but was from of ready the product of the Inspiration of that God, whose faithful Servant and Minister of good things, [the Emperor] boasts Himself to be. Being fully persuaded, Greatest Emperor: that these things are truly grateful and acceptable to You, I have taken a resolution, in this present Discourse to set forth to all Persons, the Causes and * Reasons of Your Pious

Fabricks: glorying in this, that I am as 'twere the Interpreter of Your Intention, and the Relator of Your Pious Mind: and that I teach all those things, which 'tis fit and agreeable every Person should be instructed in, whose desire it is to understand the Reasons of the Power of God, and of Our Saviour: on account of which [Reasons] He who excised long before, and had the sole Care and Management of the Universe, at length came down from Heaven to us: for which [reasons] be † clothed Himself with the humane Nature: for which [Reasons] Lastly, † He gave access even to Death: moreover, [that I declare] the reasons of that immortal Life which followed hereupon, and of the Resurrection from the dead; and not the reasons only, but the most evident and rational Demonstrations also, and the most indubitable Proofs, necessary to those who as yet stand in need of these things. But, now it is time, that we should here begin this our design'd discourse. They who have * ascribed, ed the worship of God the Framer of the World or transferred the supreme Governor over all things, to those things created by Him; and have honoured the Sun and Moon, and the other parts of the World, and the first Elements [of all things,] Earth; Water; Air; Fire; with an appellation equal to their Maker and Framer: and have termed those things, Gods, which neither ever were, nor had justified, nor had had any name unless they had been † present with the World: waited upon the Word of God who made the World: such Persons, in my judgement, seem to sin. The differ every little from those, who † passing by the Architect of excruciating Works in Imperial Palaces, greatly admire the Roofs and Walls, and * Ἐργον τοῦ θεοῦ. Without doubt it must be τοῦ θεοῦ, and a little after (as the words are placed in the Greek,) εἰς πόλιν ἀσπίαν βέλαντος: and so the Translator seems to have read, who renders it thus: Reminere tibi religionis, ad te respicientem rationem Christianorum hoc presentis sermone explicare constitui. But he has rendered the word ἔργον illi, which does here signify Works, or Edifices, which by the Latins are termed Opera, Works. For here Eusebius does manifestly treat concerning that Church, which Constantine had built at Jerusalem, in a most magnificent and admirable manner. Further, this passage does plainly confirm Our Emendation in note (d.) in this chapter, πᾶσι τοῖς ἀσπίαν ἔχον τοῦ θεοῦ. In the Fukanian Copy, the reading is, ἔργον τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ τῶν ἀσπίαν πᾶσι καὶ ἀσπίαν τοῦ θεοῦ ἀσπίαν βέλαντος. Valef.

† ὁ Θεοπρεπὴς ὁμοίως. You must add the word ὁμοίως, He clothed Himself with the humane Nature; which word is ill placed in the foregoing line. This Emendation is confirmed by the Fukanian Copy. Valef.

necessary to those who as yet stand in need of these things. But, now it is time, that we should here begin this our design'd discourse. They who have * ascribed, ed the worship of God the Framer of the World or transferred the supreme Governor over all things, to those things created by Him; and have honoured the Sun and Moon, and the other parts of the World, and the first Elements [of all things,] Earth; Water; Air; Fire; with an appellation equal to their Maker and Framer: and have termed those things, Gods, which neither ever were, nor had justified, nor had had any name unless they had been † present with the World: waited upon the Word of God who made the World: such Persons, in my judgement, seem to sin. The differ every little from those, who † passing by the Architect of excruciating Works in Imperial Palaces, greatly admire the Roofs and Walls, and sent, unless they had been brought to light by the Word of God. But this rendition is not expreitive enough of the propriety of the Greek Term. Wherefore, I would rather render it, Nisi verbo Dei adlustrati, unless they had stood by the Word of God. For 'tis a Metaphor, taken from Servants, who, when their Lord calls, are at hand presently. Therefore this verb aspien is a fit word to be used concerning the Creation of the World. For the Lord said, Let there be made, and they were made. Father, I have amended this place from the Fukanian Copy. For whereas the reading before was, ὁ θεὸς ἔκτισεν τὴν οὐρανὴν καὶ τὴν γῆν, I have corrected it, ὁ θεὸς ἔκτισεν τὴν οὐρανὴν καὶ τὴν γῆν. Valef.

† Or, Can't coming, or, neglecting. renders it, Nisi verbo Dei in Lucern educti fuisse.

the Paintings thereon which consist of a variety of Flowers and Colours, and the Golden Lacunaria, and the curious Workmanship thereof, and the Carv'd-works of Stones; and to those very things, attribute the praise and name of the skill of the Artist: whereas, the Cause of the admiration ought not to be ascribed to those things visible to the eye, but only to the Architect of those [curious pieces of work:] and in as much as 'tis to be acknowledged, that there are many works of great Art and Skill; but, that be only wife and skilful, who is the Author of the Being of such Works as these, and of their being beheld by many. Nor, would they seem in any thing to differ from very young Children, who should admire the Musical Instrument of the Harp it self, which consists of seven Strings; and not the Inventor Himself, and the Person stilled in its Harmony, on account of this his knowledge: or they, who neglecting him that had performed a brave piece of service in the Wars, should adorn the Spear or the Shield, with Triumphant Crowns: or [Lastly] they, who should honour the Forums, the Streets, the Edifices, the lifeless Temples, and the Gymnasias, in the same degree with the Mighty Emperour, the Author and Founder of the Great and Royal City: whereas 'tis not meet to admire the Columns or Stones, but rather the wise Builder himself of this great Work, and him by whose Laws and Sanctions it is Governed. In the very same manner also, they, who with the eyes of the Body behold this Universe, ought not to ascribe its Cause, either to the Sun, or Moon, or to any other of the Celestial Bodies: but must acknowledge all these to be the Works of Wisdom; being in the interim mindful of the Maker and Framers of them, and preferring his Honour and Worship before all other things whatever. But, from a view of these very [Works,] with an entire affection of mind they must reverence and adore him, namely the Word of God, the supreme Emperour [of this Universe,] who is not now to be perceived by the eyes of the body, but only by a pure and uncorrupt mind. For, in the Body of a Man, no one hath ever termed the eyes, or head, or hands, or feet, or the rest of the members of a wife and knowing Person, Wisdom; much less has any one termed the Pallium within which such a Person is wrapt, wife; or his house-bold-stuff, wife; or the Vessels necessary for a Philosopher's use, wife: but every prudent Person admires the invisible and disappearing mind that is in Main. In the same manner also, rather than [we should wonder at] the visible Works of this whole World, which are corporeal, and framed of one and the same matter; we ought to admire that undiscerned and invisible Word, the Framers and Beautifier of this Universe; Who is the only-begotten [Son] of God: Whom the Maker of all things Himself, a Being that far transcends every substance, hath begotten of Himself; and hath constituted Him the Ruler and Governour of this Universe. For, whereas it was impossible, that the transient and frail substance of Bodies, and the Nature of rational Creatures which had been newly made, should approach God the Supreme Rector, because of that infinity of distance whereby He excels them: (For He is unbegotten, plac'd above and beyond all things; inexplicable, incomprehensible; inaccessible; inhabiting Light that is not to be approached,) as the sacred Oracles tell us: but they stant, and a long way separated from that unbegotten Nature:) with good reason therefore, the All-Good and Supreme God, interposed as 'twere, the Middle, Divine, and Omnipotent Power of His own only-begotten Word. Which [Power] is most intimately and most nearly conversant with the Father, and abides within Him, and enjoys His Secrets: "nevertheless, it does most graciously condescend and let down it self, and in a middle manner adapts and fits it self to those, who are power-be far distant from the supremum height. For otherwise, it would be a thing neither pure nor holy, that He who is plac'd above and beyond all things, should be joyned with corruptible matter and Body, not that the power of the Son is different from the Virtue and power of the Father. For Eusebius does plainly call it here, the Divine power of the Son. But he gives it the name of Middle, because the Father does nothing by himself, but all things by the Son. Therefore ancient Divines attributed the Monarchy to the Father; but the Administration or sovereignty to the Son; as Tertullian informs us in his Book against Praxeas. See the Twelfth Chapter; where he does again term the Son, the Middle, and a certain Bond as 'twere, whereby things Created are coupled with the unbegotten Father. And least any one should think, that Eusebius deserves to be reproved here; Alexander Bishop of Alexandria (in his Epistle to Alexander Bishop of Constantinople,) expresses himself in the very same manner; ἀποφασίζων ὅτι ἐκ θεοῦ αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐκ τῆς οὐσίας αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐκ τῆς ὁμοτιμίας αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐκ τῆς ὁμοθεότητος αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐκ τῆς ὁμοειότητος αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐκ τῆς ὁμοφύσεως αὐτοῦ, ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ πατρὸς ἐγενήθη. (Book i. against Sabellius) declares the same thing at large. Non quia non sufficeret Pater, ideo genuit Filium: &c. Not because the Father was not sufficient, therefore He begets the Son: but because those things which were made were not sufficient to bear the power of him unborn. Therefore he speaks by a Mediator. Why? Because we could not approach him unborn. Nevertheless, Athanasius refutes these assertions incomparably well, in his third Oration against the Arians, pag. 397. Valef.

ἡ Περὶ τῆς ὁμοτιμίας. Doubtless it must be, περὶ τῆς ὁμοτιμίας, καὶ ἀποφασίζων; we have rendered it accordingly. Valef.

Therefore, the divine Word * came down and put himself into this Universe; and having taken the fended Reins of the whole World into his Hands, Governs and mixes it by an incorporeal and divine power; and, like himself a most wise Charioter, manages it according to what this, it seems good to Himself. Now, the demonstration of this Discourse is clear and perspicuous. For, if those parts of the World do subsist of themselves, which we have usually termed the first Elements, namely, Earth; Water; Air; and Fire; which consist of a nature void of reason, as we see with our own eyes: [or n.] if there be one matter [or, substance] common to them all, which those Persons skilled in such things as these, are wont to term the Receptacle, Mother and Nurse of all: and if that be without Form and Figure, wholly void of Life and Reason: whence [bath it happened,] (will any one affirm,) that there is in it Beauty and Ornament? Whence [proceeded] the distinction of the Elements? Whence † the concord and agreement of things contrary? Who bath commanded the heavy Element of Earth to be carried on the moist substance [of Water?] Who bath turned back the nature of Waters, which tends downward, and hath carried it about on high, in the clouds? Who hath bound the force of Fire, and [bath commanded it] to lie hid in wood, and to mix with things contrary to its nature? Who hath mingled the cold air with the hot nature of Fire, and by putting an end to the mutual fight between them, hath reduced them to concordance. ἡ Τὸς αὐτοῦ ὁμοτιμίας, καὶ ἀποφασίζων. I write, ὁ τὸς αὐτοῦ ἀποφασίζων, καὶ ἀποφασίζων, &c. or at least, ὁ τὸς αὐτοῦ ἀποφασίζων, &c. which latter reading we have followed. Valef.

* Arch'd-Rev'd.

† Places for Exercise, or, Schools.

|| A long Garment worn by Philosophers.

* Or ἵππερ αἰχμῆς, so were produced out of nothing, and are vastly dilated 'tis in the Fugesian Copy; instead of ἱππῆς. Valef.

† Or, kind, by inventing the * Eis ma- bath enlarged it ] to understand.

Who hath propagated man-benefit of success, [and the * long-continuing space of an immortal Life? Who hath formed the Male, and fashioned the Female, thus as we see them; and <sup>o</sup> having made them both up into one harmonious Composition, hath focused out one common principle of Generation to all living Creatures? Who has changed the liquid nature of Sperm, which of it self is corruptible, fluid, and <sup>o</sup> void of sense; and hath made it prolific and fit for the begetting of living Creatures?
 every infant works all these others besides these, which are, and superior to all admiration; that every day and hour effects [and corrupts] of all ordered and inviolable power very Work-house of Nature, gives them Life and Form. He also lifts up on high the fluid and heavy Nature of the moist substance, and afterwards, when by a change he has made it sweet, brings it down gently and moderately to the Ground: but at Stated Seasons he bestows it in a more plentiful manner. Then, like some skillful and excellent Husband-man, having sufficiently watered the fields with it, by dividing it into various Streams, and conveying it in several channels; and having mix'd the moist substance with the dry ground, He dresses and adorns the Earth in a different manner; sometimes, with

王 德 三 君 之 詩 意 謂 曰
 The Translator renders it, mod-estatibus, formosius enijuequodis ali- strand, formosius by illustrating it with all sorts of forms of herbs.
 Which Rendition I don't approve of. In my judgment, effulgens does rather mean the various figures of Countries. For, Europe has one sort of figure, Asia another, Africa another. Nor in these parts of the World, all Provinces have their figures, which God the Framers of this Universe hath given them; having divided the World, like a most pleasant garden, into various Beds. By the term may also be meant, the different Dresses and Garbs of the Earth. For sometimes the Earth is green with Grass, at others it is yellow with Corn; here it's buddy with Woods; there, 'tis planted with Gardens. Valde.
 王 德 三 君 曰。 I think it must be, 王 德 三 君。 That is, Why do I presume, is very em-phatical; when the Orator does as 'twere stop and chide Himself in the Fugitian Copy 'tis 王 德 三 君。 Valde.

another: whilst they debase and throw down even to the earth, the Ruler of all things Himself, and the Unbegotten and Supreme Nature; and joyn it with a Body, and with corruptible matter; and affirm that 'tis † wrap'd up in the midst, between Living Creatures that are rational and irrational, between substances mortal and immortal. Thus they.

BUT, The Divine Doctrine does assert, CHAP. XII.
Self, and the Cause of all things, is far beyond all Comprehension: and therefore, that it is in-effable, and inexpressible, nor can have a name given it; and that 'tis not only above expression, but all thought also. That 'tis not to be contained in place, nor is in Bodies: that 'tis exalted not in Heaven; nor in the Æther; restored in thiaman
ner; ἡ δὲ θεοῦ διδασκαλία αὐτὸ δι τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἐκείνων παύει τ' αὐτοῦ, &c. But, the Divine Doctrine does assert, that Etc. Valfc.

b The Ancients distinguished the Æther, from the heaven; and by that name of Æther, meant the Element of Fire. So Anaxagoras; Æristote tells us in his third Book of Cele: whom almost all Philosophers afterwards follow, except the Peripateticks. For the Peripateticks termed the substance of Heaven, Æther; (See Æristote de Mundo) and affirmed that was a fifth Element. The same is asserted by Heraclides, in Allegoriis Homeri. Peripateticks, say he, Alunt Naturam Cœlestium corporum altam eis ab igne, &c. The Peripateticks do say that the Nature of the Celestial Bodies is different from fire, and do term it κατακοσμητικόν (a nature that moves circularly,) and say that it is a fifth Element. For fire, which in Greek is αἰθήρ, does not naturally move upwards: but the Sun and Moon do so. But the Stoicks also themselves called the Element of fire, Æther; and thought that it was the principal part, (or the πρῶτον ὑπερσώματον) of the whole World. Conformis (or whoever else is the Author, speaks to this effect, in Chap. 1. de Naturali Institutione.

I read it in one word, thus,
 ἰσὺς παντοκράτης, and have rendered it accordingly. Eusebius, makes use of the same word above.
Valf.
 ὁ ἀποὺς τοῦ ἀποκρίων συ-νεψαζον. I had rather point it thus, ὁ ἀποὺς τοῦ ἀποκρίων συνεψα-ζον, and having made them both,
 &c. and have rendered it accordingly. Valf.
 ἡ καὶ ἀσέβεια, and void of reason. I would rather say, ἀναισθησία; which I have followed in my Version. Valf.

Who even at this things, and infinities are far above woman's generation? Who is it affects the Generation these, by an undignified? The two last words must be expunged, which creep in hither from the upper line. I might also be written, ἡσυχία ἡσυχία, the Generations and corruptions. Valef.

having in an inco-
self, both upward
also downwards to within his large
tude and Longitu-compacted and bo-

|| Or, A most wise and rational power, or faculty.

9 Τῆς διατριβῆς τοῦ διδασκ.
αἰνα συντάξας. They are terms properly belonging to Music, concerning which besides other Authors, (see Boetius de Musica Book 1. Chap. 24. and 25; where he treats concerning the Synapsis and the Diapason). But the Translator has rendered it, Lapides fracti, i.e. Stones that are smashed on both sides, and are even with the thickness of the wall, and are seen on both sides.
 Thence which rendition, there is nothing more absurd. Instead of the term διατριβῆς, it should I think, be γῆρας, Tones, or Notes. I had almost forgot to give notice, that at the beginning of this period the reading should be, ἁγῶν τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος, &c.
Valef. Concerning the term
Διατριβῆς, see Boetius's foremen-tioned Book, Chap. 21. The title of which chapter is, De generibus Canentiarum.

and invulnerable
of living Creatures
and Children. received the reading is truer, thus of Swimming Creatures. Valer

The Wonder-working Word of God, is most deviously to be looked upon as the Author of all these things. For the truly-omnipotent Word of God diffuses Himself self over all things; and in such manner extended Himself to an immense height, and a vast depth; and containing as 'twere, the 'Latin of the 'Universe, He bathed together this whole World with Which when He had made up into an Instrument containing in it self all sorts of Harmony, for His own use; with ' Reason and Wisdom He began to play upon the matter of Bodies, which is of it self irrational, without Form, and void of Figure; 'filily setting together and composing the disjuncts with the Diatones. He likewise Governs the Sun and Moon and the other Luminaries of Heaven, by measures most to be unfolded; and lead [them] in such a manner, as may be most useful and beneficial to this 'Universe. The same Word of God let Himself down upon the Earth also, where He produced living Creatures of every kind, and the variously shaded Beauties of Plants.

The very same Word of God penetrated into the deep Recesses of the Sea likewise, and inverted the Nature of Swimming Creatures: and there also He made infinite Forms and Varieties of all sorts.
He it is, who perfects contemplating the † Fœtus's condition in the Womb, within in ἐπεδύσε φύσιν, invented the Nature and innumerable

of living Creatures
and Children. received

Principale Solum quidam putant, ut Cleanthes, &c. Some think the Son to be the Principal of the World, as Cleanthes; and Chrysippus, the Father, by whose perpetual motion the things under it are held and administered. And the Father it self suffers nothing. So also Eusebius sets it below in this chapter; and St. Austin in his 147th Sermon de Tempore. Valef.

or in any other part of the Universe: but, that 'tis wholly without all things, and hid within some secret Recefs of the understanding. The sacred Oracles do teach, that he is to be acknowledged the Only True God; he who is separated from all Corporal Subſtance and foreign to all Miniſterial Oeconomic. Wherefore all things, are ſaid to have exiſted from Him, but not by Him.

Not that the Son is not the true God; but because the Name of God doth properly belong to the Father; in regard he is the Fountain and Author of the Deity. But, whereas Our Euſebius (in his Epistle to Euphratam) hath ſaid, that the Son is not the true God, (as Athanaſius and the Fathers of the ſeventh Synod do object againſt him) that is in no wiſe to be born with. For, although the Father be properly termed God; ſo that, whenever God is ſimply and abſolutely ſpoken, we preſently underſtand the Father: nevertheless, the Son is no leſs truly God, than the Father; in regard the Divinity of the Father and of the Son, is one and the Same. 'Tis certain, Euſebius (in his Firſt Book againſt Marcellus, de Eccleſiaſtica Theologia, Chap. 10.) has expreſly affirmed that the Son is the true God. Although in the following Chapter, he does a little diminiſh from what he had ſaid above. The words of Chriſt in St. John's Goſpel (Chap. 17. v. 3.) are theſe. This is Life eternal, that they might know Thee the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom thou haſt ſent. Valef. 'Tis the Learned Perſepius's opinion, that the word [Only] in that Teſt of St. John, does in no wiſe exclude the Son. For (as he notes from St. Baſil, Epist. 141. p. 927.) the words is and only are made uſe of in ſcripture, not only to diſtinguiſh and ſeparate the ſeſſe Gods; that they may be removed, who are not true Gods, and therefore are not Gods: ſee Petavi. Dign. Theolog. Tom. 2. De Trinit. Lib. 2. Cap. 4. Sect. 14.

'Tis certain, however, that ancient Divines attributed the Monarchy to God the Father; but to the Son, the ἐκκλησία or diſpoſition. Indeed, 'tis the Father's property to reign: but the Son's property, who is the Wiſdom of the Father, is to diſpoſe or ſet in order all things. Wherefore they affirmed, that Reſt and Beatitude was the Father's property: but Operation, the Son's. Not that the Father Himſelf does not work; but becauſe the Father works things unknown and ſecret; but the Son, things more manifeſt to us; as Marius Victorinus makes it out, in his firſt book againſt the Arians. And the Ancient Divines, before the Nicene Council, termed the Son ἐκκλησία and ὁρατός; but afterwards they avoided theſe Names, as 'tis apparent from St. Chryſoſtome in his Sermon de Sigilli. Valef.

But he himſelf, as The Emperor, within in ſecret and inaccessibile apartments, inhabits Light that is always unapproachable, and by the ſole power of his own Will does [every where] Determine and Command. For, from his being willing, proceeds the Exiſtence of every thing that is; and he not being willing, it is not. Now, he wills all things that are good, becauſe by his own Eſſence he is Goodneſs it ſelf. But God the Word, by whom are all things, iſſues from above in a manner inexpressible, out of his Excellent Father, as out of an everlaſting and immenſe Fountain, and flows forth like a River; * ſpreading his ſtreams all abroad, in order to the common preſervation of every thing. And (that αὐτοῦ αὐτῶν αὐτῶν. Doubtless it ſhould be αὐτῶν αὐτῶν, or αὐτῶν αὐτῶν, in a manner inexpressible, as Euſebius ſays a little lower. Valef.

* Καὶ αὐτοῦ αὐτῶν. 'Tis plain that it ſhould be αὐτῶν αὐτῶν. In the Fugorian Copy the reading is αὐτοῦ αὐτῶν, in the word. Valef.

* Or, Wholly overflowing, in order, &c.

I may make uſe of an inſtance taken from our ſelves,) as the inviſible and diſcovered Mind in us, (which, what, and of what ſort it is as to its Eſſence, no mortal ever yet knew;) reſiding like ſome Emperor within the private Apartments of his own Palace, does alone will, and conclude upon thoſe things that are to be done: but Diſcourſe, as 'twere the only-begotten Son, begotten by the mind in a manner that is inexpressible, and by a power not to be expreſſed, proceeds out of its Boſom, as from its Parent; and is the firſt Meſſenger and Interpreter of its Parent's thoughts to all Perſons; and makes a public declaration of thoſe things which its Parent has concluded on in ſecret; and actually performs its Parents Reſolves, conveying it ſelf to the Ears of all Men. Whence 'tis, that Men receive benefit from Diſcourſe: but no Perſon has ever beheld with his eyes, the latent and inviſible mind it ſelf, which is the Parent of Diſcourſe. In the very ſame manner, or rather in a manner far beyond all compariſon and reſemblance, the moſt Perfect Word of the Supreme God, in regard he is the Only begotten Son of the Father, not conſiſting of a power of pronounciation, nor as to his nature made up of ſyllables, names, and words; nor expreſſed by a voice which ſtrikes through the air: but exiſting the Living and Operating Word of the Supreme God, and ſubſiſting perſonally, as being the Power of God, and the Wiſdom of God; proceeds from his Father's Divinity, and [comes forth] out of his Kingdom. And, in as much as He is the Good Offspring of the Good Father, and the Common Saviour of all things, he paſſes thorow; and derives a miſture upon all [living Creatures:] and by Reaſon of his own ſiſtneſs of Reaſon, Wiſdom, Light, and of all Goods, he diſſuſes himſelf over all things, not only thoſe that are at hand and near, but them alſo that are at the remotest diſtance, whether on the Earth or in the Sea, or where ever elſe; if beſides theſe, there be in nature any other Seat or Habitation allotted to things. To all which, with the greateſt equity and juſtice he appoints Limits, and * Regions, and Laws, and ſtated Inheritances; and * Or, by his Royal power beſtows upon, and ſupplies each of them with thoſe things that are fit and agreeable. And to ſome of them he aſſigns [for their place of Reſidence,] thoſe

Arches that are above the World; * again, to others [He appoints] The Heaven for their Habitation; to others, Ethereal Manſions; to others, the Air; to others, the Earth. And afterwards, he does again remove them from hence to other places; and makes an exact enquiry into the lives of every one of them, and rewards their Morals, Behaviour, and Converſation. He likewiſe provides food and nourishment, not only for Creatures endued with reaſon, but for thoſe that are irrational alſo, which are of uſe to Men: * and to theſe Latter, he affords the enjoyment of a mortal and temporary Life; but to the Former, a participation of [a Life] immortal. In fine, he himſelf, as being the Word of God, effects all things, is every where preſent, and by his rational power does penetrate and paſs thorow all things. And looking up to his own Father, agreeably to his will and appointment, he governs and manages all inferior things, and which are conſequent to him, in regard he is the Common Saviour of all: exiſting in a manner The Middle [between both,] and joining that Subſtance which has an Original, with

Arches that are above the World; * again, to others [He appoints] The Heaven for their Habitation; to others, Ethereal Manſions; to others, the Air; to others, the Earth. And afterwards, he does again remove them from hence to other places; and makes an exact enquiry into the lives of every one of them, and rewards their Morals, Behaviour, and Converſation. He likewiſe provides food and nourishment, not only for Creatures endued with reaſon, but for thoſe that are irrational alſo, which are of uſe to Men: * and to theſe Latter, he affords the enjoyment of a mortal and temporary Life; but to the Former, a participation of [a Life] immortal. In fine, he himſelf, as being the Word of God, effects all things, is every where preſent, and by his rational power does penetrate and paſs thorow all things. And looking up to his own Father, agreeably to his will and appointment, he governs and manages all inferior things, and which are conſequent to him, in regard he is the Common Saviour of all: exiſting in a manner The Middle [between both,] and joining that Subſtance which has an Original, with

Arches that are above the World; * again, to others [He appoints] The Heaven for their Habitation; to others, Ethereal Manſions; to others, the Air; to others, the Earth. And afterwards, he does again remove them from hence to other places; and makes an exact enquiry into the lives of every one of them, and rewards their Morals, Behaviour, and Converſation. He likewiſe provides food and nourishment, not only for Creatures endued with reaſon, but for thoſe that are irrational alſo, which are of uſe to Men: * and to theſe Latter, he affords the enjoyment of a mortal and temporary Life; but to the Former, a participation of [a Life] immortal. In fine, he himſelf, as being the Word of God, effects all things, is every where preſent, and by his rational power does penetrate and paſs thorow all things. And looking up to his own Father, agreeably to his will and appointment, he governs and manages all inferior things, and which are conſequent to him, in regard he is the Common Saviour of all: exiſting in a manner The Middle [between both,] and joining that Subſtance which has an Original, with

Arches that are above the World; * again, to others [He appoints] The Heaven for their Habitation; to others, Ethereal Manſions; to others, the Air; to others, the Earth. And afterwards, he does again remove them from hence to other places; and makes an exact enquiry into the lives of every one of them, and rewards their Morals, Behaviour, and Converſation. He likewiſe provides food and nourishment, not only for Creatures endued with reaſon, but for thoſe that are irrational alſo, which are of uſe to Men: * and to theſe Latter, he affords the enjoyment of a mortal and temporary Life; but to the Former, a participation of [a Life] immortal. In fine, he himſelf, as being the Word of God, effects all things, is every where preſent, and by his rational power does penetrate and paſs thorow all things. And looking up to his own Father, agreeably to his will and appointment, he governs and manages all inferior things, and which are conſequent to him, in regard he is the Common Saviour of all: exiſting in a manner The Middle [between both,] and joining that Subſtance which has an Original, with

Arches that are above the World; * again, to others [He appoints] The Heaven for their Habitation; to others, Ethereal Manſions; to others, the Air; to others, the Earth. And afterwards, he does again remove them from hence to other places; and makes an exact enquiry into the lives of every one of them, and rewards their Morals, Behaviour, and Converſation. He likewiſe provides food and nourishment, not only for Creatures endued with reaſon, but for thoſe that are irrational alſo, which are of uſe to Men: * and to theſe Latter, he affords the enjoyment of a mortal and temporary Life; but to the Former, a participation of [a Life] immortal. In fine, he himſelf, as being the Word of God, effects all things, is every where preſent, and by his rational power does penetrate and paſs thorow all things. And looking up to his own Father, agreeably to his will and appointment, he governs and manages all inferior things, and which are conſequent to him, in regard he is the Common Saviour of all: exiſting in a manner The Middle [between both,] and joining that Subſtance which has an Original, with Εὐαγγελίου. ἡ ἀποστολή. The laſt word muſt be expunged; iſneſs you would rather write ῥῶς, living Creatures. For at this place he ſpeaks chiefly concerning living Creatures. Valef.

ἡ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἐκκλησία αὐτῶν. Write it in words diſjoined, thus, ἡ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἐκκλησία αὐτῶν, ἡ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἐκκλησία αὐτῶν, ἡ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἐκκλησία αὐτῶν; again, to others [He appoints,] &c. Valef.

Καὶ τῆς αὐτοῦ ἐκκλησίας. I doubt not but Euſebius wrote, ἡ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἐκκλησία ἡ ἐκκλησία αὐτῶν, ἡ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἐκκλησία αὐτῶν, ἡ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἐκκλησία αὐτῶν; in which manner the Tranſlator ſeems to have read; and we have rendered it accordingly. Valef.

Τὸ ἐκ. Τὸ ἐκ. The words seem to be transpo-
with

<sup>2</sup> Ev 71 as well in living creatures as plants; not only in rational Beings, but in Brutes; differentiating Ev 72 and distinguishing all things with an admirable variety, and by one and the same power plentifully supplying all things with all things: hereby Ev 73 most clearly demonstrating, that not an Harping; they consisting of seven Cords, but this one all Harmonious Universe, is the work of The One World-creating Word.

Valf.

CHAP. XIII. *P*roceed we therefore in the next place to unfold the reason, which moved this Almighty mighty Word to make his descent into this world. A sort of ignorant and unthinking men, not apprehending that this Word of God has the Presidency over Heaven and Earth, that he was begotten of his Father's Divinity, [the stream] as 'twere from that supreme Fountain it self, and is always present and conversant with this world; and that he exhibits most apparent and manifest Indications of his own Providence and Care in reference to men: have given the adorable name [of God] to the Sun and Moon, and to the Heaven it self and the Stars. Nor have they stop'd here: but have likewise deified a terrene Nature, and the Fruits produc'd from the Earth, and all manner of nourishment of Bodies: framing for themselves Images of Ceres, of Proserpina and Bacchus, and of infinite other such like [Deities.] Neither has it sufficed them to proceed thus far: but they have not been afraid of declaring the thoughts of their own minds, and Speech it self the Interpreter of those thoughts, to be Gods: terming the mind, Minerva; and Speech Mercurius: they have likewise named those faculties of the mind, whereby Arts and Sciences are acquired, * Moneta and The Muses. Nor have they stop'd here: but making every day new accessions to their absurdities, by reason of their transcendent impiety, they have deified their own Concomitants and perturbations of mind, which they ought to have had an aversion for, and to have cur'd by the Prescripts of Temperance. And even to their very Lust it self, and to the Mischievous and unruly disease of their Souls, and to those parts of the Body that are the Incentives to obscenity;

<sup>3</sup> and moreover, to that intemperance excessively prone to filthy pleasures, they have given the names of Cupido, Priapus, and Venus, and other such like appellations as these. Nor have they stop'd here: but debasing themselves to the Generations of Bodies, and to this mortal life here below, they have deified mortal men, and after death which is common to all, have termed them Hero's and Gods; imagining that

<sup>4</sup> Roll, or, the immortal and divine Nature, does * wander about Tombs and Sepulchres. Nor has this put a stop to their madness: but they have honoured all sorts of irrational Creatures, and the most noxious kinds of Creeping things, with the venerable Title [of Divinity.] Neither were they satisfied therewith: but they have cut down Trees, and hew'd out Stones, and have dug forth the

Adietus of the Earth, Brass, Iron, and other matter; whereof they have form'd Resemblances of Women and shapes of men, and figures of wild Beasts and creeping things: and afterwards paid them a divine worship and Honour. Nor have they put an end to their madness here: but have given the Name of Gods to those malignant Demons, which had hold in Images, and lay lurking within obscure and dark recesses, and who with greediness gaped after and swallowed Libations, and the stinking savours of sacrifices. Nor did they stop here: but by certain Ligatures of forbidden Crafts, and by wicked and compulsory enchanting Verses and charms, they allure and enticed those Demons, and invincible powers which fly about the Air, to be their Assistants and Familiars. Moreover, some Term of mortal men were deified by one sort of people; Magick others, by another. For the Greeks honoured Ar. Bacchus, and Hercules, and Esculapius, and remidur Apollo, and some other men, with the name of (B. 1. Hero's and Gods. But the Egyptians esteemed jorns Horus, and Isis, and Osiris, and other such like men as these, to be Gods. And these persons, and who on account of their transcendent sagacity, boasted of the invention of Geometry, Altrono-my, and Arithmetick; underfoot not, nor were so well skilled, (though in their own judgments they look'd upon themselves to be such) his wife and knowing men;) as to weigh and consider, the measures of the power of God, and [to examine] how great a difference there is betwixt Him, and a mortal and brutish Nature. Harpocraton in the verb καταδύσθαι. The Latines call them Ligaturæ, Ligatures. St. Austin's words, in his seventh Treatise on St. John, are these. Uque adeo, fratres mei, &c. In so much, my Brethren, that those very persons, who seduce by Ligatures, by charms, by the deccits and engines of the Enemy, mix the name of Christ with their own Charms. Origen (B. 4. C. 13.) calls it obligamentum magicum, a Magick Bond or Tye. Valf.

<sup>5</sup> Εκδύσθους τῶν ὁρίωντων αἰσθησέων. It must be made invidiosus, compulsory; from the Fuk. Copy. Valf.

<sup>6</sup> Πασιδευς. Tertullian in his Book De Anima, has termed them in Latine Paredores Spiritus, which he joins with the Catabolick and Pythobick Spirits, who were put into men by Magicians. Now, they were called Paredri Demones, who assisted men, and kept off diseases and unhappy accidents from them. This we are told by Tertullian (in his Apolog. Chap. 23.) in these words. Si & homina immittunt, habentes simul invitatorum angelorum & demonum assistentem sibi potestatem. For Magicians had Demons that assisted and obeyed them, who were their Paredri, Familiars; by whose help they performed many miracles. Besides, they put such Spirits into others, that they might either insule dreams into them, or be always present with them in order to their defence. The former sort of Spirits they termed invitantes, sencers or causers of Dreams: the Latter they call magides, Assistants or Familiars. Sometimes also, by Magick charms they threw boys against the ground, who being afterwards raised, as 'twere from a Fit of the falling-sickness, foretold things future to those that consulted them. Which thing they performed by Catabolick Spirits, as Hieronymus has rightly remarked at Tertullian's Apology. Front hee Salmassius's mistake is made apparent, who (in his notes on Sparianus, pag. 49.) affirms, that those were termed Paredri, who from being men were reckoned amongst the Gods, and were made Assistants to the Gods. Which opinion of Salmassius, Geshofred has embraced in his notes on Tertullian's second Book ad Nationes. Turnebus (B. 26. Adversar.) is much righter; for he that renders it malus genius, evil Geni: whereas notwithstanding, the God Genii, and αἰσθησέων were so termed, as Lucian writes concerning Hephæstion. Lastly, they usually termed the Infernal Gods, not the Celestial, Paredri; which being not observed by Salmassius, was the occasion of his mistake. See Demosthenes in Oration. Funeral about the close: and Diodorus Siculus, B. 1. pag. 45. and lastly Rufinus's Ecclesi. History B. 2. Chap. 13. From which Authors 'tis plain, that the Infernal Gods were termed Paredri. Valf.

<sup>7</sup> Οὐκ ἔστι δὲ τῶν αἰσθησέων. I read ὡς τῶν αἰσθησέων; however, &c. Which though a small fault, yet ought not to have been omitted. Valf.

<sup>8</sup> Πασιδευς in Εὐφρων. Here the words seem to be misplaced. I read therefore, ἐν Εὐφρων, ὅτι οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν τῇ Εὐφρων, &c. Which way of writing this place, we have followed in our Version. In the Fuk. Copy, this passage is written thus, πασιδευς τῶν αἰσθησέων, ἀπορροῖας δὲ αἰσθησέων αἰσθησέων, τῶν αἰσθησέων ἐν Εὐφρων, &c. Which reading I don't approve of. Valf.

For, as the Rays of the Sun (which though they fill all places, and touch Bodies that are dead and impure, yet) suffer nothing therefrom: so, and in a far more excellent manner also, the incorporeal Power of God The Word, neither suffers any thing, nor is He sensible of any detriment in reference to His own Essence, nor does That ever exist worse than It Self, * when, being Spiritual, it touches a Body. In this manner therefore the Common Saviour of all, exhibited Himself Beneficent and Salutory to all: demonstrating his Wisdom by the Instrument of an humane Body which he had assumed, no otherwise than a Musician [does shew his Skill] by an Harp. We are told in the Fables of the Greeks, that Orpheus by melody appeased all sorts of Wild-beasts and mitigated the rage of savage Monsters, by His skilful strokes on the Chords of his Instrument. And this is both commonly reported amongst the Greeks, and also believ'd to be true; namely, that the lifeless Harp tam'd the Wild-beasts;

* Or, When It incorporeally touches a Body.

Καὶ διὰ τὴν τὴν ἀνθρώπου τὴν οὐρανίου τὴν ἀνθρώπου, καὶ τὴν ἀνθρώπου. Which words Valefius renders thus, Et quoniam Spiritus Sanctus delimitat immutabile, and that is changed the Oakes ravish'd with the sweetness of its melody. Chrysostomus and Cyprianus render this clause thus, tum arborea (quæ fagi vocantur) musica suavitatē delimitat, sinus suos mutare solent, also the Trees (which are termed Beeches) pleased with the sweetness of its Music, are more to change their Site. Perhaps the reading should be, οὐ δὲ τὴν ἀνθρώπου τὴν ἀνθρώπου.

Ἄνθρωπος τὴν ἀνθρώπου τὴν ἀνθρώπου. Eusebius terms the Humane Nature which Christ assumed, τὴν ἀνθρώπου, in the same manner that the Latine Fathers are wont to speak concerning Christ that He assumed Hominem, Man. So Eusebius uses it a little above, where His Words are, διὰ τὴν ἀνθρώπου, by the Instrument of an humane Body which he had assumed. It occurs hereafter also Valef.

Ἄνθρωπος τὴν ἀνθρώπου. These words are wanting in the Fugesian Copy; and seem to me to have been added by a Scholiast. Valef.

* Or, Help.

this, in regard He manifested no less care towards Bodies, than towards Souls; even the eyes of Flesh beheld some stupendous Miracles, and Divine Wonders, and Works of His own Omnipotence. But in the Interim, by a corporeal Mouth and Tongue He desisted not from instilling sacred Precepts, into the ears of Flesh. In fine, He performed all things by the Humanity which He had assumed, on their account, who could no otherwise, than only by this means, be made sensible of * His Divinity. And these things He performed in obedience to His Father's Counsels, Himself contriving the same that He was before with the Father: neither changing his Essence, nor * losing His own Nature: not bound with the Bonds of Flesh; nor making His abode in that place where

* Or, Subj. performed in obedience to His Father's Counsels, Himself contriving the same that He was before with the Father: neither changing his Essence,

* Or, De. through streyng. making His abode in that place where yet I can't omit that reading which I found in the Fugesian Copy. ἡμεῖς αὐτοὺς οὐκ ἔμελλεν εἶναι, &c. which reading I think to be true. A little after, where the reading is ἡμεῖς αὐτοὺς οὐκ ἔμελλεν εἶναι, I have added a word from the Fug. Copy; where it thus words, ἡμεῖς αὐτοὺς οὐκ ἔμελλεν εἶναι, &c. where his humane Vessel was. Valef.

his Humane Vessel was; and altogether bindred from being present in other places. But, during that very interim wherein He was conversant with Men, by his Presence He filled all things, and was with the Father, and was in the Father; and in that very instant took care of all things together, as well those which are in Heaven, as them on Earth. Neither was He excluded, in the same manner that we are, from being present every where; nor hindered from performing divine Works, according to his usual Manner. But those things which were of Himself, He delivered to the humane Nature; but, on the other hand, He received not those things which were of the mortal Nature it self. He did indeed confer Divine Power on mortal Nature: but, on the contrary, He drew nothing from a Participation of the mortal Nature. Therefore, neither was He any way polluted, at such time as his Body was born; nor again, at such time as his mortal Body was dissolved, did He, in regard He is impassible, suffer any thing in reference to his Essence. For neither, if an Harp should by accident be broken, or the Chords thereof burst; is it * necessary that He Himself should suffer any thing. Likely, who plays upon the Harp. Nor if the Body of any wise Man happen to be punished, is there any reason we should affirm, that the Wisdom in that wise Man, or the Soul in that Body, is either mangled or burnt. * As the very same manner, and on a far better account, 'tis agreeable to reason we should assert, that the Power of the Divine Word received no damage, from the * sufferings of the Body: in as * Διευκρίνισις. It must be made clearer, was dissolved; as the reading is in the Fugesian Copy. Valef.

* Or, necessary that He Himself should suffer any thing. Likely, who plays upon the Harp. Nor if the Body of any wise Man happen to be punished, is there any reason we should affirm, that the Wisdom in that wise Man, or the Soul in that Body, is either mangled or burnt. * As the very same manner, and on a far better account, 'tis agreeable to reason we should assert, that the Power of the Divine Word received no damage, from the * sufferings of the Body: in as much as, neither that instance of Light, which we Christians have already made use of, does any ways permit the Solar Rays, which are shot from Heaven upon the Earth, and do touch dirt and mire and all manner of filth, to be polluted. For, though nothing binds us from affirming, that even these things are illustrated by the Rays of Light; yet we do not therefore [say,] that the Light it self is also bemired, or that the Sun is defiled by the mixture of Bodies: albeit these things are not wholly disagreeable to Nature it self. But, whereas that Saviour and incorporeal Word of God, is the Life it self and the intellectual Light it self; whatsoever thing He shall have touch'd by his divine and incorporeal Virtue, that thing must afterwards of necessity live, and be conversant in rational Light. * In like manner also, whatever Body He shall have touch'd, that Body is forthwith sanctified and illuminated: and immediately every disease, sickness, and Trouble departs from it. And those things which before were empty, receive some portion from his Fulness. Wherefore, He spent almost the whole Course of His Life in such a manner, that He might sometimes show his own Body to be lyable to the same Passions that we are; but at others, that he might declare ἡμεῖς αὐτοὺς οὐκ ἔμελλεν εἶναι. The word αὐτοὺς αὐτῶν, and that which follows αὐτοὺς αὐτῶν, must in writing be joyned together, as one word, that is, as Græcians term it, ὁ αὐτῶν. Further, in the Geneva Edition, this place was confus'd by the Printers fault; which we have reitored thus, ἡμεῖς αὐτοὺς οὐκ ἔμελλεν εἶναι, whatsoever thing He shall have touch'd. And so the reading is in the Fugesian Copy. Valef.

* Or, Without doubt it must be worded thus, ἡμεῖς αὐτοὺς οὐκ ἔμελλεν εἶναι, &c. and we have rendered it accordingly. Nothing is more certain than this Emendation. For the following words do plainly shew, that Eusebius speaks here concerning a Body. And thus I found it written in the Fug. Copy. Valef.

that He might sometimes show his own Body to be lyable to the same Passions that we are; but at others, that he might declare clare Himself to be God the Word: whilst He performed Great and Wonderful Works, as God, and foretold things future long before they happened, and demonstrated the word of God, (who was not seen by many,) by the things themselves; namely, by prodigious Works, Miracles, Signs, and Stupendous Powers; <sup>1</sup> and moreover, by Divine Doctrines, whereby He incited the Minds of Men, that they should prepare their Souls for [the Blessings] of that supernal Habitation which is beyond Heaven.

and moreover, &c. For so Græcians are wont to express themselves. And thus 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. Valef.

CHAP. XV. WHAT remains now, but that we give an account of the cause and reason of that thing, which is the chief and principal of all: I mean the much-talk'd-of End of His Life, and the manner of his Passion; and the grand Mi-

<sup>a</sup> Ἀναμνήσεως, remembrance.

It must be made ἀνακρίσιμος, re[f]erence, as the Translators seems to have read. Presumably, the reading must be ἀνακρίσιμος else, after an explanation, or consideration of which [particular] as 'tis in the Pukertian Copy. Vale.

The words are misplaced here, a thing which has frequently happened in these Books, as I have already told you. I write therefore, xaxyeudōn, autō tē tērā tū pīssē paxadīm, &c. and have rendered it accordingly. In Fukes's Copy, its xaxyeudōn, tērā autō, &c. Valf.

rhoēs reafous mentioned by made use of a mortal instrument, as of a * Statue moss becoming the Majesty of God; and, in regard He is the Great Emperour, having by its Ministry, as twice by that of an Interpreter, † been conversant amongst Men: He * Or, Image.

† Or, Lived an humane Life.

<sup>c</sup> 'Aḥḥānīs wān ḡarḡānīs. One of the two last words must be expunged. Kulef.

<sup>d</sup> καὶ ὅτι αὐτὸς ἑαυτῷ. Questions it must be written thus καὶ ἐτ' αὐτὸς ἑαυτῷ τὸ πρῶ-τον διαγράψω. Nor would He Himself, &c. the necessity of which emendation is plainly confirmed by the following words ἐαυτῷ.

His own Interpreter to Death and Corruption Nor would those things which He had performed against the * Devil, have been terminated by an illusory conflict and Combat with Death. Nor could it have been accurately known, whether He had withdrawn Himself: nor would He have been believed by those, who had not seen Him with their Eyes: nor could it have been made apparent that He has a nature superior to Death: nor could He have freed Moral Nature from [the infirmary of] its own Condition: nor would He have been † found thoroughout the whole habitable World: nor could He have prevailed upon His own Disciples to condemn Death: nor would He have procured for those who are followers of His Doctrine the Hope of a Life with God after Death: nor would He have fulfilled the Promises of His own Discourses: nor would He have exhibited agreeable Events to the Prophetick Predictions concerning Himself: nor [in fine,] would He have undergone the last Combat of all; which was against Death it self. On account therefore of all these particulars, as in much as 'twas wholly necessary, that His Asortal Instrument, after that sufficient Service which it had performed to the Divine Word, should have an end bestowing God allotted to it; therefore [I say] His Death is in this manner dispensed and ordered. * For, there remain two things [to be done by Him] at the end of His Life; either that He should surrender up His whole Body to Corruption and Rime, and so close His whole Life; 'like a Play as 'twere, with a most disgraceful Catastrophe; or, else, that He should manifest Himself to be superior to Death, and by the Assistance of Divine Power, should render His mortal Body, immortal: the first of these two was repugnant to His own promise. (For, 'tis not the property of Fire, to cool; dark Reason, to darken. So, neither is it the office of Property) of Life, to die; nor, of the Divine Reason, to all contrary to reason.) For, how is it agreeable to reason, that He who had promised Life to others, should be so negligent, as to suffer His own Instrument to be corrupted, and should thereafter surrender up His own Image to Destruction; and, that he who promised immortality to all, should address themselves to Him, should by Death be ruin the Interpreter of His own Divinity remaining

As if in the Greek the reading were, non tradidit. Eusebius's meaning therefore is this; whereas that one of two things was not necessary to be done by Christ in the close of His Life, namely, that He should either yield up His Body to be unlawfully consumed by death, or He should declare Himself to be superior to death, &c. You see how different this meaning is, from that of the Translator. For Christ has not only a two-fold reason for departing out of this Life, but one only's namely, Death. For, as the Poet says, Omnes una manner mors, one Death awaits all Persons. But in death, one of these two things remained to be performed by Christ, that he should either wholly submit to Death, and deliver up His Body to it as fane rich Spoils; or else should shew Himself to be above Death, and should refuse His Body, as a prey, out of the jaws of Death. Besides, Eusebius has shewn a little before, that death was voluntarily to have been undergone by Christ. For, had he been minded to withdraw His Body privately, and as 'twere by stealth, out of this Life; without doubt, Persons would have believed Him to have been a Ghost or Apparition, not a true and real Man. He produces other reasons also, whereby He concludes in this Manner. On account of all these reasons, He concludes as much as 'twas wholly necessary, that His Body should have an end, in befitting God allotted to it, Christ thus dispensed His own death, and one of these two things was to be done by Him in the end of this His Life, &c. as I have said already. And these words hang together very excellently well. But the Translator's Exposition differs widely from Eusebius's meaning, in regard Eusebius would demonstrate, that a single, not a double reason for departing out of this life was left remaining to Christ. Vale!

<sup>1</sup> Kāṭi tē pavaras dīcūmai. I should chuse to write, உவ்வாசு தீர-
முடி. அப்போது நான் எழுதிய கவிதே பாரிதே நீள வகையானது, and as of a Play, make a most reproachful Catastrophe [or calamitous conclusion] of His whole Life. Val.

as 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. Valcf.

The second thing therefore was necessary; I mean, that He should manifest Himself to be superior to Death. In what manner then was that to have been done? Covertly and by stealth, or * openly and <sup>Or, Wisely</sup> in the view of all? But so glorious an Achievement, the greatment, had it been performed by Him in the dark-<sup>est</sup> and in secret, and had it been unknown to any one, would have been advantageous to no body. But when divulged and † said amongst all per-<sup>† Or,</sup> sons, it would redound to the benefit and advan-<sup>Heard,</sup> tage of all, by reason of the miracle of the thing. Whereas then it was necessary, that his Instrument should be manifested to be above Death, and

† Or, Heard of

trên đây

whereas this was not to have been performed in secret, but in the view of Men; on account hereof it was, that He avoided not Death. For, had He done that, He would have been look'd upon as a Coward, and inferior to Death. But by His conflict with Death as with an Adversary, He rendered that Body which was mortal, immortal; after He had undergone that Combat for the Life, Immortality and Salvation of all Persons. And as <sup>h</sup> Εἰ τις αὐτοῦ. Something must of necessity be added, thus αὐτοῦ π. αὐτοῦ, some Vessel that can't be burnt. * In certain, in the Eusebian Copy the reading is, αἱ τρεῖς αὐτοῦ ἡνὶ καὶ πνεύματι αὐτοῦ τρεῖς; in which manner Christophorus read. A little after, in the Eusebian Manuscript 'tis thus worded, αὐτοῦ καὶ αὐτοῦ καὶ αὐτοῦ, pulling it out of the flames entire and unconsum'd; not as the reading is in the Geneva Edition, ἀσφάλεον αὐτὸ πνεῦμα. Valef.

<sup>i</sup> Or, Gain a belief of the Miracle; so Paulinus.

<sup>i</sup> Εὐ μαλα. ὁμοιωμένη ὅταν τὴν ἀνομήν. At this place ἀνομήν seems to be taken by Eusebius, for the death or passion of Christ. So he has said above in this chapter concerning Christ, ταῦτα οὐ καὶ αὐτὸς ἀ δὲ σώζων διανομήν, therefore [I say] His death is in this manner dispos'd and ordered. See what I have noted at the First Book of his Euseb. Hystor. Chap. 1. Note (b). * To certain Epiphanius calls the Sacrament of the Eucharist κατήχησις ἡ ἀνομήν, that is, the worship of the Lord's Passion. Valef.

<sup>k</sup> These words must be helpt by a favourable interpretation. For Christ left not His own Body during the least moment of time. In regard, as 'tis wont commonly to be said, that which He had once assumed, he never parted with. But he suffered His own Body to be for some time delatate of the Company of His Soul. Presently in the Eusebian Copy the reading is, καὶ τὸ σῶμα τὸ σωτῆρος αὐτοῦ. But I would rather write, καὶ τὸ σῶμα τὸ σωτῆρος αὐτοῦ, and surrendering up to death that which was mortal. Valef.

<sup>l</sup> For Christ rising from the dead, plainly declared that eternal Life, which He had preach'd to all Men, to be superior to every death. And this the Translator understood not; who, though his Version be otherwise elegant enough, yet frequently wanders from the true sense in so much that in this particular, the Version of this Panegyric may seem far meaner than the Translation of the Ecclesiastick History. Valef.

<sup>m</sup> Χρὶς δὲ τὸν ἀθανάτων. I had rather write ὁ τὸν, that is, he becometh. Which reading the Translator seems to have followed. Valef.

<sup>n</sup> ἡ γὰρ ἀ- Foundation of which Knowledge had before been laid by Him amongst all Nations. Which per- ἀνομήν. αὐτοῦ. See Story previous. What Eusebius says, namely that Christ before He dyed had sprinkled some seeds of the Knowledge of God amongst the Nations, may be understood two ways. For either He means the seeds which were by nature put into Mens Minds, whereby they are instructed in the knowledge of God; or else He means the preaching of Christ, who when conversant on Earth, had declared the worship of the true God, not only to the Jews, but to the Gentiles also. Valef.

<sup>o</sup> Πλοῖον μίσητος. Here Eusebius has made use of πλοῖον, instead of σκαῖον, or perisphaῖον; whereas nevertheless, πλοῖον is wont to be more frequently used to signify the greater Cable of a Ship. In the same sense with that here, he has made use of this word in his Book concerning the Martyrs of Palestine, Chap. 13. οὐκ ἔστιν ἡ πλοῖον καὶ βόσκον, a form and must evince instance to persuade me to believe, Clemens Alexandrinus uses the same word frequently. Chrysostome (in Hom. 1. On the Epistle to the Ephesians,) notes, that this is a common but homely term, whereby is meant a certain orderliness and elegance of what his words are thence, ὡς δὲ καὶ τὸ πλοῖον καὶ βόσκον, καὶ τὸ πλοῖον καὶ βόσκον. Valef.

<sup>p</sup> Κατὰ τὸν ἰδὼν. It must be κατὰ τὸν ἰδὼν πλοῖον καὶ βόσκον, &c. against the Error, &c. A little after I read, ἐκείνου ἀλλοῖς ἑστῶτα, showing them the Tropics. The Eusebian Copy confirms both Emendations. Valef.

<sup>q</sup> Ἐμψυχισμὸς αὐτοῦ καὶ αὐτοῦ. This place is not a little difficult. For how can what Eusebius says be understood, that that Life namely which Christ has promised, is the First-fruits of a future Life with God? Questionless, by the Life promised to us by Christ, Eusebius means the Resurrection on which, as 'twere the Entrance and Beginning of that eternal Life with God. Or rather he means the Resurrection of Christ's Body, which was the First-fruits and pledge as 'twere, of our Hope and Resurrection, as Eusebius tells us in the close of this Chapter. Valef.

<sup>r</sup> Or, Himself.

<sup>s</sup> And He not only raised His Mortal Body, after 'twas separated from His Soul, to a second Life; but propos'd that Trophy of immortality, which by His conquest of Death He had erected, to be viewed by all: and in His very death taught, that He alone was to be acknowledged the true God, who had been crown'd with the Rewards of Victory over Death. I could also assign you a third Reason of Our Lord's Death. He was a Sacred Victim, offered up for the whole Race of τὸν ἄνθρωπον. See GrosiusDe a Victim sacrific'd instead of the Flock of Men: ἀπαρτῶν. See GrosiusDe a Victim which routed and destroyed the Enemy of Diabolical Superstition. For, after that Satisfaction a Victim an eximious Sacrifice, namely the most Christ. Holy Body of Our Saviour, was slain for Man- Chap. 9. kind, kind, and offered up as the Substitute to ransom the Life of all Nations, who, being fore bound by the impity of Diabolical Error, stood convicted of Treason as were; therefore these Demonstrations, having first prepared your Ears in order to a candid bearing of our discourse. All Nations upon the Earth were heretofore divided, and the whole Race of Men was mingled into Provinces, into various Dominions over each Nation, and Place, into Tyrannies, and manifold Principalities. On which account, fights and continued Wars, Depopulations and Captivities, as well in the Countreys as Cities, never left them. Hence the numerous Subjects of Histories, Adulteries and Rapes of Women: hence the calamitous destruction of Troy, and those Tragedies of the Ancients, whereof mention is made amongst all Men. The Causes of which Calamities should any one ascribe to their error in worshipping many Gods, 'tis my sentiment He would not be mistaken. But, after the Salutory Instrument, namely the most Holy Body of Christ, (which appeared superior to all Diabolical Energy or Force; the word παλιος, fraud, being expunged as superfluous. Unless you would word it, as the Pagan Manuscript does, παλιος αυθειας, fraud and force. Valef.)

It must be made αδφωρ, impure; we have already taken notice of a mistake like this above. 'Tis certain, in the Euxetan Copy the reading is αδφωρ; and a little after, in the same Copy 'tis αδφωρ τις αυθειας. Valef. Salutory δαίμων, the salutory miracle. It must be δαίμων, sacrifice; which I wonder Christopheran perceived not. So Eusebius has said a little above, ισαυς αδφωρ τις αυθειας δαίμων, For, after that one Victim and eximious sacrifice, &c. Valef.

And this was the Victim delivered unto Death, concerning which mention is made in the Expressions of the Sacred Scriptures; which are sometimes worded in this manner, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the World: sometimes they run thus, || as a Sheep he was led to the Slaughter, and as a Lamb he was his Shearer [He was] dumb. And they likewise tell us the Reason, by adding these Words, He bears our Sins, and is tortured with pain for us: and we esteemed Him to be in labour and in stripes, and in affliction. But he was wounded for our Sins; and He was bruised by reason of our Iniquities. The Chastisement of our peace [was] upon Him; with his Stripes we are healed. All we like Sheep have gone astray; every one has wandered in his own Way: and the Lord hath delivered Him for our Sins. For these reasons therefore, the Humane Instrument of God the Word was sacrificed. But this Great High-Priest consecrated to God the Chief Governour and Supreme King, being something else besides a Victim; namely, The Word of God; The Power of God, and The Wisdom of God; soon recalled His mortal [Body] from Death; and presented it to His Father, as the First-fruits of Our common Salvation; having erected this for all Mankind, as the Trophy of that Victory which he had gain'd over Death, and over the Army of Demons, and [made it] the final Abolishment of those humane Victims which of old had been usually offered in Sacrifice.

† John 1. 29. || See Euseb. ch. 33 v. 7. 4. 5. 6. according to the Supra-erogant Perfection.

CHAP. XVI. But whereas these things are thus, 'tis now seasonable we should come to the demonstration: if indeed the truth of these matters has any need of Demonstration, and if it be indeed necessary, to produce confirmation of Deeds that are manifest and evident. Take therefore these Demonstrations, having first prepared your Ears in order to a candid bearing of our discourse. All Nations upon the Earth were heretofore divided, and the whole Race of Men was mingled into Provinces, into various Dominions over each Nation, and Place, into Tyrannies, and manifold Principalities. On which account, fights and continued Wars, Depopulations and Captivities, as well in the Countreys as Cities, never left them. Hence the numerous Subjects of Histories, Adulteries and Rapes of Women: hence the calamitous destruction of Troy, and those Tragedies of the Ancients, whereof mention is made amongst all Men. The Causes of which Calamities should any one ascribe to their error in worshipping many Gods, 'tis my sentiment He would not be mistaken. But, after the Salutory Instrument, namely the most Holy Body of Christ, (which appeared superior to all Diabolical Energy or Force; the word παλιος, fraud, being expunged as superfluous. Unless you would word it, as the Pagan Manuscript does, παλιος αυθειας, fraud and force. Valef.)

It must be made αδφωρ, impure; we have already taken notice of a mistake like this above. 'Tis certain, in the Euxetan Copy the reading is αδφωρ; and a little after, in the same Copy 'tis αδφωρ τις αυθειας. Valef. Salutory δαίμων, the salutory miracle. It must be δαίμων, sacrifice; which I wonder Christopheran perceived not. So Eusebius has said a little above, ισαυς αδφωρ τις αυθειας δαίμων, For, after that one Victim and eximious sacrifice, &c. Valef.

And this was the Victim delivered unto Death, concerning which mention is made in the Expressions of the Sacred Scriptures; which are sometimes worded in this manner, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the World: sometimes they run thus, || as a Sheep he was led to the Slaughter, and as a Lamb he was his Shearer [He was] dumb. And they likewise tell us the Reason, by adding these Words, He bears our Sins, and is tortured with pain for us: and we esteemed Him to be in labour and in stripes, and in affliction. But he was wounded for our Sins; and He was bruised by reason of our Iniquities. The Chastisement of our peace [was] upon Him; with his Stripes we are healed. All we like Sheep have gone astray; every one has wandered in his own Way: and the Lord hath delivered Him for our Sins. For these reasons therefore, the Humane Instrument of God the Word was sacrificed. But this Great High-Priest consecrated to God the Chief Governour and Supreme King, being something else besides a Victim; namely, The Word of God; The Power of God, and The Wisdom of God; soon recalled His mortal [Body] from Death; and presented it to His Father, as the First-fruits of Our common Salvation; having erected this for all Mankind, as the Trophy of that Victory which he had gain'd over Death, and over the Army of Demons, and [made it] the final Abolishment of those humane Victims which of old had been usually offered in Sacrifice.

† John 1. 29. || See Euseb. ch. 33 v. 7. 4. 5. 6. according to the Supra-erogant Perfection.

But whereas these things are thus, 'tis now seasonable we should come to the demonstration: if indeed the truth of these matters has any need of Demonstration, and if it be indeed necessary, to produce confirmation of Deeds that are manifest and evident. Take therefore these Demonstrations, having first prepared your Ears in order to a candid bearing of our discourse. All Nations upon the Earth were heretofore divided, and the whole Race of Men was mingled into Provinces, into various Dominions over each Nation, and Place, into Tyrannies, and manifold Principalities. On which account, fights and continued Wars, Depopulations and Captivities, as well in the Countreys as Cities, never left them. Hence the numerous Subjects of Histories, Adulteries and Rapes of Women: hence the calamitous destruction of Troy, and those Tragedies of the Ancients, whereof mention is made amongst all Men. The Causes of which Calamities should any one ascribe to their error in worshipping many Gods, 'tis my sentiment He would not be mistaken. But, after the Salutory Instrument, namely the most Holy Body of Christ, (which appeared superior to all Diabolical Energy or Force; the word παλιος, fraud, being expunged as superfluous. Unless you would word it, as the Pagan Manuscript does, παλιος αυθειας, fraud and force. Valef.)

It must be made αδφωρ, impure; we have already taken notice of a mistake like this above. 'Tis certain, in the Euxetan Copy the reading is αδφωρ; and a little after, in the same Copy 'tis αδφωρ τις αυθειας. Valef. Salutory δαίμων, the salutory miracle. It must be δαίμων, sacrifice; which I wonder Christopheran perceived not. So Eusebius has said a little above, ισαυς αδφωρ τις αυθειας δαίμων, For, after that one Victim and eximious sacrifice, &c. Valef.

And this was the Victim delivered unto Death, concerning which mention is made in the Expressions of the Sacred Scriptures; which are sometimes worded in this manner, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the World: sometimes they run thus, || as a Sheep he was led to the Slaughter, and as a Lamb he was his Shearer [He was] dumb. And they likewise tell us the Reason, by adding these Words, He bears our Sins, and is tortured with pain for us: and we esteemed Him to be in labour and in stripes, and in affliction. But he was wounded for our Sins; and He was bruised by reason of our Iniquities. The Chastisement of our peace [was] upon Him; with his Stripes we are healed. All we like Sheep have gone astray; every one has wandered in his own Way: and the Lord hath delivered Him for our Sins. For these reasons therefore, the Humane Instrument of God the Word was sacrificed. But this Great High-Priest consecrated to God the Chief Governour and Supreme King, being something else besides a Victim; namely, The Word of God; The Power of God, and The Wisdom of God; soon recalled His mortal [Body] from Death; and presented it to His Father, as the First-fruits of Our common Salvation; having erected this for all Mankind, as the Trophy of that Victory which he had gain'd over Death, and over the Army of Demons, and [made it] the final Abolishment of those humane Victims which of old had been usually offered in Sacrifice.

Time of Christ; so also, at one and the very same time, in regard One Monarch was constituted over all the whole Roman Empire, a most

* Or, Embraced all things.

shot forth at one time amongst Men; to wit the † Or, Pious Empire of the Romans, and the † Doctrine of Doctrine. Christian Piety. Before that [ Empire, ] some well-governed House and Family; and any one might make a Journey whither he listed, and travel to what place he pleased, and all imaginable security: and some might without danger pass from the Western to the Eastern Parts; again others might go from hence thither, as were to their own Country: And the Responses of the ancient Oracles were fulfilled, as likewise numerous other predictions of the Prophets, which, at present we have not leisure to cite: and moreover, those [Expressions] concerning the Divine Word, which run thus. * He shall have dominion * Psa. 72. 8. from Sea to Sea, and from the River, unto the ends of the Earth. And again † In his Days † Psa. 72. 7. Righteousness shall rise, and abundance of Peace. [And in another place:] † And they shall beat their Swords into Plow-shares, and [their] spears into Pruning-hooks; and Nation shall not lay hand on Sword against Nation, and they shall not learn War any more. These things were predicted, and many Ages since proclaimed in the Hebrew Tongue: which appearing to be actually accomplished in our Days, do confirm the Testimonies of those ancient Oracles. But if, besides these, you desired plenty of other Demonstrations, take them, not in Words, but in Deeds, and Realities. Open the Eyes of your own Mind, and set open the Gates of Thought. Forbear speaking for some time, and consider with your self. Ask, your self, and enquire as 'twere of some other Person, and make researches into the Nature of Affairs in this manner. What King from the utmost memory of Men; or Prince; or Philosopher; or Law-giver; or Prophet whether Greek or Barbarian, ever attained to so much Power and Authority, (I do not say after Death, but whilst He was yet living, and breathing, and was able to perform many things;) as to fill the Ears and Tongues of all Men upon Earth, with [the Glory] of his own Name? 'Tis certain, no person hath performed this, except only Our One Saviour, after that Victory gain'd over Death: when He both * gave his Disciples a Command in words, * Or, and also afterwards actually accomplished it, Spake a word to † Go therefore, said He to them, make Disciples † of all Nations in my Name. And when He had foretold and affirmed to them, that His Gospel † should be preach'd thoroughout the whole World, 23. 19. for a Testimony to all Nations; to his Words He forthwith added the actual Completion of the thing. Immediately therefore, and not after a long interval of time, the whole World was filled with his Doctrine. What then has He to return in answer hereto, who at the beginning of this Oration blamed us; especially in regard the Testimony † of the Eyes is superior to all manner of reasoning? But, who hath chased away that always-noxious and destructive Tribe of † Or, Demæmons (which heretofore prey'd upon the whole † Body of Mankind, and by the motion † Or, and impulse of Images shewed many Impostures and delusions amongst Men; by an irresistible † Or, and potent Hand, being as 'twere fierce and raging Wild-beasts, from the Flock of Men? What other Person besides Our Saviour, by an invocation of Himself, and by the purest Prayers in His Name put up to the suprem God, hath given a power of driving away the Remains of evil Spirits from among Men, to those who with purity and sincerity would follow † that † Or, Rule of Living and Discipline delivered by Him? The Life of that Philosophy delivered, † What standing this,

¶ And vnder-
Valesius
renders it
ex unâ
Transiunt
Nunc docet properly
signifie
Meta, the Goal of a Race.

* That is,
by the Doctrine of Christ
which asserted
God's Monarchy.

† Or,
Goods.

¶ Fitted or, mad up into peace, &c

in 'Eg ends pūrtas wess. Without doubt it must be written thus, 'Eg ends pūrtas wesseds, begotten by one or the same father. The mistake arose from the contracted way of writing. Valef.

and affectionately: in so much as from that time
the whole World seem'd in no point to differ from one

CHAP. XVII. BUT 'Tis here seasonable, that we should inspect the Performances of our Saviour in this our Age; and should contemplate the living Works of the * Εἰ δὲ ἡ ἑστέρω. It must, I think, be worded thus, ὅτι δὲ ἑστέρω, with an Interrogation; which reading I have followed in my Version. Valef.

enquire what those are? Hear them. Not long since, some Persons who had proclaimed war against God, with great obstinacy, and no less Power and Military Force, ruined and dug up from their very Foundations, the Edifices of his Oratories; and resolved upon rendering His Churches wholly invisible; and with all imaginable Engines and Stratagems fought against Him who is not to be seen with Eyes; casting and throwing against Him * the darts of impious Expressions. But the invisible God was avenged on them in an invisible manner. Immediately therefore, by one only Nod of the Deity, they became extinct; [those Persons I mean] who a little before lived delicious and pleasant lives and were thrice-bappy; who were celebrated amongst all Men, as equal with the Gods; who during many

* Or, Numerous words.

<sup>b</sup> Τὸν δὲ οὐρανὸν ἐκδιδάσκοντες ἐπὶ δὴτι. This place is corrupted with a double fault: nevertheless 'twas easy to restore it in this manner: διακρινόμενοι τὸν ἀρχαῖον ἐκδιδάσκοντες ἐπὶ δὴ τὸ μέγιστον ὑπερὸν πνευματικόν φῶτα τὸ ἐν αὐτοῖς, &c. had governed the Empire, &c. Eusebius meant Diocletian and his Colleagues, who (says he) had governed the Republic gloriously and happily, as long as they maintained a peace with God and with the Churches. But after they attempted to bring a war upon God, and to persecute his most Holy Worshipers; immediately all affairs were altered, and put into a worse posture. Eusebius says the same in the end of his Eighth Book. Valef.

periods of Years <sup>c</sup> had Governed the Empire gloriously and happily, as long, namely, as there was peace and friendship between them and Him whom they afterwards opposed. But when they changed their minds, and were so audacious as to engage in an actual war with God; and set their Gods in array against Ours, as their immediately, in one moment of time, and by the Beek and Power of that God whom they opposed, they all underwent the deserved punishments of their audacious attempts. In so much that, giving ground to Him with whom they were engaged in war, and turning their Backs upon Him, they acknowledged his Divinity as others had done; and bnfined to grant and permit the clean contrary to those things, which a little before they had attempted. But our Saviour forthwith erected Victorious Trophies in all parts of the Earth; and did again adorn the whole World afresh, with holy Temples and † Consecrated Oratories: and in every City and Village, in all Countries, and in the desert places of the Barbarians, † He dedicated Churches and Temples, to one God the suprem

* Cham. Leaders and Defenders:

† Or, Splendid Consecrations of Oratories.

* ἀποκρίνεται ὑμῖν. It must, I think, be ἀποκρίνεται ὑμῖν, &c. And we have rendered it accordingly. Valef.

King and Lord of all. Hence also 'tis, that those consecrated places are vouchsafed the name of the Lord; and take their appellation not from Men, but from the suprem Lord Himself. For, from Him <sup>d</sup> they have the name of Churches.

<sup>d</sup> Ῥεσπὸν ἐστὶν. I had rather read τὸς ἰσχυροτάτους, the name. Nothing occurs more frequently in Ecclesiastical writers, than the name of ecclesia or Dominica. Nor have only the Greeks termed Churches, thus, but the Germans also have borrowed this name from the Greeks. as Waldfridus Sir ab informs us in his Book de Rebus Ecclesiasticis, Chap. 7. Valef. Hence likewise we have our name for them in English, to wit Churches; and hence 'tis that the Scots call them Kirk.

Let Him therefore that has a mind to it, come forth and inform us, who, after so great a Ruine and Devastation, hath raised the sacred Houses from their Foundations to so vast an Height? Who [hath bestowed a Resurrection] upon those [Structures,] † wholly despair'd of as to their being rebuilt, and has vouchsafed them a Re-priv'd of edification, whereby they are become far more able, splendid and stately, than they had been before?

* Καὶ ἀνεστάντων αὐτῶν. In the Fugesian Copy the reading is, αὐτοὶ δὲ τὰ ἑα ἵστα ἵσταντο δὴμα, which we follow. Valef.

* Καὶ ἀνεστάντων αὐτῶν. Any one will easily perceive, though I hold my peace, that some words are wanting here. I write therefore, ὅτι καὶ ἀνεστάντων αὐτῶν ὅτι περὶ αὐτῶν ἀνέστη δὲ ἡ οὐρανοῦ, for thus any one, &c. which words must be included in a Parenthesis. Indeed Christophorus seems to have read so, as it appears from his Version. Valef.

† Τὴν αὐτὴν δὲ ἱερωτάτην καὶ ῥηστὴν ἀειμαρτυρίαν. Christophorus joyed the word μαρτυρίαν with the term ἀειμαρτυρία, which I don't approve of. For, by the term μαρτυρίαν, Eusebius means those Women, who having been deprived of their Husbands, consecrated their widowhood to God; and he distinguishes these from the Quires of Virgins. Farther, out of the number of Widows, Deaconesses and Peribysiteresses, were wont to be chosen, as Epiphanius attests in the Heretic of the Colyridiani, and in the Epitoge of his Books against Heresies. Whence 'tis, that at this place Eusebius terms them ἱερεῖες. For those Women did in a manner perform the Office of Priests; in regard they instructed Women that were to be baptized. But the reading must be, μαρτυρίαν τὴν ἱερωτάτην, also Women that were in Holy Orders; and so 'tis in the Fugesian Copy. These Women, before they could be chosen Deaconesses, were wont to be examined. Amongst other things, they were asked, whether they had washed the Saints feet; as Origen informs us in his third second Time on Satur John's Gospel. Valef.

Women, and numerous multitudes of Men, that they should exchange the food of their Bodies, for that rational food that agrees with their rational Souls, [which food is gotten] by † a use of Divine Lessons? Who hath taught Barbarians and Peasants, Women, Children and Servants and innumerable multitudes of all Nations, to despise Death; and to persuade themselves, that their Souls are immortal, and that * there is an Eye of Justice which inspects humane Affairs; and that they should expect a future judgment from God [to pass upon] the pious and the impious; and that for that reason, they ought to lead just, holy, and sober lives? not that should be ὁκνῶν ἐπαδελφῶν ὑμῶν, there is an Eye of Justice. For the

† Or, Divine Reading.

the ancients believed, that Justice had a most quick and sharp eye, which inspected all things that were done by men, and would never wink; which eye they appealed to as a witness, who had been any ways injured. Nothing occurs more frequently, both amongst the Greeks and Latines. The old Poets words in Statens are these.

Ἐγὼ δὲ μὲν ἐκδομένη, αἰεὶ δι' ὀφθαλμοῦ ἀνθρώπων ἀνέστανται, μὴδ' ὁρᾷεν αὐτὸν ὁ δαίμων.

We have not leisure to produce more authorities; nor is it at all necessary, in regard the thing is so well known. Yet Christophorus saw not the Emendation of this place. Valef.

For 'tis in no wise possible, that those who are not thus disposed, should submit themselves to the yoke of piety. All which egregiously performances, are even at this present accomplished, only by Our Saviour. But let us omit these things. Come on, we will now apply our selves to [A conviction of] Him whose mind is as hard as flint, by such interrogatories as these. Tell me, Friend! and

* Or, being utter words that are rational; * Let your expressions be the products, not of a foolish and stupid heart, but of a soul endued with reason and understanding. Tell me [I say,] after you have often and duly weighed the matter with your self. Which of all the Sages who in times past have been famous, was known in the same manner with Our Saviour, and † proclaimed so infinite a number of ages since, by the Oracles of the Prophets, amongst the children of the Hebrews, anciently God's beloved people? Who in their minds had a fore-knowledge of the place of His Birth, and of the times of His Coming, and of His manner of Life, of His Miracles likewise, of His Discourses, and of His famous actions, and left them on record in the sacred

† Prescriptions, declared.

h Hinc sacra scripta. Doubtless the reading must be, his utroque; in which manner also Christophorus seems to have read; and we have rendered it accordingly. Valef.

the Jews should be pursued and punished by an invisible Power, and their Royal Seat utterly demolished and overturned from its very foundations, and the Temple, together with all the Ornaments and rich furniture therein, levelled with the Ground. Who hath uttered predictions, i Ἀυτὸς π. ἐστ. It must be written πῆτα, with the accent cast back to the first syllable; which is done, as often as the proposition is set after the word. Evidently the reading must be, ἐκδομένη τῆς ἀφ᾽ ἑαυτοῦ, correspondent to the affairs themselves. For 'tis referred to the word ἀφ᾽ ἑαυτοῦ, predictions. In the Eusebian Copy 'tis ἐκδομένη. Valef.

* Math 23. * Behold, your house is left to you desolate, and, † there shall not remain a stone upon a stone in this place, which shall not be thrown down.

But concerning his own Church [be spake in this manner,] || I will build my Church upon a rock, and the Gates of Hell shall not prevail against it. * To have brought

† Ἐξ ἀλαίας καταλαβὼν τὴν ἀκρόν. I think a mistake of the Printer, I think, instead of καταλαβὼν, to have brought; be 'tis in the Eusebian Copy. Valef.

and Teachers to the whole world; what, and how mighty a thing does this seem to Thee? As for his promise to them, that he would make them

Fishers of men, he not only uttered it in words, but performed it actually and abundantly: and conferr'd on them so great a degree of strength and power, that they composed writings, and published Book: and the authority of all those Books was so great, that being rendered into all Languages, as well of Greeks as Barbarians; throughout the whole world, they are studiously read by all Nations; and the Contents of them are believed to be divine Oracles; of how mighty a prevalency is this, in order to a clear demonstration of his Divinity? How considerable likewise is that, namely that he foretold things future, and, long before it happened, assured his disciples, that they should be brought before Kings and Princes, and should be punished, and undergo the extremest of Torments, not for any fault all of their own, but only on account of their confession of his Name? Moreover, that he fitted and prepared them cheerfully to endure these things; and so fortified them with the Arms of Piety, that in their Conflicts with their adversaries, their minds appeared firmer than an Adamant; what powerfulness of expression is it, which that matter does not exceed? Likewise, that not only those who had followed him, but their successors also, and again they who immediately succeeded them, and at length such as have lived in this our present age, should with so undaunted a resolution

* unite the Forces of their minds; that although they had done nothing worthy of death, yet with pleasure would endure all manner of punishments, and every sort of Torture, on account of their eximious Piety towards the Supreme God; what degree of admiration does not this surpass? What King did ever continue his Reign during so vast a number of Ages? Who does thus wage war after death, and does erect Trophies over his Enemies; and does subdue every place, Country and City, as well Grecian as Barbarian; and does vanquish his Opposers by an invisible and latent † Hand? And, which is the Chiefest thing of all that hath been said, hitherto rehearsed, † that

Peace * by his Power procured for the whole world, concerning which we have already spoken what we judged agreeable, how should it not stop the mouths of all slanderers? In as much as, the Unity and Concord of all Nations, did really concur in time with the Preaching of Our Saviour, and with the Doctrine by him disseminated over the whole world: and in regard [both of them] had long before been foretold by the Prophets of God, I mean the † Universal Peace of the Nations, and the Do-† Or, drine delivered by Christ to the Nations. The whole length of the day would be insufficient for me, || Dread Sir! should I attempt to sum up in one, those most clear and cogent arguments of Our Saviour's Divine Power, drawn from the things which are at this present Visible. For no man since the Creation, either amongst the Grecians or Barbarians, hath ever exerted such mighty Efforts of a Divine Power, as Our Saviour has done. * But why do I say men? When at, even they who amongst all Nations are styled Gods, have not been endued with such a mighty power upon Earth. Is the Fa-

† Or, Emperor: Tis ὁ ἰσχυρὸς ὁ θεὸς ὁ ἀποκαλύπτων τὰ κρυφά. I think a mistake of the Printer, I think, instead of ἀποκαλύπτων, to have brought; be 'tis in the Eusebian Copy. Valef.

† Ἐξ ἀλαίας καταλαβὼν τὴν ἀκρόν. I think a mistake of the Printer, I think, instead of καταλαβὼν, to have brought; be 'tis in the Eusebian Copy. Valef.

* Math 23. * Behold, your house is left to you desolate, and, † there shall not remain a stone upon a stone in this place, which shall not be thrown down.

But concerning his own Church [be spake in this manner,] || I will build my Church upon a rock, and the Gates of Hell shall not prevail against it. * To have brought † Ἐξ ἀλαίας καταλαβὼν τὴν ἀκρόν. I think a mistake of the Printer, I think, instead of καταλαβὼν, to have brought; be 'tis in the Eusebian Copy. Valef.

THE INDEX

Of the Chief Matters contained in the Text of these

HISTORIANS.

The First Number shews the Page ; the Second, the Column.

A.

- A Bari or Abares, a Scythick Nation, being heavily oppress'd by the Turks, leave their Habitation, and come to the Bosphorus. 500. 1. at length lodge themselves on the banks of the Danube. ibid. They make an excursion as far as the Long Wall, and take many Cities. 519. 2.
- Abas embrace the Christian faith under Justinian. 486. 2.
- Abbas Bishop of Persia. 373. 1.
- Abbas son of Abdus, and Edessen, cured by Theodorus. 15. 1.
- Abgarus or Abgarus King of the Edessens, sends a Letter to Christ. 14. 1.
- Christ's answer to Abgarus. ibid.
- Abilabus a Rhetorician and a Bishop. 374. 2.
- Abramius Bishop of Urim. 304. 1.
- Acacius Bishop of Amida melts down the sacred Vessels, and with their price redeems captives. 379. 1.
- Acacius Bishop of Beræa in Syria. 365. 2.
- Acacius Bishop of Cæsarea. 247. 1. His draught of the Creed 279. 1. He is deposed in the Synod of Seleucia. 282. 2. He wrote Eusebius Pampulus's Life. 247. 1.
- Acacius, after Gennadius, is ordain'd Bishop of Constantinople. 431. 1. He is termed Patriarch and Arch-Bishop in the Emperor Basilius's Constitution. 452. 2. Also, in the Penitentiary Libel of the Bishop of Africa. 453. 2. what was transacted in his condemnation and deposition. 459. 1. 2.
- Acacius Bishop of Melitina declares Nestorius's Blasphemy in the Ephesine Synod. 404. 2.
- Acacius Bishop of Ararat. 438. 1.
- Acacius and Sirategius, Comites. 607. 2.
- Acisus Bishop of the Novatianists. 215. 1.
- Acullus Bishop of Alexandria. 211. 1.
- Adhor the Ammonite. 10. 1.
- Ademeri, Monks so called. 459. 2.
- Ades of Pilate. See Pilate.
- Adanmanes General of the Persians, is by Chosroes sent with an Army. 505. 1. besieges Antioch. 505. 2. burns Heraclea and Apamia. ibid. is vanquished by Mauricius. 512. 1.
- Adamanthus a Jewish Physician. 375. 2.
- Adanitus a Martyr. 146. 1.
- Adideus and Arberius Senators, punished with death. 500. 2.
- Adrian. See Hadrian.
- Adrianus and Eubulus Martyrs at Cæsarea in Palestine. 169. 1.
- Adrianus a Brother to Appianus, a Martyr at Alexandria. 161. 2.
- Adrianus a Tyrant. 211. 2.
- Adrian, that City heretofore term'd Jerusalem. 21. 1. 2.
- Adrianus Publius Julius Bishop of Decumum. 84. 1.
- Adrianus Praefect of Egypt. 122. 1. 2.
- Adrianus Frontinus Proconful of Asia. 83. 2.
- Adrianus the Temple at Agæ in Cilicia. 597. 2.
- Adrian an Heretic; surname'd Atheus. 270. 2. He is made Deacon by Leontius. ibid.
- Adrianus Arch-Deacon of the Constantinopolitan Church. 446. 2. Pri-micerius of the Notaries. 445. 2.
- Adum has neither beginning, nor end. 671. 1. whence so called. ibid.
- Adrianus's Opinion concerning the disagreement of the Gospels in reckoning up our Saviour's Genealogy. 9. 1. 2. concerning the History of Sufanna. 106. 2. His Books of Chronography, or Annals. ibid. A most learned man. 271. 1.
- Agabus a Prophet. 17. 2. His prediction concerning the famine was compleated under Claudius. 19. 2.
- Agapius Bishop of Cæsarea in Palestine. 138. 1.
- Agapius and Diocletian Martyrs of Palestine. 159. 1. 2.
- Agapius and Diocletian Martyrs at Cæsarea in Palestine. 159. 2.
- Agathar the Rhetorician, His History. 487. 1.
- Agathobolus, two of that name, surname'd the Masters. 137. 1. 2.
- Agbarus. See Abgarus.
- Agellus Bishop of the Novatianists. 279. 1. 309. 1. 334. 2. 335. 1.
- Agrippa made King of the Jews by Caius. 17. 2. He was also called Herod. ibid. and 19. 2. He kills James the Brother of our Lord. 19. 2. His death. 20. 1. 2.
- Agrippa Son of King Agrippa, made King of Judea by Claudius. 25. 2.
- Agrippa Caesar wrote against Basiliides. 52. 2.
- Agrippinus Bishop of Alexandria. 62. 1.
- Alamundarus Governour of the Saracens. 378. 1.
- Alamundarus King of the Saracens. 483. 2. Refuses to give assistance to the Romans, though confederates. 512. 1. Is banished by Mauricius into the Island Sicilie. 516. 1.
- Alarichus King of the Goths, takes Rome. 373. 2. make Attalus Emperor. ibid.
- Albius Procurator of Judea. 28. 2.
- Alcibiades a Martyr of Lyon. 75. 1.
- Alexander, the fifth Bishop of Rome after the Apostles. 50. 1.
- Alexander a Native of Phrygia, a Martyr at Lyon. 73. 1.
- Alexander a Montanist, condemn'd for Robberies. 83. 1.
- Alexander was Coadjutor to Narcissus Bishop of Jerusalem. 95. 2. and 96. 2. He founded an Ecclesiastick Library. 102. 2. He is crown'd with Martyrdom. 108. 2. 116. 2.
- Alexander Bishop of Alexandria. 211. 2. Having convened a Synod at Alexandria, condemns Arius and his followers. 211. 2. sends his Synodick Letter to all the Bishops. ibid. His Elogie. 220. 2.
- Alexander Bishop of Antioch. 373. 1.
- Alexander Bishop of Constantinople. 242. 2.
- Alexander a Native of Paphlagonia, a Novatianist. 276. 1. 2.
- Alexandrian Church, its Custom. 347. 1.
- Alexandrians, their humour Seditious and heady. 429. 2.
- Allegorical Expositions of Sacred Scripture. 21. 1.
- Alphus and Zacchæus Martyrs of Palestine. 154. 8cc.
- Amacius President of the Province of Phrygia. 296. 1.
- Ammon converted to the true faith by Origen. 100. 1. invites Origen to write, and supplies him with Notaries. 103. 1. was a Confeffour under the Emperor Maximinus. 105. 2.
- Ambrosius is ordained Bishop of Milsum. 374. 2.
- Amida a City of Mesopotamia, taken by the Persians. 470. 1.
- Amnia, a Prophetess. 82. 2.
- Ammon, Zeno, Ptolemæus, Ingenius, and Theophilus Martyrs at Alexandria. 111. 2.
- Ammon, Father of the Monks of Egypt. 316. 2.
- Ammonianum two women of that name, Martyrs at Alexandria. 111. 1.
- Ammonius was a Christian Philosopher. 101. 2. His Books concerning the agreement of Moses and Christ. ibid.

The INDEX.

- Ammonius* Bishop of Laodicea Pisidia. 365. 2.
Ammonius, Diocorus, Eusebius, and Euthymius, Monks commonly called The Long Monks. 357. 2. they come to Constantinople 359. 2.
Ammonius a Monk. 319. 1.
Ammonius a Poet. 357. 1. He recited his Poem before the Emperor, ibid.
Amphilochius Bishop of Iconium. 314. 1.
Anafstasius and Carsian Baths at Constantinople, whence so termed. 309. 1.
Anafstasius Bishop of Rome. 377. 2.
Anafstasius a Presbyter, Nestorius's Companion and Confident. 402. 2.
Anafstasius Bishop of Jerusalem after Juvenalis, subscribes to Basilien's Circular Letters. 450. 2.
Anafstasius is chosen Emperor from being a Silentarius. 454. 2. would suffer no innovation to be made in reference to the constitution of the Church. 465. 1. Ejects Euphemius and Macedonius Bishops of Constantinople. 465. 2. His name, after his death, was raised out of the sacred Diptychs, or Table. 469. 2. whilst alive, he was Anathematized at Jerusalem. ibid. He ordered these words to be added to the Hymn termed The Trisagium; Who hath been crucified on our account. 476. 1.
Anafstasius succeeds Dionysius in the Bishoprick of Antioch. 497. 2. His Character. 498. 1. His answer to the Emperor Justinian 498. 2. Also, his Letter to the Monks of both the Syria's concerning the faith. ibid. His Fare-well-Speech to the Austocians. ibid. He is ejected out of his See. 502. 2. He is restored. 526. 1.
Anachematism, what it is. 387. 2.
Anatolius Bishop of Laodicea. 126. 1. His Book concerning Easter. 137. 1. He is first made Coadjutor by Theodosius Bishop of Cæsarea. 137. 2.
Anatolius Bishop of Beræa. 304. 1.
Anatolius Master of the Militie throughout the East, builds Anatolius's Porticus at Antioch. 415. 2.
Anatolius Senator, a wicked man, is convicted to have sacrificed to Dæmons. 510. 1. He is cast to the wild Beasts in the Amphitheatre at Constantinople. 510. 2.
Anazarbus the Metropolis of the Second Cilicia, is ruined by an Earthquake. 481. 1. Being rebuilt by Justinus Senior, it is named Justinopolis. ibid.
Andreas the Apostle, Preaches the Gospel in Scythia. 30. 1.
Andronicus the Priests of the Nile, destroyed by Constantine. 614. 2.
Anneleucus Bishop of the Roman Church. 38. 2.
Anicetus Bishop of Rome. 54. 2. How highly he honoured Polycarp. 89. 1.
Anianus the Bishop of Alexandria. 33. 1.
Anianus is ordained Bishop of Antioch by the Synod of Seleucia. 230. 2.
Anniversary or Nativity of the Publick Genius of the City Cæsarea. 169. 1.
Anomæ, Hereticks. 304. 1.
Anonius and Exsuperius. 283. 2. 284. 1.
Anseres Bishop of Rome. 106. 1.
Anthemus is made Emperor of the Romans by Leo Augustus. 435. 2.
Antibolus Prefect of the Prætorium. 369. 2.
Antiochus Bishop of Constantinople, an Eusebian. 481. 2. By Socrus's persuasion he leaves the See of Constantinople. 482. 1. His Letters to Theodosius. ibid. is ejected out of his See by Justinian. ibid.
Antiochus Bishop of Nicomedia, is crowned with Martyrdom. 142. 2. 147. 2.
Antiochenopolis, Hereticks 357. 1. 358. 2.
Antiochus Servant to the Emperor Hadrian. 53. 1. Hadrian builds a City in honour of him, and infittates Games. ibid. He is deified. 303. 1. 1.
Antioch carried thither. 415. 2. Was shaken by a terrible Earthquake in the Reign of Leo Augustus. 432. 2. The Tetrapylum of Antioch. 434. 1. The Palace also and the Nymphæum. ibid.
Antiochus Bishop of Ptolemais, by Preaching gathers a vast sum of money. 369. 2.
Antipater Son of Herod the Afcalonite. 8. 2. 10. 1. made Procurator of Judea by Hyrcanus. 10. 1.
Antipater Bishop of Rhodus. 304. 1.
Antiochus, Zabinus and Germanus, Martyrs in Palestine. 165. 1. 2. Antiochus Bishop of Germa. 385. 2. is killed by the Macedonians. ibid.
Antoninus a Monk. 233. 2. His Apophthegm, 318. 1.
Antoninus Proconsul of Africa. 193. 2.
Apelles, an Heretic. 79. 2.
Apocæ a place in Phœnicie, infamous for the worship of Venus. 597. 1. 677. 1.
Apianus, a writer of the Roman Affairs. 513. 2.
Apian, wrote upon the Six-days-work. 89. 2.
Apocryph, whether written by Saint John the Evangelist, or by another. 130. 8c.
Apollinaris Bishop of Hierapolis. 66. 2. 290. 1. His Books. ibid. and 67. 1.
Apollinarius, two Laodiceans, Father and Son, 284. 1. 2. their Heresie. ibid. Their Books. 296. 1. 2.
Apollinaris is ordained Bishop of Alexandria after Zoilus. 495. 1. He was present at the fifth Constantinopolitan Synod. 495. 1.
Apollonia a Virgin of Alexandria, is made a Martyr. 110. 1.
Apollonides an Heretic, corrupted the Books of Sacred Scripture. 90. 2.
Apollonius, an Ecclesiastick Writer. 82. 2.
Apollonius underwent an illustrious Martyrdom at Rome. 85. 1. 2. Apollonides, a Philosopher. 101. 1.
Apollis, many termed such, besides the twelve. 13. 2.
Apollis and Christi, their images carefully preserved. 126. 1. 2.
Apollis and Evangelists, determined nothing concerning the Feast of Easter. 345. 1.
Apphianus a Martyr in Palestine. 159. 2. 8c.
Aquila of Pontus, rendered the Books of the Old Testament into Greek. 77. 2.
Aquila Prefect of Alexandria. 92. 2. 94. 1.
Arabianus Bishop of Antros. 304. 1.
Arabianus an Ecclesiastick Writer. 82. 2.
Aradius is proclaimed Augustus. 334. 2.
Archebius Son to Herod. 17. 1.
Archebius's disputation against Manicheus. 231. 2.
Archebius, Consular of Phœnicie. 239. 1.
Arada, a Town of Phrygia, Montanus's Country. 81. 1.
Aradaburius Master of the Eastern Militie. 411. 2.
Aradaburius, a General of the Romans. 378. 1. is sent into Italy. 381. 2.
Arcebius, a General of the Romans. 378. 2. vanquisheth the Parthians. ibid.
Arct, Probus, and Elias, Egyptians, Martyrs in Palestine. 166. 1. Arians were wont to call the Catholics Sabellians. 235. 1. Arians were termed Porphyrians. 221. 2.
Aristides wrote an Apology in defence of the Christians. 51. 1.
Ariston and John the Presbyter or Elder, Disciples of our Lord. 49. 2.
Aristobolus, King and High-Priest of the Jews. 8. 2.
Aristobolus, one of the Seventy Translators. 137. 2.
Aristonicus Bishop of Seleucia upon Telus. 304. 1.
Aristotele's Book, entitled Periphr. 302. 2.
Arius and Eusebius present a Libel of faith to Constantine. 237. 1. Arius asserts a new Opinion. 211. 1. 2. His followers. 212. 1. Their assertions. ibid. He writes a Book entitled Thalia. 221. 1. His Books are ordered to be burned. 221. 2. His fraud in subscribing. 223. 1. His death. ibid.
Armenus kinsman to Verina Augusta, is slain by Zeno Augusta. 462. 2. His Son Basiliscus, from being Cæsar, is by Zeno compelled to be made a Presbyter. ibid.
Arctasius, Chrysostome being ejected, is ordained Bishop of Constantinople. 366. 2.
Arctasius, Bishop of the Melitanis. 233. 2. Subscribers to Arctasius's deposition. 242. 1. 2.
Arctasius a Monk. 317. 1.
Arctasius is by Zeno advanced to be Augustalis and Dux of Egypt. 451. 1.
Arctasius's Heresie. 89. 2. The Author thereof was Theodosius a Tanager. 90. 1.
Arctobolus Bishop of Theffalonia. 331. 2.
Arsenius Bishop of Gaza. 251. 2. 261. 2.
Arsenius Bishop of Antioch. 96. 2.
Arsenius an Heretic, disciple to Theodosius. 90. 2. He mended the Books of Sacred Scripture. ibid.
Arsenius a Bishop of the Marcionites, was burnt for the faith of Christ. 166. 1.
Arsenius Dux of Phœnicie Libanensis. 469. 2.
Arsenius Quadratus, a Writer of Roman Affairs. 413. 2.
Arsen Son to Aradaburius. 381. 2. He, together with his Sons, is slain by Leo Augustus. 436. 1.
Asterius a Sophist. 2. 2. 1. Marcellus Bishop of Ancyra wrote against him. ibid.
Asterius Comes of the East, quarrells with Gregory Bishop of Antioch. 517. 2. He is killed in the Earthquake which ruined Antioch. 519. 1.
Asterius a Martyr. 125. 2. 125. 1.
Aster a Martyr of Alexandria. 111. 1.
Atabalaris Son of Theodosius King of the Goths. 486. 1.
Atabalaris Deacon of the Alexandrian Church. 216. 2. He is made Bishop of Alexandria. 229. 1. He is culminated by the Rufinians. 237. 2. is banished into the Gallia's. 242. 1. Goes to Rome. 259. 1. is restored in the Serdican Synod. 257. 2. Returns to Alexandria. 260. 1. dies. 315. 2.
Atabalaris's Book of Synods. 227. 1. His Book concerning the Life of Saint Anthony. 233. 2. 317. 1. His Letter to his Acquaintance. 272. 2. 8c. His Apologetick concerning his own flight. 291. 2.
Atabalaris Bishop of Ancyra. 304. 2.
Atabalaris King of the Goths. 326. 1. He surrenders himself to Theodosius. 331. 2.
Attalus of Pergamus, a Martyr at Lyons. 70. 1. 8c.

The INDEX.

- rigius*, ibid. He is carried back to his Kingdom by the Romans. 323. 1. He gives a Golden Cross to the Church of Saint Sergius the Martyr. 523. 2. He marries Sira a Christian Woman, contrary to the Persian Laws. 524. 1.
- Chrysanthus* Bishop of the Novatianists at Constantinople. 372. 1. 374. 1.
- Chrysaphius* Protector to Theodosius, an Enemy to Flavianus Bishop of Constantinople. 408. 2. 421. 2. why he was angry with Flavianus. 421. 2.
- Chrysagymn*, a Tax abolished by the Emperour Anastafius. 470. 2. &c. It was paid by common Whores every fourth year. ibid. Zofimus affirms this Tax to have been begun by Constantine the Great. 472. 1. Eusebius denies it. 472. 2. &c.
- Chrysopolis*, a City of Bithynia, a Sea-port of the Chalcedonians. 382. 2. 211. 1.
- Chrysotelia*, that is a Golden Tax, first brought up by Anastafius. 474. 2. &c.
- Church, its Gifts. 77. 1. 82. 2.
- Churches, very large and spacious built by the Christians before Diocletian's Persecution. 140. 1.
- Church of Acacius the Martyr at Constantinople. 368. 1.
- Church at Alexandria termed Cajareum. 376. 2. another Church there, called Alexander's. 377. 1.
- Church Anastafius at Constantinople. 331. 1.
- Church of the Goths at Constantinople. 2. 6. 2.
- Church is not wont fiercely to persecute Hereticks. 370. 2.
- Church, the disturbance thereof is usually accompanied with Tumults in the State. 329.
- Church, its affairs depend on the will and appointment of the Emperours. ibid.
- Church of Rome, its privilege. 212. 2.
- Church of the B. Virgin Mary at Antioch, was called Iustinian's Church, from the Builder's name. 512. 1. 518. 2.
- Church Library first founded by Alexander Bishop of Jerusalem. 102. 2.
- Circenfium*, a Cattle which is bred by the Rivers Euphrates and Abera. 305. 1.
- Claudian* Bishop of Ptolemais in Syria. 89. 1.
- Claudius*, a Noble Poet. 416. 1.
- Clearchus* Prefect of Constantinople. 308. 2.
- Clement*, Saint Pau's Companion, the third Bishop of Rome. 32. 1. 38. 1. His Epistle to the Cerinthians. 39. 1. 48. 2. He rendered St. Pau's Epistle to the Hebrews into Greek. ibid.
- Clement Alexandrinus*. 78. 2. 71. 1. 290. 1. was Master of the Catechetick School at Alexandria. 94. 2. 96. 2. His Books. 97. 2.
- Cleodius*, Hereticks amongst the Jews. 63. 2.
- Clement* is Deified. 302. 2.
- Cleopas* or Cleophas was the Brother of Joseph. 38. 1.
- Cile-Syria*, afterwards named Syria Secunda. 467. 2.
- Cameretius* of the Christians. 122. 2. 125. 1. Assemblies wont to be held in them. 172. 2.
- Conemidius* by the Emperour Mauricius is sent Master of the Milice into the East. 523. 1.
- Comites of the first and second Order. 606. 2.
- Communion of the Laicks. 113. 2.
- Conon, from being Bishop of Apania, becomes a Soldier in the Army of the Emper. 469. 2.
- Conon* Abbot of the Monastery of Saint Saba in Palestine. 495. 2.
- Constantia* Wife to Leontius, Sister to Constantine the Great. 236. 1.
- Constantianus*, Baths founded at Constantinople. 308. 1. 366. 2.
- Constantinus* Junior's Letter to the Alexandrines. 246. 2. His death. 247. 1.
- Constantine* saluted Augustus by the Soldiers. 149. 1. 209. 2. Sees the sign of the Cross in the Heavens. 210. 1. 440. 2. Erects the sign of the Cross in Rome. 177. 2. 544. 1. Invites his Subjects to Embrace Christianity. 467. 1. &c. His Empire was not Bloody. 476. 1. He entertains the Bishops at a Banquet. 581. 1. He forgives his Subjects the fourth part of the Tribute. 607. 1. On Easter-day he bestows Alms on all Persons. 613. 2. He abolishes the penalties of Single-life and want of Children. 614. 2. &c. during his Reign two Vices prevailed, Covetousness and Hypocrisy. 614. 2. He is Baptized at Nicomedia. 6. 8. 1. 243. 2. He dies on the day of Pentecost. 619. 2. His Funeral very splendid. 630. 1. &c. He was buried in the Church of The Apostles. 631. 2.
- Constantine* built two Churches at Constantinople, the one called Irene, the other The Apostles. 229. 2. 233. 1.
- Constantinus* Chorus Father to Constantine the Great, a most Religious Prince. 149. 1. He did not persecute the Christians. ibid. and 535. 1. His Clemency towards his Subjects. 535. 1. how he tried their zeal for the Christian Religion. 536. 2. when he died 209. 2.
- Constantia* a Mart Town of the Gazeti. 618. 2.
- Conjugal*, in which sense to be taken. 304. 1.
- Consulate of Paulinus and Julianus. 227. 2. of Felicianus and Trifonius. 244. 1.
- Consulate of Acacius and Proculus. 247. 1. of Marcellinus and Probinus. 248. 1. of Constantinus III. and Constantin II. 550. 2. of Eusebius and Refutius. 257. 1. of Sergius and Nigrinianus. 264. 1. 266. 1.
- of Constantinus Aug. VI. and Gallus II. 269. 1. of Constantinus VII. and Gallus III. 270. 2. of Arbeterius and Lolitanus. ibid. of Decianus and Cerealis. 278. 1. Of Eusebius and Hypatius. ibid. of Constantinus X. and Julian III. 282. 2. of Taurus and Elerantius. 283. 2. and 281. 2.
- Consulate of Julian Aug. IV. and Salustius. 299. 2.
- Consulate of Jovian Aug. and Varonianus. 304. 2.
- Consulate of Valentinian Aug. and Valeus Aug. I. 306. 1. 2. of Gratianus and Dagalaifus. ibid. of Lupicinus and Jovinus. 310. 1. of Valentinian II. and Valeus II. ibid. of Valentinian III. and Valeus III. 313. 2. of Gratianus II. and Probus. 315. 2. of Valens Aug. V. and Valentinian Junior I. 337. 1. of Valens VI. and Valentinian Junior II. 328. 1.
- Consulate of Zosimus and Olybrius. 330. 1. of Gratianus Aug. V. and Theodosius I. 331. 1. of Merobaudes and Saturinius. 337. 1. of Richomer and Claudianus. 337. 2. of Arcadius Aug. and Bauton. ibid. of Theodosius Aug. II. and Cynegius. 338. 1. of Tatianus and Symmachus. 341. 1. of Theodosius III. and Abundantius. 350. 2. of Acadius III. and Honorius II. 351. 1. of Olybrius and Probinus. ibid.
- Consulate of Cajarius and Atticus. 352. 2. of Honorius IV. and Eusebius. 353. 1. of Stillicon and Aurelianus. 367. 1. of Honorius VI. and Arifianus. 366. 2. of Stillicon II. and Aurelianus. 367. 1. of Arcadius Aug. VI. and Probus. ibid. of Honorius VII. and Theodosius II. 367. 2. 372. 1. of Bassus and Philippus. 368. 2. of Honorius IX. and Theodosius Junior V. 377. 1. of Honorius X. and Theodosius VI. 376. 2. of Monaxenus and Plintha. 377. 1. of Honorius XIII. and Theodosius X. 379. 2. of Alepleodius and Marinianus. 381. 1.
- Consulate of Theodosius Junior XI. and Valentinianus Cesar. I. 383. 2. of Theodosius Junior XII. and Valentinianus Aug. II. 383. 2. of Hierim and Arduaricus. 384. 2. of Felix and Taurus. ibid. of Theodosius Junior XIII. and Valentinianus III. 385. 2. of Bassus and Antiochus. 387. 2. of Theodosius XIV. and Maximus. 391. 1. of Arcovidius and Aspar. ibid. of Ipsidius and Senator. 393. 1. of Theodosius XVI. and Faulfus. 393. 1. and 357. 1. of Theodosius XVII. and Felfus. 394. 2.
- Coracio* an Egyptian, confuted by Dionysius Alexandrinus. 130. 1.
- Cornelius* a Centurion, the first of the Gentiles that was baptized by Peter. 17. 2.
- Cornelius* Bishop of Antioch. 63. 1.
- Cornelius* Bishop of Rome. 108. 2. His Letter against Novatus. 223. 1.
- Cornelius* Gallus the first Prefect of Egypt. 473. 2.
- Cornutus* a Philosopher. 101. 2.
- Cosmas* Bishop of Epiphania in Syria, refusing to consent to Severus's Synodick Letters, separates from his communion, and sends him a Libel of deposition. 469. 1.
- Councils always summoned by the Emperours authority, since they became Christians. 319.
- Councils in Asia against Montanus's Heresie. 81. 2.
- Councils, their usefulness and necessity. 547. 2.
- Council in Palestine concerning the celebration of Easter day. 86. 2.
- Council at Rome under Pope Victor, concerning the same question. ibid.
- Council of the Bishops of Pontus about the same affair. ibid.
- Council of the Bishops in Gallia about the same thing. ibid.
- Council of the Churches of Odrosena and Mesopotamia. ibid.
- Council in Arabia against the Errors of Beryllus. 107. 2. Another Council in Arabia. 108. 1.
- Council at Rome against Novatus. 112. 2.
- Council of Africk against Novatus. ibid.
- Council at Antioch about the Lapsed, and concerning Novatus's Opinion. 116. 1. 2.
- Council at Iconium and Synada concerning re-baptizing Hereticks. 119. 2.
- Council of Antioch against Paul of Samofata. 132. 2.
- Council at Rome about the Cause of Cecilianus. 194. 2.
- Council at Orleans concerning the same matter. ibid.
- Council at Alexandria under Arbafianus. 290. 1.
- Council at Alexandria under Theophilus, against Origen's Books. 360. 1.
- Council at Antioch. 248. 1. Draught of the Creed published there. 249. 1.
- Council at Antioch, celebrated by Acacius. 283. 2.
- Council at Antioch under Jovianus. 303. 2.
- Council of Armenum. 271. 2.
- Council of Constantinople. 242. 1.
- Council of Constantinople under Theodosius. 281. 1.
- Council of Constantinople under Theodosius. 331. 2. &c.
- Council of Constantinople against John Chrysostome. 365. 2.
- Council of Ephefus against Nestorius. 387. 1. 403. 1. &c.
- Council at Jerusalem. 240. 2. A second Council at Jerusalem. 263. 1.
- Council of the Macedonians at Antioch. 330. 2.
- Council of the Macedonians at Lampfacus. 366. 1.
- Council at Mallus. 271. 1.
- Council of Nice, or Nicea. 177. 2. &c. two reasons thereof. 215. 2. the Canon. 217. 1. Subscriptions of the Bishops, day and year when held. ibid. its Synodick Letter. 219. 1. &c.

The INDEX.

Council at Nice in Thracia. 275. 1.
Council of Novatians in the Village Bazum. 324. 1.
Council of Novatians at Savanum. 344. 1.
Council at the Oak against John Chrysostome. 363. 2.
Council at Seleucia in Ispahia. 278. 1. it was divided into two parts, a. was the Arminum Council. 278. 2.
Council at Sardica. 256. 2.
Council of the Bishops of Sicily. 312. 2.
Council of Synnum, 266. 1. Draught of the Creed published there. 266. 2. &c.
Council of Tyre. 239. 1. Depose Athanasius. 240. 1.
Council of Constantine under Justinian, on what account convened. 495. 2. The matters transacted therein. 495. 1. &c.
Council at Ephesus, the second there, over which Dioscorus Bishop of Alexandria presided. 468. 2. therein Eutyches is restored, and Flavianus condemned. 469. 1.
Council at Chalcedon, and the affairs transacted there. 421. 2. 423. &c. the Draught of the Creed published there. 425. 1. 2. An Epitome of the Acts of that Council. 437. &c.
Council of the Bishops of Asia in the City Ephesus under Basiliscus. 451. 1. the supplicatory-Libel presented by them to Basiliscus. ibid.
Creeds, the Draught of that published in the Nicene Council. 217. 1. 218. 1.
Creeds, how many were set forth. 281. 2.
Crescens is sent into the Galatia by Saint Paul the Apostle. 32. 1.
Crescens a Cypriote Philosopher. 60. 1. 2.
Crisp, the sign thereof salutary and vincible. 556. 2. 678. 1. Constantine used to seal his face with the sign thereof. 576. 2. He set up the sign of the Cross in the Palace. 593. 2. Sign of the Cross, the Defence and Guard of the Empire. ibid. the Amulet of Demons. 674. 1. its power and efficacy. 679. 2. &c.
Crosses of Silver in the Church. 319. 1.
Crofs, the salutary and vincible word thereof, in the City Apamea. 488. 1.
Cubus of the Nile carried to Serapis's Temple. 230. 2. Constantine orders it to be carried into the Church. ibid.
Culcianus a fierce persecutor of the Christians, is slain. 181. 2.
Curia a Scythian, commands the right wing of the Roman Army, and routs the Persians. 508. 1. He makes an irruption into the Persian Country, and winters there. 509. 1.
Cyrenica, a Region not far from Antioch. 467. 2. 497. 2.
Cyprian, to the Cartaginians termed the Feast-day of Saint Cyprian. 485. 1.
Cyprianus the Bishop. 112. 2. was of opinion that Hereticks ought to be re-baptized. 117. 2. &c.
Cyrillus Bishop of Antioch. 135. 2.
Cyrillus is ordained Bishop of Alexandria. 372. 2. His power more than sacerdotal. ibid. He drives the Jews out of Alexandria. 377. 2. He writes to Nestorius. 403. 1. He presides in the Synod of Ephesus. 404. 1. His Letter to John Bishop of Antioch. 405. 1.
Cyrillus is ordained Bishop of Jerusalem. 276. 1. being deposed, appeals to a greater Synod. 280. 1.
Cyriacus Bishop of Chalcedon. 363. 2. dies by a purrified wound. 366. 1. &c.
Cyrus King of the Persians. 133. 1.
Cyrus Bishop of Beræa. 235. 2.
Cyrus Prefect of the Prætorium, famous for his Poetry. 416. 1.

D.

Dacidicus, a Sea port. 314. 2.
Dadastana a place in the Confines of Galatia and Bitthynia. 364. 2.
Dalmatian the Caesar. 263. 2.
Dalmatus the Consul, son to Constantine's Brother. 238. 2.
Damas Bishop of Magnesia. 47. 2.
Damasius is ordained Bishop of Rome. 324. 1.
Damophilus or Demophilus what he wrote concerning the City Rome. 515. 2.
Daniel the Prophet, his praise. 651. 2. &c.
Doras in Mesopotamia, is built by the Emperor Anastasis, in the Frontiers of the Persians and Romans. 470. 1. 2. is besieged by Chosroes. 505. 2. &c. and is taken. 526. 1. is restored to the Romans. 523. 1.
Deceus, seven of them ordained by the Apostles. 15. 2.
Decius the Emperour's Edict against the Christians. 110. 2. His death. 650. 1.
Decuriones enrolled in the Registers of the Curia, were Senators at Tyrene. 475. 1.
Dedication of the Martyrium, or Jerusalem Church. 621. 2.
Demetrius Bishop of Antioch. 116. 2. 118. 1.
Demetrius Bishop of Alexandria. 86. 1.
Demophilus. See Damophilus.
Demophilus a Bishop. 272. 1. 273. 2.
Demophilus is made Bishop of Constantinople. 313. 2. is ejected by Theodosius. 331. 2.

Description of the Church at Tyre. 188. &c.
Description of the Jerusalem Church. 539. &c.
Description of the Dominion at Antioch. 591. 1. 680. 1. of the Church of the Apostles at Constantinople. 626. 1.
Despina, by that name the kindred of our Saviour were called, as were likewise those descended from them. 10. 1. They came from Nazara and Cochaba. ibid.
Dexippus an Historian, wrote the Wars of the Scythians. 513. 2.
Didymus a Blind Man. 310. 1. Three Books of his concerning the Trinity. 320. 2.
Didymus a Monk. 317. 1.
Dignamity by some not admitted to the Sacrament. 348. 1.
Diocæsarea a City of Palestina. 270. 1.
Dio Cassius brought down the Roman History as far as the Empire of Antoninus Heliogabalus. 513. 2.
Dionysius the Edict against the Christians. 151. 1. 543. 2. 151. 1. He and Maximianus Hercules resign the Empire. 209. 2. Dionysius runs mad. 143. 2. 660. 1. He dies at Salona. 210. 2.
Dionysius Siculus an Historian, continued his History to the Times of Julius Caesar. 513. 2. He wrote an Epitome of Libraries. 690. 1.
Dionysius Bishop of Tarsus. 334. 1.
Dionysius from being a Monk is made Bishop of Tarsus. 344. 1.
Dionysius Bishop of Cyrenus, was present at the second Ephesine Synod. 438. 1.
Diomedes, the Silentiarius. 432. 1.
Diomysia a Martyr of Alexandria. 112. 1.
Diomysius Aecopigia, the first Bishop of Athens. 32. 1.
Diomysius Bishop of Colinth. 64. 1. His Catholic Epistles. ibid.
Diomysius Bishop of Rome. 120. 1. 122. 1.
Diomysius the Ex-campularis. 620. 2.
Diomysius Halcarnassensis. 511. 2. 690. 2.
Diomysius Alexandrianus, Origen's disciple, was master of the Alexandrian School. 106. 1. is ordained Bishop. 107. 2. for the faith of Christ is banished to Tapefus. 109. 1. His Books. 116. 1. 2. 176. 2. 123. 1. He is banished to Cephære. 122. 2. He dies in the Reign of Galienus. 133. 1.
Diomysius the Book entitled Corona. 302. 2.
Diomysius Bishop of Alba in Italy. 271. 1.
Diomysius a Confessor. 112. 1.
Diocæus a Presbyter of the Alexandrian Church. 174. 1.
Dioscorus Bishop of Alexandria, presided at the second Ephesine Synod. 408. 2. He deposes Flavianus and Eulysius. 409. 1. He is condemned in the Chalcedon Council. 424. 2. He is banished to Gangra. 426. 2. A Libel of deposition is sent to him. 441. 2. He was not deposed on account of the faith. 445. 1.
Disciples of Christ, their order and names are no where found written. 13. 2.
Dius Bishop of Jerusalem. 96. 1.
Dius, Faustus, and Ammonius Presbyters of the Alexandrian Church, Martyrs. 148. 1.
Doctæ, Hereticks. 97. 1.
Doctrines, or Institutions of the Apostles, an Apocryphal Book. 43. 1.
Dolichianus Bishop of Jerusalem. 76. 2.
Dormitia, to the Churches consecrated to the Lord Christ are named. 698. 1.
Dominica Augusta, Valens's Wife. 322. 1. 329. 2.
Dormitian, the second Persecutor of the Christians. 39. 1. He issued out an Edict, and ceased the Persecution. 40. 1.
Dormitianus Bishop of Melitis, Kinsman to the Emperor Marcus. 523. 1. His commendation. ibid.
Dormitia for the faith of Christ is banish'd into the Island Pontia. 39. 1.
Dormitus a Martyr. 163. 1.
Dormitus successor to Ephraemius in the Bishoprick of Antioch. 495. 1. was present at the Fifth Constantinopolitan Synod. 495. 2.
Dormus Bishop of Cæsarea in Palestina. 125. 1.
Dormus Bishop of Antioch. 134. 2.
Dormus successor to Jabannes in the Bishoprick of Antioch, is deposed in the second Ephesine Synod. 409. 2. comes to Symeon the Stylite. 410. 2.
Dorotheus a Presbyter of the Antiochian Church. 133. 2.
Dorotheus, one of the Bed chamber to the Emperor. 139. 2. 142. 1. is crowned with Martyrdom. 142. 2.
Dorotheus Bishop of the Armenians at Antioch. 330. 1. is translated to Constantinople. 337. 2.
Dositheus Founder of the Sect of the Dositheans. 63. 2.
Dositheus Bishop of Seleucia, then of Tarsus. 389. 1.
Dracilianus Vicarius to the Præfecti Prætorii. 224. 1. 587. 2.
Dracilianus Bishop of Pergamus. 282. 1.
Drares and Obadas, Gods of the Arabians. 689. 1.
Dux of Phœnicia. 173. 2.
Dyrachium, anciently called Epidamnus, is ruined by an Earth-quake. 481. 1.

E.

E After, observed by those of Asia, on the fourteenth day of the Moon. 86. 1. 2. the Diffension concerning the Celebration of Easter, continued.

The INDEX.

- tinued till the Nicene Council. 177. 1. The Nicene Council's Decree concerning Easter-day. 182. 2. Easter-day was kept by the Ancients, from usage and custom. 346. 1.
- Ebonites*, Hereticks, who they were. 43. 2, &c. why so called. ibid.
- Ecelesiasticks*, their degrees of Deacons, Presbyters, and Bishops. 24. 1. 143. 1. of Readers and Exorcists. ibid.
- Ecdocius* the Sophist. 285. 2. His Levity in changing his Religion. 297. 1. He is termed an ill Sophist by Libanius. 300. 2.
- Edessa* a most Christian City. 16. 1.
- Edessa* a City of Mesopotamia. 314. 2.
- Edessa* a City of Asiatica, is drowned by the overflowing of the Scirtus. 481. 1. is rebuilt by Justinus Senior, and named Justinopolis. ibid. An Image of Christ, not made with hands, is kept there. 489. 1.
- Egyptians* do boast, that Geometry, Astronomy, and Arithmetick were first found out amongst them. 688. 2.
- Elea* a Village, in the Suburbs of Constantinople. 383. 2.
- Elephantina* a Town in the Frontiers of Thebais. 407. 2.
- Eleusinus* Bishop of the second Cappadocia. 466. 1.
- Eleusius* Bishop of Cyzicus 276. 1. 279. 2. is depol'd in the Constantinopolitan Synod. 282. 1.
- Eleutherius* Bishop of Rome. 68. 75. 1. 76. 2.
- Elpidius* Bishop of Sakala. 282. 1.
- Empire of Rome* when first divided. 148. 2. 171. 1.
- Emperour's Office*, what it is. 448. 1.
- Eucratius*, their Heretic. 67. 1.
- Emmatus* a Virgin, Martyr'd in Palestine. 165. 2.
- Euseb*, his Apocryphal Book. 137. 2.
- Ephorus* and Theopompus, Writers of Græcian History. 513. 2.
- Ephraemus* Comes of the East under Justinus. 480. 1. He is chosen Bishop of Antioch by the Citizens, to whom he came in the time of the Earth-quake. ibid. and 487. 2. 494. 2.
- Ephreus* Bishop of Jerusalem. 51. 2.
- Epimachus* and Alexander, Martyrs at Alexandria. 111. 1.
- Epimenides* the Cretan, an Initiator. 297. 1.
- Epiphanius* the Brook, entitled Anacrusis. 330. 1.
- Epiphanius* Bishop of Cyprus, having assembled a Synod of Bishops, condemns Origen's Books. 360. 1. comes to Constantinople. 381. 2. Holds assemblies, and ordains there, without the consent of John Chrysostome. ibid.
- Epiphanius* Bishop of Tyre, refuses subscribing to Severus's Synodick Letter. 468. 2.
- Epiphanius* Bishop of Constantinople. 482. 2. 485. 1.
- Episcopal Jurisdiction*. 390. 1.
- Epistle* of the Monks of Palestine, to Alecion the Bishop. 427. 2. 465. 2. 468. 2.
- Eros* Bishop of Antioch. 63. 1.
- Eros* converted to Christianity, under Justinian. 486. 2.
- Eusebius*, Hereticks of the Jews. 63. 2.
- Eusebia* first of all married to Marthan, then to Melchior. 9. 2.
- Eusebius* is ordained Bishop of Antioch. 338. 2.
- Eusebius* Bishop of Constantinople. 313. 2. is banished. 374. 1.
- Eusebius* Bishop of Mytilene. 280. 2.
- Eusebius* Bishop of Siculi. 304. 1.
- Eusebius* a Monk. 291. 1. 317. 2. wrote two Books, the one entitled The Monk, the other The Gnostick. ibid. His Book entitled The Practick. 318. 2. A passage quoted out of that Book termed The Gnostick. ibid.
- Eusebius* Bishop of Rome. 47. 1.
- Eusebius*, of those that received it, laid Amen. 114. 2. what was left of it, at Constantinople was given to Boys, to be eaten and drank. 494. 2.
- Eudemon* a Melitian. 238. 1.
- Eudemon* a Presbyter. 342. 2.
- Eudocia* an Arabian, Wife to Theodosius Junior. 380. 1. 416. 1. She wrote Poem. 380. 1. She comes to Antioch. 416. 2. The Antiochians bestow a Brazen Statue on her. 417. 1. She converses with the Monks that lived there. 419. 2. She builds Saint Stephen's Church at Jerusalem. ibid.
- Eudocia Junior*, Daughter to Valentinianus Placidus and Eudoxia, Marries Himericus Son to King Gezircus. 428. 2.
- Eudoxia* Theodosius Junior's Daughter. 392. 2. 416. 2. She Marries Valentinianus Placidus. 382. 2. 416. 2. After Valentinian's death she Marries Maximus. 428. 2. She calls Gezircus out of Africa. ibid.
- Eudoxia Augusta*, her Silver Statue. 365. 1.
- Eudoxius* Bishop of Germania. 254. 2. Seizes upon the Bishoprick of Antioch. 271. 2. is depol'd. 280. 2. is ordained Bishop of Constantinople. 282. 2. dies 313. 2.
- Eusepius* a Lark, Preaches in the Church. 102. 1.
- Eusepius* a Bishop. 311. 2.
- Eugenius* sets up for a Tyrant in the West. 350. 1. is slain. 351. 1.
- Eulogius*, after Johannes, is ordained Bishop of Alexandria. 509. 2. 520. 1.
- Eumenius* Bishop of Alexandria. 51. 2.
- Eumenius* don't baptize into the Trinity, but into the death of Christ. 350. 1.
- Eumomius*, Actius's Notary. 271. 1. is made Bishop of Cyzicus. 307. 1. writes Comments on Saint Paul's Epistle to the Romans. ibid. 38. parates himself from Eudoxius. 313. 1.
- Eumomius* Bishop of Nicomedia contends with Anastasius Bishop of Nicea about some Cities. 447. 2.
- Eunuch* to Queen Candace, was the first that Preach'd the Gospel to the Ethiopian. 16. 2.
- Eunus*, call'd also Gronion, a Martyr at Alexandria. 110. 2.
- Eudius* the first Bishop of Antioch after Saint Peter. 40. 1.
- Euphemia*, the Martyr's Church at Chalcodon. 356. 1. is described 421. 3, &c. two Miracles performed there. ibid.
- Euphemius*, after Praxita, is ordained Bishop of Constantinople. 462. 1. He is banished. 465. 2.
- Euphrasius* is ordained Bishop of Antioch. 479. 1. He is buried in the Earth quake at Antioch. 479. 2.
- Euphronius* a Presbyter, born at Cæsarea in Cappadocia. 602. 2.
- Euphronius* is ordained Bishop of Antioch. 236. 2.
- Euprepus's* Monastery near Antioch. 408. 1.
- Eusebius* a Deacon of the Alexandrian Church, afterwards Bishop of Laodicea. 124. 2. 136. 1.
- Eusebius Pamphilus* Bishop of Cæsarea, his Letter to the Cæsareans concerning the Nicene Synod. 217. 2, &c. He drew up a Draught of the Creed, and propoled it to the Nicene Synod. 218. 1. How he explains the term Homousios. 218. 2. He wrote three Books against Marcellus. 258. 1. He was no Arian. ibid. &c. He wrote the History of the Church from the Apostles times, to those of Constantine. 472. 2. He made a Speech in the Nicene Synod, in praise of Constantine. 429. 1. He spake another Oration in the Palace to the Emperor Constantine, on his Tricennaria. ibid. and 622. 1. The Antiochians invite him to be their Bishop. 599. 2. Constantine commends him for refusing that Bishoprick. 604. 1. He recited an Oration before Constantine in the Palace. 617. 1. He wrote against Porphyrius. 302. 1. and Constantine's Life. 209. 1. and 345. 2.
- Eusebius Emisenus*. 248. 2.
- Eusebius* Bishop of Samosata. 304. 1.
- Eusebius* Bishop of Nicomedia, writes Letters to many Bishops, in favour of Arius and his followers. 211. 2. He is angry with Alexander Bishop of Alexandria. 213. 2. He is translated to the Bishoprick of Constantinople. 247. 2. He dies. 250. 2.
- Eusebius* Prolog of the Bed-chamber to the Emperor, favoured the Arians. 264. 1. He is put to death. 287. 1.
- Eusebius Sebasteianus*, Scholar to Troilus the Sophist. 317. 1.
- Eusebius Bishop of Vercelle*. 271. 1. 289. 2. a defender of the true Faith. 295. 2.
- Eusebius* and Theophrastus subscribed to the Nicene Creed, but would not subscribe to the Anathematisim. 228. 2. being banished on that account, they presented a penitentiary Libel to the Bishops. 228. 1.
- Eusebius* Bishop of Dorylaeum, accuses Eutyches. 408. 1. His Libel presented to the Emperor against Dyscolus. 423. 2, &c.
- Eusebius* Bishop of Ancyra, was present at the second Ephesine Synod. 414. 2.
- Eusebius*, a Writer of the Roman History, from Augustus to the death of the Emperor Carnus. 513. 2.
- Eusebius* Bishop of Antioch, ordains Eusebius Bishop of Constantinople. 313. 2. He is banished by Valens. 314. 1.
- Eusebius* Bishop of Antioch accuses Eusebius Bishop of Cæsarea. 235. 2. He is depol'd in the Synod at Antioch. ibid. He is recused by Crispius Bishop of Berea. ibid.
- Eusebius* Bishop of Antioch, binds Guit with Origen. 362. 1.
- Eusebius* Bishop of Sebasteia. 278. 2. is suspended from Communion. 280. 2. He is depol'd in the Constantinopolitan Synod. 281. 1. &c.
- Eusebius Epiphaniensis*, a writer of History. 514. 1. He closes his History on the 12th year of the Emperor Anastasius. 470. 1.
- Eustathius* Bishop of Berytus, wrote a Letter to Johannes a Bishop, concerning the affairs transacted in the Chalcodon Synod. 421. 1. He was present at the second Ephesine Synod. 424. 2.
- Eustochius* Bishop of Jerusalem. 493. 1. He succeeded Macarius. 495. 1. He drove the Origenists out of the New Laura. 495. 2.
- Eutychius*, a Bishop. 280. 2.
- Eutycher*. 408. 1.
- Eutychianus* Bishop of Rome. 137. 2.
- Eutychianus*, a Novation Monk. 216. 2. His Miracles. ibid.
- Eutychianus* Hereticks have corrupted many Books of the Ancient Fathers, and have fathered many of Apollinaris's Books on Arbansus, Gregory Thaumaturgus, and Julius. 466. 2.
- Eutychius* Disciple to Eumomius, coyn's a new Opinion. 350. 1.
- Eutychius*, after Menas, is ordained Bishop of Constantinople. 495. 1. He had before been Apocryphus to the Bishop of Amasia. 496. 1. He is ejected out of his See. 497. 2. He is reitored. 509. 2.
- Eutropius* Prefect of the Imperial Bed-chamber. 355. 1. the first and the only Eunuch that was ever made Consul. ibid.
- Euzanius* is made Bishop of Antioch. 483. 1. is sent to Alexandria. 316. 1. He dies. 317. 1.

F.

Fabian Bishop of Rome. 106. 1.
Fabius Bishop of Antioch. 108. 2.
Fadus Procurator of Judea. 20. 2.
Familiar-spirits, or pariedri. 52. 2.
Famine takes away basfulness. 33. 1.
Fate and Fortune, empty names only. 639. 2. 651. 1.
Fauslus, Eusebius, and Clement, Deacons of the Alexandrian Church. 122. 1.
Fauslus a Martyr under Dioclesian. 114. 2.
Feast of Our Lord's Ascension. 383. 2.
Feast of Our Lord's Nativity. 361. 2.
Felix Procurator of Judea. 25. 2.
Felix Bishop of Rome. 135. 2.
Felix, from being a Deacon, is ordained Bishop of Rome. 275. 2.
Felix the Pope, successour to Simplius, sends a Deposition to Acacius. 459. 1. Acacius did not acknowledge that deposition. 459. 2.
 He sends Praxas and Misemus Legates to Zeno Augustus. ibid.
Felix Procurator of Judea. 25. 2.
Firmilianus Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia. 105. 2. 116. 1. 116. 1.
Firmilianus President of Palestine. 163. 2. is beheaded. 169. 1.
Firmus Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia. 334. 2.
Fiscellus, or Placius Bishop of Antioch. 248. 1.
Flavianus President of Palestine. 150. 1.
Flavianus is ordained Bishop of Antioch. 374. 2. a difference amongst the Bishops on account of his Ordination. 36. 2. He appeases the anger of Theophilus of Alexandria. 338. 2.
Flavianus, after the death of Piscus, is ordained Bishop of Constantinople. 408. 1. He condemns Eutyches in a Synod assembled at Constantinople. ibid.
Flavianus is ordained Palladius's successour in the Bishoprick of Antioch. 654. 2. He is rejected by the Emperor Anastolus. 465. 2.
 He is banished to Perræ a Town in Palestine. 477. 1. 2.
Flavencius Bishop of Sardis. 44. 1.
Florus a Presbyter of the Church of Rome, falls into Heresy. 8. 1. 81. 2.
Florus Procurator of Judea. 30. 2.
Florus Dux and Prefect of Alexandria. 476. 2.
Fravita is ordained Acacius's successour in the See of Constantinople. 461. 2.
Fravitus a Goth, a person of great valour. 37. 1.
Frutigerius, Leader of the Goths. 316. 1.
Frumentius is created the first Bishop of the Indians. 232. 1. 2.

G.

Gaius General of the Souldiers. 356. 1. endeavours to turn Tyrant. ibid. He is declared a publick enemy. 356. 2.
Gaius Son to Valens Augustus. 322. 1.
Gaius, their Sect. 8. 1.
Galla the Wife of Theodosius. 325. 2. the Mother of Placidia. ibid.
Gallus is created Cæsar. 265. 2. He is slain. 270. 1.
Geor or Georg, whom the Gurs called by that name. 10. 1.
Gelimeres King of the Vandals, is taken by Bellisarius. 485. 2.
 lying prostrate before Iustinian sitting in his Throne in the Cirque, what he said. ibid.
Gennadius succeeds Anastolus in the Constantinopolitan See. 433. 1.
Georgius made Presbyter of Alexandria by Alexander. 60. 1.
Georgius is made Bishop of Alexandria. 251. 1. His cruelty. 264. 2. &c. He is killed. 268. 1.
Georgius Bishop of Laodicea, wrote a Commendation of Eusebius Emisenus. 255. 1. 248. 2.
Germanicus a Martyr at Smyrna. 66. 2.
Germanus Bishop of Jerusalem. 56. 1.
Germanus Bishop of Sirumum. 271. 1. 2. 273. 2.
Gladators, their Shows forbid by Constantine. 614. 1.
Glycerius, after Othobius, is made Emperor of Rome. 476. 1. He is ordained Bishop of Salona. ibid.
Go-madach, an holy Woman. 523. 1.
Gordas Bishop of Jerusalem. 96. 1.
Gorgonius, of the Bed-chamber to the Emperor. 137. 2. He is crowned with Martyrdom. 142. 2.
Gorbass Founder of the Sect of the Gorbassians. 63. 2.
Gospel according to the Hebrews. 44. 1. 50. 2. 63. 2. Gospel Syrac. 63. 2.
Gospel termed Diatessearon, made up of the four Evangelists. 6. 2.
Goths divided into two parties. 326. 1. why they became Arians. ibid.
Gratian is proclaimed Emperour. 310. 1. His Law against the Pelagians, Eunomians, and Manicheans. 330. 1.
Grecian Learning was not forbidden to the Christians, either by Christ, or his Apostles. 2, 6, 2. the Advantage and usefulness thereof. ibid. and 297. 1.
Gregorius Thaumaturgus, disciple to Origen. 106. 1. His Oration in praise of Origen. 322. 5.
Gregorius Bishop of Alexandria. 248. 2. 250. 1.

Gregorius Bishop of Nazianzum. 310. 1. 321. 2. He is made Bishop of Constantinople. 322. 1. 330. 2. His Oration against the Gentiles. 301. 1.
Gregorius Nilfenus, Brother to Basil the Great. 322. 2.
Gregorius from being a Monk is ordained Bishop of Antioch. 503. 1. His Character. 503. 2. He is accused for having been present at the sacrifices to Dæmons. 510. 1. He is accused a second time, of Incest, and because he had burnt the Ammon. 518. 1. He is acquitted in a Synod at Constantinople. ibid. His Speech to the Roman Souldiers who had made a Mutiny. 520. 1. &c. He reconciles the Roman Souldiers to the Emperor, and to their Commander. 521. 1. and frees them from the rash Oath they had taken. ibid.
Gregorius is ordained Bishop of Rome after Pelagius. 525. 2.

H.

H Adrian the Emperor, his Rescript to Minucius Fundanus in favour of the Christians. 53. 2.
Hegippus when he flourished. 53. 1. His Books. 63. 1. 2.
Helicetus, Heretick. 108. 1.
Helena Queen of the Adiabens furnishes the Jews with Corn. 21. 1. Her Sepulchre near Magus's. ibid.
Helena a whore, Somer Magus's Companion. 21. 2.
Helena Augusta Mother to Constantine, goes to Berthelem to pray; 591. 1. comes to Jerusalem. 229. 1. builds two Churches there. 591. 2. Her piety and bountifulness. 592. 1. She finds the Sepulchre and Cross of our Lord. 229. 2. 230. 1. She builds three Churches in honour of Our Lord. 230. 1. Her death and burial. 591. 2. &c. 230. 2. Drepanum is from her termed Heleneopolis. 229. 1.
Helenu Bishop of Tarsus. 118. 1.
Helius succeeds Salsitius in the Bishoprick of Jerusalem. 495. 1.
Helion is sent Embassadour to the Persians. 379. 1. He is sent into Italy. 382. 1.
Heliodorus Bishop of Laodicea in Syria. 118. 1.
Heliodorus Bishop of Trica in Thracia. 347. 2.
Heliopolites, their Law. 231. 1.
Helladius and Ammonius, Alexandrians, Grammarians. 339. 1. 2.
Helladius Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia. 333. 2.
Hemerobaptist, an Heretic amongst the Jews. 63. 2.
Heracles, Origen's disciple. 92. 2. Origen chides him his Assitant and Companion in teaching. 96. 1. He studied Philosophy and Grecian Learning. ibid. and 101. 2.
Heracles a Presbyter wore a Philophick Pallium. 101. 2. He is made Bishop of Alexandria. 105. 2. His Fame. 106. 2. His Rule about receiving Hereticks. 119. 2.
Heracles a City of Syria, formerly called Galgaticæ. 535. 2.
Heracles Origen's disciple, a Martyr. 93. 2.
Heracles Deacon to John Chrysostome, is preferred to the Bishoprick of Ephefus. 351. 1.
Heraclius wrote Comments on the Apostle. 89. 2.
Heracius Bishop of Jerusalem. 284. 1.
Herast a Catechumen, he was a Martyr. 93. 2.
Hermelinus Bishop of Jerusalem. 284. 1.
Hereticks were not to hold us to broach their Errors till after the death of the Apostles. 46. 2. they are divided into manifold kinds of Errors. 53. 1. The Sects of Hereticks destroy one another. ibid. Their Converse is to be avoided. 56. 2. Hereticks have corrupted the Books of Sacred Scripture. 90. 2. Their Books must be read with Caution. 119. 1.
Hermas's Book called Pastor. 31. 2. 43. 1. 77. 2.
Hermogenes Master of the Milice is slain at Constantinople. 250. 2.
Hermone Bishop of Jerusalem. 138. 2.
Hermogenes an Heretic. 65. 2.
Hermophilus an Heretic, mended the Books of Sacred Scripture. 6. 2.
Heros the Great, no Jew but a Foreigner. 8. 1. by Father's side an Idumean, by his Mother's, an Arabian. 8. 2. made King of the Jews by the Roman Senate and Augustus. ibid. and 10. 2. burnt the Jews Genealogies, and why. ibid. slays the infants of Berthelem. 10. 3. His disease described. 11. 1. His Largess to his Souldiers. 11. 2. orders his Sister Salome to kill the chief of the Jews whom he had imprisoned, at his death. ibid. puts three of his own Sons to death. ibid. Resolves to kill himself. ibid. His death. ibid.
Heros Junior, Son to Heros the Great, kills John the Baptist. 1. 1. He and his Wife Herodias are banish'd by Caius. 17. 2. He was present at Our Saviour's Passion. ibid.
Heros Eirenarch of Smyrna, Son to Niceetes. 57. 2.
Herodian a Writer of Roman History. 513. 2.
Heron, Origen's disciple, a Martyr. 93. 2.
Heron and Isidorus, Egyptian Martyrs. 111. 1.
Heros Bishop of Antioch. 48. 1.
Hesychius, Paclumius, and Theodorus, Bishops and Martyrs. 148. 1.
Hierapolis the Metropolis of the Province Euphratensis. 523. 1.
Hierophylus Letters found in Serapi's Temple. 339. 2.
Hierophilus Bishop of Plotinopolis. 389. 1.
Hilarus Bishop of Jerusalem. 584. 1.
Hilarus Bishop of Poitiers. 293. 2.

The INDEX.

Hippolytus a Bishop. 102. 1. His Books 103. 1.
Holy Ghost. See Spirit.
Homonina, or Concordia, the Name of a Church at Constantinople 435. 1.
Honoratus Præbict of Constantinople. 281. 1.
Honorius is proclaimed Augustus. 350. 2.
Horvinda Son to Chosroes, succeeds his Father in the Kingdom. 509. 1. The Persians headed by Varamus conspire against him. 522. 2.
Hosius Bishop of Corduba. 195. 1. 214. 1. 266. 1. 269. 1, 2. was present at the Nicene Council. 578. 1.
Humericus or Oonorichus King of the Vandals, persecutes the Catholics in Africa. 460. 1. 483. 2.
Hunni destroy Armenia. 375. 1.
Hunni heretofore called Massagetae. 449. 1.
Hyginus Bishop of Rome. 54. 1. the ninth successor of the Apostles ibid.
Hymenæus Bishop of Jerusalem. 125. 1. 133. 1.
Hypatia a Philosopher. 376. 1. She is barbarously murdered. 376. 2.
Hypatianus Bishop of Horacles. 266. 1.
Hyperichus a Bishop. 311. 2.
Hypostasis and Ousia, how they may be spoken concerning God. 390. 2, &c.
Hyrcanus Prince of the Jews taken by the Parthians. 8. 2.

I

James the Brother of our Lord, one of the 70 Disciples. 13. 1. 16. 1. is created Bishop of Jerusalem. 16. 1. surnamed James the Just, ibid. also surnamed Oblias. 27. 2. His Martyrdom, ibid. His Catholic Epistle. 29. 1. His Chair kept with great care. 126. 2.
Iberians converted to the Christian Faith, when and how. 231. 2.
Jerusalem Church was termed a Vain. 63. 2.
Jerusalem, its last Siege and Famine described. 32. &c.
Jews first under Judas, after that under Kings, at length became Tributaries to Rome. 8. 2. They had the names of their Ancestors written out in ancient Rolls. 10. 1. They had a sacred Treasury called Corban. 19. 1. Their Seven Sects. 63. 2. the destruction of the Jews under Vespasian. 35. 1. They endeavour to rebuild their Temple. 298. 2. Hadrian forbids them to enter Jerusalem. 51. 1.
Ignatius the second Bishop of Antioch after Saint Peter. 40. 1. 47. 1. His Epistles are reckoned up. 47. 2. He suffered Martyrdom at Rome. ibid. By Theodotus Junior's order, his Reliques are removed into the City Antioch. 413. 2.
Iliu, and Leontius rebell against Zeno. 464. 1.
Index of the Books of the Old Testament. 66. 2. 104. 1, 2.
Indians converted to the Faith of Christ, when, and how. 231. 2.
Immortal, a place in Syria. 377. 1.
Innocentius Bishop of Rome. 3. 3. 2.
Isabonni, or Jolin, two of them lived at the same time in Asia. 409. 1, 2.
John, the Apostle Preach'd in Asia. 30. 1. died at Ephesus, ibid. was banished into the Island Patmos. 39. 1. returned from thence after Dionysius death, and governed the Churches of Asia. 40. 1, 2. for what reason he wrote his Gospel. 42. 1, 2. 105. 1. He wore a plate of Gold. 87. 1.
Johannes a Reader, is beheaded for the faith of Christ. 170. 1. His wonderful memory. ibid.
Johannes a Presbyter of the Church of Antioch. 351. 1. is ordained Bishop of Constantinople. 353. 1. His descent and education. ibid. and 353. 2. His course of Life and disposition. 354. 2. He was wont to Preach sitting in the Pulpit. 355. 2. His death. 367. 1.
Johannes is ordained Bishop of Jerusalem. 338. 2.
Johannes Bishop of Procopius. 389. 1.
Johannes the Chief of the Notaries, sets up for a Tyrant. 381. 2.
John the Apostle's Church seven Miles from Constantinople. 356. 2.
John Chrysostom's Opinion concerning the Admission of Penitents. 367. 2.
Johannica, so they were called who took John Chrysostom's part. 366. 2. at length they were re-united to the Church by Proclus. 393. 1.
Johannes Bishop of Antioch. 387. 1. 403. 2. coming to the Council the fifth day after Nestorius's Condemnation, assembles a Synod, and deposes Cyrillus. 404. 2. is reconciled to Cyrillus. 405. 1.
Johannes the Rhetorician, an Historian. 413. 2. 434. 1. 464. 2. closed his History under Justinus Senior. 479. 2.
Johannes from being Steward is ordained Bishop of Alexandria. 455. 1. is rejected by Zeno Augustus's order. ibid. flies to Rome to Pope Simplicius. 456. 2.
Johannes, after Atanasius, is ordained Bishop of Alexandria. 462. 2.
Johannes Bishop of Paltum, a Defender of the Chalcedon Synod is banished. 467. 1.

Johannes Scythia and Johannes Gibbus, Masters of the Milice, vanquish the Sassani. 469. 2.
Johannes the Chazibite a Monk in Palestine. 480. 2.
Johannes Scholasticus, Eusebius being ejected, is ordained Bishop of Constantinople. 497. 2.
Johannes Bishop of Jerusalem. 526. 1.
Johannes called Catelinus, successor to Vigilius in the Bishoprick of Rome. 497. 2.
Johannes ordained Appollinarius's successor in the See of Alexandria. 509. 2.
Johannes succeeds Macarius in the See of Jerusalem. ibid.
Josaphus the Historiographer. 36. 2. His Books. 37. 1, 2.
Josaph Bishop of Jerusalem. 51. 2.
Jovianus is chosen Emperor. 289. 2. makes a peace with the Parthians. 300. 1. dies. 304. 2.
Jovenus a Presbyter of Lyons. 71. 1. is made a Bishop. 76. 1. His Books. 84. 2. 89. 1. when a youth he was an Hearer of Polycarp at Smyrna. 85. 1. He writes to Pope Victor. 87. 2. 345. 1.
Jovenus a Grammarian wrote a Lexicon. 291. 2.
Jovenus of Tyre, and Aquilinus of Biblus, Bishops, are deposed in the second Ephesine Synod. 409. 1.
Jovenus Comes of the Valk under Justinus Senior. 479. 1.
Jovenus Bishop of Gaza. 304. 2.
Juacces Bishop of Armenia the Great. 304. 1.
Juacces, Donatives which the Emperor gave yearly to the Sassians. 470. 1.
Jabryas assumes to himself the Office of a Presbyter. 238. 2. is made a Bishop by the Arians. 257. 1.
Jabryon is killed for the faith of Christ. 111. 2.
Jadigerdes King of the Persians. 373. 1. Father to Varanes. 414. 1.
Jadorus a Presbyter of Alexandria. 353. 1. hated by Theophilus, and why. 359. 2.
Jadorus Pelusior. 413. 1.
Jadon a Melesian. 238. 1.
Judas of Galile or Gaulonites. 8. 1.
Jude one of the Brethren of Christ. 37. 2.
Judas Bishop of Jerusalem. 51. 2.
Judas an Ecclesiastick Writer. 94. 2.
Julianus Bishop of Alexandria. 78. 2.
Julianus Bishop of Apamia. 81. 1.
Julianus a Martyr at Alexandria, under Decius. 110. 1.
Julianus a Martyr with Pamphilus. 168. 2.
Julianus created Cæsar. 270. 1. He is Saluted Augustus. 286. 1. 284. 2. His Education. 286. 1. He recites his Orations in the Court. 287. 2. wrote against the Christians. ibid. His Book entitled The Cæsar, ibid. persecutes the Christians. 295. 1. His Misophony or Antiochism. 298. 1. His Book concerning the Catholic Philosophy. 301. 2. He is slain. 299. 2.
Julianus Bishop of Lebedus. 438. 1.
Julianus Bishop of Besris, refuses subscribing to Severus's Synodick Letters. 469. 1.
Julius Cæsar takes five hundred Cities. 473. 1.
Julius Bishop of Rome, wrote a Letter to the Easterns. 253. 2. His Letter to the Alexandrians. 260. 2, &c. Sate Bishop fifteen years. 270. 2.
Justina Augusta, Mother to Valentinian Junior, favours the Arians. 377. 1.
Justinianus, Sister's Son to Justinus, is by him proclaimed Augustus. 48. 1, 2. defender of the Chalcedon Synod, ibid. His Wife Theodora is an Enemy to that Synod. ibid. His Constitution, wherein he Anathematizes Antiochus and Severus and their Associates. 483. 1. destroys the Kingdom of the Vandals in Africa. 485. 1. His insatiable covetousness. 491. 2. He favours the Faction of the Penetians, and persecutes the Prasians. 491. 2. He falls into the Heresie of the Apollinaristæ. 497. 2.
Justinianus Brother to Justinus, is sent Master of the Milice against the Persians. 508. 2. He is turned out of Commission by Tiberius. 511. 1.
Justinus the Philosopher. 53. 2. His Martyrdom. 60. 1, 2. His Books. 62. 1, 2.
Justinus Senior, after the death of Anastasiu, is proclaimed Emperor. 477. 1. He orders the Chalcedon Synod to be asserted and maintained throughout all Churches. 481. 2.
Justinus Junior, Justinian's Sister's Son, from being Caropates is dis-made Emperor of the Romans. 499. 1. an effeminate and dissolute Person, and insatiably Covetous. 499. 2. His Wife Sophia Augusta. 500. 2. He kills his kinsman Justinus, ibid. His Edict to all Christians concerning the Faith. 501. 1, &c. He runs mad. 506. 1.
Justus Tiberienus, an Historian. 37. 2.
Justus Bishop of Jerusalem. 47. 1. Another Justus Bishop of the same place. 51. 2.
Justus surnamed Barabas. 49. 2.
Justus Bishop of Alexandria. 49. 2.
Juvencius Bishop of Jerusalem. 357. 1. was present at both the Ephesine Synods. 408. 2. He was present at the Chalcedon Synod. 403. 1.

The INDEX.

L.

Labarnus described, 541. 1. 2. fifty Soldiers were appointed to guard it, 554. 2.
Laas Prefect of Egypt, 91. 2.
Laiick, the Bishops entreating them, did sometimes Preach in the Church, 101. 1.
Lamydon a Presbyter, 304. 2.
Laudica in Asia was the place where the question about Easter was started, 65. 2.
Latromanni Corrector of Sicily, 194. 2.
Leure and Monasteries in Palestine, 417. 2. the Monks manner of living there. ibid.
Leuiticus Commander in chief of the Soldiers in Isauria, 278. 1.
Legio fulminis, or Thundering Legion, whence it had that name, 75. 2. &c.
Leonas Comes of the Palace, 278. 1.
Leut-Fast variously observed amongst the Ancients, 28. 1. 2. 346. 1. 2.
Leonides a Martyr, Origen's Father, 91. 1.
Leontius Bishop of Ancyra, 361. 2.
Leontius Bishop of Antioch, 264. 1.
Leontius Bishop of Comana, 303. 2.
Leontius Bishop of Tripoli, 280. 2.
Levi Bishop of Jerusalem, 51. 2.
Libanius and Julianus the eminentest of all Sophists, 417. 1.
Libanius the Sophist teaches Rhetorick at Constantinople and Nicomedia, 285. 2. Two Orations of his, 297. 2. His Funeral Oration upon Julian, 300. 1.
Libel supplicatory presented to Leo by the Bishops of Egypt and Clergy of Alexandria, against Theodosius Abius, 430. 1. &c.
Liberius Bishop of Rome, 270. 2. is banished, 275. 2. His Letter to the Bishops of the Macedonians, 311. 2. &c.
Licinius raises a War against Constantine, 196. 1. 547. 2. persecutes the Christians, 196. 1. 511. 2. His Covetousness, 196. 2. 545. 1. He is vanquished by Constantine and Christ, 197. 2. 556. 2. He prohibits the Synods of Bishops, 547. 2.
Licinius is made Emperor by Galerius, 210. 1. Constantine Marries his Sister to him, 210. 2. He persecutes the Christians in the East, ibid. He is vanquished by Constantine, and soon after slain, 211. 1.
Linus the first Bishop of Rome, 31. 1. 32. 1.
Litarba a place three hundred furlongs distant from Antioch, 520. 1.
Longinus a Philosopher, 101. 1.
Longinus an Isaurian, rebels against the Emperor Anastasius, 469. 2.
Longinus Severinus chief of the Isauri, ibid.
Long-wad of the Cerberonius falls down by an Earthquake, 414. 2.
Long-wad built by the Emperor Augustus, 470. 2.
Lucianus a Presbyter of Antioch, 147. 2. a Martyr, 174. 1.
Lucianus Bishop of Arces, or Artemus, 304. 2.
Lucifer Bishop of Caracas, 239. 2. He founds a Schism and an Heresie of his own name, 239. 2.
Lucius a Martyr at Rome under Pius, 62. 1.
Lucius Bishop of Rome, 117. 2.
Lucius is by the Arians made Bishop of Alexandria, 289. 2.
Lucius Bishop of Hadrianople, 211. 2. 204. 1.
Lucius Leader of the Jews, 30. 2.
Lupus Prefect of Egypt, ibid.
Lusus Quintus having vanquished the Jews, obtains the Government of Palestine, ibid.

M.

Macar a Martyr at Alexandria, 111. 1.
Macarius an Egyptian Monk, a different Person from Macarius of Alexandria, 217. 2.
Macarius of Alexandria a Monk. ibid.
Macarius a Presbyter of Alexandria, 238. 1.
Macarius is ordained Peter's successor in the See of Jerusalem, 425. 1. He is ejected out of that See, on account of Origen's Doctrine, ibid. He is restored, 497. 2.
Macedonians, Heretics, assemble Synods often, 193. 2. Their Embassy to Liberius Bishop of Rome, 310. 2. The Libel of Faith which they presented to him, 311. &c.
Macedonius is ordained Bishop of Constantinople by the Arians, 247. 2. His bloody Infatuation, 252. 2. He persecutes the Orthodox, 264. 2. He removes the Emperor Constantine's Reliques into another Church, 277. 2. Whereupon happened a Sedition at Constantinople, ibid. He is deposed in a Synod at Constantinople, 282. 1. He founds a Heresie called by his own name, 382. 1. 2.
Macedonius Bishop of Mosulius, 254. 2.
Macedonius, Theodulus, and Tatianus Martyrs in Phrygia, 296. 1.
Macedonius Bishop of Constantinople, 465. 2. 467. 1. He is ejected, 467. 2. 4. 6. 2.
Macrianus the Emperor Valerian's Prefect, 121. 1. turns Tyrant, 129. 1.
Maga a fort of People in Persia, 372. 2.

Magenentius turns Tyrant, 263. 2. being worsted kills himself, 269. 2.
Magenus, made Master of the Milice, is sent against the Persians, 506. 1.
Magenus Bishop of Chalcedon, or Chalcis, 413. 1.
Magenus Comes of the sacred Largesse, or Treasurer, 304. 1.
Majorianus Emperor of Rome, 429. 1. is slain by Regimeres Master of the Milice, ibid.
Malchion a Presbyter of Antioch, disputed against Paul of Samosata, 133. 1.
Mammianus, from being a Seditary Mechanick becomes a Senator, 464. 2. is termed a Lover of the City, on account of his Structures, ibid.
Mancipes, so the Romans termed the Prefects of the Pistrina, 340. 2.
Mancei, 135. 2. called also Cubricus, 224. 1. His Tenets, ibid.
Manicheans, their Heresie, 125. 2. They and the Montanists take away the subsistence of The Word, 387. 1.
Mansius Tarquatus kills his own Son, who had disobeyed command, 520. 2.
Manna fell from Heaven in the time of a Famine, 428. 1.
Marcinium a Town of Paphlagonia, 277. 1.
Marathonius Bishop of Nicomedia, 276. 1. 283. 2. &c.
Marcellian, Heretics, 311. 1.
Marcellinus Bishop of Rome, 135. 2.
Marcellus Bishop of Ancyra, 248. 1. His opinion, ibid. and 255. 2. He is restored in the Synod of Sardica, 256. 2.
Marcianus Bishop of the Macedonians at Lampasus, 331. 1.
Marcianus Bishop of the Novatianists at Constantinople, 394. 1.
Marcianus a Novatian Presbyter, 309. 1. taught Valens's Daughters, ibid. Bishop of the Novatianists at Constantinople, 343. 2.
Mareus the Emperor, a Native of Toracia, the signs of his being Emperor, 420. 1. 2. His commendation, 421. 1. He is chosen Emperor by the persuasion of Pulcheria Augusta, ibid.
Mareus Son to the Emperor Antemius sets up for a Tyrant against Zeno, 463. 2. He is banished to Casarea in Cappadocia, and afterwards to Tarjus, and being thence is ordained a Presbyter.
Marcianus by Justinus Junior is sent Master of the Eastern Milice against the Persians, 504. 2. besieges Nisibis, ibid.
Marcion of Pontus an Arch-Heretic, 54. 2. Marcionites, 63. 2.
Mark Companion to Peter, wrote his Gospel at Rome, 22. 2. 98. 2. that Gospel was afterwards approved of and confirmed by Saint Peter, ibid. Mark goes into Egypt and Preaches the Gospel there, ibid. He was Interpreter to Saint Peter, 49. 2. He was the first Bishop of Alexandria, 29. 1. He wrote his Gospel after Saint Peter's death, 77. 1. 2.
Marcus Turbo vanquishes the Jews in many fights, 50. 2.
Marcus Bishop of Jerusalem, 52. 1.
Marcus an Heretic, 54. 2.
Marcus Bishop of Alexandria, ibid.
Marcus Bishop of Archeusa, 254. 1. 266. 2.
Marcus a region Subject to the Bishop of Alexandria, 238. 1.
Marianus a Lake near Alexandria, 23. 1.
Marianus a Suburb near Constantinople, 364. 2.
Mary of the same Tribe with her Husband Joseph, 50. 2.
Mary a Jewish Woman, eats her own Son in the Siege of Jerusalem, 134. 2.
Martianus Bishop of Tyre, 118. 1.
Martius a Martyr at Casarea, 125. 1.
Martius Bishop of Berytus, 468. 2.
Martius a Syrian, Prefect of the Prætorium under Anastasius, vanquishes Vitalianus in a Sea-fight, 475. 2.
Martius Bishop of Chalcedon, 237. 2. 250. 2. 254. 1. 281. 1. 291. 2. Martyr, that name due only to Christ, 74. 2. Martyrs were disciples and followers of Christ, 59. 2. the honours of Martyrs, 647. 2. Martyrs honoured by Christians, 57. 2. their Reliques carefully preserved, ibid. Their Birth day celebrated yearly, ibid. they are Christ's Affessours, 111. 1. the humility of the Martyrs, 74. 2. their kindness towards the Sapped, ibid.
Martius amongst the Heretics, 82. 1.
Martius spoke when their Tongues were cut out, 484. 1.
Martirius Bishop of Antioch, 411. 2.
Martirius Bishop of Jerusalem, sent Synodick Letters to Petrus Monachus, 457. 2.
Martirius delivered up to the Persians, 521. 2. it is restored to the Romans, together with his Betrayer Sizai, 523. 1.
Maruthas Bishop of Adoposam, 363. 2. 372. 2. is sent Embassador to the King of the Persians, ibid.
Masbotheus Founder of the Sect of the Masbotheans, 63. 2.
Masbue wrote a Gospel to the Hebrews in their own language, 421. 1. 50. 2. 77. 1. 78. 2. 504. 2. He Preached in Ethiopia, 231. 2.
Masibias the Apostle, one of Christ's Seventy Disciples, 13. 2. 15. 1. His Preaching and Doctrine, 45. 1.
Masibias Bishop of Jerusalem, 51. 2.
Maturus a Neophyte, Martyred at Lyons, 70. 1.
Mavia Queen of the Saracens, 327. 1. 329. 2.
Mauricius made Master of the Milice by the Emperor Tiberius, is sent against the Persians, 511. 1. born at Arabissus a City of Cappadocia, ibid. His Morals and disposition, ibid. The signs of his being made Emperor, 512. 1. He is created Emperor by Tiberius, 512. 2. From the Emperor Tiberius, he is named Tiberius, and his Wife is called Constantina, ibid. His Wedding is described, 515. 1, 2.

The I N D E X.

Maxentius turns Tyrant at Rome, 149. 2. 210. 1. at the beginning of his Empire, by an Edict he stops the persecution of the Christians, ibid. His wickedness and cruelty, ibid. and 210. 2. and 542. 1. He is vanquished by Constantine, 177. 1, 2. 210. 1.

Maximianus Galerius the Author and Beginner of the Christians persecution, 151. 2. 153. 2. 542. 2. In what manner he was smitten by divine Vengeance, 151. 2. His Retraction, or Edict about restoring Peace and Liberty to the Christians, ibid. His Death, 153. 1. creates two Cæsars, Severus and Maximianus, 209. 1. Proclaims Licinius Augustus, 210. 1.

Maximianus Herulius hang'd himself, 149. 1.

Maximianus is ordained Bishop of Constantinople, 388. 1.

Maximianus Drunkenness and Lust, 150. 1, 2. the bloodiest of all the Persecutors, 159. 2. 181. 1. He waged a War with the Armenians, 175. 2. is vanquished by Licinius, 179. 2. He declares himself Augustus, 149. 1. is very superstitious and fearful, 150. 1, 2. covetous also and prodigal, ibid.

Maximinus Bishop of Antioch, the seventh Bishop there from the Apollies, 65. 1.

Maximus an Ecclesiastick Writer, 89. 2.

Maximus a Presbyter of the Roman Church, and a Confessor, 113. 1.

Maximus a Presbyter of the Alexandrian Church, 122. 1. 124. 2. afterwards Bishop of Alexandria, ibid. and 133. 1.

Maximus Bishop of Bostra, 132. 2.

Maximus Bishop of Jerusalem, 248. 1. subscribes to Athanasius's deposition in the Council of Tyre, ibid.

Maximus Bishop of Seleucia in Isauria, 353. 2.

Maximus a Philosopher of Byzantium, Father to Euclid, 286. 1.

Maximus an Ephesian Philosopher, Julian's Master, ibid.

Maximus turns Tyrant in the Gallia, 336. 2. slays Gratianus, 337. 1. is killed, 338. 1.

Maximus Bishop of Antioch, was present at the Chalcedon Council, 453. 1.

Melebanus Bishop of Jerusalem, 108. 2. 118. 1.

Melexer, B. Barbars, 407. 1.

Melecharius and Tjonus, Gods of the Phoenicians, 689. 1.

Melechiadech Priest of the most high God, 6. 1.

Melesina a Region of Armenia the Levi, 142. 2.

Melesius Bishop of the Churches of Pontus, 138. 2.

Melesius Bishop of Sebastia in Armenia, 282. 1. is translated to Antioch, 283. 2. 293. 1. 303. 2. dies at Constantinople, 334. 2.

Meletius a Bishop of Egypt, being condemned by Peter Bishop of Alexandria, makes a Schism, 213. 2. is condemned in the Nicene Council, 219. 2.

Melito Bishop of Sardis, 16. 1. 65. 1. His Books 65. 2. 90. 1. He was an Eunuch, 87. 1.

Mennon Bishop of Ephesus, 389. 2. 404. 2.

Mennonius Governor of the City Antioch under Theodosius Junior, 415. 1. He built the Euphrates at Antioch, ibid.

Men heretofore usually offered in Sacrifice, as well amongst Greeks as Barbarians, 682. 2. That usage abolished by Hadrian the Emperor, 697. 1.

Men that are dissolute, are both slothful, and confident, 499. 2. 505. 1.

Menander an Arch-Heretic, 43. 2. Menandrians, his followers, 63. 2.

Menas is ordained Bishop of Constantinople, 494. 2.

Mercutia a Martyr at Alexandria, 111. 1.

Meropius the Philosopher, travels into India, 231. 2.

Merna a City of Phrygia, 296. 1.

Meruzanes Bishop of the Armenians, 116. 1.

Methodius Bishop of Olympus in Lycia, 362. 1. His Dialogue entitled Xeno, 362. 2.

Metras a Martyr at Alexandria, 110. 1.

Metrodorus a Presbyter of the Marconites, is burnt for the Faith of Christ, 60. 1.

Metrodorus a Philosopher, travels into India, 231. 2.

M. Iulianus an Ecclesiastick Writer, 82. 1, 2. 90. 1.

Miracles wont to be wrought in the Church, 77. 1.

Miracle of a glittering Star, 412. 2, &c.

Miracle of the B. Virgin Mary, 510. 1, 2.

Mitbra's Temple at Alexandria, 288. 1. 339. 1.

Moderatus a Pythagorean Philosopher, 101. 2.

Modestus Prefect of the Praetorium, 314. 1.

Montanus, with Priscilla and Maximilla, the founder of the Sect of the Catharizæ, 75. 1. So. 1. His Life, 81. 1, 2. His death, ibid. His fornication and avarice, 82. 1.

Moors originally came from Palestine, 485. 2.

Mopsus in Cilicia, worshipped for a God, 689. 1.

Moses a Presbyter of the Roman Church, a Martyr, 114. 2.

Moses the antecedent of all the Prophets, 2. 2. the great Servant of God, ibid. bred in the Court of Tyrants, 534. 2. constituted Leader of the People by God, ibid. was the first that wrote the sacred History, as he had been instructed by God, 513. 2. His commendation, 651. 1, 2.

Moses a Monk, is made Bishop of the Saracens, 327. 1. ]

Mountain Seleus in Gallia, near Lyons, 269. 2.

Morfa a Fort of Gallia, ibid.

Musamus an Ecclesiastick Writer, 67. 1.

Museus a Jewish Writer, 137. 1.

N.

N. Amman a Saracen Son to Alanudandus, is kindly used by Mauricius, 516. 1. He leaves the worship of Dæmons, and is converted to the Christian Faith, 524. 2.

Narcissus Bishop of Jerusalem, 79. 1. His Miracles, 95. 2.

Narcissus a Bishop, 248. 2. 254. 1. 264. 1.

Narset being sent into Italy by Justinian, vanquishes Totila and Totila Kings of the Goths, 487. 1. His piety towards God, ibid.

Natalis a Confessor at Rome, imposed upon by Heretics, 90. 1. at length returns to the Church, 90. 2.

Nectarius is ordained Bishop of Constantinople, 334. 1.

Nemesion an Egyptian, 111. 1.

Neon Bishop of Laranda, 102. 1.

Neonius Bishop of Seleucia in Isauria, 282. 1.

Nephalus a Monk of Syria, 461. 2. is by the Emperor Zeno sent to Alexandria, to restore unity, ibid. Ejects Severus out of his Monastery, 468. 2.

Nepos Bishop of Egypt, 129. 1, 2.

Nepos is made Emperor of Rome, 456. 1.

Nepotianus seizes the Empire of Rome, 263. 2.

Nero, the first Roman Emperor that persecuted the Christians, 29. 1.

Nestorius is ordained Bishop of Constantinople, 384. 2. persecutes the Heretics, ibid. His opinion concerning Christ, 386. 1. His Ignorance and Pride, 386. 2. He broaches a new Heresy, 403. 1. He is condemned in the Ephesian Synod, 404. 2. is banished to Ossus, 406. 1. His Letter to the president of Tyberian concerning his Exile, 407. 1, 2. He is taken and let go by the Blasphemy, 406. 2. His Tongue is eaten out with Worms, which kills him, 408. 1.

New-Testament, the Books thereof, 42. 2, &c.

Nicetas, Father to Herod the Eirenarch, 59. 2.

Nicetas Bishop of Laodicea in Syria, an Opposer of Flavianus's, 456. 1.

Nicolaides, their Heresy, 44. 2, &c.

Nicomachus a Pythagorean, 101. 2.

Nicomedia, ruined by an Earthquake, 277. 2.

Nicomus Bishop of Iconium, 132. 2.

Nicolstratus a Sophist of Trapezus, writes an History from the beginning of the Emperor Philip's Reign, to the Death of Valerian, 513. 2.

Nieria, a Mountain, 316. 2.

No Body is condemned out of his own Books, 280. 1.

Nocturnal and Morning Hymns were wont to be sung alternatively or by sides in the Church, 359. 1.

Novatus's Heresy, 112. 2. Novatus the Founder of the Sect of the Cathari or Puritans, ibid. why he made a Schism, 323. 1. He was Martyred under Valerian, 323. 2.

Novatus or Novatianus is detected by the Confessors, 113. 1. He thrusts himself into the Bishoprick of Rome, ibid. His Character, 120. 1.

Novatianists celebrated the Festival of Easter indifferently, 344. 1.

Novatianists Church at Constantinople was pull'd down, and removed to another place, 276. 2.

Numerius a Philosopher, 101. 2.

O.

O. A K. of Mamre, 595. 1, 2. The Miracles performed in that place, 596. 1. A Church built there by Constantine, ibid.

Onsi by another name called Ibsi, 407. 1.

Ochaz a very strong Cattle over against Martyropolis, 522. 1.

Odenathus and Apollonius beat the Persians, 473. 2.

Odoacer seizes the Kingdom of Italy, 436. 2.

Oenomaus a Cynick Philosopher, 303. 1.

Olympus is made Emperor of Rome by Recimeres, 456. 1.

Onesimus Bishop of Ephesus, 47. 2.

Onesimus a pious and studious Man, 66. 2.

Opportunus how described by Painters, 462. 2.

Opiat King of the Hunns, 385. 2.

Opiatus Prefect of Constantinople, 366. 2.

Oprimus Bishop of Antioch in Pisidia, 334. 1.

Oracle found in a Stone in the Walls of Chalcedon, 368. 1, 2.

Oracle given to the Rhodians, 302. 3.

Orestes Prefect of Alexandria, 375. 1.

Origen's Education from a Child, 91. 2, &c. He teaches Grammar, 92. 2. when eighteen years old he is chosen Catechist of the Alexandrian Church, ibid. His abstinence, 93. 1, 2. Demetrius's envy against him, 95. 1. He was called Adamantius also, 98. 2. He comes to Rome in Pope Zephyrinus's time, ibid. He was a Person

The INDEX

- Person of eminent Learning, 271. 1. He made the Hexapla and Tetrapla, 99. 2. He brought up the allegorical interpretations of Scripture, 101. 2. Marcia Augusta lends for him, 103. 1. He is made Presbyter at Caesarea, 103. 2. His Books, 104. 7. 106. 2. 8c. He is tortured for the faith of Christ, 108. 2. He dies in the seventieth year of his age, 117. 1. He signifies the Son to be Coeternal with the Father, 372. 1. Origen's first Tome of Comments on Saint Paul's Epistle to the Romans, 186. 2. Origen's detractors who, and how many, 361. 1. His defense, ibid. Origen's judgment concerning his books, 365. 1. Origen recited his Homilies on the fourth and sixth Feast, in the Church of Alexandria, 347. 1. Origen's 4 Region of the City Antioch, 434. 1. 518. 2. Origen's Bishop of Melitina, 334. 1.
- P.
- Paphlagonians*, three of them subject to the See of Jerusalem, 447. 1. Paphlagon the Courier, 378. 2. Patricius Bishop of Helenopolis, and afterwards of Affusa, 389. 1. Patricius a Monk, Evagrius's Scholar, 319. 2. wrote the Historia Lausiacae, ibid. Petrus Praelect of Egypt, 316. 1. Petrus is ordained Petrus Fuldo's successor in the See of Antioch, 462. 2. Petrus Bishop of Amastria, 64. 1. 86. 2. Petrus a Monk, 117. 1. Petrus a Presbyter of the Church of Caesarea, 138. 1. 166. 2. He is crowned with Martyrdom, 148. 1. 163. 1. He collected an Ecclesiastick Library, 10. 1. He and Eusebius club'd in writing an Apology for Origen, 29. 2. Petrus Bishop of Pellusium, 266. 1. Petrus a City of Thebais, 407. 2. Petrus Master of the Alexandrian School, 78. 2. 101. 2. Petrus Bishop of Egypt, was present at the Nicean Council, 216. 1. 225. 2. Petrus Bishop of Hierapolis, 47. 1. His five Books, 49. 1. He was a Heretic but mean understanding, ibid. He was the first Chiliasm, ibid. Petrus a Martyr, 57. 1. Petrus and Lucianus are by Pope Leo sent to the Chalcedon Council, 421. 2. They condemn Dioscorus, 424. 2. Petrus Bishop of Æthe, 303. 2. 311. 2. Petrus confuted in the Constantinopolitan Council, 332. 2. Petrus Bishop of Paltus, 301. 2. Petrus a Heretic whom the Greek term Sabellianus, 255. 2. 312. 2. Petrus a Bishop, 241. 2. is deposed in the Synod of Selencia, 182. 2. Petrus burnt for the Faith of Christ, 173. 1. Petrus Bishop of Tyre, 18. 1. built a stately Church in that City, 184. 2. Petrus is made an Apostle, 16. 2. He is carried bound to Rome, 16. 2. is a second time carried to Rome, and Martyred, ibid. beheaded under Nero, 29. 2. His Epistles, 21. 2. Acts of Paul, an Apocryphal Book, ibid. and 43. 1. His Epistle to the Hebrews written in Hebrew, 98. 1. The Roman Church don't believe it to be his Epistle, 102. 2. Petrus of Samosata, 132. 2. attempts to revive Artemon's Heresie, 8. 2. 135. 2. is confuted by Malchion the Presbyter, 137. 1. His avarice and pride, 133. 2. 8c. He is deposed in the Antiochian Synod, 134. 2. His Heresie, 25. 1. Petrus a Martyr in Palestine, 164. 2. His pious and Christian Prayer before his Death, ibid. Another Paulus, Martyred with Pamphilus, 166. 2. Petrus is ordained Bishop of Antioch by Lucifer, 29. 2. 293. 1. He and Alextius come to an agreement, 330. 2. Petrus Bishop of Trier, 271. 1. Paulus Bishop of the Novatians at Constantinople, 377. 1. His Com- munication, ibid. and 385. 1. Paulus Bishop of Tyre, 239. 2. Paulus a Presbyter at Constantinople, 247. 2. is ordained Bishop, ibid. He is ejected ibid. restored, 250. 2. His death, 264. 1. His Reliques are removed to Constantinople, 314. 1. Paulus Bishop of Emisa, is sent to Cyril Bishop of Alexandria by Joannes Bishop of Antioch, 401. 1. Paulus is ordained Bishop of Ephesus, 450. 2. He is put out of his See by Zeno Augustus, 432. 1. Paulus, after Severus's Ejectment, is ordained Bishop of Antioch, 471. 1. Peace termed the Intermediate Peace, made with the Persians by Ju- stinian, 482. 2. is broken by the Persians, 487. 2. Petrus Bishop of Laodicea, 201. 1. Petrus successor to Joannes in the Bishoprick of Rome, 509. 2. Petrus and Ninus, Egyptian Bishops crowned with Martyrdom, 148. 1. 170. 1. Petra a town beyond Jordan, 32. 2. The Christians remove thither, before the siege of Jerusalem, ibid.
- Persecution* of Dioclesian lasted ten years, 151. 1. Persians worship Fire, 372. 2. Pessilens diseafe destroys almost the whole World in Justinian's Reign, 490. 1. 2. it raged two and fifty Years, ibid. Peter the chief of all the Apostles, 22. 1. comes to Rome to Preach the word of God there, and to oppose Simon Magus, ibid. is cruci- fied at Rome in Nero's time, 29. 2. 31. 1. Preached the Word of God to the Corinthians, 30. 1. was Preacher to the Jews that were dispersed, 30. 2. His Epistles, 31. 1. His Acts, Gospel, Preaching, Revelation and Apocryphal Books, ibid. His Wife was Martyred, 45. 1. Petrus Bishop of Alexandria, 138. 2. is crowned with Martyrdom in the ninth year of the persecution, 139. 1. Petrus, of the Bed-chamber to the Emperor, is crowned with Mar- tyrdom, 142. 1. Petrus, called also Apellamus, a Martyr in Palestine, 166. 1. Petrus is ordained Bishop of Alexandria, 315. 2. He is put into Prison, 316. 1. He returns to Alexandria, 317. 2. Petrus chief Presbyter of the Alexandrian Church, 359. 2. Petrus Bishop of Sippi, 304. 1. Petrus the Hibernian is ordained Bishop of Majuma, 427. 2. He was present at Timotheus Elurus's Ordination, 430. 1. He is banished with him, 468. 1. Petrus Fuldo Bishop of Antioch, subscribes to Basilien's Circular Let- ters, 450. 2. Zeno ejects him out of the See of Antioch, 453. 1. He restores him again, 457. 1. Petrus Mongus is chosen Bishop of Alexandria after Abbas's death, 454. 1. He does in publick anathematize the Chalcedon Synod, 457. 2. A Man of a crafty disposition, ibid. His Letter to Aca- cius Bishop of Constantinople, 458. 1. 2. Petrus Bishop of Damascus, refuses his consent to Severus's Synodick Letters, 469. 1. Petrus successor to Hellas in the See of Jerusalem, 495. 1. Phaëses, Heretic amongst the Jews, 63. 2. Pharmaceus, a Port in the mouth of the Euxine Sea, 382. 2. Phileas Bishop of the Thmuita, a Martyr, 144. 2. 8c. 148. 2. Philetus Bishop of Antioch, 102. 2. Philip the Apostle had a Wife, and Children by her, 45. 1. 2. died at Hierapolis, ibid. His Daughters were Prophetesses, ibid. and 87. 1. His Daughters lived at Hierapolis, 49. 2. Philip Bishop of Jerusalem, 51. 2. Philip the Asiarch, 58. 2. Philip Bishop of Gortina, 64. 1. His Book against Marcion, 65. 1. Philippus the Emperor was a Christian, 107. 2. Ekkippus Preset of the Prætorium, ejects Paul the Bishop out of his See, 212. 1. Philippus a Presbyter of Side, 384. 1. wrote an Ecclesiastick History, ibid. Socrates's judgment concerning Philippus's History, ibid. Philippicus is made Master of the Eastern Milice by Maurice, 516. 1. He is sent a second time into the East, to quiet a Matiny of the Soldiers, 517. 2. Philo the Jew, a famous man, is sent Ambassador to Cæsar, 18. 1. His Books are reckoned up, 24. 2. and put into the publick Li- brary at Rome, 25. 1. Philomenus a Martyr, 144. 2. Philostrophus writes, that in his time a Pestilence raged fifteen years, 491. 1. Phlegon, an Historian, 416. 2. Phlegon a Bishop, 280. 2. Photinians, Heretics, 311. 1. Photinus Bishop of Sirmium, founded an Heresie called by his own name, 254. 2. His opinion, 259. 2. He is deposed, 266. 1. He wrote against all Heresies, 269. 1. Phrygians are naturally temperate, 323. 1. Picennus, Maximianus the Emperor's Favorite, is slain, 181. 2. Pierius a Presbyter of the Alexandrian Church, 134. 2. Pilate when made Procurator of Judea, and how long he continued so, 12. 1. Those called Pilate's Acts forged long since his time, 12. 1. and 173. 2. He sends a Relation to Tiberius concerning Christ's Miracles, 16. 2. He laid violent hands on himself, 19. 1. 2. Pilgrimage to places of the Holy Land, 98. 2. 591. 1. Priest Bishop of Cries, 63. 1. Priest's Martyrdom in Smyrna, 60. 1. Priest a Monk, 416. 2. Piso Bishop of the Adani, 304. 2. Piso Bishop of Augusta, ibid. Petrus or Petrus a Monk, 317. 2. Pius Bishop of Rome, 54. 2. Plato the Philosopher praised, 642. 2. what he thought of the Se- cond and Third cause, 372. 1.

The I N D E X.

Placidia, Daughter to Valentinian and Eudoxia, married Olybrius, 426. 2.
Placidiana, an Imperial Palace at Constantinople, 364. 2.
Plimtha Master of the Milice and Consul, 349. 2.
Plutarchus, Scholar to Origen, a Martyr, 92. 2. 93. 2.
Pneumatomachi, 'so the Macedonians were termed, 283. 2.
Polypius Bishop of the Church at Tralles, 47. 2.
Polypius of Megalopolis brought down his History to the destruction of Carthage, 113. 2.
Polycarp Bishop of Smyrna, 47. 1. 345. 1. comes to Rome on account of the Controversie concerning Easter, and conferred with Antiochus, 56. 1. 88. 2. Avoids the meeting and salutation of Marcion the Heretic, 56. 1. His Epistle to the Philippians, 56. 1. His Martyrdom, 56. 2. &c. His prayer for the Catholick Church, 59. 1.
Polycarpus Bishop of Nicopolis in Thracia, 389. 1.
Polycrates Bishop of Ephesus, 86. 2. His Epistle to Pope Piſcus, ibid.
Pontianus Bishop of Rome, 103. 2.
Ponticus, Blasidia's brother, a Martyr, 73. 2.
Pontiffs, or Chief Priests, of the Jews, were heretofore perpetual, and enjoyed that Office by Inheritance, 12. 2. The Sedition of the Chief Priests against the Priests, 26. 1. Chief Priest's Robe lock'd up by Herod, 8. 2.
Porphyrius, fervant to Pamphilus, is crowned with Martyrdom, 168. 1.
Porphyrius B.shop of Antioch, 373. 1.
Porphyrius a Philosopher, in love with Scoffings, 300. 2. He wrote Books concerning the History of Philosophy, ibid. He renounced the Chistian faith, 302. 1.
Potamiana, a Martyr, 94. 1. 2.
Potinus Bishop of Lyons, a Martyr, 71. 1.
Potitus a Mercionist, 79. 2.
Prayer that is fervent has an invincible power, 652. 1. 662. 2.
Prayer for the dead, 631. 2.
Praxinus Bishop of Alexandria, the fourth from the Apostles, 50. 1.
Praxinus Bishop of Corinth, 63. 1.
Praxius, Molebus, and Alexander, Martyrs under Valerian, 124. 2.
Praxius the Rhetorician, wrote an History of the War waged by Antioch against the Romans, 414. 2. 426. 2. 436. 1. 514. 1.
Praxius is sent Master of the Milice into the East, 516. 2. His pride, ibid. a Multitude of the Soldiers against him, and against the Emperour Marcus, ibid.
Probus Prefect of the Prætorium, 336. 2.
Proculus is ordained Bishop of Cyprus, 384. 1. is not admitted by the Inhabitants there, 384. 2. is ordained Bishop of Constantinople, 391. 2. His Character, ibid. He causes John Chrysostome's Body to be conveyed to Constantinople, 393. 1. 2.
Proculus Quæstor of the sacred Palace under Justinian, 439. 1.
Procopius, the first Palestinian Martyr in Diocletian's persecution, 154. 1.
Procopius Master of the Milices, 379. 1.
Procopius sets up for a Tyrant, 326. 1. He is slain, 307. 1.
Procopius the Rhetorician, his Epitome of Histories, 483. 1. 2. 484. 1.
Proterius is ordained Bishop of Alexandria, in the place of Diogenes, by the common vote of the Bishops of the Alexandrian Synod, 426. 2. He is murdered by the People of Alexandria, 430. 1.
Proterius Bishop of Smyrna was present at the Chalcedon Synod, 441. 1.
Proterius Bishop of Sardica, 217. 2.
Psalmody of the Ancient Chistians, what it was, 24. 1. Psalms made by the Chistians, 90. 1. 134. 1.
Psamathus, a Village near Nicomedia, 238. 1.
Psalterius, Heretics, 349. 1. 2.
Proterius a Martyr at Rome, 61. 2.
Publius Bishop of Athens, a Martyr, 64. 1.

Q.

*Q*uadratus eminent for the gift of Prophecy, 48. 1. 82. 2. He presented an Apology to the Emperour Hadrian, in defence of the Chistians, 51. 1.
Quadratus Bishop of Athens, 64. 1.
Quæstions concerning things that are sacred and obscure, are not to be committed to the Ears of the Vulgar, 572. 2.
Quaradocianus were excommunicated by Pope Victor, 87. 2. 345. 1.
They derived their tradition from Saint John the Apostle, 346. 1.
Quarta, an Alexandrian Woman, a Martyr, 110. 1.
Quarta Native of Phrygia, who had voluntarily run to Martyrdom, on sight of the Torments, renounced the faith, 57. 1.
Quintinus, or Cyrenius, Prefident of Syria, 7. 2.

R.

*R*eginus's Book entitled Polymemnon, 302. 1.
Religious Assemblies variously celebrated amongst the Ancients, 346. 2. 347. 1.
Repentance, another Baptism, 41. 2. an Example of sincere Repentance, ibid. 'Tis the Trophy of the Resurrection, ibid.
Reverius and Marcus Bishops of the Gallia's, 194. 1.

Reverentius Bishop of Tyre, 389. 1.
Rhodes ruined by an Earthquake, 476. 1.
Rhodon, Scholar to Tatianus, 79. 2.
Rhossæ a Town in Syria, 97. 1.
Robas or Rongas a little King of the Barbarians, 352. 2.
Roman Church, its bounty and antiquity, 98. 2. it had forty six Presbyters, and seven Deacons, 113. 2.
Roman Bishops, their Letters with what respect received heretofore, 64. 2.
Romans fast every Sabbath or Saturday, 348. 1. They fast three whole Weeks before Easter, 346. 1.
Romanus a Deacon, a Martyr at Antioch, 158. 1. 2.
Romulus, surnamed Augustulus, Son to Orestes, the last Emperour of Rome, 425. 1.
Rufinus's Books of Ecclesiastick History, 226. 1. 229. 1. 232. 2. 233. 2. His mistake is noted, 245. 1.
Rufinus the Prefect of the Prætorium, is slain, 352. 1.
Rufinus Bishop of Samofata, 447. 2.
Rufus Prefect of Judea, killed vast numbers of the Jews, 51. 2. &c.
Rufus Abbot of Theodosius's Monastery in Palestine, 495. 2.

S.

*S*abbatians a Novatianist, maket a Schism amongst the Novatianists, 343. 2. He is made Bishop over part of the Novatianists, 344. 1.
Sabbatius the Heretic, his opinion, 119. 1.
Sabinianus Bishop of Ænzuma, 304. 2.
Sabinus Prefect of Egypt under Decius, 109. 1. 123. 2.
Sabinus, Prefect of the Prætorium to Maximinus, 171. 2.
Sabinus a Macedonian Heretic, what he wrote concerning the Bishop's convened at Nicaea, 217. 1. was Bishop of Hieracles in Thracia, ibid. He wrote a Collection of Synodal Acts, ibid.
Sacred Vessels of the Church, melted down to redeem Captives, 379. 2. given for the Redemption of a City, 453. 2.
Sacrifice [of the Chistians] unjustical and without blood, 611. 2. 697. 1.
Sadducees, an Heretic among the Jews, 63. 2.
Sagaris a Bishop and a Martyr, 65. 2. 87. 1.
Salame, or Salama, a City of Dalmatia, 281. 2.
Salustius Prefect of the Prætorium, 238. 1.
Salustius is chosen Succellor to Martyrius in the See of Jerusalem, 495. 1.
Samaritæes, an Heretic amongst the Jews, 63. 2. Samaritanes when they kept Easter, 348. 2.
Sandus a Deacon of Penna, 70. 1. 72. 1.
Sangarius, a River, 324. 1.
Sangarnus, a Mart-town in Bithynia, 344. 1.
Sapor King of the Persians, Constantine's Letter to him, 609. 1. 2.
Saracens, 112. 1.
Saurunius an Arch Heretic in the Reign of Hadrian, 53. 1.
Saurunianus, 63. 2.
School at Alexandria, 78. 2.
Scythianus a Saracen, 334. 1.
Sedition at Constantinople termed Nica, 483. 2.
Sejanus a cruel Enemy of the Jews, 18. 2.
Selenus Bishop of the Goths, 349. 2.
Seneca Bishop of Jerusalem, 51. 2.
Septuagint, or Seventy Translators, 78. 1.
Sepulchre of Our Lord covered with an heap of Earth by the Heretics, and polluted with an image of Venus, 56. 1.
Serapion Bishop of Antioch, 84. 1. 290. 1. His Books, 97. 1.
Serapion a Martyr of Alexandria, 110. 1.
Serapion Deacon to John Chrysostome, 355. 1.
Serapion Bishop of the Thumais, 319. 1.
Serenus Gratianus Proconsul of Asia, 53. 2.
Sereus, Origen's Scholar, a Martyr, ibid.
Sergiolus a City of Syria, wherein are kept the Reliques of the Martyr Sergius, 489. 2.
Severa Augusta, Wife to Valentinian the Elder, 325. 2.
Severianus, Heretics which had their name from Severus, 67. 2.
Severianus Bishop of Gabala, 367. 2.
Severianus Bishop of Ancyra, sends a Libel of deposition to Severus, Patriarch of Antioch, 469. 1.
Severus Reigns at Rome after Majorianus, 429. 1.
Severus, after the Ejection of Flavianus, is ordained Bishop of Antioch, 467. 2. His Life and Studies, 468. 1. He Anathematizes the Chalcedon Council in his Synodick Letters, 468. 2. His Letter to Soterichus, 476. 1. His enstalling Letters, 478. 2. He is banished by the Emperour Justinus, ibid. His Letters to Justinianus and Theodora, 482. 1.
Sexius wrote concerning the Resurrection, 87. 2.
Sibylla Erythraea, 652. 2. Her Verses concerning the coming of Christ, 653. 1. 2. In what words the addresser her self to God, 657. 2.

Signs which preceded the destruction of Jerusalem, 35. 2. &c.
Sign of the Cross seen in the East, 265. 2.
Silvanus Bishop of Emisa, a Martyr, 147. 2. 174. 1.
Silvanus Bishop of Gaza, a Martyr, 147. 2. His Character, 170. 1. Silvanus

The INDEX.

Silvanus Bishop of Tarſus, 303. 2.
Silvanus Bishop of Treves, 389. 1, 2. He had before been Bishop of Palmyropolis, ibid.
Silvanus a Tyrant in the Gallia, 270. 1.
Silvanus Bishop of Rome, opens the Gates of that City to Belisarius, 486. 1. He is depofed by Belisarius, and Vigilius is put into his place, 486. 2.
Simon Magnus is baptized by Philip, 16. 2. comes to Rome, and there deceives many by his Impoftures, 21. 2. He was the Captain and chief of all Hereticks, ibid.
Siracuta Bishop of Rome, 373. 2.
Sirmium is taken by the Goths, 507. 1. taken again by thofe Barbarians termed Avars, ibid.
Sisinnius is ordained Bishop of Conftantinople, 383. 1. His Character, 384. 2.
Sisinnius a Novatianift, 335. 1. He was a Learned Man, ibid.
Sisinnius ordained Bishop of the Novatianifts at Conftantinople, 341. 2.
Sisinnius 2. His book againft John Chryfoftome, 367. 2. His witty Sayings, ibid, &c.
Socratus Bishop of Laodicea, 136. 1.
Socratus, why put to death by his own Citizens, 642. 1.
Socratus Scythellus learnt Grammar at Conftantinople, of Helladius and Annoſimus, 339. 1. Born and bred at Conftantinople, 350. 1. dedicates his work to Theodorus, 351. what ftyle he followed, ibid.
Socratus's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, 401. His miſtake in his account of the Ephesine Synod, 404. 2. He is cited, 416. 1.
Sopha, the great Church at Conftantinople, 251. 1. is conſecrated by Eudoxius, 282. 2.
Sophia, a Church built by Juſtinian, is deſcribed, 491. 2, &c.
Sophronius Bishop of Pompeopolis, 278. 2. 279. 2. is depofed in a Synod at Conftantinople, 782. 1. 294. 1. 303. 2.
Sophronius one of Chriſt's Seventy Diſciples, 13. 2.
Sotax Bishop of Anchialus, 84. 1. 2.
Soter Bishop of Rome, 62. 2. His Commendation, 64. 2.
Spice, or Holy Gholt, is infuſed by Ordination, 280. 1.
Spyridan from being a Shepherd, is made a Biſhop, 226. 1. He fed Sheep whilſt he was a Biſhop, ibid. His Miracles, ibid.
Stephen Bishop of Rome, 117. 2.
Stephen the Deacon, firſt Martyr of Chriſt, 45. 2.
Stephen Bishop of Laodicea, 138. 1.
Stephanus Bishop of Autioch, 264. 2.
Stephanus Bishop of Ephesus was preſent at the Chalcedon Council, 438. 1.
Stephanns is Ordained Bishop of Antioch, 453. 2. He is barbarouſly murdered by the Boys of Antioch, ibid.
Stephanus Bishop of Hierapoliſ, wrote the Life of Saint Golaudius, 53. 1.
Stetit, a Mountain that divides the Weſtern Churches from the Eaſtern, 259. 2.
Sunday and Friday kept Holy by Conſtantine's order, 611. 2. 613. 1. 679. 1. Sunday celebrated at a Feſtival, by Chriſt's own command, 710. 1.
Symeon Son of Cleopas or Cleophas, Bishop of Jeruſalem, 38. 1. after ſeveral Tortures, he is crucified, 46. 1. 2.
Symeon, or Symeones, the Stylite, flouriſhed under Theodoſius Junior, 410. 2. He ſpent Six and thirty years in Monafterick Exerciſes and Severities, 411. 2. His dead body is with great honour conveyed to Antioch, in Leo's Reign, ibid. He was the firſt that found out the way of ſtanding upon a pillar, 432. 1. His Letter to Augustin, 313. 2. and another Letter of his, to Baſilius Biſhop of Antioch, ibid. His Mandra is deſcribed, 412. 1.
Symonacius the Ebionite, 99. 2. His books, ibid.
Symmachus a Senator of Rome, 938. 2.
Syzrex an Heretic, 79. 2.
Syzrex is preferred to the Biſhoprick of Cyrene, whilſt he was entangled in the Error of Gentiliſm, 413. 1. 2. His Epiftles, and Oration to the Emperor Theodoſius, ibid.
Synnada a City of Phrygia Pacatiana, 370. 2.

T.

Tablet, or Title of Criminals, who were led about in the Amphitheatre, 73. 2.
Tam Confreſes General of the Persians, is ſlain in battel by the Romans, 512. 2.
Tanais, the Barbarians call the Stream of the Lake Meotis into the Euſxine Sea, 457. 1.
Tartarus Founder of the Sect of the Encratites, 60. 2. 67. 1. His Books, 67. 2. He is reckoned amongst the Catholic Writers, ibid.
Teophorus Bishop of Rome, the ſeventh from the Apoſtles, 51. 2.
Temples of the Heathens demolifhed at Alexandria, 319. 1.
Tertullianus eminently ſkilful in the Roman Laws, 17. 1.
Thaddaeus one of Chriſt's Seventy Diſciples, 14. 1. is ſent to Edeſſa by Thomas the Apoſtle, ibid cures Agabus by laying his hand on him, 15. 1. Preaches the Goſpel of Chriſt to the Edeſſenes, ibid.
Theclaſius, Prefect of the Prætorium, is ordained Biſhop of Cæſarea by the Patriarch Proculus, 394. 2.

Theclaſius Bishop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, together with Diſcorgus Bishop of Alexandria, preſided at the Second Ephesine Synod, 424. 2.
Thebuthis the firſt that made a Schiſm in the Church of Jeruſalem, 63. 2.
Thecla the protomartyr, appears to Zeno in his ſleep, 453. 1. in honour of her, Zeno builds a moſt ſplendid Church in the City Seleucia, ibid.
Thebmidres Bishop of Laodicea, 116. 1.
Themifon a Monaniſt, 82. 1.
Themifon the Philoſopher, 304. 2. His Oration to Valens, 316. 1.
Theodofius Bishop of Cæſarea in Paleſtine, 105. 1. 116. 1. 2.
Theodorius King of the Goths, reigns his Kingdom, 486. 1.
Theodorius a Goth rebels againſt Zeno, 463. 1. He dyes being wounded by the point of his Javelin, ibid.
Theodorius Valaner is by Zeno ſent againſt Illus and Leontius, 464. 1. He leaves the Eaſt, and goes into Italy, and having vanquiſhed Odoacer there, poſſeſſes himſelf of the Kingdom of Italy, ibid. His Wife Amalaſuntha, 486. 1.
Theodoricius King of the Goths has a Military Command in the Roman Army, 512. 1.
Theodorius Bishop of Cyruſ, his Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory, 401. 473. 1. He is depofed by Diſcorgus in the ſecond Ephesine Synod, together with Ibas Bishop of Edeſſa, and Daniel Bishop of Carra, 409. 1. 2. He is reſtored in the Chalcedon Council, 426. 1. 447. 1.
Theodorius Bishop of Heraclea in Thracia, 250. 2. 24. 1.
Theodorius Bishop of Mopſueſtia in Cilicia, 353. 2.
Theodorus, a man of God, 245. 2.
Theodorus is cruelly tortured for the faith of Chriſt, 298. 1. 2.
Theodorus ſurnamed Aſidas, Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, 495. 2. a favourer of Origen, ibid. and 497. 1.
Theodoſia a Virgin Martyred at Cæſarea, 162. 2.
Theodoſiopolis a City beſieged by the Persians, 470. 1.
Theodoſius Bishop of Philadelphus, 280. 2.
Theodoſius is killed by Valens, 215. 2.
Theodoſius the Great created Emperor, 330. 1. He is baptized by Ambroſius, 331. 1. dyes, 351. 2.
Theodoſius Junior is born, 357. 1. His Commendations, 380. 1. 2. 395. 1. His Law againſt Neftorius, extant in the Code, 410. 2.
Theodoſius Bishop of Smyrna, 370. 2. in what manner he loſt his Biſhoprick, 371. 1.
Theodoſius is ordained Biſhop of Jeruſalem, contrary to the Canon, 427. 1.
Theodoſius Bishop of Alexandria, a Reviler of the Chalcedon Synod, 481. 2. Severus writes a Letter to him, 482. 1. His Letters ſent to Archimedes and Severus, ibid. He is ejected out of his See by Juſtinian, ibid.
Theodoſius the Ephesine turned the Old Teſtament into Greek, 77. 2.
Theodorus a Monaniſt, 75. 1. 81. 2.
Theodorus the Tanner, excommunicated by Vileſor, 90. 1.
Theodorus Bishop of Laodicea, 138. 1.
Theodorus Bishop of Laodicea, 284. 2.
Theodorus Bishop of Ancyra, accuſes Neftorius in the Ephesine Synod, 404. 2.
Theodorus Bishop of Toppa, 452. 1.
Theodulus a Martyr with Panophilus, 168. 2.
Theodulus Bishop of Cheroneſi, 280. 2.
Theodulus and Olympius, Biſhops, 264. 1.
Theodulus's Letter concerning Neftorius and his Hereſie, 403. 1.
Theonas Bishop of Alexandria, 138. 1.
Theonas Bishop of Marmarica, and Secundus Bishop of Ptolemais, are Anathematized by the Nicene Synod, 219. 2.
Theophilus Bishop of Antioch, the Sixth from the Apoſtles, 63. 1. His Books, 61. 1.
Theophilus Bishop of Cæſarea in Paleſtine, 86. 1.
Theophilus is ordained Biſhop of Alexandria, 337. 2.
Theophilus Bishop of Caffaboli, 303. 2.
Theophilus Bishop of the Goths, ſubſcribed to the Nicene Council, 281. 2.
Theophrastus a Cappadocian, Emmianus's Scholar, coyns a new Hereſie, 349. 2.
Theotecnus Bishop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, 125. 2. 133. 2.
Theotecnus Curator of the City Antioch, 172. 2. the Author and Incenſive of the Chriſtians perſecution, ibid. He is executed by Lucianus's order, 182. 1.
Theotimus Bishop of the Arabi, 301. 1.
Theotimus Bishop of Scythia, what his ſentiments were concerning Origen's Books, 362. 1.
Therapeus, why fo termed, 23. 1. Their Monafteries and courſe of Life, ibid &c.
Thendas an Impoſtour, 20. 2.
Thomas the Apoſtle, called Judas alſo, 14. 2. He preached the Goſpel to the Parthians, 30. 1. 231. 2. a great Church dedicated to him in the City Edeſſa, 314. 2.
Thomas Bishop of Apamia, 487. 2. He is a ſpectator of the Equeſtrian Sports, contrary to the uſage of the Church, ibid.
Thomas a Monk in Syria, feigned himſelf a fool, 494. 1.
Thraſeas a Martyr, 84. 1. Bishop of Eumenis, 87. 1.
Theraſandrus King of the Vandals in Africa, 484. 2.

Tiberiopolis

Tiberiopolis a City of Phrygia, 394. 1.
Tiberius Augustus how affected at Pilate's Relation concerning the Resurrection of Christ, 16. 2. &c.
Tiberius, after Justinus Junior became craz'd, managed the Empire together with Sophia wife to Justinus, 506. 1, 2. He is declared Cæsar by Justinus, 507. 1. His Character, 517. 2.
Tigris an Eunuch, and a Presbyter, 364. 1.
Timoteus Bishop of Antioch, 135. 2.
Timolauus, Dionysius, Romulus, Paulus, Alexander, and another Alexander, Martyrs in Palestine, 159. 2.
Timotheus, Saint Paul's disciple, the first Bishop of the Ephesians, 31. 2.
Timotheus a Martyr in Palestine, 159. 2.
Timotheus is ordained Bishop of Alexandria, 327. 2. 330. 1. 331. 2.
Timotheus Eldrus is chosen Bishop by the Alexandrians whilst Proterius was living, 430. 1. He was ordained but by two Bishops, 430. 2. He wrote a Letter to Leo Augustus concerning his own ordination, 431. 1. He is banished to Gargra, 433. 1. He is recalled by the Emperor Basiliscus, 445. 2.
Timotheus Salsaciacus, after Eldrus's ejection, is ordained Bishop of Alexandria, 433. 1. He flies to Canopus, 454. 1. By Xeno's order he recovers his See, ibid.
Timotheus, after Macedonius's ejection, is ordained Bishop of Constantinople, 468. 2.
Titus disciple to Saint Paul, Bishop of the Cities of Crete, 31. 2.
Titus Bishop of Bosira, 304. 1.
Tobias Son of Tobias, an Edessan, 14. 2.
Tobias Bishop of Jerusalem, 31. 2.
Translations of Bishops forbidden, 383. 1. sometimes used on account of the Church's necessity, ibid. Instances of such Translations, 389. 1. They were forbidden by Constantine, 599. 2.
Tribunianus a Tribune of Soldiers, 316. 1.
Triopolis a City of Phœnicie, wherein was the Church of Saint Leontius the Martyr, 468. 1.
Troilus the Sophist a prudent man, 370. 1. a Native of Side in Pamphylia, 383. 1.
Tycheum of Antioch, that is, the Temple of the publick Genius, consecrated in honour of the Martyr Ignatius, 414. 1.
Traunte Bishop of Tyre, a Martyr, 147. 2.
Tyrannus Bishop of Antioch, 136. 1.

V.

Valens Bishop of Jerusalem, 79. 2.
Valens a Deacon of Aelia, is Martyred, 166. 2.
Valens the Emperor being baptized by Eudoxius the Bishop, becomes an Arian, 305. 1. He persecutes the Orthodox, 306. 1. He builds an Aqueduct at Constantinople, 308. 2. He dyes, 318. 2.
Valentinianus is chosen Emperor, 305. 1. chuses Valens to be his C. league in the Empire, ibid. dyes, 325. 1. had two wives at the same time, 325. 2.
Valentinianus Placidus, Son to Constantinus and Placidia, 382. 1. is proclaimed Cæsar by Theodosius, ibid. is declared Augustus, ibid.
Valentinianus Junior is created Emperor, 325. 1. He was Justin's Son, ibid.
Valentina a Virgin Martyred, 163. 1.
Valentinus an Arch-Heretic, flourished at Rome, 54. 2. Valentinianus, Heretics, 63. 2.
Valerianus at the beginning of his Reign, favoured the Christians, 121. 1. His ignominious slavery and captivity in Persia, 660. 1.
Valerius Gratus, Procurator of Judea, 12. 2.
Vararans King of the Persians, 377. 2. persecutes the Christians, ibid.
Various usages and rites in divers Churches, 246. 1, &c.
Vasindus and Corbulo, Romans, conquered the Parthians, 473. 2.
Petrinus turns Tyrant, 163. 2. afterwards he became a private man, 265. 2.
Petrus Epaphroditus, a Martyr at Lyons, 69. 2.
Vistor Bishop of Rome, 87. 2. excommunicate the Churches of Asia, ibid. He is dissuaded therefrom by Ireneus, ibid.
Vistor Master of the Milice, 327. 2.
Vigils of the Christians, and their fasts before the Feast of Easter, 24. 1.
Vigil of Easter, 95. 2. observed by the Emperor Constantine, 613. 1.
Vigilius Bishop of Rome, refuses to come to the fifth Synod, 496. 1.
Vindictus, Officers made in every City by the Emperor Anastasius, 475. 1.
Vires, the Badge of a Centurion's office, 125. 1.

Virgil's Verses concerning Christ, 654. 1, &c.
Virgins of the Christians, 24. 1. 161. 2. they were registred in the Matricula or Roll of the Church, 230. 1.
Vitalianus rebels against Anastasia, 475. 2. takes Hypatius and Cyprianus Commanders of the Romans, ibid. being made Master of the Milice and Consul by Justinian, he is slain, 478. 1.
Vitalis and Mysenus, Legates of the See of Rome, are condemned in a Synod at Rome for ill-managements of their Embassie, 460. 2.
Vulfil Bishop of the Goths, 281. 2. 326. 2.
Vulpius a Martyr at Tyre, 161. 2.
Vulpius a Sophist, wrote an Oration in commendation of Antioch, 417. 1.
Vranus B. shop of Apamea, 304. 1.
Vranus Bishop of Meletina, ibid.
Vranus Bishop of Tyre, 278. 2. is deposed, 280. 2.
Vrbanius Bishop of Rome, 105. 2.
Vrbanius president of Palestine, 159. 1. is put to death, 163. 2.
Vrbanius, Theodorus, Mesiodemus, and seventy other Presbyters, who head been sent Legats for the Catholics to Valens, are barbarously murdered, 374. 1, 2.
Vrbicus, or Vrbicus, Prefect of Rome, 61. 2.
Vrbicus, and Valens, Arian Bishops, 250. 2. condemned in the Sardican Synod, 357. 2. present a Penitentiary-Libel to Pope Gelus, 263. 1. they are deposed in the Synod of Ariminum, 273. 1.
Vrsinus a Deacon of the Roman Church, 324. 1.

W.

Western Church when severed in Communion from the Eastern, 259. 2.
Wisdom of Solomon, so the Book of Proverbs was called, 64. 1. 66. 2.
Woman of Alexandria, her chastity, 150. 2.
Women that were adulteresses, how punished by the Romans, 311. 1.
Word of God, His Nature, Properties, and Operations, 683. 1, &c.
He is God of God, and Light of Light, 686. 1. the reason of His Incarnation, 691. 2. &c.

X.

XEnais a great stickler against Flavianus Bishop of Antioch, 466. 1. He is made Bishop of Hierapolis, 467. 2. by a Greek name he was termed Philoxenus, ibid.
Xorolophus a place in Constantinople, 371. 2.
Xylus Bishop of Rome, 51. 1.
Xylus, another Bishop of Rome, 118. 2.

Z.

Zambdas Bishop of Jerusalem, 138. 2.
Zaccheus Bishop of Jerusalem, 51. 2.
Zacharias the Rhetorician, an Historian, favoured Nestorius, 431. 2. blames Proterius falsely, 431. 1. He favoured Euryche's party, 452. 2. Evagrius reproves him for his carelessness in writing his History, 459. 2.
Zamolxis a God of the Getæ, 689. 1.
Zebinus Bishop of Antioch, 103. 2.
Zeno at first named Artemius, marries Leo Augustus's daughter, 435. 2. is created Emperor of the Romans, 436. 2. His wicked Life, 448. 1, 2. His Hemicon, or unisive Edict, 455. 1, 2. His Letter to Pope Felix, 460. 1.
Zenobius a Presbyter of the Church at Sidon, Martyred, 147. 2.
Zephyrinus Bishop of Rome, 90. 1.
Zeuxippus's Bath, 232. 2.
Zollus Bishop of Larissa, 304. 1.
Zollus Governour of Antioch under Theodosius Junior, what Buildings he erected at Antioch, 415. 2.
Zollus is made Bishop of Alexandria, after Theodosius's ejection, 482. 2. 495. 1.
Zosimus Bishop of Rome, 374. 1.
Zoticus Orenus a Presbyter, 81. 1.
Zoticus Bishop of Comana, 81. 1. 84. 1.
Zozimas or Zosimas a Monk in Syria, 480. 1. He foretells the Earthquake at Antioch, 480. 2. His miracles, ibid.
Zozimas an Historian, was a Heathen, and on that account hated Constantine, 472. 1. He brought down his History as far as the times of Homerus and Arcadius, 472. 2. when he wrote his History, ibid.

THE INDEX

Of the Chief Matters that occur in the Notes on these

HISTORIANS.

The First Number shews the Page ; the Second, the Column.

A.

A Bares, or Abari, when first known to the Romans, 500. 1.
Acaetius Bishop of Constantine, never held communion with Peetrus Fullo, 437. 2. He was condemned in no particular Synod, 459. 1. when the sentence of depolation was pronounced against him, 461. 1, 2.
Axiſſaquas, what it signifies, 459. 1.
Aceſius the Novatianist seems not to have been called to the Nicene Synod by Constantine, 225. 1.
Acaemeti had two Monasteries at Constantinople, 459. 2. 467. 1.
Adra, what, 12. 1. Acts of Pilate when forged by the Heathens, 12. 1. 173. 2.
Adiadyx ⲙⲉⲛⲓⲁⲓⲉⲗⲁ, the power of a perpetual Master of the Milice, 462. 2. a passage in Theophanes is mended, ibid.
Adutor, the Prince of the Office of the Master of the Offices, 440. 1.
Adoration of the Emperour, what it was, 630. 2.
Adra, a City of Arabia, 391. 1.
Adulterer, to he called who invaded the See of a Bishop that was yet living, 456. 2.
Adultery, how punished amongst the Romans, 341. 1.
Adulterus, an Epithete given to Jupiter, 410. 1.
Aelia, to Jerusalem was called till Constantine's time, when it recovered its old name Jerusalem again, 52. 1. 118. 1. 167. 2.
Aerial Martyr, to Symeon the Stylite was called, 411. 2.
Aether, the Element of Fire, 634. 2.
Africanus the Chronographer, not the same person that composed the Ceph, 1. 6. 2.
Asarababais a Philosopher, 137. 1.
Agabus, called also Agabus, 13. 2.
Agas Forum, a Market, or Court of Judicature, 69. 1.
Aion, or Aevum, in Plato signifies eternity, 671. 2.
Agnati and Cognati, who, and wherein they differ, 563. 1.
Alerpa Junior, when he began to Reign, 25. 2.
Aleſſile, who they are, 563. 1.
Aleſſile ⲁⲗⲉⲥⲓⲁ, what it signifies, 219. 2. 583. 2.
Aleſſian, the Chief Magistrate of the Jews that lived at Alexandria, 18. 1.
Allegories were by the Ancient Græcians termed ἀλlegορίαι, 23. 2.
Alexander Bishop of Constantinople, in what year he dyed, 247. 1.
Alexandria a very unequal City, and why, 127. 2.
Alexandrian Bishops heretofore termed Pope, 404. 1. Nicephorus's Opinion is refused, ibid. They had a secular principality, 372. 2.
Alexandrian Synod, wherein Origen's books were condemned by Theophilus, 360. 2.
Alexandrian Synod, its Acts, 283. 2. &c.
Alexandrian Bishop, whether he ordained all over Egypt, 263. 1.
Alternative Hymns, by whom first appointed, 359. 1.
Arbon, a place wherein Criminals were set, whilst they were interrogated by the Judge, 111. 2.
Auen was the answer of the Faithful, when they received the consecrated Bread, 114. 2. also, after the Priest had consecrated, 120. 2.
Avesſugus, Curtains hanging before doors, 524. 1. 2. many uses of them in the Church, ibid.
Amblicleus Bishop of Side, 432. 2.

Avacoddi, a Preface, 637. 1.
Avacoddi, a Stator, one that lifts his Master on horseback, 463. 1.
Avacoddi ⲙⲉⲛⲓⲁⲓⲉⲗⲁ, 128. 2.
Avacoddi, to comfort, or refresh, 40. 2.
Anastasia, the wife of Bassianus the Cæsar, 309. 1. 2.
Anastasian Bath, whence so called, ibid.
Anastasia, the Church of the Resurrection at Jerusalem, 427. 1. 588. 2.
Aræges, the Relation of a President to the Emperour, 407. 2.
Anastasia, a place near Constantinople, 475. 2.
Anastasiu Sinaita Bishop of Antioch, when he was ejected, 503. 1.
Anas or Ananus, held the High-priest-hood many years, 12. 2.
Avleſſide, Propi, 518. 2.
Armeſſide, Matters of the Scrinia, 350. 1.
Antioch when made a free City, 433. 2. three Forum's or Tribunals there, and as many Schools of Advocates, 415. 1. In the same City was also the Prætorium of the Master of the Eastern Milice, 415. 2. when termed Theopolis, 480. 1.
Antiochiani, from what month their years begin, 434. 1. 467. 2.
Antipater and Aristobulus, sons to Herod the Great, killed by his order, 11. 2.
Antipater, Grandfather to Herod the Great, 10. 1.
Antipater, See Alternative Hymns.
Aræſſide, Vicarius a substitute, 695. 1.
Aræſſide, the Metropolis of Syria-Cæle or Syria Secunda, 469. 1. 7.
Aræſſide, what it signifies, 77. 2. 105. 1.
Aræſſide Book, 98. 1.
Aræſſide, what it signifies, 81. 1.
Apocryſſus of a Monastery, that is, one who managed the affairs of a Monastery, 494. 1. Apocryſſus or Responsals of Patriarchs and Bishops in the Emperour's Court, 496. 1.
Apollinarian, Hereticks, 282. 2.
Apollonia a Virgin that suffered Martyrdom in the Reign of Philipppus, not under Decius, 110. 1.
Apollonia, whilst Montanus was living, wrote against his prophecy, 83. 2. &c.
Apollonius a Roman Senator, 85. 2.
Apollonius, his signification, 94. 1.
Apollates, when they return to the Church, are treated with more civility, 119. 2.
Apollis, the twelve were not only so called, but several other persons, 14. 2. 29. 1.
Apollis are not reckoned in the number of Bishops, 38. 2.
Apollis, what it signifies, 402. 1. 2.
Apollis, what it imports, 72. 2.
Aqueduct of Valens Angustinus at Constantinople, 3. 8. 1. 2.
Archelaus Bishop of Cæsarea, his disputation against Manicheans, 234. 2.
Areopagus, what it was, 32. 1.
Aerſſide, 91. 1.
Arus, two of that name, 240. 2. Arus who with Eugenius presented a Libel of faith to the Emperour Constantine, was not Arius the Arch-Heretic, ibid.
Arius, when and how recalled from banishment, ibid.
Artemius, Commander in chief of Egypt, 288. 2.
Artemius, to take away, or remove, 37. 1.
Artemius Bishop of the Hypelliae, 237. 2. 240. 2.
Aſceta, who were heretofore called so, 21. 2. Not only Monk but,

The I N D E X.

but Clergy-men also had that name given them, 139. 1. 168. 2.
Antioch, the Crime of Treason, 695. 1.
Asia, how many ways 'tis taken, 86. 1.
Asiarchs, what they were, 58. 2. how chosen, ibid. a very chargeable Office, ibid.
Asterius Urbanus, Author of the books against the Cataphrygæ, 82. 1.
Arbanasius, in what year recalled from banishment, 246. 2. in what year he went to Rome, 256. 2. He went to Rome once only, 253. 2. when a boy, he baptized his play-fellows, 229. 1.
Aras, or Artis Bacchus, 302. 2.
Articus Bishop of Constantinople, his Epitaph, 383. 1.
Augustonica, a Province of Egypt, 262. 2.
Auleis & Dugæ, a door of an house, 608. 2.
Audi, Arrium, or a Court, 590. 2.
Avitus, how many months he Reigned, 428. 2. 88c.
Ause, or Ofce, the first name of Jesus the son of Nave, 5. 1.
Aulovosæ uira, 190. 2.
Aulovosæ, Christian Virgins, 161. 2.
Aulovosæ, in Eusebius calls Christ, 186. 2.
Axiomatikos the Honorati, are joyned with the Decuriones, 431. 2.

B.

B Acanda, a sort of Boors, were up in Arms over the whole Roman world, 690. 2.
Bacchus Prince of the Iberi, 232. 2.
Baptesin by the Greeks termed σβεγγισ or a seal, 40. 2. 'tis the Symbol of our Lord's Passion, 184. 2. 'tis termed παισις, 688. 2.
Basilus Bishop of Amasia, 551. 2. a Martyr under Licinius, ibid.
Basilus the Great, what year made Bishop of Cæsarea, 321. 1. 2. He was twice questioned by Valens, 322. 1.
Basilides Prophets, 52. 2.
Basilides Alfæ, 631. 2.
Basiliden πολις, the Imperial City, so Eusebius always calls Rome, not Constantinople, 593. 1.
Basiliscus declared his son Marcus, Cæsar; afterwards, Augustus, 451. 1.
Batanioles, a Surname of Porphyrius the Philosopher, 400. 2.
Battle at Caba, 554. 1.
Battle at Hadrianople, what year it happened, 556. 2.
Beusfarius, 179. 1.
Beryllus's opinion concerning the Nature and divinity of Christ, 107. 1. His Heresie, 290. 2.
Berytus, what year the Synod was convened there, 409. 1.
Bisops in Egypt, were an hundred, 212. 2.
Bisshops heretofore preached, standing on the steps of the Altar, 351. 2.
Bisshops, their first Sermon always much taken notice of, 384. 2.
Bisshops, their sentences in judicature made valid, 615. 2.
Bisshops of other Cities, were usually buried at Constantinople, in the Church of The Apostles, 492. 2.
Bisshops anciently wore a plate of gold on their forehead, in imitation of the Jews's High-priests, 87. 1.
Birthday of the Martyrs, was that whereon they suffer'd Martyrdom, 59. 2.
Bizanza, to lead a secular Life, 52. 2. Βιζαντις, Laicks, ibid.
Boset, Marks to be called, 418. 1.
Botry a City of Phœnicie, 494. 1. Theophanes and Antoninus Martyr are mended, ibid.
Boset-Church very ancient, 333. 1. 2. it was, and is independent of the Roman Patriarchate, ibid.
Buechum, what it was, 136. 2. the siege of it, when, ibid.
Bysia, 518. 2.

C.

C Cæsarea, or Cæsarium, the Great Church of Alexandria, 376. 2. whence it had that name, 430. 1.
Cæus was Author of the book called The Little Labyrinth, 89. 2. He wrote a book against Proclus, 102. 2.
Calendis is ordained Bishop of Antioch at Constantinople by Acacius, contrary to the Canons, 457. 1. how many years he late Bishop, 452. 1.
Καλλιπικλς, so Constantinople was termed, 557. 1.
καλυσθηδεις is sometimes made use of instead of καλυθηδον, 446. 2. In old Coins that City is written καλυθηδων, 460. 1.
Camp bread given to the City Antioch by Dionysius, 427. 1. a place in Procopius about this Ammon, is mended, ibid.
Campus, a place without the City Antioch, where the Soldiers exercised, 518. 2. Campus, a place seven miles distant from Constantinople, 507. 2. it was the place where Criminals were punished, 658. 2.
Canon of the Council of Antioch, 366. 1. what must be thought concerning that Council, ibid.
Canon, or let-allowance of Bread, or Bread-corn, at Constantinople, 251. 1.

Canon the second, of the Constantinopolitan Council, is explained, 333. 2.
Canon the sixth, of the Nicene Council, whether it treats concerning Patriarchs, and their Jurisdiction, 332. 2.
Castellan Fountain near Antioch, 414. 2.
Castrensis Panis. See Camp bread.
Καταδωκοι, Ligatures, Incantments, 688. 2.
Catechist taught in a private Auditory, not publicly in the Church, 102. 1.
Catechumens were made by Imposition of the Bishop's hand, 617. 1. 2. they covered their heads, 629. 1.
Κατασκευασμ, 74. 1.
Catholic Epistles, 98. 1.
Catholice, a Rationalist, 124. 2. κατὰ τὸν κατὰ λόγον λόγον, a Rationalist, ibid. and 181. 2.
Celsus the Philosopher, against whom Origen wrote, was Lucian's Friend, 108. 1.
Cephro, and Coluthio, 122. 2. 123. 1.
Ceras, a Wind about Byzantium, 276. 2.
Κεφαλαιον, capitulum, a period, 131. 2.
Chareson, a Philosopher, 101. 2.
Chair or Throne of Saint Mark at Alexandria, 138. 2.
Chalcedon-Synod, the Copies of it that Evagrius made use of, are different from ours, 439. 1. which are more genuine and authentic, Evagrius's Copies, or ours, 444. 1.
Chalcedon had only the bare name of a Metropolis given it by Marcianus, 446. 2.
Charis, or Libel of Cacilianus's crimes, transmitted to the Emperour, 394. 1.
Χαρις instead of χαρις, 115. 2.
Chorepiscops, who they were, 334. 1.
Chosroes King of the Persians, when he died, 509. 1.
Χρῆστις, Christ, was written with a diphthong, 653. 1. Christ before all things, and after all things, 666. 1.
Christ, in what year born, 7. 2. whether he was born on the twenty fifth of December, ibid.
Christian Religion termed ἡ χριστιανική, 53. 1.
Christians went to stop their Ears, when they heard any impious ex-pression, 85. 1. they gave their children the name of the *dis*possession, 131. 1. They played with expanded hands, 611. 1.
Christians were very desirous of being baptized in Jordan, 628. 1. who were termed perfect Christians, 628. 2. Their Feast at the Sepulchres of the Martyrs, 647. 2. Their way of Burial, 124. 1. 128. 2.
Χρῆστις & γεννα, Encaustick painting, 530. 2.
Χρυσομαστωρ της εντυχιως, 433. 2.
Chrysargyrum is in the Code termed Lustralis auri Colatio, 47. 1. The Emperours called it Vestigal. ibid. Libarius calls it Tribute, because 'was paid every fourth year by Merchants or Traders, ibid. The Aurum pœnsum is to be distinguished from it, ibid.
Chrysostome's saying concerning penitents, 367. 2.
Chrysetella, what it was, 474. 2.
Churches, there were forty of them at Rome in Dicius's time, 113. 2. Circular Letters, or Encyclics, 432. 2.
Claudian at first wrote Greek Verse, 416. 1. when he began to write Latine Verse, ibid.
Clavularis Cursus, 287. 2.
Clement's book of Recognitions, 48. 2. 49. 1.
Clement's Stromata, 97. 2.
Clement's books entitled Πνευματικα, or Institutions, 79. 1. a fragment of them is now extant, at the close of his Stromata, ibid.
Clergy-men wore a Philosphick Pallium, 101. 2. Clergy-men termed Competentes, 191. 2.
Κληρος the degree or order of Ecclesiasticks, 144. 1.
Εκκλησιον, he enroll'd amongst the Clergy, 495. 1.
Clerus Bishop of Rome, the same person with Anacletus, 38. 2.
Κληροδοτα what it signifies, 412. 2. 422. 2.
Κληροδοτα, Sibadia, accubita, Beds to lye and eat upon, 581. 2.
Clinick, their Baptism, 113. 2.
Coadjutor or Assistant can't be made without the Bishops consent, 96. 1. Two instances of Coadjutors, 137. 2.
Colligere, Collecta, 604. 2.
Clotas of Cleophas, whether Joseph's brother, and uncle to Christ, 38. 1.
Κοινοτητα, in Latine Azce, 122. 2.
Communes of the first and second order, long before the Reign of Constantine, 606. 2. 88c.
Common Council of Asia, or κωνσταντινου, what it was, 55. 2. 56. 1.
Communicatory Letters, two sorts of them, 135. 1.
Communio was twofold; one of prayer, the other of the Sacraments, 112. 1. private Communion, ibid. and 114. 2.
Confessores, 59. 1.
Confession, whether private, or publick, amongst the Ancient Christians, 341. 2. 342. 1. 88c.
Consecrated Bread was wont to be moistened in water, 113. 2.
Constantina, a City of Phœnicie, the Bishop whereof was Sopironius, 403. 1.
Constantine's Letters to the Bishops, taken for the Synodick Letter of the Nicene Synod, 582. 1.

The INDEX.

Constantine took too much upon himself, in Ecclesiastick matters, 594. 2.
Constantine the Great, how many years he reigned, 624. 1. He was termed ἰσχυροῦς, equal to an Apostle, 626. 2. when he was made a Catechumen, 627. 2.
Constantine's Statue went to be adored by the common people, 230. 1.
Constantine's Letter against Arius, 224. 2.
Constantinopolitane Bishop ordained in the Hellasfont, and in the adjacent Provinces, 276. 1. He is simply and absolutely termed The Patriarch, 439. 1.
Constantinopolitane Synod assembled on account of the cause of Gregorius Bishop of Antioch, what year convened, 518. 1, 2.
Constantine Chlorus, in what year he dyed, 209. 2.
Constantinus used to swear by his own eternity, 273. 1.
Corban, what it was, 19. 1.
Cozezi, Rusticks or Boors, 105. 1. called also zozeini, 490. 2.
Crispatus a Philosopher, 101. 2. He is erroneously termed Phronimus, ibid.
Council at Jerusalem, in what year assembled, 25. 1.
Council of Chalcedon, in what manner it was preached and published, 482. 2. The three General Councils preached or published together with it by the Deacon in the Church after the reading of the Gospel, and inserted into the Diptychs, ibid.
Criminals usually executed without the City, 495. 1.
Crispines, 637. 2.
Curator of a City, 146. 1.
Curators of the Imperial House, who they were, 510. 1, &c. They had Jurisdiction, 511. 1. Their Title was, Most Glorious, and Most Magnificent, ibid. 510. 2.
Cutices, Dominica, or Churches, 698. 1.
Curtis, and Curtiales, 558. 1.
Curtius or Decurions did heretofore gather the Tribute, 474. 2.
Augustinus the Emperor freed them from that, 475. 1. The following Emperors null'd that Law, ibid.
Curpalates heretofore a despicable office, afterwards the highest dignity of the palace, 499. 1, 2. He was a different person from the Count of the Guards, ibid.
Cutha, a Monastery and Laura, 480. 2.
Cyrenica a Region near Antioch, 467. 2.
Cyrenius. See Quirinus.
Cyrillus Bishop of Alexandria presided in the Ephefine Synod, 404. 1.
Cyrus Bishop of Beraa, banished on account of the Homousian Faith, 235. 2.
Cyrus, a Poet, 416. 1.

D.

Dacianus, 278. 1.
Dæmons of the Air, or Aerial Dæmons, 672. 1.
Damianus the Confessor, Father to Damianus the Cæsar, 238. 2, &c.
Damophilus the Brithyan, his Collectanea, 515. 2. He lived after Plutarch's time, ibid.
Darius the Mede, is not Nabonidus, 652. 1.
Deacons distributed not the Sacrament amongst the people, when the Priest was present, 114. 2.
Decans, ἑκατάγχοι, 521. 2.
Decennalia, Vicennalia, Tricennalia, what meant by them, 529. 1.
Deans, how many years he reigned, 117. 1.
Deans, who they were at Rome, 340. 2. The Rector of the Deacons, ibid.
Deopence, an Edifice wherein were the Emperor's Stribadii, or Beds to lie and banquet on, 478. 1.
Deuotio, what it signifies, 110. 2.
Deuotio, to be read publicly, 38. 1.
Deuotio of Attiles, 415. 2. His name being faulty in the Alexandrian Chronicle, it mended, ibid.
Depositions of Bishops in what order usually declared, 442. 1.
Dionysius the Historian, his actibus, 513. 2.
Dio, his isopodotes, perpetual Priests, 151. 1.
Diochys, Matters of the Platonic School at Athens, 136. 1.
Diochys, Homilies, or Discourses to the people, 89. 1.
Diogene of Salon and Papirus, by whom written, 52. 1.
Diochys, Prosepi, 280. 2.
Diochys, Most Perfect, 177. 2.
Diochys, Charity, Love, 583. 2.
Diochys, compunction, to bury the dead, 128. 2.
Diochys, 130. 2.
Diochys, ἰσχυροῦς, hasta amentata, a Javelin fitted with a Leather-loop, 463. 1.
Dionys est, he is worthy, was the usual acclamation in the Election of Bishops, 106. 1.
Dionys, Enarrations, Expositions, 98. 2.
Dionys and Peregrini, 513. 2.
Dioeclesian's perfection, when it began, 140. 2. 158. 2. 527. 1. when it ended, 151. 1. what year Dioeclesian triumphed, 148. 1, 2. why he reigned the Emperor, 660. 1, 2. in what year he dyed, 210. 2.
Dioeclesia, what it signifies, 33. 2. 618. 2.
Dionysius Consul of Phoenice, 620. 2.
Diochys, Porticus, 550. 1.

Diochys Bishop of Hermopolis, when he dyed, 365. 1.
Diochys Junior when ordained Bishop of Alexandria, 467. 1. Liberatus's mistake in relating his Ordination, ibid.
Dius, the first Month of the Syro-Macedonian, 1:7. 1.
Dionysius, Heretics, 97. 1.
Dionysia Mediana, 316. 1. whence so called, ibid.
Dionysius, their Schism, 571. 2. they were the first that appealed from an Ecclesiastick Judicature, 280. 2.
Dorotheus Presbyter of Antioch, a different person from Dorotheus who was of the Bed-chamber to the Emperor, 135. 2, &c.
Dorotheus the Samaritan, when he lived, 63. 2.
Dorotheus of the Arians, 258. 1.
Drachms whence so called, by whom used; Attick Drachms, their value, 11. 2.
Ducenarius, what he was, 131. 1.
Dumetius, Powers, so Angels, as well as Demons, are termed, 686. 1.

E.

E Arab-quakers, two sorts of them, 175. 1.
Earth-quake at Antioch in Justinus's Reign, in what year it happened, 475. 2.
Easter-Alms, 613. 2.
Ebonites, whence so called, 44. 1.
Ecclesiasticus, an Ecclesiastick person, in how many senses 'tis taken, 29. 2.
Edicts and Letters of the Emperors, written in paper, 542. 1.
Edicts of the Præfati-Præfati, 3:3. 1.
Edicts and Letters of the Emperors, wherein they differ, 180. 1.
Edictus, ἑκαστος, ἑκαστος, 4. 1. 488. 2.
Edictus, what it signifies, 97. 1.
Edictus, what it signifies, 113. 1.
Edictus, madness of mind, 81. 2.
Edictus heretofore reckoned amongst the Provinces of the East, 571. 2.
Egyptus ἡγεμονία, what, 92. 1. Philosophy and Rhetorick differ from them, ibid.
Elesia, Heretics, 108. 1, 2. so called from Elesai or Elxai, ibid.
Elenusius Bishop of Safima, 466. 1. a place in Theophanus about him, is mended, ibid.
Emperors of Constantinople were usually proclaimed in the seventh Milliarium, or Mile, 507. 2.
Emperors of Rome rescinded all that had been done by Tyrants, 661. 2.
Empire of Rome when first divided, 148. 2.
Empire, what it signifies amongst the Antients, 406. 2.
Empire, Letters of the Patriarchs at their instigation, 478. 2. also ἑκαστος, Homilies, ibid.
Empire, to sleep in a Heathen temple, 597. 2.
Emperors of the Jerusalem Church, on what day celebrated, 621. 2.
Empire Letters. See Circular-Letters.
Empire and Empire, a supplicatory-Libel, 55. 1.
Empire signifies Union, not Unity, 501. 2, &c.
Empire, ἑκαστος, ἑκαστος, 116. 2.
Empire, what it signifies, 118. 2.
Empire, the Officials of the Prætorian Prefecture, 223. 2. 556. 2.
Empire and Empire, made use of instead of Empire, 30. 2.
Ephefine Bishop heretofore ordained by the Bishops of his own Province, 452. 1. the Patriarchal Jurisdiction taken from him in the Caesarean-Council, ibid.
Empire, to salute, 56. 1. 573. 2.
Empire, the advent or arrival of the Gods, 174. 2.
Empire, Seditary Mechanics, 150. 1.
Empire, an Initiation, 297. 1.
Empire, ἑκαστος, an Indiction, 468. 1.
Ephefine Council in Basilisus's Reign, 451. 1.
Epiphanius Bishop of Cyprus, when he dyed, 363. 1, 2. His character, ibid.
Epistole Communicatorie. See Communicatory-Letters.
Epistole and Epistole, what they signify, 4. 1.
Essent, 23. 1.
Edus, the Provinces of the Romans, 539. 1.
Epistole, what it signifies, 511. 2.
Evils are by the Græcians termed ἑκαστος, 486. 2.
Evil, what it signifies, 73. 1.
Evangelus a Presbyter of Antioch, was afterwards Bishop of Antioch, 351. 2.
Evangelus Presbyter of Egypt, 339. 1, 2. a passage in Eusepius his Life of Adrianus, mended, ibid.
Eucharis, so the Consecrated bread was termed, 88. 2. it was sent to other Bishops under the name of Eulogie, ibid. it is given to a boy to carry to a sick man, 115. 1. it was sometimes given to penitents without reconciliation, ibid. it was put into the mouths of the sick, 115. 2. what remained of it, was given to boys, to be eaten, 194. 2.
Eucharis, ἑκαστος, to pray, or desire earnestly, 535. 2.
Eudocia Augusta went twice to Jerusalem, 417. 1, 2. when she made her second journey thither, ibid.
Eudocia the Empress, her silver Statue, 365. 1, 2.
Eugenius a Tyrant in Dioeclesian's time, 142. 2.

The INDEX.

Eusebius when made Bishop of Cyricus, 307. 2. His Creed, 335. 2. &c.
Eusebius, who they were, 39. 2.
Eusebius a significant noble person, not Patriarchs, 39. 1.
Eusebius wrote his Ecclesiastical History, after almost all his other works, 5. 1. His book concerning the Easter-Cycle, 617. 2. whether he made a speech to the Emperor in the Nicene-council, 579. 2.
Eusebius and Lucifer, whether they were Legates of the Apostolic See, 189. 2.
Eusebius and Theognisius, when banished, and when restored, 227. 2. when they presented a Libel of Satisfaction to the Bishops, 128. 1. Synod, were not condemned in the Nicene-Synod, but in some other Synod, ibid.
Eustathius Bishop of Antioch, when deposed, 559. 2. when he dyed, 313. 2. His body when removed to Antioch, ibid.
Eutropia Mother-in-law to Constantine, 594. 2. &c.
Euzemus, Ephedicks, 270. 2.
Euzemus, Adversus, to Value by money, 326. 2.
Exarchi, who they were, 433. 1.
Exedra, what it is, and whence so called, 574. 1.
Exorcists, persequutors, 607. 1. 2.
Exorcists, their office, 118. 2.
Exorists, Municipal Magistrates, 69. 1.
Expositiones, two of them were made against the Vandals in Leo Augustinus's reign, 435. 2. a passage in Candidus Maurus, concerning the Expedition, intended, ibid.

F.

Faithful heard the Word, standing in the Church, 617. 2.
Faith only by sense, 65. 2.
Faith before Easter, very ancient, 88. 1.
Fasts, three sorts of it amongst the Ancient Christians, ibid. The Fast of forty hours before Easter, who used, ibid. Fast of the Great week, must be distinguished from the Lent-Fast, ibid.
Faust at the Sepulchres of the Martyrs, 647. 2.
Felix when sent Procurator into Judea, 25. 2.
Feria, what the days of the week are so termed, 157. 2.
Feria of the week, have their name from the following Sunday, 88. 1. 678. 2.
First Incession of the Apostles, how far it reacht, 27. 1.
Flaccilla wife to the Emperor Theodosius, 325. 2.
Flaccillus Bishop of Antioch, 28. 1.
Flamen perpetuus, 191. 1.
Follies two sorts of them, 195. 1. their value, ibid.
Form, or Draught of the Nicene Creed, was subscribed by all the Bishops, but 240. 217. 2.
Frumentius Bishop of Alexandria, the same person with Frumentius Bishop of the Indians, 232. 1. 2.
Frumentius, 191. 1.

G.

Galen's authority, great amongst the Ancients, 90. 2.
Galerius's Victory over the Perfians, 112. 1.
Gargira, the Synod there when held, 282. 2.
Genesis of the Liberians, were regitred in their publick Archives, 10. 1.
Genius and genius, how much they differ in signification, 258. 2.
Gillo or Gello, a kind of Sea Devil, 512. 2. the same with Empusa, ibid.
Gerse, or Gerione, who they were, 10. 1.
Georgius of Laodicea was made a Presbyter by Alexander Bishop of the Alexandrian, 602. 1.
Germianus when made Bishop of Sirmium, 568. 1.
Glicerius the Emperor was not made Bishop of Portus, but of Salone, 136. 1. 2.
Golden-Rod usually carried before the Roman Emperours, 499. 1. 2.
Gospel according to the Hebrews, 43. 1.
Gospel of Basilides, 52. 2.
Gregorius Bishop of Alexandria, how many years he sat Bishop, 251. 1.
Gregorius Nazianzenus, his three Bishopricks, 311. 2. 331. 1.
Gryllaea, 558. 1.

H.

Halicarn the Emperour built a Temple to Venus, on mount Calvary, 224. 1.
Hanniballianus, 684. 2.
Hantheons, how they consecrated the Images of their Gods, 173. 1.
Harvest was Irenaeus's Contemporary, 53. 1.
Helen her death, what year it happened, 593. 1.
Henda signifies that age which is fit for warfare, 168. 1.
Hereticen, or Heretico's Edict about uniting the Churches, is termed Hexagema, 455. 1.
Hereti a Catichumen, 94. 1.
Hereticks, whether they may lawfully be persecuted, 370. 2.
Heremodactylus, what manner of plant it was, 525. 2. the root of it good for those that are troubled with the Gout in the Joynts or Fingers, ibid.
Heremogenes an Heretic, 65. 1. what his Heresy was. ibid.

Herod the Great was no Foreigner but a Jew, 8. 1. after his death, his Kingdom was divided into three parts, 12. 1.
Herod, called also Agrippa, who he was, 19. 2. what children he had, 20. 2.
Hexapla of Origen, whence so called, 99. 1. 59. 2.
Hierocles Prefect of Egypt, against whom Eusebius wrote, 161. 2.
Hierophantus were never called by their own name, by those whom they had initiated, 664. 1.
High-Priest, to every person was called, as long as he lived, who had once born that office, 12. 2. They wore a plate of Gold, 45. 2.
Hilarus and Atanasius differ in opinion concerning the Draughts of the Creed, drawn up by the Easterns, 266. 1. 2.
Hippolitus Bishop of Portus, 102. 2. His Paschal-Canon is part of his book concerning Easter, 103. 1.
Hippolytus Emperour, 104. 1.
Honoratus was the first Prefect of Constantinople, 281. 1.
Honorati, of her et, 610. 2.
Hofanna, what it signifies, 28. 1.
Hofius subscribed first to the Nicene Synod, 227. 1.
Hyacinthides virgins at Athens, who they were, 690. 1.
Hyazari and Hyazari, the Prefect-Prætor, 606. 2.
Hyazaria the Philotherefs, probably was Tiberius's daughter, 376. 1. by whose means she was murdered, 376. 2.
Hyphantius when made Bishop of Heraclea, 266. 1.
Hypodaceni, or Sub-deacons, kept the doors of the Church, 191. 1.
Hypomnematograph, an office born by Luccian at Alexandria, 122. 2.

I.

Iacobus the Monk, to whom the Emperour Leo wrote, whether Jacobus Nisibenus, 432. 1.
Jacobus the brother of our Lord, whether one of the twelve Apostles, 130. 2. whether the son of Joseph, 16. 1. what is the meaning of his surname Oblias, 27. 2. in what year he suffered Martyrdom, 28. 2.
James ordained Bishop of Jerusalem by Christ, 126. 2.
Jaxogeporal, who termed so amongst the Greeks, 375. 2.
Jeconium, the Synod there when convened, 119. 2.
Jesegysuensis amongst the Egyptians, who they were, 36. 1.
Jerusalem Bishop's authority, 263. 1.
Jews, how their families came to be so confused, 9. 1. their Genealogies were not burnt by Herod, 10. 1. they had private copies of their Genealogies, ibid. they pray'd to God with their eyes turned towards the Temple, 33. 2. they were permitted to enter Jerusalem but once in a year, 52. 1. their seven Heresies, 63. 2. Their Archibishops, Presbyters, Deacons, Patriarchs, 121. 1. at their Feasts the Gentiles were present also, 28. 1. Their dispersion, and the reason of it, 30. 2. &c. a Jew in secret, or inwardly, 167. 1. How they divided the night and day, 35. 2.
Image of Christ at Edessa, 489. 1.
Indians converted to the faith of Christ by Frumentius, in Constantinus's reign, 232. 1. 2.
Interregnum of three months after the death of Constantine the Great, 600. 2.
Iohannes is ordained Bishop of Alexandria at Constantinople, by Iohannes Scholasticus Patriarch of Constantinople, 503. 1.
Iohannes Amenus, Bishop of Antioch after Petrus Fullo, 453. 2.
Iohannes Codranus Bishop of Antioch, 457. 1.
Iohannes Rector the Hiltorian, not the same person with Iohannes of Epiphania the Hiltorian, 413. 2. &c.
Iohannes Tabernestus, Bishop of Alexandria, whence so called, 454. 2. He was Oeconomus of the Alexandrian Church, ibid. a place in Liberatus concerning him, is intended, ibid. He did not appeal to Pope Simplicius, 456. 2.
John the Baptist's Church in the City Alexandria, was the Great Church, 454. 2.
Josephus's History of the Jewish Wars transcribed by Titus's own hand, 37. 2.
Josephus's book concerning his own Life, is part of his twentieth book of Antiquities, 37. 2. His books of History, otherwise divided than now they are, 11. 1.
Josephus, to the Ancients called Josephus, 12. 2.
Jesus Maximinus, 178. 1. his third Consulate, 181. 2.
Jeneus, whether he brought the Letters of the Martyrs to Rome, 75. 2. In what year he was ordained Bishop, 76. 2. His Synodick Letter 87. 2.
Irenarch, or Eirenarch, 57. 2.
Irenæ, two Churches at Constantinople, called by that name; the one, the old; the other, the new, 247. 2.
Iordanus Josephus, a Copy, 584. 1.
Judas of Galile, or Galilonites, when he made his insurrection, 8. 1. He was Founder of the Sect of the Galilæans, 63. 2.
Judas whether the brother of our Lord, 39. 2.
Julian the Emperour, called Bell-burner, 297. 2.
Julianus, the Bishop of Rome's substitute in the second Ephesine Synod, was Bishop of Coe, not of Putendi, 409. 1.
Justice, its eye, 699. 1.
Iustinian's Vandalic Expedition, on what year of Christ it was undertaken, 484. 2.
Iustin the Martyr's first Apology, according to Eusebius, is that which is commonly entitled his second; and on the contrary, his second, his first, 21. 2. 60. 1. 61. 1. Justin's second Apology, commonly entitled his first, was dedicated to Antoninus pious, 61. 1. Justin Martyr in the Reign of Pius, ibid.

The I N D E X.

Justin Senior, is by some termed a Thracian, by others an Illyrian, 477. 1. Before he was Emperour, he was Comes of the Excubita or Guard, ibid.

Justin Junior, how many years he reigned, 513. 1.

Justin Tiberius, and his Books, 37. 2.

K.

K Αὐτὸν the Matricula or Roll of the Church-officers, 342. 1.

K Κατασκευάω, 101. 1.

K Κατασκευάω, 99. 1.

K Κατασκευάω, 92. 2.

K Κατασκευάω, cemeteries, 122. 2.

K Κατασκευάω, what it signifies, 55. 2.

L.

L Acuaris, 588. 1.

L Laici, when about to receive the Sacrament, heretofore came up to the Altar, 120. 2. before Bishops and Monks that were eminent for piety of Life, the Laics were wont to bow their heads, that they might receive a blessing, 491. 2.

Lampadarii, or Light-bearers, 665. 1.

Lampades, Torches, 613. 2.

Latiare Sacrum at Rome, 690. 1.

Lau what it is, and wherein it differs from a Monastery, 417. 2.

Laws of the Emperours Constantine and Theodosius, concerning burning the Books of Hereticks, 450. 1.

Legates of Caesar, some were Consulares, others Praetors, 46. 1.

Legate or Deputy of the Province of Lyons, 69. 1. 2.

Legion termed The Lightning Legion, 76. 1.

Legions amongst the Romans had their Chapel, or Oratory, and their Priestery, 625. 2.

Leo's Letter by Dioscorus forbid to be read in the Council of Ephesus, 433. 1.

Leo's Daughters at Athens, 6. 0. 1.

Libellatici, who they were, 120. 1.

Licinius made the Cities of the Roman Empire to flourish, 196. 2.

Ligei after darkness, in the Mylleties of the Pagans, 609. 2.

Licibus a Village in Chalcs, 120. 1. 1. It's name being faulty in Theopane's Chronicle, is mended. ibid.

Lophia, 518. 1.

Leaves of Benediction, 374. 2.

Logotheta, to bear the office of a Curator, 146. 1.

Logotheta, to the Praefectus Praetoris was termed, 475. 1. 2.

Logotheta, 475. 2.

Logotheta, termed the Anastasian wall, from its Builder, 470. 2.

Logotheta a Philosopher, taught at Athens, 101. 1.

Logotheta, or Logotheta of the Abbeis or Champions, 72. 1.

Logotheta a Martyr suffered under Maximianus, 174. 1.

Logotheta, or Sports at Lyons, 7. 2.

Lunar Month, was thirty days, 674. 1.

Logotheta Deputy of Palestine, 51. 1.

Logotheta, 347. 2.

Lysianus the Tetrarch was not one of Herod's Sons, nor his Successor,

12. 1.

M.

M Acarius Bishop of Jerusalem, when ordained, and when ejected, 455. 1. in what year he was reitor to his See, 495. 2.

Macedonian's Prefidency over the Constantinopolitan Church, whence to be begun, 252. 1.

Macedonians, their Embassy to Pope Liberius, in what year sent, 310. 2.

Macedonian Bishop of Constantinople, when first made Bishop, subscribed to Leo's Uniting Edict, or Henoticon, 426. 2.

Mages amongst the Egyptians, 121. 1.

Magistrate of the City Jerusalem, was termed segiapōs, 36. 1.

Magistrates and Governors of Provinces can't be preferred to a Bishopicks, without consent of the Emperour, 394. 2.

Maspeps, for the Bakers were called; and Maspeps was the office of Bakers, 340. 2.

Mandates or Commands of Princes, epistalai, 178. 2.

Mandira, a Monastery; and Aggoudiotes, an Abbot of a Monastery, 412. 1.

Manichaeans, who was the first broacher of their Heresie, 135. 2. their Fasts, 24. 1.

Marcion at first a Mariner, 79. 2.

Marcoteck Region was subject to the Bishop of Alexandria, 238. 1.

How many Presbyters and Deacons it had, ibid.

Mark the Evangelist, what year he went into Egypt, 22. 2.

Mark the Interpreter of Saint Peter, 49. 2.

Martirs will be Christ's Assistants when he comes to judgment, 112. 1.

Martirs were beheaded in The Campus, 68. 2.

Martirs, four sorts of them amongst the Greeks, 107. 1.

Martirs, four sorts of them amongst the Greeks, 107. 1.

Martirs, four sorts of them amongst the Greeks, 107. 1.

Martirs, four sorts of them amongst the Greeks, 107. 1.

Martire, the Sepulchre of a Martyr, 68. 1.

Martire, the Church of Saint Euphemia the Martyr, 446. 1. The Oratory of a Martyrium, what it was, 446. 1. 2.

Martyrium, for the Jerusalem Church was called, 622. 2.

Matbohei, and Matboheani, 61. 2.

Matheua, for the Greek call The Creed, 218. 2.

Mattheu, where and in what year he wrote his Gospel, 42. 1.

Mausoleum or Tomb of Helena Queen of the Adiabeni near Jerusalem, 21. 1.

Maximus, two of that name who were Presbyters of the Roman Church, 513. 1. 114. 2.

Maximus the Cynick is ordained Bishop of Constantinople, 332. 2.

Maximus, two Philosophers of that name, 286. 1.

Maximus the Tyrant, what Country-man he was, 336. 2.

Mayalmonius Rome, 658. 1.

Melchus put instead of Mattheu, in Our Saviour's Genealogy, 9. 2.

Melchius Bishop of Ponnus, 138. 2. Sumamed Melchius the Great, ibid.

Melchians after the Nicene Synod joined with the Arians, 213. 2.

Melchius why kindly used by the Nicene Synod, 219. 2. He was no

Heretarch, 220. 2.

Meser instead of Mattheu, 645. 1.

Mesodach, area, a Court, 590. 2.

Mesodach the twenty fifth day from Easter, 629. 2.

Mesodach, 578. 2.

Mesodach, Dardanius, petty-merchants, 297. 2.

Mesodach or Mesodach, what it signifies, and in what senses 'tis used, 478. 1.

Methodius the Book concerning the Resurrection, against Origen, 104. 1.

why Eusebius has not mentioned Methodius, ibid.

Methodius the Philosopher, 231. 1.

Metropolitans, their ordination does properly belong to the Patriarchs,

389. 2.

Milice is a sort of servitude, 517. 2. 555. 1.

Milisia Palatina, 246. 1.

Milisia-Synod, how many Bishops were at it, 271. 2. the matters transacted there, 256. 2. in what year of Christ it was held, ibid.

Miscela, or Little Miscra worn by Christian Virgins, 165. 2.

Miscra assigned to God the Father, epitaphia to the Son and Holy Ghost, 683. 2.

Miscra and Miscra, 73. 2.

Montanus's Fasts, 83. 1. His Heresie called The new Prophecy, 84. 1.

Montanus and Sabellius, why frequently joined together, 235. 1. 2.

Moses, the Presbyter died before Cornelius's Ordination, 115. 1.

Mysis, two of them, 81. 1.

Mysia, 482. 2.

N.

N Abi or rsab is taken for the whole sacred House, 591. 2. &c.

N Ναυαλλήτης, what it signifies, 431. 2.

N Ναυαλλήτης, a Bishop, 636. 2.

N Ναυαλλήτης, the first Sunday after Easter, 403. 2. the Greek call it by that name still, 444. 1.

Neapolis a City of Palestine, 55. 1.

Neclarius, whether he abolished Confession or Penance, 242. 2. &c.

Neclius, καταλίω καταλίω, the dead more contemptible than dung,

6. 7. 2.

Neoplates were clothed in white Garments, 629. 1. they put them off, on the eighth day, ibid.

Nepos, how many years he reigned, 436. 1.

Nicene Synod was convened in the Palace, 579. 1. How many

Bishops met at that Synod, 578. 2. 216. 1. 227. 1. no Acts were made of this Synod, 581. 1. on what Month and Day it was held, 581. 2. 2.

Nicoletus the Grammarian, 285. 2.

Nicoletus, what their Heresie was, 44. 2.

Nicoletus, the Priests thereof were Andragyni, 614. 1. 2.

Nicomai instead of Nicomachus, 132. 2.

Noset η νοση νοση, the Christian Sacrifice, 697. 1.

Noset and noset, wherein they differ, 190. 2.

Nomades, who the Greek call to, 674. 2.

Nomades of the Church, or of Bishops, 347. 1. what their Office was, ibid.

Novatianists did not use the Chrisme in Baptism, 114. 1. they re-baptized the Catholics that embraced their Heresie, 120. 1.

Novatus and Novatianus are confounded by the Greeks, 115. 2.

Novatianus's Martyrdom, and the Acts of his passion are forged, 32. 2.

Novatianus was a Native of Phrygia, ibid.

Novum Saeculum, or a new age, 576. 1. 2.

Nubis, they were called Nomades also, 407. 1. 2.

Numenius the Philosopher, 101. 1.

Nuv, that is Lately, 53. 2. 553. 2.

Nymphaeum, the Temple of the Nymphs, 434. 1.

O.

O Odias, a God amongst the Arabians, 609. 1.

Ocbas and Atrabas an Impregnable Fort near the River Nymphius, 522. 1.

The INDEX.

Θιακόνη Temp'la, eight-sided Churches, 594. 1.
Θήματα of Infants and Neophytes how religiously observed, 629. 1.
Οικία Domestic protectors, 295. 2.
Οικονομία is not used in reference to the Incarnation only, but concerning all things which Christ did on Earth, in order to Man's Salvation, 1. 2. 183. 2. 547. 1. 694. 1. the disputation concerning Christ is divided into the οικονομία and θεολογία, 2. 1. θεολογία, or the admiratio, is properly attributed to the Son, 683. 2. 685. 1.
Ομόφωνος, whence so called, 19. 2. how many years it consisted of, ibid.
Old Testament, three ranks or degrees of the Books thereof amongst the Jews, 37. 1. How many in number the Books thereof were, ibid. and 104. 1.
Ὁμογενεῖς and ὁμογενεῖς of Alexandria, 127. 2.
Ὁμοῦδωρον, a place where the public treasure was laid, 83. 1, 2.
Ὁσολο, a dart, 43. 2.
Orator King of the Hannii, 385. 2. His Brother Ross, 392. 2.
Oratores or Hanikei chiefs were wont to be shaken by Auditors, 134. 1.
Order of the Session of Bishops in Councils, 83. 2.
Ὀρτολογία, and Ὀρτολογία, 51. 1.
Origen is ordained by two Bishops, 95. 1. went only once to Rome, 98. 2. distinguished the Books of the Old Testament into Cola, Verles, or such parts of the Text as contained an entire sense, 59. 2. After his Edition of the Ἱεραγία, he made the Τετραπλά, ibid. is a different Person from the other Origen Platinius School-fellow, 100. 2. &c. is condemned by Demetrius and deposed, 103. 2. Demetrius's sentence was inefficual, ibid. Origen, before his condemnation, removed from the City Alexandria, 105. 1, 2. His threefold work upon the sacred Scriptures, 108. 1, 2. what year he died, 117. 1. He was not condemned in the fifth Synod at Constantinople, but long before, 497. 1.
Origen, that name is written with an asprete by the Greeks, 92. 1.
Origena, what it signifies, 28. 1.
Ὀρτολογία, a Place or Village near Antioch, whence so called, 434. 1.
Ὀρτολογία sometimes signifies the Person of the Father, 3. 1.

P.

Π'Αγος, what it signifies, 431. 2.
Παλαιο, a Church at Antioch, in the old City, 290. 1.
Παλαιόπρωτος, one that buys provisions, and sells them again, 418. 2.
Pallium, the Habit of the Philosophers, 101. 2.
Pall for a Bishop, woven with Threads of Gold, 622. 1.
Παλαστήριον, 410. 2.
Parabiosis, as Requius says, was present at the Niense Council, 255. 2.
Παρεκκλήσιον what they were, 380. 2. not the same Persons with the congregatio, ibid. and 559. 1. 159. 1.
Παρεκκλήσιον, 171. 1.
Παρεκκλήσιον what it signifies, 430. 2. it imports also to hif for a Soldier, ibid.
Παρεκκλήσιον, the Miller-Roll, ibid.
Paradise upon Earth, where it was, 639. 1.
Παράδοξι, Champions that had gained many Victories, 143. 1.
Παρεκκλήσιον, Adulterate, or Counterfeit, 282. 2.
Παρεκκλήσιον assemblies of Schismaticks, 324. 1.
Παρεκκλήσιον, Demons so called, what they were, 688. 2.
Παρεκκλήσιον what it signifies, 178. 1.
Παρεκκλήσιον and παρεκκλήσιον, what they signify, 81. 2.
Παρεκκλήσιον, a Village in Egypt, 318. 2.
Παρεκκλήσιον, what it signifies, 100. 1, 2.
Παρεκκλήσιον 440. 1. παρεκκλήσιον, 558. 1. 655. 1, 2.
Παρεκκλήσιον and παρεκκλήσιον, 616. 1. 621. 1.
Παρεκκλήσιον signifies a Church, 1. 1. the reason of that name, ibid. sometimes 'tis taken for a whole Diocese, sometimes for a particular Church, ibid.
Παρεκκλήσιον, 516. 2. 521. 1.
Παρεκκλήσιον, how punished, 161. 2.
Particular assemblies which were held in diverse Churches at Alexandria, 128. 2.
Παρεκκλήσιον, or παρεκκλήσιον, a Wedding chamber, 316. 2.
Παρεκκλήσιον what it signifies, 37. 1.
Παρεκκλήσιον, when first constituted in the Church, 332. 2. &c. 334. 1.
Παρεκκλήσιον being accused by a Laick, appeals to the Emperor and a Synod, 318. 1. He is judged in an auditory made up of Laicks and Ecclesiasticks, ibid.
Παρεκκλήσιον, or Πατροπαλῖνες, Hereticks, 255. 1. &c.
Paul the Apostle went not to Jerusalem in Tiberius's Reign, 17. 2.
Paulinus Bishop of Tyre is translated to the Bishoprick of Antioch, 13. 1, 2.
Paulus Bishop of Alexandria, was a Heretick, 487. 2. Liberatus makes him a Catholic, ibid.
Peace was not given to the Japs, without the People's consent, 115. 1.
Πενήντη what it signifies, 69. 2.
Pentecost, why and when instituted, 345. 2.
Pentecost, and the space of Fifty Days from Easter to Pentecost, 619. 2.
Perigen a Bishop of Corinth, his Election is confirmed by the Bishop of Rome, 388. 2.
Περικλήσιον, what it signifies, 313. 1.

Πεσσελα, 124. 1. 128. 2.
Πεσσε, Hills or heaps of Stone, 590. 1.
Penitentiary Presbyter, his office, 341. 2. when abrogated, 343. 2.
Peter the Apostle, his second Epistle most undoubtedly his, 31. 1.
He and Saint Paul did not suffer Martyrdom on the same year, 32. 1.
He was not superior to the other Apostles, 441. 2.
Petrus Fido died before Petrus Mongus, 442. 1, 2.
Pharisea, by the opinion of Eusebius was termed, 451. 2.
Philas, whether he suffered at Alexandria, or in Thebais, 144. 2.
Philip the Deacon was by the Ancients confounded with Philip the Apostle, 45. 2. the names of Philip's Daughters, ibid.
Philippus the Profridus Pratorius, when he died, 252. 1.
Phil's Book against Flaccus, and that entitled concerning the Embassy to Camus, 18. 1. His Book against Flaccus, Eusebius terms His second Book concerning Virtutes, 18. 2.
Philomorus Rationalist of Egypt, 144. 2.
Philosophers borrowed their best Precepts from Moses's Law, 4. 2.
Phoenice, two of them, the one termed Maritima, the other Libanensis, 468. 1. They were subject to the Patriarch of Antioch, 468. 2.
The Duke of Phoenice, 469. 2. 470. 1.
Phosphorus, and Bosphorus, the Port at Constantinople, 435. 1.
Pilate killed himself, 19. 1. His character, ibid.
Pisander the Poet, two of that name, the former a Rhodian; the latter a Native of Larinda, who wrote six Books concerning the Miracles of the Goddesses and Heroes, 416. 2.
Placidia Augusta gave the Western Illyricum to Theodosius Junior, 593. 1.
Placidius, crufts of Marble, 389. 1.
Plague in the Grown which raged Fifty Years, when it began, 490. 1.
Platonic Philosophy, a School thereof at Alexandria, 376. 1, 2.
Platonica, what it signifies, 132. 2.
Platonica, abstinence, 79. 2.
Platonica, what it was amongst the Alexandrians, 375. 1.
Platonica, Decorations, 576. 1.
Polycarp, whether he came to Rome on account of the Controversie concerning Easter, 88. 2. In what Year he came to Rome, ibid.
The Day of his Martyrdom, 60. 1.
Porphyrius, why called Malechus, and Basaneates, 100. when he lived, ibid.
Potamius Bishop of Lisbon was banished together with Isidorus, 268. 1.
Power, or ἐξουσία, is not used but concerning the Greater Judges, 536. 1.
Præfati of the Prætorium, and the other Judges, prefixed the Emperours Letters before their own Edicts, 179. 1.
Præfati of the Prætorium, had the title of Clarissimi in Constantine's time, 187. 2. 606. 2.
Præfati of the Prætorium, was the highest of all dignities, 471. 1. it had two Chetis, 475. 1. also Numeranti of Gold, 471. 1.
Prætorium the name of a Town, variously written, 364. 2.
Prætorius Laborum, or rather Laborem, that is, τοῦ λαβού, of the Laborem, 551. 2.
Presbiter, what it signifies, 41. 2.
Presbiter performed the publick Prayers together with the Bishop, 410. 2.
Presbiter were not ordained without the consent of the Clergy and People, 114. 1.
Presbiter were termed Priests of the second Order, 191. 2. 194. 2. &c.
Presbiter, whom Constantia at her death recommended to Constantine, who he was, 236. 2. 243. 2.
Præfatus Numen, present Deity, ἐμπροσθεν, 18. 2.
Præfatus, or Præfatus Militie, present Militie; who they were, 477. 2. The Greeks call it τοῦ ἐμπροσθεν, ibid.
Præfatus Rector the Historian, was a Thracian, born at Panium, a Town in Thracia, 436. 1. a passage in Theophrastus is mended, ibid.
Præfatus, to instruct, to cultivate, 623. 2.
Præfatus, a Village at some distance from a City, 123. 2.
Proculus, Chief of the Sect of the Catanabrymans, 29. 2.
Proculus of Thracia, 181. 1.
Proculus, two Martyrs of that name, 157. 1.
Procurators of the familia Gladiatorum, or company of the Gladiators, 153. 2.
Proculus Proculus, 663.
Proculus, to propole the name of a Person to be ordained, 220. 1. 603. 1.
Propheta, the High-priests amongst the Egyptians were termed, 13. 1.
Propheta that are true, how to be distinguished from the false one, 82. 2.
Priest Διωνύσιος Ζών, to live according to example, 647. 1.
Priest Διωνύσιος, Profructus of the Jem, 18. 2.
Priest Διωνύσιος, to take pains, 405. 1. ὁμολογία πυλῆς, to bear the changes of Fortune, ibid.
Priest Διωνύσιος, diligence, attention, 417. 2.
Priest Διωνύσιος, what it imports, 41. 1.
Priest Διωνύσιος, Law is published, it was a word which the Emperours added to their Laws, 604. 1. Διωνύσιος, to publish an Edict, 516. 2.
Priest Διωνύσιος, the chief or first of the Presbiter, 359. 2.
Priest Διωνύσιος, Profructus, 663.

The INDEX

Prophet ⲉ, a Prophet, or Chief, 287. 1.
Pnams or Hymns, when first in use in the Church, 23. 2. 90. 1.
Palms called Idamasi, 119. 2.

Q

Quadratus Proconful of Asia, under whom Polycarp suffered Martyrdom, in what year he bore the proconfulate, 57. 2. 82.
Quadratus Bishop of Athens, a different person from Quadratus the disciple of the Apostles, 64. 1.
Quarterns, and Ternions, 618. 2.
Quirinus, or Cyrenius, when president of Syria, 8. 1.
Quint instead of Cyprus, and Quingius for Cyngius, 466. 1.

R

Recusatory Libels, wherein Patriarchs requested of the Emperours, that they might have leave to relinquish their Bishopricks, 479.
Regius Mertus, to signify the Leprosie, 95. 2.
Regimen of the Christians defined, 638. 1.
Reliquaries were initiated by a certain rite, 374. 2. the Rhetorician's pallium, ibid. and 389. 2.
Ressus or Ressu a City of Calicia, 97. 1.
Roman Church, their Liberality and Bounty towards the poor, 118. 2.
Romans, when they left off burning their dead, 176. 2.
Rufinus's Letter to Vespaian, 108. 1.

S

Sabbarim, a Nick-name given to Valens by the Citizens of Chalcodon, 308. 1.
Sabbatum magnam, or the Great Sabbath, what it is, 57. 2.
Sabbatum not kept as a fasting-day amongst the Romans, in Lent, 346. 1. nor in the Winter-weeks, 346. 1.
Sabaziani, Hereticks, 119. 1.
Sacerdotes Provinciales, the Chief priests of a Province, 150. 1. 173. 1.
Sacred Scriptures, a threefold difference of the Books thereof, 43. 1.
Sacrifices of the Heathens were not totally abolished by Constantine, 618. 2.
Sabbarim returning to the Church, were more kindly received than Hereticks, 704. 2.
Sei iusticie, Advocates, 357. 1.
Scholas, what meant by that word, 62. 1.
Seignior, what it means, 105. 1.
Scribes amongst the Jews, were the Keepers and Expounders of the Law, 35. 2. 82.
Seithes, in the Greek call them, whom the Latines term Goths, 578. 1. 60. 2.
Serapion, what it was, 14. 4. 1.
Scintilla Judges who were present at a Council, when criminal matters were under debate, pronounced sentence; but in a matter of faith, they concerned not themselves, 434. 1. 439. 2.
Seis to calumniate, or extort, 139. 2.
Seis, a Cup wherein was the Tomb of a Martyr, 422. 2.
Seis was called Nicator, not Nicator, 505. 2.
Seis, Excerpta, excerptions, 40. 1.
Seis, what it signifies, 84. 2.
Seis Excerpta of Origen, ought in Latine to be termed Excerpta, not Excerpta, 440. 1.
Seis, was an house or court, 366. 2.
Seis, Translation when made, 78. 1. whether they translated all the books of Scripture, ibid. and whether in separate cells, ibid.
Seis in what manner worshipped by the Egyptian Priests, 30. 1. 2. why he was called Seis, ibid. His Temple when demolished, ibid.
Seis Council, how many Bishops present at it, 257. 1.
Seis, a passage in him mended, 437. 2.
Seis Augustus was called also Serpentinus or Serpentinus, 429. 1.
Seis amongst the Romans, were ordinary and extraordinary, 72. 1.
Seis, whether they foretold things by divine inspiration, 612. 2. 82.
Seis of the Zodiac were by the Greeks called Seis, 45. 1.
Seis, who they were, 432. 1.
Seis Magnus's death, when it happened, 22. 1.
Seis, three Synods there, and their three Draughts of the Creed, 268. 1.
Seis Synods in what years convened, ibid. and 269. 1.
Seis, the usual posture of mourners amongst the Jews, 20. 2.
Seis seems to have been a Novatianist, 367. 2. whether he was a Novatianist, 277. 1.
Seis of God, was by ancient Divines termed Seis, 645. 2. He termed The Middle, between the Father and things created, 683. 2.
Seis, to Solomon's Book of Proverbs was called, 64. 1.
Seis, to lay hands on, or ordain, 114. 1.
Seis, or Sepulchral Monuments, 21. 1. 23. 2.
Seis the Deacon, on what year he suffered Martyrdom, 15. 2.
Seis the Pope, whether he excommunicated those of Africa, and of the East, 118. 2.

Stephanus Junior Bishop of Antioch, is ordained at Constantinople by Acacius, 457. 1.
Strategum, what it is, 229. 2.
Strategum, Magistrates, or Dumviri, 124. 1. 146. 1.
Strategum, Officials, Apparitors, 196. 2.
Strategum, 57. 2.
Sub-introduced women, who they were, 134. 2.
Succi, brights, or narrow paths so called, 259. 2.
Symeon the Son of Cleophas, how a kin to our Saviour, 38. 1.
Symmachian, Hereticks, 100. 1.
Symplegades, 577. 1.
Symeon, I make a bargain, 402. 2. Symeon, a bargain, ibid. ]
Symeon, and Symeon, 604. 2.
Symeon, in how many senses it is used, 436. 2.
Sunday termed the first day, and the eighth, 678. 2. why this day was set apart for the meeting of the faithful, 699. 1.
Synelli, Officers which the Patriarch had, 402. 2. 820. The Synelli were as well of the order of Presbyters, as Deacons, ibid. Not only Patriarchs, but other Bishops also had their Synelli, ibid. Syneusius was not Bishop of Cyrene, but of Ptolemais, 413. 2. what his belief was concerning the Resurrection, ibid.
Synodus, a City of Phrygia, 102. 1. Synodus, the Citizens of that City, two of their Coyns explained, 370. 2. They worshipped Jupiter under the name of Pandemon, ibid.
Synod of Antioch against Paul of Samosata, in what year held, 133. 1.
Synod, to signify an assembly of the faithful, 572. 2.
Synod, synodus, a particular Synod, is opposed to a general one, 408. 1. Synod synodus, a Synod of Bishops that made their residence for some time only at the Imperial City, ibid.
Synodus, a model or delineation of a future work, 588. 1.
Synodus, taking leave of, or bidding farewell, 538. 1. 584. 1.
Synodus, synodus, ibid. Synodus, synodus, ibid. and 498. 2.
Synodus, Tributaries, 474. 2. 504. 2. 820.
Synodus synodus a sign of Communion, 573. 1.
Synodus, what it signifies, 511. 2.
Superpositum, a sort of Fast 38. 1. in Greek termed Superpositum, ibid.

T

Tatarius, who they were, 165. 1.
Taspar, companies of Souldiers, 623. 2. 820.
Tatarius was not a Professor of Rhetoric, 60. 2. 67. 1. Tatarius's Gospel did transpire not the same with that termed The Gospel according to the Hebrews, 67. 2.
Tatropolis, and Criobolia, 303. 1. 2.
Taxos, Offices, and taxos, Office, Body of Apparitors, 548. 2. 565. 2. 281. 1. taxos, 564. 2.
Taxing, taxos, What it was; 7. 2. Whether one or two Taxing, ibid.
Taxos, Martyrdom, 125. 2.
Taxos Baptism, 628. 2.
Taxos, or Turpentine-tree, a place in Palestine, 595. 1. 2. That Turpentine-tree worshipped by the Pagani, ibid. At that place there was a Mart or Market yearly, ibid.
Taxos, of Souldiers in Expedition, 515. 1.
Taxos were made by Origen after his Edition of the Hexapla, 99. 2.
Taxos the Apostle, in what year he came to Edessa, 15. 2.
Taxos, instead of Theologia, 453. 1. She was termed the Proto-Martyr, ibid.
Taxos, in what sense used by Eusebius, 91. 1.
Taxos Alcidas, 497. 1.
Theodosius, when he published his Version, 77. 2.
Theodosius Bishop of Laodicea was an Arian, 602. 2.
Theodosius the Presbyter, when he wrote, 493. 1.
Theologia, anciently termed Theologian, 2. 1.
Theologia, the Mystick sense, 354. 1.
Theologia, the surname of Saint Ignatius, 358. 2. 414. 1. His reliques were removed to Antioch long before Theodosius Junior's time, ibid.
Theodosius were not Essenes, 23. 1. nor Christians, 23. 2.
Theodosius, whether it was under the government of Theodosius Senior, 377. 1. the Bishops of Theodosius were Legates of the Roman See, 391. 2.
Tinnus, a City of Angulianica, 319. 1.
Tibolus, what it is, 422. 1.
Tibolus, 113. 2.
Tiberius Constantinus, how long he reigned, 513. 1.
Time twofold, the one Particular, the other general, 671. 2.
Timotheus Salofoctianus, called also Aibus, 433. 1.
Tratates, or Homilies or Sermons to the people are termed, 108. 1.
Traxianus the Patrician, an Historian, when he lived, 506. 2.
Traxite, who they were, 119. 2.
Tribunal of the nineteen Accobitis, 509. 1. a place in Theophyllus Simaceta concerning that Edifice, is explained, ibid.
Tricennaria is taken for the Festival, and for the thirtieth year, 622. 1. 687. 2.
Tripolis, a City of Phenice Marsimim, wherein was the Sepulchre of the Martyr Leontius, 468. 1. 494. 1.
Trisagium, in Hyacin in the Church, 476. 1. 2.

The I N D E X.

Teagrus, 177. 1.
Trebellianus brother to Hilus, 449. 1. His name is corrupted in Theophrastus's Chronicon, ibid.
Troilus the Sophist, 370. 1.
Τυχεῖον, or τυχεῖον, the Temple of the publick Genius, 109. 1.
Τυχεῖον, 114. 1.
Tyche, the publick Genius, 194. 2.

V.

Vacant Bishop, 307. 2.
Valentinianus Placidus, where, and when proclaimed Augustus, 383. 2.
Valentinian Junior was the son of Valens Augustus, 309. 2. He was also called Galates, ibid. In what year he dyed, 312. 1.
Valerian when he began to reign, 121. 1.
Valerius, a Roman Name, 69. 2.
Vicarii or Deputies of the Praefects had the title of Perfectissimi in Constantine's time, 195. 1.
Victor the Pope, whether he excommunicated the Asians, or only threatened it, 87. 2.
Victor Tournonensis, an eminent passage in him is mended, 402. 2, &c.
Victor was taken by Constantine as His Praenomen, or fore-name, 557. 2. And after his death by his sons 632. 1.
Vigilius the Pope gave his consent to the Synod of Constantinople, but refused to be present at it, 496. 1.
Vigil of Easter, thereon the Christians kindled Lights, as well publicly, as in private, 613. 1.
Vindices made by Anastasius, 47. 1.
Vine, the Badge of the Centurion's Office, 125. 1.
Virtus are either παιδεία, or σοφιστική, 616. 1.
ἴλας, in what sense used by Divines, 93. 1.
Unio for Union, is a barbarous, not a Latine word, 502. 2. Unio

in Latine signifies unitatem, unity, ibid.
Ἰπποκρίτης, Spatharius, Esquire of the Emperor's Body, 411. 2.
Ἰπποκρίτης, what it signifies, 266. 1.
Ἰπποκρίτης victoria, Fast of superposition, 317. 2. 418. 1.
Ἰπποκρίτης, who they were, 317. 1.

W.

Wek before Easter, termed by the Greek Fathers The Great Week, 24. 1. It began from the second Feria, or Monday, 88. 1. 678. 2, &c.
Widow, or Deaconesses, their Examination, 698. 2.

X.

Xanthicus, the name of a month amongst those of Smyrna, when it began, 60. 1.
Xenod, a Dialogue of Methodius the Bishop, 362. 2.
Ξύλον, a pair of Stocks, 60. 2. 71. 1. sometimes 'tis used to signify The Eculeus, 108. 2. 145. 1.
Xystus, how long Bishop of Rome, 132. 2.

Y.

Years of the Edeffens, whence they began, 15. 2.
Year of Christ, the first, according to Eusebius, 139. 2.]

Z.

Zela, a City of Cappadocia, 303. 2.
Zeno, whether Bishop of Majuma, 354. 1, 2.
Zozimus the Historian, did not live in the Times of Theodosius Junior, 471. 2, &c.

Καὶ οὕτω τῶν δέξων ἀναγκαστικῶς τῇ Πάσχει, καὶ τῇ ἑορτῇ, καὶ τῇ ἁγίᾳ Πενήντητι, οὐκ ἐστὶν ἐξ ἑστέρας καὶ τὰς διαφόρους ἡμετέρας, Ἀμὲν.

28 SE 60

THE END.